Re: Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Request 2015-OSEC-05803-F
Final Response

This is the final response to your September 21, 2015 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) FOIA Service Center (FSC). You requested a digital/electronic copy of the records released in response to requests from Associated Press (and other news media) regarding the Shirley Sherrod situation.

Your request has been processed under the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552.

A search for responsive records was conducted in USDA's FSC. The search produced a total of two thousand eight hundred and sixty-four (2,864) pages. After review, the FSC determined that one thousand three hundred and fifty-five (1,355) pages are being released in their entirety. Fifty-eight (58) pages have been withheld in full; and portions of one thousand four hundred and fifty-one (1,451) pages have been withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions (b)(2), (b)(5) and (b)(6) as described below.

Internal Personnel Rules and Practices of an Agency Exemptions 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(2)

Exemption (b)(2) of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." In Milner v. Dep 't of the Navy, the Supreme Court emphasized, the "key word" in the exemption and the one word which "most clearly marks the provision's boundaries- is personnel." Milner v. Dep 't of the Navy, 131 S. Ct. 1259 (2011). The Supreme Court went on to state that one example of personnel rules and practices are activities involving "employee relations or human resources," which "concern the conditions of employment in federal agencies -- such matters as hiring and firing, work rules and discipline, compensation and benefits." Milner, 131 S. Ct. at 1265. In this instance, Ms. Shirley Sherrod's USDA vet results report was withheld under exemption (b)(2) since it pertains solely to employee relations and is a product of an internal human resources' search.

Inter-Agency or Intra-Agency Communication
Exemption 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(5)

FOIA Exemption (b)(5) protects from disclosure those inter- or intra-agency documents that are normally privileged in the civil discovery context. The three most frequently invoked privileges are the deliberative process privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the attorney-client privilege. After carefully reviewing the responsive documents, the FC has determined that portions of the responsive documents qualify for protection under the following privileges:

The Deliberative Process Privilege protects the integrity of the deliberative or decision-making processes within the agency by exempting from mandatory disclosure opinions, conclusions, and recommendations included within inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters. The release of this internal information would discourage the expression of candid opinions and inhibit the free and frank exchange of information among agency personnel.

The deliberative process also protects pre-decisional materials. Pre-decisional materials are those prepared to assist an agency in arriving at a decision, and may include recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions and other subjective documents which may reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency. The records withheld under this privilege include email communications and internal documents involving the resignation of Ms. Shirley Sherrod that detail both agency officials' reaction and immediate response to the situation, as well as officials' ongoing efforts to address and resolve the matter.

The Attorney-Client Privilege protects "confidential communication between an attorney and his/her client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Cent., Inc. v. US. Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242,252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Although this privilege fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his/her attorney, this privilege also encompasses any opinion given by an attorney to his/her client based upon those facts, as well as communications between attorneys that reflect client supplied information. The records withheld under this privilege include email communications and records disclosed by agency officials to OGC, and other email communication that contain client-supplied information.

Personal Privacy Interests
Exemption 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(6)

FOIA Exemption (b)(6) permits the government to withhold information regarding individuals when the disclosure of such information "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" and where such privacy interests outweigh any public interest which would be advanced by the disclosure of their contact information. To make this determination, we are required to perform a balancing test. In a balancing test, the agency weighs the individual's right to privacy against the public's right to disclosure. In this instance, we have determined that the disclosure of agency officials' personal email accounts, certain government email addresses, personal telephone numbers, cellular telephone numbers would shed no light on the performance of the agency's statutory obligations or operations and therefore the interest to be served by disclosure does not outweigh the privacy interest of the individuals in question. Therefore, this information has been redacted in numerous documents. We have also redacted discussions involving an employee's family health matter, as well as Ms. Sherrod's personally identifiable information and vet report results as they do not serve any public interest.

You have the right to appeal this determination. Should you wish to do so, you must send your appeal, within 45 days from the date of this letter, to: Assistant Secretary for Administration, USDA, 1400 Independence Avenue, S.W., Whitten Building 209-A, Washington, D.C. 20250-0103. Your envelope and letter should be marked "FOIA Appeal." Copies of the FOIA and USDA regulations are available at www.dm.usda.gov/foia.

Provisions of the FOIA allow us to recover part of the cost of complying with your request. In this instance, because the cost is below the $25 minimum, there is no charge.¹

If you have any questions regarding the processing of this request, please contact Department FOIA Team Lead, Marqui Barnes at (202) 694-1802 or electronically at marqui.barnes@ocio.usda.gov or USDAFOIA@ocio.usda.gov. Please reference FOIA case number 2015-OSEC-05803-F.

The FSC Team appreciates the opportunity to assist you in this matter.

Sincerely,

Marqui Q. Barnes

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

Apparently I missed a change in your number - probably happened long ago since I call so rarely.

I wanted you to know that Chad is heading into the office now to access the email Shirley copied to our public email accounts Thursday night and send it to Malcolm, Carole, and Kevin. I was made aware of the email late afternoon today, but my focus at the time was the safety of Cheryl Cook, since she is in this very publically and has no security. On that note, she is home safely now, the state police are aware of the controversy and have driven by her home a few times, I have given her my parking space on the apron, and our security officers know to keep a watchful eye.

Call me if there is anything I can do. Embarrassed to admit, I sleep with my backberry so I am always reachable.

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA:Â <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.Â

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural DevelopmentÂ State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?Â

Thank you,

George Ko

Dear employee:

Some of you may have seen the news stories about USDA today. I want to reiterate my commitment and that of the leadership at USDA to civil rights. We all must work to ensure that we are treating our customers and employees equally and fairly and we all should have zero tolerance for discrimination.

I also want to remind all of you that you have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent this sentiment in your official actions, statements, and public presentations. We are lucky to have the opportunity to work for the American people and we owe it to them to instill confidence in our leadership. Our words and actions matter.

We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and I thank you for your service and efforts to achieve this goal,

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

Sir,

Below is a copy of Shirley's letter.

Kevin

Cheryl

I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of the Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have versus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmers land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners thru the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

My whole life speaks for my commitment to fairness whether white or black.

Tuesday -- July 20th --

- 8:23 a.m. Jett forwards CNN transcript.
- 1:14 p.m. Receive Secretary's message to all employees.
- 1:19 p.m. Jett responds to inquiry regarding incoming calls.
- 1:21 p.m. Palmieri inquires to Jett to clarify call procedures.
- 2:00 p.m. Jett, Mather, Washo (Ross comes in later) pull the Deputy out of a meeting in her office and in the staff office, they inform the Deputy that Sherrod was on CNN non-stop, that NAACP might be reversing their statement, and that Chris Liu was inquiring whether we would be changing course. The Deputy expressed concern that Sherrod was attacking the Administration on TV and that our jobs as political appointees is to protect the President. Palmieri inquired as to how we should respond to calls coming into the office since we were told not to engage. Jett decided all should be forwarded to the Deiphouse. Mather said that the Secy would be going out with a statement to all employees but not issuing another press statement.
- 4:15 pm Deputy turns on CNN for the first time and after watching 15 minutes of coverage, leaves her office to visit with Cheryl Cook to discuss her safety. Requests Cook's permission to discuss situation with Secret Service.

Sometime between 4 and 5: Maisel informs the Deputy that Sherrod copied the Deputy and Secretary on an email exchange last Thursday night where she explains that the video clip was taken out of context.

Between 4:30 and 6:30 the focus is Cook. Deputy asks Jett for JT Stroud's phone number. Jett says that she had already called Heard about monitoring Cook's emails for threats. Deputy calls Stroud. Deputy calls OIG Wong. Deputy calls Mike Edwards at Ethics to see if USDA can pay for hotel. Deputy again visits with Cook, along with Tsonager. Invites Cook to her home for the evening and/or encourages her to seek a hotel. Cook insists on driving home. Deputy calls Edwards to inquire whether Tsonager can pay for security detail. Deputy again visits Cook to give her Deputy's parking pass. Sheryl Maddox arrives in Cooks office at that time to monitor emails. Deputy and Maddox discuss the need for Maddox to reach out to State Police in Cook's home vicinity to alert them of the situation. Deputy speaks to guards at Apron asking that they escort Cook to her car when she departs and to watch for her arrival in the morning.

- 6:00ish Deputy seeks out Ross to brief her on her actions concerning Cook. Jett walks by – Deputy updates her quickly. Deputy suggests that when Jett next speaks to the Secy, that they consider the Obama McCrystal speech, which acknowledged the General's outstanding service to the country.
- 6:15ish Deputy asks Maisel to print out copy of email sent by Sherrod Thursday night to public email and reads for the first time. Departs for residence.
- 7:37 p.m. Deputy emails Cook asking for confirmation that she arrived safely home.
- 7:47 p.m. Cook responds she is safely on her way.
- 7:50 p.m. Deputy calls Ross. Discussed current CNN coverage that had turned from a focus on race to the anatomy of decision making.
- 7:53 p.m. Deputy calls Washo to discuss develop story line on USDA's decision process. Reports of email copied by Sherrod.
- 8:16 p.m. Jett calls Deputy to discuss email.

Chris –

We are good with this version on this end. Counsel has cleared the language. Only change is in the first sentence.

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

SHOCK: Video Suggests Racism At NAACP Event

NEW YORK (CBS) —

Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director

Last Tuesday, the NAACP passed a resolution condemning racism in the Tea Party movement. The organization's delegates called on Tea Party leaders to "repudiate those in their ranks who use racist language in their signs and speeches."

Tea Party members and supporters saw the resolution as a condemnation of the group itself, which calls for fiscal responsibility, restrictions on governmental power, and backs political candidates who claim the same.

The NAACP's action caught the attention of Andrew Breitbart of BigGovernment.com, who said the controversy was "absolutely manufactured for political gain," in a summer "in which the economy is the number one issue affecting blacks and whites in this country. This country can ill afford the schism of race to be exploited the way [he is] based upon the false premise of the Tea Party being racist."

He also claimed to possess recorded evidence of racism from the NAACP.

On Monday, Breitbart posted a video of a speech by Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director, delivered at the NAACP's 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet.

The video shows Sherrod speaking of racial considerations being a factor for how much help she would give.

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing, but he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," Sherrod said. "So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him."

In the video, Sherrod also spoke of referring the white farmer to a white lawyer, thinking the latter would be more sympathetic because of race. "So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him."

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong.

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20250

Dear employee:

Some of you may have seen the news stories about USDA today. I want to reiterate my commitment and that of the leadership at USDA to civil rights. We all must work to ensure that we are treating our customers and employees equally and fairly and we all should have zero tolerance for discrimination.

I also want to remind all of you that you have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent this sentiment in your official actions, statements, and public presentations. We are lucky to have the opportunity to work for the American people and we owe it to them to instill confidence in our leadership. Our words and actions matter.

We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and I thank you for your service and efforts to achieve this goal,

Secretary Vilsack

Honorable Mr. Vilsack & Ms. Merrigan: I strongly urge you to make a public appology for forcing Ms. Shirley Sherrod to resign her position. If you or your subordinates had not jumped to conclusions before reacting to such internet folly, you would have understood that what Ms. Sherrod was saying was remarkable. Her recounting of an epiphany WRT her ignorance of caucasians was very revealing & should not have been reason for dismissal. If your subordinates had only listened to the full speech & offered a rebuttal on the internet as well as in the news, you & the administration would have come out looking good. Now you all look like bumpkins; how can I keep supporting the adminsitration when you all act so stupidly?!

Please clean up this mess, state the facts, don't overreact (didn't any of you get any management training before assuming your positions?), and for God's sake, give Shirley her job back!!! This is a shameful incident.

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

- 1:19 p.m. Jett responds to inquiry regarding incoming calls.
- 1:21 p.m. Palmieri inquires to Jett to clarify call procedures.
- 2:00 p.m. Jett, Mather, Washo (Ross comes in later) pull the Deputy out of a meeting in her office and in the staff office, they inform the Deputy that Sherrod was on CNN non-stop, that NAACP might be reversing their statement, and that Chris Liu was inquiring whether we would be changing course. The Deputy expressed concern that Sherrod was attacking the Administration on TV and that our jobs as political appointees is to protect the President. Palmieri inquired as to how we should respond to calls coming into the office since we were told not to engage. Jett decided all should be forwarded to the Deiphouse. Mather said that the Secy would be going out with a statement to all employees but not issuing another press statement.
- 4:15 pm Deputy turns on CNN for the first time and after watching 15 minutes of coverage, leaves her office to visit with Cheryl Cook to discuss her safety. Requests Cook's permission to discuss situation with Secret Service.

Sometime between 4 and 5: Maisel informs the Deputy that Sherrod copied the Deputy and Secretary on an email exchange last Thursday night where she explains that the video clip was taken out of context.

Between 4:30 and 6:30 the focus is Cook. Deputy asks Jett for JT Stroud's phone number. Jett says that she had already called Heard about monitoring Cook's emails for threats. Deputy calls Stroud. Deputy calls OIG Wong. Deputy calls Mike Edwards at Ethics to see if USDA can pay for hotel. Deputy again visits with Cook, along with Tsonager. Invites Cook to her home for the evening and/or encourages her to seek a hotel. Cook insists on driving home. Deputy calls Edwards to inquire whether Tsonager can pay for security detail. Deputy again visits Cook to give her Deputy's parking pass. Sheryl Maddox arrives in Cooks office at that time to monitor emails. Deputy and Maddox discuss the need for Maddox to reach out to State Police in Cook's home vicinity to alert them of the situation. Deputy speaks to guards at Apron asking that they escort Cook to her car when she departs and to watch for her arrival in the morning.

- 6:00ish Deputy seeks out Ross to brief her on her actions concerning Cook. Jett walks by – Deputy updates her quickly. Deputy suggests that when Jett next speaks to the Secy, that they consider the Obama McCrystal speech, which acknowledged the General's outstanding service to the country.
- 6:15ish Deputy asks Maisel to print out copy of email sent by Sherrod Thursday night to public email and reads for the first time. Departs for residence.
- 7:37 p.m. Deputy emails Cook asking for confirmation that she arrived safely home.
- 7:47 p.m. Cook responds she is safely on her way.
- 7:50 p.m. Deputy calls Ross. Discussed current CNN coverage that had turned from a focus on race to the anatomy of decision making.
- 7:53 p.m. Deputy calls Washo to discuss develop story line on USDA's decision process. Reports of email copied by Sherrod.
- 8:16 p.m. Jett calls Deputy to discuss email.
- 8:57 p.m. Cooks responds she is safe at home and that State Police are patrolling.
- 9:04 p.m. Jett calls to request a copy of email
- 9:06 p.m. Deputy thanks Cook for update.
- 9:11 p.m. Deputy calls Maisel to ask him about possibility of accessing email account from home.
- 9:12 p.m. Eve calls Maisel to ask him to retrieve email from office
- 9:14 p.m. Maisel calls Deputy to let her know that he is returning to office to return email

- 9:17 p.m. Jett calls to let Deputy know that Maisel needs to go into the office to forward a copy.
- 9:24 p.m. Maddux reports Cook confirmation that Cook has arrived safely home.
- 9:27 p.m. Deputy acknowledges receipt of Maddux email.
- 9:34 p.m. Deputy emails Secretary to report that Maisel was heading to office to retrieve email from Sherrod and of Cook arrival home safely.
- 9:41 p.m. Maisel forwards email to Jett, Eve and Washo

Wednesday 22nd

- 6:45 a.m. Jett forwards email from Mather sharing new public statement.
- 7:30 a.m. Jett emails Deputy asking if she can open meeting, as she will be briefing Tonsager for hearing
- 7:35 a.m. Deputy calls Jett and asks what the plan is. Jett does not say.
- 8:15 Leonard speaks with Deputy outside her office. Expresses disappointment that he was not consulted. Leonard says that Reid signed off on statements and process.
- 8:20 Lavalley informs Deputy that OC has instructed all Dept. leaders to not speak with the press on this topic.

Sometime in the morning Deputy calls Silverman in California to inquire as to OGC's role in the decisionmaking process. Silverman says he was informed of the decision Monday evening after it had been made.

- 11:30 a.m. Deputy seeks meeting with Secretary
- 1:00 p.m. Deputy meets with Secretary to hear his plan to resolve the situation. Deputy suggests decisionmaking is too insular, noting that, for example, neither Civil Right nor OGC were consulted.

SHOCK: Video Suggests Racism At NAACP Event

NEW YORK (CBS) —

1 of 1

Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director

Last Tuesday, the NAACP passed a resolution condemning racism in the Tea Party movement. The organization's delegates called on Tea Party leaders to "repudiate those in their ranks who use racist language in their signs and speeches."

Tea Party members and supporters saw the resolution as a condemnation of the group itself, which calls for fiscal responsibility, restrictions on governmental power, and backs political candidates who claim the same.

The NAACP's action caught the attention of Andrew Breitbart of BigGovernment.com, who said the controversy was "absolutely manufactured for political gain," in a summer "in which the economy is the number one issue affecting blacks and whites in this country. This country can ill afford the schism of race to be exploited the way [he is] based upon the false premise of the Tea Party being racist."

He also claimed to possess recorded evidence of racism from the NAACP.

On Monday, Breitbart posted a video of a speech by Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director, delivered at the NAACP's 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet.

The video shows Sherrod speaking of racial considerations being a factor for how much help she would give.

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing, but he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," Sherrod said. "So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him."

In the video, Sherrod also spoke of referring the white farmer to a white lawyer, thinking the latter would be more sympathetic because of race. "So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him."

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural Development State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?

Thank you,

George Ko

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

SHOCK: Video Suggests Racism At NAACP Event

NEW YORK (CBS) —

1 of 1

Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director

Last Tuesday, the NAACP passed a resolution condemning racism in the Tea Party movement. The organization's delegates called on Tea Party leaders to "repudiate those in their ranks who use racist language in their signs and speeches."

Tea Party members and supporters saw the resolution as a condemnation of the group itself, which calls for fiscal responsibility, restrictions on governmental power, and backs political candidates who claim the same.

The NAACP's action caught the attention of Andrew Breitbart of BigGovernment.com, who said the controversy was "absolutely manufactured for political gain," in a summer "in which the economy is the number one issue affecting blacks and whites in this country. This country can ill afford the schism of race to be exploited the way [he is] based upon the false premise of the Tea Party being racist."

He also claimed to possess recorded evidence of racism from the NAACP.

On Monday, Breitbart posted a video of a speech by Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director, delivered at the NAACP's 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet.

The video shows Sherrod speaking of racial considerations being a factor for how much help she would give.

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing, but he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," Sherrod said. "So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him."

In the video, Sherrod also spoke of referring the white farmer to a white lawyer, thinking the latter would be more sympathetic because of race. "So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him."

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20250

Dear employee:

Some of you may have seen the news stories about USDA today. I want to reiterate my commitment and that of the leadership at USDA to civil rights. We all must work to ensure that we are treating our customers and employees equally and fairly and we all should have zero tolerance for discrimination.

I also want to remind all of you that you have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent this sentiment in your official actions, statements, and public presentations. We are lucky to have the opportunity to work for the American people and we owe it to them to instill confidence in our leadership. Our words and actions matter.

We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and I thank you for your service and efforts to achieve this goal,

Secretary Vilsack

Honorable Mr. Vilsack & Ms. Merrigan: I strongly urge you to make a public appology for forcing Ms. Shirley Sherrod to resign her position. If you or your subordinates had not jumped to conclusions before reacting to such internet folly, you would have understood that what Ms. Sherrod was saying was remarkable. Her recounting of an epiphany WRT her ignorance of caucasians was very revealing & should not have been reason for dismissal. If your subordinates had only listened to the full speech & offered a rebuttal on the internet as well as in the news, you & the administration would have come out looking good. Now you all look like bumpkins; how can I keep supporting the adminsitration when you all act so stupidly?!

Please clean up this mess, state the facts, don't overreact (didn't any of you get any management training before assuming your positions?), and for God's sake, give Shirley her job back!!! This is a shameful incident.

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices.

Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers. Carole Jett Deputy Chief of Staff USDA

I was extremely disappointed at the news report identifying you as the individual who demanded Shirley Sherrod resign her post.

As an attorney I would think you above others would adhere to the concepts of a fair hearing and due process as a pillar of your public service management duties. And yet you apparently took an out of context remark and used to it to force a career public servant from her position without any reasonable attempt at ascertaining the truth of the matter.

If there is any justice, Ms. Sherrod will be invited back to work and you will be sent to some much needed Human Resources training on responsible investigation techniques.

I'm a U.S. Citizen, African American and resident of the state of Maryland.

Against that backdrop, I'm writing to urge you and Secretary Vilsack to reconsider your demand for Shirley Sherrod's resignation from the USDA. Apparently, you or whoever demanded her resignation acted too soon after a heavily edited video from the right-wing supporting Andrew Breitbart was made public. If you had taken the time to review the entire video or had spoken to Ms. Sherrod about the context of her words, you might have learned the entire truth -- the entire story. Instead, in your rush to not appear like you supported racism in your agency, you terminated the employment of someone dedicated to public service. Indeed, if you watched the entire video, you would have learned that Ms. Sherrod's comments were taken out of context, that the anecdote was part of a larger story, one in which she explains how she overcame her initial prejudice. According to Ms. Sherrod, herself, "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

Had you done some further investigating, you might've also learned that the white farmer about whom Ms. Sherrod spoke actually counts Ms. Sherrod as a close friend who helped him save his farm. In the words of the wife of Mr. Roger Spooner, "She's a good friend ... she helped save [our] farm...They have not treated her right."

The "they" that Ms. Spooner is referring would be you, Ms. Cook.

I don't know that my letter will do much good, but I strongly urge you to reconsider your position and to offer Ms. Sherrod her job back. She appears to be a woman dedicated to public service and dedicated to helping small and struggling farmers in this country -- something the Department of Agriculture desperately needs more of.

Dear Ms. Cook,

I am writing in outrage over the forced rsignation of Shirley Sherrod. As an historian of the civil rights movement, I can tell you that Shirley and her husband Charles have been in the forefront of trying to unite blacks and whites. SHE IS NOT A RACIST. Her remarks edited (distorted) on You Tube do not reflect the entire story, which is to show that she overcame race to focus on helping poor people regardless of their race. If the Obama Administration does not reverse this miscarriage of justice, then it will be a victory for crass politics over truth. Fox News and other conservatives cannot control the president's agenda, especially with respect to racial and economic reform. The behavior of the NAACP in this instance has also been deplorable and deserves condemnation. The President should speak out in his eloquent way and try once again to educate the American public about what racism really means in the past and present. He can use Shirley Sherrod not as a cartoon figure created on You Tube, but as one of the real heroes in the fight for social jand economic justice.

Dear Ms. Cook,

I think it a matter of great import that the story be made public in its entirety. I have researched the full account of Ms. Sherrod's behavior and experience now in question and based on all the facts, there is absolutely no evidence that would support claims that she is a racist.

She was, all those years ago, being honest about her initial feelings AND more significantly about her growth in understanding that it is class and not ethnicity which was the pertinent issue.

Further, the white farming family in question, has spoken out in her defense.

By acting in haste, Fox News and CNN have been allowed to write the story and the story they have written is false.

What can you now do to right this wrong?
I look forward to your response.

It's my understanding that you were the USDA official who asked Shirley Sherrod to resign. Was the decision based solely on the snippet of video that is on the internet, or did you have more information regarding Ms. Sherrod's record?

Here's the official statement on Ms. Sherrod from the Secretary's office:

"Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the Department, and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

My advice to you and others who might get media calls is to refer the caller to the Department's Office of Communications. Chris Mather is the Director of Communications. Justin DeJong is the Department's Press Secretary. Please do not issue any other statements. I know this is a difficult time for all of you who worked with Shirley, but it only gets worse if we perpetuate the situation with further statements to the media.

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND

LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT - WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

Dear Ms. Cook,

I find it very disturbing that your agency would fire someone because of a questionable right wing web sites claims of racism. As the facts come to light it would appear her firing was predicated on a vicious lie. It would seem you et.al. had an immediate knee jerk reaction...wouldn't it have been better to actually find out the facts before denying a woman of her livelihood? Particularly when the story she was telling was one of redemption and healing. I hope your agency does the right thing.

Respectfully,

I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of th Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have v ersus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmers land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners thru the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

My whole life speaks for my commitment to fairness whether white or black.

Information Regarding USDA's Actions

On Monday after learned about a video online showing Mrs. Sherrod saying things that we thought would make it hard to turn the page on civil rights abuses at USDA.

We immediately put her on administrative leave then asked if she was willing to resign, to which she said yes. We called her twice to ask for a letter of resignation so that we could respond to press inquiries about her status.

On Tuesday, the entire tape of the speech she gave was released by the NAACP and after watching it, we determined we had acted without all of the information.

The Secretary spoke to Shirley Sherrod on Wednesday and apologized. He also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends. We did a press briefing that same day and also spoke to the Congressional Black Caucus on Wednesday.

We have discussed with Mrs. Sherrod a unique opportunity at USDA and asked her to return to USDA. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA. And if she wants her old job back, she can have it.

We admit we reacted too quickly and should have taken the time to listen and learn.

The White House did not direct the Secretary to do this, it was USDA's decision.

We continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day so that nothing like this happens again.

There was no answer at the state office, so I call her cell phone at 3:38 and reached her. That was the conversation putting her on leave and hearing her explanation.

I called her back on her cell phone at 4:42 to ask whether she'd be willing to resign.

I called her a third time on her cell phone at 5:56 to ask whether she'd be willing to offer a letter of resignation by the end of the day.

I called her a fourth time at 6:35 to ask whether she'd be willing to pull over to the side of the road, and submit a resignation by email.

I received her email at 6:55 and forwarded to WHLO.

Dear Ms. Cook,

I hope I have reached the right individual. I have used the USDA directory to try to locate you. If I have reached the wrong individual, please accept my apology and provide me with the correct email address.

The media has left out some important questions in thier coverage of the Shirley Sherrod story. These questions are for the Cheryl Cook referred to on CNN by Ms. Sherrod many times this week.

- Did you tell Shirley Sherrod that the White House wanted her out...as she says you did?
- If you did tell her that, what was the basis for doing so?
- Did someone at the White House tell you that Ms. Sherrod had to go?
- If so, who was that and exactly when did they say that to you?
- What precisely did that person say?

I understand that this situation has placed you between a rock and a hard place. I realize that I have no more nor any less right to be asking you these questions than anyone else. I am simply an American voter who needs to know the answers to these questions in order to vote effectively. As an act of conscience and patriotism, please respond with simple, straight forward answers by return email.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

Subject: I am offended by reports of cheryl cooks conduct

I realize that there may be different stories but if even a particle of what Ms. Sherrod has said about your demands for her resignation is true – I am offended.

Even if the stories about Ms. Sherrod were true, I am offended by the spectacle of a manager being so contemptuous of an employee that they call them repeatedly, while they are driving, on a matter that is so emotional. In the government I want, everyone deserves a respectful and calm moment with their boss before being asked to resign. No excuses. Demanding employment end to please a fast news cycle is grotesque.

Either you did what Ms. Sherrod said you did, in which case you should fully, publicly and notably apologize for that conduct independent of what facts have now emerged or you should provide your own version of the facts. This is a teachable moment and I want to see that you are learning. Your apology will demonstrate respect for integrity over spin ... something I think you have backwards so far.

I supported our president in the election and I still support him. My government should not be run by Glenn Beck or Andrew Breitbart. Irrespective of mistreating Ms. Sherrod is a government that I helped elect giving so much credibility to these raging right wing monsters. Get some decency, some respect and some spine.

You have not lead by good example. You still can set that example, by admitting your mistakes. In the future, before you demand a resignation, provide an opportunity for a calm meeting and respect what other Federal employees have to say. If you cannot do that, I think your employment must come to an end. This is what I will ask of my Senators and Congress woman if you cannot step up to the plate. I want your views, your side of the story and evidence of personal reflection on what mistakes you honestly made. No spin, just truth and hopefully growth.

As a supporter of the Obama administration, I would like to thank Secretary Vilsack for apologizing to Shirley Sherrod and offering her another job at USDA. It is to his credit that he manned up and rectified a terrible wrong.

A modest suggestion: Perhaps the next time FOX and/or some right-wing lunatic attempts to falsely accuse/slander a group (ACORN) or individual (Ms. Sherrod), the administration will go to the trouble of verifying the story before capitulating.

Thank you.

Ms. Cook:

As the Sherrod case now clearly shows, it's past time for the members of this administration to begin to think for themselves in times of crisis.

As panic set in, why did you not take it upon yourself to point out to your superiors that this story was being promulgated by a known right wing ideologue with a long history of falsifying video? That if Fox "News" was beating the drum so strongly, it made it even more important for the administration to do its own diligent investigation before rushing to judgement?

Did the concept of "due process" ever cross your mind?

Please learn from this lesson, and stand up for the rights of people being vilified from the Right.

Shameful incidents like this just enable a hate-filled minority to chip away at the ability of the Obama administration to do what's right for America. And unfortunately, you helped them do it.

At the least, you need to have a heartfelt, face to face chat with Ms. Sherrod and express your regrets for any role you may have played in this sorry incident.

Ms. Cook:

I am writing this as a concerned citizen and voter. My father worked for 35+ years with the USDA serving for years as chief administrator at your Plum Island facility before he retired in the early 70's. I distinctly remember his frustration at the time for the continuance of conflicting policies vs actual practice regarding race that existed within the USDA that he had to try to juggle every day in his job. My father was a very fair man but he retired early mostly because of the continuance of these conflicts within your organization. He was proud of his history at the USDA, but clearly was frustrated when he left because of the continuing conflicts that existed between written policy and how top management (Washington D.C.) actually acted in terms of hiring practices and racially motivated practice.

I have to say that my father would be shamed today by the actions of Sec. Vilsack and yourself in relation to your reckless firing of a fine woman, Shirley Sherrod. The fact that USDA believed FOX news and an obvious race baiter, Andrew Breitbart, before checking the veracity of their clear attempt to exacerbate a racially sensitive issue between the NAACP and the Tea Party radicals shows incredible stupidity if not a racist decision on your part. Your approach to this is stunning to say the least. The fact that you followed the lead of Breitbart and Fox news before doing any due diligence is a disgrace. What has happened to the idea of "innocent before being proven guilty"? I am beginning to feel that we are totally controlled by Wall Street, big corporate interests, Fox News, lobbyists, and that the average citizen is nothing more than an after thought with our government.

The two of you should resign with embarrassment. The USDA should immediately issue Ms. Sherrod a well publicized apology as well as reinstatement (if she wishes to come back) or at the a least full retirement package.

The racists here are you at the top management level for not doing your job properly and for kissing the ring of idiots like Limbaugh, Beck, Rupert Murdoch, O'Reilly, and Breitbart, etc.

Again – shame on you.

I want to commend you and Secretary Vilsack for owning up to the USDA's mistakes and for reaching out to Ms. Sherrod. That was not likely an easy thing to do.

We live in trying times and those hack journalists and other right-wing operatives with a clearly radical agenda will stop at nothing to cause havoc within this administration. We all must be ever vigilant to avoid these types of missteps.

Dear Undersecretary Cook:

My name is Casey Kaplan. I'm a U.S. Citizen and resident of the state of Texas. I care passionately about agricultural issues facing our country, but I care even more passionately about civil rights, treating citizens equally and fairly, and overcoming racism in this great country.

Against that backdrop, I'm writing to urge you and Secretary Vilsack to reconsider your demand for Shirley Sherrod's resignation from the USDA. Apparently, you or whoever demanded her resignation acted too soon after a heavily edited video from the right-wing supporting Andrew Breitbart was made public. If you had taken the time to review the entire video or had spoken to Ms. Sherrod about the context of her words, you might have learned the entire truth – the entire story. Instead, in your rush to not appear like you supported racism in your agency, you terminated the employment of someone dedicated to public service. Indeed, if you watched the entire video, you would have learned that Ms. Sherrod's comments were taken out of context, that the anecdote was part of a larger story, one in which she explains how she overcame her initial prejudice. According to Ms. Sherrod, herself, "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

Had you done some further investigating, you might've also learned that the white farmer about whom Ms. Sherrod spoke actually counts Ms. Sherrod as a close friend who helped him save his farm. In the words of the wife of Mr. Roger Spooner, "She's a good friend ... she helped save [our] farm...They have not treated her right."

The "they" that Ms. Spooner is referring would be you, Ms. Cook.

I don't know that my letter will do much good, but I strongly urge you to reconsider your position and to offer Ms. Sherrod her job back. She appears to be a woman dedicated to public service and dedicated to helping small and struggling farmers in this country -- something the Department of Agriculture desperately needs more of.

Sincerely,

You are doing the present administration a great injustice if both you and Mr. Vilsack you do not make separate abject apology to Ms Sherrod, including admission of your failure to make a investigation of the "facts" in the NAACP soundbite, as any reasonable person would have done.

Please. You obviously acted to try to limit the damage to the administration. Now do not allow the further damage of your thoughtless knee-jerk reaction.

If Ms Sherrod had to stop her car while on the road to render a resignation by blackberry at your request is true, your action does not reflect anything but a knee-jerk reaction, without any attempt to investigate the facts. And it is inconceivable that you could have done this without Mr Vilsack's concurrence.

Absent the apologies from you both it is inevitable that both your reputations will be besmirched as political flunkies whose decisions are made for partisan purposes.

One additional thing: Do not accept the resignation proffered by Ms Sherrod under duress. If initially accepted, rescind the acceptance. If Ms Sherrod does not wish to work for your agency, she can submit another letter of resignation AFTER she received and mulls over your apologies.

Dear Ms., Cook:

Reliable reporting has you at the nexus of the firing of Ms. Shirley Sherrod. According to Ms. Sherrod, you were the voice on the phone demanding her resignation on behalf of your boss, Ag Secretary Tom Vilsack, for remarks she made at an NAACP event in Douglas County, GA back on March 27, 2010.

I hope you have had the time to review the full and unedited tape. More importantly, I hope you will be among those who are calling for the Secretary to reverse his hasty, and most importantly, erroneous decision to relieve Ms. Sherrod of her job. It was hot-headed. It was wrong. It was done without giving Ms. Sherrod any opportunity to address the accusations made about her. It was done based on the doctored video by promoted by a conservative activist blogger (Andrew Breitbart) and his allies at FOX News Channel.

It takes a big person to admit his or her mistake. You may have just been "carrying out your duties," but you owe Ms. Sherrod your most heartfelt apology and you should be one of the champions for her full reinstatement.

Please convey to your boss, the Secretary, the following sentiment: The longer he delays in doing what is so obviously right, the worse the situation is. Mr. Vilsack was wrong to jump to a conclusion based solely on FOX News and blogosphere reporting. I will be among those calling for his resignation if he does not do what is right by way of Ms. Sherrod.

Apologize sincerely and quickly, and reinstate her immediately.

Sir:

Your employees should not lose their jobs over doctored videotapes concocted by a self-described political "activist." You, or whoever the subordinate was who made this call, showed extremely poor judgement as a manager. I am ashamed of you.

And I am ashamed of the President being attacked by proxy for reasons which have nothing to do with agricultural policy by someone in your agency who failed -- dismally failed -- to determine the facts before acting. Even Earl Butz, of "loose pair of shoes" fame, wasn't tossed off the back of the train in a matter of hours, and he was actually guilty as charged.

I'm quite sure, by searching through enough video, I could make any of your employees "say" anything. I could make you say anything. How convenient that someone speaking at an NAACP dinner should be "caught" this way by someone with sympathy for the "tea party" viewpoint after they lost a contest of political pointmaking to the NAACP.

But that was only after the gentleman from the Tea Party Express wrote a stupid and insulting public letter. How dare you or your subordinates find that someone who is telling the tale of how they grew past racist attitudes has committed the equivalent offense. Have you got brains? Use them.

If progressives had known it's this easy to target and eliminate people in federal jobs, we would have circulated specially edited clips of Bush Administration officials running their big mouths. Oh -- wait -- compared with "Mission Accomplished" I guess nothing taken out of context would have had any real meaning.

I suggest the manager who took this action needs to be reassigned or demoted.

If the idea was yours, you owe Ms. Sherrod a full and unconditional apology.

Once again the Fox network has bamboozled the Obama Administration (and the NAACP organization). Enough is enough; tell Secretary Vilsack to show some dignity and respect; admit your agency made an error in judgement and reinstate Ms Sherrod. The NAACP has issued a statement retracting their premature condemnation of Ms Sherrod; your agency should do the same. African Americans are beginning to ask....."Is having a Black President too heavy a burden for African Americans to bare? I am a Spooner grandchild who was raised in the southwest Georgia area and it is totally absurd that you and your superior terminated an employee due to pressure from the NAACP, Glenn Beck and a false story placed on YOUYUBE. Your admission that it in anyway hinders her ability to work with the farmers in this region shows how truly out of touch you are with the southern farmers and their needs. While her admission that she had those feelings, without acting on them, when facing a farmer who does have the attitude that she reported. Now on the video they seem like they are a sweet couple and now the Spooner brothers have mellowed, but they are 87 going on 88 and 89 going on 90, so it is time and they have had a lot of time and grandchildren to help with that.

It is amazing that she can admit to these feelings in an effort to show that it goes both ways, so that the groups she speaks in front of learn that it is about the people and their needs (not the poor and rich) but what they need. You and your boss have no idea what they need and no idea, obviously what kind of racism she faced in the 80's. I don't even know how bad it was, but I know how bad it still is today so it must have been terrible then and she went to help a group, a family that at one time was very powerful in the county. Those brothers had a lot, and the other brothers did not get the help from the USDA that Roger got from Sherrard, and many of them lost the majority of their farms while Roger has kept his. Where were you when they were asking for help? If she was able to gain the respect of Roger and his brothers, she has done a lot, and you are only making these farmers have less respect for your organization. I know that is how we feel, and how many more feel.

She admitted her mistakes, if you are too big to admit yours then that tells us the public who you are supposed to serve what we can expect from you. We will also know who you are really serving and it is NOT the RURAL farmers, white or black.

Dear Ms. Cook,

Your unfortunate response to an edited and slanderous report on Ms. Sherrod shows an intemperate and unjust handling of a public servant employee. I am outraged that you and your department took the bait of a known biased and untruthful media outlet without fully investigating the actual events pertaining to Ms. Sherrod's speech. She has been harmed by a saboteur's political ploy to tarnish this administration by any means. You and Tom Vilsack owe this individual the right to reclaim her job and a very public apology to her.

I will await the news that you will do the right thing.

Secretary Vilsack and Under-Secretary Cook,

First, Secretary Vilsack says he required Ms Sherrod's resignation because she was a racist and:

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Vilsack said. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

[<http://www.cnn.com/2010/POLITICS/07/20/agriculture.employee.naACP/index.html?hpt=T2>]

But now, presumably after you have all the facts as you did not when you made the prior statement, if as you say,

"This isn't a situation where we are necessarily judgmental about the content of the statement, that's not the issue here. I don't believe this woman is a racist at all," he said. "She's a political appointee, and her job is basically to focus on job growth in Georgia, and I have deep concern about her ability to do her job without her judgments being second-guessed."

to whom I would I complain that "[I] I have deep concern about ... [your] ... ability to do ... [your] ... job without ... [your] ... judgments being second-guessed."?

So far I have used only quotes from Secretary Vilsack, but I've seen no evidence that Under-Secretary Cook denies her alleged role in this fiasco:

"Sherrod said she got four calls Monday from Cheryl Cook, the USDA rural development undersecretary. In the first, she said, she was told she was being put on administrative leave. In the second, she said, she was told she needed to resign."

[<http://www.cnn.com/2010/POLITICS/07/20/agriculture.employee.naACP/index.html?hpt=T2>]

so the "your" in the above is plural, and directed at both Secretary Vilsack and Under-Secretary Cook - isn't English a wonderfully vague language? Especially when a person's statements are edited with a particular goal in mind, as the NAACP says Ms Sherrod's were:

"The video of Shirley Sherrod released by Andrew Breitbart's Big Government Blog on July 19 didn't tell the full story. It was selectively edited to cast her in a negative light. Here is the video, shot by the local NAACP unit that hosted Ms. Sherrod. Watch the video, and judge for yourself."

[http://www.naACP.org/news/entry/video_sherrod/]

I have watched the video at the this site, have either of you?

President Obama (for whom I voted and will probably do so again) promised us a new kind of politics, but a politics wherein those in power make decisions (and destroy the lives of innocents) based on incomplete or manufactured information (e.g. the war in Iraq - subtlety is best applied with a sledgehammer lest the intended recipient not take note) is what President George W Bush gave us.

What the two of you have done and continue to do to Ms Sherrod is shameful and apparently differs only to the extent that you (plural) have destroyed but one life as opposed to tens of thousands.

Secretary Vilsack posed a hypothetical question along the lines of "If you were denied a a loan or a grant, to what would you attribute this denial. the fact that your applicant was faulty or some other reasons?"
[<http://www.cnn.com/2010/POLITICS/07/20/agriculture.employee.naACP/index.html?hpt=T2> - "Who asked Sherrod to resign?"]

, where that "other reasons" was clearly meant to include the possibility that the grant reviewer is a racist. Well, let me observe that both of you are white and Ms Sherrod is black. Perhaps that is the reason the two of you were so quick to demand her resignation. I'll assume this is not the case, but how big a fuss would I have to raise, taking your comments out of context in such a way that implied that the two of were racists, even though I might later be willing to admit this is the not the case, before the two of you were forced to resign because "[you] are political appointee[s]..."?

If the NAACP can admit its error, who in its haste trashed a "Colored Person's" reputation in an unbelievable example of knee-jerk political-correctness, what excuse do the two of you have for not doing so? Even the Glenn Beck's and Rush Limbaugh's of this sadly imperfect nation deserve better governance than the two of you have offered in this situation.

Have a care,
James Norris

As a concerned citizen for fairness, I respectfully request an investigation into my Ms. Sherrod's situation and as soon as possible her reinstatement. Or I request paid administrative leave until a full investigation and the presentation of the full taped presentation by Ms. Sherrod to the NAACP in March is completed.

Proverbs 18:13 ¹³ He that answers a matter before he hears it, it is folly and shame unto him.

It sounds like this matter may have been answered before it was heard. The Obama administration must not allow Glen Beck or the Tea Party to cause such an embarrassing over reaction.

I certainly hope and pray that no one else will be treated like this or forced to resign including Ms. Cook. I am sure all involved administration officials want to be fair. It just may be a terrible misunderstanding along with a rush to judgment.

The decision on the part of Secretary Vilseck today to request the resignation of the Rural Development Director in Georgia demonstrates a distinct lack of wisdom on the part of the Secretary. In my opinion the appointee should file a lawsuit against the Department. Mr. Vilseck had better reconsider because he has created a toxic situation that will engulf his department not for a couple of news cycles but for the remainder of the 2012 election cycle. The accusation (an accurate one) will result that demonstrates clearly that the Secretary Vilseck reacted from the potential of a Shirley Sherrod, Glen Beck interview. Secretary Vilseck's pandering to the Tea Party movement at this juncture will figure prominently into the department's inclusion in the discourse during the 2012 mid-term elections. I hope Mr. Vilseck is prepared to resign because if the President is as politically aware as I believe him to be -- Mr. Vilseck's political career as secretary will not survive the year as his appointee and will go back to the private sector. Given his decision this may well be best for his country. Perhaps he should run for office -- he appears to be a very political "animal". He represented that the White House knew nothing about this -- if that is a lie -- that will come out. If it is the case that the White House knew and directed him that too will come out. Please pass along my sentiments -- I'm certain they are not unique.

Sincerely,

Kevin

Having seen both the original Fox coverage, and the interviews with the Spooners, with Ms. Sherrod and the entire speech, I am appalled at the actions taken by the USDA. Very poor judgment, and even poorer investigation of the facts. As a lawyer, I do employment investigations for big employers into allegations of wrongdoing all the time. This 24 hour incident does you a huge disservice.

And it does our nation a disservice as well. If responding immediately to right wing television is your biggest concern, its no wonder that so little has been done with the USDA.

Dear Ms. Cook,

I have been listening to, reading, and researching the news stories about the USDA forcing Shirley Sherrod out of her important position in Georgia. It seems very clear that actions were taken with woefully incomplete information, reacting to a brief, edited clip taken from what was in fact an important, thoughtful and compassionate speech about the importance of going beyond racism and race-informed opinions in providing service to one another. In addition, it was a speech reflecting on a nearly-three-decade-old experience, long before she worked for the USDA. As you know now very well, even the white farm couple she supposedly discriminated against has come to her support, reporting that she was vitally important in helping to save their family farm all those years ago. This was when she was working for an organization whose principal mission was to provide assistance to African-American farmers.

I have known and worked with Shirley for over two decades. We have served together on the board of an organization providing support for rural development, both in the U.S. and in developing countries. I served for some years as Executive Director of that organization as well. She has always functioned in a thoughtful, well-informed, and thoroughly balanced manner and she would be one of the last persons, of any race or ethnicity, about whom I would believe charges of racist actions toward anyone. Perhaps it is pertinent in this situation to mention that I am White.

I urge you to review this issue and to recommend to Secretary Vilsack a reversal of the decisions that were clearly premature and ill-advised. Shirley should receive a public apology and be reinstated to her role with USDA. I sincerely believe it would be very difficult for the USDA to find anyone more well-prepared, competent and fair to serve in the position she was forced to resign.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Rev. Joseph D. Keesecker

Ms Cook,

You have done a grave disservice to Shirley Sherrod, to the American People, and to your President. How can you move to fire Ms Sherrod without a close inspection of the allegations against her. A tape promulgated by a known distorter of truth via the method of edited video, has duped you into a very dishonorable decision. Please have her case reopened and get hold of the unedited tape of Ms. Sherrod speech, and talk to the family farmers that were being discussed and then and only then can you make a fair decisionm.

Thank you,

Dear Ms. Cook,

From news reports I understand you are the person responsible for today's media circus regarding Ms. Sherrod. Ms. Cook, with your reaction, rather than leadership, you have helped the Tea Party people cut the administration yet again.

I understand there could be many issues not vetted publicly, however, based on what I read, I was moved to write the note below.

Dear Mr. President,

If your staff won't take the time to understand one individual's story, how do you trust them to understand the rest of us?

July is a cruel month for media reporters seeking to fill their advertisers thirst for viewers. So I was not surprised to see a story of former USDA employee Shirley Sherrod being forced to resign because she expressed racial sentiments.

My 11 year old reminds us that we should seek to understand before we look to be understood. Perhaps your staff may want to review their internal procedures on determine someone's value before they act.

Your staff took the easiest way out. It was too easy for your staff to throw Ms. Sherrod under the bus. Not saying she had a perfect game. A blown call is a blown call. Too late for her and too late for you.

Sir, with all due respect, you need to get tougher with your staff and demand professionalism from all of your people.

Make us proud.

Sincerely,

Jim Fisher

"Firing Shirley Sherrod was a bad decision, motivated by the wrong reasons, and it should be reversed. She should be reinstated, and it's not a close call." This is a story of redemption, not racism, of overcoming understandable reactionary feelings and growing in wisdom. The government's response is just the opposite. When will you stop being pushed around by ignorance and have the courage to stand up for what's right and good in people? Please forward this message to whomever can influence a mea culpa from the gov't and give this good woman her job back. It's the right thing to do and it is not complicated.

Dear Ms. Cook,

Today the media has done a service to you and the USDA. They exposed the full context of Ms. Sherrod's remarks in how she worked with the white farmer who needed her help so many years ago.

In reality, the farmer and his wife actually credit her for fighting for them - and saving their farm.

The video that initially sparked the furor was intentionally edited to leave out the redemptive message Ms. Sherrod was sharing about getting beyond race and doing the right thing.

I ask that you investigate further and retract your demand for her resignation.

Instead, please use this as an opportunity to correct the record, expose how this hoax was perpetrated on you, the USDA, the NAACP, the media, and the American people, and make a big deal about bringing Ms. Sherrod back on board.

You'll be a hero for rolling this back, and you'll turn this into an opportunity to show how good people ultimately overcome their bias and racism.

Thank you,

I know you were just the point person on this, but I hope you can pass along that at least one person is disappointed at the firing of Shirley. I'm not an old friend of hers, but I did have the opportunity in the past to get to know her and I found her to be a warm and gracious human being and definitely not a racist. Yes, politics is a nasty business, but how can President Obama eulogize Senator Byrd one week and then throw Shirley Sherrod under the bus the next? I just don't know what the principle is here, but it isn't an honest discussion of the issues.

Please pass along my concern for what it is worth. Otherwise, I hope you are enjoying your new position and life in Washington.

Shirley Sherrod served this country well and is now being victimized by an administration whose common sense should trump this kind of attack. No one should be thrown out of their job and out of government service because a political hack decides it is time to stir the pot. To allow this injustice to continue is to show that this government caves in to reactionary liars, to put it bluntly and that is reprehensible. Shirley Sherrod must be reinstated and a public apology issued to this fine public servant. Thank you.

If you and Vilsack have half the integrity of Sherrod you will come clean and let the chips fall as they the might. The USDA response to this speech is deplorable. At least CNN had the integrity to get the facts before getting out the knife and stabbing Ms. Sherrod in the back. THIS IS HORRIBLE. From hotair.com

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life – those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business...

SHOCK: Video Suggests Racism At NAACP Event

NEW YORK (CBS) —

Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director

Last Tuesday, the NAACP passed a resolution condemning racism in the Tea Party movement. The organization's delegates called on Tea Party leaders to "repudiate those in their ranks who use racist language in their signs and speeches."

Tea Party members and supporters saw the resolution as a condemnation of the group itself, which calls for fiscal responsibility, restrictions on governmental power, and backs political candidates who claim the same.

The NAACP's action caught the attention of Andrew Breitbart of BigGovernment.com, who said the controversy was "absolutely manufactured for political gain," in a summer "in which the economy is the number one issue affecting blacks and whites in this country. This country can ill afford the schism of race to be exploited the way [he is] based upon the false premise of the Tea Party being racist."

He also claimed to possess recorded evidence of racism from the NAACP.

On Monday, Breitbart posted a video of a speech by Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director, delivered at the NAACP's 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet.

The video shows Sherrod speaking of racial considerations being a factor for how much help she would give.

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing, but he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," Sherrod said. "So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him."

In the video, Sherrod also spoke of referring the white farmer to a white lawyer, thinking the latter would be more sympathetic because of race. "So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him."

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

SHOCK: Video Suggests Racism At NAACP Event

NEW YORK (CBS) —

Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director
Last Tuesday, the NAACP passed a resolution condemning racism in the Tea Party movement. The organization's delegates called on Tea Party leaders to "repudiate those in their ranks who use racist language in their signs and speeches."

Tea Party members and supporters saw the resolution as a condemnation of the group itself, which calls for fiscal responsibility, restrictions on governmental power, and backs political candidates who claim the same.

The NAACP's action caught the attention of Andrew Breitbart of BigGovernment.com, who said the controversy was "absolutely manufactured for political gain," in a summer "in which the economy is the number one issue affecting blacks and whites in this country. On July 25, 2009 Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Shirley Sherrod as Georgia Director of Rural Development. USDA Rural Development spends over $1.2 Billion in the state of Georgia each year. On March 27, 2010, while speaking at the NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet, Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race.

Shirley Sherrod: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me, I know what he was doing. But he had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough. So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. And he needed to go back and report that I did try and help him. So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because of Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them that his own kind would take care of him. That's when it was revealed to me that its about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white...it is about white and black. It is about white and black but its not you know...it opened my eyes because I took him to one of his own.

Fox News Clip:

Geraldo Rivera: Do you denounce in the way that you ask the Tea Parties denounce racists within your ranks?
Hilary Shelton: Yes we do, we repudiate racists within our ranks.

Back to Shirley Sherrod Clip:

Chris,

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer

Published July 20, 2010
| FoxNews.com

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign.

Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate.

"He had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," she said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FoxNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

The NAACP released a statement late Monday condemning Sherrod's admission.

"We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," the statement said.

"Her actions were shameful," it continued. "While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

Sherrod explained in the video that, at the time, she assumed the state or national Department of Agriculture had referred the white farmer to her. In order to ensure that the farmer could report back that she was indeed helpful, she said she took him to see "one of his own" -- a white lawyer.

"I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

The point of the story wasn't entirely clear; only an excerpt of the speech is included in the video clip.

"It was revealed to me that it's about poor versus those who have," she said, suggesting she had learned that race is less important.

The video clip was first posted by BigGovernment.com. The clip is dated March 27 from an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

The clip adds to the firestorm of debate over the NAACP's decision to approve a resolution at its convention last week accusing some Tea Party activists of racism -- a charge Tea Party leaders deny.

In a second clip from the same event posted online, Sherrod appeared to urge black job seekers to find work at the Department of Agriculture because the federal government won't lay people off.

"There are jobs at USDA and many times there are no people of color to fill those jobs because we shy away from agriculture. We hear the word agriculture and think, why are we working in the fields?" she said. "You've heard of a lot of layoffs. Have you heard of anybody in the federal government losing their job? That's all I need to say."

Jay Bookman In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape
7:31 am July 20, 2010, by Jay

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist.

By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation:

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

After watching the video Monday evening, I wrote in comments that "what Sherrod says in that video – and what she apparently did – are deeply troubling... She might very well have earned a firing. But I'd like to see that rest of that video as well, because at the point it abruptly ends, she appears to be saying that it's wrong to think in terms of black and white, that she came to see things as more accurately divided between poor and rich than by race."

As I also noted, the folks at Big Government seem to have the whole video, since they also posted another segment, and it would be useful to see the rest of it.

Sherrod gets a chance to tell her side of the story in an AJC story by Marcus Garner:

"But Tuesday morning, Sherrod said what online viewers weren't told in reports posted throughout the day Monday was that the tale she told at the banquet happened 24 years ago – before she got the USDA job – when she worked with the Georgia field office for the Federation of Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund.

Sherrod said the short video clip excluded the breadth of the story about how she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period to help ward off foreclosure of his farm, and how she eventually became friends with the farmer and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

So let's see the rest of the tape, Big Government. Was Sherrod giggling among black folk about the time she put it to the white man, as the leaked excerpt suggests, or was the tape a deceptively edited excerpt of a longer story about getting beyond the issue of race, as she claims?

Let's see the tape. The evidence apparently exists to settle the question. Cough it up.

<http://www.shadowtv.com/redirect/notification.jsp?vid=86e15cb25493301e7aee306262074d24>

JOHN ROBERTS: The U.S. Department of Agriculture accepts the resignation of an employee after a video surfaced showing her telling an audience that she withheld assistance to a white farmer because of his race. Let's listen to what she told the NAACP.

[BEGIN VIDEO]

SHIRLEY SHERROD: I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough

[END VIDEO]

KIRAN CHETRY: Does that video tell the whole story? Joining us now on the phone from Albany, Georgia is Shirley Sherrod herself. Thanks for being with us this morning, Shirley.

SHERROD: Thank you.

CHETRY: You say this was part of the story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show you in a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. Will you finish for us how this ended?

SHERROD: Okay. I was speaking to that group like I've done many groups and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only. And I tell them the story of how I worked with a white farmer back in 1986. I was not working for the Department of Agriculture. I was working with and non-profit organization assisting farmers throughout south Georgia and the southeast. And this farmer came to me for help. I was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race, it's about those who have versus those who do not have. And I tell how I took him to a lawyer who I thought would help him. In the end, that lawyer didn't. In the end, I had to frantically look for a lawyer because when USDA lifted - I'm sorry, when the court lifted the injunction against USDA in May of 1987, this white farmer was 1 of 13 that was foreclosed on by the state of Georgia. I had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure. He couldn't - at that time we had chapter 12 -

CHETRY: Yes, but let me said - you said you didn't know enough, didn't give him the full force of what you could do. You said you did enough, and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that perhaps he could help him. What did you mean by that?

SHERROD: What I meant was, I didn't know anyone else. I didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12. But I thought if I took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

ROBERTS: Miss Sherrod, let's make it clear though, this happened 24 years ago. You eventually worked with this white farmer. You eventually became friends, you say, with the farmer and his wife.

SHERROD: Yes.

ROBERTS: So the question I have is, when the U.S. Department of Agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, "Wait a minute, you don't know the full story. Here's the full story, why should I step down?"

SHERROD: I did say that. But they, for, some reason, the stuff that FOX and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how I tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

ROBERTS: Many people at home might be thinking, well, if you're recounting an old story, why did you succumb to pressure to step down? Why didn't you try to fight this?

SHERROD: If I tried to fight it and didn't have any support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, what would I do?

CHETRY: Let me ask you this. Did you talk to the NAACP about it? Because I just want to read for our audience what Ben Jealous, the president, said. He said, referring to you and this surfacing of the tape, "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story, she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races. She gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man, and the reaction from many in the audience is disturbing." This is from Ben Jealous. Did you try to clarify with the NAACP your story?

SHERROD: No, I haven't had had a chance to talk to anyone. All of this was happening so fast. And it's unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people with that now.

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

SHERROD: I don't mind.

ROBERTS: Thanks a lot.

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural Development State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?

Thank you,

George Ko

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA

Tuesday, July 20, 2010

ADVERTISEMENT

This is a rush transcript from "Hannity," July 19, 2010. This copy may not be in its final form and may be updated.

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers.

Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination.

Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me.

I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him.

(END OF VIDEO CLIP)

HANNITY: Now details on the official sudden resignation are still coming in. We'll have more on this story including more video coming up in this hour. That's all straight ahead.

But also, meanwhile the debate in Washington raged today over whether or not unemployment insurance should be extended yet again for American struggling to find work. Now earlier President Obama addressed the issue from the Rose Garden.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

PRESIDENT BARACK OBAMA: It's time to stop holding workers laid off in this recession hostage to Washington politics. It's time to do what is right. Not for the next election, but for the middle class.

We've got to stop blocking emergency relief for Americans who are out of work. We've got to extend unemployment insurance.

(END OF VIDEO CLIP)

HANNITY: All right, now the president did not bother to mention that the only reason the extension may be necessary is because his stimulus was a complete and utter failure.

Now since the recovery plan was passed more than three million Americans have lost their jobs.

Now this morning the GOP leader in the House came out swinging saying, quote, "The president knows Republicans support extending unemployment insurance and doing it in a fiscally responsible way by cutting spending elsewhere in the $3 trillion federal budget."

But the White House isn't interested in finding a way to actually pay for the extension. It's a whole lot easier to simply drive America deeper into debt.

And joining me now with analysis is the former speaker of the House, Fox News contributor, co-host of the documentary along with his wife Calista, "Nine Days That Changed the World," which you can find at Newt.org, is former speaker of the House, Newt Gingrich.

Mr. Speaker, welcome back.

NEWT GINGRICH, FORMER SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE: It's good to be with you.

HANNITY: All right. A lot — a lot obviously going on here. The — this woman on tape saying these racially charged things that she didn't want to help farmers, in particular white farmer. That she said she wanted him to go out and deal with one of his own and she put him in touch with a white lawyer.

Just the latest in a series of racial incidents. What do you think of this?

GINGRICH: Well, let me say, first of all, Secretary Vilsack did exactly the right thing. I mean I often disagree with this administration. But firing her after that kind of viciously racist attitude was exactly the right thing to do. And the fact that we have to be genuinely colorblind.

You know you can't be a black racist any more than you can be a white racist. And I just think it'd be good for those of us who are often critical of the administration to recognize that here's a case where Secretary Vilsack did exactly the right thing, moved very promptly, and fired somebody who frankly shouldn't be serving the American people because they clearly had a set of attitudes inappropriate for a federal official.

HANNITY: All right, my only thing is they weren't the ones that caught it. It was on Breitbart.com and it happened some time ago. So it's interesting that it took the new media to expose this.

Here's my next question, though. There's another twist to the story, and that is that, this was — these comments were made at an NAACP banquet. Now in light of the NAACP accusing the Tea Party of being a racist movement last week, do you think the NAACP should be held to account for the very standard they were demanding from the Tea Party?

GINGRICH: Of course. Clearly the national — and I suspect, Sean, if you contact them — the national leadership of the NAACP — I'm sure will feel honor-bound to apologize for having had that kind of a racist comment said at a meeting I suspect they didn't know about it, just as I suspect Secretary Vilsack didn't.

But now that it's there and it's clearly obvious, because it's on tape, I would hope that national NAACP would apologize for having that kind of racist comment at one of their meetings.

HANNITY: Well, I've tried to reach out to Ben Jealous. He has yet to return my phone call and he's invited on this program if he would like to discuss it. I'd like to have him on.

But it's interesting. A lot of people contacted me last week. Apparently you had sent out a tweet. By the way I'm glad that you are up on tweeting, which by the way, I have a Twitter account as well at @SeanHannity.

But you have your own Twitter account. And you offered to basically broker a meeting —

GINGRICH: No, no.

HANNITY: Well, hang on.

GINGRICH: No, I — no, I didn't say that. That was a misinterpretation by the Huffington Post.

HANNITY: OK.

GINGRICH: What I said was —

HANNITY: I didn't read the tweet. Go ahead.

GINGRICH: Right. But what I said was local Tea Party groups — because Tea Parties don't have a hierarchy. They don't have a national organization. Local Tea Party groups ought to reach out to local NAACP chapters and offer to have joint town hall meetings.

For example, about job creation. I mean there's a clear difference between job creators and job killers. It would be great to get Americans of all backgrounds in the same room talking about whether they ought to follow policies that you and I believe in which create jobs.

And I suspect most African-Americans at the local level in the local NAACP chapter would be surprised at how much they have in common with Tea Party members, a number of whom, by the way, are African-American, Latino and Asians. They're not — the Tea Parties are not white organizations. They're open to all Americans.

So my point was, if somebody wants to start a conversation, instead of yelling at them, what if we invite them in the room and let's have a conversation about America's future together.

And I'm told by Adam Waldeck at American Solutions who coordinates this that a number of local Tea Party groups are reaching out to local NAACP chapters on their own to have this kind of a dialogue.

HANNITY: I don't know what the right answer is. But I would find it very hard to sit down with the NAACP back in 2000. They ran this James Byrd ad when George Bush supported the death penalty for the person — the people responsible for that James Byrd dragging death.

You can't have a worse penalty. And that ad was particularly hard hitting. It was as if my father was killed all over again, if you remember that ad. And then in this particular case, this happened with this woman at this NAACP banquet.

I'm not saying not to have a dialogue. I am saying you can also talk about their associations. They've been — Ben Jealous was at a meeting with Louis Farrakhan. Should we not have certain standards prior to any meeting?

GINGRICH: Yes. We can also say let's agree that we should condemn racism wherever it occurs. Now we hope that the NAACP will apply that standard to somebody who is at one of its banquets.

But I think it's good for the country to see that we are not afraid to reach out and talk to people and to try to focus the conversation in a positive way. African-American unemployment is higher under the Obama administration than under any administration in a very long time.

African-Americans want their schools to work so their children go to college and not to prison. We have lots of things you and I could talk about in local meetings. And I said local meetings where local people get together.

And I think you'd find that at the local level, not the professional, you know, left-wing activist level. At the local level there are an awful lot of very decent people in the NAACP who would suddenly find out they have an awful lot in common with their local Tea Party neighbors.

HANNITY: But I found the chart — the things that were said about the Tea Party so inaccurate, so over-the-top, so lacking in evidence, it is almost hard to begin a dialogue when everything is predicated on false charges and a false statement.

I didn't even bring up the issue of the New Black Panther Party and the Department of Justice and Eric Holder. What did you —

GINGRICH: Well, look —

HANNITY: Go ahead.

GINGRICH: First of all, Eric Holder should resign for national security reasons. He should certainly resign over the racism inherent in the Black Panther case. I mean I'm happy to say that Eric Holder shouldn't be attorney general and is not doing the job correctly.

But I'd certainly go back to your point for a second, Sean. Maybe this makes me different, OK? The New York Times often runs editorials that are totally dishonest. Their attack on the Arizona state law, for example — on immigration — was a totally dishonest attack.

I still talk to New York Times reporters all the time. I think it's important to reach out. It's important to try to be positive.

HANNITY: By the way, just for the record I do not return the calls of anybody from The New York Times. They don't call anymore because I won't return their calls.

GINGRICH: Now our audience — now our audience can see the difference in our two styles.

HANNITY: Yes, well — look, what do I know? I made — perhaps you're right.

Look, I'm not saying we ought not have a dialogue. I think a dialogue is important. But I think a dialogue has got to be — the foundation of which has got to start in a fair way.

GINGRICH: Right.

HANNITY: And it's almost like if you begin a dialogue with OK, the Tea Party is racist, the Tea Party, you know — the Tea Party members uttered these racial epithets when there's no evidence, seems to me that you're starting out at a decided disadvantage.

GINGRICH: Sure.

HANNITY: If you don't demand honesty up front and an apology before the dialogue begins.

GINGRICH: Well, I like to — I think we have a nice test that came on your show tonight. Do they have the courage — the NAACP — to apologize for the racism in this person's comments at an NAACP banquet? Pretty good test.

HANNITY: All right. We'll come back. We have a lot more with former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich, coming up after the break.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

HANNITY: And we continue now with former Speaker of the House, Fox News contributor, Newt Gingrich is with us.

All right, Mr. Speaker, we had the NAACP. We had what they said about the Tea Party. I think obviously an attempt — they support the Democratic Party — 106 days out of an election to energize the base.

The president. He went out and he'd started referring to the GOP as being the party of the rich because he says Republicans don't want to extend unemployment benefits. The reality is Republicans do support extending unemployment benefits. They want it paid for. They've already supported an extension for 99 weeks.

And by the way, the president doesn't need any Republican votes to pass the bill anyway. So is this — is this what we can expect for the next 106 days?

GINGRICH: Sure. Look, if you watch what Harry Reid is trying to do to Sharron Angle in Nevada. What you're going to see everywhere in the country is desperately dishonest, and I think consistently demagogue attacks, because they know that if there's any kind of a fair fight they're going to get badly defeated.

The president sadly is the opposite of Ronald Reagan. Ronald Reagan led by telling the American people the truth, by rallying them to the facts and by encouraging their better instincts.

The president seems to have a really unusual desire to divide the country and a really deep need to blame somebody else for his own failures. And as a result, you get this kind of Rose Garden comment.

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: The fact is, if this president cared about getting money to the unemployed, all he has to agree to is a one percent reduction in his budget across the board and that would pay for —

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: — everything he wants to send. But he does — what he wants to do is borrow from your children and your grandchildren so that we will pay interest on the debt forever, so that he can send out money that is unpaid for, that increases the federal deficit even beyond the already gigantic amounts.

HANNITY: All right, so —

GINGRICH: And I think that's just fundamentally, morally wrong.

HANNITY: So what you're saying for the next 106 days we can expect a ton of class warfare rhetoric, demagoguery as you just pointed out, and demonization, et cetera, character assassination, maybe some supportive groups playing the race card because they can't run on their record? That's what's the next 106 days are going to be like? This is going to be all we see?

GINGRICH: Look — I think the Democratic Party counterattack — to use the language you just kind of packaged nicely. If you assume dishonesty, distortion and demagoguery, you have a reasonably good idea what Harry Reid's campaign is going to be like.

Because of the election choice in Nevada at 14.5 percent unemployment is between a job killing Harry Reid record and a job creating Sharron Angle proposal. He's going to get beat so badly that you won't even be able to see him.

Therefore he is — he's raising — he just went to Canada to raise money from trial lawyers in an international meeting.

HANNITY: All right, so —

GINGRICH: This guy is going to pour on negative ads. Every Democrat in the country will imitate Harry Reid.

HANNITY: Yes. I agree and I have a friend of mine running for Congress and he's already experiencing it. Guy votes with Nancy Pelosi 99 percent of the time, the only thing he wants to do is attack you and me and Mark Levin and anybody else, which is interesting.

The question is, will this tactic be successful?

GINGRICH: No. No.

HANNITY: And — and how do you recommend — you're great at politics. How do you recommend Republicans counter that?

GINGRICH: First of all, Sean.

HANNITY: Yes?

GINGRICH: If you voted 99 percent with Nancy Pelosi —

HANNITY: Yes?

GINGRICH: Wouldn't you want to be attacking all day every day?

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: I mean do you want to defend that record?

HANNITY: No.

GINGRICH: I — I was out last week in — for Brad Zaun in Des Moines. His opponent voted 98 percent with Nancy Pelosi and all he has to say is, you know, San Francisco doesn't deserve an Iowa representative. Iowa needs an Iowa representative. And that's the whole campaign.

HANNITY: I think that's the whole campaign. I agree.

GINGRICH: I believe the key to the fall election is very simple. There are job creators and there are job killers. We absolute proof that from the time Pelosi and Reid took over in January of 2007 the Democratic Congress has been killing jobs. It continues to kill jobs. This economy is not going to recover. We just saw a — we just saw a huge oil rig leave the Gulf to go to Egypt with high paying jobs. We had a company announce over the weekend — think about this quote — "because of political instability in the United States, we are moving our rig to the Congo —

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: ...to drill for oil." So the president is exporting jobs. He's doing a great job of creating jobs for China. The president has done a great job creating jobs for Egypt and the Congo. He just isn't doing a great job creating jobs for Americans.

HANNITY: No, we're losing those jobs. All right, but then —

GINGRICH: So that's the choice. You want to be job creator or a job killer. If you want to be a job killer, vote Democrat. If you want a job creator, vote Republican. I think that's the fall campaign.

HANNITY: All right. I agree with you. Don't think that I didn't notice you dropped in Des Moines, Iowa, and your latest trip to the great state of Iowa. And in between I know you snuck in a trip to New Hampshire. And I think I saw your schedule, you're going back to South Carolina.

GINGRICH: I was in South Carolina Friday a week ago —

HANNITY: Now hang on a second. Now wait a minute, we've been friends a long time. You have given more direct answers to people in the liberal media than to me. I want to know what's Newt Gingrich's plan.

GINGRICH: Our plan is for Calista and me to sit down with our family in February or March.

HANNITY: That's not the answer I want.

GINGRICH: And make a decision. But I promise you, Sean —

HANNITY: Well, how come —

(CROSSTALK)

GINGRICH: Because they printed the same thing I've said to you for nine months. What can I tell you? But I think it had — because it had AP Des Moines.

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: It suddenly got bigger coverage. I mean if it had said AP Long Island it wouldn't had been the same effect.

HANNITY: It would said, Newt and Hannity, it probably wouldn't had been the same. But then again maybe they're mad at me at The New York Times because I don't respond to their phone calls. You do.

GINGRICH: Yes, I guessed that could be the whole problem.

HANNITY: That's could be the whole thing right there. All right.

GINGRICH: But I promise you in February or March, I'll be on the show. We'll talk about it.

HANNITY: And you'll announce here, either way?

GINGRICH: Well I'll certainly talk about it.

(LAUGHTER)

HANNITY: I love being able to pin you down. All right. Former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich.

the u.s. department of agriculture shunned by the naacp. we're pushing forward on the story of shirley sherrod. she's telling us we don't have the whole story. she used to be the rule development director for georgia until a youtube clip of her went viral from an naacp dinner march.

well, here is part of the statement from agriculture secretary tom vilsack. there's zero tolerance for discrimination at usda, and i strongly condemn any act of discrimination from any person. from ben jealous from the naacp, racism is about the abuse of power. we are appalled by her axes just as we are against the power of farmers of color and female farmers. sherrod says, hold on, there's no context with that clip and that it doesn't tell the entire story. she called cnn's american morning this morning to give her side of the story and talked with john roberts. he joins us from new york and cnn's political analyst roland martin is in chicago and he will weigh in as well. let's listen to your interview with shirry sherrod from earlier and then comment.

i was speaking to the group like i've done many groups, and i tell them about a time when i thought the issue was race and race only. and i tell them the story of how i worked with the white farmer back in 1986. i was not working for the department of agriculture. i was working with the nonprofit organization assisting farmers throughout south georgia and the southeast. and this farmer came to me for help. i was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is it not about race. it's about those who have versus those who do not have.

well, we had her on this morning. when you take a look at that video clip, it looks like, oh, my goodness, this is something she did while in a position of authority at the u.s. department of graul. she said this was 24 years ago, this was a learning experience for her. in the job she was in with this nonprofit cooperative organization dealing with farmers in southeastern georgia had a preconceived notion of what it was all about, about white and black, and she said, no, i learned from that it was not about race. it was about the haves versus the have-nots, and she has not only told this speech before this organization back on march the 27th, but more than six months earlier than that, on the 15th of october, she gave what she told us this morning was exactly the same speech at albany state university and was played over and over again on local television in albany and nobody said anything about this. this was put up on a website, the latest one from march 27th, and that's when it came to the attention of the u.s. department of agriculture and the naacp. when you take a look at ben jealous' statement, it looks as though he perceived this was something she did while she was at the u.s. department of agriculture, which others have told us would indeed be wrong, but is it wrong if she was telling a story that happened 26 years ago saying this is something that changed my perspective on the whole issue? that's what's being debated now.

well, first of all, i want to address the right wingers perspective second. i believe that the statement by the naacp was a correct statement because you're speaking to the issue of being in power, and you actually making a determination based upon race. i talked to john boyd with the national black farmers association, and he supports their decision, even though, as she said, this took place prior to her coming to the usda. it shows when you're in a position of power -- we also know there are individuals who work for the department of agriculture who cost the american taxpayers 1 billion-plus dollars and think of not been fired and denied opportunities to hispanics, blacks and whites and based upon gender, so i hope the right wing conservatives would talk to those individuals as well. she has to understand that her position was going to be, frankly, difficult, because the question would then have come into would other folks can you deny opportunities to? what else happened? any politically charged environment, like it or not, this is going happen.

wasn't she just telling the story of redemption? she feels she was telling a story of redemption that more than 20 years ago - as a political appointee, one has to recognize in these times today, when folks do play gotcha, when you do have videotape, how things can be used against you. so i would question frankly even telling that particular story publicly, knowing full well how it could be used against you, used against your superiors, used against the president, whom ever. that's the environment we are now living in whether we like it or not.

we have all been victim of that. how many times have we given speeches or interviews and stein people take snippets. it's happened to all three of us, in fact, and it's pretty heart wrenching.

the point could be made that robert byrd's affiliation with the ku klux klan. it stayed with him for his life and was mentioned when he passed away recently but people allowed him to take a different point of view when he came to it. i'm not defending this woman but she came to a different point of view, and she's talking about that now and is that a fireable offense?

again, though, you begin to speak to the issue in terms of what will be the perception, will it be a political fire storm and will the controversy get in the way of you actually doing your job? weefb's seen this on multiple occasions.

roland, that's a great point. we don't know, at least at this point -- i don't know. do you know, john?

we don't have her record, but from talking to her this morning -- we do not have her record, but from talking to her this morning, she said that episode in her life during which he worked very closely with this farmer and became friends with both him and his wife, it taught her how to do her job better, so it would appear on the surface -- not defending her, just telling you what she said -- that this was a learning experience. she was in her job at a nonprofit with a different perspective than she has now and this helped her to see the light.

we need to hear from the usda. john reached out to the usda. we reached out to the usda. now that we are getting more context regarding this speech and she has spoken to us live on cnn, we need to hear from the usda and say, well, did she explain this to you and why did you accept her resignation.

sure, and, kyra, look, we also have to recognize that when you're operating in a political fire storm, when you are operating in a situation where just last week naacp went after tea party folks, racist elements. truly, that was the motive of andrew brightbart. that was the motive, what is the context, what are you exposing. but from a political standpoint, whether you like it or not, you have to make decisions before somebody may resign or get forced out because it could impede your actual work moving forward if it continues and the drumbeats get louder and louder. you cut it off at the pass. you may not like it, but that's the reality in 2010.

that's right true. once it's on the internet it never goes away. final thought, john.

it would be nice to see the entire tape in its context so we could all take a look at it and say, oh, this is what she said, and you can continue to hold the same opinion or change it based on what she said.

there you go. let's ask the usda for the entire tape.

i would like to know, too, if the naacp had the benefit of having this in context before it came forward with its statement.

i say, yes.

i talked to ben jealous in terms of it did not have her comments on that, but, again, you are looking at a situation of a national organization that fought racism on the surface. when you hear comments, what's your reaction going to be?

roland, did ben jealous say he saw the entire speech?

no one has seen the whole tape. this wasn't a national organization. this was a local chapter, not a national organization.

it would be good to see the whole tape.

I wonder for those who released the sound bites, if they saw the whole tape, too. I'm getting a big, fat wrap. We will stay on it. Roland, let us know if you hear more.

Thoughts? We have to decide if we need to add the following to the top: You may have seen some news stories about USDA this morning. Also, who else needs to be in this loop.

Dear employee:

I want to reiterate my commitment and that of the leadership at USDA to civil rights. We all must work to ensure that we are treating our customers and employees equally and fairly and we all should have zero tolerance for discrimination.

I also want to remind all of you that you have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent this sentiment in your official actions, statements, and public presentations. We are lucky to have the opportunity to work for the American people and we owe it to them to instill confidence in our leadership.

Talking Points

- Yesterday, Secretary Vilsack accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation.
- There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person.
- We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.
- We don't want this issue to distract our efforts to do so.

Question and Answer

But it happened 30 years ago, it was taken out of context...

- We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner.
- But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Sherrod, even if taken out of context, undermine that trust.

Did she explain the real story to you?

- She said it was taken out of context but we have not seen the entire video.
- We have a duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Sherrod, even if taken out of context, undermine that trust.

Why did you accept her resignation?

- We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner.
- But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Sherrod, even if taken out of context, undermine that trust.

Have you fired any white employees for discrimination?

- We cannot discuss private personnel matters.

What have you done to right the wrongs of the past?

- We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.
- There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person and we have made significant progress in doing so.

FYI- FOX news just followed up with us looking for comment on resignation

Stephanie,

Shirley Sherrod just told CNN that she was asked to resign by the USDA. She actually was very specific – that Dep. Under Secretary Cheryl Cook told her that the White House wanted her out because she was "going to be on Glenn Beck."

Does the USDA have any comment on that?

Just had a conversation with Ron Stroman of the Oversight committee. Towns is very worried that USDA took action against Ms Sherrod w/o learning the facts which resulted in her being directed to resign. He has directed his staff to prepare a letter to Vilsak along this line. Ron said that Ranking Member Issa is expected to play into the media accounts that the WH was behind the move to take action against a black woman-and that Issa will play the race card against USDA and the WH -highlighting the fact that we took action before the facts were in. According to Ron, (who is in touch with her) Ms Sherrod does not appear to plan on coming back to USDA because she feels so unfairly treated.

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. CNN (11 min ago)- Is this what you were referring to?

NAACP 'snookered' over video of former USDA employee

... Vilsack told CNN on Tuesday that he "didn't speak to anyone at the White House. ... I made this decision, it's my decision. Nobody from the White House contacted me about this at all."

A White House official also told CNN that "the White House did not pressure her or the USDA over the resignation. It was the secretary's decision, as he has said."

President Barack Obama was briefed on the situation after Vilsack decided to seek Sherrod's resignation, according to a White House official, who said the president fully supports the decision....

FULL STORY:

The NAACP has retracted its original statement condemning comments made by a former Agriculture Department official who resigned after a video clip surfaced of her discussing a white farmer.

The NAACP said in a statement Tuesday that it was "snookered by Fox News" and conservative website publisher Andrew Breitbart.

"Having reviewed the full tape by Shirley Sherrod, who is the woman who was fired by the Department of Agriculture, and most importantly heard the testimony of the white farmers mentioned in this story, we now believe that the organization that edited the documents did so with the intention of deceiving millions of Americans," the statement from NAACP President Benjamin Jealous said.

The organization also urged Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack to reconsider Sherrod's resignation from her post as the department's director of rural development for Georgia.

Breitbart originally posted the video, which was quickly picked up by Fox News.

In the video, Sherrod, can be heard telling an audience at a March 27, 2009, appearance before a local chapter of the NAACP that she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm.

Conservative media outlets tied the video to the NAACP's recent resolution calling on the Tea Party movement to repudiate racist elements within it that have displayed such items as images of President Obama with a bone through his nose and the White House with a lawn full of watermelons. The controversy has led one Tea Party group to oust another because of a blog posting by the second group's leader.

Tea Party Express leader Mark Williams posted on his blog a faux letter from Jealous to President Abraham Lincoln in which Williams ridicules the organization's use of "colored" in its historic name and uses multiple stereotypes to bolster his point. The National Tea Party Foundation expelled Williams' organization from its coalition as a result. Breitbart told CNN's "John King USA" on Tuesday that releasing the video was "not about Shirley Sherrod."

"This was about the NAACP attacking the Tea Party, and this is showing racism at an NAACP event," he said. "I did not ask for Shirley Sherrod to be fired."

Sherrod defended herself in a number of interviews Tuesday, saying her controversial comments were taken out of context.

She insisted she "went all out" to help the man keep his farm and said she resigned only under pressure from the Obama administration, telling CNN she received four phone calls Monday telling her the White House wanted her to step down.

"They asked me to resign, and in fact they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from West Point, Georgia, yesterday," she said. The last call "asked me to pull to the side of the road and do it [resign]," she said. Vilsack told CNN on Tuesday that he "didn't speak to anyone at the White House. ... I made this decision, it's my decision. Nobody from the White House contacted me about this at all."

A White House official also told CNN that "the White House did not pressure her or the USDA over the resignation. It was the secretary's decision, as he has said."

President Barack Obama was briefed on the situation after Vilsack decided to seek Sherrod's resignation, according to a White House official, who said the president fully supports the decision.

Sherrod said Tuesday that the incident with the farmer in 1986 occurred before she started work for the USDA and was working at the nonprofit Federation of Southern Cooperatives. She said the experience helped her learn to move beyond race and she tells the story to audiences to make that point.

Meanwhile, the farmer referenced in the clip told CNN he credits Sherrod with helping his family save their farm. "I don't know what brought up the racist mess," Roger Spooner told CNN's "Rick's List." "They just want to stir up some trouble, it sounds to me in my opinion."

Spooner says Sherrod accompanied him and his wife to a lawyer in Americus, Georgia, who was able to help them file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, which ultimately saved their farm.

"If it hadn't been for her, we would've never known who to see or what to do," he said. "She led us right to our success."

Spooner's wife, Eloise, remembered Sherrod as "nice-mannered, thoughtful, friendly; a good person."

She said that when she saw the story of the tape and Sherrod's resignation on television, "I said, 'That ain't right. They have not treated her right.'"

The poor-quality video shows Sherrod telling her audience that the farmer she was working with "took a long time ... trying to show me he was superior to me." As a result, she said, she "didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

To prove she had done her job, she said, she took him to a white lawyer. "I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

But that lawyer failed to help, she said. "I did not discriminate against [the farmer]. And, in fact, I went all out to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go." She was able to find an attorney to file Chapter 11 bankruptcy to help the family stay on the farm, she said.

Sherrod said she first heard of the possible controversy when someone e-mailed her Thursday to taunt her about her comments. She immediately forwarded the e-mail to the USDA so the agency would be aware. She was told that someone would look into it.

She said it wasn't until Monday that she heard back, and by then, she was being asked for her resignation.

Sherrod said she got four calls Monday from Cheryl Cook, the USDA rural development undersecretary. In the first, she said, she was told she was being put on administrative leave. In the second, she said, she was told she needed to resign.

Asked if she felt she had an opportunity to explain, Sherrod said, "No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth."

Vilsack said Tuesday that the controversy, regardless of the context of her comments, "compromises the director's ability to do her job."

"This isn't a situation where we are necessarily judgmental about the content of the statement, that's not the issue here. I don't believe this woman is a racist at all," he said. "She's a political appointee, and her job is basically to focus on job growth in Georgia, and I have deep concern about her ability to do her job without her judgments being second-guessed."

Ralph Paige, executive director of the nonprofit Sherrod worked for before being appointed to the USDA job in 2009, told CNN on Tuesday that she garnered only praise and there were never any claims of discrimination against her.

"I can't praise Shirley enough," he said. "She holds no malice in her heart."

Vilsack issued a statement Monday announcing he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, noting a "zero tolerance" policy for discrimination at the USDA, adding, "I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person."

The first statement that the NAACP issued late Monday backed Vilsack's decision.

Sherrod said the NAACP did not contact her before issuing the first statement. She said she got a phone call from an NAACP representative in Washington on Tuesday afternoon telling her another statement would be issued once the full tape was reviewed.

"I told him I was highly disappointed that they would make a statement without even looking into it," she said.

In the statement issued Tuesday evening, the NAACP reversed its condemnation after viewing the full video.

"She was sharing this account as part of a story of transformation and redemption," the statement said. "In the full video, Ms. Sherrod says she realized that the dislocation of farmers is about 'haves and have nots.' 'It's not just about black people, it's about poor people,' says Sherrod in the speech. 'We have to get to the point where race exists but it doesn't matter.'"

Earlier Tuesday, Sherrod called the NAACP "the reason why this happened. They got into a fight with the Tea Party, and all of this came out as a result of that."

She called the ensuing controversy "unbelievable."

"I think any moment I'm going to wake up and none of this is happening, but it is," she said.

"When you spend your life helping others and see people try to turn that around to try to make it look like you're a racist when that's not been what your life has been about -- that doesn't feel good."

Official: No White House pressure on Sherrod

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack this afternoon took responsibility for firing an official, Shirley Sherrod, whose appearance on video recalling her behavior toward a white farmer drew charges of racism, and whose immediate firing drew suggestions that the administration had over-reacted to an edited video clip.

A White House official told me just now that the White House backs Vilsack's decision -- but that it was Vilsack's alone. The official said the White House -- contrary to the Sherrod's charge -- did not pressure the Department to fire her.

Vilsack's statement:

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

White House official: We didn't push for Sherrod's firing

A White House official insists that the White House didn't pressure Shirley Sherrod to resign, or pressure USDA chief Tom Vilsack to fire her, over the Andrew Breitbart video allegedly showing her claiming she didn't help a white farmer 24 years ago because of racial reasons.

"We did not pressure USDA or Ms. Sherrod," the White House official emails me. Ben Smith was told something similar.

Separately, Vilsack, who fired Sherrod while declaring zero tolerance for "discrimination," released a statement that seemed to take ownership of the firing, without quite clarifying whether the White House had any role:

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

Some have been claiming that the firing shows the White House allowed itself to be led around by the nose by Breitbart. And this quote from a White House official may not quiet the criticism, perhaps understandably, since it's anonymous.

Whatever the White House role, if Vilsack canned this woman based on the strength of the Breitbart video alone, before the facts were in -- and we don't know for certain that it happened this way, though it certainly appears so -- that's appalling on its own.

UPDATE, 6:17 p.m.: Much more in the way of reactions to this right here.

UPDATE, 6:30 p.m.: The NAACP admits to having been snookered by Breitbart and Fox.

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA:Â <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.Â

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural Development State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?

Thank you,

George Ko

Tom Vilsack, USDA and civil rights

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said early Wednesday morning that he's willing to reconsider his decision to force Shirley Sherrod's resignation.

"I am of course willing and will conduct a thorough review and consider additional facts to ensure to the American people we are providing services in a fair and equitable manner," Vilsack said in a statement that arrived in inboxes after 2 a.m.

But to understand why he sought Sherrod's resignation so quickly, let's go back to February 2009. That's when Vilsack publicly vowed to tackle USDA's troubled civil rights history by ensuring that employees fairly treated minority and women farmers.

"Some folks refer to USDA as the last plantation, and it has a pretty poor history of taking care of people of color," Vilsack said at the time. "You've got outright bias and discrimination."

"Also you've got good people who don't even know that they're discriminating," said Vilsack. "It's necessary to begin the process of reeducating people."

Vilsack made those comments in Albany, Ga., Sherrod's home town. And he said them at a conference hosted by the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund, the same group Sherrod worked for in 1986 when she first met white farmer Roger Spooner.

Reeducating employees required an $8 million consulting contract with Jackson Lewis Corporate Diversity Counseling Group. And it required reviewing tens of thousands of complaints leveled against USDA during George W. Bush's presidency. The review has been led by a 34-year USDA veteran whom Vilsack coaxed out of retirement.

"When this department was established in 1862 by Abraham Lincoln, he referred to it as the people's department," Vilsack told colleague Krissah Thompson in February. "In order to be consistent with that legacy, it's necessary that our programs and our approach reflect an appreciation for everyone's rights. We took a look at [these] prior issues and are in the process of trying to address each of them."

The efforts received little national news coverage until this week when a three-minute clip of Sherrod's now-infamous speech surfaced. Her message -- that Americans need to see beyond a person's skin color -- was tainted by an impolitic delivery White House officials consider too damaging.

"This controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices," Vilsack said Tuesday, adding later that, "The controversy surrounding [Sherrod's] comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia."

"Our policy is clear," he continued. "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers."

Did Vilsack make the right decision, or did he overreact at the mercy of the web and cable news cycle? Or did he have to accept Sherrod's resignation in order to reinforce his work on civil rights? It's a question many in Washington will continue asking today.

Karen, the Black Agriculture Summit 2010 was wonderful. Excellent conversations and good energy, we are well on our way to a Black Agriculture Agenda roll out in September.

I am hot on the phone building consensus for a positive outcome to the drama unfolding in Georgia over my dear friend Shirley Sherrod resignation as director of Georgia Rural Development.

Professor Valerie Grim, Indiana University has agreed to help facilitate a positive outcome that will focus on the positive possibilities.

http://www.indiana.edu/~afroamer/faculty/popups/vitae/grim_cv.pdf

She is a saint and a soft gentle spiritual women. Why the NAACP and some folks moved quickly without the facts is interesting, I recall well Shirley and Secretary Vilsack sitting side by side in a positive early meeting in Washington.

A National Black Agriculture Roundtable August 6-7 meeting is in the planning stage, Washington D.C.

Karen, together we can bridge the chaos and strengthen the good works happening everyday to make the USDA truly the people's department.

Be well and know that a blessing is on the way out of this unfortunate situation.

Finally, Shirley's husband Rev. Sherrod will give a wonderful sermon this coming Sunday.

They are a powerful American success story, unique to the African experience in America.

The deep Southern experience in Albany Georgia is fierce, even today.

Dear Rev. Sherrod,

Secretary Vilsack has been trying all afternoon to reach Mrs. Sherrod. Her personal cell phone voice mailbox is full and not accepting messages. The Secretary is very anxious to have a personal, heartfelt conversation with her and apologize. We have tried your home number and we did leave a message on her USDA BB.

You may reach me on my direct line: [REDACTED] Exemption (b)(6) Thank you very much.

Absolutely Max. Let me know how I can help. I can call Rev. Hunter and a couple others, incl some folks who came to the briefing last month. Would you then pitch them to press? Just let me know what you need.

Joshua-
Hope the directors meeting is going well, my best to all from the airport.
As you know, USDA is dealing with a very tricky situation with our former employee in Georgia.
Karen Ross is our chief of staff and I offered your help in identifying a few African-American pastors who might be able to help with this situation, if desired. Vilsack has met personally with AME Pastor Hunter in LA, the Bishop who joined us late at the 5 loaves and 2 fish meeting, Jesse Jackson and a couple others.
Karen, as you remember from the WH Easter Prayer Breakfast, Joshua DuBois is Spec Assistant to the Pres and Director of the Faith-based and N'hood Partnership office. If you want this kind of help, there is no one better.
On a plane now, but will be available tomorrow.
Blessings, Max

It's been an interesting 48 hours for Shirley Sherrod. She's accepted apologies from the White House, and the secretary of agriculture. But, is she ready to take a new job within the same administration that demanded her resignation just three days ago?

It is a decision that she is mulling over this morning after agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack admitted he should have done a better job of investigating the video that started the controversy. So is she ready to put it all behind her? Does the president himself owe her a personal apology? Well, she's sitting right over there. I'm going to talk with Shirley Sherrod right ahead.

Also a storm brewing in the Caribbean has brought efforts to permanently plug the busted oil well in the Gulf to a near standstill. We're going to get the latest on that story and a rare view of the disaster as crews use a submarine to search for oil beneath the surface. We're going to take you live to the Gulf in just a couple of minutes.

And plus-sized and proud. The model who is furious that recent pictures of her were altered to make her appear thinner than she actually is.

But we begin on this Thursday morning with the fallout over the premature firing of an agriculture department official named Shirley Sherrod. We'll talk to her in a moment. But first, NBC's Savannah Guthrie is at the White House with the latest on the story. Savannah, good morning to you.

Reporter: Good morning, Matt. Well the White House is hoping to move past this chapter, now that the agriculture secretary has come forward to offer Miss Sherrod a new job with the agency, and to apologize. Under fire for the firing of a USDA worker, agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack faced the cameras.

This is a good woman. She's been put through hell. And I could have done and should have done a better job.

Reporter: Vilsack said he personally called Sherrod to apologize.

I asked for Shirley's forgiveness and she was gracious enough to extend it to me. And for that I am thankful.

reporter: at the white house wednesday, it was also all apologies.

i think without a doubt miss sherrod is owed an apology. a disservice was done for which we apologize. and on behalf of the administration, i offer our apologies.

reporter: after initially standing by the agriculture secretary's decision to fire sherrod, the white house now acknowledges it was a rush to judgment. a usda official called sherrod monday afternoon, in her car, asked her to pull over and resign by blackberry. this, after video surfaced online of sherrod making racially charged comments that turned out to be selectively edited.

how did we not ask the right questions? how did you all not ask the right questions? how did other people not ask the right questions?

reporter: watching the apologies as they were issued, live on cable tv, shirley sherrod herself later reacted.

i'm just wondering how will my grandchildren look at this when they read about this in later years, and their grandmother being the first black person to be state director of rural development in georgia, was asked to resign by the first black president.

reporter: as for andrew breitbart, the conservative blogger who posted the video, he acknowledged he put it online without seeing the full content of the remarks. but he didn't apologize for posting it. though he did say he has sympathy for sherrod.

i feel bad that they made this about her and i feel sorry that they made this about her. i'm not sure if that was done because they rushed to judgment, or whether they wanted to make it about shirley versus me. because that's what it's become.

well, there's one issue outstanding. senior aides here at the white house insist they did not push the agriculture secretary to fire ms. sherrod, that it was a decision made at agriculture and they were, frankly, looped in essentially after it had been done. on the other hand, miss sherrod has said repeatedly it was her impression, based on her conversation with an agriculture department official, that it was the white house who wanted her to resign. so that's one of those issues of fact that a lot of people will be talking about today, meredith.

all right, savannah guthrie, thank you very much. shirley sherrod is with us again this morning. ms. sherrod, thank you so much for joining us.

thank you.

you have now received apologies from the usda, the white house and the naacp for their rush to judgment. you've accepted those apologies. you really are a woman, as the secretary put it, who has been through hell. how are you feeling right now?

you know, i've gone from being at such a low on monday, as this was unfolding, and thinking, this is so unreal, to feeling so great about the support i've received from around the country. it's encouraging. it makes me feel that there are many others out there who think like i do, and so many who do not think like the individual who started this in the first place.

let's talk about that. i want to talk about it in a minute. but first of all, do you think that you deserve a phone call from president obama?

i think i do.

an apology?

well, you know, he is the president of the united states of america. i received the apologies that are important. ~~i really would not want the president to apologize to me. i'd love to have a conversation with him, though.~~ and what would you say to him?

you know, i'd like to talk to him a little bit about the experience of people like me. people at the grassroots level. people who live out there in rural america, people who live in the south. i know he does not have that kind of experience. let me help him a little bit with how we think, how we live, and the things that are happening.

what do you think he doesn't understand and a lot of the rest of the country doesn't understand about people like you and the way you live and what you're faced with?

you know, we are people who struggle every day, who do the best we can in our community. who love this country. we love him. we want him to be successful, because we feel things, in some ways, like we do. and we think that's good for the country. yes, there are issues out there that we are faced with. issues of poverty. issues that i worked so hard on these last 11 months at rural development to try to really have an impact on, mainly because that's me. but the other thing, i want everything to reflect, i want a good reflection for him as the first black president.

but why do you think when it comes to this topic of race, it just presses people's buttons? people are so quick to react without thinking. you're in the center of a storm here. why do you think that is?

you know, this has gone on for years and years, and i thought we were getting to a place where we really could talk about it. but we can't deal with it until we can face each other. that's the whole point i make when i talk. the things that are being done by the gentleman who started this, and i can't even think of his name -- andrew breitbart.

yes. i didn't know of him before this happened. but the things he's doing, being done more to divide us so we can't move on.

but i guess his point was that this is not him versus you. he was trying to point out racism within the membership of the naacp. that when you told that story about being reluctant to help a white farmer, before he realized this was about poverty, that there was acceptance within the crowd, people who are yeah, you're right, what he was trying to say was there's racism in the naacp, the same way they claim there might be racism within the tea party. is there room for debate, for discussion about that?

but at some point the white house could have checked and seen the whole video, the usda could have seen the whole video, the naacp could have seen the whole video before going on the attack with you. the white house has said they had nothing to do with your ouster. you have said that you had three phone calls on monday from your superiors saying that the white house was behind it, they wanted you to resign. do you stand by that?

i stand by that. because i asked what has happened? you know, i just couldn't -- it was so -- you know, the first call i received said we're putting you on administrative leave. i had to explain to my leadership staff that we were quite a ways from the office, in a meeting, that i explained what happened, and i told them, i have to leave and go turn this government car in and get my car and go home. you know, i asked -- so first they were putting me on administrative leave. the next call was shirley, we're going to have to ask you to resign. and then the white house wants you to resign. because i'm asking them, what happened? this is just so unbelievable. it was one thing for them to put me on administrative leave and then look into it. but they went from administrative leave directly into asking me to resign.

so obviously you still feel the white house has some explaining to do. meanwhile the usda, the secretary of agriculture has offered you a new job that you're thinking about. what can you tell us about this job?

you know, it's -- it's discrimination happens in the usda. that's why there are lawsuits by black farmers, hispanic farmers, native american farmers, women farmers. and they're because the agency that never deals with the people who call it. no one lost their job because they're discriminated against a black farmer or a native american farmer or a hispanic farmer or a female farmer. those individuals, many of them, some have retired, but many of them are still there. i would not want to be that individual that the department and everyone is looking to to solve the issue of racism in usda. it takes a lot more to get that job done.

so i'm just asking very quickly, what is the job exactly that they'd like you to do?

they talked about the office about me dealing with discrimination within the agency.

and you're inclined to say no to that?

at this moment, i would think i would be.

so as far as you're concerned at this point you're out of the usda for good?

yeah. i haven't seen the offer, you know. the secretary said he would e-mail it to me. i have not seen it yet. so before i say no totally, i would like to look at that to weigh in.

ms. sherrod we appreciate very much you coming in.

It's been an interesting 48 hours for Shirley Sherrod. She's accepted apologies from the White House, and the secretary of agriculture. But, is she ready to take a new job within the same administration that demanded her resignation just three days ago?

It is a decision that she is mulling over this morning after agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack admitted he should have done a better job of investigating the video that started the controversy. So is she ready to put it all behind her? Does the president himself owe her a personal apology? Well, she's sitting right over there. I'm going to talk with Shirley Sherrod right ahead.

Also a storm brewing in the Caribbean has brought efforts to permanently plug the busted oil well in the Gulf to a near standstill. We're going to get the latest on that story and a rare view of the disaster as crews use a submarine to search for oil beneath the surface. We're going to take you live to the Gulf in just a couple of minutes.

And plus-sized and proud. The model who is furious that recent pictures of her were altered to make her appear thinner than she actually is.

But we begin on this Thursday morning with the fallout over the premature firing of an agriculture department official named Shirley Sherrod. We'll talk to her in a moment. But first, NBC's Savannah Guthrie is at the White House with the latest on the story. Savannah, good morning to you.

Reporter: Good morning, Matt. Well the White House is hoping to move past this chapter, now that the agriculture secretary has come forward to offer Miss Sherrod a new job with the agency, and to apologize. Under fire for the firing of a USDA worker, agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack faced the cameras.

This is a good woman. She's been put through hell. And I could have done and should have done a better job.

Reporter: Vilsack said he personally called Sherrod to apologize.

I asked for Shirley's forgiveness and she was gracious enough to extend it to me. And for that I am thankful.

Reporter: At the White House Wednesday, it was also all apologies.

I think without a doubt Miss Sherrod is owed an apology. A disservice was done for which we apologize. And on behalf of the administration, I offer our apologies.

Reporter: After initially standing by the agriculture secretary's decision to fire Sherrod, the White House now acknowledges it was a rush to judgment. A USDA official called Sherrod Monday afternoon, in her car, asked her to pull over and resign by BlackBerry. This, after video surfaced online of Sherrod making racially charged comments that turned out to be selectively edited.

How did we not ask the right questions? How did you all not ask the right questions? How did other people not ask the right questions?

reporter: watching the apologies as they were issued, live on cable tv, shirley sherrod herself later reacted.

i'm just wondering how will my grandchildren look at this when they read about this in later years, and their grandmother being the first black person to be state director of rural development in georgia, was asked to resign by the first black president.

reporter: as for andrew breitbart, the conservative blogger who posted the video, he acknowledged he put it online without seeing the full content of the remarks. but he didn't apologize for posting it. though he did say he has sympathy for sherrod.

i feel bad that they made this about her and i feel sorry that they made this about her. i'm not sure if that was done because they rushed to judgment, or whether they wanted to make it about shirley versus me. because that's what it's become.

well, there's one issue outstanding. senior aides here at the white house insist they did not push the agriculture secretary to fire ms. sherrod, that it was a decision made at agriculture and they were, frankly, looped in essentially after it had been done. on the other hand, miss sherrod has said repeatedly it was her impression, based on her conversation with an agriculture department official, that it was the white house who wanted her to resign. so that's one of those issues of fact that a lot of people will be talking about today, meredith.

all right, savannah guthrie, thank you very much. shirley sherrod is with us again this morning. ms. sherrod, thank you so much for joining us.

thank you.

you have now received apologies from the usda, the white house and the naacp for their rush to judgment. you've accepted those apologies. you really are a woman, as the secretary put it, who has been through hell. how are you feeling right now?

you know, i've gone from being at such a low on monday, as this was unfolding, and thinking, this is so unreal, to feeling so great about the support i've received from around the country. it's encouraging. it makes me feel that there are many others out there who think like i do, and so many who do not think like the individual who started this in the first place.

let's talk about that. i want to talk about it in a minute. but first of all, do you think that you deserve a phone call from president obama?

i think i do.

you do?

an apology?

well, you know, he is the president of the united states of america. i received the apologies that are important. ~~i really would not want the president to apologize to me. i'd love to have a conversation with him, though.~~

and what would you say to him?

you know, i'd like to talk to him a little bit about the experience of people like me. people at the grassroots level. people who live out there in rural america, people who live in the south. i know he does not have that kind of experience. let me help him a little bit with how we think, how we live, and the things that are happening.

what do you think he doesn't understand and a lot of the rest of the country doesn't understand about people like you and the way you live and what you're faced with?

you know, we are people who struggle every day, who do the best we can in our community. who love this country. we love him. we want him to be successful, because we feel thinks, in some ways, like we do. and we think that's good for the country. yes, there are issues out there that we are faced with. issues of poverty. issues that i worked so hard on these last 11 months at rural development to try to really have an impact on, mainly because that's me. but the other thing, i want everything to reflect, i want a good reflection for him as the first black president.

but why do you think when it comes to this topic of race, it just presses people's buttons? people are so quick to react without thinking. you're in the center of a storm here. why do you think that is?

you know, this has gone on for years and years, and i thought we were getting to a place where we really could talk about it. but we can't deal with it until we can face each other. that's the whole point i make when i talk. the things that are being done by the gentleman who started this, and i can't even think of his name -- andrew breitbart.

yes. i didn't know of him before this happened. but the things he's doing, being done more to divide us so we can't move on.

but i guess his point was that this is not him versus you. he was trying to point out racism within the membership of the naacp. that when you told that story about being reluctant to help a white farmer, before he realized this was about poverty, that there was acceptance within the crowd, people who are yeah, you're right, what he was trying to say was there's racism in the naacp, the same way they claim there might be racism within the tea party. is there room for debate, for discussion about that?

but at some point the white house could have checked and seen the whole video, the usda could have seen the whole video, the naacp could have seen the whole video before going on the attack with you. the white house has said they had nothing to do with your ouster. you have said that you had three phone calls on monday from your superiors saying that the white house was behind it, they wanted you to resign. do you stand by that?

i stand by that. because i asked what has happened? you know, i just couldn't -- it was so -- you know, the first call i received said we're putting you on administrative leave. i had to explain to my leadership staff that we were quite a ways from the office, in a meeting, that i explained what happened, and i told them, i have to leave and go turn this government car in and get my car and go home. you know, i asked -- so first they were putting me on administrative leave. the next call was shirley, we're going to have to ask you to resign. and then the white house wants you to resign. because i'm asking them, what happened? this is just so unbelievable. it was one thing for them to put me on administrative leave and then look into it. but they went from administrative leave directly into asking me to resign.

so obviously you still feel the white house has some explaining to do. meanwhile the usda, the secretary of agriculture has offered you a new job that you're thinking about. what can you tell us about this job?

you know, it's -- it's discrimination happens in the usda. that's why there are lawsuits by black farmers, hispanic farmers, native american farmers, women farmers. and they're because the agency that never deals with the people who call it. no one lost their job because they're discriminated against a black farmer or a native american farmer or a hispanic farmer or a female farmer. those individuals, many of them, some have retired, but many of them are still there. i would not want to be that individual that the department and everyone is looking to solve the issue of racism in usda. it takes a lot more to get that job done.

so i'm just asking very quickly, what is the job exactly that they'd like you to do?

they talked about the office about me dealing with discrimination within the agency.

and you're inclined to say no to that?

at this moment, i would think i would be.

so as far as you're concerned at this point you're out of the usda for good?

yeah. i haven't seen the offer, you know. the secretary said he would e-mail it to me. i have not seen it yet. so before i say no totally, i would like to look at that to weigh in.

ms. sherrod we appreciate very much you coming in.

thank you.

Subject: RE: Message from Secretary Vilsack

Good Morning Julie –

I feel compelled to send a message.

As I have watched the news over the last few days, it is unfortunate and unfair that Secretary Vilsack is being portrayed negatively, due to the vileness of politics. I am an African-American female and it has not been easy working for USDA FNS. However, over the last few months I have become more hopeful about the changes in the horizon - thanks to efforts put forth by Secretary Vilsack, and of course you. I know that his commitment to making USDA a workplace in which everyone, regardless race, is equally welcomed, is genuine.

As difficult as it may be, this moment was no accident, but rather an opportunity for USDA to continue along the path to conquering inequalities in the workplace and with consumers - but now with even more vigor and determination. I know that my words in no way can take away the sting of being "beat up" by the media over the last few days – but I just wanted him to know, as a black woman working for USDA, I appreciate him. Secretary Vilsack is an honorable and outstanding human being and I am grateful for all that he has done and will do. Thank you.

Sincerely,

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20250

Dear employee:

Some of you may have seen the news stories about USDA today. I want to reiterate my commitment and that of the leadership at USDA to civil rights. We all must work to ensure that we are treating our customers and employees equally and fairly and we all should have zero tolerance for discrimination.

I also want to remind all of you that you have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent this sentiment in your official actions, statements, and public presentations. We are lucky to have the opportunity to work for the American people and we owe it to them to instill confidence in our leadership. Our words and actions matter.

We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and I thank you for your service and efforts to achieve this goal,

Secretary Vilsack

Krysta and Karen,

I know that the last couple of days have been difficult. I certainly wish the circumstances were different. As I am certain you will understand, what transpired with regard to Ms. Sherrod has raised many questions. At this point, I am particularly interested in knowing what happened, when it happened, and who was involved. Please compile this information for me. A timeline of events would also be useful and should be included with the information you send me. I would like the information sent to me as soon as possible and I would like the information to be as specific as possible.

Also, I sent an email message to Chris Mather yesterday and never received a response. I would like the courtesy of an answer to my question.

As you know, while the Secretary answered many questions from the press about Shirley Sherrod as well as the White House and USDA's press shop, the media is still interested in talking about this. If you are contacted by the media, please send the request to the Office of Communications using the following contact information:

Some of you have asked about what to say if approached by the press in person. If you have to talk to them, let the press know that the Secretary answered these questions at his press briefing and that any further questions should go to the Office of Communications.

Information Regarding USDA's Actions

On Monday afternoon we learned about an online video showing Mrs. Sherrod saying things that we thought would make it hard to turn the page on civil rights abuses at USDA.

We immediately put her on administrative leave then asked if she was willing to resign, to which she said yes. We called her twice to ask for a letter of resignation so that we could respond to press inquiries about her status.

On Tuesday, the entire tape of the speech she gave was released by the NAACP and after watching it, we determined we had acted without all of the information.

The Secretary spoke to Shirley Sherrod on Wednesday and apologized. He also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends. That same day, the Secretary did a press briefing and spoke to the Congressional Black Caucus.

We have discussed with Mrs. Sherrod a unique opportunity at USDA and asked her to return to the Department. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA. And if she wants her old job back, she can have it.

We admit we reacted too quickly and should have taken the time to listen and learn.

The White House did not direct the Secretary to do this, it was USDA's decision.

We continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day to ensure that nothing like this happens again.

My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.Â

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural DevelopmentÂ State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?Â

NAACP 'snookered' over video of former USDA employee

...Vilsack told CNN on Tuesday that he "didn't speak to anyone at the White House. ... I made this decision, it's my decision. Nobody from the White House contacted me about this at all."

A White House official also told CNN that "the White House did not pressure her or the USDA over the resignation. It was the secretary's decision, as he has said."

President Barack Obama was briefed on the situation after Vilsack decided to seek Sherrod's resignation, according to a White House official, who said the president fully supports the decision....

FULL STORY:

The NAACP has retracted its original statement condemning comments made by a former Agriculture Department official who resigned after a video clip surfaced of her discussing a white farmer.

The NAACP said in a statement Tuesday that it was "snookered by Fox News" and conservative website publisher Andrew Breitbart.

"Having reviewed the full tape by Shirley Sherrod, who is the woman who was fired by the Department of Agriculture, and most importantly heard the testimony of the white farmers mentioned in this story, we now believe that the organization that edited the documents did so with the intention of deceiving millions of Americans," the statement from NAACP President Benjamin Jealous said.

The organization also urged Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack to reconsider Sherrod's resignation from her post as the department's director of rural development for Georgia.

Breitbart originally posted the video, which was quickly picked up by Fox News.

In the video, Sherrod, can be heard telling an audience at a March 27, 2009, appearance before a local chapter of the NAACP that she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm.

Conservative media outlets tied the video to the NAACP's recent resolution calling on the Tea Party movement to repudiate racist elements within it that have displayed such items as images of President Obama with a bone through his nose and the White House with a lawn full of watermelons. The controversy has led one Tea Party group to oust another because of a blog posting by the second group's leader.

Tea Party Express leader Mark Williams posted on his blog a faux letter from Jealous to President Abraham Lincoln in which Williams ridicules the organization's use of "colored" in its historic name and uses multiple stereotypes to bolster his point. The National Tea Party Foundation expelled Williams' organization from its coalition as a result. Breitbart told CNN's "John King USA" on Tuesday that releasing the video was "not about Shirley Sherrod."

"This was about the NAACP attacking the Tea Party, and this is showing racism at an NAACP event," he said. "I did not ask for Shirley Sherrod to be fired."

Sherrod defended herself in a number of interviews Tuesday, saying her controversial comments were taken out of context.

She insisted she "went all out" to help the man keep his farm and said she resigned only under pressure from the Obama administration, telling CNN she received four phone calls Monday telling her the White House wanted her to step down.

"They asked me to resign, and in fact they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from West Point, Georgia, yesterday," she said. The last call "asked me to pull to the side of the road and do it [resign]," she said. Vilsack told CNN on Tuesday that he "didn't speak to anyone at the White House. ... I made this decision, it's my decision. Nobody from the White House contacted me about this at all."

A White House official also told CNN that "the White House did not pressure her or the USDA over the resignation. It was the secretary's decision, as he has said."

President Barack Obama was briefed on the situation after Vilsack decided to seek Sherrod's resignation, according to a White House official, who said the president fully supports the decision.

Sherrod said Tuesday that the incident with the farmer in 1986 occurred before she started work for the USDA and was working at the nonprofit Federation of Southern Cooperatives. She said the experience helped her learn to move beyond race and she tells the story to audiences to make that point.

Meanwhile, the farmer referenced in the clip told CNN he credits Sherrod with helping his family save their farm. "I don't know what brought up the racist mess," Roger Spooner told CNN's "Rick's List." "They just want to stir up some trouble, it sounds to me in my opinion."

Spooner says Sherrod accompanied him and his wife to a lawyer in Americus, Georgia, who was able to help them file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, which ultimately saved their farm.

"If it hadn't been for her, we would've never known who to see or what to do," he said. "She led us right to our success."

Spooner's wife, Eloise, remembered Sherrod as "nice-mannered, thoughtful, friendly; a good person."

She said that when she saw the story of the tape and Sherrod's resignation on television, "I said, 'That ain't right. They have not treated her right.'"

The poor-quality video shows Sherrod telling her audience that the farmer she was working with "took a long time ... trying to show me he was superior to me." As a result, she said, she "didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

To prove she had done her job, she said, she took him to a white lawyer. "I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

But that lawyer failed to help, she said. "I did not discriminate against [the farmer]. And, in fact, I went all out to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go." She was able to find an attorney to file Chapter 11 bankruptcy to help the family stay on the farm, she said.

Sherrod said she first heard of the possible controversy when someone e-mailed her Thursday to taunt her about her comments. She immediately forwarded the e-mail to the USDA so the agency would be aware. She was told that someone would look into it.

She said it wasn't until Monday that she heard back, and by then, she was being asked for her resignation.

Sherrod said she got four calls Monday from Cheryl Cook, the USDA rural development undersecretary. In the first, she said, she was told she was being put on administrative leave. In the second, she said, she was told she needed to resign.

Asked if she felt she had an opportunity to explain, Sherrod said, "No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth."

Vilsack said Tuesday that the controversy, regardless of the context of her comments, "compromises the director's ability to do her job."

"This isn't a situation where we are necessarily judgmental about the content of the statement, that's not the issue here. I don't believe this woman is a racist at all," he said. "She's a political appointee, and her job is basically to focus on job growth in Georgia, and I have deep concern about her ability to do her job without her judgments being second-guessed."

Ralph Paige, executive director of the nonprofit Sherrod worked for before being appointed to the USDA job in 2009, told CNN on Tuesday that she garnered only praise and there were never any claims of discrimination against her.

"I can't praise Shirley enough," he said. "She holds no malice in her heart."

Vilsack issued a statement Monday announcing he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, noting a "zero tolerance" policy for discrimination at the USDA, adding, "I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person."

The first statement that the NAACP issued late Monday backed Vilsack's decision.

Sherrod said the NAACP did not contact her before issuing the first statement. She said she got a phone call from an NAACP representative in Washington on Tuesday afternoon telling her another statement would be issued once the full tape was reviewed.

"I told him I was highly disappointed that they would make a statement without even looking into it," she said.

In the statement issued Tuesday evening, the NAACP reversed its condemnation after viewing the full video.

"She was sharing this account as part of a story of transformation and redemption," the statement said. "In the full video, Ms. Sherrod says she realized that the dislocation of farmers is about 'haves and have nots.' 'It's not just about black people, it's about poor people,' says Sherrod in the speech. 'We have to get to the point where race exists but it doesn't matter.' "

Earlier Tuesday, Sherrod called the NAACP "the reason why this happened. They got into a fight with the Tea Party, and all of this came out as a result of that."

She called the ensuing controversy "unbelievable."

"I think any moment I'm going to wake up and none of this is happening, but it is," she said.

"When you spend your life helping others and see people try to turn that around to try to make it look like you're a racist when that's not been what your life has been about -- that doesn't feel good."

Official: No White House pressure on Sherrod

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack this afternoon took responsibility for firing an official, Shirley Sherrod, whose appearance on video recalling her behavior toward a white farmer drew charges of racism, and whose immediate firing drew suggestions that the administration had over-reacted to an edited video clip.

A White House official told me just now that the White House backs Vilsack's decision -- but that it was Vilsack's alone.

The official said the White House -- contrary to the Sherrod's charge -- did not pressure the Department to fire her.

Vilsack's statement:

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

White House official: We didn't push for Sherrod's firing

A White House official insists that the White House didn't pressure Shirley Sherrod to resign, or pressure USDA chief Tom Vilsack to fire her, over the Andrew Breitbart video allegedly showing her claiming she didn't help a white farmer 24 years ago because of racial reasons.

"We did not pressure USDA or Ms. Sherrod," the White House official emails me. Ben Smith was told something similar.

Separately, Vilsack, who fired Sherrod while declaring zero tolerance for "discrimination," released a statement that seemed to take ownership of the firing, without quite clarifying whether the White House had any role:

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

Some have been claiming that the firing shows the White House allowed itself to be led around by the nose by Breitbart. And this quote from a White House official may not quiet the criticism, perhaps understandably, since it's anonymous.

Whatever the White House role, if Vilsack canned this woman based on the strength of the Breitbart video alone, before the facts were in -- and we don't know for certain that it happened this way, though it certainly appears so -- that's appalling on its own.

UPDATE, 6:30 p.m.: The NAACP admits to having been snookered by Breitbart and Fox.

The NAACP on Tuesday said "we were snookered" by Fox News and conservative Internet entrepreneur Andrew Breitbart into criticizing former USDA official Shirley Sherrod, who was captured on videotape saying she once withheld assistance to a white farmer. "The tape of Ms. Sherrod's speech at an NAACP banquet was deliberately edited to create a false impression of racial bias, and to create a controversy where none existed," the group said in a statement.

Support for Shirley Sherrod

I am writing today to urge you to reinstate Shirley Sherrod and that an investigation be launched to determine how this injustice happened. I have interacted and known Shirley Sherrod over the last 10 years through the RDLN and have always found her to be a person deeply dedicated to humanity and to have sterling integrity.

Shirley Sherrod, who has devoted her life to racial justice, was forced to resign yesterday as Georgia State Director of Rural Development for the United States Department of Agriculture, caught in the crossfire of discrimination charges between the Tea Party and the National Association of Colored People (NAACP). On July 13, the NAACP charged elements of the Tea Party with racism. On July 18, Fox News began playing a video clip circulated by a conservative activist that was framed to show Ms. Sherrod telling an NAACP audience last March that she was reluctant to help a white farmer, whereas the point of the story she was telling was that her experience with this farmer opened her eyes to the fact that poor white farmers could be ill treated also. Its not just black and white, she said, even on the part of the speech that was shown, Its about the poor versus those who have.

The story is presented on the internet with a text panel stating that Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race. This statement is false, but apparently was accepted at face value by Fox News, MSNBC, the Department of Agriculture, the White House and the NAACP.

The events in the story she was told in her speech about how her eyes were opened, actually took place twenty-four years ago, when she worked for a nonprofit organization that grew out of the Civil Rights movement with a mission to save black-owned land. In that capacity, she did in fact help the white farmer in question. She worked hard, as she related in a phone conversation and as the full story would have shown, on an emergency basis over a Memorial Day weekend, finding a more responsive lawyer than the one initially contacted, and she actually was successful in saving this white farmers farm. She and the family became so close that the farmer and his wife drove four hours to a meeting in Atlanta several months later to attend a conference on saving black-owned land. Mrs. Eloise Spooner, the farmers wife, spoke by phone to CNN this morning and testified to the familys friendship with Ms. Sherrod and their gratitude toward her.

Ms. Sherrod understands discrimination well. When she was sixteen, her father was murdered by a white man, who, although he was known in the community, was not brought to justice.

As the first African-American Georgia State Director for Rural Development, USDA, Ms. Sherrod was in a position to help many people of all races, and she was reaching out to many under-served communities to do just that.

In the 1960s, Ms. Sherrod and her husband, Charles, the first field secretary for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) withdrew from SNCC and formed the Southwest Georgia Project in response to SNCC's new policy, under Stokely Carmichael's leadership, that white people could no longer be members of SNCC.

In 1985, Ms. Sherrod became a participant in the Rural Development Leadership Network, a national, multicultural social change organization. She earned her masters degree from Antioch University through RDLN and became Vice Chair of our Board of Directors, working closely with our white President, our diverse Board, which includes white members, and helping to orient each new group of participants who have been black, American Indian, Latina/o, Asian, and white.

Ms. Sherrod has worked constructively with a number of other organizations with white staff and constituencies, including the Farmers Legal Action Group based in Minnesota.

In announcing Ms. Sherrod's resignation, Secretary Vilsack stated that the Department has zero tolerance for discrimination. We are disappointed that the Department of Agriculture, the Obama Administration, the NAACP, and several news outlets did not look into the facts and did not stand up for Ms. Sherrod.

We call upon Secretary Vilsack to reinstate Ms. Sherrod and investigate how this injustice was allowed to happen.

shirley sherrod has said that the department of agriculture was pressured by the white house to ask her to resign. that's essentially what she told my colleague, tony harris, earlier today. we've been waiting for government to respond to her accusations and we just got that in, in the form of a statement. we expect we might get more. but here's the first statement as i read it to you, literally fresh off the press. this is from tom vilsack, agriculture secretary from the united states of america. yesterday, i asked for and accepted ms. sherrod's resignation for two reasons. first, for the past 18 months we have been working to turn a page on the sordid civil rights record at the usd and that controversy could make it more difficult to move forward. second, state directors are often called to use their discretion. the controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her situations, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question, making it difficult for her to bring jobs to georgia. now, remember, ms. sherrod is saying here on cnn, if you took it in context, if you listen to the totality of what i actually said in this speech and not just the edited portions of it, you would understand that i was trying to make a point that says discrimination is not good. but the usda, her boss, tom vilsack, secretary of agriculture, does not appearing to be buying that or even giving her reconsideration. why? let me read on. our policy is clear, he writes, there is zero tolerance for discrimination at usda and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. we have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the american people, we do so in an equitable manner. but equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the american people that we are fair service providers. this comes from a stephanie chan, press secretary, press assistant office of communication, u.s. department of agriculture. says here a statement by agriculture secretary tom vilsack. just got this. it's the reaction to the accusation from shirley sherrod saying, look, i was taken out of context. if you listen to me in totality, you will understand i was trying to say something else. reconsider your decision. we just reported the naacp is apparently reconsidering. we'll hear from them soon. as far as the government goes, it doesn't look like they are. we'll be right back. granola nut clusters 100% natural nuts and granola in bite sized clusters. it's a little bit of nature... a little bit better. and nature approves. granola nut clusters from nature valley. dan malloy has helped my business expand and created a lot of jobs. green jobs and high tech jobs and i have a job because of dan malloy dan malloy has put a lot of people to work helping create jobs that was my job as mayor of stamford and i'll do the same as governor by investing in high tech and clean energy holding down property taxes and lowering electric rates so people want to live here and businesses can afford to stay here that's how we'll turn connecticut's economy around dan malloy has got the experience that money can't buy approve this message i'm dan malloy and i we're getting a lot of people talking about this shirley sherrod story. a lot of you saying, she's falsely accused. some of you saying, no, she should have been fired. so back and forth we go. we'll continue bringing you the details. they are still coming in, folks.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (AP 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. Link

Dismissed employee blames media (UPI 7/20)

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet. Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday. What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government. Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending. Link

Ex-worker: USDA 'wasn't interested in hearing the truth' (CNN 7/20)

A former USDA employee who resigned after a video surfaced of her talking about a white farmer told CNN on Tuesday that the administration "wasn't interested in hearing the truth." Shirley Sherrod, who resigned Monday as the department's state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN she had four calls telling her the White House wanted her to resign. She said she was driving at the time, and the last call asked her to pull to the side of the road and offer her resignation. Sherrod's resignation came after media outlets aired the video, in which she tells an audience she did not give the white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him avoid foreclosure. USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued (CNN 7/20)

A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have."

Race remarks cost USDA official her job (CNN Blog 7/20)

An African-American Agriculture Department worker resigns over her handling of a white Georgia farmer's case when she worked for a nonprofit group in 1986. It came to light when Shirley Sherrod talked about the case at an NAACP banquet earlier this year. Were her remarks a teaching moment that backfired, or evidence of racism? Sherrod says her comments were taken out of context -- that the point of her story was to unite people. Tony Harris will be talking to Sherrod at 11:00am ET on CNN, and we'll post that interview here. Watch some of her speech and phone interview with CNN's American Morning below, then tell us what you think. We'll share some of your comments on air in the CNN Newsroom, 11:00am -- 1:00pm ET. Ex-Ag Official Says Video Showing 'White Farmer' Story Excludes Key Context (Fox News 7/20)

The Department of Agriculture official who resigned Monday night over comments she made at an NAACP dinner in March is claiming that the video clip that caused the firestorm excluded critical context. Shirley Sherrod said the Obama administration got scared after the YouTube clip surfaced. In the video, the department's ex-Georgia director of Rural Development is shown telling the story about how she withheld help to a white farmer in trouble. But Sherrod, in an interview overnight with The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, said she was telling a story about events that happened 24 years when she was working for a local non-profit group. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer (FOX News 7/20)

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate... "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously. Link

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA (Fox News 7/20)

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers. Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination. Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy. (BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. Request Story

Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer (MSNBC 7/20)

A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "one of his own." Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

Morning Joe (MSNBC 7/20)

Well, another story of reverse discrimination comes out today. This one is really interesting. I'm thinking that this woman regrets this comment. A USDA official in Georgia has resigned after a YouTube clip shows her admitting that race helped determine how much aid would be given to a white farmer. You're not supposed to do that, are you? I mean, I'm not -- it's probably not a good idea for being so stupid. It's not even -- well, how about you just don't do it. Anyway, the state's director of rural development apparently made the comments during an NAACP banquet in March. Take a listen. The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Request Story

Shirley Sherrod Resigns Over USDA Race Remark Furor (CBS News 7/20)

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News. A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination. Link

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident (The Washington Post 7/20)

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her. Link

Shirley Sherrod: Racist or scapegoat? (Washington Post Blog 7/20)

Were the administration and the NAACP too hasty in their reactions to Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture employee who resigned (i.e., was fired) for allegedly racist comments? A video clip posted online Monday shows Sherrod delivering a speech at a March NAACP banquet, where she talks about her failure to help a white farmer who was in danger of losing his farm. Her suggestion: If he'd been black, she would have moved heaven and earth to help him. "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," said Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, in accepting Sherrod's resignation. The NAACP, which last week accused the Tea Party of racism, rushed out a searing condemnation of Sherrod: "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," said NAACP president Benjamin Jealous. USDA Official Resigns in Racial Flap (TIME 7/20)

A U.S. Department of Agriculture official who is African American has resigned after a tape of discriminatory comments she made at an NAACP event was posted to the web. Shirley Sherrod, who had been Georgia's state director of rural development told CNN the video, first shown by conservative web publisher Andrew Breitbart, was taken out of context. In the clip, Sherrod describes how in 1986 she didn't offer her "full force" of help to a white farmer. Sherrod told CNN that at the time of the incident, she was not working for the USDA, but for a nonprofit organization and that she had been trying to help the farmer who had been foreclosed on. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race," she said "It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Link

Farmer's wife says fired USDA official helped save their land (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

The wife of the white farmer allegedly discriminated against by the USDA's rural development director for Georgia said Shirley Sherrod "kept us out of bankruptcy." Eloise Spooner, 82, awoke Tuesday to discover that Sherrod had lost her job after videotaped comments she made in March at a local NAACP banquet surfaced on the web. Sherrod, who is black, told the crowd she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer whom she said was condescending when he came to her for aid. She said the video was selectively edited but regardless U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack was adamant that she resign. Link

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. Link

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

NAACP Slams Shirley Sherrod's Actions As 'Shameful' (My Fox New York 7/20)

The actions of a black U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official who admitted withholding help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy were late Monday described as "shameful" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, was exposed in a video recorded at an NAACP banquet describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," she said in the video. The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FOXNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. Link

Ga. USDA Official Resigns Over Comments (My Fox Atlanta 7/19)

Racially charged comments have led to the abrupt resignation of an agriculture department official. Shirley Sherrod was the top official who oversaw rural development in the state of Georgia. According to FOX News, Sherrod, the director of the USDA's rural development agency, resigned over comments she made at an NAACP meeting. FOX News obtained taped comments from an NAACP meeting that took place in Douglas, Georgia in March. According to FOX News, Sherrod is seen talking about how she withheld help to a white farmer who was facing bankruptcy. "I didn't give him the full force of what I could do, I did enough," Sherrod said during the meeting. In the video, Sherrod said she was struggling with the fact so many black people have lost their farmland and she was faced with having to help a white person save their land. Sherrod said she took him to see a white lawyer. "I figured if I took him to one of them his own kind, [they] would take care of him," said Sherrod. According to FOX News, the agriculture department announced Monday that Sherrod had resigned. Link

NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination (Daily Caller 7/20)

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below). BREAKING: Racist Obama administration member resigns (Manhattan Conservative Examiner 7/19)

Shirley Sherrod of the USDA's Georgia Rural Development office has resigned following the airing of overtly racist remarks she made in a speech before—of all organizations—the NAACP. At a local NAACP meeting in March of 2010, Sherrod boasted of withholding assistance to a farmer based on the color of his skin, which happened to be white. Sherrod (surprise!) is black. In her comments, which are captured in the video below, Sherrod freely admits to "struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." She further confesses to abusing her position by refusing to "give him the full force of what I could do." The remarks conclude with a racist gem: "I took him to a white lawyer... I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him." Link

USDA Official Implicated in NAACP Racism Flap (Buckeye Ag Network 7/20)

Days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) denounced the Conservative Tea Party movement on allegations of racism, the organization was itself implicated in charges of racism involving a USDA official. In a video released at BigGovernment.com, USDA's Director of Rural Development in Georgia Shirley Sherrod was depicted acknowledging discriminating against white farmers. The video, of a speech Sherrod gave to the NAACP's Freedom Fund banquet in March of this year, stirred quite a controversy on the internet this week, forcing Sherrod's resignation from the department Monday. Sherrod's remarks in the NAACP speech indicated that she "didn't give [a white farmer] the full force of what I could do," because "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land." The rest of the story (Arkansas Times Blog 7/20)

The right-wing echo chamber has been beating the drums for a couple of days now about a supposedly racist (black) USDA worker, promptly sacked by Ag Secretary Tom Vilsack on the strength of Fox reporting of her supposedly offensive remarks. The rest of the story is instructive. Hardly what Fox News or the odious Andrew Breitbart reported. The full video apparently will back up her account, in the appropriate fuller context, of what she said and did TWENTY-FOUR YEARS AGO. It is Acorn Faux reporting redux. It occurs to me that Sen. Blanche Lincoln could score some courage points here. No breath being held. Link

Breitbart's Skilled Editing (The Atlantic Blog 7/20)

The quotes that former USDA worker Shirley Sherrod gave on the edited tapes disseminated by Andrew Breitbart are indeed indefensible, but is it not fair to provide some kind of context? To wit: Sherrod said the short video clip excluded the breadth of the story about how she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period to help ward off foreclosure of his farm, and how she eventually became friends with him and his wife. "And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race." Link

Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law (Heritage Foundation Blog 7/20)

This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle bower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? Link

NAACP meeting calmly listened to racist remarks from black fed official (American Thinker 7/20)

Andrew Breitbart has scored another bullseye, revealing hypocrisy of the highest order on the part of another leftist establishment organization, the NAACP. On March 27 of this year, speaking before an NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet, Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture director for the State of Georgia -- responsible for over a billion dollars a year in spending -- boasts of denying a white farmer her full efforts because of his race. The audience does not react with shock or disapproval, but rather just sits there. So much for NAACP President Ben Jealous denouncing the tea parties for tolerating racists. Only after Breitbart gave the incriminating video national exposure did the NAACP issue the obligatory denunciation, to prevent further embarrassment. But when nobody was looking, the NAACP audience was totally cool with the racism expressed by their speaker. Link

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20250

Dear employee:

Some of you may have seen the news stories about USDA today. I want to reiterate my commitment and that of the leadership at USDA to civil rights. We all must work to ensure that we are treating our customers and employees equally and fairly and we all should have zero tolerance for discrimination.

I also want to remind all of you that you have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent this sentiment in your official actions, statements, and public presentations. We are lucky to have the opportunity to work for the American people and we owe it to them to instill confidence in our leadership. Our words and actions matter.

We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and I thank you for your service and efforts to achieve this goal,

Secretary Vilsack

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video
By BEN EVANS and MARY CLARE JALONICK (AP)

WASHINGTON — A black employee who resigned from the Agriculture Department over comments at a Georgia NAACP meeting said Tuesday the White House forced her out of her job over a manufactured racial controversy.

Shirley Sherrod said she was on the road Monday after an event in rural Georgia when USDA deputy undersecretary Cheryl Cook called her and told her the White House wanted her to resign. "They called me twice," Sherrod told The Associated Press in an interview. "The last time they asked me to pull over the side of the road and submit my resignation on my Blackberry, and that's what I did."

The controversy began Monday when the conservative website biggovernment.com posted a two-minute, 38-second video clip of Sherrod's remarks to a local NAACP chapter.

In the video, she says the first time a white farmer came in for help, he was acting "superior" to her and that she struggled to decide how much help to provide him when so many black farmers were struggling. She said she didn't give him the full force of help she could have, but gave him enough.

The website called it proof that the NAACP — which recently accused the Tea Party of including racist elements — condones racism.

Sherrod said her comments to the local NAACP group that she withheld support some 24 years ago from a farmer because he was white are really part of a story of racial reconciliation. She said she ultimately became friends with the farmer and worked closely with him for two years to keep him from losing his farm. At the time, she worked for a nonprofit farm aid group.

"My point in telling that story is that working with him helped me to see that it wasn't just a black and white issue," she told The AP. "It was about those who have and those who do not. That's why I take the time to tell that story is to tell people we need to get beyond it and work together."

Hours after her resignation, Sherrod accused administration officials of lacking backbone. A USDA spokesman would not comment on whether the White House was involved.

Secretary Tom Vilsack issued a statement saying the agency has no tolerance for discrimination.

"We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously," the statement said.

National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous issued a statement Monday night — before Sherrod's explanation — supporting the resignation. Jealous said the group opposes racism of all kinds.

"According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," she said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers."

TONY HARRIS: And Shirley Sherrod is with me now from Albany, Georgia. And, Shirley, let's take our time and walk through this together. Is that okay with you?

SHIRLEY SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Okay. Shirley, just a straightforward, fundamental question here. Did you discriminate against this white farmer, Roger Spooner? He was facing foreclosure 24 years ago and, again, this was before you were working for the united states Department of Agriculture. Did you discriminate against him?

SHERROD: No, I did not discriminate against him. And, in fact, I went all out. I had to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go. All of that process – that's why I tell it, because everything that happened in dealing with him – he was the first white farmer that had come to me for help. Everything that I did working with him helped me to see that it wasn't about race. It's about those who have and those who don't. The farmer's home had done something to him that I hadn't seen them do to any black farmer. They had actually rented his land to someone else, when they didn't are a right to do that. He still had title to the land. That's why he couldn't qualify to file chapter 12 bankruptcy. That's why in the end we had to try to file chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the forced sale the first Tuesday in June.

HARRIS: I'm going to ask it again slightly differently. Did you discriminate against this white farmer 24 years ago, when you were, I guess, about 38 years old, because he brought you what you described in your March NAACP Speech as a "superior attitude?"

SHERROD: You know, initially – and that's why I say that. I took the time to weave what was happening there. He did come with a superior attitude, but I didn't discriminate. If I had discriminated against him, I would not have given him any help at all because I wasn't obligated by anyone. I wasn't working for the government. I didn't have to help him, but I did. And I went on – that was the first white farmer I helped. I went on to help hundreds of others through the years.

HARRIS: Was your -- I'm trying to understand your reaction to what you described as a "superior attitude." Was your reaction, perhaps, "Look, why are you taking this attitude with me? I sit here in a position to help you, and yet you bring this attitude to me." Did that cross your mind at all and did you act upon those feelings?

SHERROD: Certainly, I didn't act upon it. You know, I'm from the South. I've lived in the South all my life, and I know how black people were treated by white people during those years. My own father was murdered by one. But I didn't let that get in the way of trying to help. I don't know why it's so difficult to see. I didn't have to help that farmer. I could have sent him out the door without giving him any help at all. But in the end we became very good friends, and that friendship lasted for some years.

HARRIS: Explain the statement in the recording that goes, "So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do."

SHERROD: You know, I could have tried to rally other farmers in support of him. I didn't know of any black farmers who would come out to try to support a white farmer at that point. That's something I could have done for black farmers. This was my first time trying to help a white farmer save his land. I wasn't really sure what I could do, because I thought at that time they had the advantages. I learned that that was not the case in working with this farmer.

HARRIS: And then you went on to say, "I did enough." What was "enough" in the case of Roger Spooner?

SHERROD: I took him -- you mean initially? I took him to a lawyer who had attended some training for lawyers on chapter 12 bankruptcy. But in the end, that lawyer wasn't doing anything. And when the Spooners said that he wasn't, I jumped into action. It took me a couple of hours calling everyone I knew. I even called to other states trying to find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the sale of his land at the courthouse steps. I was successful in the end.

HARRIS: During your time with the USDA was there ever a discrimination claim filed against you?

SHERROD: No, never. I went out of my way to -- you know, and we didn't work directly with farmers at Rural Development. We were working with cities, with sewer problems, with police cars, with health centers, with housing. That agency is the one agency, so we say, that could build a city. I didn't do any work -- and I didn't discriminate and I went out of my way to make sure no one who came to the agency was discriminated against. And, in fact, during my tenure there, I targeted nine of the poorest counties in the state to do outreach work. I had outreach meetings in all of those counties. I even started working with other USDA agencies and state agencies so that we could coordinate our efforts in these areas, and, in fact, this coming Thursday was the first meeting where we were going to pilot that, and that was in a county here in southwest Georgia, Calhoun county.

HARRIS: So, Shirley, if you didn't discriminate during your time at USDA and at least no one filed such a claim, do you accept the statement from agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack that there is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA?

SHERROD: I don't know, but I'm assuming there is. I know I didn't discriminate, and I made it very clear to the staff there at USDA that it wouldn't be tolerated during my tenure. I said it over and over again.

HARRIS: So why are you out?

SHERROD: Pardon?

HARRIS: Why are you out?

SHERROD: Why am I out? They asked me to resign, and, in fact, they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from west point, Georgia yesterday. I had at least three calls telling me the White House wanted me to resign.

HARRIS: So the pressure came from the White House?

SHERROD: And the last one asked me to pull over to the side of the road and do it.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names?

SHERROD: That's what I did.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names.

SHERROD: That was Cheryl cook, the deputy undersecretary. She called me and I said, Cheryl, I have a 3 1/2 hour ride to get into Athens. She called me a second time, where are you now? I said I'm just going through Atlanta. She call me again and I said, I'm at least 45 minutes to an hour from Athens. She said, well, Shirley, they want you to pull over to the side of the road and do it because you're going to be on Glenn Beck tonight.

HARRIS: Wow. So the administration pressured you out?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: How do you feel about that?

SHERROD: I don't feel good about it because I know I didn't do anything wrong, and I know during my time at USDA I gave it all I had. I worked when I didn't feel like it. I pushed the staff to get out there in places they had not been into before. Like I said, the nine counties I targeted, I asked them shortly after getting there, tell me what rural development has been doing in these areas, and when they did that, there were zeros in a lot of places, and I knew this was an area where we needed to target. We needed to get programs out into some of these areas that need it, just like some other areas that had gotten the funding over and over again.

HARRIS: 1 So I want to be really specific here and I apologize. I just have to do it. You get, one, two, three calls from miss cook, and at the point that it is made clear to you that you need to go, how does that conversation go?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: What is said to you?

SHERROD: The very first one -- I guess there were like four calls because the very first one was before I got in my car to go to Athens. She said I was being put on administrative leave. The next call after I sat waiting and waiting because she told me she would call me right back, the next call said that they're going to have to ask me to resign.

HARRIS: Do you feel as though you had an opportunity to state your side of the story?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth.

HARRIS: The NAACP released a statement late last night saying in part we are appalled by her actions. That is an opportunity to explain what happened 24 years ago. Do you feel as though you got the opportunity, even in a phone call with the NAACP?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The NAACP has not tried to contact me one time, and they are the reason why this happened they got into a fight with the tea party, and all of this came out as a result of that.

HARRIS: Your reaction --

SHERROD: I would have appreciated -- when you look at my history of civil rights, I would have appreciated having the NAACP at least contact me and Roland martin, too, contact me to try to get the truth about what happened.

HARRIS: The reaction to your reaction to essentially being condemned by the NAACP?

SHERROD: That hurts. Because if you look at my history, that's what I'm saying -- I've done more to advance the causes of civil rights in this area than some of them who are sitting in those positions now with the NAACP. They need to learn something about me. Ey need to know about my work. They need to know what I've contributed through the years.

HARRIS: What was the point of the story you were telling to the NAACP in March? What was the point?

SHERROD: The point was to get them to understand we need to look beyond race; to look at working together. I've said to audiences here, not just that one – in fact, I spoke at a housing conference in a county just south of here, and I said, look, we need to get beyond the Civil War. I tell them, there are good things about history from the white side and good things about history and culture from the black side. People love to come into this part of the state to see that. I tell them, we need to make the most of it, and if we work together, can do that.

HARRIS: Do you believe as a principle – do you believe black people in power can make or have the ability – can make race-based discriminatory decisions?

SHERROD: I'm sure that can happen. I can tell you I didn't do it.

HARRIS: Okay, that was my follow-up.

SHERROD: And you could go to any of the communities that I worked with and if the staff were free to tell you, you could talk to any of the people I've worked with since I've been at USDA, and they can tell you what my record is.

HARRIS: Shirley, stay right there. I have someone who wants to speak to this whole controversy. Her name is Eloise Spooner. She is Roger Spooner's wife – widow this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Widow at this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Eloise, thanks for taking the time to talk to me.

ELOISE SPOONER: Thank you.

HARRIS: What do you think of this whole controversy? First of all, what do you think of Shirley?

SPOONER: She's a good friend.

HARRIS: Describe your relationship with her through the years.

SPOONER: She helped us save our farm.

How did she do that?

SPOONER: By getting in there and doing all she could do to help us.

What did your husband, your late husband, think of Shirley?

SPOONER: He's not dead. He's very much alive.

HARRIS: Really?

SPOONER: He's 87 and he's on his peterbuilt truck this morning.

HARRIS: Then I apologize. I've got incorrect information from one of the newspapers writing on this. I apologize for that.

SPOONER: That's okay.

HARRIS: Is he aware of the controversy swirling around?

SPOONER: Yes, our son, he came up and said, mama, turn on the TV to CNN and he said, it's about your friend Shirley Sherrod. And I said, what. I listened and said, that's not right. They have not treated her right because she's the one that I give credit for helping us save our farm.

HARRIS: Some of the story is that you met in the '80s, and it was a bad time?

SPOONER: Mm-hmm.

HARRIS: It was a bad time in the family's life at the time. Tell me why you were in trouble with the farm.

SPOONER: Well, we had a lot of dry weather, and we had to run the irrigation a lot. And when you'd make a good crop, you wouldn't get a good price. And just a number of things together caused it.

HARRIS: Do you remember your first interaction with Shirley?

SPOONER: Yeah. At first I looked into -- it was the market bulletin from Atlanta that we get. We've gotten it for years and years and years, and it said, if you were having trouble and about to lose your farm torque get with them. And I said, by George, I'm going to try that. And so I did, and he told us to go see a lawyer in Cairo. He said, you all might as well just go ahead and do what Diane said to do. And I was so mad when we came home. So, anyway, a few weeks later, the guy from Atlanta, the Market Bulletin, he said, what happened over in Cairo? And I said, exactly nothing. He didn't help us at all. He said, well, I'm going to get you with somebody that will help you, I think. And that's when he told us to call Shirley. And we did, and we started right then. She said there's too lawyers, there's a black lawyer and there's a white lawyer, and one -- the black lawyer is in Albany and the white lawyer is in [inaudible]. So I said, he's closer, so maybe we'll try him, the black one. We went through him for months and months and months and paid him some money, which was hard to scrape up. And he finally got with the lawyer in Donaldsonville that I had talked to, and he called and told me at the lawyer in Albany, called and told me that he could not handle us anymore, that he had this client that he had had for ten years, and he was going to have to spend a lot of time on that. He couldn't help us.

HARRIS: Hey, Eloise, a couple of quick questions here about this relationship.

SPOONER: Okay.

HARRIS: I'm just trying to establish this relationship. Explain to me -- I have a line here that says that you guys picked a bunch of tomatoes?

SPOONER: Yeah. One year, after things kind of settled down, I had a really pretty garden that year, and we going up to Albany for some reason, so I told Roger I was going to pick Shirley some tomatoes. And I did, and we carried them by to her and had a good visit.

HARRIS: You know, what do you think of the statement that's on the tape. It's undeniable, it is there, where Shirley essentially says, so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

SPOONER: Well, she gave enough that it helped us save our farm. And she went two trips -- after the lawyer in Albany did us like he did, well, then I called Shirley and told her, and she said, you're kidding me. I said, no, I'm not. That's the words she told me. She said, well, do you want us to try the one in Easterland? I said, yes, get us an appointment and we'll be ready to go.

HARRIS: Eloise, thank you for your time.

SHERROD: Please tell her want -- can you -- I don't know that she can hear me, but I haven't talked to here in years, and I'm so happy to hear that both of them are still living. And Miss Spooner, I definitely want to contact you. It's great to hear.

SPOONER: When we heard about it we tried to call you, but Roger couldn't get ahold of you.

SHERROD: Okay. Maybe you can get him.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (AP 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. Link

Dismissed employee blames media (UPI 7/20)

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet. Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday. What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government. Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending. Link

USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued (CNN 7/20)

A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Link

An African-American Agriculture Department worker resigns over her handling of a white Georgia farmer's case when she worked for a nonprofit group in 1986. It came to light when Shirley Sherrod talked about the case at an NAACP banquet earlier this year. Were her remarks a teaching moment that backfired, or evidence of racism? Sherrod says her comments were taken out of context -- that the point of her story was to unite people. Tony Harris will be talking to Sherrod at 11:00am ET on CNN, and we'll post that interview here. Watch some of her speech and phone interview with CNN's American Morning below, then tell us what you think. We'll share some of your comments on air in the CNN Newsroom, 11:00am -- 1:00pm ET. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer (FOX News 7/20)

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate... "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." Link

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA (Fox News 7/20)

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers. Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination. Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy. (BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. Request Story

Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer (MSNBC 7/20)

A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "one of his own." Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

Morning Joe (MSNBC 7/20)

Well, another story of reverse discrimination comes out today. This one is really interesting. I'm thinking that this woman regrets this comment. a USDA official in Georgia has resigned after I YouTube clip shows her admitting that race helped determine how much aid would be given to a white farmer. You're not supposed to do that, are you? I mean, I'm not -- it's probably not a good idea. for being so stupid. It's not even -- well, how about you just don't do it. Anyway, the state's director of rural development apparently made the comments during an NAACP banquet in March. Take a listen. The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Request Story

Shirley Sherrod Resigns Over USDA Race Remark Furor (CBS News 7/20)

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News. A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination. Link

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident (The Washington Post 7/20)

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her. Link

In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race. Link

Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. Link

Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during a local NAACP banquet on March 27, according to information displayed on the video. A clip of her speech first appeared Monday morning on BigGovernment.com and aired that evening on Fox News. Her resignation as the agency's state director of rural development was quickly accepted by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack. He cited a zero-tolerance policy and told CNN that he was working to "reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department." In her controversial speech, Sherrod discussed the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claimed that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." Link

NAACP Slams Shirley Sherrod's Actions As 'Shameful' (My Fox New York 7/20)

The actions of a black U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official who admitted withholding help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy were late Monday described as "shameful" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, was exposed in a video recorded at an NAACP banquet describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," she said in the video. The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FOXNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. Link

Ga. USDA Official Resigns Over Comments (My Fox Atlanta 7/19)

Racially charged comments have led to the abrupt resignation of an agriculture department official. Shirley Sherrod was the top official who oversaw rural development in the state of Georgia. According to FOX News, Sherrod, the director of the USDA's rural development agency, resigned over comments she made at an NAACP meeting. FOX News obtained taped comments from an NAACP meeting that took place in Douglas, Georgia in March. According to FOX News, Sherrod is seen talking about how she withheld help to a white farmer who was facing bankruptcy. "I didn't give him the full force of what I could do, I did enough," Sherrod said during the meeting. In the video, Sherrod said she was struggling with the fact so many black people have lost their farmland and she was faced with having to help a white person save their land. Sherrod said she took him to see a white lawyer. "I figured if I took him to one of them his own kind, [they] would take care of him," said Sherrod. According to FOX News, the agriculture department announced Monday that Sherrod had resigned. Link

NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination (Daily Caller 7/20)

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below). BREAKING: Racist Obama administration member resigns (Manhattan Conservative Examiner 7/19)

Shirley Sherrod of the USDA's Georgia Rural Development office has resigned following the airing of overtly racist remarks she made in a speech before—of all organizations—the NAACP. At a local NAACP meeting in March of 2010, Sherrod boasted of withholding assistance to a farmer based on the color of his skin, which happened to be white. Sherrod (surprise!) is black. In her comments, which are captured in the video below, Sherrod freely admits to "struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." She further confesses to abusing her position by refusing to "give him the full force of what I could do." The remarks conclude with a racist gem: "I took him to a white lawyer... I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him." Link

USDA Official Implicated in NAACP Racism Flap (Buckeye Ag Network 7/20)

Days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) denounced the Conservative Tea Party movement on allegations of racism, the organization was itself implicated in charges of racism involving a USDA official. In a video released at BigGovernment.com, USDA's Director of Rural Development in Georgia Shirley Sherrod was depicted acknowledging discriminating against white farmers. The video, of a speech Sherrod gave to the NAACP's Freedom Fund banquet in March of this year, stirred quite a controversy on the internet this week, forcing Sherrod's resignation from the department Monday. Sherrod's remarks in the NAACP speech indicated that she "didn't give [a white farmer] the full force of what I could do," because "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land." Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law (Heritage Foundation Blog 7/20)

This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle blower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? Link

Andrew Breitbart has scored another bullseye, revealing hypocrisy of the highest order on the part of another leftist establishment organization, the NAACP. On March 27 of this year, speaking before an NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet, Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture director for the State of Georgia -- responsible for over a billion dollars a year in spending -- boasts of denying a white farmer her full efforts because of his race. The audience does not react with shock or disapproval, but rather just sits there. So much for NAACP President Ben Jealous denouncing the tea parties for tolerating racists. Only after Breitbart gave the incriminating video national exposure did the NAACP issue the obligatory denunciation, to prevent further embarrassment. But when nobody was looking, the NAACP audience was totally cool with the racism expressed by their speaker. Link first, her comments about a white farmer cost a u.s. department of agriculture official her job, but shirley, sherrod, who is african-american says her comments were taken out of context and referred to an incident that happened 24 years ago. we will talk with shirley sherr lod and just a minute but first the comments that set off the controversy. this is the longest portion of the video we have been able to locate and it is unedited.

the first time i was faced with helping a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. i know what he was doing, but he had come to me for help. what he didn't know is while he was taking all that time trying to show me she was superior to me, i was trying to show him i was superior to him. so many black people had lost their farmland and here i was faced with having to help a white person save their land. so i didn't give him the full force of what i could do. i did enough so that when he -- i assumed the department of agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the georgia department of agriculture, and he needed to go back and floort i did try and help. so i took him to a white lawyer that we had -- that had attended some of the training that we had provided because chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farmer, so i figured by taking him there, his own kind would take care of him. that's when it was revealed to me that it's about those who have versus those who don't. it's not about white and black. it opened my eyes because i took him to one of his own.

so what did she mean and what was the purpose of her comments? shirley sherrod meeting me from albany, georgia. shirley, good to see you. first of all, i'm going to dive right into this with you. the direct question is did you discriminate against his white farmer? we don't have her yet. we don't have her yet. okay. how close are we? any idea? all right. shirley was a guest on ""american morning."" here is what she had to say on that program.

you say that this was part of a story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show new a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. will you finish for us how this ended?

okay, i was speaking to that group like i do many groups, and i was telling them about a time when i thought that the issue was race and race only, and i tell them the story of how i worked with a white farmer back in 1986. i was not working for the department of agriculture. i was working with a nonprofit organization assisting farmers throughout south georgia and the southeast, and this farmer came to me for help. i was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race. it's about those who have versus those who do not have.

you said you didn't give him the full force of what you could do. you said you did enough. and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that he would help him. so what did you mean by that?

well, what i meant was that i didn't know anyone else. i didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12, but i thought if i took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

when the u.s. department of agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, wait a minute, you don't know the whole story? here's the full story, why should i step down?

i did say that, but they for some reason, the stuff that fox and the tea party does is scaring the administration. i told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how i tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

and shirley sherrod is with me now from albany, georgia, and, shirley, let's take our time and walk through this together. is that okay with you?

okay. shirley, just a straightforward, fundamental question here. did you discriminate against this white farmer, roger spooner? he was facing foreclosure 24 years ago and this was again before you were working for the united states department of agriculture. did you discriminate against him?

no, i did not discriminate against him..and, in fact, i went all out. i had to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. in fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go. all of that process -- that's why i tell it because everything that happened in dealing with him. he was the first white farmer that had come to me for help. everything that i did working with him helped me to see that it wasn't about race. it's about those who have and those who don't. the farmer's home had done something to him that i hadn't seen them do to any black farmer. they had actually rented his land to someone else when they didn't have a right to do that. he still had title to the land. that's why he couldn't qualify to file chapter 12 bankruptcy. that's why in the end we had to try to file chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the forced sale the first tuesday in june.

i'm going to ask it again slightly differently again. did you discriminate against this white farmer 24 years ago, when you were, i guess, about 38 years old because he brought you what you described in your march naacp speech as a superior attitude?

you know, initially -- and that's why i said that. i took the time to weave what was happening there. he did come with a superior attitude, but i didn't discriminate. if i had discriminated against him, i would not have given him any help at all because i wasn't obligated to do it by anyone. i wasn't working for the government. i didn't have to help him, but i did. and i went on -- that was the first white farmer i helped. i went on to help hundreds of others through the years.

was your -- i'm trying to understand your reaction to what you described as a superior attitude. was your reaction, perhaps, look, why are you taking this attitude with me? i sit here in a position to help you, and yet you bring this attitude to me. did that cross your mind at all and did you act upon those feelings?

certainly i didn't act upon it. you know, i'm from the south. i've lived in the south all my life, and i know how black people were treated by white people during those years. my own father was murdered by one. i didn't let that get in the way of trying to help. i don't know why it's so difficult to see. i didn't have to help that farmer. i could have sent him out the door without giving him any help at all. but in the end, we became very good friends. and that friendship lasted for some years.

explain the statement in the recording that goes -- so i didn't give him the full force of what i could do.

you know, i could have tried to rally other farmers in support of him. i didn't know of any black farmers who would come out to try to support a white farmer at that point. that's something i could have done for a black farmer. i didn't know -- this was my first time dealing with trying to help save a -- help a white farmer save his land. i wasn't really sure of what i could do because at that time, i thought they had the advantages. i learned that that was not the case in working with this farmer.

and then you went on say, i did enough. what was enough in the case of roger spooner?

i took it to someone -- i took him -- you mean initially? i took him to a lawyer who had attended some training for lawyers on chapter 12 bankruptcy. but in the end, that lawyer wasn't doing anything, and when the spooners called me and said he wasn't, then i jumped into action. it took me a couple of hours calling everyone i knew. i even called to other states trying to find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the sale of his land at the courthouse steps. i was successful in the end.

during your time with the USDA was there ever a discrimination claim filed against you?

no. never. i went out of my way to -- you know, we didn't work directly with farmers at rural development. we were working with cities, with sewer problems, with police cars, with health centers, with housing. that agency is the one agency, so we say, that could build a city. i didn't do any work -- and i didn't discriminate and i went out of my way to make sure no one who came to the agency was discriminated against. and, in fact, during my tenure there, i targeted nine of the poorest counties in the state to do outreach work. i had outreach meetings in all of those counties. i even started working with other USDA agencies and state agencies so that we could coordinate our efforts in these areas, and, in fact, this coming thursday was the first meeting where we were going to pilot that, and that was in a county here in southwest georgia, calhoun county.

so, shirley, if you didn't discriminate during your time at USDA and at least no one filed such a claim, do you accept the statement from agriculture secretary tom vilsack that there is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA?

i don't know, but i'm assuming there is. i know i didn't discriminate, and i made it very clear to the staff there at USDA that it wouldn't be tolerated during my tenure. i said it over and over again.

so why are you out?

why are you out?

why am i out? they asked me to resign, and, in fact, they harassed me as i was driving back to the state office from west point, georgia yesterday. i had at least three calls telling me the white house wanted me to resign.

so the pressure came from the white house?

and the last one asked me to pull over to the side of the road and do it.

are you withing to name names?

that's what i did.

are you willing to name name ys.

that was cheryl cook, the deputy undersecretary. she called me and i said, cheryl, i have a 3 1/2 hour ride to get into athens. she called me a second time, where are you now? i said i'm just going through atlanta. she call me again and i said, i'm at least 45 minutes to an hour from athens. she said, well, shirley, they want you to pull over to the side of the road and do it because you're going to be on glen beck tonight.

wow. so the administration pressured you out?

yes.

how do you feel about that?

i don't feel good about it because i know i didn't do anything wrong, and i know during my time at USDA i gave it all i had. i worked when i didn't feel like it. i pushed the staff to get out there in places they had not been into before. like i said, the nine counties i targeted, i asked them shortly after getting there, tell me what rural development has been doing in these areas, and when they did that, there were zeros in a lot of places, and i knew this was an area where we needed to target. we needed to get programs out into some of these areas that need it, just like some other areas that had gotten the funding over and over again.

so i want to be really specific here and i apologize. i just have to do it. you get, one, two, three calls from miss cook, and at the point that you have the conversation, that it is made clear to you that you need to go, how does that conversation go?

yes.

what is said to you?

the very first one -- i guess there were like four calls because the very first one was before i got in my car to go to athens. she said i was being put on administrative leave. the next call after i sat waiting and waiting because she told me she would call me right back, the next call said that they're going to have to ask me to resign.

do you feel as though you had an opportunity to state your side of the story?

no, i didn't. the administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. no one wanted to hear the truth.

the naacp released a statement late last night saying in part we are appalled by her actions. that is an opportunity to explain what happened 24 years ago. do you feel as though you got that opportunity, even in a phone call with the naacp?

no, i didn't. the naacp has not tried to contact me one time, and they are the reason why this happened. they got into a fight with the tea party, and all of this came out as a result of that.

your reaction --

i would have appreciated -- when you look at my history of civil rights, i would have appreciated having the naacp at least contact me and roland martin, too, contact me to try to get the truth about what happened.

the reaction to your reaction to essentially being condemned by the naacp?

that hurts. because if you look at my history, that's what i'm saying -- i've done more to advance the causes of civil rights in this area than some of them who are sitting in those positions now with the naacp. they need to learn something about me. they need to know about my work. they need to know what i've contributed through the years.

what was the point of the story you were telling to the naacp in march? what was the point?

the point was to get them to understand we need to look beyond race. to look at working together. i've said to audiences here, not just that one -- in fact, i spoke at a housing conference in a county just south of here, and i said, look, we need to get beyond the civil war. i tell them, there are good things about history from the white side and good things about history and culture from the black side. people love to come into this part of the state to see that. i tell them, we need to make the most of it, and if we work together, we can do that.

do you believe as a principle -- do you believe black people in power can make or have the ability -- can make race-based discriminatory decisions?

i'm sure that can happen. i can tell you i didn't do it.

okay. that was my follow-up.

and you could go to any of the communities that i worked with and if the staff were free to tell you, you could talk to any of the people i've worked with since i've been at USDA, and they can tell you what my record is.

shirley, stay right there. i have someone who wants to speak to this whole controversy. her name is eloise spooner. she is roger spooner's wife, widow at this point.

yes.

widow at this point.

yes.

eloise, thanks for taking the time to talk to me.

thank you.

what do you think of this whole controversy? first of all, what do you think of shirley?

she's a good friend.

describe your relationship with her through the years.

she helped us save our farm.

how does she do that?

getting in there and doing all she could do to help us.

what did your husband, your late husband, think of shirley.

he's not dead. he's 87 and he's on inn his peterbuilt truck this morning.

i apologize. i got incorrect information from one of the papers writing on this. i apologize for that.

is he aware of the controversy swirling around?

our son, he came up and said, mama, turn on the tv to cnn and he said, it's about your friend shirley sherrod and i said, what. i listened and said, great days, that's not right. they have not treated her right because she's the one that i get credit for helping us save our farm.

some of the story is that you met in the '80s, and it was a bad time.

mm-hmm.

it was a bad time in the family's life at the time. tell me why you were in trouble with the farm?

well, we had a lot of dry weather, and we had to run the irrigation a lot, and when you make a good crop, you wouldn't get a good price, and just a number of things together caused it.

do you remember your first interaction with shirley?

yeah. at first i looked into -- it was the market bulletin from atlanta that we get. we've gotten it for years and years and years, and it said, if you were having trouble and about to lose your farm torque get with them. i said, by george, i'm going to try that, and so i did, and he told us to go see a lawyer. he said, you all might as well just go ahead and do what diane said to do. and i was so mad when we came home. so, anyway, a few weeks later, the guy from atlanta, the market bulletin, he said, what happened over in karo, and i said, exactly nothing. he didn't help us at all. he said, well, i'm going to get you with somebody that will lp you, i think, and that's when he told us to call shirley and we did, and we started right then. she said there's too lawyers, there's a black lawyer and there's a white lawyer, and one -- the black lawyer is in one city and the white lawyer is in albany. so i said, he's closer, so maybe we'll try him, the black one. we went through him for months and months and months and paid him some money which was hard to scrape up and he finally got with the lawyer in donaldsonvill that i had talked to, and he called and told me that the lawyer in albany called and told me that he could not handle us anymore, that he had this client that he had had for ten years, and he was going to have to spend a lot of time on that. he couldn't help us.

hey, eloise, a couple of quick questions here about this relationship.

i'm just trying to establish this relationship. explain to me -- i have a line here that says that you guys picked a bunch of tomatoes?

yeah. one year, after things kind of settled down, i had a really pretty garden that year, and we were going up to all ban mi for some reason, so i told roger, i was going to pick shirley some tomatoes, and i did, and we carried them by to her and had a good visit.

you know, what do you think of the statement that's on the tape. it's undeniable. it is there, where shirley essentially says, so i didn't give him the full force of what i could do.

well, she gave enough that it helped us save our farm. and she went two trips -- after the lawyer in albany did us like he did, well, then i called shirley and told her, and she said, you're kidding me. i said, no, i'm not. that's the words she told me. she said, well, do you want us to try the one in easterland? i said, yes, get us an point and we'll be ready to go.

eloise, thank you for your time.

please tell her i want -- can you -- i don't know that she can hear me, but i haven't talked to here in years, and i'm so happy to hear that both of them are still living, and miss spooner, i definitely want to contact you. it's great to hear.

we tried to call you, but roger couldn't get ahold of you.

oh, okay. maybe you can get him.

we will make the connection. how's that? we will make that happen?

thank you so much. it is so great to hear your voice.

and, shirley, thanks to you. thanks for your time, and a fuller explanation of your comments. appreciate it.

thank you so much.

shirley's story has a lot of people talking, obviously about race, power, politics. i want to hear from you on this, if you would, send us your comments to cnn.com/tony and we'll read your comments in the next hour.

TONY HARRIS: And Shirley Sherrod is with me now from Albany, Georgia. And, Shirley, let's take our time and walk through this together. Is that okay with you?

SHIRLEY SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Okay. Shirley, just a straightforward, fundamental question here. Did you discriminate against this white farmer, Roger Spooner? He was facing foreclosure 24 years ago and, again, this was before you were working for the united states Department of Agriculture. Did you discriminate against him?

SHERROD: No, I did not discriminate against him. And, in fact, I went all out. I had to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go. All of that process – that's why I tell it, because everything that happened in dealing with him – he was the first white farmer that had come to me for help. Everything that I did working with him helped me to see that it wasn't about race. It's about those who have and those who don't. The farmer's home had done something to him that I hadn't seen them do to any black farmer. They had actually rented his land to someone else, when they didn't are a right to do that. He still had title to the land. That's why he couldn't qualify to file chapter 12 bankruptcy. That's why in the end we had to try to file chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the forced sale the first Tuesday in June.

HARRIS: I'm going to ask it again slightly differently. Did you discriminate against this white farmer 24 years ago, when you were, I guess, about 38 years old, because he brought you what you described in your March NAACP Speech as a "superior attitude?"

SHERROD: You know, initially – and that's why I say that. I took the time to weave what was happening there. He did come with a superior attitude, but I didn't discriminate. If I had discriminated against him, I would not have given him any help at all because I wasn't obligated by anyone. I wasn't working for the government. I didn't have to help him, but I did. And I went on – that was the first white farmer I helped. I went on to help hundreds of others through the years.

HARRIS: Was your -- I'm trying to understand your reaction to what you described as a "superior attitude." Was your reaction, perhaps, "Look, why are you taking this attitude with me? I sit here in a position to help you, and yet you bring this attitude to me." Did that cross your mind at all and did you act upon those feelings?

SHERROD: Certainly, I didn't act upon it. You know, I'm from the South. I've lived in the South all my life, and I know how black people were treated by white people during those years. My own father was murdered by one. But I didn't let that get in the way of trying to help. I don't know why it's so difficult to see. I didn't have to help that farmer. I could have sent him out the door without giving him any help at all. But in the end we became very good friends, and that friendship lasted for some years.

HARRIS: Explain the statement in the recording that goes, "So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do."

SHERROD: You know, I could have tried to rally other farmers in support of him. I didn't know of any black farmers who would come out to try to support a white farmer at that point. That's something I could have done for black farmers. This was my first time trying to help a white farmer save his land. I wasn't really sure what I could do, because I thought at that time they had the advantages. I learned that that was not the case in working with this farmer.

HARRIS: And then you went on to say, "I did enough." What was "enough" in the case of Roger Spooner?

SHERROD: I took him -- you mean initially? I took him to a lawyer who had attended some training for lawyers on chapter 12 bankruptcy. But in the end, that lawyer wasn't doing anything. And when the Spooners said that he wasn't, I jumped into action. It took me a couple of hours calling everyone I knew. I even called to other states trying to find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the sale of his land at the courthouse steps. I was successful in the end.

HARRIS: During your time with the USDA was there ever a discrimination claim filed against you?

SHERROD: No, never. I went out of my way to -- you know, and we didn't work directly with farmers at Rural Development. We were working with cities, with sewer problems, with police cars, with health centers, with housing. That agency is the one agency, so we say, that could build a city. I didn't do any work -- and I didn't discriminate and I went out of my way to make sure no one who came to the agency was discriminated against. And, in fact, during my tenure there, I targeted nine of the poorest counties in the state to do outreach work. I had outreach meetings in all of those counties. I even started working with other USDA agencies and state agencies so that we could coordinate our efforts in these areas, and, in fact, this coming Thursday was the first meeting where we were going to pilot that, and that was in a county here in southwest Georgia, Calhoun county.

HARRIS: So, Shirley, if you didn't discriminate during your time at USDA and at least no one filed such a claim, do you accept the statement from agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack that there is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA?

SHERROD: I don't know, but I'm assuming there is. I know I didn't discriminate, and I made it very clear to the staff there at USDA that it wouldn't be tolerated during my tenure. I said it over and over again.

HARRIS: So why are you out?

SHERROD: Pardon?

HARRIS: Why are you out?

SHERROD: Why am I out? They asked me to resign, and, in fact, they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from west point, Georgia yesterday. I had at least three calls telling me the White House wanted me to resign.

HARRIS: So the pressure came from the White House?

SHERROD: And the last one asked me to pull over to the side of the road and do it.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names?

SHERROD: That's what I did.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names.

SHERROD: That was Cheryl cook, the deputy undersecretary. She called me and I said, Cheryl, I have a 3 1/2 hour ride to get into Athens. She called me a second time, where are you now? I said I'm just going through Atlanta. She call me again and I said, I'm at least 45 minutes to an hour from Athens. She said, well, Shirley, they want you to pull over to the side of the road and do it because you're going to be on Glenn Beck tonight.

HARRIS: Wow. So the administration pressured you out?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: How do you feel about that?

SHERROD: I don't feel good about it because I know I didn't do anything wrong, and I know during my time at USDA I gave it all I had. I worked when I didn't feel like it. I pushed the staff to get out there in places they had not been into before. Like I said, the nine counties I targeted, I asked them shortly after getting there, tell me what rural development has been doing in these areas, and when they did that, there were zeros in a lot of places, and I knew this was an area where we needed to target. We needed to get programs out into some of these areas that need it, just like some other areas that had gotten the funding over and over again.

HARRIS: I So I want to be really specific here and I apologize. I just have to do it. You get, one, two, three calls from miss cook, and at the point that it is made clear to you that you need to go, how does that conversation go?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: What is said to you?

SHERROD: The very first one -- I guess there were like four calls because the very first one was before I got in my car to go to Athens. She said I was being put on administrative leave. The next call after I sat waiting and waiting because she told me she would call me right back, the next call said that they're going to have to ask me to resign.

HARRIS: Do you feel as though you had an opportunity to state your side of the story?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth.

HARRIS: The NAACP released a statement late last night saying in part we are appalled by her actions. That is an opportunity to explain what happened 24 years ago. Do you feel as though you got the opportunity, even in a phone call with the NAACP?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The NAACP has not tried to contact me one time, and they are the reason why this happened they got into a fight with the tea party, and all of this came out as a result of that.

HARRIS: Your reaction --

SHERROD: I would have appreciated -- when you look at my history of civil rights, I would have appreciated having the NAACP at least contact me and Roland martin, too, contact me to try to get the truth about what happened.

HARRIS: The reaction to your reaction to essentially being condemned by the NAACP?

SHERROD: That hurts. Because if you look at my history, that's what I'm saying -- I've done more to advance the causes of civil rights in this area than some of them who are sitting in those positions now with the NAACP. They need to learn something about me. Ey need to know about my work. They need to know what I've contributed through the years.

HARRIS: What was the point of the story you were telling to the NAACP in March? What was the point?

SHERROD: The point was to get them to understand we need to look beyond race; to look at working together. I've said to audiences here, not just that one — in fact, I spoke at a housing conference in a county just south of here, and I said, look, we need to get beyond the Civil War. I tell them, there are good things about history from the white side and good things about history and culture from the black side. People love to come into this part of the state to see that. I tell them, we need to make the most of it, and if we work together, can do that.

HARRIS: Do you believe as a principle — do you believe black people in power can make or have the ability — can make race-based discriminatory decisions?

SHERROD: I'm sure that can happen. I can tell you I didn't do it.

HARRIS: Okay, that was my follow-up.

SHERROD: And you could go to any of the communities that I worked with and if the staff were free to tell you, you could talk to any of the people I've worked with since I've been at USDA, and they can tell you what my record is.

HARRIS: Shirley, stay right there. I have someone who wants to speak to this whole controversy. Her name is Eloise Spooner. She is Roger Spooner's wife — widow this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Widow at this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Eloise, thanks for taking the time to talk to me.

ELOISE SPOONER: Thank you.

HARRIS: What do you think of this whole controversy? First of all, what do you think of Shirley?

SPOONER: She's a good friend.

HARRIS: Describe your relationship with her through the years.

SPOONER: She helped us save our farm.

How did she do that?

SPOONER: By getting in there and doing all she could do to help us.

What did your husband, your late husband, think of Shirley?

SPOONER: He's not dead. He's very much alive.

HARRIS: Really?

SPOONER: He's 87 and he's on his peterbuilt truck this morning.

HARRIS: Then I apologize. I've got incorrect information from one of the newspapers writing on this. I apologize for that.

SPOONER: That's okay.

HARRIS: Is he aware of the controversy swirling around?

SPOONER: Yes, our son, he came up and said, mama, turn on the TV to CNN and he said, it's about your friend Shirley Sherrod. And I said, what. I listened and said, that's not right. They have not treated her right because she's the one that I give credit for helping us save our farm.

HARRIS: Some of the story is that you met in the '80s, and it was a bad time?

SPOONER: Mm-hmm.

HARRIS: It was a bad time in the family's life at the time. Tell me why you were in trouble with the farm.

SPOONER: Well, we had a lot of dry weather, and we had to run the irrigation a lot. And when you'd make a good crop, you wouldn't get a good price. And just a number of things together caused it.

HARRIS: Do you remember your first interaction with Shirley?

SPOONER: Yeah. At first I looked into -- it was the market bulletin from Atlanta that we get. We've gotten it for years and years and years, and it said, if you were having trouble and about to lose your farm torque get with them. And I said, by George, I'm going to try that. And so I did, and he told us to go see a lawyer in Cairo. He said, you all might as well just go ahead and do what Diane said to do. And I was so mad when we came home. So, anyway, a few weeks later, the guy from Atlanta, the Market Bulletin, he said, what happened over in Cairo? And I said, exactly nothing. He didn't help us at all. He said, well, I'm going to get you with somebody that will help you, I think. And that's when he told us to call Shirley. And we did, and we started right then. She said there's too lawyers, there's a black lawyer and there's a white lawyer, and one -- the black lawyer is in Albany and the white lawyer is in [inaudible]. So I said, he's closer, so maybe we'll try him, the black one. We went through him for months and months and months and paid him some money, which was hard to scrape up. And he finally got with the lawyer in Donaldsonville that I had talked to, and he called and told me at the lawyer in Albany, called and told me that he could not handle us anymore, that he had this client that he had had for ten years, and he was going to have to spend a lot of time on that. He couldn't help us.

HARRIS: Hey, Eloise, a couple of quick questions here about this relationship.

SPOONER: Okay.

HARRIS: I'm just trying to establish this relationship. Explain to me -- I have a line here that says that you guys picked a bunch of tomatoes?

SPOONER: Yeah. One year, after things kind of settled down, I had a really pretty garden that year, and we going up to Albany for some reason, so I told Roger I was going to pick Shirley some tomatoes. And I did, and we carried them by to her and had a good visit.

HARRIS: You know, what do you think of the statement that's on the tape. It's undeniable, it is there, where Shirley essentially says, so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

SPOONER: Well, she gave enough that it helped us save our farm. And she went two trips -- after the lawyer in Albany did us like he did, well, then I called Shirley and told her, and she said, you're kidding me. I said, no, I'm not. That's the words she told me. She said, well, do you want us to try the one in Easterland? I said, yes, get us an appointment and we'll be ready to go.

SPOONER: When we heard about it we tried to call you, but Roger couldn't get ahold of you.

SHERROD: Okay. Maybe you can get him.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (AP 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. Link

Dismissed employee blames media (UPI 7/20)

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet. Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday. What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government. Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending. Link

USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued (CNN 7/20)

A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Link

An African-American Agriculture Department worker resigns over her handling of a white Georgia farmer's case when she worked for a nonprofit group in 1986. It came to light when Shirley Sherrod talked about the case at an NAACP banquet earlier this year. Were her remarks a teaching moment that backfired, or evidence of racism? Sherrod says her comments were taken out of context -- that the point of her story was to unite people. Tony Harris will be talking to Sherrod at 11:00am ET on CNN, and we'll post that interview here. Watch some of her speech and phone interview with CNN's American Morning below, then tell us what you think. We'll share some of your comments on air in the CNN Newsroom, 11:00am -- 1:00pm ET. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer (FOX News 7/20)

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate... "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." Link

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA (Fox News 7/20)

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers. Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination. Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy. (BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. Request Story

Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer (MSNBC 7/20)

A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "one of his own." Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

Morning Joe (MSNBC 7/20)

Well, another story of reverse discrimination comes out today. This one is really interesting. I'm thinking that this woman regrets this comment. a USDA official in Georgia has resigned after I YouTube clip shows her admitting that race helped determine how much aid would be given to a white farmer. You're not supposed to do that, are you? I mean, I'm not -- it's probably not a good idea. for being so stupid. It's not even -- well, how about you just don't do it. Anyway, the state's director of rural development apparently made the comments during an NAACP banquet in March. Take a listen. The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Request Story

Shirley Sherrod Resigns Over USDA Race Remark Furor (CBS News 7/20)

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News. A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination. Link

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident (The Washington Post 7/20)

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her. Link

In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race. Link

Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. Link

Shirley Sherrod Resigns USDA Job After Admitting Use Of Racial Preference During NAACP Banquet (VIDEO) (The Huffington Post 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod, who resigned Monday from the USDA. 756 Shirley Sherrod, a USDA official in Georgia, has resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer. Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during a local NAACP banquet on March 27, according to information displayed on the video. A clip of her speech first appeared Monday morning on BigGovernment.com and aired that evening on Fox News. Her resignation as the agency's state director of rural development was quickly accepted by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack. He cited a zero-tolerance policy and told CNN that he was working to "reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department." In her controversial speech, Sherrod discussed the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claimed that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." Link

NAACP Slams Shirley Sherrod's Actions As 'Shameful' (My Fox New York 7/20)

The actions of a black U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official who admitted withholding help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy were late Monday described as "shameful" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, was exposed in a video recorded at an NAACP banquet describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," she said in the video. The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FOXNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. Link

Ga. USDA Official Resigns Over Comments (My Fox Atlanta 7/19)

Racially charged comments have led to the abrupt resignation of an agriculture department official. Shirley Sherrod was the top official who oversaw rural development in the state of Georgia. According to FOX News, Sherrod, the director of the USDA's rural development agency, resigned over comments she made at an NAACP meeting. FOX News obtained taped comments from an NAACP meeting that took place in Douglas, Georgia in March. According to FOX News, Sherrod is seen talking about how she withheld help to a white farmer who was facing bankruptcy. "I didn't give him the full force of what I could do, I did enough," Sherrod said during the meeting. In the video, Sherrod said she was struggling with the fact so many black people have lost their farmland and she was faced with having to help a white person save their land. Sherrod said she took him to see a white lawyer. "I figured if I took him to one of them his own kind, [they] would take care of him," said Sherrod. According to FOX News, the agriculture department announced Monday that Sherrod had resigned. Link

USDA big quits in bias-boast shock (The New York Post 7/20)

A black official in the US Agriculture Department resigned yesterday after a video surfaced of her bragging to the NAACP that she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer facing bankruptcy. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, told the audience at a March banquet in Atlanta that she claimed the man felt "superior" to her, according to FoxNews.com. "He had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was talking all that time, trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do." "I did enough," she said. Link

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below). BREAKING: Racist Obama administration member resigns (Manhattan Conservative Examiner 7/19)

Shirley Sherrod of the USDA's Georgia Rural Development office has resigned following the airing of overtly racist remarks she made in a speech before—of all organizations—the NAACP. At a local NAACP meeting in March of 2010, Sherrod boasted of withholding assistance to a farmer based on the color of his skin, which happened to be white. Sherrod (surprise!) is black. In her comments, which are captured in the video below, Sherrod freely admits to "struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." She further confesses to abusing her position by refusing to "give him the full force of what I could do." The remarks conclude with a racist gem: "I took him to a white lawyer... I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him." Link

USDA Official Implicated in NAACP Racism Flap (Buckeye Ag Network 7/20)

Days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) denounced the Conservative Tea Party movement on allegations of racism, the organization was itself implicated in charges of racism involving a USDA official. In a video released at BigGovernment.com, USDA's Director of Rural Development in Georgia Shirley Sherrod was depicted acknowledging discriminating against white farmers. The video, of a speech Sherrod gave to the NAACP's Freedom Fund banquet in March of this year, stirred quite a controversy on the internet this week, forcing Sherrod's resignation from the department Monday. Sherrod's remarks in the NAACP speech indicated that she "didn't give [a white farmer] the full force of what I could do," because "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land." USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (Salon 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Link

Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law (Heritage Foundation Blog 7/20)

This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle blower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? Link

NAACP meeting calmly listened to racist remarks from black fed official (American Thinker 7/20)

Andrew Breitbart has scored another bullseye, revealing hypocrisy of the highest order on the part of another leftist establishment organization, the NAACP. On March 27 of this year, speaking before an NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet, Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture director for the State of Georgia -- responsible for over a billion dollars a year in spending -- boasts of denying a white farmer her full efforts because of his race. The audience does not react with shock or disapproval, but rather just sits there. So much for NAACP President Ben Jealous denouncing the tea parties for tolerating racists. Only after Breitbart gave the incriminating video national exposure did the NAACP issue the obligatory denunciation, to prevent further embarrassment. But when nobody was looking, the NAACP audience was totally cool with the racism expressed by their speaker. Link

Shirley Sherrod Comments Results in Resignation (Lalate Blog 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod has resigned following her comments about a white farmer. Shirley Sherrod's remarks appeared in a video from BigGovernment.com, dated by the website as March 27. Shirley Sherrod has been the USDA's Georgia director of Rural Development. In the video, Sherrod addresses an NAACP banquet stating "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land — so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Shirley Sherrod, USDA's black employee has resigned from her post on Monday in the wake of outburst of a video at conservative media outlets in which Shirley Sherrod is shown telling one of the audience that she had not given a white farmer the full force of what I could do to help him save his family farm. Tom Vilsack, the Agriculture Secretary said that he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation. Shirley Sherrod was working as USDA's State Director of Rural Development for Georgia. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod, the department's state director of rural development for Georgia. Tom Vilsack further added that in USDA, they are following a zero tolerance for discrimination. He said that being Secretary Agriculture he condemns any discriminatory act against any person. He further added that at USDA, they are working hard for past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history and they are taking fairness and equality as a serious matter at USDA. Link

Shirley Sherrod Has Officially Resigned From Her Job Due To Racial Preference! (Moms Word Blog 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod, who is known as a USDA official in Georgia, has finally resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer. Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during an NAACP banquet on March 27, according to the information in the video above. In fact a clip of her speech was being aired on BigGovernment.com and also Fox News Monday morning. Sherrod said during the now famous speech about the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claims that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland," Sherrod told the crowd. "And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." Link

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS.

[The rest of John's question is cut off from the closed captioning and the aircheck, as is her response]

John Roberts:[cut off] THINKING IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

Key here is to say as little as possible. This story will go away unless there is a reason for press to talk about it more. We do not want to create news. These TPs are for OCR. Do we need to get to sub-cabinet?

Talking Points

- Yesterday, Secretary Vilsack accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation.
- There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person.
- We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.
- We don't want this issue to distract our efforts to do so.

Question and Answer

But it happened 30 years ago, it was taken out of context...

- We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner.
- But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Sherrod, even if taken out of context, undermine that trust.

Did she explain the real story to you?

- She said it was taken out of context but we have not seen the entire video.
- We have a duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Sherrod, even if taken out of context, undermine that trust.

Why did you accept her resignation?

- We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner.
- But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Sherrod, even if taken out of context, undermine that trust.

Have you fired any white employees for discrimination?

- We cannot discuss private personnel matters.

What have you done to right the wrongs of the past?

- We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.
- There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person and we have made significant progress in doing so.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (AP 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. Link

Dismissed employee blames media (UPI 7/20)

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet. Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday. What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government. Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending. Link

USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued (CNN 7/20)

A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Link

An African-American Agriculture Department worker resigns over her handling of a white Georgia farmer's case when she worked for a nonprofit group in 1986. It came to light when Shirley Sherrod talked about the case at an NAACP banquet earlier this year. Were her remarks a teaching moment that backfired, or evidence of racism? Sherrod says her comments were taken out of context – that the point of her story was to unite people. Tony Harris will be talking to Sherrod at 11:00am ET on CNN, and we'll post that interview here. Watch some of her speech and phone interview with CNN's American Morning below, then tell us what you think. We'll share some of your comments on air in the CNN Newsroom, 11:00am – 1:00pm ET. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer (FOX News 7/20)

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate... "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." Link

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA (Fox News 7/20)

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers. Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination. Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy. (BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. Request Story

Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer (MSNBC 7/20)

A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "one of his own." Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

Morning Joe (MSNBC 7/20)

Well, another story of reverse discrimination comes out today. This one is really interesting. I'm thinking that this woman regrets this comment. a USDA official in Georgia has resigned after I YouTube clip shows her admitting that race helped determine how much aid would be given to a white farmer. You're not supposed to do that, are you? I mean, I'm not --it's probably not a good idea. for being so stupid. It's not even -- well, how about you just don't do it. Anyway, the state's director of rural development apparently made the comments during an NAACP banquet in March. Take a listen. The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time to show me he was superior to me was i was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Request Story

Shirley Sherrod Resigns Over USDA Race Remark Furor (CBS News 7/20)

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News. A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination. Link

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident (The Washington Post 7/20)

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her. Link

In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race. Link

Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. Link

Shirley Sherrod, who resigned Monday from the USDA. 756 Shirley Sherrod, a USDA official in Georgia, has resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer. Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during a local NAACP banquet on March 27, according to information displayed on the video. A clip of her speech first appeared Monday morning on BigGovernment.com and aired that evening on Fox News. Her resignation as the agency's state director of rural development was quickly accepted by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack. He cited a zero-tolerance policy and told CNN that he was working to "reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department." In her controversial speech, Sherrod discussed the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claimed that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." Link

NAACP Slams Shirley Sherrod's Actions As 'Shameful' (My Fox New York 7/20)

The actions of a black U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official who admitted withholding help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy were late Monday described as "shameful" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, was exposed in a video recorded at an NAACP banquet describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," she said in the video. The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FOXNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. Link

Ga. USDA Official Resigns Over Comments (My Fox Atlanta 7/19)

Racially charged comments have led to the abrupt resignation of an agriculture department official. Shirley Sherrod was the top official who oversaw rural development in the state of Georgia. According to FOX News, Sherrod, the director of the USDA's rural development agency, resigned over comments she made at an NAACP meeting. FOX News obtained taped comments from an NAACP meeting that took place in Douglas, Georgia in March. According to FOX News, Sherrod is seen talking about how she withheld help to a white farmer who was facing bankruptcy. "I didn't give him the full force of what I could do, I did enough," Sherrod said during the meeting. In the video, Sherrod said she was struggling with the fact so many black people have lost their farmland and she was faced with having to help a white person save their land. Sherrod said she took him to see a white lawyer. "I figured if I took him to one of them his own kind, [they] would take care of him," said Sherrod. According to FOX News, the agriculture department announced Monday that Sherrod had resigned. Link

NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination (Daily Caller 7/20)

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below). BREAKING: Racist Obama administration member resigns (Manhattan Conservative Examiner 7/19)

Shirley Sherrod of the USDA's Georgia Rural Development office has resigned following the airing of overtly racist remarks she made in a speech before—of all organizations—the NAACP. At a local NAACP meeting in March of 2010, Sherrod boasted of withholding assistance to a farmer based on the color of his skin, which happened to be white. Sherrod (surprise!) is black. In her comments, which are captured in the video below, Sherrod freely admits to "struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." She further confesses to abusing her position by refusing to "give him the full force of what I could do." The remarks conclude with a racist gem: "I took him to a white lawyer... I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him." Link

USDA Official Implicated in NAACP Racism Flap (Buckeye Ag Network 7/20)

Days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) denounced the Conservative Tea Party movement on allegations of racism, the organization was itself implicated in charges of racism involving a USDA official. In a video released at BigGovernment.com, USDA's Director of Rural Development in Georgia Shirley Sherrod was depicted acknowledging discriminating against white farmers. The video, of a speech Sherrod gave to the NAACP's Freedom Fund banquet in March of this year, stirred quite a controversy on the internet this week, forcing Sherrod's resignation from the department Monday. Sherrod's remarks in the NAACP speech indicated that she "didn't give [a white farmer] the full force of what I could do," because "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land." Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law (Heritage Foundation Blog 7/20)

This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle blower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? Link

Andrew Breitbart has scored another bullseye, revealing hypocrisy of the highest order on the part of another leftist establishment organization, the NAACP. On March 27 of this year, speaking before an NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet, Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture director for the State of Georgia -- responsible for over a billion dollars a year in spending -- boasts of denying a white farmer her full efforts because of his race. The audience does not react with shock or disapproval, but rather just sits there. So much for NAACP President Ben Jealous denouncing the tea parties for tolerating racists. Only after Breitbart gave the incriminating video national exposure did the NAACP issue the obligatory denunciation, to prevent further embarrassment. But when nobody was looking, the NAACP audience was totally cool with the racism expressed by their speaker. Link the u.s. department of agriculture shunned by the naacp. we're pushing forward on the story of shirley sherrod. she's telling us we don't have the whole story. she used to be the rule development director for georgia until a youtube clip of her went viral from an naacp dinner march.

well, here is part of the statement from agriculture secretary tom vilsack. there's zero tolerance for discrimination at usda, and i strongly condemn any act of discrimination from any person. from ben jealous from the naacp, racism is about the abuse of power. we are appalled by her axes just as we are against the power of farmers of color and female farmers. sherrod says, hold on, there's no context with that clip and that it doesn't tell the entire story. she called cnn's american morning this morning to give her side of the story and talked with john roberts. he joins us from new york and cnn's political analyst roland martin is in chicago and he will weigh in as well. let's listen to your interview with shirley sherrod from earlier and then comment.

i was speaking to the group like i've done many groups, and i tell them about a time when i thought the issue was race and race only. and i tell them the story of how i worked with the white farmer back in 1986. i was not working for the department of agriculture. i was working with the nonprofit organization assisting farmers throughout south georgia and the southeast. and this farmer came to me for help. i was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is it not about race. it's about those who have versus those who do not have.

well, we had her on this morning. when you take a look at that video clip, it looks like, oh, my goodness, this is something she did while in a position of authority at the u.s. department of agriculture. she said this was 24 years ago, this was a learning experience for her. in the job she was in with this nonprofit cooperative organization dealing with farmers in southeastern georgia had a preconceived notion of what it was all about, about white and black, and she said, no, i learned from that it was not about race. it was about the haves versus the have-nots, and she has not only told this speech before this organization back on march the 27th, but more than six months earlier than that, on the 15th of october, she gave what she told us this morning was exactly the same speech at albany state university and was played over and over again on local television in albany and nobody said anything about this. this was put up on a website, the latest one from march 27th, and that's when it came to the attention of the u.s. department of agriculture and the naacp. when you take a look at ben jealous' statement, it looks as though he perceived this was something she did while she was at the u.s. department of agriculture, which others have told us would indeed be wrong, but is it wrong if she was telling a story that happened 26 years ago saying this is something that changed my perspective on the whole issue? that's what's being debated now.

well, first of all, i want to address the right wingers perspective second. i believe that the statement by the naacp was a correct statement because you're speaking to the issue of being in power, and you actually making a determination based upon race. i talked to john boyd with the national black farmers association, and he supports their decision, even though, as she said, this took place prior to her coming to the usda. it shows when you're in a position of power -- we also know there are individuals who work for the department of agriculture who cost the american taxpayers 1 billion-plus dollars and think of not been fired and denied opportunities to hispanics, blacks and whites and based upon gender, so i hope the right wing conservatives would talk to those individuals as well. she has to understand that her position was going to be, frankly, difficult, because the question would then have come into would other folks can you deny opportunities to? what else happened? any politically charged environment, like it or not, this is going happen.

wasn't she just telling the story of redemption? she feels she was telling a story of redemption that more than 20 years ago -

as a political appointee, one has to recognize in these times today, when folks do play gotcha, when you do have videotape, how things can be used against you. so i would question frankly even telling that particular story publicly, knowing full well how it could be used against you, used against your superiors, used against the president, whom ever. that's the environment we are now living in whether we like it or not.

we have all been victim of that. how many times have we given speeches or interviews and stein people take snippets. it's happened to all three of us, in fact, and it's pretty heart wrenching.

the motives are clear.

the point could be made that robert byrd's affiliation with the ku klux klan. it stayed with him for his life and was mentioned when he passed away recently but people allowed him to take a different point of view when he came to it. i'm not defending this woman but she came to a different point of view, and she's talking about that now and is that a fireable offense?

again, though, you begin to speak to the issue in terms of what will be the perception, will it be a political fire storm and will the controversy get in the way of you actually doing your job? weefb's seen this on multiple occasions.

roland, that's a great point. we don't know, at least at this point -- i don't know. do you know, john?

we don't have her record, but from talking to her this morning -- we do not have her record, but from talking to her this morning, she said that episode in her life during which he worked very closely with this farmer and became friends with both him and his wife, it taught her how to do her job better, so it would appear on the surface -- not defending her, just telling you what she said -- that this was a learning experience. she was in her job at a nonprofit with a different perspective than she has now and this helped her to see the light.

we need to hear from the usda. john reached out to the usda. we reached out to the usda. now that we are getting more context regarding this speech and she has spoken to us live on cnn, we need to hear from the usda and say, well, did she explain this to you and why did you accept her resignation.

sure, and, kyra, look, we also have to recognize that when you're operating in a political fire storm, when you are operating in a situation where just last week naacp went after tea party folks, racist elements. truly, that was the motive of andrew brightbart. that was the motive, what is the context, what are you exposing. but from a political standpoint, whether you like it or not, you have to make decisions before somebody may resign or get forced out because it could impede your actual work moving forward if it continues and the drumbeats get louder and louder. you cut it off at the pass. you may not like it, but that's the reality in 2010.

that's right true. once it's on the internet it never goes away. final thought, john.

it would be nice to see the entire tape in its context so we could all take a look at it and say, oh, this is what she said, and you can continue to hold the same opinion or change it based on what she said.

there you go. let's ask the usda for the entire tape.

i would like to know, too, if the naacp had the benefit of having this in context before it came forward with its statement.

i say, yes.

i talked to ben jealous in terms of it did not have her comments on that, but, again, you are looking at a situation of a national organize that fought racism on the surface. when you hear comments, what's your reaction going to be?

roland, did ben jealous say he saw the entire speech?

no one has seen the whole tape. this wasn't a national organization. this was a local chapter, not a national organization.

it would be good to see the whole tape.

i wonder for those who released the sound bites, if they saw the whole tape, too. i'm getting a big, fat wrap. we will stay on it. roland, let us know if you hear more.

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA

Tuesday, July 20, 2010

FOX NEWS

ADVERTISEMENT

This is a rush transcript from "Hannity," July 19, 2010. This copy may not be in its final form and may be updated.

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers.

Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination.

Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me.

I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him.

(END OF VIDEO CLIP)

HANNITY: Now details on the official sudden resignation are still coming in. We'll have more on this story including more video coming up in this hour. That's all straight ahead.

But also, meanwhile the debate in Washington raged today over whether or not unemployment insurance should be extended yet again for American struggling to find work. Now earlier President Obama addressed the issue from the Rose Garden.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

PRESIDENT BARACK OBAMA: It's time to stop holding workers laid off in this recession hostage to Washington politics. It's time to do what is right. Not for the next election, but for the middle class.

We've got to stop blocking emergency relief for Americans who are out of work. We've got to extend unemployment insurance.

(END OF VIDEO CLIP)

HANNITY: All right, now the president did not bother to mention that the only reason the extension may be necessary is because his stimulus was a complete and utter failure.

Now since the recovery plan was passed more than three million Americans have lost their jobs.

Now this morning the GOP leader in the House came out swinging saying, quote, "The president knows Republicans support extending unemployment insurance and doing it in a fiscally responsible way by cutting spending elsewhere in the $3 trillion federal budget."

But the White House isn't interested in finding a way to actually pay for the extension. It's a whole lot easier to simply drive America deeper into debt.

And joining me now with analysis is the former speaker of the House, Fox News contributor, co-host of the documentary along with his wife Calista, "Nine Days That Changed the World," which you can find at Newt.org, is former speaker of the House, Newt Gingrich.

Mr. Speaker, welcome back.

NEWT GINGRICH, FORMER SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE: It's good to be with you.

HANNITY: All right. A lot — a lot obviously going on here. The — this woman on tape saying these racially charged things that she didn't want to help farmers, in particular white farmer. That she said she wanted him to go out and deal with one of his own and she put him in touch with a white lawyer.

Just the latest in a series of racial incidents. What do you think of this?

GINGRICH: Well, let me say, first of all, Secretary Vilsack did exactly the right thing. I mean I often disagree with this administration. But firing her after that kind of viciously racist attitude was exactly the right thing to do. And the fact that we have to be genuinely colorblind.

You know you can't be a black racist any more than you can be a white racist. And I just think it'd be good for those of us who are often critical of the administration to recognize that here's a case where Secretary Vilsack did exactly the right thing, moved very promptly, and fired somebody who frankly shouldn't be serving the American people because they clearly had a set of attitudes inappropriate for a federal official.

HANNITY: All right, my only thing is they weren't the ones that caught it. It was on Breitbart.com and it happened some time ago. So it's interesting that it took the new media to expose this.

Here's my next question, though. There's another twist to the story, and that is that, this was — these comments were made at an NAACP banquet. Now in light of the NAACP accusing the Tea Party of being a racist movement last week, do you think the NAACP should be held to account for the very standard they were demanding from the Tea Party?

GINGRICH: Of course. Clearly the national — and I suspect, Sean, if you contact them — the national leadership of the NAACP — I'm sure will feel honor-bound to apologize for having had that kind of a racist comment said at a meeting I suspect they didn't know about it, just as I suspect Secretary Vilsack didn't.

But now that it's there and it's clearly obvious, because it's on tape, I would hope that national NAACP would apologize for having that kind of racist comment at one of their meetings.

HANNITY: Well, I've tried to reach out to Ben Jealous. He has yet to return my phone call and he's invited on this program if he would like to discuss it. I'd like to have him on.

But it's interesting. A lot of people contacted me last week. Apparently you had sent out a tweet. By the way I'm glad that you are up on tweeting, which by the way, I have a Twitter account as well at @SeanHannity.

But you have your own Twitter account. And you offered to basically broker a meeting —

GINGRICH: No, no.

HANNITY: Well, hang on.

GINGRICH: No, I — no, I didn't say that. That was a misinterpretation by the Huffington Post.

HANNITY: OK.

GINGRICH: What I said was —

HANNITY: I didn't read the tweet. Go ahead.

GINGRICH: Right. But what I said was local Tea Party groups — because Tea Parties don't have a hierarchy. They don't have a national organization. Local Tea Party groups ought to reach out to local NAACP chapters and offer to have joint town hall meetings.

For example, about job creation. I mean there's a clear difference between job creators and job killers. It would be great to get Americans of all backgrounds in the same room talking about whether they ought to follow policies that you and I believe in which create jobs.

And I suspect most African-Americans at the local level in the local NAACP chapter would be surprised at how much they have in common with Tea Party members, a number of whom, by the way, are African-American, Latino and Asians. They're not — the Tea Parties are not white organizations. They're open to all Americans.

So my point was, if somebody wants to start a conversation, instead of yelling at them, what if we invite them in the room and let's have a conversation about America's future together.

And I'm told by Adam Waldeck at American Solutions who coordinates this that a number of local Tea Party groups are reaching out to local NAACP chapters on their own to have this kind of a dialogue.

HANNITY: I don't know what the right answer is. But I would find it very hard to sit down with the NAACP back in 2000. They ran this James Byrd ad when George Bush supported the death penalty for the person — the people responsible for that James Byrd dragging death.

You can't have a worse penalty. And that ad was particularly hard hitting. It was as if my father was killed all over again, if you remember that ad. And then in this particular case, this happened with this woman at this NAACP banquet.

I'm not saying not to have a dialogue. I am saying you can also talk about their associations. They've been — Ben Jealous was at a meeting with Louis Farrakhan. Should we not have certain standards prior to any meeting?

GINGRICH: Yes. We can also say let's agree that we should condemn racism wherever it occurs. Now we hope that the NAACP will apply that standard to somebody who is at one of its banquets.

But I think it's good for the country to see that we are not afraid to reach out and talk to people and to try to focus the conversation in a positive way. African-American unemployment is higher under the Obama administration than under any administration in a very longtime.

African-Americans want their schools to work so their children go to college and not to prison. We have lots of things you and I could talk about in local meetings. And I said local meetings where local people get together.

And I think you'd find that at the local level, not the professional, you know, left-wing activist level. At the local level there are an awful lot of very decent people in the NAACP who would suddenly find out they have an awful lot in common with their local Tea Party neighbors.

HANNITY: But I found the chart — the things that were said about the Tea Party so inaccurate, so over-the-top, so lacking in evidence, it is almost hard to begin a dialogue when everything is predicated on false charges and a false statement.

I didn't even bring up the issue of the New Black Panther Party and the Department of Justice and Eric Holder. What did you —

GINGRICH: Well, look —

HANNITY: Go ahead.

GINGRICH: First of all, Eric Holder should resign for national security reasons. He should certainly resign over the racism inherent in the Black Panther case. I mean I'm happy to say that Eric Holder shouldn't be attorney general and is not doing the job correctly.

But I'd certainly go back to your point for a second, Sean. Maybe this makes me different, OK? The New York Times often runs editorials that are totally dishonest. Their attack on the Arizona state law, for example — on immigration — was a totally dishonest attack.

I still talk to New York Times reporters all the time. I think it's important to reach out. It's important to try to be positive.

HANNITY: By the way, just for the record I do not return the calls of anybody from The New York Times. They don't call anymore because I won't return their calls.

GINGRICH: Now our audience — now our audience can see the difference in our two styles.

HANNITY: Yes, well — look, what do I know? I made — perhaps you're right.

Look, I'm not saying we ought not have a dialogue. I think a dialogue is important. But I think a dialogue has got to be — the foundation of which has got to start in a fair way.

GINGRICH: Right.

HANNITY: And it's almost like if you begin a dialogue with OK, the Tea Party is racist, the Tea Party, you know — the Tea Party members uttered these racial epithets when there's no evidence, seems to me that you're starting out at a decided disadvantage.

GINGRICH: Sure.

HANNITY: If you don't demand honesty up front and an apology before the dialogue begins.

GINGRICH: Well, I like to — I think we have a nice test that came on your show tonight. Do they have the courage — the NAACP — to apologize for the racism in this person's comments at an NAACP banquet? Pretty good test.

HANNITY: All right. We'll come back. We have a lot more with former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich, coming up after the break.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

HANNITY: And we continue now with former Speaker of the House, Fox News contributor, Newt Gingrich is with us.

All right, Mr. Speaker, we had the NAACP. We had what they said about the Tea Party. I think obviously an attempt — they support the Democratic Party — 106 days out of an election to energize the base.

The president. He went out and he'd started referring to the GOP as being the party of the rich because he says Republicans don't want to extend unemployment benefits. The reality is Republicans do support extending unemployment benefits. They want it paid for. They've already supported an extension for 99 weeks.

And by the way, the president doesn't need any Republican votes to pass the bill anyway. So is this — is this what we can expect for the next 106 days?

GINGRICH: Sure. Look, if you watch what Harry Reid is trying to do to Sharron Angle in Nevada. What you're going to see everywhere in the country is desperately dishonest, and I think consistently demagogue attacks, because they know that if there's any kind of a fair fight they're going to get badly defeated.

The president sadly is the opposite of Ronald Reagan. Ronald Reagan led by telling the American people the truth, by rallying them to the facts and by encouraging their better instincts.

The president seems to have a really unusual desire to divide the country and a really deep need to blame somebody else for his own failures. And as a result, you get this kind of Rose Garden comment.

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: The fact is, if this president cared about getting money to the unemployed, all he has to agree to is a one percent reduction in his budget across the board and that would pay for —

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: — everything he wants to send. But he does — what he wants to do is borrow from your children and your grandchildren so that we will pay interest on the debt forever, so that he can send out money that is unpaid for, that increases the federal deficit even beyond the already gigantic amounts.

HANNITY: All right, so —

GINGRICH: And I think that's just fundamentally, morally wrong.

HANNITY: So what you're saying for the next 106 days we can expect a ton of class warfare rhetoric, demagoguery as you just pointed out, and demonization, et cetera, character assassination, maybe some supportive groups playing the race card because they can't run on their record? That's what the next 106 days are going to be like? This is going to be all we see?

GINGRICH: Look — I think the Democratic Party counterattack — to use the language you just kind of packaged nicely. If you assume dishonesty, distortion and demagoguery, you have a reasonably good idea what Harry Reid's campaign is going to be like.

Because of the election choice in Nevada at 14.5 percent unemployment is between a job killing Harry Reid record and a job creating Sharron Angle proposal. He's going to get beat so badly that you won't even be able to see him.

Therefore he is — he's raising — he just went to Canada to raise money from trial lawyers in an international meeting.

HANNITY: All right, so —

GINGRICH: This guy is going to pour on negative ads. Every Democrat in the country will imitate Harry Reid.

HANNITY: Yes. I agree and I have a friend of mine running for Congress and he's already experiencing it. Guy votes with Nancy Pelosi 99 percent of the time, the only thing he wants to do is attack you and me and Mark Levin and anybody else, which is interesting.

The question is, will this tactic be successful?

GINGRICH: No. No.

HANNITY: And — and how do you recommend — you're great at politics. How do you recommend Republicans counter that?

GINGRICH: First of all, Sean.

HANNITY: Yes?

GINGRICH: If you voted 99 percent with Nancy Pelosi —

HANNITY: Yes?

GINGRICH: Wouldn't you want to be attacking all day every day?

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: I mean do you want to defend that record?

HANNITY: No.

GINGRICH: I — I was out last week in — for Brad Zaun in Des Moines. His opponent voted 98 percent with Nancy Pelosi and all he has to say is, you know, San Francisco doesn't deserve an Iowa representative. Iowa needs an Iowa representative. And that's the whole campaign.

HANNITY: I think that's the whole campaign. I agree.

GINGRICH: I believe the key to the fall election is very simple. There are job creators and there are job killers. We absolute proof that from the time Pelosi and Reid took over in January of 2007 the Democratic Congress has been killing jobs. It continues to kill jobs. This economy is not going to recover. We just saw a — we just saw a huge oil rig leave the Gulf to go to Egypt with high paying jobs. We had a company announce over the weekend — think about this quote — "because of political instability in the United States, we are moving our rig to the Congo —

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: ...to drill for oil." So the president is exporting jobs. He's doing a great job of creating jobs for China. The president has done a great job creating jobs for Egypt and the Congo. He just isn't doing a great job creating jobs for Americans.

HANNITY: No, we're losing those jobs. All right, but then —

GINGRICH: So that's the choice. You want to be job creator or a job killer. If you want to be a job killer, vote Democrat. If you want a job creator, vote Republican. I think that's the fall campaign.

HANNITY: All right. I agree with you. Don't think that I didn't notice you dropped in Des Moines, Iowa, and your latest trip to the great state of Iowa. And in between I know you snuck in a trip to New Hampshire. And I think I saw your schedule, you're going back to South Carolina.

GINGRICH: I was in South Carolina Friday a week ago —

HANNITY: Now hang on a second. Now wait a minute, we've been friends a long time. You have given more direct answers to people in the liberal media than to me. I want to know what's Newt Gingrich's plan.

GINGRICH: Our plan is for Calista and me to sit down with our family in February or March.

HANNITY: That's not the answer I want.

GINGRICH: And make a decision. But I promise you, Sean —

HANNITY: Well, how come —

(CROSSTALK)

GINGRICH: Because they printed the same thing I've said to you for nine months. What can I tell you? But I think it had — because it had AP Des Moines.

HANNITY: Yes.

GINGRICH: It suddenly got bigger coverage. I mean if it had said AP Long Island it wouldn't had been the same effect.

HANNITY: It would said, Newt and Hannity, it probably wouldn't had been the same. But then again maybe they're mad at me at The New York Times because I don't respond to their phone calls. You do.

GINGRICH: Yes, I guessed that could be the whole problem.

HANNITY: That's could be the whole thing right there. All right.

GINGRICH: But I promise you in February or March, I'll be on the show. We'll talk about it.

HANNITY: And you'll announce here, either way?

GINGRICH: Well I'll certainly talk about it.

(LAUGHTER)

HANNITY: I love being able to pin you down. All right. Former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich.

Subject: CBS: USDA Race Remark Furor: Not So Black-and-White

Nothing really new in this story. Most comes from the AJC article

CBS: USDA Race Remark Furor: Not So Black-and-White

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News.

A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination.

The remarks was purportedly from a speech Sherrod gave at an NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet on March 27, 2010, in Douglas, Ga. The video clip has inflamed innumerable conservative bloggers and has lit up YouTube.

The news came a week after the NAACP and the Tea Party movement each became embroiled in accusations of racism and bigotry within the other group, and after a high-ranking Tea Party spokesperson was expelled by other movement officials after he published a blog about slavery that was deemed racist.

In a statement released Monday, NAACP President Benjamin Jealous said that the organization concurred with Vilsack accepting Sherrod's resignation, adding, "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race."

But in an interview with the Atlanta Journal Constitution, Sherrod said the clip doesn't tell the whole story. And indeed, it is a story that pre-dates her tenure at the USDA by more than two decades.

Sherrod is a graduate of Albany State University in Albany, Ga., with a masters degree in Community Development from Antioch University in Ohio. Beginning in 1985 she served as Director of the Georgia State Office for the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund, which works to help family farmers retain and develop their property.

Last July Vilsack appointed her to head the USDA's Rural Development office in Georgia.

In the video clip (click on the embedded viewer below to watch), Sherrod is heard telling a story about a white man who came to her for help:

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help.

"What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough, so that when he - I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him.

"So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him.

"That's when it was revealed to me that it's about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white — It IS about white and black, because I took him to one of his own . . ."

The clip ends just as Sherrod has begun talking about a realization that it is class — not race — that is the issue, which is ironic given how Sherrod's critics are trying to take her remarks to prove racism exists.

What's more, Sherrod told the Journal-Constitution, the encounter she's relating occurred 24 years ago, long before she was a government employee. [Indeed, Chapter 12 bankruptcy, which she says in the video had just been enacted, was instituted for family farmers in 1986.]

Sherrod also told the paper that the video excerpt did not include the full story of her relationship with the farmer, working with him for two years to help his fight off foreclosure and keep his land, and even becoming friends with him and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

Resigned USDA Official Says Racial Story Misconstrued

Sherrod told the paper the USDA forced her out of her position because "They were just looking at what the Tea Party and what Fox said, and thought it was too (politically) dangerous for them."

The Journal-Constitution, the Huffington Post and other media outlets have called for a release of the complete tape, in order to better judge the context of Sherrod's remarks. There is more recording available, as Breitbart has managed to release a second clip in which Sherrod discusses the paucity of black employees in government positions relating to agriculture.

Sherrod suggests it would be a good career move, even in hard economic times: "You've heard of a lot of lay-offs. Have you heard of anybody in the federal government losing their job?"

Well . . . yeah.

- 5:00-5:40pm - cell service is spotty on Verizon

I think it would be best to do these without the Gov. in the car so we might want to pick one time to get them all done - I'm thinking 2-3:45pm since it will give us time to set them up.

Any objections to that?

HuffPo: Shirley Sherrod Resigns USDA Job After Admitting Use Of Racial Preference During NAACP Banquet (VIDEO)

Shirley Sherrod, a USDA official in Georgia, has resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer.

Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during a local NAACP banquet on March 27, according to information displayed on the video. A clip of her speech first appeared Monday morning on BigGovernment.com and aired that evening on Fox News.

Her resignation as the agency's state director of rural development was quickly accepted by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack. He cited a zero-tolerance policy and told CNN that he was working to "reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department."

In her controversial speech, Sherrod discussed the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claimed that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me."

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland," Sherrod told the crowd. "And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land."

"I didn't give him the full force of what I could do."

During the portion of her speech posted online, she mentioned that Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for family farmers. That protection started in 1986, more than two decades before Sherrod joined the USDA. She added that the incident "opened my eyes."

The website for the department Sherrod last oversaw has a notice clearly stating that the USDA "prohibits discrimination in all its programs and activities on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, religion, age, disability, political beliefs, sexual orientation, and marital or family status."

Sherrod appears to have a long record in the civil rights movement prior to her USDA appointment, which came almost exactly a year ago. It's possible that she has been on the other side of the "checkered history" that Vilsack referred to.

The Rural Development Leadership Network lists her as a board member and has a page congratulating her on the appointment. In that announcement, they state that Sherrod and her husband, Charles, were part of a multi-million dollar settlement against the USDA based on civil rights claims from the 1980s. The case wouldn't be settled until May 12, 2009. She was appointed to her USDA job two months later.

A picture on the RDLN website shows her standing with her husband next to a sign for the Charles M. Sherrod Civil Rights Park in their hometown of Albany, GA.

NAACP President Benjamin Jealous issued a statement late on Monday saying his organization was appalled by Sherrod's "shameful" actions.

The NAACP has recently been embroiled in a heated debate after passing a resolution condemning the tea party movement for tolerating bigotry. Mark Williams, spokesperson for the Tea Party Express, responded by calling the NAACP racist and was later expelled from the National Tea Party Federation for a racially charged blog post. Tea party activists are now planning a summit to combat racism.

According to the Atlanta-Journal Constitution, the local chapter of the NAACP has also firmly rejected Sherrod's comments. They further report:

Sherrod, 62, lives in Albany. She was appointed to her position in by Obama in July 2009 to manage more than 40 housing, business and community infrastructure and facility programs, and more than $114 billion in federal loans.

Before that, she had served as director of the Georgia field office for the Federation of Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund.

FULL STATEMENT FROM NAACP PRESIDENT BENJAMIN JEALOUS:

Since our founding in 1909, the NAACP has been a multi-racial, multi-faith organization that-- while generally rooted in African American communities-- fights to end racial discrimination against all Americans.

We concur with US Agriculture Secretary Vilsack in accepting the resignation of Shirley Sherrod for her remarks at a local NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man.

The reaction from many in the audience is disturbing. We will be looking into the behavior of NAACP representatives at this local event and take any appropriate action.

We thank those who brought this to our national office's attention, as there are hundreds of local fundraising dinners each year.

Sherrod's behavior is even more intolerable in light of the US Department of Agriculture's well documented history of denying opportunities to African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American farmers, as well as female farmers of all races. Currently, justice for many of these farmers is being held up by Congress. We would hope all who share our outrage at Sherrod's statements would join us in pushing for these cases to be remedied.

The NAACP will continue to advance the ideals of America and fight for freedom, justice and fairness for all Americans.

Talking Points

- Yesterday, Secretary Vilsack accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation.
- There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person.
- We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.
- We don't want this issue to distract our efforts to do so.

But it happened 30 years ago, it was taken out of context, etc....

- We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people in an equitable manner.
- But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.
- Comments made by Mrs. Brown undermine that trust.

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that 24 years ago she did not help a white farmer as much as she could have because of his race.

Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced online on Monday.

Sherrod reminded the crowd that Black farmers have faced years of discrimination and difficulty saving their farmland. She recounted the story of a white farmer who visited her asking for assistance keeping his farm.

"Here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land," she said (see above). "So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough so that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me. Either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. He needed to go back and report that I did try to help him."

As Sherrod tells the story of denying aid to the white farmer, she explains that she ultimately realized her mistake, but did not give any indication that she had rectified the situation.

The incident took place in 1986 when she was working for a nonprofit group and long before she joined USDA, Sherrod said Tuesday.

"I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," she said in an interview on CNN. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have."

The white farmer, his wife and Sherrod later wound up as friends, she said.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Sherrod to her post in July 2009 and accepted her resignation on Monday.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Vilsack said in a statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

It was not immediately clear if Sherrod was given an opportunity to explain her remarks to USDA officials or Vilsack before she resigned. A USDA spokesman did not immediately return requests for further clarification.

NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous issued a strongly worded statement condemning Sherrod Monday night, before she told CNN that the incident occurred before she worked for USDA.

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said.

"We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," he added.

Jealous said Sherrod's behavior "is even more intolerable in light of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's well documented history of denying opportunities to African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American farmers, as well as female farmers of all races."

The NAACP's comments come days after it denounced what it called "racist elements" of the Tea Party movement.

Black, Hispanic, Native American and female farmers have large discrimination lawsuits pending against USDA. Black farmers have been awarded a settlement worth $1 billion for similar claims of discrimination.

Sherrod previously served as Georgia director of the Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund and has worked with other rural and women's groups. Her office is part of USDA's Rural Development program, which administers more than $114 billion in loans and loan guarantees. It is part of a larger network that manages more than 40 housing, business and community infrastructure programs at about 500 state, local and federal offices nationwide.

Subject: Updated CNN: USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued Updated story with info on her appointment and statement from Federation of Southern Cooperatives/ Land Assistance Fund:

Addition:

Sherrod was appointed in July 2009 to serve as the rural development Georgia state director for USDA, according to a statement posted on the website of her former employer, the nonprofit Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund. She had worked for the federation since 1985, the statement said.

"We are proud that Shirley has been appointed to this position ... not just because she is the first African-American in Georgia to hold the post, but also because of her vast experience in agriculture and rural development," Ralph Paige, executive director of the nonprofit, said in the statement.

CNN: USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued

July 20, 2010 -- Updated 1302 GMT (2102 HKT)

(CNN) -- A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context.

Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race.

"I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have."

Sherrod resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired the video, in which she says she did not give the white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him avoid foreclosure.

Conservative website publisher Andrew Breitbart originally posted the video, which was quickly picked up by Fox News. The video claims Sherrod's remarks were delivered March 27 to an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet, but it is not clear that is the case, nor is it clear where the event was held or how many people were in attendance. The poor-quality video shows Sherrod telling her audience that the farmer she was working with "took a long time ... trying to show me he was superior to me." As a result, she said, she "didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

To prove she had done her job, she said, she took him to a white lawyer.

"I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

Sherrod mentioned that the lawyer would help the farmer with a bankruptcy filing but did not say in the clip whether his farm was saved.

She told CNN that at the time, she was working with a nonprofit association aimed at assisting farmers in Georgia and the Southeast. In the end, she said, the lawyer did not help the farmer and she "had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a Chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure."

She said she, the farmer and his wife wound up being friends.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said Monday he had accepted Sherrod's resignation.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Vilsack said. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

Sherrod told the Atlanta Journal-Constitution there were white people, including a mayor, at the banquet where she spoke. "Why would I do something racist if they were there?"

The NAACP issued a statement late Monday backing Vilsack's decision.

"Her actions were shameful," Jealous continued. "While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

Sherrod said Tuesday that it was "unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people."

She said she tried to explain to USDA officials, "but for some reason, the stuff Fox and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them to get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and see how I tell people we have to get beyond race and work together."

Asked why did she resigned instead of fighting, Sherrod said, "I didn't have any support from USDA. What would I do?"

James Peterson, assistant professor of English and Africana studies at Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, called the clip "a textbook case of institutional racism. Historically, it's been white against black, or white against whatever person of color is in question, but this is still institutional racism. We can't endorse it."

But he said, given later remarks made by Sherrod in the clip, "it's clear that this is an anecdote ... It is clear she is using this as an anecdote to talk about how she's progressed from this moment, and we can't let the weight of historical issues with race shape our individual issues."

"I think she is using this an anecdote to work through her own issues but also to show the audience we can move beyond and transcend some of these circumstances," he said.

Sherrod was appointed in July 2009 to serve as the rural development Georgia state director for USDA, according to a statement posted on the website of her former employer, the nonprofit Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund. She had worked for the federation since 1985, the statement said.

"We are proud that Shirley has been appointed to this position ... not just because she is the first African-American in Georgia to hold the post, but also because of her vast experience in agriculture and rural development," Ralph Paige, executive director of the nonprofit, said in the statement.

The conservative media outlets tied the video to the NAACP's recent resolution calling on the Tea Party movement to repudiate racist elements within it that have displayed such items as images of President Barack Obama with a bone through his nose and the White House with a lawn full of watermelons. The controversy has led one Tea Party group to oust another because of a blog posting by the second group's leader.

Tea Party Express leader Mark Williams posted on his blog a faux letter from NAACP president Benjamin Jealous to President Abraham Lincoln in which Williams ridicules the organization's use of "colored" in its historic name and uses multiple other stereotypes to bolster his point.

The National Tea Party Foundation expelled Williams' organization from its coalition as a result.

- 5:00-5:40pm - cell service is spotty on Verizon

I think it would be best to do these without the Gov. in the car so we might want to pick one time to get them all done - I'm thinking 2-3:45pm since it will give us time to set them up.

Any objections to that?

Krysta - Is it possible for Gov. to ride on his own during that time?

USDA worker quits over racism charge

[VIDEO EMBEDDED]

By Ed O'Keefe and Krissah Thompson:

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white.

Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her.

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said in a statement Monday night.

"We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," he added.

As Sherrod tells the story of denying aid to the white farmer, she explains that she ultimately realized her mistake, but did not give any indication that she had rectified the situation.

Jealous said Sherrod's behavior "is even more intolerable in light of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's well documented history of denying opportunities to African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American farmers, as well as female farmers of all races."

The NAACP's comments come days after it denounced what it called "racist elements" of the Tea Party movement.

Black, Hispanic, Native American and female farmers have large discrimination lawsuits pending against the Agriculture department. Black farmers have previously been awarded a settlement worth $1 billion for similar claims of discrimination.

NAACP Statement on Resignation of Shirley Sherrod

by Publius

July 19, 2010

(BALTIMORE, MD) NAACP President and CEO Benjamin Todd Jealous issued the following statement today after learning of the resignation of Shirley Sherrod of the United States Department of Agriculture:

“Since our founding in 1909, the NAACP has been a multi-racial, multi-faith organization that— while generally rooted in African American communities— fights to end racial discrimination against all Americans.

We concur with US Agriculture Secretary Vilsack in accepting the resignation of Shirley Sherrod for her remarks at a local NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man.

The reaction from many in the audience is disturbing. We will be looking into the behavior of NAACP representatives at this local event and take any appropriate action.

We thank those who brought this to our national office's attention, as there are hundreds of local fundraising dinners each year.

Sherrod's behavior is even more intolerable in light of the US Department of Agriculture's well documented history of denying opportunities to African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American farmers, as well as female farmers of all races. Currently, justice for many of these farmers is being held up by Congress. We would hope all who share our outrage at Sherrod's statements would join us in pushing for these cases to be remedied.

The NAACP will continue to advance the ideals of America and fight for freedom, justice and fairness for all Americans."

Founded in 1909, the NAACP is the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization. Its members throughout the United States and the world are the premier advocates for civil rights in their communities, conducting voter mobilization and monitoring equal opportunity in the public and private sectors.

We are good with this version on this end. Counsel has cleared the language. Only change is in the first sentence.

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENDED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign.

Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate.

"He had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," she said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FoxNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

The NAACP released a statement late Monday condemning Sherrod's admission.

"We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," the statement said.

"Her actions were shameful," it continued. "While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

Sherrod explained in the video that, at the time, she assumed the state or national Department of Agriculture had referred the white farmer to her. In order to ensure that the farmer could report back that she was indeed helpful, she said she took him to see "one of his own" -- a white lawyer.

"I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

The point of the story wasn't entirely clear; only an excerpt of the speech is included in the video clip.

"It was revealed to me that it's about poor versus those who have," she said, suggesting she had learned that race is less important.

The video clip was first posted by BigGovernment.com. The clip is dated March 27 from an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

The clip adds to the firestorm of debate over the NAACP's decision to approve a resolution at its convention last week accusing some Tea Party activists of racism -- a charge Tea Party leaders deny.

In a second clip from the same event posted online, Sherrod appeared to urge black job seekers to find work at the Department of Agriculture because the federal government won't lay people off.

"There are jobs at USDA and many times there are no people of color to fill those jobs because we shy away from agriculture. We hear the word agriculture and think, why are we working in the fields?" she said. "You've heard of a lot of layoffs. Have you heard of anybody in the federal government losing their job? That's all I need to say."

Here's an Atlanta Journal Constitution blog post with full tape of her comments:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WnNw7TGkjo&feature=player_embedded http://blogs.ajc.com/jay-bookman-blog/2010/07/20/in-the-curious-case-of-shirley-sherrod-lets-see-the-whole-tape/?cxntfid=blogs_jay_bookman_blog

Jay Bookman In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape
7:31 am July 20, 2010, by Jay

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist.

By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation:

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

After watching the video Monday evening, I wrote in comments that "what Sherrod says in that video – and what she apparently did – are deeply troubling... She might very well have earned a firing. But I'd like to see that rest of that video as well, because at the point it abruptly ends, she appears to be saying that it's wrong to think in terms of black and white, that she came to see things as more accurately divided between poor and rich than by race."

As I also noted, the folks at Big Government seem to have the whole video, since they also posted another segment, and it would be useful to see the rest of it.

Sherrod gets a chance to tell her side of the story in an AJC story by Marcus Garner:

"But Tuesday morning, Sherrod said what online viewers weren't told in reports posted throughout the day Monday was that the tale she told at the banquet happened 24 years ago – before she got the USDA job – when she worked with the Georgia field office for the Federation of Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund.

Sherrod said the short video clip excluded the breadth of the story about how she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period to help ward off foreclosure of his farm, and how she eventually became friends with the farmer and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

So let's see the rest of the tape, Big Government. Was Sherrod giggling among black folk about the time she put it to the white man, as the leaked excerpt suggests, or was the tape a deceptively edited excerpt of a longer story about getting beyond the issue of race, as she claims?

Let's see the tape. The evidence apparently exists to settle the question. Cough it up.

<http://www.shadowtv.com/redirect/notification.jsp?vid=86e15cb25493301e7aee306262074d24>

JOHN ROBERTS: The U.S. Department of Agriculture accepts the resignation of an employee after a video surfaced showing her telling an audience that she withheld assistance to a white farmer because of his race. Let's listen to what she told the NAACP.

[BEGIN VIDEO]

SHIRLEY SHERROD: I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough

[END VIDEO]

KIRAN CHETRY: Does that video tell the whole story? Joining us now on the phone from Albany, Georgia is Shirley Sherrod herself. Thanks for being with us this morning, Shirley.

SHERROD: Thank you.

CHETRY: You say this was part of the story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show you in a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. Will you finish for us how this ended?

SHERROD: Okay. I was speaking to that group like I've done many groups and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only. And I tell them the story of how I worked with a white farmer back in 1986. I was not working for the Department of Agriculture. I was working with and non-profit organization assisting farmers throughout south Georgia and the southeast. And this farmer came to me for help. I was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race, it's about those who have versus those who do not have. And I tell how I took him to a lawyer who I thought would help him. In the end, that lawyer didn't. In the end, I had to frantically look for a lawyer because when USDA lifted - I'm sorry, when the court lifted the injunction against USDA in May of 1987, this white farmer was 1 of 13 that was foreclosed on by the state of Georgia. I had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure. He couldn't - at that time we had chapter 12 -

CHETRY: Yes, but let me said - you said you didn't know enough, didn't give him the full force of what you could do. You said you did enough, and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that perhaps he could help him. What did you mean by that?

SHERROD: What I meant was, I didn't know anyone else. I didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12. But I thought if I took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

ROBERTS: Miss Sherrod, let's make it clear though, this happened 24 years ago. You eventually worked with this white farmer. You eventually became friends, you say, with the farmer and his wife.

SHERROD: Yes.

ROBERTS: So the question I have is, when the U.S. Department of Agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, "Wait a minute, you don't know the full story. Here's the full story, why should I step down?"

SHERROD: I did say that. But they, for, some reason, the stuff that FOX and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how I tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

ROBERTS: Many people at home might be thinking, well, if you're recounting an old story, why did you succumb to pressure to step down? Why didn't you try to fight this?

SHERROD: If I tried to fight it and didn't have any support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, what would I do?

CHETRY: Let me ask you this. Did you talk to the NAACP about it? Because I just want to read for our audience what Ben Jealous, the president, said. He said, referring to you and this surfacing of the tape, "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story, she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races. She gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man, and the reaction from many in the audience is disturbing." This is from Ben Jealous. Did you try to clarify with the NAACP your story?

SHERROD: No, I haven't had a chance to talk to anyone. All of this was happening so fast. And it's unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people with that now.

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

SHERROD: I don't mind.

ROBERTS: Thanks a lot.

SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT -- WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT.

SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

Shirley Sherrod: I DON'T MIND.

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID -- YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

We are good with this version on this end. Counsel has cleared the language. Only change is in the first sentence.

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

American Morning transcript

Kiran Chetry and John Roberts interview Shirley Sherrod, a black Agriculture Department employee, who resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired a video of her telling an audience she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm. She says the charges of racism are wrong

MISSING PART BELOW IN RED:

Kiran Chetry: THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION OF AN EMPLOYEE AFTER A VIDEO SURFACED SHOWING HER TELLING AN AUDIENCE THAT SHE WITHHELD ASSISTANCE TO A WHITE FARMER BECAUSE OF HIS RACE. LET'S LISTEN TO WHAT SHE TOLD THE NAACP. DOES THAT VIDEO TELL THE WHOLE STORY? JOINING US NOW ON THE PHONE FROM ALBANY, GEORGIA, SHERRI SHERROD HERSELF. THANKS FOR BEING WITH US THIS MORNING, SHIRLEY.

Shirley Sherrod: THANK YOU.

Kiran Chetry: YOU SAY THIS WAS PART OF THE STORY AND THAT IT WAS PART THAT WAS SPLICED ENOUGH TO SHOW YOU IN A BAD LIGHT, THAT THIS ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY. WILL YOU FINISH FOR US HOW THIS ENED?

Shirley Sherrod: OKAY. I WAS SPEAKING TO THAT GROUP LIKE I'VE DONE MANY GROUPS AND I TELL THEM ABOUT A TIME WHEN I THOUGHT THE ISSUE WAS RACE AND RACE ONLY. AND I TELL THEM THE STORY OF HOW I WORKED WITH A WHITE FARMER BACK IN 1986. I WAS NOT WORKING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. I WAS WORKING WITH AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION ASSISTING FARMERS THROUGHOUT SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTHEAST. AND THIS FARMER CAME TO ME FOR HELP. I WAS TELLING THE STORY ABOUT HOW WORKING WITH HIM HELPED ME TO SEE THAT THE ISSUE IS NOT ABOUT RACE, IT'S ABOUT THOSE WHO HAVE VERSUS THOSE WHO DO NOT HAVE. AND I TELL HOW I TOOK HIM TO A LAWYER WHO I THOUGHT WOULD HELP HIM. IN THE END, THAT LAWYER DIDN'T. IN THE END, I HAD TO FRANTICLY LOOK FOR A LAWYER BECAUSE WHEN USDA LIFTED -- I'M SORRY. WHEN THE COURTS LIFTED THE INJUNCTION AGAINST USDA IN MAY OF 1987, THIS WHITE FARMER WAS 1 OF 13 THAT WAS FORECLOSED ON BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA. I HAD TO FRANTICLY FIND A LAWYER WHO WOULD FILE A CHAPTER 11 TO STOP THE FORECLOSURE. HE COULDN'T -- AT THAT TIME WE HAD UP TO 12 --

Kiran Chetry: BUT LET ME SAID – YOU SAID YOU DIDN'T KNOW ENOUGH, DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE FULL FORCE OF WHAT YOU COULD DO. YOU SAID YOU REFERRED HIM TO THE LAWYER WHO WAS WHITE AND PERHAPS HE COULD HELP HIM. WHAT DID YOU MEAN BY THAT?

Shirley Sherrod: WHAT I MEANT WAS, I DIDN'T KNOW ANYONE ELSE, I DIDN'T KNOW ANOTHER LAWYER AT THAT TIME WHO WAS LOCAL, WHO KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT CHAPTER 12. BUT I THOUGHT IF I TOOK HIM TO A WHITE LAWYER, HE WOULD DEFINITELY DO ALL THAT HE COULD TO HELP SAVE HIS FARM.

John Roberts: MS. SHERROD LET'S MAKE IT CLEAR THOUGH. THIS HAPPENED 24 YEARS AGO. YOU EVENTUALLY WORKED WITH THIS WHITE FARMER, YOU EVENTUALLY BECAME FRIENDS, YOU SAY, WITH THE FARMER AND HIS WIFE. SO THE QUESTION I HAVE IS, WHEN THE US DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAME TO YOU AND SAID YOU HAVE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU JUST SAY WAIT A MINUTE, YOU DON'T KNOW THE FULL STORY, HERE'S THE FULL STORY, WHY SHOULD I STEP DOWN?

Shirley Sherrod: I DID SAY THAT. BUT THEY FOR SOME REASON, THE STUFF THAT FOX AND THE TEA PARTY DOES IS SCARING THE ADMINISTRATION. I TOLD... I TOLD THEM GET THE WHOLE TAPE AND LOOK AT HOW I TELL PEOPLE WE HAVE TO GET BEYOND RACE AND START WORKING TOGETHER.

John Roberts: I THINK THAT MANY PEOPLE AT HOME MIGHT BE THINKING, IF YOU'RE RECOUNTING AN OLD STORY, WHY DID YOU SUCCUMB TO PRESSURE TO STEP DOWN, WHY DIDN'T YOU TRY TO FIGHT THIS?

Shirley Sherrod: IF I TRIED TO FIGHT IT AND DIDN'T HAVE ANY SUPPORT FROM THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WHAT – WHAT.

Kiran Chetry: BEN JEALOUS REFERRED TO YOU AND THIS SURFACING OF THE TAPE, "HER ACTIONS WERE SHAMEFUL. WHILE SHE WENT ON TO EXPLAIN IN THE STORY, SHE ULTIMATELY REALIZED HER MISTAKE AS WELL AS THE COMMON PREDICAMENT OF WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL RACES. SHE GAVE NO INDICATION SHE HAD ATTEMPTED TO RIGHT THE WRONG SHE HAD DONE TO THIS MAN." AND THE REACTION FROM MANY IN THE AUDIENCE IS DISTURBING. THIS IS FROM BEN JEALOUS. DID YOU TRY TO CLARIFY WITH THE NAACP YOUR STORY?

Shirley Sherrod: NO, I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TALK TO ANYONE. ALL OF THIS WAS HAPPENING SO FAST. AND IT'S UNFORTUNATE THAT THE NAACP WOULD MAKE A STATEMENT WITHOUT EVEN CHECKING TO SEE WHAT HAPPENED. THIS WAS 24 YEARS AGO AND I'M TELLING A STORY TO TRY TO UNITE PEOPLE WITH THAT NOW.

John Roberts: CERTAINLY YOU'RE COMING OUT AND TELLING YOUR STORY NOW TAKES IT TO A DIFFERENT LEVEL AND OBVIOUSLY WE'RE GOING TO KEEP FOLLOWING THIS. IT IS GOOD TO GET YOUR SIDE OF IT. SHERRI SH SHERLY SHERROD, FORMER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIAL. PERHAPS WE CAN GET YOU BACK ON AGAIN, GET YOUR FACE ON TV AS WELL AND TALK TO YOU MORE ABOUT THIS AS THIS STORY CONTINUES TO DEVELOP.

I would like an email to every employee at USDA that reaffirms our commitment to a USDA that has no tolerance for discrimination in any form by anyone. I also want to remind every employee that as a USDA employee they have a unique and important individual responsibility to represent USDA well in all their official actions, statements, and public presentations and that all of us are held to a high standard. You may have to explain in the email what happened yesterday in general terms to provide a context for this email. If doing an email is cumbersome I suggest at a minimum a prominent web posting.

CNN just called me, after reaching out to WH. To squash day two stories, I think we need to consider what happens if this has legs tomorrow, early am if possible. We should not say any more that could create another story BUT, press will look elsewhere, and I fear there are people the could albiet wrongly keep story going. How early can we talk.

We sent our statement re Sherrod to FOX and CNN tonight per their request. FOX included it in story. Wonkette has posted something and AP TV put together piece but so far, pick up minimal after FOX.

We sent state by state releases on migratory effort this afternoon. So far, no questions.

Sir,

Below is a copy of Shirley's letter.

Kevin

Cheryl

I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of th Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have v ersus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmers land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners thru the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

My whole life speaks for my commitment to fairness whether white or black.

Chris,

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

<http://hotair.com/archives/2010/07/19/breitbart-hits-naacp-with-promised-video-of-racism/>

Looking for guidance on how you would like to prepare and handle any inquiries that result.

Thanks.

On July 25, 2009 Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Shirley Sherrod as Georgia Director of Rural Development. USDA Rural Development spends over $1.2 Billion in the state of Georgia each year. On March 27, 2010, while speaking at the NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet, Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race.

Shirley Sherrod: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me, I know what he was doing. But he had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough. So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. And he needed to go back and report that I did try and help him. So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because of Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them that his own kind would take care of him. That's when it was revealed to me that its about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white...it is about white and black. It is about white and black but its not you know...it opened my eyes because I took him to one of his own.

Fox News Clip:

Geraldo Rivera: Do you denounce in the way that you ask the Tea Parties denounce racists within your ranks?
Hilary Shelton: Yes we do, we repudiate racists within our ranks.

Back to Shirley Sherrod Clip:

I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farm land and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life – those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

SHOCK: Video Suggests Racism At NAACP Event

NEW YORK (CBS) □

1 of 1

Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director

Last Tuesday, the NAACP passed a resolution condemning racism in the Tea Party movement. The organization's delegates called on Tea Party leaders to "repudiate those in their ranks who use racist language in their signs and speeches."

Tea Party members and supporters saw the resolution as a condemnation of the group itself, which calls for fiscal responsibility, restrictions on governmental power, and backs political candidates who claim the same.

The NAACP's action caught the attention of Andrew Breitbart of BigGovernment.com, who said the controversy was "absolutely manufactured for political gain," in a summer "in which the economy is the number one issue affecting blacks and whites in this country. This country can ill afford the schism of race to be exploited the way [he is] based upon the false premise of the Tea Party being racist."

He also claimed to possess recorded evidence of racism from the NAACP.

On Monday, Breitbart posted a video of a speech by Shirley Sherrod, USDA Rural Development Georgia State Director, delivered at the NAACP's 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet.

The video shows Sherrod speaking of racial considerations being a factor for how much help she would give.

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing, but he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," Sherrod said. "So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him."

In the video, Sherrod also spoke of referring the white farmer to a white lawyer, thinking the latter would be more sympathetic because of race. "So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him."

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

This is horrible. Video just posted on Hotair.com.

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life – those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

Chris,

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

<http://hotair.com/archives/2010/07/19/breitbart-hits-naacp-with-promised-video-of-racism/>

Looking for guidance on how you would like to prepare and handle any inquiries that result.

Thanks.

This is horrible. Video just posted on Hotair.com.

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life – those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

Chris,

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

<http://hotair.com/archives/2010/07/19/breitbart-hits-naacp-with-promised-video-of-racism/>

Looking for guidance on how you would like to prepare and handle any inquiries that result.

Thanks.

This is horrible. Video just posted on Hotair.com.

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life – those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

Chris,

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

President obama has granted a interview to abc news and he spoke about the agriculture secretary tom vilsack's decision to go ahead to fire shirley sherrod, and listen to this.

he jumped the gun partly because we now live in this media culture where something goes up on youtube or a blog, and everybody scrambles, and i have told my team and i told my agencies that we have to make sure that we are focusing on doing the right thing instead of what looks to be politically necessary at that very moment. we have the take our time and think these issues through.

the president of the united states. all right. let's bring in candy crowley our chief political correspondent and host of ""state of the union"" which airs sunday mornings at 9:00, and john king who hosts ""john king usa"" which comes up at the top of the hour. you spoke with shirley sherrod, john, and how did that conversation with you go with her after she spoke with the president?

well, good. she said she had a brief conversation with the president, and she is grateful that he did not use the words i'm sorry, but right in the vain that he regretted what had happened. interestingly, she has questions and still believes that someone, and not the president, and she believes him, but someone in the white house was involved in her firing. other things, wolf, she is not sure if she will take the job and she is exhausted and tough words for the naacp and how they treated her in this, and i asked her about andrew breitbart, the conservative who put the edited words on the air, and what she thought about him.

reporter: if you had a few seconds for andrew breitbart, what would you stay?

i would say he is a liar. he knew exactly what effect that would have on the conservative racist people he is dealing with. that is why i started to get the hate mail. and that is why i started to get the hate calls. he got the effect he was looking for.

she said it would take a very long time, and she would have to have deep personal conversation with andrew breitbart, and she will forgive the white house, and secretary vilsack, but not andrew breitbart.

well, what is your take, candy. i have been anxious to speak to you over the last couple of days.

i think that the post presidency race isn't. i was having a conversation saying that is the white house tried to take president obama out of this, and sort of keep him above it, and yet he makes this phone call, and i said, that there is no way to keep this president away from racial issues. he is the first african-american president, and naturally, i mean, i was trying to think that if this, if the gates, the harvard thing that happened with the policeman, and the professor, if that had happened under george w. bush, nobody would have looked at him to say something, but they do look to barack obama to say something, because he is president and made history and something they know they have to live with.

so, it is not just that the buck stops here as harry truman said, but also because he is african-american?

sure, sure. ask any other -- and look at any other president trying to put him in position of the particular harvard incident and no one would have expected that they would have to put something out there, but they do expect it of president obama, and they do also expect, and they did politically 101, get rid of the problem. that is what everybody's first reaction is when a political problem comes up, everybody has learned to get rid of the problem, and that is a problem for them, except he is exactly right in this day and age -- it turned out to be a big problem.

except that she was not a problem and gave a remarkable and redemptive speech. remember when the gates thing happened the president regretted that the cambridge police acted stupidly and now his administration has acted stupidly, and they didn't check out to the right, and the speech did not get investigated, and they accepted that she was a racist and problem and it looked especially bad when it is the administration of the first african-american president, and the naacp act on the premise to treat everybody fairly and jumped the gun, and didn't treat this woman fairly, and they have egg on their face and they know it.

we look forward to your show at the top of the hour, ""john king usa,"" and candy crowley sunday.

i think that the post presidency race isn't. i was having a conversation saying that is the white house tried to take president obama out of this, and sort of keep him above it, and yet he makes this phone call, and i said, that there is no way to keep this president away from racial issues. he is the first african-american president, and naturally, i mean, i was trying to think that if this, if the gates, the harvard thing that happened with the policeman, and the professor, if that had happened under george w. bush, nobody would have looked at him to say something, but they do look to barack obama to say something, because he is president and made history and something they know they have to live with.

so, it is not just that the buck stops here as harry truman said, but also because he is african-american?

sure, sure. ask any other -- and look at any other president trying to put him in position of the particular harvard incident and no one would have expected that they would have to put something out there, but they do expect it of president obama, and they do also expect, and they did politically 101, get rid of the problem. that is what everybody's first reaction is when a political problem comes up, everybody has learned to get rid of the problem, and that is a problem for them, except he is exactly right in this day and age -- it turned out to be a big problem.

except that she was not a problem and gave a remarkable and redemptive speech. remember when the gates thing happened the president regretted that the cambridge police acted stupidly and now his administration has acted stupidly, and they didn't check out to the right, and the speech did not get investigated, and they accepted that she was a racist and problem and it looked especially bad when it is the administration of the first african-american president, and the naacp act on the premise to treat everybody fairly and jumped the gun, and didn't treat this woman fairly, and they have egg on their face and they know it.

we look forward to your show at the top of the hour, ""john king usa,"" and candy crowley sunday.

Krysta and Karen,

I know that the last couple of days have been difficult. I certainly wish the circumstances were different. As I am certain you will understand, what transpired with regard to Ms. Sherrod has raised many questions. At this point, I am particularly interested in knowing what happened, when it happened, and who was involved. Please compile this information for me. A timeline of events would also be useful and should be included with the information you send me. I would like the information sent to me as soon as possible and I would like the information to be as specific as possible.

Also, I sent an email message to Chris Mather yesterday and never received a response. I would like the courtesy of an answer to my question.

Thank you.

READOUT OF PRESIDENT OBAMA'S CALL WITH SHIRLEY SHERROD

The President reached Ms. Sherrod by telephone at about 12:35. They spoke for seven minutes.

The President expressed to Ms. Sherrod his regret about the events of the last several days. He emphasized that Secretary Vilsack was sincere in his apology yesterday, and in his work to rid USDA of discrimination.

The President told Ms. Sherrod that this misfortune can present an opportunity for her to continue her hard work on behalf of those in need, and he hopes that she will do so.

Shirley Sherrod wants to talk to President Obama

Updated 7:24 a.m. ET

Ousted but now recruited U.S. Agriculture Department official Shirley Sherrod says she wants to hear directly from President Obama that he and his administration are fully committed to fighting discrimination against black farmers.

"I can't say that the president is fully behind me," Sherrod told ABC's "Good Morning America" Thursday morning. "I would hope that he is...I would love to talk to him."

Sherrod -- whose forced resignation Monday night based on a misleading video snippet led to a White House apology and a new job offer from Agriculture -- is in New York Thursday for a series of television interviews on the network and cable morning shows.

On NBC's Today Show, Sherrod said she hoped to speak to Obama about the experiences of rural farmers.

"I'd like to talk to him about the experiences of people like me, people at the grassroots level, people who live out here in rural America people, who live in the South. I know he does not have that kind of experience," Sherrod said.

"We love him, we want him to be successful, because we feel he think in some ways like we do, and we think that's good for the country," she said later. "Yes, there are issues out there that we are faced with, issues of poverty. The other thing, I want everything to reflect, I want a good reflection for him as the first black president."

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack offered Sherrod a position with USDA's Office of Civil Rights and Community Outreach, Sherrod said. But she's inclined to decline the offer.

"I would not be that individual that the department, everyone is looking to to solve the issue of racism in USDA. It takes a lot more to get that job done," she said, noting that other USDA officials have not lost their jobs for discriminating against minority or women farmers.

Sherrod also told CNN's "American Morning" that said she would like to "get back at" Andrew Breitbart, the right-wing blogger whose posting of the video snippet triggered the political storm that led to her ouster. Asked whether she would like to see Breitbart's Web site shut down, Sherrod replied: "That would be a great thing...he's doing more to divide us."

it's been an interesting 48 hours for shirley sherrod. she's accepted apologies from the white house, and the secretary of agriculture. but, is she ready to take a new job within the same administration that demanded her resignation just three days ago?

it is a decision that she is mulling over this morning after agriculture secretary tom vilsack admitted he should have done a better job of investigating the video that started the controversy. so is she ready to put it all behind her? does the president himself owe her a personal apology? well, she's sitting right over there. i'm going to talk with shirley sherrod right ahead.

also a storm brewing in the caribbean has brought efforts to permanently plug the busted oil well in the gulf to a near standstill. we're going to get the latest on that story and a rare view of the disaster as crews use a submarine to search for oil beneath the surface. we're going to take you live to the gulf in just a couple of minutes.

and plus-sized and proud. the model who is furious that recent pictures of her were altered to make her appear thinner than she actually is.

but we begin on this thursday morning with the fallout over the premature firing of an agriculture department official named shirley sherrod. we'll talk to her in a moment. but first, nbc's savannah guthrie is at the white house with the latest on the story. savannah, good morning to you.

reporter: good morning, matt. well the white house is hoping to move past this chapter, now that the agriculture secretary has come forward to offer miss sherrod a new job with the agency, and to apologize. under fire for the firing of a usda worker, agriculture secretary tom vilsack faced the cameras.

this is a good woman. she's been put through hell. and i could have done and should have done a better job.

reporter: vilsack said he personally called sherrod to apologize.

i asked for shirley's forgiveness and she was gracious enough to extend it to me. and for that i am thankful.

reporter: at the white house wednesday, it was also all apologies.

i think without a doubt miss sherrod is owed an apology. a disservice was done for which we apologize. and on behalf of the administration, i offer our apologies.

reporter: after initially standing by the agriculture secretary's decision to fire sherrod, the white house now acknowledges it was a rush to judgment. a usda official called sherrod monday afternoon, in her car, asked her to pull over and resign by blackberry. this, after video surfaced online of sherrod making racially charged comments that turned out to be selectively edited.

how did we not ask the right questions? how did you all not ask the right questions? how did other people not ask the right questions?

reporter: watching the apologies as they were issued, live on cable tv, shirley sherrod herself later reacted.

i'm just wondering how will my grandchildren look at this when they read about this in later years, and their grandmother being the first black person to be state director of rural development in georgia, was asked to resign by the first black president.

reporter: as for andrew breitbart, the conservative blogger who posted the video, he acknowledged he put it online without seeing the full content of the remarks. but he didn't apologize for posting it. though he did say he has sympathy for sherrod.

i feel bad that they made this about her and i feel sorry that they made this about her. i'm not sure if that was done because they rushed to judgment, or whether they wanted to make it about shirley versus me. because that's what it's become.

well, there's one issue outstanding. senior aides here at the white house insist they did not push the agriculture secretary to fire ms. sherrod, that it was a decision made at agriculture and they were, frankly, looped in essentially after it had been done. on the other hand, miss sherrod has said repeatedly it was her impression, based on her conversation with an agriculture department official, that it was the white house who wanted her to resign. so that's one of those issues of fact that a lot of people will be talking about today, meredith.

all right, savannah guthrie, thank you very much. shirley sherrod is with us again this morning. ms. sherrod, thank you so much for joining us.

thank you.

you have now received apologies from the usda, the white house and the naacp for their rush to judgment. you've accepted those apologies. you really are a woman, as the secretary put it, who has been through hell. how are you feeling right now?

you know, i've gone from being at such a low on monday, as this was unfolding, and thinking, this is so unreal, to feeling so great about the support i've received from around the country. it's encouraging. it makes me feel that there are many others out there who think like i do, and so many who do not think like the individual who started this in the first place.

let's talk about that. i want to talk about it in a minute. but first of all, do you think that you deserve a phone call from president obama?

i think i do.

you do?

mm-hmm.

an apology?

well, you know, he is the president of the united states of america. i received the apologies that are important. i really would not want the president to apologize to me. i'd love to have a conversation with him, though.

and what would you say to him?

you know, i'd like to talk to him a little bit about the experience of people like me. people at the grassroots level. people who live out there in rural america, people who live in the south. i know he does not have that kind of experience. let me help him a little bit with how we think, how we live, and the things that are happening.

what do you think he doesn't understand and a lot of the rest of the country doesn't understand about people like you and the way you live and what you're faced with?

you know, we are people who struggle every day, who do the best we can in our community. who love this country. we love him. we want him to be successful, because we feel thinks, in some ways, like we do. and we think that's good for the country. yes, there are issues out there that we are faced with. issues of poverty. issues that i worked so hard on these last 11 months at rural development to try to really have an impact on, mainly because that's me. but the other thing, i want everything to reflect, i want a good reflection for him as the first black president.

but why do you think when it comes to this topic of race, it just presses people's buttons? people are so quick to react without thinking. you're in the center of a storm here. why do you think that is?

you know, this has gone on for years and years, and i thought we were getting to a place where we really could talk about it. but we can't deal with it until we can face each other. that's the whole point i make when i talk. the things that are being done by the gentleman who started this, and i can't even think of his name -- andrew breitbart.

yes. i didn't know of him before this happened. but the things he's doing, being done more to divide us so we can't move on.

but i guess his point was that this is not him versus you. he was trying to point out racism within the membership of the naacp. that when you told that story about being reluctant to help a white farmer, before he realized this was about poverty, that there was acceptance within the crowd, people who are yeah, you're right, what he was trying to say was there's racism in the naacp, the same way they claim there might be racism within the tea party. is there room for debate, for discussion about that?

but at some point the white house could have checked and seen the whole video, the usda could have seen the whole video, the naacp could have seen the whole video before going on the attack with you. the white house has said they had nothing to do with your ouster. you have said that you had three phone calls on monday from your superiors saying that the white house was behind it, they wanted you to resign. do you stand by that?

i stand by that. because i asked what has happened? you know, i just couldn't -- it was so -- you know, the first call i received said we're putting you on administrative leave. i had to explain to my leadership staff that we were quite a ways from the office, in a meeting, that i explained what happened, and i told them, i have to leave and go turn this government car in and get my car and go home. you know, i asked -- so first they were putting me on administrative leave. the next call was shirley, we're going to have to ask you to resign. and then the white house wants you to resign. because i'm asking them, what happened? this is just so unbelievable. it was one thing for them to put me on administrative leave and then look into it. but they went from administrative leave directly into asking me to resign.

so obviously you still feel the white house has some explaining to do. meanwhile the usda, the secretary of agriculture has offered you a new job that you're thinking about. what can you tell us about this job?

you know, it's -- it's discrimination happens in the usda. that's why there are lawsuits by black farmers, hispanic farmers, native american farmers, women farmers. and they're because the agency that never deals with the people who call it. no one lost their job because they're discriminated against a black farmer or a native american farmer or a hispanic farmer or a female farmer. those individuals, many of them, some have retired, but many of them are still there. i would not want to be that individual that the department and everyone is looking to to solve the issue of racism in usda. it takes a lot more to get that job done.

so i'm just asking very quickly, what is the job exactly that they'd like you to do?

they talked about the office about me dealing with discrimination within the agency.

and you're inclined to say no to that?

at this moment, i would think i would be.

so as far as you're concerned at this point you're out of the usda for good?

yeah. i haven't seen the offer, you know. the secretary said he would e-mail it to me. i have not seen it yet. so before i say no totally, i would like to look at that to weigh in.

ms. sherrod we appreciate very much you coming in.

thank you.

Barbara Lee's statement in full:

this is an apology for the secretary, and we asked him to come visit was, and talk about what transpired and you have the statement that we prepared earlier, and we asked him that we want him to ask ms. sherrod to come back to the department of agriculture in a position of empowerment be made, and that we believe he acted too quickly and he did not have all of the facts. the secretary very quickly responded. he has talked to many members of the congressional black caucus and he came to our meeting. he has issued an apology in a really real way, and we accept his apology, and he has talked to mrs. sherrod, and i am sure he will talk to you later about that conversation and we talked about the fact that this is really should be a moment that we look at the department of agriculture and all of the issues that historical issues not addressed, and in which he is trying to address in terms of discrimination, and in terms of land grant colleges, funding for historically black colleges and universities and the pickford lawsuit, and the black farmer's issues and all of the issues that mrs. sherrod understands and has a keen sensitivity to, because of her life and what she has experienced through her life. the secretary understands that very clearly, and he apologized and he -- and when one makes a mistake, we expect an apology, and he did that. and we told him that we look forward to working with him as we begin to move forward. this is a moment that our nation needs to really understand that we have to begin to discuss race. we cannot believe that this is a post-racial era, and in many ways race has been swept under the rug, and we are trying as a congressional black caucus to have this coconversation, and we believe that the secretary is a good partner for us in this conversation moving forward. i thank you very much for being here and members of the black caucus for coming and the secretary for being with us and for being so candid. it was a very good meeting and we really believed that mrs. sherrod deserves our respect. she deserves our applause, and her life now has become very public and her history is one that i hope that the entire country will look at in terms of transformation and redemption which we can all learn from. thank you very much.

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

July 21, 2010

PRESS BRIEFING
BY PRESS SECRETARY ROBERT GIBBS

James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

2:36 P.M. EDT

MR. GIBBS: Mr. Feller.

Q Thanks, Robert. Can you tell us what the White House's position is right now on Shirley Sherrod? Should she get her job back?

MR. GIBBS: Well, let me -- Secretary Vilsack is -- has tried and is trying to reach Ms. Sherrod. When the Secretary reaches her, he will apologize for the events of the last few days and they will talk about their next steps. I think it is -- I think, clearly, that a lot of people involved in this situation, from the government's perspective on through, acted without all the facts. Now, as you saw Secretary Vilsack's statements from last evening, now that we have greater knowledge and a broader fact set, he is going to review all of those facts, and that's what he'll talk to Ms. Sherrod about today.

Q So does the Secretary plan to offer her her job back?

MR. GIBBS: Well, again, I think that's something that -- the Secretary and Ms. Sherrod are going to talk through those next steps.

Q What was the President's involvement in this? Can you walk us through that, from when he first found out to the present?

MR. GIBBS: I believe the President was briefed on this sometime yesterday, most likely in the morning. This was, as you heard Secretary Vilsack say yesterday, a decision that was made by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The President was briefed yesterday and has been briefed obviously today as well.

Q So did he or anyone at the White House direct that she be fired?

MR. GIBBS: Not to my knowledge, no.

Q And to a lot of people trying to follow this story, they see a government employee who ends up losing her job because of comments posted and a videotape that appears to be taken out of context -- it just looks bungled. Is that a fair way to put it?

MR. GIBBS: Well, Ben, I think this is one -- I think this is a fair way to put it: Members of this administration, members of the media, members of different political factions on both sides of this have all made determinations and judgments without a full set of facts. I think that is wholly and completely accurate. I think without a doubt Ms. Sherrod is owed an apology. I would do so certainly on behalf of this administration.

I think if we learn -- if we look back and decide what we want to learn out of this, I think it is, as I said, everybody involved made determinations without knowing all the facts and all the events.

Q Why do you think that happened?

MR. GIBBS: I can't speak for everybody involved, but I think we live in a culture that things whip around, people want fast responses, we want to give fast responses, and I don't think there's any doubt that if we all look at this, I think the lesson -- one of the great lessons you take away from this is to ask all the questions first and to come to that fuller understanding. I say that, again, from the perspective of this administration; I say that from the perspective of those that cover this administration, and those that are involved in the back and forth in the political theater of this country.

Q One last one on this. That apology from the Secretary, does that reflect the President's view as well?

MR. GIBBS: Again, I did so just a few moments ago on behalf of this entire administration.

Yes, sir.

Q It does sound like you've spoken to the President about this.

MR. GIBBS: I have.

Q So what does he think of it? Does he agree that she was a victim of a rush to judgment?

MR. GIBBS: Again, I don't think I'd be out here, Matt, giving you the answers that I just gave to Ben without having those reflect the feelings of the President and the feelings of members of this administration.

Q Was he angry about the way this has transpired?

MR. GIBBS: Well, again, look, we -- decisions were made based on an incomplete set of facts. We now have a more complete set of facts and a review is being done as it should be.

Q And what, if any, concern is there within the administration that the mishandling of this Sherrod affair could hurt the President and the Democrats as well in an election year?

MR. GIBBS: I think this is -- your question encapsulates a little bit of what I was talking about a minute ago. I know there is a -- we have this society and this culture now that's pervasive in this town where everything is viewed through the lens of who wins, who loses, how fast, by what margin. Look, a disservice was done; an apology is owed. That's what we've done. This administration has never looked at -- I think if you go well back into the campaign -- never looked at a scoreboard at the end of each day to figure out where we stood.

Q Just one other subject. Financial regulations -- the President signed the bill today. He said that reform would, in fact, bring certainty to the business community. But we have major business groups -- the Business Roundtable, the Chamber of Commerce, the ABA -- saying that it actually brings greater uncertainty, could have unintended consequences --

MR. GIBBS: How so? How so?

Q Where business -- that the uncertainty about how the new regulations will be implemented, the welter of regulations that are being introduced --

MR. GIBBS: Well, I think there are people that believe that the regulations that governed our economy and our financial industry up until the moment the President signed that piece of paper into law, that that was just fine; that if some people take some risks, make some gambles, and we all owe money because of it, or if 8 million people lose their job because of it, that's just fine.

The President has a different take on that. The President is glad that we are not approaching the second anniversary of the financial collapse with the same rules in place that led to a tremendous retraction in economic growth, more than 8 million jobs lost.

I think in many ways government is about choice and about choices. I will let those that oppose this bill defend the choice that the rules that we had in place are the ones that should continue to govern the financial sector. The President certainly does not believe that and, thank goodness, three Republicans in the Senate put aside those partisan differences to ensure that a very strong piece of legislation that will protect consumers and Main Street is now the law of the land.

Ed.

Q Robert, I wanted to go back to Shirley Sherrod because when you started out by saying that Secretary Vilsack is going to call her and apologize, and then, as you put it, talk about the next steps -- here we are two days later; presumably people in the White House have seen the full tape, realize that it seems an injustice was done here. Why is there still vagueness? Why hasn't the President, the Chief of Staff, or someone here picked up the phone and said, here's what we're doing, make a decision -- instead of saying we're trying to figure out the next steps? Why the vagueness?

MR. GIBBS: Well, I don't think I'm being vague, Ed. The Secretary of Agriculture employs a number of people to carry out the duties and the functions of the Department of Agriculture. I think there are clearly some things that Ms. Sherrod will likely want to talk to Mr. Vilsack about, and we're going to let that conversation happen.

Q Right, but this is the President's administration. It's bigger than Tom Vilsack or any department. This appears to be an injustice. Why wouldn't the President intervene instead of letting this all fall on the Agriculture Department?

MR. GIBBS: We have a fuller set of facts. A review is taking place and the Secretary is trying to reach Ms. Sherrod to apologize for the exact injustice that you talk about.

Q Shirley Sherrod --

MR. GIBBS: Hold on, let me -- can I -- if you don't mind, let me finish a few of my answers. As I said, a disservice was done, for which we apologize. I think the next step that has to happen is the Secretary needs to speak with her. And he's tried to reach her and we hope that that --

Q Is he going to tell her something specific or --

MR. GIBBS: Again, Ed, I'm --

Q -- like offer her her job back or something?

MR. GIBBS: I know we've all got deadlines. We're going to let these conversations happen.

Q Okay. Now, Shirley Sherrod has told CNN several times that Cheryl Cook, the Deputy Under Secretary at Agriculture, called her three times on Monday when all this was starting to unfold, was pressuring her to resign, and specifically said that the "White House wants you to step down."

MR. GIBBS: Again, I think I'd point you to the interview that the Secretary did with --

Q The Secretary said that -- and told CNN yesterday he did not, himself, speak to anybody inside the White House, but there are thousands of people who work at the Agriculture Department.

MR. GIBBS: Right, and as I said to Ben earlier, I know of no conversations that have happened like that, as the Secretary said.

Q So no one at the White House urged her --

MR. GIBBS: Ed, I answered your question.

Jake.

Q Apparently she's watching this briefing, Shirley Sherrod, on CNN right now. Is there anything you want to say to her? (Laughter.)

Q We know where she is. (Laughter.)

Q I'm being quite serious. She's watching --

MR. GIBBS: No, no, I understand --

Q She's watching you.

MR. GIBBS: And let me -- the Secretary is trying to reach her. I hope that the Secretary reaches her soon and they have an opportunity to talk. The Secretary will apologize for the actions that have taken place over the past 24 to 36 hours, and on behalf of the administration, I offer our apologies.

Again, this is more directed at everybody writ large here. I think everybody has to go back -- we have, we will continue to -- and look at what has happened over the past 24 to 36 hours, and ask ourselves how we got into this. How did we get into -- how did we not ask the right questions? How did you all not ask the right questions? How did other people not ask the right questions -- and go from there.

Q Well, I asked the right questions. I actually called her before we reported on this to find out what her end of the story is, so you can fault the media if you want but --

MR. GIBBS: No, no, I'm not faulting the media, Jake, but I -- no, no, hold on. I'm not here to fault the media. I apologize on behalf of the administration. I will say a number of people called quite quickly after these comments aired and wanted to know what our response was. I don't know who else called. I don't know who made calls trying to seek a greater understanding. We made a mistake on that and I think many involved in this made mistakes on it.

Q I've heard conservatives and liberals say this administration overreacted because you're afraid of conservative commentators. Do you think there's any truth to that?

MR. GIBBS: No.

Q All right. Can I ask a follow-up on financial regulation?

MR. GIBBS: Yes.

Q One of the things about -- one of the uncertainties a lot of people in the business community are worried about has to do with the fact that there's so much rulemaking that has yet to occur. Hundreds of rules, dozens of studies. Is that not a possible reason because there's so many things that were left vague in this legislation -- is that not a possible reason --

MR. GIBBS: Well, no, no, let's not -- let's be clear. Rulemaking doesn't take place based on legislative vagueness. Rulemaking is -- happens in virtually every piece of legislation that is passed in order to implement legislative directives.

Q Okay, but the Vice President said that the business community right now should not have uncertainty because this legislation has passed. But the truth is they don't know --

MR. GIBBS: Again, I --

Q -- who's going to count as somebody whose derivatives need to be monitored. They don't know what the fees are going to be.

MR. GIBBS: I think the legislative intent is clear. I do not believe that -- I think this provides certainty for people on Wall Street; it provides certainty for people that work in the financial industry; and I think it provides certainty for those on Main Street that they're going to be protected.

Again, there were those -- I think many of the people that you discussed -- let's be clear -- spent tens of millions of dollars, hiring hundreds if not thousands of lobbyists to water down the legislation and stop it. That's the role that many of those people played that you just mentioned. I don't think that -- I think the motives of those I think are important to understand. And I do think this provides certainty for all.

Q Last question about Shirley Sherrod. Why do you think there was such an overreaction?

MR. GIBBS: I don't know. I think, again, I think in a frenzied culture where everything happens so quickly, where -- when everybody -- when one person has a story everybody has to have a story, and responses are given, mistakes in this case clearly were made.

Yes, sir.

Q Robert, during the campaign, particularly during the speech on race in Philadelphia, the President said he would use every opportunity to advance dialogue on race. Since taking office the President has had numerous opportunities or these teachable moments to advance the dialogue on race. Why hasn't he done more to advance the national discussion on race and race relations?

MR. GIBBS: Well, look, I think this is one of those teachable moments, and I think -- we contacted the Department of Agriculture last night in order to ensure that fairness was done in this and that a review that the Department of Agriculture is doing is undertaken. I think that is -- I think a teachable moment is a moment in which the facts change and you react to those different facts. I think this is one of those moments, and I think that's what's happened.

Q Will he call a national -- because the Congressional Black Caucus has asked for a national summit on race. Would the President --

MR. GIBBS: I have not heard a discussion about that.

Chip.

Q If it's a teachable moment, who's the teacher? Are we going to hear from the President on this, do you think?

MR. GIBBS: Let me just be clear. I don't think the teacher is -- I don't think -- I don't know who the teacher is in this, Chip. I don't think the teacher is, in and of himself, necessarily the President. I think -- again, I think everybody asks themselves questions about the events of the last 24 to 36 hours. I think based on those common-sense questions that you're asking -- that everybody asks themselves -- you find a moment that you can learn from.

Q Would you rule out the President speaking about this, using it as a teachable moment?

MR. GIBBS: No, I wouldn't rule it out, no.

Q Have you heard -- you mentioned that you did -- you were with the President when he talked about this, I think. Could you give us some specific words?

MR. GIBBS: Well, I talked to the President today about this. I was in the -- I talked to him about this yesterday --

Q Can you tell us specifically some things that he said about this?

MR. GIBBS: Again, I think he talked about the fact that a disservice had been done here and that an injustice had happened that -- and because the facts had changed, a review of the decision based on those facts should be undertaken.

Q On the question of why there was this overreaction, some have suggested that it was because this administration is particularly sensitive, some say hypersensitive, on issues of race. What do you think about that?

MR. GIBBS: I don't agree with that any more than I did the characterization about conservative columnists or whatever.

Q And forgive me if I missed this, but has the President talked to Vilsack about that?

MR. GIBBS: Not that I know of.

Q Is he planning to?

MR. GIBBS: I don't know. I can check.

Q And what happens to Vilsack? Is his job safe? Is it up in the air?

MR. GIBBS: Yes, I think -- again, I think Secretary Vilsack will acknowledge the mistakes that he made based on the information that he had when he made that decision. But I think he's doing terrific work at the Department of Agriculture.

Q Robert, follow up on Chip's question real fast?

Q Just very --

MR. GIBBS: Let me come back.

Q Did you -- since she is watching, did you want to directly address her? Since she's watching?

MR. GIBBS: Well, again, I would apologize on behalf on those involved here for what has happened.

Q Why -- have you gotten an explanation of why she wasn't simply put on administrative leave -- why she went from administrative leave to fired in less than 24 hours? Did you get a proper explanation for that?

MR. GIBBS: I have not asked that question, but I might direct you to USDA.

Q And does the President think this is a story about race or about the media?

MR. GIBBS: I think it is a -- I have not talked -- did not ask the President that question directly. Again, I think there -- I think all of that is involved in a larger story that combines rapid advances in technology, a whole host of things that are involved in culture and race and media and politics, that create an environment that we're living in today.

I'm reminded of when the President spoke at the memorial service for Walter Cronkite and mentioned -- and told the story that Cronkite would tell about not just getting something first but getting something right. I think that is true for all of us involved here.

Q Do you think the issue with this government settlement with Black Farmers had anything to do with Secretary Vilsack's overreaction here?

MR. GIBBS: Well, I will say this. As many of you know, the department is in the midst of paying out a settlement for decades-long discrimination. I think as you saw in the statements from Secretary Vilsack that, rightly, the department has a zero-tolerance policy for discrimination. And the reason it does so is because of -- if you look back at the history of some aspects of the way USDA benefits have been dispensed, they were done so in a way that people have acknowledged were discriminatory. So I don't know whether that played a direct role in this. I know that is something that Secretary Vilsack is mindful of in having a zero-tolerance policy.

Q Did you just misspeak? Because the money has not -- Congress has not approved --

MR. GIBBS: No, no, but there were -- there have been a series of different settlements. I'm not suggesting that -- obviously there's several billion dollars on this. Again, the settlement has been entered into based on a judgment of discrimination.

Q Quickly on financial reform, can you square this circle: If this ends "too big to fail," why is there resolution authority to deal with "too big to fail"?

MR. GIBBS: Because resolution authority -- no, no, resolution authority --

Q How do the two --

MR. GIBBS: Well, let's go back to our AIG example, right? You have what by all accounts was a well-performing insurance company that somebody had the bright idea of attaching a hedge fund to the top of, right? And when all that become so intertwined that when mortgage-backed securities fail miserably, you can't -- you don't have the authority -- hold on -- you don't have the authority to break those two apart. You either have to figure out how, if there's systemic risk involved, as what happened with

AIG, the decisions that were made at that point to ensure that that failure didn't happen to a larger -- but now what we have is the ability to break apart. In other words, if you can't fix it, then you're liquidated. And that is a vast --

Q But then you haven't ended "too big to fail" -- you've just figured out a way how to --

MR. GIBBS: No, no, no, no -- "too big to fail" --

Q -- because you're allowing these firms to get --

MR. GIBBS: No, no, "too big to fail" presumes that once you become so big that -- well, first of all, I would say there obviously are limits on the size and scope of certain aspects of financial instruments, derivatives being brought into the sunlight.

But understand this, Chuck, that what happened with AIG was the only steps that could be taken were to ensure that this meltdown didn't affect the broader economy, because -- because there's not the authority legally to break apart these instruments and say, let's sell this, let's keep this because it's a successful business over here, let's not have -- I mean, again, somebody had the bright idea of putting a horribly risky hedge fund on top of --

Q I understand that. But is this legislation designed to prevent AIG from doing that, or to unwind AIG if they do it?

MR. GIBBS: Both. Both -- it prevents certain activities from happening. It takes certain activities into the light of day. But it also allows that if something like that gets into trouble, if a series of risky investments are made and ultimately they can't cover the damage that they're about to do, you break it apart and you get rid of it.

Q I don't mean -- so to follow your logic, so you're admitting that maybe everything you're trying to do to prevent these firms from getting bigger won't work and they could end up getting risky --

MR. GIBBS: No, no, no, no, I'm not saying that that's -- I'm saying that there now is the -- understand this, Chuck. Before this signature, there's no legal authority to resolve by breaking apart. There's no legal authority that takes part of this business and sells its assets to cover the losses of something else. Legally, it's not -- the mechanism doesn't exist. Now, legally the mechanism does exist.

Jonathan.

Q At yesterday's -- yesterday morning's staff communications meeting, what did Deputy Chief of Staff Jim Messina say about the handling thus far of the Shirley Sherrod incident?

MR. GIBBS: I don't know which meeting you're talking about. I've seen the reports of what somebody believed Jim said. I did not hear Jim say that and I think other people in that article say that Jim didn't say that either.

Q So what do you say happened at that meeting? Was there -- did this come up at the staff meeting yesterday?

MR. GIBBS: You mean talking about the events at USDA? Yes.

Q Okay. Now, you said that there is no truth to the idea that right-wing media spooks this administration. Yosi Sergant, Van Jones, now Shirley Sherrod have all come under attack from Glenn Beck, Bill O'Reilly, Andrew Breitbart -- none of them are at this moment members of this administration. How do you explain those three departures? Do they really have nothing to do with the campaign that had been waged against them?

MR. GIBBS: I was asked a larger question about this, and I -- my answer doesn't change. Why do you do stories on all three of them?

Q Well, they will be included in the stories tomorrow, I'm sure.

MR. GIBBS: Why?

Q You do not -- you do not see any connection between --

MR. GIBBS: You answer my question --

Q -- and between Shirley Sherrod's assertion -- she was told that Glenn Beck was going to have her on the TV that night.

MR. GIBBS: Again, you want to answer my question about why you'd do those stories, too?

Q I'm not sure what that question is. Why would I do that --

MR. GIBBS: We'll check on that and get back to you.

Q Robert, has the press office or anyone here at the White House put the freeze on the Agriculture Department in terms of taking questions from reporters? It's been our experience in the past 24 hours or so that they are not being responsive.

MR. GIBBS: None that I'm aware of, no. That certainly wouldn't be a directive that came from here, no.

Q Ms. Sherrod obviously did not enjoy, if you will, due process, to say the least, through this whole thing. How do you think this whole episode is going to affect the way future sensitive personnel decisions are going to be handled by this administration --

MR. GIBBS: I hope in just the way I discussed earlier. I hope that everybody involved takes the time to learn what happened; that we make decisions based on a full set of facts, not on a partial set of facts.

Q On financial re-reg, what's the White House going to do to fend off lobbying, to soften or change the impact of the regulations?

MR. GIBBS: Look, obviously there will be an extensive rulemaking procedure in order to fulfill the legislative intent, and I think that -- again, I think we're clear at what provisions mean and what they're trying to prevent and how and what activities should and should not be allowed. Obviously the implementation of this, the additional offices and bureaus that the legislation calls for would be important appointments for the President to consider.

Major.

Q Following up on Ed's question, Ms. Sherrod seems very convinced that the White House did play some role in this and is willing to say so publicly. That is her conviction, that she is under the impression based on repeated conversations --

MR. GIBBS: Again, I would direct you to the --

Q Wait. Are you saying that she has a misimpression, that she's somehow got information incorrectly --

MR. GIBBS: Major, I would direct you to what the Secretary said yesterday and the answer that I gave Ben.

Q Right, but the Secretary talked about what he did. And she's asserting that others indicated to her --

MR. GIBBS: I think you're parsing the way that --

Q No, I'm just trying to separate what is publicly available. The Secretary said he didn't, which I'm not challenging. But others at the Agriculture Department might have. And she's under the impression and is saying publicly she believes the White House did play a role in this.

MR. GIBBS: And as I said to Ben, and as I said to Ed, that's not anything based on my knowledge.

Q So you're absolutely convinced that that did not happen?

MR. GIBBS: Major, I can only answer your question three times.

Q You're actually only answering it once.

MR. GIBBS: Well, I gave you the same answer three times.

Q Fine. Is there going to be any effort put forward by the administration to let us talk to Cheryl Cook about what she did or did not say to Ms. Sherrod?

MR. GIBBS: I don't -- I'd direct you to USDA about speaking to her.

Q It's okay for her to talk to us about this?

MR. GIBBS: Again, I'd direct you to -- you ask the same question, I give you the same answer.

Q Okay. On -- no, I've got a couple others. Ben Bernanke today said that he believes the economy -- the economic outlook remains unusually uncertain. Would you agree, generally speaking, with --

MR. GIBBS: I'm not going to get into parsing or interpreting what the Fed chairman says. I think it is safe to say that we have -- if you look, Major, at where we were and where we are, we are -- we have improved our circumstances, improved our conditions, but I don't think there's any doubt that it's not improved for enough people. And that's what the President and the team will continue to work on.

Q Is there a component of uncertainty that this administration also sees out there that the Fed chairman sees?

MR. GIBBS: Again, I think, Major, that we are in, as we have been, quite frankly, since well before December of 2007, we have a fragile economy.

Q Just one more economic question. Rahm told The Washington Post and it was published on Sunday that the administration was looking forward to and had every reason to anticipate a strong -- a somewhat strong second quarter, but G forces that he described as the Greek debt situation, Germany's call for budget cuts throughout Europe, the Gulf oil spill, and the Gaza flotilla situation created an atmosphere of uncertainty that led consumers to not spend as much, led investors not to invest as much, CEOs not to act as economically -- as aggressively as they might. Does the President believe that? Is that a theory that the economic team --

MR. GIBBS: Look, I've said before I think -- I won't get into every one of your Gs, but --

Q They're not mine. I'm just quoting what he said.

MR. GIBBS: Look, to understand where we were economically in April, what happened in Europe with Greece, and not to assume that that has had an impact on our economy -- I've said that on a number of occasions, of course.

Q And all the others?

MR. GIBBS: Look, obviously there is -- I'd lead the Greek G.

Q If we can get back to Secretary Vilsack's role in all of this. My understanding from the timeline that you just suggested here and that other White House officials have said was that the White House was informed but not consulted about his decision to fire her.

MR. GIBBS: I think the Secretary has said that, too.

Q But that it took pressure from the White House last night for him to agree to reconsider that decision.

MR. GIBBS: I will say, as I think we have said to a number of you today, we, the White House contacted the Department of Agriculture and a review was agreed upon.

Q Who made that call?

MR. GIBBS: I'm not going to get into who talked directly to them.

Q But what does this -- does this not do anything to alter the President's judgment of Secretary Vilsack's ability to run this department and his judgment and his -- especially given this department's history on these kinds of issues?

MR. GIBBS: Look, I think the Secretary rightly has a zero-tolerance policy for discrimination. I think that the Secretary made a decision based on the information that he had, and is in the process of trying to reach Ms. Sherrod to apologize for having made that decision on that incomplete information.

Q And nobody asked for the tape of the full speech or anything like that?

MR. GIBBS: Again, we are -- based on the fuller information that we have, these decisions are being reconsidered.

Q Lots of us have reached her. Why can't he reach her? It's got to be that she's not taking his call.

MR. GIBBS: Maybe he's talking to you. I don't know.

Q Robert, can you just walk us through a little bit President Obama's role in this? When was he told?

MR. GIBBS: Well, as I said earlier, he was told about this I believe sometime like -- I forget the time -- probably likely late morning yesterday.

Q And what was his initial reaction to what he had heard and how was --

MR. GIBBS: Well, again, based on what -- again, I don't have the exact time with me. But, again, I think as we had said yesterday, that based on incomplete information and based on the decision that was made on incomplete information, the White House was supportive of that decision. Obviously, new information came to light, and that's why the review is being undertaken.

Q I understand that. But who was it that first told Mr. Obama about this? How did he first learn of it?

MR. GIBBS: A group of staff -- again, I don't remember what time.

Q Do you remember when he found out about the additional information that she actually -- that her quotes were taken out of --

MR. GIBBS: At some point yesterday, but I don't know the exact time.

Q And you weren't involved in -- you don't know --

MR. GIBBS: I was involved in the first discussion with him. I don't know who -- I don't know how he was briefed last -- yesterday afternoon and early evening.

Q And I understand, in response to some of the questions about why you think this has gone so viral so quickly, you say a lot of this is because of the frenzy, people react really quickly without getting the facts. But why do you -- I mean, a lot of this -- part of the reason why people reacted so quickly I think at the end of the day is because this is about race. Why do you think this issue of race remains so inflammatory? And what does the President say about how to handle it? I mean, does he express frustration when this sort of thing happens? How has he been --

MR. GIBBS: You know this, I know this, I think everybody knows this. This was -- race has been a topic of discussion for a long, long time in this country. We -- a war was fought about it. A movement to gain equal and civil rights was had to rectify injustice. And it continues to be something that we will discuss for quite sometime. Again, I think this is -- this just continues many of those discussions.

Mark.

Q Three real quick ones on three other subjects. Jobless benefits. Are you ready -- what are you hearing about the timing of it? And are you ready to sign --

MR. GIBBS: Well, I'll say this. I think many of you saw the statement that we released. Despite the fact that the procedural hurdles that we shouldn't have had to go through, we went through and were passed, Republicans have insisted on the full 30 hours of that debate. The partisan minority continues its stalling effort for the unemployment insurance that 2.5 million Americans so desperately need -- that have -- those are the people that have been cut off from.

As soon as the Senate takes this up, the House will have to take this up. And as soon as that happens, that bill will come here and the President will sign it as quickly as he can.

Q Public ceremony?

MR. GIBBS: I think part of that depends on the -- Mark, our desire is to get this signed into law.

Q Okay. Consumer protection agency, are you able to move on that quickly?

MR. GIBBS: Well, obviously, the President, as I said earlier, will make some appointments based on the law that was signed. I do not expect an imminent announcement on that. I would say --

Q Next week?

MR. GIBBS: Not that I'm aware of, no. I think we've got highly qualified candidates. Again, there's a number of positions that the President will be looking at. And obviously the consumer office is -- the consumer bureau is one of tremendous importance.

Q And does Elizabeth Warren's shall we say close questioning of Secretary Geithner move her out for that?

MR. GIBBS: Absolutely not. She is -- look, I think in many ways, Elizabeth Warren is -- this is what Elizabeth Warren thought should be put in place to ensure that consumers were on equal footing with big banks. I think she would be a terrific nominee. I have seen comments by those that questioned whether she could be confirmed, and I don't agree with those at all.

Q Sorry, Robert, this all sounds a little absurd. Ms. Sherrod has not exactly been hiding. And Vilsack's office was able to reach her three times yesterday on her cell phone. She says she has the same cell phone with her. When did he start trying to reach her?

MR. GIBBS: Sometime today.

Q But it must have been fairly recently because apparently her phone still has not rung, same phone she --

MR. GIBBS: Again, Ann, if you've got a number, I'd be happy to deliver it to the Secretary to make sure that he's calling the right one.

Q She says since you --

MR. GIBBS: Well, don't do that out here --

Q Since you've made your statement here and she heard you, she says that she was most struck by how this would play for her grandkids that the first black rural director in Georgia was fired by the first black President. Does that have some resonance?

MR. GIBBS: Well, I would -- decisions on personnel at USDA were made by USDA. Those decisions were made based on an incomplete set of facts and they're being reviewed based on a more complete set of facts.

I will say this. This situation is -- regardless of who is involved and regardless of their race, the decisions were wrong.

Q Robert, today the President signed yet another big, consequential piece of legislation and this one is very popular with the public. I'm wondering -- all of these accomplishments, legislative successes don't seem to be changing the public's opinion on the President's job performance. And even though I know he says he doesn't do them because --

MR. GIBBS: Mara, he signed it about three hours ago.

Q I know, I know, but this has been around for a while.

MR. GIBBS: I don't know what instant polling has been done in the interim, but --

Q Well, okay, but it's not -- the fact that we're getting financial reform isn't brand new. And he says he doesn't do these things because they're popular, but because they're right. But I'm wondering what you think it's going to take before all of these accomplishments begin to have --

MR. GIBBS: We still need 8.5 million jobs to come back.

Q And that's it, pure and simple?

MR. GIBBS: I think people have, rightly so, a continued frustration about the economic situation in this country. I think the rules that we had in place that led to the financial collapse two years ago contributed mightily to the 8.5 million jobs that were lost. That is not something that was going to be easy to replace. If you look at the last six months of 2008 and the last six months that we've had in 2010, you find a difference of losing 3 million jobs and gaining more than half a million jobs, so we're moving in the right direction, but we've got a big hole to fill.

And I think -- look, the President is frustrated. I think -- what was the story that he said -- if your neighbor had lost their house, if your other neighbor had lost their life savings to send their kid to college, and if you'd lost your job, and a pollster called you and said, how do you feel about the country, I don't -- or how do you feel about the President, I don't think that it's a wild-eyed stretch to believe that you would think things still need to get better in this country.

Q What's happening tomorrow?

MR. GIBBS: We are signing I believe the bill on improper payments that was passed recently -- and we'll have more information on that.

Q Improper --

MR. GIBBS: Improper payments by government.

Q China has expressed concern that the U.S.-South Korean naval exercises announced yesterday will further destabilize the region. Do you accept -- does the White House accept those concerns? And what is the political message that you're trying to send to China?

MR. GIBBS: Wait a second -- are you guys changing the oil down there? (Laughter.) We need a smaller filter for the four cylinder --

Q Part of Chuck's contract. (Laughter.)

MR. GIBBS: I was going to say -- the makeup person is next, I presume.

Q Here we go.

MR. GIBBS: Sorry, Stephen.

Q One TV guy cannot go after another TV guy. (Laughter.)

MR. GIBBS: All right. Go ahead. I don't know what's going on down here, Stephen, but -- a whole different set of naval exercises. (Laughter.)

Q China has said that it's concerned that the U.S.-South Korean naval exercises will destabilize the region even further. Does the White House accept those concerns? And what political message are you trying to send to North Korea?

MR. GIBBS: Well, look, I think it's important to understand that these are exercises that are defensive in nature, and defense sends a clear signal of deterrence to the aggression of North Korea and in support of the defense of South Korea. I think you've heard the condemnation of those in the administration and in the international community for the events undertaken by North Korea, and certainly we are strongly supportive of exercises that demonstrate South Korea defending itself.

Q Robert, can I follow on that?

Q Let me ask quickly -- I'm sorry. I don't think this has been asked. Is the President trying or does the President want to reach Shirley Sherrod himself?

MR. GIBBS: I do not believe the President has tried, but I will check.

Q Do you expect him to?

MR. GIBBS: I will check.

Q Robert, a few questions on Shirley Sherrod and on the Black Farmers. One, who here at the White House viewed the entire videotape?

MR. GIBBS: I think a number of us have now.

Q Okay. Was the President one of those?

MR. GIBBS: I don't know if the President has seen the entire tape.

Q Okay. But he's seen portions of it, is that what you're saying?

MR. GIBBS: Yes.

Q Okay. Now, early on, you said -- you talked about the frenzy and the immediacy of the news cycle. This is not the first time this administration has gotten caught up in the immediacy of the news cycle when it comes to issues of race. The first time we saw the press conference when President Obama talked about his friend Henry Louis Gates and the police sergeant in Massachusetts. What say you on matters of race? I mean, some have accused this administration of not being able to embrace race with the historic nature of this presidency. But yet again you say you're embracing it but you're very -- you react without getting all the facts on these two incidents of race.

MR. GIBBS: Well, again, look, April, I'm not up here to make excuses for -- actually, quite the contrary -- on what has happened in this case. I think many involved at all levels believe, rightly, that not all information was gotten. I think rectifying that is tremendously important for everyone.

Q Do you feel serious domestic items are being hijacked because of issues of race and the racial drama that's been playing out?

MR. GIBBS: I don't, no.

Q All right. And going back to something that Kevin had asked earlier about the CBC, they're asking for a national dialogue. This is from the CBC and a quote from them: "We also believe that a national dialogue on race must be held. The basis for Ms. Sherrod's resignation is another example of why we must not sweep race under the rug. Rather, we must come together as a nation and recognize that we do not live in a post-racial era, and that, while difficult, we must confront these issues head on with clarity and without fear." Bill Clinton held a conversation on race. Does this administration feel they need to hold one?

MR. GIBBS: Again, I will go back and check. As I said to Kevin, I have not heard discussions about that in here today.

Q And Black Farmers -- you brought it up with Chuck.

MR. GIBBS: I don't know where the legislation -- I will check on, and you should check with members on Capitol Hill that might have, quite honestly, better intelligence about the level at which -- what's in different drafts of supplemental appropriations that need to go through.

Q John Boyd says the President doesn't want it in the war bill. He says that the administration is saying no way, and the President in particular doesn't want it there.

MR. GIBBS: That's not the impression that's been left with me, but I don't know -- I do not know the latest on what's in what bill.

Glenn.

Q Robert, on the Shirley Sherrod matter, administration officials have repeatedly said that they were informed but not consulted on her forced --

MR. GIBBS: I think I agreed with that statement earlier.

Q But what does that mean? What's the difference between those two things?

MR. GIBBS: Well, I mean, I think --

Q I don't understand.

MR. GIBBS: You don't understand that?

Q The difference between being informed and consulted.

MR. GIBBS: Again, I think the decisions that were made on hiring are made, as I said earlier, at the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and it's a department run by the Secretary of Agriculture, and they informed the White House of the decisions that had been made.

Q At the White House, which official was informed initially that that decision --

MR. GIBBS: I think there was interaction between a number of people.

Q Could someone have -- from the White House have said, presumably after being informed, that this is not acceptable?

MR. GIBBS: That --

Q This was not an acceptable decision? I mean, was there someone in the White House who could have red-lighted this at that moment in time?

MR. GIBBS: Well, again, this was a decision that the Secretary made based off of incomplete information.

Q We know about the Secretary. He's spoken publicly on this.

MR. GIBBS: Again, I guess it's hard to go back in terms of that hypothetical.

Q But it's not a hypothetical. Someone in the White House was informed about this and decided not to say it was unacceptable. Who was that individual?

MR. GIBBS: Again, this was based on -- look, I'm not here to make excuses for the decisions that were made. They were wrong.

Q The notion of responsibility implies that an individual was --

MR. GIBBS: Look, I've certainly -- for the actions of our administration, I've --

Q How about accountability?

Q But who was it?

Q Is someone going to be held accountable?

MR. GIBBS: But let me finish.

Q I understand.

Q But it goes to his question.

MR. GIBBS: Weirdly, he didn't ask it.

Q Well, it's a better one.

MR. GIBBS: Yes, there you go. You guys get together in a group and we'll play Jeopardy.

Look, I have, throughout this -- throughout today, right here, taken responsibility for our actions.

Q So was it you? (Laughter.)

MR. GIBBS: No, I'm the lucky guy that gets to go talk to you.

Q But can't -- I'm sorry -- can't we just put a final point on it? I mean, we're -- you talked quite significantly about sort of this frenzy of overreaction and the way that folks are responding --

MR. GIBBS: Well, I understand --

Q -- but who individually is responsible for this in the White House, as opposed to --

MR. GIBBS: Look, I think there are a number of people that are responsible. I think there are a number of people responsible at the USDA. I think there are a number of people that have been involved in this situation at many different levels and in many different venues, that will, as a result of this, take a look at the actions and decisions that were made.

Q Can you at least tell us who in the White House reversed course and called the Agriculture Department and said, we need to review this? Can you at least tell us that information?

MR. GIBBS: The White House. The White House.

Q Different subject. The President was scheduled to meet -- or have lunch with House members today.

MR. GIBBS: Yes.

Q Who were they and what was the topic?

MR. GIBBS: I do not have the list of members here, but I will get that. I don't think there was a set topic. I think much like the senators that came over here recently, there were I assume a number of topics. I will try to get a clear readout and the folks who came.

Bill.

Q Robert, in terms -- back to Shirley Sherrod -- in terms of a teachable moment, Van Jones and Shirley Sherrod aren't exact parallels, but is one of the lessons to be learned here that the administration should not be so quick to throw its own people under the bus?

MR. GIBBS: Well, Bill, I don't know that I would -- I'm going to separate out and not get into something that happened last year. I think that, again, decisions were made based on what we knew at that time.

Q But both the cases --

MR. GIBBS: Hold on, let me finish.

Q Yes, sorry.

MR. GIBBS: The Secretary of Agriculture made that decision. I think everyone goes back and thinks, what could you have done differently, what would you have done differently? And we'll all have an opportunity to do that. I think that is an important role. I think that's what makes it teachable. I think that's what you learn from.

Q So, Robert, is the lesson don't trust the Internet, or what?

MR. GIBBS: Well, I think you have to -- I think when somebody puts two-and-a-half minutes of video up and people play two-and-a-half minutes of video off of a 43-minute speech, it's probably important for both the news organization transmitting the two-and-a-half minutes and what they purport that it means, and for those involved making decisions about somebody's career and their life, to do the same thing. I think that's true as I started out this briefing by saying, those on the political playing field that are going to commentate -- and I don't mean necessarily pundits, interest groups on this side or that -- to do the same thing. I think that's clearly what the NAACP has done over the course of the past 24 hours.

I think this is something where -- again, I think what makes this teachable, what makes this something you learn from, is us taking a step back and looking at the decisions that were made based on that incomplete information, what questions you should have asked, when you should have asked them, both -- as Glenn asked -- both here and at the Department of Agriculture.

Again, I had a lot of people asking for a response to the two-and-a-half minutes. Nobody birthed on Monday that the two-and-a-half minutes was really 43. My guess is you heard from a lot of your editors saying, go get reaction to this story. And I think that groups get involved in this.

Yes.

Q This whole issue of, like, advances in technology, 24-hour news cycle, the question right now -- are you saying, in effect, that advances in technology allow for things to be taken out of context, as opposed to real journalistic standards where you're supposed to put things in context without advancing any particular agenda, whether it's liberal --

MR. GIBBS: Well, I don't doubt that even in some context some people might decide -- look, we've always had opinion writers in this country. But I think that sort of in some ways oversimplifies this. The context here wasn't somehow that the two-and-a-half minutes was not contextualized properly. It wasn't a complete recitation of what she had said.

Now, again, that is put up on the Internet. That is transmitted. You all see it. You all want reaction. We get reaction. You transmit both the two-and-a-half minutes -- not the 43 -- the reaction that's based off the two-and-a-half minutes, not the 43, and decisions are made on personnel based on that. I don't think there's anybody involved in that chain that wouldn't think that from start to finish this couldn't have been handled and shouldn't have been handled differently.

Q To follow up on an unrelated subject -- on jobs. Last week, at the jobs summit, Chamber of Commerce CEO said, if you really want to create jobs, increase economic growth, you temporarily extend the 2001 and 2003 tax cuts -- temporarily -- versus the President is only calling for an extension of your middle-class tax cuts. Is there some possible medium, just a temporary extension?

MR. GIBBS: Well, look, obviously this is an issue that is going to come to the fore based on, as you said, the expiration of the 10-year 2001 tax cuts. The President's priority is on, as you heard in the campaign, those that affect the middle class. We had -- we instituted those tax cuts at a time -- I was asked -- I think I was asked yesterday -- I think it was yesterday or Monday -- about unemployment benefits. Well, the economic situations have changed. You can't -- how can you continue to -- how can you pass an extension of unemployment insurance based on the fact that the budgetary situation has changed?

I think we're going to have to ask ourselves whether, given our budgetary situation, tax cuts for those, as the President has said on numerous occasions, that people didn't need and people weren't asking for are something that, given where we are, can be afforded budgetarily.

Thanks, guys.

Q When will you let us know when the President calls her?

MR. GIBBS: I will update you as soon as it happens.

Justin,

Secretary Vilsack said Ms. Sherrod was a plaintiff in a discrimination case against USDA. Do you know which case?

Statement by Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack Regarding Shirley Sherrod

WASHINGTON, July 21, 2010 - Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack today released the following statement in response to his conversation with Shirley Sherrod:

"Today, I reached out to Shirley Sherrod to apologize. I also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends.

"I reacted too quickly. I should have taken the time to listen and learn.

"While I cannot change what happened, I can try to make something out of this difficult incident.

"As we know, Shirley has a unique and compelling story to tell. She and her family endured discrimination and overcame adversity. Fighting to advance justice and equality, she has helped farmers who were struggling to keep their land, fought for women in need of social and economic justice, and African-American men and women who faced discrimination. As USDA's Georgia State Rural Development Director, she worked to promote economic opportunity for all people by enabling job creation and business growth. And Shirley has shown tremendous character through the events of the last few days.

"Shirley and I talked about a unique opportunity at USDA. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA. I hope she considers staying with the department.

"I did not handle this situation well. I will continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day and I am committed to making sure it does not happen again.

"As part of this effort, I also want to renew my firm commitment to put behind all of us the USDA's past record on civil rights. While we have made some progress over the last 18 months, more work is needed."

can't forget but she can forgive the hatred shown to her parents, to her father. the murder of her father, the cross on the lawn, those kind of things for a woman to grow out of that and reach the point she has i think is a remarkable story and it does reflect again the best strands of america at a time we're looking at the dark side of politics here she comes along and shows us what's still good about america and what we can still look up to.

david gergen, the man who's a bit of a sage around here and has a wonderful way of expressing things sometimes, i simply didn't want to get in your way. the break will though because we've got to get a commercial in real quick. stay with us. when we come back, you see the picture there. in fact, if you could, let's take that full so you can see. i think we finally got it now. there it is. that's the podium. that's where secretary vilsack is going to come back in just a moment and give the comment that so many americans have been waiting to hear and certainly shirley sherrod has been waiting to hear although we understand he just called her a little while ago. brooke baldwin is going to stick around and be with me when we come back. hopefully we'll go right to that news conference. you're watching a special edition of ""rick's list."" this is ""race in america, shirley's story."" does this look risky to you? tdd# 1-800-345-2550 nancy? fred? no. well it is. in a high-risk area, there's a 1-in-4 chance homes like us will flood. i'm glad i got flood insurance. fred, you should look into it. i'm a risk-taker. [female announcer] only flood insurance covers floods. visit floodsmart.gov/risk to learn your risk.

here now secretary of agriculture tom vilsack. let's go live.

in the conversation i started off by extending to her my personal and profound apologies for the pain and discomfort that has been caused to her and to her family over the course of the last several days. i wanted to give her the opportunity to express what i'm sure has been an extraordinary range of emotions she must have had and still probably does have but she was extraordinarily gracious. i wanted to make sure that she understood that i regretted the circumstances and that i accepted full responsibility for them. we talked briefly about the process and then i asked if she would be interested in figuring out a way forward that would take advantage of the extraordinary life experiences that she's had. she has been a claimant in a case against the united states department of agriculture and has experienced some of the prejudice and bias that we still today are dealing with in terms of claims against the department. she's had a broad range of experiences at usda and understands many of the programs in usda. she has an extraordinary history of helping individuals in trouble and of course she has gone through a very difficult period in the last couple of days. as a result of that experience, she has a unique set of skills which i think would lend themselves to assisting and helping usda as we deal with trying to turn the page on our civil rights chapter which has been difficult. for the last 18 months we've spent a good deal of time and effort in an effort to try to resolve thousands of claims that have been filed against the usda. continuing that work. and we had an opportunity to discuss a unique opportunity here at usda that might be of interest to her. she asked for the opportunity to think about it, which i certainly respected. again, i expressed my deep regret and apology to her and to her family and advised her that i would be meeting with the press to publicly apologize to her and to express publicly my regret. so with that -- secretary vilsack, you say that you accept full responsibility. you clearly seemed to have jumped to conclusions, this agency did, early on. why did you jump to conclusions? was there pressure from the white house to make a quick conclusion here?

no. there was no pressure from the white house.

was there any communication between this agency, anyone in this agency and the white house consulting on this?

no. i want to make sure everyone understands. this was my decision and it was a decision that i regret having made in haste. you ask why. for the last 18 months we have really focused on trying to address the long standing history of civil rights claims against the department. they're outstanding claims brought by black farmers, hispanic farmers, women farmers, native american farmers. these are not just a few incidents or a few isolated claims. these are tens of thousands of claims that have been brought against the department. i made it as a goal when i took this office that we would try to reverse that history. we would try to close that chapter. that we would be a department that would not tolerate in any way, shape, or form discrimination. i still hold that belief very firmly. and i know shirley does as well. i've learned a lot of lessons from this experience in the last couple of days and one of the lessons i learned is that these types of decisions require time. i didn't take the time. i should have. and as a result, a good woman has gone through a very difficult period. and i'll have to live with that for a long, long time.

mr. secretary, from the cbs evening news. when you made the decision to dismiss ms. sherrod, had you seen her full remarks in their full context or had you only seen the clip that was posted on the web?

i saw a transcript because i was out of the office. i was in ohio. i saw a transcript.

was that of the whole speech?

no, it was just of a portion of it.

ms. sherrod has told -- from cnn -- ms. sherrod has told cnn that cheryl cook called her and asked her to resign and she said the white house had made this decision to put the pressure on her. are we going to be able to hear from mrs. cook? is that true?

you know, i think that first of all i indicated to shirley my personal regret and my responsibility for the fact that she received multiple phone calls. that's again a problem that i could have corrected if i had done this job properly. having said that, there was no pressure from the white house here. this was my decision. i obviously was not party to those conversations. it may very well be that during the course of the conversation ms. cook indicated that a white house liaison had been contacted but i don't know that she necessarily indicated that there was any pressure because that was not the case. this was something i decided and i have to accept full responsibility for this.

what does that mean, a white house liaison?

we have a number of people in the white house that we communicate with from time to time when there are issues just to keep them informed. and i -- this was my decision. i mean, you know, i appreciate the concerns that folks are expressing, but this was my decision. and i made it in haste.

secretary, evan mcmarsh, talking points memo. what do you say to other employees of the agriculture department, worried that something might come up about them on the internet and they may be facing the same kind of problems ms. sherrod faced?

this is a teachable moment for me and i hope a teachable moment for all of us. i think it is important to understand that each of us represents this department. each of us represents the administration and the president. and we've got to be very careful about our actions and our words and we have to make sure that we think before we act. i did not think before i acted. and for that reason this poor woman has gone through a very difficult time.

will there be a vetting process put in place before you make a decision like this or how you might examine information?

sure. we went through a process today of reviewing precisely as best we could what took place and there will be changes. one thing is there needs to be a more deliberative process obviously and i need to do a better job of reaching out for input before a decision of this magnitude is made. that is a very serious lesson i learned. i was very sensitive and remain sensitive to the civil rights issues involving this department. again, when you're dealing with tens of thousands of claims, tens of thousands of claims, it is something that needs to be resolved that hasn't been resolved and must be resolved and so we have done two things. we've made a concerted effort to try to resolve these cases and we've also begun a process of looking at our entire operation from an outside consultant to take a look and see whether or not there are any other things that we're doing or shouldn't be doing that would potentially lead to claims in the future because we want to put a stop to this. this is a great agency. a lot of hard working people who care deeply. shirley is one of them. and they're proud of this agency. and this is part of our history. we need to close the chapter on. and that was foremost in my mind when i made a very hasty decision which i deeply regret.

mr. secretary, from ""the washington post"" --

that was my question. can you elaborate a little more? had you met ms. sherrod previous to today's conversation? if she is so qualified, so uniquely qualified, why was she not given a more senior position previously when you were hiring new officials with the new administration?

ed, first of all, i may very well have visited with her or met her in the context of the larger group meeting of rural development directors.

you don't recall specifically meeting her previously?

no. and i don't know for certain whether or not the rural development job was one she specifically sought. i know she was recommended for that job. but given her life experiences, as we begin the process of more aggressively doing advocacy and outreach, this is a person who this is a person who because of these experiences, having been discriminated against and being a claimant, having gone through that process, having gone through the process that she described in great detail in her speech, having gone through the last couple of days, she is uniquely positioned to be able to identify with a number of different people who might intersect with this agency in an effort to try to make sure that we don't continue to make the same mistakes we've made in the past.

would she be a senior adviser or under secretary?

i don't really want to go into detail. i'm happy to do this after she has had an opportunity to think about this. i want to honor my commitment to her in our conversation today to give her a chance to think about this. i just simply want everyone to know that i value that experience and i think there is a way in which, despite the difficulties that i have put her through, there is an opportunity here for us, for me personally to learn, obviously, but for the department to be strengthened and at the end of the day i think that's what the people of this country would want. they want to do right by this woman but they also want to make sure this doesn't happen again, which is the learning process, and if there is a way of strengthening the department, then that's my responsibility to explore. and i'm hopeful that she sees it that way.

secretary vilsack, kate bolduan with cnn. have you spoken to president obama about this?

no.

secretary vilsack, from bloomberg news, is this a position that had been looked at previous to this incident or would this be a new position created in part as a result of the incident?

it's a position that needs to be filled.

secretary --

wait a minute. phil did you want to ask a question?

just to be clear when you saw the transcript i assume the staff provided you a transcript of the initial video clip. were you aware it was a partial transcript? did they make you aware of it? did you ask to see more of it?

i had not been aware of it and i talked with shirley about the fact that she had e-mailed the office the thursday prior to this video becoming an issue. i did not receive the e-mail because it was not addressed properly to me. in other words the e-mail address was -- there was a problem with the e-mail address so it never came to my attention. she had received some indication of this clip being available and she in an effort to try to respond sent an e-mail to me which i did not get. it was not addressed properly. it was also sent to the deputy secretary's attention. we did not discover it until after the fact. and that's one of the issues that we're going to address in terms of this review.

mr. secretary you're taking very deeply personal responsibility.

yes.

for this today.

yes.

does that absolve -- i mean barack obama, president obama is your boss. are you absolving the white house of any responsibility here in this situation?

you know, it's not my place to absolve anybody from anything other than to accept responsibility for what i did. and i am accepting that responsibility with deep regret. this is a good woman. she has been put through hell. and i could have done and should have done a better job. i want to learn from that experience. i want the agency and department to learn from that experience. and i want us to be stronger for it. i want to renew the commitment of this department to a new era in civil rights. i want to close the chapter on a very difficult period in civil rights. so i accept responsibility. and i don't think -- the buck stops with me, as it should.

i requested her resignation about the same time sort of things crossed in time. i'm not certain in what period of time the white house was contacted but as these calls were being made, the white house through the liaison's office was aware. but the decision to do what was done was done by me. it was my decision and was communicated and one of the lessons learned here is that this type of decision first and foremost should have been communicated by me. it should have been done in a much more personal way. it should have been done with far more thought and it should have been done in far less haste. and all of those are my responsibility. and i accept that responsibility. and i ask for shirley's forgiveness and she was gracious enough to extend it to me and for that i am thankful.

all right. so there he is the secretary of agriculture tom vilsack, apologizing publicly and very enthusiastically to shirley sherrod for what has been done to this woman, this former official who was forced to resign from the department of agriculture but now she's been offered a brand new job at the department of agriculture and you heard tom vilsack say she is thinking about whether to accept this new position. we want to welcome our viewers here in the united states and around the world. i'm wolf blitzer. we're in ""the situation room"" and we're going to digest what we've now heard from the secretary of agriculture because it's been a dramatic several hours. first the white house went ahead and apologized to this former agriculture official and now the secretary of agriculture upon talking to her on the phone a little while ago formally apologized as well. let's bring in our senior white house correspondent ed henry. this is dramatic stuff. you don't see it every day. but he's basically saying and he regretted the circumstances, i accept responsibility for the pain and discomfort done to this woman and he is exonerating in effect the white house where you are.

reporter: he is trying to, wolf. you're right. he was very blunt in saying this woman, shirley sherrod, has been put through hell. the agriculture secretary also is saying that the buck stops with him. but it doesn't completely absolve the white house. very interesting that this comes, this statement a short time after robert gibbs was at the podium in the white house briefing room really being very vague about the details about exactly what the white house knew and when they knew it. when we pressed him on a whole series of issues in terms of when all of this started playing out on monday afternoon and evening, which white house officials spoke to the agriculture department, he wouldn't name any names.

Gibbs: are we missing anybody back there that's going to -- do you know if anybody else is back there waiting?

can you tell us what the white house he's position is right now on shirley sherrod? should she get her job back?

well, let me -- secretary vilsack has tried and is trying to reach ms. sherrod. when the secretary reaches her, he will apologize for the events of the last few days and they will talk about their next steps. i think it is -- i think clearly that a lot of people involved in this situation from the government's perspective on through acted without all the facts. now, as you saw secretary vilsack's statement from last evening, now that we have greater knowledge and broader facts sent, he is going to review all of those facts and that's what he'll talk to ms. sherrod about today.

does the secretary plan to offer her her job back?

again, i think that's something that the secretary and ms. sherrod are going to talk through those next steps.

what was the president's involvement in this? can you walk us through that?

i believe the president was briefed on this sometime yesterday, most likely in the morning. this was, as you heard secretary vilsack say yesterday, a decision that was made by the u.s. department of agriculture. the president was briefed yesterday and has been briefed obviously today as well.

so did he or anyone at the white house direct that she be fired?

not to my knowledge, no.

and to a lot of people trying to follow this story, they see a government employee who ends up losing her job because of comments posted on a videotape that appears to be taken out of context. it just looks bungled. is that a fair way to put it?

ben, i think this is one -- i think this is a fair way to put it. members of this administration, members of the media, members of different political factions on both sides of this have all made determinations and judgments without a full set of facts. i think that is wholly and completely accurate. i think without a doubt, ms. sherrod is owed an apology. i would do so certainly on behalf of this administration. i think if we look back and decide what we want to learn out of this, i think it is, as i said, everybody involved made determinations without knowing all the facts and all of the events.

why do you think that happened?

i can't speak for everybody involved. but i think we live in a culture that things whip around, people want fast responses, we want to give fast responses and i don't think there's any doubt that if we all look at this, i think the lesson -- one of the great lessons you take away from this is to ask all of the questions first and to come to that fuller understanding. i say that, again, from the perspective of this administration, i say that from the perspective of those that cover this administration and those that are involved in the back and forth in the political theater of this country.

one last one on this -- that apology from the secretary, is that -- does that reflect the president's view as well?

again, i did so just a few moments ago on behalf of this entire administration.

it does sound like you've spoken to the president about this. if so, does he think she was a victim of a rush to judgment?

i don't think i'd be out here giving you the answers i just gave to ben without having those reflect the feelings of the president and the feelings of the members of this administration.

was he angry about the way this transpired?

again, look, decisions were made based on an incomplete set of facts. we now have a more complete set of facts and a review is being done as it should be.

what if any concern is there within the administration that this handling of ms. sherrod could hurt the president and the democrats as well -- your question encapsulates a little bit of what i was talking about a minute ago. i know there is a -- we have this society and this culture now that's pervasive in this town where everything is viewed through the lens of who wins, who loses? how fast, by what margin? look, a disservice was done, an apology is owed. that's what we've done. this administration has never looked at -- i think if you go well back into the campaign, never looked at a scoreboard at the end of each day to figure out where we stood.

Briefly discussed something else....

i wanted to go back to shirley sherrod. when you started out by saying that secretary vilsack is going to call her and apologize. and then as you put it, talk about the next steps, here we are two days later, presumably people inside the white house have seen the full tape, realize it seems an injustice was done here. why is there still vagueness? why hasn't the president, the chief of staff or somewhere here picked up the phone and said, here's what we're doing instead of saying, we're trying to figure out the next steps?

i don't think i'm being vague. the secretary of agriculture employs a number of people to carry out the duties and the functions of the department of agriculture. i think there are clearly some things that ms. sherrod will likely want to talk to mr. vilsack about and we're going to let that conversation -- this is the president's administration. it's bigger than vilsack or any department. this appears to be an injustice. why wouldn't the president intervene instead of letting it all fall out?

we have a fuller set of facts. a review is taking place and the secretary is trying to reach ms. sherrod to apologize for the exact injustice that you talk about. hold on. let me just finish a few of my answers. as i said, a disservice was done for which we apologize. i think the next step that has to happen is the secretary needs to speak with her. he's tried to reach her and we hope -- is he going to tell her something specific or offer her her job back?

i know we have deadlines.

shirley sherrod's told cnn several times that cheryl cook, the deputy undersecretary was pressuring her to resign and specifically said that the white house wants you to step down.

again, i think i would point you to the interview the secretary did with -- the secretary told cnn yesterday he did not himself speak to anybody inside the white house. but there are thousands of people who work at the agriculture department.

right. as i said to ben earlier, i know of no conversations that have happened like that as the secretary said.

so no one at the white house -- i answered your question.

apparently she's watching this briefing, shirley sherrod, on cnn right now. is there anything you want to say to her? she's watching you -- and let me -- the secretary is trying to reach her. i hope that the secretary reaches her soon and they have an opportunity to talk. the secretary will apologize for the actions that have taken place over the past 24 to 36 hours and on behalf of the administration, i offer our apologies. again, this is more directed at everybody at large here. i think everybody has to go back. we have -- we will continue to look at what has happened over the past 24 to 36 hours and ask ourselves how we got into this. how did we get into -- how did we not ask the right questions? how did you all not ask the right questions? how did other people not ask the right questions?

i asked the right questions. i called her to find out the story. you can fault the media if you want -- i'm not faulting the media. hold on. i'm not here to fault the media. i've apologized on behalf of the administration. i will say, a number of people called quite quickly after these comments aired and wanted to know what our response was. i don't know who else called. i don't know who made calls trying to seek a greater understanding. we made a mistake on that. and i think many involved in this made mistakes -- i've heard conservatives and liberals say this administration overreacted because you're afraid of conservative commentators. do you think there's any truth to that?

no.

Secretary Vilsack has tried to reach Ms. Sherrod but has been unable to reach. Secretary will apologize and discuss next steps.

It is an event with a lot of people involved. Government people acted without all facts.

Sec's statement from last evening, he's seeking broader knowledge. He's going to review the facts.

Offer job back? Secretary will work through next steps.

President was briefed, most likely in the morning yesterday. Was briefed today as well.

This was decision to ask for resignation was made by Secretary Vilsack.

Was the bungled? Members of administration, members of the media, members of different political factions, have all made determinations and judgments without full set of facts. That is wholly and completely accurate.

Apologies on behalf of administration.

Everybody involved made determinations without knowing all facts and all events.

I think we live in a culture that things whip around, people want fast responses. Don't think there is any doubt, one of great lessons is that to ask all the questions first, get full understanding.

I say that to those who cover administration.

Was she victim of rush to judgment? Was she angry about how this transpired? We now have more complete set of facts.

I know there is a society that is pervasive in this town, who wins who loses, how fast what margin. Disservice was done, apologies should come from all around.

Why is there still vagueness in terms of next steps? Secretary of Agriculture has number of people who carry out duties and functions.

Pressure from WH? Point you to interview of Secretary. Gibbs knows of no conversations between WH and USDA.

How did WH not ask right questions? How did media to ask right questions?

Afraid of conservative commentators? No.

Today I reached out to Shirley Sherrod to apologize. I also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends.

I reacted too quickly. I should have taken the time to listen and learn.

While I cannot change what happened, I can try to make something out of this difficult incident.

As we know, Shirley has a unique and compelling story to tell. She and her family endured discrimination by the USDA many decades ago. She worked as a ... helping... As Georgia's State Director... And she too has had to endure the events of the last few days.

We talked about a unique opportunity at USDA. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, having her experiences, her commitment and her record of service in the Office of Advocacy and Outreach would be invaluable to USDA and beneficial to the American people. The Office of Advocacy and Outreach is charged with

I did not handle this situation properly. I take seriously my duty as a public official and am grateful for the privilege I have to serve. I will continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day and I am committed to making sure it does not happen again.

As part of this effort, I also want to renew my firm commitment to put behind all of us the USDA's record on civil rights. While we have made some progress over the last 18 months, more work is needed

Subject: Please Reinstate Mrs. Shirley Sherrod

Importance: High

Mr. Vilsack,

Please accept this email as a request for you to reconsider and reinstate Mrs. Shirley Sherrod to her post as Georgia's State Director. It was obviously a mistake to require her to resign. I assume you made the decision in an effort to protect the reputation of the Ag Department. Now that the truth has been revealed, please reconsider.

For more than ten years that I've known Mrs. Sherrod, she has meaningfully helped the disenfranchised of all races; she is fair in her dealings with others regardless of their race, religion, or national origin.

Mr. Vilsack, in order for the American people to have faith and trust in Washington government officials, we need to know that you all are able to admit when you are wrong. Please reconsider, offer her an apology, and allow this lady to continue to serve the people of Georgia in the capacity of USDA State Director.

Thank you.

Just had a conversation with Ron Stroman of the Oversight committee.

Towns is very worried that USDA took action against Ms Sherrod w/o learning the facts which resulted in her being directed to resign. He has directed his staff to prepare a letter to Vilsak along this line.

Ron said that Ranking Member Issa is expected to play into the media accounts that the WH was behind the move to take action against a black woman-and that Issa will play the race card against USDA and the WH -highlighting the fact that we took action before the facts were in. According to Ron, (who is in touch with her) Ms Sherrod does not appear to plan on coming back to USDA because she feels so unfairly treated.

The Federation Sends Letter to USDA Secretary Vilsack Regarding Sherrod Resignation

ATLANTA....On July 19, former Federation staff member and head of the USDA's Rural Development Office in Georgia was asked by the USDA to resign her post. The reason was because of the ramifications of a distorted video from a March 2010 speech she gave at the NAACP in south Georgia that was publicized by Fox News. In response to this the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund has sent the letter below to Thomas Vilsack, Secretary of Agriculture.

July 21, 2010

The Honorable Thomas Vilsack
Secretary of Agriculture
Washington DC

Dear Secretary Vilsack:

We at the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund are writing regarding your decision to ask Shirley Sherrod to resign. We think you must reconsider and immediately reinstate her as Georgia USDA State Director of Rural Development.

Your decision to force Ms. Sherrod to resign was taken in haste without a thorough and complete review of the facts, context and circumstances of her actions. We feel you were unduly influenced by distorted and edited videotape that completely misrepresented a speech Ms. Sherrod made to the NAACP in Georgia.

It is a sign of leadership to admit to mistakes and quickly corrected them. We feel you as Secretary of Agriculture must quickly correct this injustice committed against Ms. Shirley Sherrod and the people she has struggled for years to serve. This is the transformative awareness and enlightened judgment we are expecting from you.

We note with interest that your concern is to move forward to solve the problems that USDA has had in the past in terms of its sad record on civil rights. Yet your decision to fire one of the few persons in the country who could likely do the most to help achieve that goal stubbornly negates your stated interest of moving forward toward equal access and equality of opportunity at USDA with integrity.

At the NAACP gathering in March this year, Shirley was sharing with the group her experience in the 1980's of assisting the white farmer Roger Spooner. She, in fact, was instrumental in helping to save his farm. She describes the process of getting beyond her assumption that whites didn't need services and assistance. She realized that being white did not make anyone immune to the problems of and to the lack of access to services. She realized rather that it was a matter of who has and how does not. This was a life changing experience for her. Her message was that all of us need to get beyond race and assist each other whether black or white.

Another of your interests we know is to finally resolve the lawsuits against USDA. Lack of access to services at USDA is the basis for the Pigford lawsuit. In addition to securing the necessary funding for settling Pigford from Congress to finally resolve this injustice to individual farmers, we know that another essential step in moving forward is to assist and assure farmers have access to the USDA programs. Programs, in fact, that are supposed to be available on an equitable basis to all farmers.

Shirley Sherrod in her remarkable career has been one of the most active practitioners in assisting untold numbers of black and white farmers to access the credit, conservation and other programs at USDA. Shirley has essentially been an ambassador for the USDA in her work at the Federation of Southern Cooperatives and as Georgia State Director of Rural Development. If anything, she deserves to be honored for this work and not falsely condemned and forced to retire in disgrace.

We find it ironic that in the one hundred years of USDA's history of discrimination, not a single white person has been dismissed for discrimination, however, a Black women who is doing her job well is falsely accused of discrimination in an altered video and you decide that she can no longer do a credible and nondiscriminatory job of dispensing USDA rural development programs and must resign.

Once Shirley is restored to her position, we feel it would enhance USDA's goals by utilizing her as an ambassador for USDA. She could offer USDA staff throughout the country training and teaching about transformation on the issue of race and what it means to offer service to all farmers with justice and integrity regardless of race.

In summary, the inference that Shirley Sherrod is a racist is beyond comprehension. For you to make a decision without consideration of Shirley's long and impressive work in civil rights is uncalled for. It is not only an insult to her, but also to the communities she has worked for and with all these many years as well as our organization that has for decades fought against racism and injustice in the rural South

We ask that you immediately reconsider your decision to fire Shirley Sherrod, apologize to her and consider instead the tremendous asset she has been and could continue to be for the USDA and rural America. We urge you to learn from this disagreeable incident and make it a shining example of a true change of heart and direction at USDA toward a brighter day of racial reconciliation and justice for all.

Cooperatively yours,

Ralph Paige

Hey Carole,

If you want 2 more of my cents....

What I keep on hearing from our communities (and I agree strongly) is that Secretary can offer Shirley Sherrod any position she wants or as many options as he wants. But unless one of those options is her old RD job, it will be appropriately viewed as unjust and a failure to support her. And it will also be seen as the Obama administration caving to the tea party and Fox news.

Shirley can choose whatever she wants if more than one job is on the table, but people have a lot more confidence that she can fairly treat all who come to RD in Georgia than they do in the Secretary to treat her fairly. She already stood up to these folks for a week on national TV. They do not scare her and having her in Georgia should be a good thing for the Secretary and the President. Let them sue if they don't like her service. To say because of all of this that USDA cannot put her back there because people will not believe she serves them fairly is basically saying this administration supports those people who believe that. In a civil rights sense, it smacks of retaliation against her.

If you talk to any African American career staffers and probably most people of color staffers at USDA, they would say within 5 seconds that Sec. Vilsack needs to offer her her job back. Several came up to me today as I was walking the halls because they have seen our statements and said as much. They are watching. Re OAO the response I am hearing is "Why not as Director." If she goes there, more questions.

It would say a lot of the very wrong thing if this administration is saying that Shirley can't do her job when she already has with the support of people like the Spooners. And who will replace her? That will be another controversy.

This one is on the Secretary, and he really should think carefully about it.

If I were him, I would send Cheryl there to talk to Shirley (providing that Shirley is willing to see her) with a few RD options (her old job, RD regional, and whatever else she might want to talk about) and with an invitation to come and see him next week.

Leaving this out there is not a good thing (tho I have not watched any cable news today).

Yes, there is detailed information available for the Office of the Pigford Monitor. Here is the website link:
<http://www.pigfordmonitor.org/>

Here are detailed statistics from the claims process: <http://www.pigfordmonitor.org/stats/>

In short, 22,721 claims were filed. 99% of those were Track A (1 % were Track B). 15,640 of the Track A claims were approved (69%) for a total of $1,008,195,028 (i.e., slightly over $1 billion) including debt relief. I don't have a final number for Track B awards, but I believe it was approximately $20 million for those awards, including the one that Sherrod won.

Keep in mind that all of these numbers are for Pigford I. The Pigford II claims process has not been set up yet and is awaiting funding from Congress.

As far as the Sherrod matter, I don't believe there was any settlement with Sherrod (and certainly no deal to give her a job); rather, my understanding is that she was a Track B Pigford I claimant and that she prevailed and received an award as part of the Pigford I claims process. In other words, she opted into the Pigford Consent Decree claims process. That's different than entering into a specific, individual settlement with USDA. I'm looping Inga and Arlean Leland to verify my statements. Thanks. --Steve

Rev. Charles Sherrod Delivers Keynote Address at Race and Law Conference Uploaded to Youtube: February 2, 2010

We've come a long way but we've got a long way to go. We've come from Africa where life in this world began; we blacks were the first human beings on this earth. But we've also come from slavery, that ungodly system that denied human rights to black people. Slavery goes back thousands of years to Hebrews, Greeks, Romans, Babylonians, Vikings, Africans and others. But these slaves were not always black, and this early slavery had rules. You couldn't just do anything you wanted to, to a slave. A slave had rights. But when slavery came to America, it became a peculiar institution. It was sanctioned by the constitution, approved by the church and the whole American society. If money became short, masters sold slaves at auctions, separating husbands from wives, children from mothers. Women endured the sexual advances of white men. Infants suffered malnutrition and the elderly were neglected. A white man could beat or rape a woman, any slave woman, at any time, anybody's mother, anybody's sister, anybody's grandmother. When slavery was abolished, blacks were still prevented from owning land, from serving on juries, from voting, from traveling as they desired or just making decisions for themselves. As leadership came on the scene, Booker T. Washington, W.E.B. DuBois, Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman and others, blacks were determined to live a better life. It took years of a bloody civil war to end slavery, but another war stood in our way. Segregation. And with segregation, thousands of lynching and blacks being railroaded into southern jails, and northern prisons. We've come a long way. The 1930's economic depression, when jobs became available, they went to whites first, and what was left went to blacks. During World War 1, many Afro-Americans in the south migrated north for defense jobs and many saw the armed forces as a refuge, as it was desegregated in the 1940's. Education of black children was clearly inferior to that of white children. In 1954 we had the Brown v. Board of Education decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, and yet segregation in public schools lived on. Blacks in the south still could not vote, could not eat, swim, drink, nor go to the bathroom in the same facilities as whites. Leaders were threatened and leaders were murdered by the Ku Klux Klan, and our government did nothing. And then it happened. In my young life. A boy about my age, Emit (indecipherable) in Mississippi was killed. He was 15-years-old. He went to Mississippi to visit his uncle for the summer. He either whistled or said "hey baby" to a white woman in a store and left, and for this a group of white men, including the ladies husband - two nights later came to get him at his uncle's house. They beat him, shot him in the head, and tied a 75 pound carton (indecipherable) around his body with barbed wire and threw him in the Tallahatchie River. I could still see his swollen face and gauged out eye on the front of the Jet magazine. It caught my attention as a 15-year-old myself. Could this happen to me? It was already happening to me. It was tearing my heart out. I was losing faith in my country. Where was justice and mercy? Where was the land of the free and the home of the brave? Why are so many blacks being killed all over the country? Was the constitution written for me? I took these questions with me to college and seminary from 1954 to 1961. The festering rot of 200 years of oppression and discrimination came to a head in 1960s. A man had a dream. He said, I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia, the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at a table of brotherhood; I have a dream that my four children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character. I have a dream today. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream speech inspired the nation. For three years before the speech, student sit-ins had spread across the nation; thousands were involved in sit-ins, marches, boycotts, stand-ins, picketing, or direct non-violent action. Thousands of black and white people of all ages, elementary, high school, and colleges as well, street people, participated as freedom fighters. My experience in the civil rights movement went all over the country; having been arrested in five states, but most of those fifty years, was a struggle of a period in southwest Georgia, some 190 miles due south of Atlanta. We worked in some twenty counties doing voter registration, and education, and direct action. Some three thousand people went to jail while participating in peaceful demonstrations. Many houses and churches of movement supporters were burned to the ground and there were no fruitful negotiations. We learned what white power really meant. And we continued to struggle, though we have many successes to show, socially and politically, where decisions are made economically, boss is still boss. And my way of passing the torch to you. I want to make a few brief points. First of all, we must stay faithful. We who have fought for freedom believe that god is on our side. God has held our hand through the many encounters with death. I have heard and felt the wind from a death bullet coming by my ear. I have seen 16 officers of the so called law with pistols and shotguns and long flashlights break into our voting meeting place in the church. But they left only two sliced tires and broken windshield on the night I thought it was my time to die. I've heard many times "Nigger don't you know I'll blow your brains out," with a gun aimed at my head many, many times. God has protected me from death for 73 years because I'm thankful and I'm still thankful. Secondly, we must reclaim our schools in our neighborhoods. The racketeers and drug culture are using our boys and seducing our girls at early age. Listen to our death now. Eighty percent of our boys drop out of high school. One out of eight black men between 25 and 29 have been jailed already. A thousand black children are arrested every day. The number one cause of death for our children is homicide. We are losing a whole generation of children right before our eyes from un-outlawed drug culture. Don't say we are puzzled. We knew where they live, we know where they party, we know what schools they work in, we know which policeman support them and we know which judges and lawyers are their backbones. Somebody here has got to lay down their life for our children. We must not give them our children. We must not give up our future. Then, we must find a way to leverage the 900 billion dollars we spend on consumables each and every year. We spend more than the gross national product of many countries and what do we own together. Where is the company, where is the university, where is the hospital or network or land that we own together? Ten years ago we held in group ownership of a non-profit organization called New Communities Incorporated. We farmed it for 17 years. We held on to it for that number of years. Then we had five straight years of drought. Then we had a three year fight with USDA, just to get the right to get loans for drought. But all around us plantations all kind of plantations we proved were getting loans, and they were saying but since we were a corporation we are not an individual, we are not a farm, but it took us three years to win that battle. Then four more years of late payments from USDA caused us to lose this land. We appealed to hundreds of black and white groups to save the land. 250 dollars an acre would save 6,000 acres. Looking for 6,000 people to give 250 dollars to save 6,000 acres of land, the largest piece of land owned by blacks in the country anywhere in a single track. (Indecipherable) owned more land than we did but not in a single track. We lost that 6,000 acres in 1985 and sued the federal government, because we were faithful and had good lawyers. We won a large sum of money so that new communities could live again and will live again. Large sum of money, large sum of money. So that new communities could project to stabilize southern farmers, to create a food delivering system from the south to our people in the north and to participate creatively in the international trade, were our three objectives. So that possibility is yet alive. Young people, you will be making more money than we ever dreamed of. Please find a way, find a way that we can trust each other so that our monies can work for our total liberation. We have ideas, inventions, athletic talent, but our labor and our monies and our contacts usually end up in white folk's hands and pockets. When will we trust our own? When will we feel responsible to save ourselves? Finally, we must stop the white man and his Uncle Tom from stealing our elections. We must not be afraid to vote black. We must not be afraid to turn a black out who votes against our interests. We've got to stay tough and take the time to communicate from day to day and door to door. We must reason and meet and meet and meet some more. Our people will listen, if we come close enough, long enough for them to hear. In a few days or weeks the FCC will announce that we won a full power community-owned radio station in Albany, Georgia, a result of years of work. Tears that we shed so many times when the TV and the newspaper comes out the day of an election or day before an election and tell white folk all over wherever we're running somebody for an office that blacks are gonna take the office over and thousands are coming to the polls. But we had no means of communicating with our people. It's a blessing that finally we will have a radio station to cover thousands of people. Last thing I want to say before I sit, the greatest challenge that I've had in the movement is dealing with fear. Dealing with fear with our people, people who had to back down and talk to the white person. He was sitting right here and said, "Miss would you want me to go to the left or want me to go to the right or should I take the wood and place it on their back?" never looking at the lady but head straight down at the floor. This is the kind of attitude, the kind of people, the kind of fear that our people had when I first went to Albany, Georgia. But the young people had not known Marshall, they hadn't see any beatings, they hadn't known nobody who had got pistol whipped. And they weren't afraid of nobody, including their mama and daddy. And so the thing I learned was that when they got in jail, when the children got in jail, whoa now buddy, we go downtown, "Mister Johnston sir, you got my little man in there and I need him to be home." In other words don't mess with my children, you can mess with me but don't mess with my children. And that's what stood them up. It took us a little while to understand that and learn that. And there is another point that all of us in organizers, this will include you one day, it may have already included you. The fear that comes with making a decision that will affect the pocket book or making a decision that will affect your family or making a decision that is going effect you in some way. That fear. And I had to deal with the fear of death, the fear of dying. In all those years I didn't think about dying, never thought it. Raised in Petersburg, Virginia and sang all over Virginia with the police boy club. So I had good relations with police, I thought police were here to help ya. Well after getting smacked a few times and getting knocked upside the head with a pistol and getting jabbed in my side and other things done to me, I started to fear police power and fear because every time, they wouldn't let me down. All the time they watched me every day. Close in behind me when I'm driving. Every time I pick up the telephone, nigga nigga don't you know you gonna die. Then when I get married, nigga I'm gonna kill your family. That racks ya, you got to have something to deal with that. I said lord I can't make no decision with me shaking like this, I can't deal with it lord. And I can't tell you the day and I can't tell you the hour, but one day and one early hour I was able to look one sheriff in his face without the fear that here before I had, and boy then I was bad. Because no more did I have fear of death. It coming from me it came from my religion from a scripture I want you to read when you go home, I'm not gonna preach. I'm gonna take this passage, it's the 8th chapter of Romans, about the 38th verses where it says "For I am persuaded that neither light nor death nor principalities nor powers no things above the earth no things on the earth will be able to separate me from the love of Christ." I read that scripture, I was in prison in South Carolina in the chain gang, going through a lot of difficulty. They were trying to get us out of jail and we were trying to stay in jail. They did some bad things to us then but I read this scripture in jail a whole new world opened to me and I was no longer afraid of dying or death. For me to live as Christ and to die is gain. But you don't have to die, but you have to make a decision and I wish you'd make that decision today. That you gonna take the torch that I'm passing to you right now, I'm not saying I'm gonna stop working, I'm not saying I'm gonna stop working, I'm not gonna stop working till they kill me, they going to have to kill me to get me out of here. What my wife and what my children that was the greatest challenge. What they were saying, was the Ku Klux Klan went to my house one day, my wife was in the house and in a slip and praying. They were looking for me, when they left they approached her and then she screamed and the lefty her. When they left the house, the house was burning, we had 15 people staying at the house. That taught us one thing, you should not ever try and stay together like that but we stayed like that for economics we had no money. I was supposed to get $10 a week from SNIC but mine never came, they owe me. So in conclusion, I want to say stay faithful. I'm asking you take this as your own commitment: to stay faithful, to reclaim our neighborhoods, leverage our money to finally use our political strength. We who believe in freedom cannot rest until it comes.

To USDA FOIA, Washington, DC 20250

Under provisions of the Freedom of Information Act and under the Electronic Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C 552, I am seeking copies of the following records:

* Any and all emails, phone logs, or communications of any sort between March 1, 2010 and July 28, 2010 regarding former USDA employee Shirley Sherrod and her March 27, 2010 speech to a local NAACP meeting in Georgia. This includes but is not limited to any communications within USDA or between USDA and parties inside and outside government regarding preparation of the speech, delivery of the speech, her efforts to inform superiors of potential fallout from the speech and communications about the request to ask her to resign. Also any communications regarding the decision to reconsider the decision to ask her to resign, efforts to contact her, the decision to offer her a new job and discussions about the new job.

* Any and all emails, phone logs, or communications of any sort within USDA or with outside parties that mention the words "Shirley Sherrod" or "Sherrod" between July 18-28.

* Any and all emails, phone logs, or communications of any sort regarding Shirley Sherrod involving Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, Deputy Undersecretary Cheryl Cook, Chief of Staff Karen Ross and the office of White House liaison.

Please release any information pursuant to my requests as it is received and/or reviewed by your office, rather than waiting to send me all the material I have requested.

Please provide any information responsive to my request in electronic form, if possible, and I prefer that you communicate with me about my request via e-mail for expediency, in addition to U.S. Postal mail. My e-mail address is mjalonick@ap.org.

If there are any fees for searching for, or copying, the records I have requested, please supply the records without informing me if the fees do not exceed $250.

As you know, the Act permits you to reduce or waive the fees when the release of the information is considered as "primarily benefiting the public." I believe that this request fits that category and I therefore ask that you waive any fees.

If all or any part of this request is denied, please cite the specific exemption(s) that you think justifies your refusal to release the information and inform me of your agency's administrative appeal procedures available to me under the law.

I would appreciate your handling this request as quickly as possible, and I look forward to hearing from you.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on July 28, 2010.

Subject: RE: Rev. jackson on MSNBC

my big question today, who is to blame for the rush to judgment? reverend jesse jackson is the head of the rainbow push coalition. who do you blame for this rush to judgment, reverend?

well, those who made the determination to force her to resign or to fire her clearly this is a distorted story where with the low cable standards this thing became viral. she was hurt by it and in some sense maybe damaged by it. she deserves an apology and restoration and the department of agriculture should be investigated for the decision made relative to her.

i had a guy write to me today who said, i personally think everyone involved in that lady's firing should be ashamed. the white house, the usda, the naacp, and the media. what does this say to you about how motivated the administration is by whatever is the controversy of the day on conservative cable?

i think last week the tea party was so much a focus of the naacp convention last week. some of this was kind of a retaliation to prove that blacks are racist and so now we've sunk to a new level of who is a racist. that's not a good thing. i hope that president barack obama, when he had the beer summit and it would be beautiful to see shirley sherrod whom i've known for so many years and the spooner family come to the white house and be accommodated in some way. this really is a good news ending. here is a basic rural white family salvaged by a rural black woman who now found common ground. it is a tough story but really a good news ending.

there is the theory out there that this may have been payback for the naacp accusing the tea party of harboring racists. how much is race now becoming the motivating factor in political anger do you think, reverend?

it has been there for a long time and this does not address the need for a meaningful, racial justice session because while we have these exceptions in athletics, exceptions in president barack obama, blacks are still three times the national average in unemployment for example, number one in poverty, number one in short life expectancy, number one in prenatal deaths, number one in school expulsions, 2.3 million americans in prison over half are african-americans so the issue of racial disparity is very real and deserves halfway meaningful discussion but also some remedy.

okay. reverend jackson, good of you to join us today. thank you.

CBC Statement on the Resignation of Shirley Sherrod

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Contact : J. Jioni Palmer

(Washington, D.C.)- Congressional Black Caucus Chairwoman Barbara Lee and members of the CBC released the following statement today on the firing of USDA employee Shirley Sherrod:

"It is troubling that Shirley Sherrod was asked for her resignation as Georgia State Director for Rural Development at the U.S. Department of Agriculture because of an edited video clip. A full review of the clip demonstrates Ms. Sherrod's personal transformation. She was clearly educating the public about the power of redemption. It is now apparent that Secretary Vilsack did not have all of the facts available to him and overreacted.

"The Congressional Black Caucus continues to believe that Ms. Sherrod was unfairly asked to resign, without due process and should be reinstated immediately. There are many individuals still serving in the Department of Agriculture who were responsible for years of discrimination against African American farmers.

"We also believe that a national dialogue on race must be held. Last November, we held a forum on race in Washington DC to begin the discussion. The basis for Ms. Sherrod's resignation is another example of why we must not sweep race under the rug. Rather, we must come together as a nation and recognize that we do not live in a post-racial era and that, while difficult, we must confront these issues head on with clarity and without fear.

"Ms. Sherrod has been an effective public servant and it would be tragic to lose a person of such caliber, competence and commitment to fairness and equality and one who has dedicated her life to working for a more perfect union."

Official Ousted From Ag Department Had Taken USDA to Court, Won
20 July 2010, 22:54 GMT, FOXNews.com [707 Words]

The Agriculture Department has a lengthy history with the official forced to resign Monday over a controversial YouTube clip -- it turns out she and a group she helped found with her husband won millions last year in a discrimination suit settlement with the federal government.

The information about the suit only thickens the plot that has evolved seemingly by the hour since Shirley Sherrod resigned late Monday as the department's Georgia director of rural development.

She claims the video clip, which showed her telling a story about how she withheld her full assistance to a white farmer, omitted key details, and she argues she was pushed out by the Obama administration without getting a chance to tell her side. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack is standing by his decision.

But it's not the first time Sherrod faced off against the federal government. Days before she was appointed to the USDA post last year, her group reportedly won a $13 million settlement in a longstanding discrimination suit against the USDA known commonly as the Pigford case.

The Rural Development Leadership Network announced last summer that New Communities Inc. -- a group Sherrod formed with husband Charles, who is a civil rights activist, and with other black farmers -- had reached the agreement. The RDLN said the USDA had "refused" to offer new loans or restructure old loans to members of New Communities, leading to the discrimination claim.

The announcement said that in addition to the $13 million to New Communities, Shirley and Charles Sherrod would each get $150,000 for "pain and suffering."

A USDA official told FoxNews.com on Tuesday that the settlement had "nothing to do with" Sherrod's hiring last year -- likewise, the official said her resignation was only the result of her comments in the video.

"This is all about her comments," the official said.

Sherrod's settlement was a drop in the bucket in terms of the money the federal government has paid out in Pigford claims to other black farmers over the years. The suit claimed the USDA racially discriminated against black farmers by not giving them fair treatment when they applied for loans or assistance. The case was first settled in 1999, resulting to date in more than $1 billion in compensation payments from the federal government.

In addition, the Obama administration has called for another $1.15 billion to settle claims for other black farmers -- Congress has not yet granted the money.

However, the case has attracted some scrutiny.

Former Agriculture Secretary Ed Schafer told Fox News that while those who were discriminated against "should be reimbursed," there are other hangers-on trying to game the system.

"The problem you have with the class-action lawsuits is a lot of people jump in that may be on the fringe, that maybe don't deserve it, that sounded good because their neighbor got a check ... (It) is very expensive, very time consuming," Schafer said. "It probably in the long run is going to be cheaper just to settle the whole thing -- so some people will get paid that probably don't deserve it. And to me, I don't like that kind of thing. I like to settle it on merit."

Vilsack appeared to reference the Pigford case, or the backstory behind it, in his statement Tuesday defending his decision to effectively dismiss Sherrod.

"Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion," he said.

Sherrod claims the administration never bothered to find out "the truth" about the video clip. She says she was telling a story about something that happened more than two decades ago when she was working for a local nonprofit group. She ended up helping that farmer and says she was, in recalling the story, trying to impart a lesson about the importance of looking beyond race.

Jesse Jackson wants apology for Sherrod's ouster

By MARY CLARE JALONICK
The Associated Press
Wednesday, July 21, 2010; 9:49 AM

WASHINGTON -- The Rev. Jesse Jackson is calling for an apology from the Obama administration for ousting an Agriculture Department employee now at the center of a racially tinged firestorm.

Jackson said he talked to Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack late Tuesday night before Vilsack said that he would reconsider his department's decision to ask Shirley Sherrod to leave her job.

Vilsack issued a short statement early Wednesday morning after Sherrod said she was pressured to resign because of her comments that she didn't give a white farmer as much help as she could have 24 years ago. Until Tuesday, Sherrod was the department's director of rural development in Georgia.

Flagging a couple key points/quotes from this story.

(CNN) -- A black former Agriculture Department official who resigned under pressure after a video clip surfaced of her discussing a white farmer said Wednesday the agency's decision to review her case is "bittersweet," but said she isn't sure she would accept her job back if it is offered.

"If they had just taken the time to -- even without looking at the tape -- to look at me, to look at what I've stood for, to look at what I've done since I've actually been at the department, I don't think they would have been so quick to do what they did and so insistent," she said. "... To now come back and say, 'Well, we're willing to look at this,' it definitely is a little bittersweet."

At the department, Sherrod said, "I didn't make a lot of noise. ... I worked for fairness for everyone."

Asked whether she would accept her job back if the USDA offered it, she said, "You know, I'm just not so sure at this point. I really wonder, in light of how I was treated over the last two days, just what that relationship would be like for the future. Can they move beyond this?"

Ag chief: Former USDA worker's case to be reviewed
21 July 2010, 12:52 GMT, CNN [2111 Words]

(CNN) -- A black former Agriculture Department official who resigned under pressure after a video clip surfaced of her discussing a white farmer said Wednesday the agency's decision to review her case is "bittersweet," but said she isn't sure she would accept her job back if it is offered.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said early Wednesday that he will review the case of Shirley Sherrod, who resigned Monday after the video clip first appeared on a conservative website and later on Fox News.

In the video, Sherrod, the former USDA director of rural development for Georgia, seems to tell an audience at an NAACP function in March that she did not do her utmost to help a white farmer avoid foreclosure.

However, Sherrod later said the clip only shows part of her comments, and that she tells the story of her experience -- from nearly a quarter century ago when she was not a federal employee -- to illustrate the importance of moving beyond race.

"I am, of course, willing and will conduct a thorough review and consider additional facts to ensure to the American people we are providing services in a fair and equitable manner," Vilsack said in a statement.

The USDA's decision is "bittersweet," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" on Wednesday.

"If they had just taken the time to -- even without looking at the tape -- to look at me, to look at what I've stood for, to look at what I've done since I've actually been at the department, I don't think they would have been so quick to do what they did and so insistent," she said. "... To now come back and say, 'Well, we're willing to look at this,' it definitely is a little bittersweet."

At the department, Sherrod said, "I didn't make a lot of noise. ... I worked for fairness for everyone."

Asked whether she would accept her job back if the USDA offered it, she said, "You know, I'm just not so sure at this point. I really wonder, in light of how I was treated over the last two days, just what that relationship would be like for the future. Can they move beyond this?"

In the video, Sherrod can be heard telling an audience at a March 27, 2010, appearance before a local chapter of the NAACP that she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm.

But later in the tape, in the portion not originally posted, Sherrod says, "working with (the farmer) made me see that it's really about those who have versus those who have not. They could be black. They could be white. They could be Hispanic."

The video initially brought condemnation from the NAACP, which later retracted its statement and apologized to Sherrod after the context of the clip became clear. Also, the farmer and his wife Sherrod was discussing, Roger and Eloise Spooner, came forward Tuesday, saying they credited Sherrod with helping them save their farm and that she did not discriminate against them.

The NAACP, which initially called Sherrod's statements "shameful," said in a statement Tuesday that it was "snookered by Fox News" and conservative website publisher Andrew Breitbart. Breitbart originally posted the video, which was quickly picked up by Fox News.

"Having reviewed the full tape by Shirley Sherrod, who is the woman who was fired by the Department of Agriculture, and most importantly heard the testimony of the white farmers mentioned in this story, we now believe that the organization that edited the documents did so with the intention of deceiving millions of Americans," the statement from NAACP President Benjamin Jealous said.

The organization had also urged Vilsack to reconsider Sherrod's resignation from her post.

Sherrod said Wednesday she accepted the NAACP apology and is "ready to move on."

Conservative media outlets tied the video to the NAACP's recent resolution calling on the Tea Party movement to repudiate racist elements within it that have displayed such items as images of President Barack Obama with a bone through his nose and the White House with a lawn full of watermelons. The controversy has led one Tea Party umbrella group to oust another because of a blog posting by the second group's leader.

Tea Party Express leader Mark Williams posted on his blog a faux letter from Jealous to President Abraham Lincoln in which Williams ridicules the organization's use of "colored" in its historic name and uses multiple stereotypes to bolster his point. The National Tea Party Foundation expelled Williams' organization from its coalition as a result.

Breitbart told CNN's "John King USA" on Tuesday that releasing the video was "not about Shirley Sherrod."

"This was about the NAACP attacking the Tea Party, and this is showing racism at an NAACP event," he said. "I did not ask for Shirley Sherrod to be fired."

Sherrod said Tuesday that she "went all out" to help the Spooners keep their farm in the 1986 incident, which occurred before she started working for USDA and was at the nonprofit Federation of Southern Cooperatives Land Assistance Fund. She said she resigned after receiving four phone calls Monday telling her the White House wanted her to step down.

"They asked me to resign, and in fact they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from West Point, Georgia, yesterday," she said. The last call "asked me to pull to the side of the road and do it [resign]," she said.

However, Vilsack told CNN on Tuesday that he "didn't speak to anyone at the White House. ... I made this decision, it's my decision. Nobody from the White House contacted me about this at all."

A White House official also told CNN that "the White House did not pressure her or the USDA over the resignation. It was the secretary's decision, as he has said."

Obama was briefed on the situation after Vilsack decided to seek Sherrod's resignation, according to a White House official, who said the president fully supports the decision.

"I don't know what brought up the racist mess," Roger Spooner told CNN's "Rick's List" on Tuesday. "They just want to stir up some trouble, it sounds to me in my opinion."

Spooner says Sherrod accompanied him and his wife to a lawyer in Americus, Georgia, who was able to help them file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, which ultimately saved their farm.

"If it hadn't been for her, we would've never known who to see or what to do," he said. "She led us right to our success."

Eloise Spooner remembered Sherrod as "nice-mannered, thoughtful, friendly; a good person."

She said that when she saw the story of the tape and Sherrod's resignation on television, "I said, 'That ain't right. They have not treated her right.' "

The poor-quality video shows Sherrod telling her audience that the farmer she was working with "took a long time ... trying to show me he was superior to me." As a result, she said, she "didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

To prove she had done her job, she said, she took him to a white lawyer. "I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

But that lawyer failed to help, she said Tuesday. "I did not discriminate against [the farmer]. And, in fact, I went all out to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that (first) lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go."

Sherrod, who was appointed to the USDA position in 2009, said she first heard of the possible controversy when someone e-mailed her Thursday to taunt her about her comments. She immediately forwarded the e-mail to the USDA so the agency would be aware. She was told that someone would look into it.

She said it wasn't until Monday that she heard back, and by then, she was being asked for her resignation.

Asked if she felt she had an opportunity to explain, Sherrod said, "No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth."

Vilsack said Tuesday that the controversy, regardless of the context of her comments, "compromises the director's ability to do her job."

"This isn't a situation where we are necessarily judgmental about the content of the statement, that's not the issue here. I don't believe this woman is a racist at all," he said. "She's a political appointee, and her job is basically to focus on job growth in Georgia, and I have deep concern about her ability to do her job without her judgments being second-guessed."

Ralph Paige, executive director of the Federation of Southern Cooperatives Land Assistance Fund, told CNN on Tuesday that Sherrod had garnered only praise during her time there and there were never any claims of discrimination against her.

"I can't praise Shirley enough," he said. "She holds no malice in her heart."

Vilsack said in a statement Monday he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, noting a "zero tolerance" policy for discrimination at the USDA. "I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," he said.

The first statement that the NAACP issued late Monday backed Vilsack's decision.

But Tuesday evening, the NAACP said in another statement, "(Sherrod) was sharing this account as part of a story of transformation and redemption. In the full video, Ms. Sherrod says she realized that the dislocation of farmers is about 'haves and have nots.' 'It's not just about black people, it's about poor people,' says Sherrod in the speech. 'We have to get to the point where race exists but it doesn't matter.' "

Earlier Tuesday, Sherrod called the NAACP "the reason why this happened. They got into a fight with the Tea Party, and all of this came out as a result of that."

"When you spend your life helping others and see people try to turn that around to try to make it look like you're a racist when that's not been what your life has been about -- that doesn't feel good," she said.

Sherrod and her family were part of a lawsuit filed in 1997 against the Agriculture Department that charged it discriminated against black farmers by denying them timely loans or debt restructuring. Complaints of discrimination began piling up after the Reagan administration shut down the department's civil rights division in 1983, and the lawsuit covered the years between 1983 and 1997.

A district court judge eventually combined two such lawsuits into a class action, and the two sides reached a settlement in 1999. The agreement gave each plaintiff $50,000 plus loan forgiveness and tax offsets, provided the plaintiff met certain criteria (Track A), or the possibility of a larger amount by showing evidence of greater damages (Track B).

More than 22,000 farmers applied -- far more than the 2,000 expected -- and more than 13,000 were approved for the $50,000 award. Fewer than 200 farmers opted for the Track B process.

Sherrod and her husband were part of the lawsuit because of the land trust they started in the 1960s along with several other black families. Ultimately, their land trust -- New Communities -- was awarded $13 million, mostly for loss of land and loss of income and including $300,000 for the Sherrods, according to the Rural Development Leadership Network.

Vilsack, who is now the defendant in the lawsuit -- Pigford vs. Vilsack -- as final details are worked out, referred to the discrimination lawsuit and other similar suits in a statement announcing that he had accepted Sherrod's resignation.

"We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously," Vilsack said.

Subject: Reinstatement of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod

Secretary Vilsack:

I am writing in support of Georgia State Director of Rural Development Shirley Sherrod. I have known and worked with Shirley for almost 25 years and can think of no better to represent the USDA and the Administration than Shirley. She has worked tirelessly for those who have had little or no access to those services provided by USDA and she has worked tirelessly for all people. It has been reported that you are concerned that "the controversy surrounding Sherrod's comments could, rightly or wrongly, cause people to question her decisions as a federal employee and lead to lingering doubts about civil rights at the agency, which has a troubled history of discrimination." Please let me tell you about another perception. Last week I was at a meeting of service providers to socially disadvantaged clients. In attendance were four State Directors of Rural Development and three were African American women. You cannot imagine how that fact encourages those work work on behalf of those in need at the grassroots level, those who are trying to improve the trouble history at USDA that you are concerned about. So, on half of those who support USDA and it's valuable work, and those who support those who are working to make those needed positive changes at USDA like Shirley Sherrod, please reconsider the decision to ask for her resignation and reinstate her to continue the work she has started.

Sincerely,

Robert Zabawa

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural Development State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?

Thank you,

George Ko

Oil Spill – Gulf of Mexico

Gulf cattle ranchers fear toxins after oil spill

Louisiana (Reuters) - The cattle in these parts don't seem to mind the helicopters hauling oil booms overhead, nor the response boats hurrying past their banks. But the oil that British energy giant BP is scrambling to clean up from its massive Gulf of Mexico spill threatens the animals' grazing land and the income of the ranchers who own them. Over 1,000 head of cattle graze on marshy islands off Louisiana's southeast tip and thousands more are found in the coastal low-lying pastures highly susceptible to flooding. The petroleum and cattle industries have managed to co-exist over the years. But now, ranchers fear a hurricane in this watery southeastern area of the state could wash the oil onto grazing land, poisoning their livestock and ruining their value. "We don't have a clue what this oil will do," said Robert Joyner, who heads the Louisiana Cattlemen's Association. "It's a whole 'nother ball game." Louisiana is home to about 450,000 head of cattle valued last year at $365 million. But the best pasture land is in the coastal south, where cattle can graze year-round.

Even before the oil spill it was a challenge being a cattleman here, where many animals can only be moved by barge. Calves succumb to alligators and snake bites, corrals need constant maintenance amid the quick-growing vegetation, and erosion and rising water levels steal valuable pasture every year. And then there are the hurricanes. Hurricane Katrina in 2005 killed 1,800 of Earl Armstrong's cattle. The next hurricane could pack a double wallop, with the additional danger of toxins brought ashore. "I'm not being happy with the oil right now," said Armstrong, whose cattle graze at the mouth of the Mississippi River, not far from the oil spill clean-up's command center. "I don't know when it's going to come in on that cattle where they have to eat that grass. It's a wait-and-see deal." Ranchers see themselves ending up last on BP's compensation list after the oystermen, shrimpers and others who have lost their livelihoods due to the spill are taken care of under BP's $20 billion fund.

BP denies CEO leaving as it readies asset sales

(Reuters) - BP Plc on Wednesday denied a report its heavily criticized chief executive would soon leave, after the company lined up $7 billion in asset sales to help pay for the worst oil spill in U.S. history. CEO Tony Hayward had the full support of the board and would stay in office, a BP spokesman told Reuters, dismissing a report in the Times newspaper that he would step down within the next 10 weeks. Hayward has been roundly criticized for a series of PR gaffes and a failure to quickly stem the three-month leak in the Gulf of Mexico, prompting speculation he would be removed. Hayward would have to step down so that BP could build its defenses against a potential buyout threat by ExxonMobil or Royal Dutch Shell, the Times cited a person close to the matter as saying. There was a growing expectation that he would announce his departure in late August or September, with Robert Dudley, chief of BP's Gulf Coast restoration efforts, viewed as the front-runner to replace him, The Times said.

BP is also selling assets around the world to help shore up its finances after pledging to set aside $20 billion to meet the costs of the spill. The company said on Tuesday it reached a $7 billion deal with U.S. firm Apache Corp, a large part of its planned sale of $10 billion in assets. BP said Apache would pay a $5 billion cash deposit on July 30 as part of the deal for exploration and production facilities in North America and Egypt. The company said the deal would include assets in New Mexico, natural gas in western Canada and concessions in Egypt. Earlier, it announced it would sell $1.7 billion worth of assets in Vietnam and Pakistan.

BP may try "static kill": Allen

(Reuters) - BP Plc and U.S. government scientists are in talks about trying to plug its Gulf of Mexico well from the top with a so-called "static kill," the top U.S. spill official said on Tuesday. Retired Coast Guard Admiral Thad Allen also told reporters at a briefing in Washington that he approved extending BP's key pressure test on the blown-out Macondo well another day. He said that the new procedure could augment a relief well, which remains on target to kill the leak by mid-August. "We'll probably have a good idea over the next 24 hours exactly what the detailed plan by BP would be to do that," he said. Like BP's failed "top kill" in May, a static kill would involve pumping heavy drilling mud and cement into the well through a hose into a failed blowout preventer at the seabed.

Kent Wells, BP's senior vice president of exploration and production, explained at a separate briefing that the difference would be the cap atop that blowout preventer, which now shuts in all flows. During the top kill, drilling mud pumped into the blowout preventer shot out of an uncovered pipe at the top along with leaking crude. The cap closes that escape route and keeps pressure manageable, Wells said. The relief well is expected to intercept the blown-out well near its bottom, about 13,000 feet beneath the seabed, by the end of July, Wells said. Mud and cement would be pumped in to seal the well, and the static kill operation could do the same from the top.

Swine Flu Fizzles Out; WHO May Declare End to Pandemic Alert

Public health experts are likely to tell the world this month it can breathe easier: The swine flu pandemic is ending. The World Health Organization's emergency committee may convene next week to review infection data from Argentina to New Zealand and recommend that the agency declare the century's first flu pandemic to be over, said two people familiar with the matter. They declined to be identified because the deliberations are confidential. WHO Director-General Margaret Chan has to decide whether the virus warrants extra vigilance as it circles the globe a second time with no sign it's becoming deadlier or developing resistance to Roche Holding AG's Tamiflu drug. More than $14 billion was spent on vaccines and medicines to fight the germ, which shared features of the Spanish flu of 1918 while causing little more than a fever and a cough in a majority of patients. "We have to count our lucky stars," said Malik Peiris, professor of microbiology at Hong Kong University, in a telephone interview. "We were really fortunate that on this occasion it was a very mild infection." A decision by Chan to scale down the pandemic response will be guided by how the virus evolves and a date for an announcement hasn't been set, said Gregory Hartl, a WHO spokesman.

'Very Watchful'

The emergency panel was to convene as early as today, the two people said. The WHO late yesterday decided it may take a little longer to review the latest flu data and allow Argentina to wrap up its vaccination campaign, one of the people said. The WHO moved to the top level of its six-step pandemic alert in June 2009 after the discovery of the new H1N1 virus in Mexico and the U.S. two months earlier, sparking what the agency described as a health emergency of international concern. The virus is now circulating at low levels worldwide after killing at least 18,337 people, WHO said on July 16. "We are still not at the end of the Southern Hemisphere flu season, so we have to be very watchful," Hartl said yesterday by telephone from WHO's headquarters in Geneva. U.S. health authorities determined last month that special medical measures to fight the first flu pandemic in 41 years are no longer required and said other countries are likely to make similar assessments in coming weeks. Americans probably increased spending on cold, cough and throat remedies to $3.6 billion last year as the pandemic spurred demand for influenza relief, Mintel International Group Ltd. said in October. The London-based research company estimated U.K. consumers spent 428 million pounds ($653 million) in 2009 alleviating flu symptoms with products that don't require a doctor's prescription.

Foot Mouth Disease/FMD

FMD Outbreak Reported in Russia

The World Organisation for Animal Health has reported an outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Russia. To date, the disease has affected cattle, swine, sheep and goats. Russian veterinary authorities sent an immediate notification to the OIE on Monday. A total of 112 cattle were found affected, while 2256 showed signs of susceptibility. In the case of swine, four animals were found affected while 50 were found susceptible to the disease. No animals were destroyed. According to the report, the outbreak occurred about 7 miles from the Chinese border. The source of the outbreak is remains inconclusive and is under investigation.

USDA to reconsider ousting of worker over race charges

Video of speech was 'deliberately edited to create a false impression of racial bias,' NAACP says
Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said Wednesday he will reconsider the USDA's decision to oust a black employee over racially tinged remarks after learning more about what she said. Vilsack issued a short statement early Wednesday morning after Shirley Sherrod, who until Tuesday was the Agriculture Department's director of rural development in Georgia, said she was pressured to resign because of her comments that she didn't give a white farmer as much help as she could have 24 years ago.

Sherrod said her remarks, delivered in March at a local NAACP banquet in Georgia, were part of a larger story about learning from her mistakes and racial reconciliation, not racism, and they were taken out of context by bloggers who posted a video showing only parts of her speech. Vilsack's statement came after the NAACP posted the full video of Sherrod's comments Tuesday night and retracted its earlier condemnation of her. "I am of course willing and will conduct a thorough review and consider additional facts to ensure to the American people we are providing services in a fair and equitable manner," Vilsack said.

On Tuesday, NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous said that the group was "snookered" into believing that Sherrod expressed racist sentiments at a local NAACP meeting in Georgia earlier this year. After initially supporting her ouster, Jealous changed his mind and said she should keep her job. The Obama administration's move to reconsider her employment was a reversal on the position just hours earlier, when a White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said President Barack Obama had been briefed on Sherrod's resignation after the fact and stood by the Agriculture Department's handling of it...

FDA Says Raw Milk Is Not Worth Risk of Contamination

July 20 (THAINDIAN NEWS) Raw milk contains too much harmful bacteria, according to the United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA), such as E coli and salmonella which makes the possible benefits of drinking it not worth the risks of harm to those who ingest it. Although these types of bacteria can cause people to become very sick, and has even been reported to have caused death in some cases, many Americans feel that the risks are worth it. Many raw milk advocates visit dairy farms in order to get their own raw milk, and have been known to pay up to 10 dollars a gallon. Still others have purchased goats or their own cattle in order to have their own raw milk, since it has been banned by the FDA. The advocates scoff at the ban, and say that if people can buy alcohol, fast food, and cigarettes, then a ban on raw milk is silly. Clean, raw milk which came from cows which had only been fed grass was once considered to be a medicine during the early part of the last century. It was considered a kind of "stem cell food" when it came straight from the cow. According to history, people have used it since the time of Hippocrates until after World War II and it was often called "white blood", which nourished many people.

Study finds no clear safety advantage for grass-fed beef

Jul 20, 2010 (CIDRAP News) – A recent study of a modest sample of US retail beef products found little difference between the levels of bacteria in grass-fed and conventionally raised beef, despite marketing claims that grass-fed beef is safer. Reporting in Foodborne Pathogens and Disease, researchers said they found no significant differences in total coliform bacteria, Escherichia coli, or Enterococcus species. They also looked at antimicrobial resistance and found mixed evidence, with some signs of increased resistance in bacteria isolated from conventional beef as compared with grass-fed beef. "Taken together, these data indicate that there are no clear food safety advantages to grass-fed beef products over conventional beef products," says the report by investigators from Purdue University in Indiana and Zhejiang University in Hangzhou, China.

They write that grass-fed beef products are often marketed as safer than conventional grain-finished beef because of the potential effects of the grass diet on gut microbes. But they suggest that other factors, including where and how beef is processed and whether cattle are fed preventive antimicrobials, may have larger effects on contamination in finished products. Grass-fed cattle are more likely to be processed in small facilities and are less likely to be given preventive antibiotics, the authors say. In view of these factors, they hypothesized that grass-fed beef would have higher overall contamination rates but that conventional products would carry bacteria with higher levels of antimicrobial resistance.

To test this, they collected and analyzed samples of conventional beef and beef labeled as grass-fed from retail stores in Illinois and Indiana between July 2008 and March 2009. Fifty conventional samples were collected from four outlets, and 50 grass-fed samples were gathered from 10 sources, including retail stores, farm stores, and farmers' markets. About two thirds of the samples in each set were solid cuts of beef such as steaks, and the rest were ground beef. The samples were washed according to a standard protocol, and the wash solution was then tested for bacteria. The bacteria also were tested for resistance to various antimicrobials. Testing showed no difference in overall coliform contamination of the sample sets (conventional beef, 2.6 log-10 colony-forming units [CFU] per milliliter of rinsate; grass-fed beef, 2.7 CFU/mL of rinsate). Likewise, solid cuts and ground beef did not differ in coliform levels.

U.S. company recalls chicken nuggets

LOS ANGELES, July 20 (Xinhua) -- A U.S. company has recalled more than 91,000 pounds of frozen fully cooked chicken nuggets sold at Walmart stores because the products may contain plastic pieces, CBS reported on Tuesday. In response to consumer complaints, the company, Perdue Farms Inc., made a checkup and found foreign objects -- pieces of blue plastic -- inside the nuggets, according to the report. The products, produced on June 9, were all shipped to Walmart, under its store brand, Great Value, a Perdue spokesman said. Each bag bears a best if used by date of June 9, 2011 as well as an establishment number of P-33944, and a case code of 8900A0160. It was not immediately known whether there was any incident in relation with the problematic products. The Georgia-based company said anyone concerned about an injury from consumption of this product should contact a physician.

GIPSA Rule Takes Hot Seat at House Subcommittee Hearing

The House Ag Subcommittee on Livestock met Tuesday to review livestock and related USDA programs ahead of the 2012 Farm Bill. Subcommittee Chair David Scott says the hearing was a productive one - allowing members to explore in depth a wide array of issues with the department. He says it also brought several issues to light that require more thorough investigation in the future. According to Ranking Member Randy Neugebauer fair and transparent markets are necessary for orderly commerce between producers, packers, processors, retailers and consumers. But he says the policy process must be fair and transparent as well - so the path of good intentions does not lead to the land of unintended consequences. Neugebauer is disappointed that the comment period on the GIPSA rule announced last month is only 60 days and will close before the USDA/DOJ workshops on the subject are completed. He joined 21 of his colleagues to request a 120 day extension. USDA Under Secretary for Marketing and Regulatory Programs Edward Avalos was the primary witness Tuesday. He says joined by administrators from USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Agricultural Marketing Service and Grain Inspection, Packers, and Stockyards Administration.

Key US senators seek progress on S.Korea trade pact

WASHINGTON — A group of senior US senators offered President Barack Obama their "strong support" Tuesday as he forges ahead with a free trade deal with South Korea opposed by some of his Democratic allies. "We write to applaud your call for a prompt resolution of outstanding issues to the US-Korea Free Trade Agreement (KORUS FTA) this year and to reiterate our strong support for such action," the lawmakers wrote in a letter to Obama. The group included Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman John Kerry, Senate Agriculture Committee Blanche Lincoln, and Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Daniel Inouye -- all Democrats. It also included Independent Senator Joe Lieberman, who chairs the Senate Homeland Security Committee; Democratic Senator Dianne Feinstein, who chairs the Senate Intelligence Committee; and East Asia and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee Chairman Jim Webb, a Democrat.

Democratic Senators Mark Warner, Daniel Akaka, Maria Cantwell, and Mark Begich were also part of the group, which threw its weight behind Obama's vow to resolve difficult disputes holding up congressional approval for the deal. "We share your commitment to addressing the outstanding issues with the Agreement, including trade in beef and autos, and securing congressional approval in an expeditious manner," the lawmakers wrote. The group said approving the agreement would bolster ties with South Korea, and send a message to North Korea, while failure to approve the pact "could have wide-ranging repercussions for US engagement and influence" in the region. "We look forward to your prompt submission of the Agreement to the Congress, and we stand by to assist you in resolving any outstanding issues in order to ensure that this Agreement garners widespread support and is approved by the Congress in an expeditious fashion," they wrote.

But organized labor, a critical support base for Obama's Democratic Party with critical November mid-term elections looming, and several Democratic lawmakers have vowed to fight the deal which they say would hurt workers...

Accused terror suspect pleads not guilty

Man is accused of conspiring to help al-Qaida

BOSTON — A man accused in a terror plot to kill Americans pleaded not guilty Tuesday to federal charges that he conspired to help al-Qaida. Tarek Mehanna smiled and nodded to dozens of supporters in a federal courtroom in Boston before he was arraigned on a charge of conspiring to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization. The charge was added last month in a superseding indictment against Mehanna and Ahmad Abousamra, a former Massachusetts man who U.S. authorities say is now in Syria. The men already faced charges that they conspired to kill American troops in Iraq, assassinate two unnamed U.S. politicians and shoot shoppers in U.S. malls. A trial date of Oct. 3, 2011, was set to give the defense time to examine thousands of pages of government evidence.

Mehanna's lawyer, J.W. Carney Jr., said he expects to file a motion to dismiss some or all of the charges against Mehanna in February. Carney has said prosecutors built their case based on anti-American statements Mehanna made from 2002 to 2006, when he was in college. Carney has said Mehanna's statements, though unpopular, are protected by the First Amendment. Authorities have said Mehanna and two other men charged never came close to pulling off an attack but did seek training at terrorist camps in the Middle East. The men allegedly told friends they were rejected for terrorist training because of their nationality, ethnicity or inexperience, or that they were unable to make contact with people they hoped would get them into camps. Prosecutors allege that the men dropped plans to attack shopping malls because their weapons contact said he could only find handguns, not automatic weapons.

Report: Warmer climate puts water supplies at risk

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) - A new report says more than 1,000 counties across the United States are at risk for potential water shortages by midcentury as warmer temperatures deplete supplies and demand for water rises. The report, released Tuesday by the Natural Resources Defense Council, says some regions including the Northeast could see a boost to water supplies as climate change shifts weather patterns. But for much of the rest of the country, the group paints a sobering picture of warm temperatures further taxing aquifers already stressed by heavy agricultural and consumer use. The report did not factor in future improvements to water supply systems. Fourteen states were highlighted as being most at risk: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

Rubberized dam breaks at man-made Arizona lake

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) - A rubberized dam on a man-made lake near Phoenix has collapsed, sending hundreds of gallons of water gushing into the dry Salt River bed. Tempe police and fire department crews were evacuating the area around Tempe Town Lake and anyone who may be along the river bottom, but there were no immediate reports of any injuries. The lake near the campus of Arizona State University has four dams on its west end. Authorities say there was a break in the middle section. Tempe bought the dams in 1998 and filled the lake the following year.

U.S. announces new sanctions against N.Korea

Measures are designed to stop nuclear proliferation, Clinton says in Seoul

SEOUL — The United States announced new sanctions against North Korea on Wednesday including on the purchase and sale of arms and an asset freeze on individuals. U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said at a joint press conference in Seoul that the sanctions are part of a series of measures designed to stop nuclear proliferation. She said the moves are meant to halt illicit activities that help fund the Pyongyang regime's atomic weapons program. The sanctions were a response to the policies in Pyongyang and were not directed at the people of North Korea, Clinton said.

China flooding kills 701 in worst toll in a decade

BEIJING (AP) - Flooding this year has killed 701 people, left 347 missing and caused tens of billions of dollars in damage, the worst toll across the board that China has seen in a decade, a senior Chinese official said Wednesday. Three-quarters of China's provinces have been hit by flooding and 25 rivers have seen record-high water levels, Liu Ning, general secretary of the government's flood prevention agency, told a news conference. Aside from the 701 dead and 347 missing, 645,000 houses were toppled and overall damage totaled 142.2 billion yuan. All the figures, Liu said, were the highest China had seen since 2000. With the flood season far from over, this year is shaping up to be one of the most devastating since 1998, which was the worst in 50 years. Flooding, particularly along the Yangtze River Basin, has overwhelmed reservoirs, swamped towns and cities, and broken off hillsides causing landslides that have smothered communities.

Police: 2 killed in Russian power station attack

ROSTOV-ON-DON, Russia (AP) - Two carloads of assailants attacked a hydroelectric station in southern Russia on Wednesday, killing two workers and setting off bombs. The attack took place in Kabardino-Balkariya, one of the republics in Russia's restive Caucasus region where clashes with insurgents are frequent. A spokesman for the republic's police, Adlan Kakakuyev, said two cars carrying a half-dozen assailants attacked the Baksan plant, killing two guards and wounding three others in gunfire. The attackers then set off explosives in several parts of the 25-megawatt plant and detonated them. The assailants fled. There were no immediate claims of responsibility for the attack. The explosions and subsequent fire destroyed two of the plant's three power units, but there was no danger of flooding downriver, the state news agency ITAR-Tass cited power company RusGidro as saying. The dam and plant are on the Baksan River, a waterway that flows into the Terek, a major regional river.

The assault was launched around 4:30 a.m. Kakakuyev said the same assailants are believed to have earlier opened fire on a police station in the town of Baksan. No one was hurt in that attack. The attack on the hydroelectric station was the most dramatic outburst of violence in the Russian Caucasus in recent months. Although Kabardino-Balkariya sees less violence than nearby Chechnya, Dagestan and Ingushetia, the republic suffers from persistent tensions stemming from poverty and harsh police actions toward worship by unsanctioned Muslim sects. In October 2005, dozens of men stormed the capital city, Nalchik, attacking police and government offices. Some 139 people died, including 94 militants.

National Fire News

July 20, 2010

Nationally, wildland fire activity remains light. Four new large fires were reported, three in Arizona and one in Wyoming. Firefighters contained three large fires yesterday. Fifty-four large fires are being managed to achieve multiple objectives throughout the states. Uncontained large fires include only fires being managed under a full suppression strategy.

The Department of the Interior personnel is assigned to several locations in the Gulf of Mexico to assess and mitigate impacts resulting from the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. For more information regarding the response effort visit the following website, <http://www.deepwaterhorizonresponse.com/go/site/2931/>.

Weather: A low pressure trough along the Pacific Northwest coast will bring dry and breezy conditions to portions of the Great Basin and Wyoming. Thunderstorms are expected over the Four Corner States, Wyoming and Montana.

Tropical Storm Information

Atlantic - Carib - Gulf of Mexico:

Of five tropical waves spanning the Atlantic, the one moving across the northern islands of the Caribbean and the southwestern North Atlantic has the best chance to develop.

As the upper-level low to its northwest weakens, the shearing winds are lessening and the showers and thunderstorms are looking more organized in the vicinity of Hispaniola and Puerto Rico. Low pressure may be trying to develop just north of the eastern tip of the Dominican Republic. Heavy rain will spread westward from the northern Leeward Islands, Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico into the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Turks and Caicos Islands, eastern Cuba and the southeast Bahamas. This tropical wave could become a tropical depression in the next day or two. The system is moving of toward the west-northwest at a slow rate of only 10 mph. At that rate of speed and direction, south Florida could be targeted by Friday.

Meanwhile, a tropical wave and upper level low are combining to increase shower and thunderstorm activity somewhat in the Gulf of Mexico. This system is not expected to develop as it moves off to the west between 10 and 15 mph. Shower and thunderstorm activity should increase over the southern half of Texas and northeast Mexico through Thursday as the system moves onshore.

Another tropical wave in the western Caribbean Sea is moving into Central America and the Yucatan Peninsula with scattered heavy showers and thunderstorms. This system should not develop due to its proximity to land.

A fourth wave is heading toward the central tropical Atlantic Ocean. Environmental conditions are not favorable for this wave to develop over the next two days. At its current rate of speed the wave could be in the Lesser Antilles late week.

A fifth tropical wave is just coming off of the coast of western Africa.

Eastern Pacific Basin:

There are no tropical cyclones at this time.

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA:Â <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.Â

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural DevelopmentÂ State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?Â

Thank you,

George Ko

Tom Vilsack, USDA and civil rights

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said early Wednesday morning that he's willing to reconsider his decision to force Shirley Sherrod's resignation.

"I am of course willing and will conduct a thorough review and consider additional facts to ensure to the American people we are providing services in a fair and equitable manner," Vilsack said in a statement that arrived in inboxes after 2 a.m.

But to understand why he sought Sherrod's resignation so quickly, let's go back to February 2009. That's when Vilsack publicly vowed to tackle USDA's troubled civil rights history by ensuring that employees fairly treated minority and women farmers.

"Some folks refer to USDA as the last plantation, and it has a pretty poor history of taking care of people of color," Vilsack said at the time. "You've got outright bias and discrimination."

"Also you've got good people who don't even know that they're discriminating," said Vilsack. "It's necessary to begin the process of reeducating people."

Vilsack made those comments in Albany, Ga., Sherrod's home town. And he said them at a conference hosted by the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund, the same group Sherrod worked for in 1986 when she first met white farmer Roger Spooner.

Reeducating employees required an $8 million consulting contract with Jackson Lewis Corporate Diversity Counseling Group. And it required reviewing tens of thousands of complaints leveled against USDA during George W. Bush's presidency. The review has been led by a 34-year USDA veteran whom Vilsack coaxed out of retirement.

"When this department was established in 1862 by Abraham Lincoln, he referred to it as the people's department," Vilsack told colleague Krissah Thompson in February. "In order to be consistent with that legacy, it's necessary that our programs and our approach reflect an appreciation for everyone's rights. We took a look at [these] prior issues and are in the process of trying to address each of them."

The efforts received little national news coverage until this week when a three-minute clip of Sherrod's now-infamous speech surfaced. Her message -- that Americans need to see beyond a person's skin color -- was tainted by an impolitic delivery White House officials consider too damaging.

"This controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices," Vilsack said Tuesday, adding later that, "The controversy surrounding [Sherrod's] comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia."

"Our policy is clear," he continued. "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers."

Did Vilsack make the right decision, or did he overreact at the mercy of the web and cable news cycle? Or did he have to accept Sherrod's resignation in order to reinforce his work on civil rights? It's a question many in Washington will continue asking today.

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA:Â <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.Â

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural DevelopmentÂ State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?Â

Thank you,

George Ko

Looking for the total number of claims filed under Pigford to date.

-How many of those claims have been paid (and price tag)?

-How many of those claims have been denied?

-How many cases of fraud have been discovered? How many have been prosecuted?

-Also would like a statement addressing allegations that Mrs. Sherrod was given her job as part of her settlement with USDA?

Sorry to hit you with all this but need a response by 4pm today please. Best way to reach me is email or cell. Thank you,
Todd

Shirley Sherrod considering job offer in USDA outreach office

By The Post's Lisa Rein

The former Department of Agriculture official who was forced to resign last week after an out-of-context video of remarks she made were published on a conservative website tells CBS News http://www.cbsnews.com/8301-503544_162-20011765-503544.html she is still considering a job offer as deputy director of the agency's Office of Advocacy and Outreach.

Sherrod said she sat down to read through the offer for the first time this morning, but has not read it in its entirety yet. She still has many questions about the offer before coming to any decision, she said, such as who is the director of the department and whether and how much money is appropriated for the work that should be accomplished in the position.

"I need to have a conversation with someone," Sherrod said, though she was not sure whether she would speak with Vilsack directly.

Invite her to DC asap, or to meet with the SEC wherever she can.

Or to meet with you and Karen and your white house guy, and then the SEC when he returns. Have to get above the OAO level.

Would be good to have her where she can also informally bump into Cheryl and others with whom she may like to speak.

She is putting out a peace branch.

I thought this piece, from the Washington Post on Sunday was more reasoned than most.

L

By Charles J. Ogletree Jr. and Johanna Wald

Sunday, July 25, 2010

President Obama has called and chatted with Shirley Sherrod. Tom Vilsack and Ben Jealous have issued heartfelt apologies <<http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/07/21/AR2010072103871.html>> . There is talk of a "Chardonnay summit" in the Rose Garden. The subtext to all this? Let's wrap up this incident quickly so we can all go on our vacations guilt-free, secure in the knowledge that our "post-racial society" remains intact.

Once again, in the midst of the cacophony <<http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/07/22/AR2010072201691.html>> , calls abound for a national "dialogue" on race. Yet our nation cannot muster the patience or stamina to sustain such a discussion beyond a single news cycle. In some ways, Sherrod's tale is a metaphor for this country's aborted efforts to address race. In its entirety, her deeply moving story was about transformation and reconciliation between blacks and whites. It contained the seeds of progress and healing. She spoke of blacks and whites working together to save farms and to end poverty and suffering. But Sherrod, and those listening to her story, could get to her hopeful conclusion only by first wading through painful admissions of racial bias and struggle.

Unfortunately, our news and political cycles make it impossible for any of us to stay in a room long enough to reach that transformative moment. At the barest suggestion of race, we line up at opposite corners and start hurling accusations. Attorney General Eric Holder was widely criticized last year for suggesting that we are a "nation of cowards"

<<http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2009/02/20/AR2009022003643.html>> when it comes to such discussions. The reaction to his comments is a reminder that we cannot continue to ignore this challenge. Yet Americans refuse to acknowledge that, in today's society, racial attitudes are often complicated, multi-layered and conflicted.

Racial inequality is perpetuated less by individuals than by structural racism and implicit bias. Evidence of structural inequality is everywhere: in the grossly disproportionate numbers of young black men and women in prison; in the color of students shunted into remedial and special education tracks; in the stubborn segregation of our neighborhoods and schools; in the lack of recreational and academic opportunities for children of color in poor communities; in the inferior medical treatment that people of color receive; and in the still appallingly small numbers of men and women of color in law firms, corporations and government. It is evident, too, in the history of blatant discrimination against black farmers practiced by the Agricultural Department.

But that does not make doctors, nurses, police officers, judges, teachers, lawyers, city planners, admission officers or others prejudiced. Most are well-intentioned professionals who believe themselves to be free of racial bias. From their perspective, it is not easy to connect individual actions and decisions to broader structural conditions and environments built up over decades and even centuries.

Implicit bias is a reality we must confront far more openly. A growing mass of compelling research reveals the unconscious racial stereotypes many of us harbor that affect our decisions. Such attitudes do not make us prejudiced; they make us human. Those who take the /implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/

http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=901453 . Implicit bias has been shown to factor into hiring decisions and into the quality of health care that individuals receive. Mazharin Banaji and Jerry Kang, leading scholars on implicit bias, have noted: "As disturbing as this evidence is, there is too much of it to be ignored."

<http://www.people.fas.harvard.edu/%7bt%7dmbworks/articles/manuscripts/Kang.pdf>

The good news is that structures can be dismantled and replaced and unconscious biases can be transformed, as happened to Shirley Sherrod and the family she helped, the Spooners <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/07/21/AR2010072106437.html> . First, though, they must be acknowledged. We and others researching race and justice are committed to untangling the web of structures, conditions and policies that lead to unequal opportunities. Our nation has to stop denying the complexity of our racial attitudes, history and progress. Let's tone down the rhetoric on all sides, slow down and commit to listening with less judgment and more compassion. If Americans did so, we might find that we share more common ground than we could have imagined.

BLACK FARMERS ASK FOR SECRETARY VILSACK's RESIGNATION

Zero Tolerance for Discrimination for all USDA Employees

Memphis, TN---July 26, 2010---The Black Farmers and Agriculturalists

Association, Incorporated (BFAA, Inc.) is planning a press conference for Tuesday, August 3, 2010, to ask the Obama Administration for the immediate resignation of Tom Vilsack, Secretary of Agriculture.

This press conference will be held outside of, the Office of the Secretary at USDA, 1400 Independence Avenue, main building, north entrance (next to mall) at 10:00 o'clock in Washington, D.C. On Monday, July 20, 2010, Tom Vilsack ordered the firing and forced resignation, of Shirley Sherrod, via Blackberry, as per the directions of Cheryl Cook of USDA in Washington, D. C. Ms. Cook indicated to Ms. Sherrod that the White House was requesting this resignation because certain conservative talk show hosts were going to air certain parts of a speech for which Ms. Sherrod had made at a NAACP function earlier this year: that a tape of the speech proved that she (Sherrod) harbored and "displayed" racial animus toward a Georgia White farmer who was being foreclosed on by USDA in 1986. Ms. Sherrod was not even given an opportunity to provide a cursory explanation of the statements made at the NAACP meeting before being terminated. In his reasoning for letting Ms. Sherrod go, Secretary Vilsack stated that, "our policy is clear," Vilsack said. "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person." Mr. Vilsack is required, as is every other government official, to be bound by oath or affirmation, to support the constitution of the United States, as codified under Article VI, clause 3 of the constitution. On Monday, July 20th 2010, Mr. Vilsack demonstrated and "displayed" to this nation, by denying Due Process and equal protection under the law to Ms. Sherrod, that he, not Ms. Sherrod, is the USDA employee not capable or equipped to carry out that sacred and solemn oath. USDA and its white employees have been found guilty of discriminating against Black farmers by a Federal District Court Judge over 13, 000 times in the Pigford v. Vilsack class action lawsuit," states Thomas Burrell, President of BFAA, Inc. "Not one of these white employees has ever been fired by Mr. Vilsack for their court ordered unconstitutional and racist behavior against one of those Black farmers," Burrell continues. "Zero tolerance applies only when discrimination is alleged, not proven, to be committed by an African American USDA employee," Burrell concludes. BFAA, Inc will also have its thousands of members to contact their congressional representatives and ask them also to call for Mr. Vilsack's removal from public trust. #####

Mr. Reed,

I just got off the phone with Ralph Paige. The Federation of Southern Cooperatives annual meeting is Aug. 19-21. Earlier this month he had invited the Secretary to attend if possible – and especially if Pigford funding passed. He has renewed the invitation for the Secretary to attend if he is interested in a platform to discuss his views on diversity and disparity in agriculture. The morning of the 20th they have Jonathan Coppess, Dave White and Tom Tidwell (tentative) there to discuss their agency programs and access for minority farmers. The afternoon of the 20th is a discussion on the 2012 farm bill and how minority farmers can be engaged early in the process of providing input. On the morning of the 21st they have two keynote speakers: Ben Jealous and Shirley Sherrod.

If the Secretary does not attend the annual meeting, Ralph would welcome a letter from the Secretary to include in the annual report that is distributed at his annual meeting. The deadline is very near so we need to put it together quickly. Should we submit a letter if the Secretary does not attend the meeting and if so, who should draft it?

Wanted to make sure you saw this.

The Black Farmers and Agriculturalists Association based in Memphis, TN is calling on Tom Vilsack to resign as U.S. Agriculture secretary in the wake of his unwarranted firing of Shirley Sherrod last week. The group has scheduled a press conference for next Tuesday, August 3, outside the USDA building to ask the Obama Administration for Vilsack's resignation.

BFAA President Thomas Burrell said the organization represents 10,000 black farmers or their heirs.

This is from the press release he sent out:

"In his reasoning for letting Ms. Sherrod go, Secretary Vilsack stated that, "our policy is clear." Vilsack said, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person."

Quoting Burrell, the press release goes on to say:

"USDA and its white employees have been found guilty of discriminating against Black farmers by a Federal District Court Judge over 13, 000 times in the Pigford v. Vilsack class action lawsuit. Not one of these white employees has ever been fired by Mr. Vilsack for their court ordered unconstitutional and racist behavior against one of those Black farmers. Zero tolerance applies only when discrimination is alleged, not proven, to be committed by an African American USDA employee.

The association also plans to have its members contact their congressional representatives to lobby for Vilsack's removal.

Vilsack, Iowa's former governor, subsequently apologized to Sherrod and offered her another job. Although he took responsibility for making the incorrect decision to fire her, based on a selectively edited piece of video of a speech she gave, it's suspected he was ordered to do so by someone in the White House.

The Bitter Ironies in USDA's Firing of Shirley Sherrod

The conflagration that embroiled the US Department of Agriculture last week (July 19) over the knee-jerk dismissal of an African American official who was falsely accused of reverse discrimination is only the latest travesty at an agency that has a notorious record on racial issues.

The department abruptly ousted long-time employee Shirley Sherrod in reaction to what turned out to be a heavily edited video, disseminated by a discredited right-wing blogger, that grossly distorted the message of a speech Sherrod gave in March about her past experiences and feelings about race and discrimination in USDA. Too late, Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, the USDA and the White House realized their mistake and apologized, as indeed did President Obama. USDA offered Sherrod a new position, but she has yet to say whether she will accept.

There is bitter irony in the mistaken firing of Sherrod in light of USDA's current efforts to reverse its checkered past of racial discrimination toward farmers and employees of color. On Friday (July 23), The Washington Post described the reaction to the Sherrod affair among those who have felt the sting of USDA's discrimination first hand. It quoted, among others, Jerry Pennick, director of the Federation of Southern Cooperatives Land Assistance Fund, where Sherrod worked before joining USDA:

The government's poor treatment of [Sherrod] has resonated loudly and badly among farmers who have faced discrimination.

"The government stands to pay out over $2 billion for discrimination against African Americans and not one person in the department has been fired because of that, yet the first African American woman to [oversee rural development] in Georgia was fired for alleged racism," Pennick said. "And nobody has been fired for proven discrimination..."

Pennick said Vilsack had built up good will with minority farmers by meeting with them to address their concerns and speaking often about "changing the culture" of the USDA, but the treatment of Sherrod has left a bitter taste. "It stands a chance of erasing all they have done," he said.

The Environmental Working Group is well versed in the history of discrimination at USDA. EWG collaborated with National Black Farmers Association on two landmark reports, 2007's Short Crop and 2004's Obstruction of Justice, that showed a widening gap between the federal farm subsidies paid to black farmers and those paid to other farmers, due in part to discriminatory practices at USDA. Short Crop found that "in every single category of aid, and for every crop, black beneficiaries received a fraction of the aid that other beneficiaries received."

This is the system that lavishes 74 percent of all farm subsidies on the top 10 percent of recipients, the largest and wealthiest. It's the system -- stoutly defended by leaders of the House and Senate agriculture committees -- that has withstood efforts by both President Bush and President Obama to trim payments to wealthy farmers. But for all the the subsidy programs' generosity toward those least in need, it has been impossible to bring closure to black farmers victimized by past USDA discrimination. Despite a settlement brokered earlier this year by lawyers for aggrieved black farmers and the Obama administration designed to settle thousands of longstanding legal claims, funding for the settlement remains stalled in the Senate, as reported last Thursday (July 22) by CNN:

In July, the House approved a war supplemental bill that included money to pay for the settlement. It now remains stuck as senators examine the bill.

The 1997 Pigford v. Glickman case against the U.S. Agriculture Department was settled out of court 11 years ago. Under a federal judge's terms dating to 1999, qualified farmers could receive $50,000 each to settle claims of racial bias.

As a senator, Barack Obama sponsored "Pigford II," a measure in the 2008 Farm Bill that reopened the case. In February of this year, his administration brokered a $1.25 billion settlement for Pigford II. But Congress missed two deadlines, one in March and the other in May.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Thursday blasted Senate Republicans for holding up the process, saying that they have "rejected over and over again any legislation that has had the Pigford settlement in it."

When EWG and NBFA partnered on the 2007 report, it seemed unimaginable that the restitution issue would linger into 2010 while black farmers and their families languished. Sadly, as the Associated Press reports, they'll have to wait longer.

Late Thursday, the Senate stripped $1.2 billion for the claims from an emergency spending bill, along with $3.4 billion in long-overdue funding for a settlement with American Indians who say they were swindled out of royalties by the federal government.

Black farmers are once again being denied justice, while other farm interests -- with powerful backers in the Senate -- take priority. From the National Journal (subscription required).

Facing a tough re-election battle, Sen. Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark., is fighting for a vehicle to move a disaster aid package benefiting her state's farmers that she has touted as evidence of her sway as Senate Agriculture chairwoman. Lincoln has won Majority Leader Reid's agreement to add the package to a small-business jobs bill he might offer this week, but the measure still faces several obstacles, according to Senate leadership aides. The roughly $2 billion disaster package may be an obscure provision nationally, but it is a major matter for Lincoln, who has frequently cited it in her race against Rep. John Boozman, R-Ark.

What the National Journal story does not mention is that the farmers who would receive aid in Lincoln's package need only show a minor 5 percent loss in their crops in order to receive taxpayer assistance -- a threshold so low that even subsidy proponent, House Agriculture Committee Chairman Collin Peterson, initially balked at it.

But navigating a Congress driven by powerful special interests is not the only obstacle to black farmers seeking final restitution. In August, 2007, leaked emails revealed potentially illegal lobbying by USDA employees seeking to have funding for the Pigford settlement stripped from the Farm Bill because of the "boatload" of work it would entail for them. The episode took an even more bizarre turn when the USDA barred from its offices the Government Accountability Office investigators who were probing the suspect lobbying.

Despite pressure from congress -- including from then-Senator and presidential candidate Barack Obama -- there was never any public announcement of whether USDA took disciplinary action against the employees responsible, as reported on Sept. 5, 2007, by Gannett reporter Mike Hasten (link not available):

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has conducted or is conducting an internal review of employees who plotted to illegally lobby the U.S. Senate against a farm bill that helps black farmers but it will not publicize any action taken against the employees.

Keith Williams, press secretary for Agriculture Secretary Mike Johanns, said the agency considers any actions taken against employees to be "a personnel issue" that, like any employer's actions, would not be a public matter.

An Aug. 2 e-mail circulated by employees of the Farm Service Agency in Virginia urged opposition to a farm bill provision reopening the settlement of a discrimination lawsuit settlement against the USDA. During a specified period, the agency paid $50,000 to every black farmer who could show that he was discriminated against in receiving loans or other assistance.

The e-mail urging fellow FSA employees to lobby senators to block the House-passed bill triggered several congressmen, including presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama, and government interest groups to call for a full investigation into the matter.

The message quoted a top FSA official as saying it would be "awful" to allow more black farmers to qualify for the $50,000 settlements issued before a deadline in 1999. It also said the official, Carolyn Cooksie, deputy administrator for farm loans, was already lobbying against the provision.

John Boyd, of the National Black Farmers Association, told the Gannett reporter that the USDA also never took action against the employees responsible for the original discrimination:

Boyd said USDA never took action against the employees that were found in the Pigford lawsuit to be discriminating against black farmers.

"The biggest downfall over the years with the department is lack of accountability," he said.

Perhaps something positive can come from the Sherrod controversy in the form of a quick resolution to the Pigford funding issue. President Obama made clear in his historic presidential campaign speech on race that addressing racial divisions was a driving motivation for his decision to seek the highest office:

I chose to run for the presidency at this moment in history because I believe deeply that we cannot solve the challenges of our time unless we solve them together - unless we perfect our union by understanding that we may have different stories, but we hold common hopes; that we may not look the same and we may not have come from the same place, but we all want to move in the same direction - towards a better future for our children and our grandchildren.

The children and grandchildren of black farmers pushed from the land as a result of discrimination are in many cases the only ones left who could cheer a final decision on funding the Pigford settlements.

Consider the ironies. USDA employees discriminated against black farmers for decades. When a legal settlement finally promised justice, USDA employees lobbied against the measures. GAO investigators probing the case were tossed from USDA's offices. Then presidential candidate Obama stepped directly into the fray, demanding accountability from Bush's USDA. And now Bush's former Agriculture Secretary Mike Johanns is a Republican member of the Senate, where the funding for the settlements never seems to get voted.

To date it remains unclear if there ever has been any action on USDA's alleged illegal lobbying against the Pigford funding. In the unsettling aftermath of the Shirley Sherrod incident-- and not halfway through the term of America's first black president -- we are left to contemplate old racial wounds at USDA, and the nation as a whole.

Hi there,
Yes. She called Pearlie late this afternoon - sorry for the delay in telling you but there have been back to back meetings here. They discussed the position, its responsibilities and resources for about 45 minutes. She is aware that it is a meaningful position and that it is real (a position that will be filled by someone but one she is uniquely qualified to fill). She wants to take next week to think about it and what she wants to do next. She is exhausted.

For political appointees?

As you know, while the Secretary answered many questions from the press about Shirley Sherrod as well as the White House and USDA's press shop, the media is still interested in talking about this. If you are contacted by the media, please send the request to the Office of Communications using the following contact information:

Stephanie.chan@oc.usda.gov
202-720-4623

Some of you have asked about what to say if approached by the press in person. If you have to talk to them, let the press know that the Secretary answered these questions at his press briefing and that any further questions should go to the Office of Communications.

Information Regarding USDA's Actions

On Monday afternoon we learned about an online video showing Mrs. Sherrod saying things that we thought would make it hard to turn the page on civil rights abuses at USDA.

We immediately put her on administrative leave then asked if she was willing to resign, to which she said yes. We called her twice to ask for a letter of resignation so that we could respond to press inquiries about her status.

On Tuesday, the entire tape of the speech she gave was released by the NAACP and after watching it, we determined we had acted without all of the information.

The Secretary spoke to Shirley Sherrod on Wednesday and apologized. He also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends. That same day, the Secretary did a press briefing and spoke to the Congressional Black Caucus.

We have discussed with Mrs. Sherrod a unique opportunity at USDA and asked her to return to the Department. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA. And if she wants her old job back, she can have it.

We admit we reacted too quickly and should have taken the time to listen and learn.

The White House did not direct the Secretary to do this, it was USDA's decision.

We continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day to ensure that nothing like this happens again.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20250

Many of you have contacted me to offer your support, and for those comments, I am appreciative. This has been a very difficult week for many of us at USDA because of a decision I made regarding the employment of Shirley Sherrod. For that, I want to apologize to all of you.

I reacted too quickly. I should have taken the time to listen and learn.

I apologized to Mrs. Sherrod on Wednesday and told her I was sorry for any pain this caused her and her family. Thankfully, she graciously accepted my apology. I also offered her a unique opportunity to continue her service in federal government at USDA and I am hopeful that she accepts.

As we all have learned, Mrs. Sherrod has a compelling story to tell. She and her family endured discrimination and overcame adversity. Fighting to advance justice and equality, she has helped farmers who were struggling to keep their land, fought for women in need of social and economic justice, and also for African-American men and women who faced discrimination. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA.

We continue to make important progress correcting USDA's record on civil rights, but obviously, there is still a lot more work to do. You have heard me talk about my commitment to fairness and equality through the last 18 months, and I ask that you continue working with me to correct injustices of the past.

Thank you for your commitment to USDA and your continued service to the American people.

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

Sorry for the delay.

I received your forward of Krysta's message indicating that the Secretary wanted Shirley on Admin Leave at 3:33 p.m. Per my outgoing call log, I called the GA state office at 3:37 (adjusting for my phone's clock being off by 4.5 hours).

There was no answer at the state office, so I call her cell phone at 3:38 and reached her. That was the conversation putting her on leave and hearing her explanation.

I called her back on her cell phone at 4:42 to ask whether she'd be willing to resign.

I called her a third time on her cell phone at 5:56 to ask whether she'd be willing to offer a letter of resignation by the end of the day.

I called her a fourth time at 6:35 to ask whether she'd be willing to pull over to the side of the road, and submit a resignation by email.

I received her email at 6:55 and forwarded to WHLO.

Today

Statement by Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

Senator Lincoln is going to speak with Dallas before the hearing and ask for a full briefing on this issue as soon as is possible. Dallas is going to say that we would be willing to brief as soon as all of the information gathering is complete. Senator Lincoln will use that information with the press and potentially in the hearing saying that the Under Secretary has ensured the committee that he or others would provide a thorough briefing of the situation at a later date. Tina and I agree that this is a good course of action, and will allow the committee to focus on the subject of the hearing.

let me just look at some notes here. suzanne malveaux, one of our correspondents is recording this from the white house. the white house did not pressure her. it was the secretary's decision as he has said.

that's not what they told me. that's not what cheryl cooke conveyed to me. each time she said it she said the white house.

are you still there?

i'm still here.

sorry about that. shirley, hold on just a moment. i understand we just got some sound with your boss, the secretary of agriculture. that would be tom vilsack. we just now concluded an interview with him. i think we're ready to turn some sound around on this. let's do it. rog, if you've got it, go ahead.

this is obviously a very difficult circumstance for all concerned. but when you're the state rural development director your principal job is to try to develop job growth in the state of georgia. unfortunately the statements and the context of the statements created a circumstance where in the future if people were not satisfied with the decisions that the rural development director made they could attribute the decision to a wide variety of reasons that weren't necessarily related to the job.

did you hear what he said there, shirley? that's part of it.

what did he say?

well, he went back to the comment that you made and he referred specifically to the context of the comment in the way it was -- he seemed to be indicating the way it was broadcast. so he says that -- do we have some more? all right. let's go ahead and listen to some more of this. can you hear it, shirley?

yes, i can hear it.

all right. let's play some more of this. it's coming in in parts. as we get it, we'll share it with you.

when i saw the statements and the context of the statements, i determined that it would make it difficult for her to do her job as rural development director and potentially compromise our capacity to close the chapter on civil rights cases. i didn't want to do anything to jeopardize her job in terms of getting people to work in georgia. i certainly didn't want us to have a controversy making it more difficult to turn the page. it was my decision. nobody from the white house contacted me about this at all.

I just saw the brief on Rachel Maddow show and my heart dropped when I heard what y'all did to Shirley Sherrod. How can you believe, at first blush, anything FAUXNEWS has to say that has the word racism in it? The same media outlet where Beck claimed Obama is a racist? I mean seriously?

As a white male who never has to deal with the levels of discrimination a black or a woman still faces in this country, I could not believe my eyes and ears when I heard what y'all did to her. A woman who relayed the story about how when a white man was sizing her up because she was a black, woman she decided NOT to use her position of authority for payback, and this you fire her for.

Despicable You.

Dear Sir:

I was appalled at the rush to judgment of Ms. Shirley Sherrod. This spineless, politically-motivated, knee-jerk reaction was nothing more than caving in to hate-mongering. Whether or not you were directed by the White House to pursue this course of action, it was your job to conduct a thorough investigation of the allegations directed at Ms. Sherrod. You failed to exercise both leadership and stewardship in this case, and your actions have far greater racial overtones than anything attributed to her.

It is time you conducted a swift investigation into this matter, cleared Ms. Sherrod of any wrong doing, and made both personal and public apologies for this serious lapse in judgment. Frankly, Mr. Donsager, your actions in this case leave me with a grave concern over your leadership, not Ms. Sherrod's. If you want to restore some semblance of confidence in your organization, I strongly suggest that you do what you know is right and promptly rectify this scurrilous situation.

Please pass these comments along to Mr. Vilsack's office.

Dear Dallas:

I hope all is well with you. Just a note to let you know that I have known Shirley Sherrod personally for several years through our work at the National Rural Funders Collaborative and I can vouch that in my personal experience Ms. Sherrod is anything but racist in her beliefs or actions. She has actively worked on behalf of low-income farmers and southerners, without any bias because of race, culture, class or any other objectionable position. I hope that you will use your good counsel and influence to encourage Secretary Vilsack to take a closer look into this matter. Surely, the wrong decision has been made based on misinformation.

Best wishes,

Dear RDLN Network Members and Friends:

Please see the attached statement of support for Shirley Sherrod, who was forced to resign yesterday from her position as Georgia State Director for Rural Development, USDA, because of a misleading video tape circulated by a conservative group.

We ask you to write to USDA Secretary Vilsack c/o Carole Jett, Deputy Chief of Staff Jett@usda.gov or call 202-720-3631 urging that Shirley be reinstated and that an investigation be launched to determine how this injustice happened.

We suggest you also write to the White House (202)514-2001, Attorney General Eric Holder's office (202)514-2001 or (202)353-1555 since he has called for a dialogue on race, your members of Congress (Congress.org) and all news outlets.

Greetings,

With all due respect to Alice in Wonderland, the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, the former USDA Rural Development Director for the state of Georgia who was forced to resign on Monday, continues to grow "curiouser and curiouser." Undoubtedly, there are a few people at the White House and the NAACP who probably wish they could join Alice in escaping for awhile. Unfortunately for them, the story continued to unfold on all of the major networks and Hill publications this morning. As Jim Webster points out, Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack fanned a political brush fire into a nationwide firestorm. Since Monday, Vilsack has issued three separate statements on the topic, ranging from announcing Sherrod's resignation and the department's "zero tolerance" policy on racial discrimination Monday to a late night statement issued Tuesday where he offered to conduct "a thorough review and consider additional facts." I would like the issue with Ms. Sherrod considered further and her employment with the USDA be reevaluated. If the story in its entirety is about her personal journey over the last twenty four years to see beyond race, then I appreciate her honesty about her previous feelings and how she has progressed beyond those feelings.

Many of you have contacted me to offer your support, and for those comments, I am appreciative. This has been a very difficult week for many of us at USDA because of a decision I made regarding the employment of Shirley Sherrod. For that, I want to apologize to all of you.

I reacted too quickly. I should have taken the time to listen and learn.

I apologized to Mrs. Sherrod on Wednesday and told her I was sorry for any pain this caused her and her family. Thankfully, she graciously accepted my apology. I also offered her a unique opportunity to continue her service in federal government at USDA and I am hopeful that she accepts.

As we all have learned, Mrs. Sherrod has a compelling story to tell. She and her family endured discrimination and overcame adversity. Fighting to advance justice and equality, she has helped farmers who were struggling to keep their land, fought for women in need of social and economic justice, and also for African-American men and women who faced discrimination. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA.

We continue to make important progress correcting USDA's record on civil rights, but obviously, there is still a lot more work to do. You have heard me talk about my commitment to fairness and equality through the last 18 months, and I ask that you continue working with me to correct injustices of the past.

Thank you for your commitment to USDA and your continued service to the American people.

Today

Statement by Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

Yesterday

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

2

CNN clip with Secretary's comments today highlighted

let me just look at some notes here. suzanne malveaux, one of our correspondents is recording this from the white house. the white house did not pressure her. it was the secretary's decision as he has said.

that's not what they told me. that's not what cheryl cooke conveyed to me. each time she said it she said the white house.

are you still there?

i'm still here.

sorry about that. shirley, hold on just a moment. i understand we just got some sound with your boss, the secretary of agriculture. that would be tom vilsack. we just now concluded an interview with him. i think we're ready to turn some sound around on this. let's do it. rog, if you've got it, go ahead.

this is obviously a very difficult circumstance for all concerned. but when you're the state rural development director your principal job is to try to develop job growth in the state of georgia. unfortunately the statements and the context of the statements created a circumstance where in the future if people were not satisfied with the decisions that the rural development director made they could attribute the decision to a wide variety of reasons that weren't necessarily related to the job.

did you hear what he said there, shirley? that's part of it.

what did he say?

well, he went back to the comment that you made and he referred specifically to the context of the comment in the way it was -- he seemed to be indicating the way it was broadcast. so he says that -- do we have some more? all right. let's go ahead and listen to some more of this. can you hear it, shirley?

yes, i can hear it.

all right. let's play some more of this. it's coming in in parts. as we get it, we'll share it with you.

when i saw the statements and the context of the statements, i determined that it would make it difficult for her to do her job as rural development director and potentially compromise our capacity to close the chapter on civil rights cases. i didn't want to do anything to jeopardize her job in terms of getting people to work in georgia. i certainly didn't want us to have a controversy making it more difficult to turn the page. it was my decision. nobody from the white house contacted me about this at all.

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

Support for Shirley Sherrod

Shirley Sherrod, who has devoted her life to racial justice, was forced to resign yesterday as Georgia State Director of Rural Development for the United States Department of Agriculture, caught in the crossfire of discrimination charges between the Tea Party and the National Association of Colored People (NAACP).

On July 13, the NAACP charged elements of the Tea Party with racism. On July 18, Fox News began playing a video clip circulated by a conservative activist that was framed to show Ms. Sherrod telling an NAACP audience last March that she was reluctant to help a white farmer, whereas the point of the story she was telling was that her experience with this farmer "opened her eyes" to the fact that poor white farmers could be ill treated also. It's not just black and white, she said, even on the part of the speech that was shown, "It's about the poor versus those who have."

The story is presented on the internet with a text panel stating that "Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race." This statement is false, but apparently was accepted at face value by Fox News, MSNBC, the Department of Agriculture, the White House and the NAACP.

The events in the story she was told in her speech about how her eyes were opened, actually took place twenty-four years ago, when she worked for a nonprofit organization that grew out of the Civil Rights movement with a mission to save black-owned land. In that capacity, she did in fact help the white farmer in question. She worked hard, as she related in a phone conversation and as the full story would have shown, on an emergency basis over a Memorial Day weekend, finding a more responsive lawyer than the one initially contacted, and she actually was successful in saving this white farmer's farm. She and the family became so close that the farmer and his wife drove four hours to a meeting in Atlanta several months later to attend a conference on saving black-owned land. Mrs. Eloise Spooner, the farmer's wife, spoke by phone to CNN this morning and testified to the family's friendship with Ms. Sherrod and their gratitude toward her.

Ms. Sherrod understands discrimination well. When she was sixteen, her father was murdered by a white man, who, although he was known in the community, was not brought to justice.

As the first African-American Georgia State Director for Rural Development, USDA, Ms. Sherrod was in a position to help many people of all races, and she was reaching out to many under-served communities to do just that.

In the 1960's, Ms. Sherrod and her husband, Charles, the first field secretary for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) withdrew from SNCC and formed the Southwest Georgia Project in response to SNCC's new policy, under Stokely Carmichael's leadership, that white people could no longer be members of SNCC.

In 1985, Ms. Sherrod became a participant in the Rural Development Leadership Network, a national, multicultural social change organization. She earned her master's degree from Antioch University through RDLN and became Vice Chair of our Board of Directors, working closely with our white President, our diverse Board, which includes white members, and helping to orient each new group of participants who have been black, American Indian, Latina/o, Asian, and white.

Ms. Sherrod has worked constructively with a number of other organizations with white staff and constituencies, including the Farmers Legal Action Group based in Minnesota.

In announcing Ms. Sherrod's resignation, Secretary Vilsack stated that the Department has "zero tolerance" for discrimination. We are disappointed that the Department of Agriculture, the Obama Administration, the NAACP, and several news outlets did not look into the facts and did not stand up for Ms. Sherrod.

We call upon Secretary Vilsack to reinstate Ms. Sherrod and investigate how this injustice was allowed to happen.

Shirley Sherrod Resigns from USDA over Race Remark Furor

Posted by David S Morgan

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News.

A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination.

The remarks was purportedly from a speech Sherrod gave at an NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet on March 27, 2010, in Douglas, Ga. The video clip has inflamed innumerable conservative bloggers and has lit up YouTube.

The news came a week after the NAACP and the Tea Party movement each became embroiled in accusations of racism and bigotry within the other group, and after a high-ranking Tea Party spokesperson was expelled by other movement officials after he published a blog about slavery that was deemed racist.

In a statement released Monday, NAACP President Benjamin Jealous said that the organization concurred with Vilsack accepting Sherrod's resignation, adding, "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race."

But in an interview with the Atlanta Journal Constitution, Sherrod said the clip doesn't tell the whole story. And indeed, it is a story that pre-dates her tenure at the USDA by more than two decades.

Sherrod is a graduate of Albany State University in Albany, Ga., with a masters degree in Community Development from Antioch University in Ohio. Beginning in 1985 she served as Director of the Georgia State Office for the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund, which works to help family farmers retain and develop their property.

Last July Vilsack appointed her to head the USDA's Rural Development office in Georgia.

In the video clip (which you can watch at left), Sherrod is heard telling a story about a white man who came to her for help:

"The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help.

"What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough, so that when he - I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture, and he needed to go back and report that I did try to help him.

"So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him.

"That's when it was revealed to me that it's about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white -- It IS about white and black, because I took him to one of his own . . . "

The clip ends just as Sherrod has begun talking about a realization that it is class -- not race -- that is the issue, which is ironic given how Sherrod's critics are trying to take her remarks to prove racism exists.

What's more, Sherrod told the Journal-Constitution, the encounter she's relating occurred 24 years ago, long before she was a government employee. [Indeed, Chapter 12 bankruptcy, which she says in the video had just been enacted, was instituted for family farmers in 1986.]

Sherrod also told the paper that the video except did not include the full story of her relationship with the farmer, working with him for two years to help his fight off foreclosure and keep his land, and even becoming friends with him and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

Sherrod told the paper the USDA forced her out of her position because "They were just looking at what the Tea Party and what Fox said, and thought it was too (politically) dangerous for them."

The Journal-Constitution, the Huffington Post and other media outlets have called for a release of the complete tape, in order to better judge the context of Sherrod's remarks. There is more recording available, as Breitbart has managed to release a second clip in which Sherrod discusses the paucity of black employees in government positions relating to agriculture.

Sherrod suggests it would be a good career move, even in hard economic times: "You've heard of a lot of lay-offs. Have you heard of anybody in the federal government losing their job?"

I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of the Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have versus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmer's land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners through the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

My whole life speaks for my commitment to fairness whether white or black.

On July 25, 2009 Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Shirley Sherrod as Georgia Director of Rural Development. USDA Rural Development spends over $1.2 Billion in the state of Georgia each year. On March 27, 2010, while speaking at the NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet, Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race.

Shirley Sherrod: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me, I know what he was doing. But he had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough. So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. And he needed to go back and report that I did try and help him. So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because of Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them that his own kind would take care of him. That's when it was revealed to me that its about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white...it is about white and black. It is about white and black but its not you know...it opened my eyes because I took him to one of his own.

Fox News Clip:

Geraldo Rivera: Do you denounce in the way that you ask the Tea Parties denounce racists within your ranks?

Hilary Shelton: Yes we do, we repudiate racists within our ranks.

Back to Shirley Sherrod Clip:

On July 25, 2009 Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Shirley Sherrod as Georgia Director of Rural Development. USDA Rural Development spends over $1.2 Billion in the state of Georgia each year. On March 27, 2010, while speaking at the NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet, Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race.

Shirley Sherrod: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me, I know what he was doing. But he had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough. So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. And he needed to go back and report that I did try and help him. So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because of Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them that his own kind would take care of him. That's when it was revealed to me that its about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white...it is about white and black. It is about white and black but its not you know...it opened my eyes because I took him to one of his own.

Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer

Published July 20, 2010

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign.

Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate.

"He had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," she said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FoxNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

The NAACP released a statement late Monday condemning Sherrod's admission.

"We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," the statement said.

"Her actions were shameful," it continued. "While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

Sherrod explained in the video that, at the time, she assumed the state or national Department of Agriculture had referred the white farmer to her. In order to ensure that the farmer could report back that she was indeed helpful, she said she took him to see "one of his own" -- a white lawyer.

"I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

The point of the story wasn't entirely clear; only an excerpt of the speech is included in the video clip.

"It was revealed to me that it's about poor versus those who have," she said, suggesting she had learned that race is less important.

The video clip was first posted by BigGovernment.com. The clip is dated March 27 from an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

The clip adds to the firestorm of debate over the NAACP's decision to approve a resolution at its convention last week accusing some Tea Party activists of racism -- a charge Tea Party leaders deny.

In a second clip from the same event posted online, Sherrod appeared to urge black job seekers to find work at the Department of Agriculture because the federal government won't lay people off.

"There are jobs at USDA and many times there are no people of color to fill those jobs because we shy away from agriculture. We hear the word agriculture and think, why are we working in the fields?" she said. "You've heard of a lot of layoffs. Have you heard of anybody in the federal government losing their job? That's all I need to say."

Subject: RE: Shirley Sherrod on CNN

Here's an Atlanta Journal Constitution blog post with full tape of her comments:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WnNww7TGkjo&feature=player_embedded

http://blogs.ajc.com/jay-bookman-blog/2010/07/20/in-the-curious-case-of-shirley-sherrod-lets-see-the-whole-tape/?cxntfid=blogs_jay_bookman_blog

Jay Bookman In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape
7:31 am July 20, 2010, by Jay

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist.

By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation:

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

After watching the video Monday evening, I wrote in comments that "what Sherrod says in that video – and what she apparently did – are deeply troubling... She might very well have earned a firing. But I'd like to see that rest of that video as well, because at the point it abruptly ends, she appears to be saying that it's wrong to think in terms of black and white, that she came to see things as more accurately divided between poor and rich than by race."

As I also noted, the folks at Big Government seem to have the whole video, since they also posted another segment, and it would be useful to see the rest of it.

Sherrod gets a chance to tell her side of the story in an AJC story by Marcus Garner:

"But Tuesday morning, Sherrod said what online viewers weren't told in reports posted throughout the day Monday was that the tale she told at the banquet happened 24 years ago – before she got the USDA job – when she worked with the Georgia field office for the Federation of Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund.

Sherrod said the short video clip excluded the breadth of the story about how she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period to help ward off foreclosure of his farm, and how she eventually became friends with the farmer and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

So let's see the rest of the tape, Big Government. Was Sherrod giggling among black folk about the time she put it to the white man, as the leaked excerpt suggests, or was the tape a deceptively edited excerpt of a longer story about getting beyond the issue of race, as she claims?

Let's see the tape. The evidence apparently exists to settle the question. Cough it up.

JOHN ROBERTS: The U.S. Department of Agriculture accepts the resignation of an employee after a video surfaced showing her telling an audience that she withheld assistance to a white farmer because of his race. Let's listen to what she told the NAACP.

[BEGIN VIDEO]

SHIRLEY SHERROD: I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough

[END VIDEO]

KIRAN CHETRY: Does that video tell the whole story? Joining us now on the phone from Albany, Georgia is Shirley Sherrod herself. Thanks for being with us this morning, Shirley.

SHERROD: Thank you.

CHETRY: You say this was part of the story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show you in a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. Will you finish for us how this ended?

SHERROD: Okay. I was speaking to that group like I've done many groups and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only. And I tell them the story of how I worked with a white farmer back in 1986. I was not working for the Department of Agriculture. I was working with and non-profit organization assisting farmers throughout south Georgia and the southeast. And this farmer came to me for help. I was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race, it's about those who have versus those who do not have. And I tell how I took him to a lawyer who I thought would help him. In the end, that lawyer didn't. In the end, I had to frantically look for a lawyer because when USDA lifted - I'm sorry, when the court lifted the injunction against USDA in May of 1987, this white farmer was 1 of 13 that was foreclosed on by the state of Georgia. I had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure. He couldn't - at that time we had chapter 12 -

CHETRY: Yes, but let me said - you said you didn't know enough, didn't give him the full force of what you could do. You said you did enough, and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that perhaps he could help him. What did you mean by that?

SHERROD: What I meant was, I didn't know anyone else. I didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12. But I thought if I took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

ROBERTS: Miss Sherrod, let's make it clear though, this happened 24 years ago. You eventually worked with this white farmer. You eventually became friends, you say, with the farmer and his wife.

SHERROD: Yes.

ROBERTS: So the question I have is, when the U.S. Department offering a agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, "Wait a minute, you don't know the full story. Here's the full story, why should I step down?"

SHERROD: I did say that. But they, for, some reason, the stuff that FOX and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how I tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

ROBERTS: Many people at home might be thinking, well, if you're recounting an old story, why did you succumb to pressure to step down? Why didn't you try to fight this?

SHERROD: If I tried to fight it and didn't have any support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, what would I do?

CHETRY: Let me ask you this. Did you talk to the NAACP about it? Because I just want to read for our audience what Ben Jealous, the president, said. He said, referring to you and this surfacing of the tape, "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story, she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races. She gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man, and the reaction from many in the audience is disturbing." This is from Ben Jealous. Did you try to clarify with the NAACP your story?

SHERROD: No, I haven't had a chance to talk to anyone. All of this was happening so fast. And it's unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people with that now.

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

SHERROD: I don't mind.

ROBERTS: Thanks a lot.

SHERROD: Thank you.

CHETRY: You say this was part of the story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show you in a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. Will you finish for us how this ended?

SHERROD: Okay. I was speaking to that group like I've done many groups and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only. And I tell them the story of how I worked with a white farmer back in 1986. I was not working for the Department of Agriculture. I was working with and non-profit organization assisting farmers throughout south Georgia and the southeast. And this farmer came to me for help. I was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race, it's about those who have versus those who do not have. And I tell how I took him to a lawyer who I thought would help him. In the end, that lawyer didn't. In the end, I had to frantically look for a lawyer because when USDA lifted - I'm sorry, when the court lifted the injunction against USDA in May of 1987, this white farmer was 1 of 13 that was foreclosed on by the state of Georgia. I had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure. He couldn't - at that time we had chapter 12 -

CHETRY: Yes, but let me said - you said you didn't know enough, didn't give him the full force of what you could do. You said you did enough, and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that perhaps he could help him. What did you mean by that?

SHERROD: What I meant was, I didn't know anyone else. I didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12. But I thought if I took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

ROBERTS: Miss Sherrod, let's make it clear though, this happened 24 years ago. You eventually worked with this white farmer. You eventually became friends, you say, with the farmer and his wife.

SHERROD: Yes.

ROBERTS: So the question I have is, when the U.S. Department of Agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, "Wait a minute, you don't know the full story. Here's the full story, why should I step down?"

SHERROD: I did say that. But they, for, some reason, the stuff that FOX and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how I tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

ROBERTS: Many people at home might be thinking, well, if you're recounting an old story, why did you succumb to pressure to step down? Why didn't you try to fight this?

SHERROD: If I tried to fight it and didn't have any support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, what would I do?

CHETRY: Let me ask you this. Did you talk to the NAACP about it? Because I just want to read for our audience what Ben Jealous, the president, said. He said, referring to you and this surfacing of the tape, "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story, she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races. She gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man, and the reaction from many in the audience is disturbing." This is from Ben Jealous. Did you try to clarify with the NAACP your story?

SHERROD: No, I haven't had a chance to talk to anyone. All of this was happening so fast. And it's unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people with that now.

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

SHERROD: I don't mind.

ROBERTS: Thanks a lot.

TONY HARRIS: And Shirley Sherrod is with me now from Albany, Georgia. And, Shirley, let's take our time and walk through this together. Is that okay with you?

SHIRLEY SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Okay. Shirley, just a straightforward, fundamental question here. Did you discriminate against this white farmer, Roger Spooner? He was facing foreclosure 24 years ago and, again, this was before you were working for the united states Department of Agriculture. Did you discriminate against him?

SHERROD: No, I did not discriminate against him. And, in fact, I went all out. I had to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go. All of that process – that's why I tell it, because everything that happened in dealing with him – he was the first white farmer that had come to me for help. Everything that I did working with him helped me to see that it wasn't about race. It's about those who have and those who don't. The farmer's home had done something to him that I hadn't seen them do to any black farmer. They had actually rented his land to someone else, when they didn't have a right to do that. He still had title to the land. That's why he couldn't qualify to file chapter 12 bankruptcy. That's why in the end we had to try to file chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the forced sale the first Tuesday in June.

HARRIS: I'm going to ask it again slightly differently. Did you discriminate against this white farmer 24 years ago, when you were, I guess, about 38 years old, because he brought you what you described in your March NAACP Speech as a "superior attitude?"

SHERROD: You know, initially – and that's why I say that. I took the time to weave what was happening there. He did come with a superior attitude, but I didn't discriminate. If I had discriminated against him, I would not have given him any help at all because I wasn't obligated by anyone. I wasn't working for the government. I didn't have to help him, but I did. And I went on – that was the first white farmer I helped. I went on to help hundreds of others through the years.

HARRIS: Was your – I'm trying to understand your reaction to what you described as a "superior attitude." Was your reaction, perhaps, "Look, why are you taking this attitude with me? I sit here in a position to help you, and yet you bring this attitude to me." Did that cross your mind at all and did you act upon those feelings?

SHERROD: Certainly, I didn't act upon it. You know, I'm from the South. I've lived in the South all my life, and I know how black people were treated by white people during those years. My own father was murdered by one. But I didn't let that get in the way of trying to help. I don't know why it's so difficult to see. I didn't have to help that farmer. I could have sent him out the door without giving him any help at all. But in the end we became very good friends, and that friendship lasted for some years.

HARRIS: Explain the statement in the recording that goes, "So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do."

SHERROD: You know, I could have tried to rally other farmers in support of him. I didn't know of any black farmers who would come out to try to support a white farmer at that point. That's something I could have done for black farmers. This was my first time trying to help a white farmer save his land. I wasn't really sure what I could do, because I thought at that time they had the advantages. I learned that that was not the case in working with this farmer.

HARRIS: And then you went on to say, "I did enough." What was "enough" in the case of Roger Spooner?

SHERROD: I took him -- you mean initially? I took him to a lawyer who had attended some training for lawyers on chapter 12 bankruptcy. But in the end, that lawyer wasn't doing anything. And when the Spooners said that he wasn't, I jumped into action. It took me a couple of hours calling everyone I knew. I even called to other states trying to find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the sale of his land at the courthouse steps. I was successful in the end.

HARRIS: During your time with the USDA was there ever a discrimination claim filed against you?

SHERROD: No, never. I went out of my way to -- you know, and we didn't work directly with farmers at Rural Development. We were working with cities, with sewer problems, with police cars, with health centers, with housing. That agency is the one agency, so we say, that could build a city. I didn't do any work -- and I didn't discriminate and I went out of my way to make sure no one who came to the agency was discriminated against. And, in fact, during my tenure there, I targeted nine of the poorest counties in the state to do outreach work. I had outreach meetings in all of those counties. I even started working with other USDA agencies and state agencies so that we could coordinate our efforts in these areas, and, in fact, this coming Thursday was the first meeting where we were going to pilot that, and that was in a county here in southwest Georgia, Calhoun county.

HARRIS: So, Shirley, if you didn't discriminate during your time at USDA and at least no one filed such a claim, do you accept the statement from agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack that there is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA?

SHERROD: I don't know, but I'm assuming there is. I know I didn't discriminate, and I made it very clear to the staff there at USDA that it wouldn't be tolerated during my tenure. I said it over and over again.

HARRIS: So why are you out?

SHERROD: Pardon?

HARRIS: Why are you out?

SHERROD: Why am I out? They asked me to resign, and, in fact, they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from west point, Georgia yesterday. I had at least three calls telling me the White House wanted me to resign.

HARRIS: So the pressure came from the White House?

SHERROD: And the last one asked me to pull over to the side of the road and do it.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names?

SHERROD: That's what I did.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names.

SHERROD: That was Cheryl Cook, the deputy undersecretary. She called me and I said, Cheryl, I have a 3 1/2 hour ride to get into Athens. She called me a second time, where are you now? I said I'm just going through Atlanta. She call me again and I said, I'm at least 45 minutes to an hour from Athens. She said, well, Shirley, they want you to pull over to the side of the road and do it because you're going to be on Glenn Beck tonight.

HARRIS: Wow. So the administration pressured you out?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: How do you feel about that?

SHERROD: I don't feel good about it because I know I didn't do anything wrong, and I know during my time at USDA I gave it all I had. I worked when I didn't feel like it. I pushed the staff to get out there in places they had not been into before. Like I said, the nine counties I targeted, I asked them shortly after getting there, tell me what rural development has been doing in these areas, and when they did that, there were zeros in a lot of places, and I knew this was an area where we needed to target. We needed to get programs out into some of these areas that need it, just like some other areas that had gotten the funding over and over again.

HARRIS: I So I want to be really specific here and I apologize. I just have to do it. You get, one, two, three calls from miss cook, and at the point that it is made clear to you that you need to go, how does that conversation go?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: What is said to you?

SHERROD: The very first one -- I guess there were like four calls because the very first one was before I got in my car to go to Athens. She said I was being put on administrative leave. The next call after I sat waiting and waiting because she told me she would call me right back, the next call said that they're going to have to ask me to resign.

HARRIS: Do you feel as though you had an opportunity to state your side of the story?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth.

HARRIS: The NAACP released a statement late last night saying in part we are appalled by her actions. That is an opportunity to explain what happened 24 years ago. Do you feel as though you got the opportunity, even in a phone call with the NAACP?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The NAACP has not tried to contact me one time, and they are the reason why this happened they got into a fight with the tea party, and all of this came out as a result of that.

HARRIS: Your reaction --

SHERROD: I would have appreciated -- when you look at my history of civil rights, I would have appreciated having the NAACP at least contact me and Roland martin, too, contact me to try to get the truth about what happened.

HARRIS: The reaction to your reaction to essentially being condemned by the NAACP?

SHERROD: That hurts. Because if you look at my history, that's what I'm saying -- I've done more to advance the causes of civil rights in this area than some of them who are sitting in those positions now with the NAACP. They need to learn something about me. Ey need to know about my work. They need to know what I've contributed through the years.

HARRIS: What was the point of the story you were telling to the NAACP in March? What was the point?

SHERROD: The point was to get them to understand we need to look beyond race; to look at working together. I've said to audiences here, not just that one -- in fact, I spoke at a housing conference in a county just south of here, and I said, look, we need to get beyond the Civil War. I tell them, there are good things about history from the white side and good things about history and culture from the black side. People love to come into this part of the state to see that. I tell them, we need to make the most of it, and if we work together, can do that.

HARRIS: Do you believe as a principle -- do you believe black people in power can make or have the ability -- can make race-based discriminatory decisions?

SHERROD: I'm sure that can happen. I can tell you I didn't do it.

HARRIS: Okay, that was my follow-up.

SHERROD: And you could go to any of the communities that I worked with and if the staff were free to tell you, you could talk to any of the people I've worked with since I've been at USDA, and they can tell you what my record is.

HARRIS: Shirley, stay right there. I have someone who wants to speak to this whole controversy. Her name is Eloise Spooner. She is Roger Spooner's wife -- widow this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Widow at this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Eloise, thanks for taking the time to talk to me.

ELOISE SPOONER: Thank you.

HARRIS: What do you think of this whole controversy? First of all, what do you think of Shirley?

SPOONER: She's a good friend.

HARRIS: Describe your relationship with her through the years.

SPOONER: She helped us save our farm.

How did she do that?

SPOONER: By getting in there and doing all she could do to help us.

What did your husband, your late husband, think of Shirley?

SPOONER: He's not dead. He's very much alive.

HARRIS: Really?

SPOONER: He's 87 and he's on his peterbuilt truck this morning.

HARRIS: Then I apologize. I've got incorrect information from one of the newspapers writing on this. I apologize for that.

SPOONER: That's okay.

HARRIS: Is he aware of the controversy swirling around?

SPOONER: Yes, our son, he came up and said, mama, turn on the TV to CNN and he said, it's about your friend Shirley Sherrod. And I said, what. I listened and said, that's not right. They have not treated her right because she's the one that I give credit for helping us save our farm.

HARRIS: Some of the story is that you met in the '80s, and it was a bad time?

SPOONER: Mm-hmm.

HARRIS: It was a bad time in the family's life at the time. Tell me why you were in trouble with the farm.

SPOONER: Well, we had a lot of dry weather, and we had to run the irrigation a lot. And when you'd make a good crop, you wouldn't get a good price. And just a number of things together caused it.

HARRIS: Do you remember your first interaction with Shirley?

SPOONER: Yeah. At first I looked into -- it was the market bulletin from Atlanta that we get. We've gotten it for years and years and years, and it said, if you were having trouble and about to lose your farm torque get with them. And I said, by George, I'm going to try that. And so I did, and he told us to go see a lawyer in Cairo. He said, you all might as well just go ahead and do what Diane said to do. And I was so mad when we came home. So, anyway, a few weeks later, the guy from Atlanta, the Market Bulletin, he said, what happened over in Cairo? And I said, exactly nothing. He didn't help us at all. He said, well, I'm going to get you with somebody that will help you, I think. And that's when he told us to call Shirley. And we did, and we started right then. She said there's too lawyers, there's a black lawyer and there's a white lawyer, and one -- the black lawyer is in Albany and the white lawyer is in [inaudible]. So I said, he's closer, so maybe we'll try him, the black one. We went through him for months and months and months and paid him some money, which was hard to scrape up. And he finally got with the lawyer in Donaldsonville that I had talked to, and he called and told me at the lawyer in Albany, called and told me that he could not handle us anymore, that he had this client that he had had for ten years, and he was going to have to spend a lot of time on that. He couldn't help us.

HARRIS: Hey, Eloise, a couple of quick questions here about this relationship.

SPOONER: Okay.

HARRIS: I'm just trying to establish this relationship. Explain to me -- I have a line here that says that you guys picked a bunch of tomatoes?

SPOONER: Yeah. One year, after things kind of settled down, I had a really pretty garden that year, and we going up to Albany for some reason, so I told Roger I was going to pick Shirley some tomatoes. And I did, and we carried them by to her and had a good visit.

HARRIS: You know, what do you think of the statement that's on the tape. It's undeniable, it is there, where Shirley essentially says, so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

SPOONER: Well, she gave enough that it helped us save our farm. And she went two trips -- after the lawyer in Albany did us like he did, well, then I called Shirley and told her, and she said, you're kidding me. I said, no, I'm not. That's the words she told me. She said, well, do you want us to try the one in Easterland? I said, yes, get us an appointment and we'll be ready to go.

HARRIS: Eloise, thank you for your time.

SHERROD: Please tell her want -- can you -- I don't know that she can hear me, but I haven't talked to here in years, and I'm so happy to hear that both of them are still living. And Miss Spooner, I definitely want to contact you. It's great to hear.

SPOONER: When we heard about it we tried to call you, but Roger couldn't get ahold of you.

SHERROD: Okay. Maybe you can get him.

HARRIS: We will make the connection. How's that? We will make that happen?

SHERROD: Thank you so much. It is so great to hear your voice.

HARRIS: And, Shirley, thanks to you. Thanks for your time, and a fuller explanation of your comments. Appreciate it.

SHERROD: Thank you so much.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (AP 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. Link

Dismissed employee blames media (UPI 7/20)

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet. Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday. What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government. Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending. Link

USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued (CNN 7/20)

A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Link

An African-American Agriculture Department worker resigns over her handling of a white Georgia farmer's case when she worked for a nonprofit group in 1986. It came to light when Shirley Sherrod talked about the case at an NAACP banquet earlier this year. Were her remarks a teaching moment that backfired, or evidence of racism? Sherrod says her comments were taken out of context -- that the point of her story was to unite people. Tony Harris will be talking to Sherrod at 11:00am ET on CNN, and we'll post that interview here. Watch some of her speech and phone interview with CNN's American Morning below, then tell us what you think. We'll share some of your comments on air in the CNN Newsroom, 11:00am -- 1:00pm ET. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer (FOX News 7/20)

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate... "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." Link

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA (Fox News 7/20)

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers. Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination. Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy. (BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. Request Story

Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer (MSNBC 7/20)

A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "one of his own." Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

Morning Joe (MSNBC 7/20)

Well, another story of reverse discrimination comes out today. This one is really interesting. I'm thinking that this woman regrets this comment. a USDA official in Georgia has resigned after I YouTube clip shows her admitting that race helped determine how much aid would be given to a white farmer. You're not supposed to do that, are you? I mean, I'm not -- it's probably not a good idea. for being so stupid. It's not even -- well, how about you just don't do it. Anyway, the state's director of rural development apparently made the comments during an NAACP banquet in March. Take a listen. The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Request Story

Shirley Sherrod Resigns Over USDA Race Remark Furor (CBS News 7/20)

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News. A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination. Link

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident (The Washington Post 7/20)

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her. Link

In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race. Link

Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. Link

Shirley Sherrod, who resigned Monday from the USDA. 756 Shirley Sherrod, a USDA official in Georgia, has resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer. Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during a local NAACP banquet on March 27, according to information displayed on the video. A clip of her speech first appeared Monday morning on BigGovernment.com and aired that evening on Fox News. Her resignation as the agency's state director of rural development was quickly accepted by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack. He cited a zero-tolerance policy and told CNN that he was working to "reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department." In her controversial speech, Sherrod discussed the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claimed that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." Link

NAACP Slams Shirley Sherrod's Actions As 'Shameful' (My Fox New York 7/20)

The actions of a black U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official who admitted withholding help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy were late Monday described as "shameful" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, was exposed in a video recorded at an NAACP banquet describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," she said in the video. The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FOXNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. Link

Ga. USDA Official Resigns Over Comments (My Fox Atlanta 7/19)

Racially charged comments have led to the abrupt resignation of an agriculture department official. Shirley Sherrod was the top official who oversaw rural development in the state of Georgia. According to FOX News, Sherrod, the director of the USDA's rural development agency, resigned over comments she made at an NAACP meeting. FOX News obtained taped comments from an NAACP meeting that took place in Douglas, Georgia in March. According to FOX News, Sherrod is seen talking about how she withheld help to a white farmer who was facing bankruptcy. "I didn't give him the full force of what I could do, I did enough," Sherrod said during the meeting. In the video, Sherrod said she was struggling with the fact so many black people have lost their farmland and she was faced with having to help a white person save their land. Sherrod said she took him to see a white lawyer. "I figured if I took him to one of them his own kind, [they] would take care of him," said Sherrod. A black official in the US Agriculture Department resigned yesterday after a video surfaced of her bragging to the NAACP that she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer facing bankruptcy. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, told the audience at a March banquet in Atlanta that she claimed the man felt "superior" to her, according to FoxNews.com. "He had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was talking all that time, trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said. NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination (Daily Caller 7/20)

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below). BREAKING: Racist Obama administration member resigns (Manhattan Conservative Examiner 7/19)

Shirley Sherrod of the USDA's Georgia Rural Development office has resigned following the airing of overtly racist remarks she made in a speech before—of all organizations—the NAACP. At a local NAACP meeting in March of 2010, Sherrod boasted of withholding assistance to a farmer based on the color of his skin, which happened to be white. Sherrod (surprise!) is black. In her comments, which are captured in the video below, Sherrod freely admits to "struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." She further confesses to abusing her position by refusing to "give him the full force of what I could do." The remarks conclude with a racist gem: "I took him to a white lawyer... I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him." Link

USDA Official Implicated in NAACP Racism Flap (Buckeye Ag Network 7/20)

Days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) denounced the Conservative Tea Party movement on allegations of racism, the organization was itself implicated in charges of racism involving a USDA official. In a video released at BigGovernment.com, USDA's Director of Rural Development in Georgia Shirley Sherrod was depicted acknowledging discriminating against white farmers. The video, of a speech Sherrod gave to the NAACP's Freedom Fund banquet in March of this year, stirred quite a controversy on the internet this week, forcing Sherrod's resignation from the department Monday. Sherrod's remarks in the NAACP speech indicated that she "didn't give [a white farmer] the full force of what I could do," because "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land." Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law (Heritage Foundation Blog 7/20)

This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle blower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? Link

NAACP meeting calmly listened to racist remarks from black fed official (American Thinker 7/20)

Andrew Breitbart has scored another bullseye, revealing hypocrisy of the highest order on the part of another leftist establishment organization, the NAACP. On March 27 of this year, speaking before an NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet, Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture director for the State of Georgia -- responsible for over a billion dollars a year in spending -- boasts of denying a white farmer her full efforts because of his race. The audience does not react with shock or disapproval, but rather just sits there. So much for NAACP President Ben Jealous denouncing the tea parties for tolerating racists. Only after Breitbart gave the incriminating video national exposure did the NAACP issue the obligatory denunciation, to prevent further embarrassment. But when nobody was looking, the NAACP audience was totally cool with the racism expressed by their speaker. Link

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video
By BEN EVANS and MARY CLARE JALONICK (AP)

WASHINGTON — A black employee who resigned from the Agriculture Department over comments at a Georgia NAACP meeting said Tuesday the White House forced her out of her job over a manufactured racial controversy.

Shirley Sherrod said she was on the road Monday after an event in rural Georgia when USDA deputy undersecretary Cheryl Cook called her and told her the White House wanted her to resign. "They called me twice," Sherrod told The Associated Press in an interview. "The last time they asked me to pull over the side of the road and submit my resignation on my Blackberry, and that's what I did."

The controversy began Monday when the conservative website biggovernment.com posted a two-minute, 38-second video clip of Sherrod's remarks to a local NAACP chapter.

In the video, she says the first time a white farmer came in for help, he was acting "superior" to her and that she struggled to decide how much help to provide him when so many black farmers were struggling. She said she didn't give him the full force of help she could have, but gave him enough.

The website called it proof that the NAACP — which recently accused the Tea Party of including racist elements — condones racism.

Sherrod said her comments to the local NAACP group that she withheld support some 24 years ago from a farmer because he was white are really part of a story of racial reconciliation. She said she ultimately became friends with the farmer and worked closely with him for two years to keep him from losing his farm. At the time, she worked for a nonprofit farm aid group.

"My point in telling that story is that working with him helped me to see that it wasn't just a black and white issue," she told The AP. "It was about those who have and those who do not. That's why I take the time to tell that story is to tell people we need to get beyond it and work together."

Hours after her resignation, Sherrod accused administration officials of lacking backbone. A USDA spokesman would not comment on whether the White House was involved.

Secretary Tom Vilsack issued a statement saying the agency has no tolerance for discrimination.

"We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously," the statement said.

National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous issued a statement Monday night — before Sherrod's explanation — supporting the resignation. Jealous said the group opposes racism of all kinds.

"According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," she said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers."

TONY HARRIS: And Shirley Sherrod is with me now from Albany, Georgia. And, Shirley, let's take our time and walk through this together. Is that okay with you?

SHIRLEY SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Okay. Shirley, just a straightforward, fundamental question here. Did you discriminate against this white farmer, Roger Spooner? He was facing foreclosure 24 years ago and, again, this was before you were working for the United States Department of Agriculture. Did you discriminate against him?

SHERROD: No, I did not discriminate against him. And, in fact, I went all out. I had to frantically look for a lawyer at the last minute because the first lawyer we went to was not doing anything to really help him. In fact, that lawyer suggested they should just let the farm go. All of that process – that's why I tell it, because everything that happened in dealing with him – he was the first white farmer that had come to me for help. Everything that I did working with him helped me to see that it wasn't about race. It's about those who have and those who don't. The farmer's home had done something to him that I hadn't seen them do to any black farmer. They had actually rented his land to someone else, when they didn't have a right to do that. He still had title to the land. That's why he couldn't qualify to file chapter 12 bankruptcy. That's why in the end we had to try to file chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the forced sale the first Tuesday in June.

HARRIS: I'm going to ask it again slightly differently. Did you discriminate against this white farmer 24 years ago, when you were, I guess, about 38 years old, because he brought you what you described in your March NAACP Speech as a "superior attitude?"

SHERROD: You know, initially – and that's why I say that. I took the time to weave what was happening there. He did come with a superior attitude, but I didn't discriminate. If I had discriminated against him, I would not have given him any help at all because I wasn't obligated by anyone. I wasn't working for the government. I didn't have to help him, but I did. And I went on – that was the first white farmer I helped. I went on to help hundreds of others through the years.

HARRIS: Was your -- I'm trying to understand your reaction to what you described as a "superior attitude." Was your reaction, perhaps, "Look, why are you taking this attitude with me? I sit here in a position to help you, and yet you bring this attitude to me." Did that cross your mind at all and did you act upon those feelings?

SHERROD: Certainly, I didn't act upon it. You know, I'm from the South. I've lived in the South all my life, and I know how black people were treated by white people during those years. My own father was murdered by one. But I didn't let that get in the way of trying to help. I don't know why it's so difficult to see. I didn't have to help that farmer. I could have sent him out the door without giving him any help at all. But in the end we became very good friends, and that friendship lasted for some years.

HARRIS: Explain the statement in the recording that goes, "So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do."

SHERROD: You know, I could have tried to rally other farmers in support of him. I didn't know of any black farmers who would come out to try to support a white farmer at that point. That's something I could have done for black farmers. This was my first time trying to help a white farmer save his land. I wasn't really sure what I could do, because I thought at that time they had the advantages. I learned that that was not the case in working with this farmer.

HARRIS: And then you went on to say, "I did enough." What was "enough" in the case of Roger Spooner?

SHERROD: I took him -- you mean initially? I took him to a lawyer who had attended some training for lawyers on chapter 12 bankruptcy. But in the end, that lawyer wasn't doing anything. And when the Spooners said that he wasn't, I jumped into action. It took me a couple of hours calling everyone I knew. I even called to other states trying to find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 bankruptcy to stop the sale of his land at the courthouse steps. I was successful in the end.

HARRIS: During your time with the USDA was there ever a discrimination claim filed against you?

SHERROD: No, never. I went out of my way to -- you know, and we didn't work directly with farmers at Rural Development. We were working with cities, with sewer problems, with police cars, with health centers, with housing. That agency is the one agency, so we say, that could build a city. I didn't do any work -- and I didn't discriminate and I went out of my way to make sure no one who came to the agency was discriminated against. And, in fact, during my tenure there, I targeted nine of the poorest counties in the state to do outreach work. I had outreach meetings in all of those counties. I even started working with other USDA agencies and state agencies so that we could coordinate our efforts in these areas, and, in fact, this coming Thursday was the first meeting where we were going to pilot that, and that was in a county here in southwest Georgia, Calhoun county.

HARRIS: So, Shirley, if you didn't discriminate during your time at USDA and at least no one filed such a claim, do you accept the statement from agriculture secretary Tom Vilsack that there is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA?

SHERROD: I don't know, but I'm assuming there is. I know I didn't discriminate, and I made it very clear to the staff there at USDA that it wouldn't be tolerated during my tenure. I said it over and over again.

HARRIS: So why are you out?

SHERROD: Pardon?

HARRIS: Why are you out?

SHERROD: Why am I out? They asked me to resign, and, in fact, they harassed me as I was driving back to the state office from west point, Georgia yesterday. I had at least three calls telling me the White House wanted me to resign.

HARRIS: So the pressure came from the White House?

SHERROD: And the last one asked me to pull over to the side of the road and do it.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names?

SHERROD: That's what I did.

HARRIS: Are you willing to name names.

SHERROD: That was Cheryl Cook, the deputy undersecretary. She called me and I said, Cheryl, I have a 3 1/2 hour ride to get into Athens. She called me a second time, where are you now? I said I'm just going through Atlanta. She call me again and I said, I'm at least 45 minutes to an hour from Athens. She said, well, Shirley, they want you to pull over to the side of the road and do it because you're going to be on Glenn Beck tonight.

HARRIS: Wow. So the administration pressured you out?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: How do you feel about that?

SHERROD: I don't feel good about it because I know I didn't do anything wrong, and I know during my time at USDA I gave it all I had. I worked when I didn't feel like it. I pushed the staff to get out there in places they had not been into before. Like I said, the nine counties I targeted, I asked them shortly after getting there, tell me what rural development has been doing in these areas, and when they did that, there were zeros in a lot of places, and I knew this was an area where we needed to target. We needed to get programs out into some of these areas that need it, just like some other areas that had gotten the funding over and over again.

HARRIS: I So I want to be really specific here and I apologize. I just have to do it. You get, one, two, three calls from miss cook, and at the point that it is made clear to you that you need to go, how does that conversation go?

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: What is said to you?

SHERROD: The very first one -- I guess there were like four calls because the very first one was before I got in my car to go to Athens. She said I was being put on administrative leave. The next call after I sat waiting and waiting because she told me she would call me right back, the next call said that they're going to have to ask me to resign.

HARRIS: Do you feel as though you had an opportunity to state your side of the story?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The administration, they were not interested in hearing the truth. No one wanted to hear the truth.

HARRIS: The NAACP released a statement late last night saying in part we are appalled by her actions. That is an opportunity to explain what happened 24 years ago. Do you feel as though you got the opportunity, even in a phone call with the NAACP?

SHERROD: No, I didn't. The NAACP has not tried to contact me one time, and they are the reason why this happened they got into a fight with the tea party, and all of this came out as a result of that.

HARRIS: Your reaction --

SHERROD: I would have appreciated -- when you look at my history of civil rights, I would have appreciated having the NAACP at least contact me and Roland martin, too, contact me to try to get the truth about what happened.

HARRIS: The reaction to your reaction to essentially being condemned by the NAACP?

SHERROD: That hurts. Because if you look at my history, that's what I'm saying -- I've done more to advance the causes of civil rights in this area than some of them who are sitting in those positions now with the NAACP. They need to learn something about me. Ey need to know about my work. They need to know what I've contributed through the years.

HARRIS: What was the point of the story you were telling to the NAACP in March? What was the point?

SHERROD: The point was to get them to understand we need to look beyond race; to look at working together. I've said to audiences here, not just that one -- in fact, I spoke at a housing conference in a county just south of here, and I said, look, we need to get beyond the Civil War. I tell them, there are good things about history from the white side and good things about history and culture from the black side. People love to come into this part of the state to see that. I tell them, we need to make the most of it, and if we work together, can do that.

HARRIS: Do you believe as a principle – do you believe black people in power can make or have the ability – can make race-based discriminatory decisions?

SHERROD: I'm sure that can happen. I can tell you I didn't do it.

HARRIS: Okay, that was my follow-up.

SHERROD: And you could go to any of the communities that I worked with and if the staff were free to tell you, you could talk to any of the people I've worked with since I've been at USDA, and they can tell you what my record is.

HARRIS: Shirley, stay right there. I have someone who wants to speak to this whole controversy. Her name is Eloise Spooner. She is Roger Spooner's wife – widow this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Widow at this point.

SHERROD: Yes.

HARRIS: Eloise, thanks for taking the time to talk to me.

ELOISE SPOONER: Thank you.

HARRIS: What do you think of this whole controversy? First of all, what do you think of Shirley?

SPOONER: She's a good friend.

HARRIS: Describe your relationship with her through the years.

SPOONER: She helped us save our farm.

How did she do that?

SPOONER: By getting in there and doing all she could do to help us.

What did your husband, your late husband, think of Shirley?

SPOONER: He's not dead. He's very much alive.

HARRIS: Really?

SPOONER: He's 87 and he's on his peterbuilt truck this morning.

HARRIS: Then I apologize. I've got incorrect information from one of the newspapers writing on this. I apologize for that.

SPOONER: That's okay.

HARRIS: Is he aware of the controversy swirling around?

SPOONER: Yes, our son, he came up and said, mama, turn on the TV to CNN and he said, it's about your friend Shirley Sherrod. And I said, what. I listened and said, that's not right. They have not treated her right because she's the one that I give credit for helping us save our farm.

HARRIS: Some of the story is that you met in the '80s, and it was a bad time?

SPOONER: Mm-hmm.

HARRIS: It was a bad time in the family's life at the time. Tell me why you were in trouble with the farm.

SPOONER: Well, we had a lot of dry weather, and we had to run the irrigation a lot. And when you'd make a good crop, you wouldn't get a good price. And just a number of things together caused it.

HARRIS: Do you remember your first interaction with Shirley?

SPOONER: Yeah. At first I looked into -- it was the market bulletin from Atlanta that we get. We've gotten it for years and years and years, and it said, if you were having trouble and about to lose your farm torque get with them. And I said, by George, I'm going to try that. And so I did, and he told us to go see a lawyer in Cairo. He said, you all might as well just go ahead and do what Diane said to do. And I was so mad when we came home. So, anyway, a few weeks later, the guy from Atlanta, the Market Bulletin, he said, what happened over in Cairo? And I said, exactly nothing. He didn't help us at all. He said, well, I'm going to get you with somebody that will help you, I think. And that's when he told us to call Shirley. And we did, and we started right then. She said there's too lawyers, there's a black lawyer and there's a white lawyer, and one -- the black lawyer is in Albany and the white lawyer is in [inaudible]. So I said, he's closer, so maybe we'll try him, the black one. We went through him for months and months and months and paid him some money, which was hard to scrape up. And he finally got with the lawyer in Donaldsonville that I had talked to, and he called and told me at the lawyer in Albany, called and told me that he could not handle us anymore, that he had this client that he had had for ten years, and he was going to have to spend a lot of time on that. He couldn't help us.

HARRIS: Hey, Eloise, a couple of quick questions here about this relationship.

SPOONER: Okay.

HARRIS: I'm just trying to establish this relationship. Explain to me -- I have a line here that says that you guys picked a bunch of tomatoes?

SPOONER: Yeah. One year, after things kind of settled down, I had a really pretty garden that year, and we going up to Albany for some reason, so I told Roger I was going to pick Shirley some tomatoes. And I did, and we carried them by to her and had a good visit.

HARRIS: You know, what do you think of the statement that's on the tape. It's undeniable, it is there, where Shirley essentially says, so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

SPOONER: Well, she gave enough that it helped us save our farm. And she went two trips -- after the lawyer in Albany did us like he did, well, then I called Shirley and told her, and she said, you're kidding me. I said, no, I'm not. That's the words she told me. She said, well, do you want us to try the one in Easterland? I said, yes, get us an appointment and we'll be ready to go.

HARRIS: Eloise, thank you for your time.

SHERROD: Please tell her want -- can you -- I don't know that she can hear me, but I haven't talked to here in years, and I'm so happy to hear that both of them are still living. And Miss Spooner, I definitely want to contact you. It's great to hear.

SPOONER: When we heard about it we tried to call you, but Roger couldn't get ahold of you.

SHERROD: Okay. Maybe you can get him.

HARRIS: We will make the connection. How's that? We will make that happen?

SHERROD: Thank you so much. It is so great to hear your voice.

HARRIS: And, Shirley, thanks to you. Thanks for your time, and a fuller explanation of your comments. Appreciate it.

SHERROD: Thank you so much.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video (AP 7/20)

A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. Link

Dismissed employee blames media (UPI 7/20)

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet. Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday. What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government. Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending. Link

USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued (CNN 7/20)

A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago -- and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Link

An African-American Agriculture Department worker resigns over her handling of a white Georgia farmer's case when she worked for a nonprofit group in 1986. It came to light when Shirley Sherrod talked about the case at an NAACP banquet earlier this year. Were her remarks a teaching moment that backfired, or evidence of racism? Sherrod says her comments were taken out of context -- that the point of her story was to unite people. Tony Harris will be talking to Sherrod at 11:00am ET on CNN, and we'll post that interview here. Watch some of her speech and phone interview with CNN's American Morning below, then tell us what you think. We'll share some of your comments on air in the CNN Newsroom, 11:00am - 1:00pm ET. Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer (FOX News 7/20)

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate... "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." Link

Gingrich Responds to Discrimination at USDA (Fox News 7/20)

SEAN HANNITY, HOST: And this is a Fox News alert. An Obama administration official resigned just a short time ago after she was caught on tape appearing to tell an audience that she had used her position to racially discriminate against white farmers. Now the woman, Shirley Sherrod, was the Georgia state director at the Department of Agricultural. Now the president's Agricultural Secretary Tom Vilsack just released a statement saying the USDA has a zero tolerance policy against discrimination. Here's part of the shocking video that ignited this controversy. (BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) SHIRLEY SHERROD, FORMER USDA GA STATE DIRECTOR: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. I know what he was doing. But he had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. Request Story

Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer (MSNBC 7/20)

A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "one of his own." Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." Link

Morning Joe (MSNBC 7/20)

Well, another story of reverse discrimination comes out today. This one is really interesting. I'm thinking that this woman regrets this comment. a USDA official in Georgia has resigned after I YouTube clip shows her admitting that race helped determine how much aid would be given to a white farmer. You're not supposed to do that, are you? I mean, I'm not --it's probably not a good idea. for being so stupid. It's not even -- well, how about you just don't do it. Anyway, the state's director of rural development apparently made the comments during an NAACP banquet in March. Take a listen. The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking, but he was trying to show me he was superior to me. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Request Story

Shirley Sherrod Resigns Over USDA Race Remark Furor (CBS News 7/20)

A high-ranking black employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has resigned after remarks she made about race were distributed by conservative web sites and aired on Fox News. A video clip of Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's Georgia State Director of Rural Development, was circulated by conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart and his site, biggovernment.com, in which Sherrod talked of withholding help to a white man facing the loss of his family farm. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack released a statement Tuesday saying he had accepted Sherrod's resignation, and added that the department has no tolerance for discrimination. Link

USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident (The Washington Post 7/20)

A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced on YouTube on Monday. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted Sherrod's resignation, saying, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously." NAACP President and Benjamin Jealous called Sherrod's actions shameful and agreed with the decision to fire her. Link

In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race. Link

Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued (Atlanta Journal Constitution 7/20)

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. Link

Shirley Sherrod Resigns USDA Job After Admitting Use Of Racial Preference During NAACP Banquet (VIDEO) (The Huffington Post 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod, who resigned Monday from the USDA. 756 Shirley Sherrod, a USDA official in Georgia, has resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer. Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during a local NAACP banquet on March 27; according to information displayed on the video. A clip of her speech first appeared Monday morning on BigGovernment.com and aired that evening on Fox News. Her resignation as the agency's state director of rural development was quickly accepted by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack. He cited a zero-tolerance policy and told CNN that he was working to "reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department." In her controversial speech, Sherrod discussed the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claimed that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." Link

NAACP Slams Shirley Sherrod's Actions As 'Shameful' (My Fox New York 7/20)

The actions of a black U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official who admitted withholding help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy were late Monday described as "shameful" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, was exposed in a video recorded at an NAACP banquet describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough," she said in the video. The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FOXNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. Link

Ga. USDA Official Resigns Over Comments (My Fox Atlanta 7/19)

Racially charged comments have led to the abrupt resignation of an agriculture department official. Shirley Sherrod was the top official who oversaw rural development in the state of Georgia. According to FOX News, Sherrod, the director of the USDA's rural development agency, resigned over comments she made at an NAACP meeting. FOX News obtained taped comments from an NAACP meeting that took place in Douglas, Georgia in March. According to FOX News, Sherrod is seen talking about how she withheld help to a white farmer who was facing bankruptcy. "I didn't give him the full force of what I could do, I did enough," Sherrod said during the meeting. In the video, Sherrod said she was struggling with the fact so many black people have lost their farmland and she was faced with having to help a white person save their land. Sherrod said she took him to see a white lawyer. "I figured if I took him to one of them his own kind, [they] would take care of him," said Sherrod. According to FOX News, the agriculture department announced Monday that Sherrod had resigned. Link

NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination (Daily Caller 7/20)

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below). BREAKING: Racist Obama administration member resigns (Manhattan Conservative Examiner 7/19)

Shirley Sherrod of the USDA's Georgia Rural Development office has resigned following the airing of overtly racist remarks she made in a speech before—of all organizations—the NAACP. At a local NAACP meeting in March of 2010, Sherrod boasted of withholding assistance to a farmer based on the color of his skin, which happened to be white. Sherrod (surprise!) is black. In her comments, which are captured in the video below, Sherrod freely admits to "struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." She further confesses to abusing her position by refusing to "give him the full force of what I could do." The remarks conclude with a racist gem: "I took him to a white lawyer... I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him." Link

USDA Official Implicated in NAACP Racism Flap (Buckeye Ag Network 7/20)

Days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) denounced the Conservative Tea Party movement on allegations of racism, the organization was itself implicated in charges of racism involving a USDA official. In a video released at BigGovernment.com, USDA's Director of Rural Development in Georgia Shirley Sherrod was depicted acknowledging discriminating against white farmers. The video, of a speech Sherrod gave to the NAACP's Freedom Fund banquet in March of this year, stirred quite a controversy on the internet this week, forcing Sherrod's resignation from the department Monday. Sherrod's remarks in the NAACP speech indicated that she "didn't give [a white farmer] the full force of what I could do," because "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land." Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law (Heritage Foundation Blog 7/20)

This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle bower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? Link

NAACP meeting calmly listened to racist remarks from black fed official (American Thinker 7/20)

Andrew Breitbart has scored another bullseye, revealing hypocrisy of the highest order on the part of another leftist establishment organization, the NAACP. On March 27 of this year, speaking before an NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet, Shirley Sherrod, the Department of Agriculture director for the State of Georgia -- responsible for over a billion dollars a year in spending -- boasts of denying a white farmer her full efforts because of his race. The audience does not react with shock or disapproval, but rather just sits there. So much for NAACP President Ben Jealous denouncing the tea parties for tolerating racists. Only after Breitbart gave the incriminating video national exposure did the NAACP issue the obligatory denunciation, to prevent further embarrassment. But when nobody was looking, the NAACP audience was totally cool with the racism expressed by their speaker. Link

Shirley Sherrod Comments Results in Resignation (Lalate Blog 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod has resigned following her comments about a white farmer. Shirley Sherrod's remarks appeared in a video from BigGovernment.com, dated by the website as March 27. Shirley Sherrod has been the USDA's Georgia director of Rural Development. In the video, Sherrod addresses an NAACP banquet stating "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land — so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. Shirley Sherrod of USDA resigns (Buzz Tab 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod, USDA's black employee has resigned from her post on Monday in the wake of outburst of a video at conservative media outlets in which Shirley Sherrod is shown telling one of the audience that she had not given a white farmer the full force of what I could do to help him save his family farm. Tom Vilsack, the Agriculture Secretary said that he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation. Shirley Sherrod was working as USDA's State Director of Rural Development for Georgia. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod, the department's state director of rural development for Georgia. Tom Vilsack further added that in USDA, they are following a zero tolerance for discrimination. He said that being Secretary Agriculture he condemns any discriminatory act against any person. He further added that at USDA, they are working hard for past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history and they are taking fairness and equality as a serious matter at USDA. Link

Shirley Sherrod Has Officially Resigned From Her Job Due To Racial Preference! (Moms Word Blog 7/20)

Shirley Sherrod, who is known as a USDA official in Georgia, has finally resigned after publicly admitting that race played a factor in her decision to limit how much aid would be given to a white farmer. Sherrod, who is African American, made the comments during an NAACP banquet on March 27, according to the information in the video above. In fact a clip of her speech was being aired on BigGovernment.com and also Fox News Monday morning. Sherrod said during the now famous speech about the first time she was "faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." She claims that during the conversation, the man "was trying to show me he was superior to me." "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland," Sherrod told the crowd. "And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land." Link

I told the students about a time when I didn't realize that some white farmers faced some of the same discrimination we faced.

Working with that farmer opened my eyes and I told the students it helped me to see that it is more about poor people and those who have versus those who do not. I save that farmer's land and helped hundred's of white farmers since that time. That was 1986

Color makes no difference to me. You also admitted that you never gave him what you could have since he was white. You should be fired for this alone. Until people like you, Al Sharpton, Jesse Jackson Jackons Lewis F and the BPP get a grip on reality Race will always be a factor. It's really sad that so many people of all races work in jobs that give them power over people not of the same race. I hope you can sleep well knowing that the video I watched is nationwide now. I would suggest that you contact Albany State University. That is where I spoke last year in October. It is located in Albany GA.

It is so disturbing to me that someone would try to turn my statements into something negative. It was meant to show that we need to work together. If that farmer were alive today he would certainly tell you just how far I went to solve his problem. My point was that we can't look at race. In many ways we are treated the same whether white or black. This case helped me to see that and if I had not helped this farmer the family would not have the land now. With this case my eyes were opened and that was my whole point

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA:Â <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.Â

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural DevelopmentÂ State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?Â

Thank you,

George Ko

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life – those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

We are good with this version on this end. Counsel has cleared the language. Only change is in the first sentence.

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

We are good with this version on this end. Counsel has cleared the language. Only change is in the first sentence.

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of th Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have v ersus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmers land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners thru the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

My whole life speaks for my commitment to fairness whether white or black.

Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued

By Marcus K. Garner

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

5:42 a.m. Tuesday, July 20, 2010

The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race.

But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey.

Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist.

"For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said.

In the video Sherrod, who is black, admits to the crowd at the NAACP banquet she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer whom she said was condescending when he came to her for aid.

"What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said in the video recorded March 27 in Douglas in southeast Georgia.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

But Tuesday morning, Sherrod said what online viewers weren't told in reports posted throughout the day Monday was that the tale she told at the banquet happened 24 years ago -- before she got the USDA job -- when she worked with the Georgia field office for the Federation of Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund.

Sherrod said the short video clip excluded the breadth of the story about how she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period to help ward off foreclosure of his farm, and how she eventually became friends with the farmer and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

Responding to what he knew of the video Monday evening, Atlanta NAACP chapter president R.L. White recalled many years of unfair treatment against minority farmers when he told the AJC that the footage, at face value, "does suggest unfair treatment."

"The playing table should be leveled," said White, who wasn't at the March event. "Everyone, regardless of race, creed or color, should be treated same way, regardless of the race of the administrator."

And in a statement released to Fox News, Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced Sherrod's resignation.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Vilsack said in the statement.

An AJC reporter called Sherrod's Albany home Monday evening but was unable to contact her until she reached out shortly after midnight.

"They were just looking at what the Tea Party and what Fox said, and thought it was too (politically) dangerous for them," she said of the agriculture department.

The revelation of Sherrod's statements came a week after the NAACP issued a resolution calling the National Tea Party racist for comments made against President Barack Obama and African-American congressmen during the health care debate.

Sherrod, 62, was appointed to her position in by Obama's administration in July 2009 to manage more than 40 housing, business and community infrastructure and facility programs, and more than $114 billion in federal loans.

The AJC is trying to recover the full video footage of Sherrod's speech to the Douglas NAACP.

She said the circumstances made it absurd for her to have made any racist comment.

"There were some white people there. The mayor (of Douglas) was there," Sherrod recalled. "Why would I do something racist if they were there?"

NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination

By Jon Ward - The Daily Caller 7:02 AM 07/20/2010

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help.

Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident.

Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position.

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers."

"Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below).

In the video, which was first posted Monday on biggovernment.com, a conservative site run by Andrew Breitbart, Sherrod is shown speaking on March 27, 2010, at what is labeled as a "Freedom Fund" dinner in Georgia, though the exact location is not clear. The Daily Caller has asked the NAACP to clarify that detail.

"I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land, so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do," Sherrod said.

"I did enough," she said.

Sherrod said the only reason she helped the man at all was because she knew that the federal or state department of agriculture had sent him to her and "he needed to go back and report that I had tried to help him."

"So I took him to a white lawyer," she said. "So I figured if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him."

Sherrod then said it was "revealed" to her, though she did not explain how, that "it's about the poor versus those who have."

"It's not so much about white - it is about white and black - but it's not, you know," she said, failing to finish the thought. "It opened my eyes, because I took him to one of his own."

The video, a less than three-minute excerpt of Sherrod's remarks, ends at that point.

Jealous promised an internal probe at the NAACP to examine why audience members appeared to agree with and support Sherrod's expressions of hostility to another person based on the color of their skin.

"The reaction from many in the audience is disturbing. We will be looking into the behavior of NAACP representatives at this local event and take any appropriate action," Jealous said, though he sought to distance the national NAACP from any responsibility for the incident.

"We thank those who brought this to our national office's attention, as there are hundreds of local fundraising dinners each year," he said.

After the video of Sherrod's remarks were posted on biggovernment.com Monday, the story was picked up by Fox News, which posted it on their website and showed the video footage on the air. A short time later Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Sherrod's resignation.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Vilsack said in a statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

Here is the full statement released by the NAACP:

NAACP STATEMENT ON THE RESIGNATION OF SHIRLEY SHERROD

(BALTIMORE, MD) NAACP President and CEO Benjamin Todd Jealous issued the following statement today after learning of the resignation of Shirley Sherrod of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"Since our founding in 1909, the NAACP has been a multi-racial, multi-faith organization that- while generally rooted in African American communities- fights to end racial discrimination against all Americans.

We concur with US Agriculture Secretary Vilsack in accepting the resignation of Shirley Sherrod for her remarks at a local NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man.

The reaction from many in the audience is disturbing. We will be looking into the behavior of NAACP representatives at this local event and take any appropriate action.

We thank those who brought this to our national office's attention, as there are hundreds of local fundraising dinners each year.

Sherrod's behavior is even more intolerable in light of the US Department of Agriculture's well documented history of denying opportunities to African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American farmers, as well as female farmers of all races. Currently, justice for many of these farmers is being held up by Congress. We would hope all who share our outrage at Sherrod's statements would join us in pushing for these cases to be remedied.

The NAACP will continue to advance the ideals of America and fight for freedom, justice and fairness for all Americans."

Founded in 1909, the NAACP is the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization. Its members throughout the United States and the world are the premier advocates for civil rights in their communities, conducting voter mobilization and monitoring equal opportunity in the public and private sectors.

Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer

Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign.

Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate.

"He had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," she said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough."

The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FoxNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned.

"There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously."

The NAACP released a statement late Monday condemning Sherrod's admission.

"We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers," the statement said.

"Her actions were shameful," it continued. "While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

Sherrod explained in the video that, at the time, she assumed the state or national Department of Agriculture had referred the white farmer to her. In order to ensure that the farmer could report back that she was indeed helpful, she said she took him to see "one of his own" -- a white lawyer.

"I figured that if I take him to one of them, that his own kind would take care of him," she said.

The point of the story wasn't entirely clear; only an excerpt of the speech is included in the video clip.

"It was revealed to me that it's about poor versus those who have," she said, suggesting she had learned that race is less important.

The video clip was first posted by BigGovernment.com. The clip is dated March 27 from an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

The clip adds to the firestorm of debate over the NAACP's decision to approve a resolution at its convention last week accusing some Tea Party activists of racism -- a charge Tea Party leaders deny.

In a second clip from the same event posted online, Sherrod appeared to urge black job seekers to find work at the Department of Agriculture because the federal government won't lay people off.

"There are jobs at USDA and many times there are no people of color to fill those jobs because we shy away from agriculture. We hear the word agriculture and think, why are we working in the fields?" she said. "You've heard of a lot of layoffs. Have you heard of anybody in the federal government losing their job? That's all I need to say."

Jay Bookman In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape
7:31 am July 20, 2010, by Jay

A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist.

By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation:

"Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man."

After watching the video Monday evening, I wrote in comments that "what Sherrod says in that video -- and what she apparently did -- are deeply troubling... She might very well have earned a firing. But I'd like to see that rest of that video as well, because at the point it abruptly ends, she appears to be saying that it's wrong to think in terms of black and white, that she came to see things as more accurately divided between poor and rich than by race."

As I also noted, the folks at Big Government seem to have the whole video, since they also posted another segment, and it would be useful to see the rest of it.

Sherrod gets a chance to tell her side of the story in an AJC story by Marcus Garner:

"But Tuesday morning, Sherrod said what online viewers weren't told in reports posted throughout the day Monday was that the tale she told at the banquet happened 24 years ago - before she got the USDA job - when she worked with the Georgia field office for the Federation of Southern Cooperative/Land Assistance Fund.

Sherrod said the short video clip excluded the breadth of the story about how she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period to help ward off foreclosure of his farm, and how she eventually became friends with the farmer and his wife.

"And I went on to work with many more white farmers," she said. "The story helped me realize that race is not the issue, it's about the people who have and the people who don't. When I speak to groups, I try to speak about getting beyond the issue of race."

So let's see the rest of the tape, Big Government. Was Sherrod giggling among black folk about the time she put it to the white man, as the leaked excerpt suggests, or was the tape a deceptively edited excerpt of a longer story about getting beyond the issue of race, as she claims?

Let's see the tape. The evidence apparently exists to settle the question. Cough it up.

<http://www.shadowtv.com/redirect/notification.jsp?vid=86e15cb25493301e7aee306262074d24>

JOHN ROBERTS: The U.S. Department of Agriculture accepts the resignation of an employee after a video surfaced showing her telling an audience that she withheld assistance to a white farmer because of his race. Let's listen to what she told the NAACP.

[BEGIN VIDEO]

SHIRLEY SHERROD: I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough

[END VIDEO]

KIRAN CHETRY: Does that video tell the whole story? Joining us now on the phone from Albany, Georgia is Shirley Sherrod herself. Thanks for being with us this morning, Shirley.

SHERROD: Thank you.

CHETRY: You say this was part of the story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show you in a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. Will you finish for us how this ended?

SHERROD: Okay. I was speaking to that group like I've done many groups and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only. And I tell them the story of how I worked with a white farmer back in 1986. I was not working for the Department of Agriculture. I was working with a non-profit organization assisting farmers throughout south Georgia and the southeast. And this farmer came to me for help. I was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race, it's about those who have versus those who do not have. And I tell how I took him to a lawyer who I thought would help him. In the end, that lawyer didn't. In the end, I had to frantically look for a lawyer because when USDA lifted - I'm sorry, when the court lifted the injunction against USDA in May of 1987, this white farmer was 1 of 13 that was foreclosed on by the state of Georgia. I had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure. He couldn't - at that time we had chapter 12 -

CHETRY: Yes, but let me said - you said you didn't know enough, didn't give him the full force of what you could do. You said you did enough, and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that perhaps he could help him. What did you mean by that?

SHERROD: What I meant was, I didn't know anyone else. I didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12. But I thought if I took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

ROBERTS: Miss Sherrod, let's make it clear though, this happened 24 years ago. You eventually worked with this white farmer. You eventually became friends, you say, with the farmer and his wife.

SHERROD: Yes.

ROBERTS: So the question I have is, when the U.S. Department of Agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, "Wait a minute, you don't know the full story. Here's the full story, why should I step down?"

SHERROD: I did say that. But they, for some reason, the stuff that FOX and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how I tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

ROBERTS: Many people at home might be thinking, well, if you're recounting an old story, why did you succumb to pressure to step down? Why didn't you try to fight this?

SHERROD: If I tried to fight it and didn't have any support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, what would I do?

CHETRY: Let me ask you this. Did you talk to the NAACP about it? Because I just want to read for our audience what Ben Jealous, the president, said. He said, referring to you and this surfacing of the tape, "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story, she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races. She gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man, and the reaction from many in the audience is disturbing." This is from Ben Jealous. Did you try to clarify with the NAACP your story?

SHERROD: No, I haven't had a chance to talk to anyone. All of this was happening so fast. And it's unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people with that now.

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

SHERROD: I don't mind.

ROBERTS: Thanks a lot.

UPI: Dismissed employee blames media

An employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says she lost her job because the media misconstrued a speech she gave at an NAACP banquet.

Shirley Sherrod, who was forced out as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia, is seen on a video admitting she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer who needed aid, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Tuesday.

What the media didn't report, Sherrod says, was that the incident she was relating on the video happened 24 years ago when she was working for another organization, not the federal government.

Also left out, Sherrod says, is the part where she says she was trying to figure out how to help someone who was condescending.

Sherrod, who is black, says she eventually worked with the man over a two-year period and helped ward off foreclosure of his farm.

The Journal-Constitution reports it is trying to recover the full video footage of Sherrod's speech.

NAACP Statement on Resignation of Shirley Sherrod

by Publius

July 19, 2010

(BALTIMORE, MD) NAACP President and CEO Benjamin Todd Jealous issued the following statement today after learning of the resignation of Shirley Sherrod of the United States Department of Agriculture:

"Since our founding in 1909, the NAACP has been a multi-racial, multi-faith organization that-- while generally rooted in African American communities-- fights to end racial discrimination against all Americans.

We concur with US Agriculture Secretary Vilsack in accepting the resignation of Shirley Sherrod for her remarks at a local NAACP Freedom Fund banquet.

Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race.

We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers.

Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man.

The reaction from many in the audience is disturbing. We will be looking into the behavior of NAACP representatives at this local event and take any appropriate action.

We thank those who brought this to our national office's attention, as there are hundreds of local fundraising dinners each year.

Sherrod's behavior is even more intolerable in light of the US Department of Agriculture's well documented history of denying opportunities to African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American farmers,

Sherrod clips so far with CNN – American Morning & FOX & Friends transcripts below, both of which are rough. On American Morning Roberts expressed an intention to continue coverage and have her back on:

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

Associated Press (staff) "USDA worker quits over racism charge from video": A black federal worker has resigned from a Georgia agricultural job after a video clip showed her saying she had not helped a farmer as much as she could have because he was white. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a statement Tuesday he had accepted the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. Vilsack says the USDA has no tolerance for discrimination. Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution she was forced out of her job as the USDA's rural development director for Georgia. She said the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday misconstrued her message. Sherrod's taped remarks were from a local meeting of the civil rights group NAACP. National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous welcomed the resignation because the group opposes racism of all kinds. LINK

Washington Post – Federal Eye (Ed O'Keefe, Krissah Thompson) “USDA worker quits over 1986 racial incident”: A U.S. Agriculture Department official from Georgia resigned late Monday after she was caught on tape admitting that 24 years ago she did not help a white farmer as much as she could have because of his race. Shirley Sherrod, USDA state director of rural development, made the remarks on March 27 at an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet. Her videotaped remarks surfaced online on Monday. Sherrod reminded the crowd that black farmers have faced years of discrimination and difficulty saving their farmland. She recounted the story of a white farmer who visited her asking for assistance keeping his farm. "Here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land," she said (see above). "So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough so that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me. Either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. He needed to go back and report that I did try to help him." As Sherrod tells the story of denying aid to the white farmer, she explains that she ultimately realized her mistake, but did not give any indication that she had rectified the situation. The incident took place in 1986 when she was working for a nonprofit group and long before she joined USDA, Sherrod said Tuesday. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," she said in an interview on CNN. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." LINK

Big Government (Andrew Breitbart) “Video Proof: The NAACP Awards Racism–2010 by Andrew Breitbart”: In this piece you will see video evidence of racism coming from a federal appointee and NAACP award recipient and in another clip from the same event a perfect rationalization for why the Tea Party needs to exist. But first the context: For the past week, Americans who consider themselves aligned with the Tea Party movement have suffered the indignity of being falsely labeled racist by the NAACP and their pro-bono publicity managers, the main stream media. The constant calls to “repudiate the racists from your ranks” have not only been insulting, but have also served to force a false standard upon America’s fastest-growing and most vibrant political movement that no other group could ever live up to nor would ever be asked to live up to. While the media has chosen to do the Democratic Party’s bidding in allowing for the NAACP to negatively and falsely brand the millions strong, loosely affiliated tea party phenomenon as “racist”, the moral indignation over race and racism has taken center stage in a summer of economic and political discontent. The NAACP, an undeniable weapon in the Democratic Party’s arsenal, was more than happy to exploit this nation’s sensitive racial schism for possible political gain. The Democratic Party and the NAACP, needless to say, are playing with fire. LINK

FOX News (staff) “Video Shows USDA Official Saying She Didn't Give 'Full Force' of Help to White Farmer”: Days after the NAACP clashed with Tea Party members over allegations of racism, a video has surfaced showing an Agriculture Department official regaling an NAACP audience with a story about how she withheld help to a white farmer facing bankruptcy -- video that now has forced the official to resign. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, is shown in the clip describing "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Sherrod, who is black, claimed the farmer took a long time trying to show he was "superior" to her. The audience laughed as she described how she determined his fate. "He had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," she said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough." The Agriculture Department announced Monday, shortly after FoxNews.com published its initial report on the video, that Sherrod had resigned. "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person," Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said in a written statement. "We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously. LINK

Atlanta Journal Constitution (Marcus K. Garner) "Resigned USDA official says racial story misconstrued": The USDA's rural development director for Georgia says she was forced out of her federally appointed job after a "snippet" of a speech she gave in March appeared to show her admission to only half-heartedly aiding a struggling white farmer because of his race. But in a phone interview from her home in Albany early Tuesday morning, Shirley Sherrod told the Atlanta-Journal Constitution that the two-minute, 38-second video posted online Monday by biggovernment.com and reported on by FoxNews.com and the AJC completely misconstrued the message she was trying to convey. Sherrod, 62, insisted her statements in the video were not racist. "For Fox to take a spin on this like they have done, and know it's not the truth ... it's very upsetting," she said. In the video Sherrod, who is black, admits to the crowd at the NAACP banquet she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer whom she said was condescending when he came to her for aid. "What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me was, I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said in the video recorded March 27 in Douglas in southeast Georgia. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough." LINK

Atlanta Journal Constitution – Jay Bookman blog (Jay Bookman) "In the curious case of Shirley Sherrod, let's see the whole tape": A couple of folks in comments yesterday brought up the case of USDA official Shirley Sherrod, a black woman caught on tape at an NAACP meeting here in Georgia apparently bragging about being less than diligent in helping a white farmer. The folks at Big Government posted a portion of her speech as part of the running feud between the NAACP and the Tea Party over which organization is more racist. By the end of the day Monday, Sherrod had been forced to resign her post, and NAACP President Ben Jealous had released a statement agreeing with the forced resignation: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race. We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers. Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man." After watching the video Monday evening, I wrote in comments that "what Sherrod says in that video — and what she apparently did — are deeply troubling... She might very well have earned a firing. LINK

CNN (staff) "USDA employee says statements on white farmer misconstrued": A black Agriculture Department employee who resigned after a video clip showed her talking about a white farmer said Tuesday her remarks were taken out of context. Shirley Sherrod, the department's former state director of rural development for Georgia, told CNN on Tuesday the incident she discusses in the clip took place more than two decades ago - and she recounted it to an audience to make the point that people should move beyond race. "I was speaking to that group, like I've done many groups, and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only," Sherrod told CNN's "American Morning" from her home in Albany, Georgia. The incident took place in 1986, while she worked for a nonprofit and before she worked for the USDA, she said. "I was telling the story of how working with him helped me to see the issue is not about race. It's about those who have versus those who do not have." Sherrod resigned Monday after conservative media outlets aired the video, in which she says she did not give the white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him avoid foreclosure. Conservative website publisher Andrew Breitbart originally posted the video, which was quickly picked up by Fox News. The video claims Sherrod's remarks were delivered March 27 to an NAACP Freedom Fund banquet, but it is not clear that is the case, nor is it clear where the event was held or how many people were in attendance. LINK

MSNBC (staff) "Black USDA official resigns after admitting she only 'did enough' for white farmer": A black USDA official in Georgia has resigned after publicly admitting she didn't help a white man trying to save his farm to the "full force" of her power and instead referred him to "own of his own." Agriculture Secretary

Tom Vilsack said he had accepted Shirley Sherrod's resignation, saying there was "zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." The NAACP, which recently condemned racism in tea party groups, also issued a statement Monday night saying: "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race." The Huffington Post said a YouTube video clip of her speech was first posted on the biggovernment.com blog and a report was then aired by Fox News. Sherrod, who resigned late Monday from her job as USDA's Georgia director of rural development, is shown talking about "the first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm." Her remarks came at a local NAACP Freedom Fund banquet, which the video says took place in March this year. She says in the clip that the farmer had tried to show he was "superior" to her. "He had to come to me for help. What he didn't know, while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," she says in the film.

Daily Caller (Jon Ward) "NAACP 'appalled' by black USDA official's racial discrimination": National Association for the Advancement of Colored People President Benjamin Todd Jealous said late Monday he was "appalled" by the actions of U.S. Department of Agriculture official Shirley Sherrod, who resigned earlier in the day after video surfaced of her speaking at an NAACP event about discriminating against a white farmer seeking government help. Jealous also promised to look into why members of the audience at an NAACP fundraiser in Georgia this past March reacted, as shown in the video, by nodding and in some cases laughing at Sherrod's remarks. But Jealous distanced the national NAACP from the incident. Coming just days after the NAACP condemned racist elements inside the Tea Party movement, Sherrod's remarks place the storied civil rights organization in an uncomfortable position. "Racism is about the abuse of power. Sherrod had it in her position at USDA. According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," Jealous said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers." "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story that she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races, she gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man," Jealous said (read his full statement below).

New York Post (Tim Perone) "USDA big quits in bias-boast shock": A black official in the US Agriculture Department resigned yesterday after a video surfaced of her bragging to the NAACP that she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer facing bankruptcy. Shirley Sherrod, the department's Georgia director of Rural Development, told the audience at a March banquet in Atlanta that she claimed the man felt "superior" to her, according to FoxNews.com. "He had come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was talking all that time, trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him," Sherrod said. "I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farmland, and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land -- so I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. "I did enough," she said. Sherrod said she passed him off to "one of his own -- a white lawyer," so she could claim she was helpful. Sherrod, who was appointed to her position in July 2009, didn't say what ultimately happened to the farmer's case. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack accepted her resignation yesterday and said, "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA." LINK

Heritage Foundation – The Foundry (Conn Carroll) "Justice Not Only Obama Department Not Equally Enforcing Law": This morning we reviewed the still unfolding New Black Panther Party scandal at the Department of Justice where a whistle blower, testifying under oath, quoted Deputy Assistant Attorney General Julie Fernandes as saying that "the Voting Section will never or will not, at least while she is there, bring any more cases against blacks or other national minorities." In other words, Fernandes has reportedly admitted that the Obama Justice Department is not enforcing the nation's civil rights law equally and in a race-neutral manner. The Obama Justice Department has refused to confirm or deny that Fernandes made this statement. Now Andrew Breitbart has unearthed a very similar statement from another Obama political appointee, this time from the Department of Agriculture. In the video, U.S. Department of Agriculture Director of Rural Development for Georgia Shirley Sherrod tells an NAACP audience . . . First Justice. Now Agriculture. How many other Obama Department's are refusing to enforce our nation's laws equally? LINK

CNN – AMERICAN MORNING

JOHN ROBERTS: The U.S. Department of Agriculture accepts the resignation of an employee after a video surfaced showing her telling an audience that she withheld assistance to a white farmer because of his race. Let's listen to what she told the NAACP.

[BEGIN VIDEO]

SHIRLEY SHERROD: I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough

[END VIDEO]

KIRAN CHETRY: Does that video tell the whole story? Joining us now on the phone from Albany, Georgia is Shirley Sherrod herself. Thanks for being with us this morning, Shirley.

SHERROD: Thank you.

CHETRY: You say this was part of the story and that it was part that was spliced enough to show you in a bad light, that this isn't the whole story. Will you finish for us how this ended?

SHERROD: Okay. I was speaking to that group like I've done many groups and I tell them about a time when I thought the issue was race and race only. And I tell them the story of how I worked with a white farmer back in 1986. I was not working for the Department of Agriculture. I was working with and non-profit organization assisting farmers throughout south Georgia and the southeast. And this farmer came to me for help. I was telling the story about how working with him helped me to see that the issue is not about race, it's about those who have versus those who do not have. And I tell how I took him to a lawyer who I thought would help him. In the end, that lawyer didn't. In the end, I had to frantically look for a lawyer because when USDA lifted – I'm sorry, when the court lifted the injunction against USDA in May of 1987, this white farmer was 1 of 13 that was foreclosed on by the state of Georgia. I had to frantically find a lawyer who would file a chapter 11 to stop the foreclosure. He couldn't – at that time we had chapter 12 –

CHETRY: Yes, but let me said – you said you didn't know enough, didn't give him the full force of what you could do. You said you did enough, and then you referred to the race of the lawyer as well, saying that perhaps because the lawyer was white that perhaps he could help him. What did you mean by that?

SHERROD: What I meant was, I didn't know anyone else. I didn't know another lawyer at that time who was local, who knew something about chapter 12. But I thought if I took him to a white lawyer, he would definitely do all that he could to help save his farm.

ROBERTS: Miss Sherrod, let's make it clear though, this happened 24 years ago. You eventually worked with this white farmer. You eventually became friends, you say, with the farmer and his wife.

SHERROD: Yes.

ROBERTS: So the question I have is, when the U.S. Department of Agriculture came to you and said you have to step down, why didn't you just say, "Wait a minute, you don't know the full story. Here's the full story, why should I step down?"

SHERROD: I did say that. But they, for, some reason, the stuff that FOX and the Tea Party does is scaring the administration. I told them, get the whole tape and look at the whole tape and look at how I tell people we have to get beyond race and start working together.

ROBERTS: Many people at home might be thinking, well, if you're recounting an old story, why did you succumb to pressure to step down? Why didn't you try to fight this?

SHERROD: If I tried to fight it and didn't have any support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, what would I do?

CHETRY: Let me ask you this. Did you talk to the NAACP about it? Because I just want to read for our audience what Ben Jealous, the president, said. He said, referring to you and this surfacing of the tape, "Her actions were shameful. While she went on to explain in the story, she ultimately realized her mistake, as well as the common predicament of working people of all races. She gave no indication she had attempted to right the wrong she had done to this man, and the reaction from many in the audience is disturbing." This is from Ben Jealous. Did you try to clarify with the NAACP your story?

SHERROD: No, I haven't had a chance to talk to anyone. All of this was happening so fast. And it's unfortunate that the NAACP would make a statement without even checking to see what happened. This was 24 years ago, and I'm telling a story to try to unite people with that now.

ROBERTS: Certainly you're coming out and telling your story now takes it to a different level, and obviously we're going to keep following this. It is good to get your side of it. Sherri Sherrod, former Agriculture Department official. Perhaps we can get you back on again, get your face on TV as well and talk to you more about this as this story continues to develop.

SHERROD: I don't mind.

ROBERTS: Thanks a lot.

ALISYN CAMEROTA: Well, an official with the Agriculture Department is out of a job this morning after making these controversial comments on race at an NAACP event.

[BEGIN VIDEO]

SHIRLEY SHERROD: I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough

[END VIDEO]

CAMEROTA: That was Shirley Sherrod -- she's the former USDA Georgia director of rural development talking about how she purposely did not help a white farmer. The NAACP later released a statement saying, "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers. Her actions were shameful." The organization, of course, recently sponsored a resolution accusing the Tea Party movement of racial bias.

Statement by Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack

Yesterday, I asked for and accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation for two reasons. First, for the past 18 months, we have been working to turn the page on the sordid civil rights record at USDA and this controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices. Second, state rural development directors make many decisions and are often called to use their discretion. The controversy surrounding her comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia.

Our policy is clear. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers.

Cnn crew was on farm when we arrived. Secretary did interview hitting key points that this was about making sure usda wasn't distracted from correcting injustices of the past, and that it is important that we are singularly focused on job creation and that this could cause people to question and undermine decisions in georgia. He said he doesn't believe she is racist, this was about poor word choice. He was asked about wh involvement and he said he didn't talk to anyone at wh, that he took action after learning about the situation.

USDA worker quits over racism charge from video

Associated Press Writers

WASHINGTON (AP) - A black employee who resigned from the Agriculture Department over comments at a Georgia NAACP meeting said Tuesday the White House forced her out of her job over a manufactured racial controversy.

Shirley Sherrod said she was on the road Monday after an event in rural Georgia when USDA deputy undersecretary Cheryl Cook called her and told her the White House wanted her to resign. "They called me twice," Sherrod told The Associated Press in an interview. "The last time they asked me to pull over the side of the road and submit my resignation on my Blackberry, and that's what I did."

The controversy began Monday when the conservative website biggovernment.com posted a two-minute, 38-second video clip of Sherrod's remarks to a local NAACP chapter.

In the video, she says the first time a white farmer came in for help, he was acting "superior" to her and that she struggled to decide how much help to provide him when so many black farmers were struggling. She said she didn't give him the full force of help she could have, but gave him enough.

The website called it proof that the NAACP - which recently accused the Tea Party of including racist elements - condones racism.

Sherrod said her comments to the local NAACP group that she withheld support some 24 years ago from a farmer because he was white are really part of a story of racial reconciliation. She said she ultimately became friends with the farmer and worked closely with him for two years to keep him from losing his farm. At the time, she worked for a nonprofit farm aid group.

"My point in telling that story is that working with him helped me to see that it wasn't just a black and white issue," she told The AP. "It was about those who have and those who do not. That's why I take the time to tell that story is to tell people we need to get beyond it and work together."

Hours after her resignation, Sherrod accused administration officials of lacking backbone. A USDA spokesman would not comment on whether the White House was involved.

Secretary Tom Vilsack issued a statement saying the agency has no tolerance for discrimination.

"We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously," the statement said.

National NAACP President Benjamin Todd Jealous issued a statement Monday night - before Sherrod's explanation - supporting the resignation. Jealous said the group opposes racism of all kinds.

"According to her remarks, she mistreated a white farmer in need of assistance because of his race," he said. "We are appalled by her actions, just as we are with abuses of power against farmers of color and female farmers."

<http://hotair.com/archives/2010/07/19/breitbart-hits-naacp-with-promised-video-of-racism/>

here is beginning on whats online

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life - those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

We are good with this version on this end. Counsel has cleared the language. Only change is in the first sentence.

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of the Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have versus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmers land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners thru the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

Thank you Ralph, I would suggest that you go to the White House Facebook page and send a quick note. I just did, they would be more apt at looking at that in the short term as opposed to a letter and the facebook page is instant. Thank you though for a very well crafted letter. I was so proud of Shirley on The Today Show this morning (their lead story) they dedicated over 15 minutes of primetime to Shirley and her situation. I am so proud of her and the way she has handled this whole situation. What was meant for bad was turned into good.

On July 25, 2009 Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Shirley Sherrod as Georgia Director of Rural Development. USDA Rural Development spends over $1.2 Billion in the state of Georgia each year. On March 27, 2010, while speaking at the NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet, Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race.

Shirley Sherrod: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me, I know what he was doing. But he had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough. So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. And he needed to go back and report that I did try and help him. So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because of Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them that his own kind would take care of him. That's when it was revealed to me that its about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white...it is about white and black. It is about white and black but its not you know...it opened my eyes because I took him to one of his own.

Fox News Clip:

Geraldo Rivera: Do you denounce in the way that you ask the Tea Parties denounce racists within your ranks?

Hilary Shelton: Yes we do, we repudiate racists within our ranks.

Back to Shirley Sherrod Clip:

I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farm land and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

Good evening,

Please see below for statement from Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack regarding Shirley Sherrod's resignation:

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

I feel so disappointed that the Secretary and President let a misrepresentation of my words on the part of the Tea Party be the reason to ask me to resign

Please look at the tape and see that I use the story from 1986 to show people that the issue is not about race but about those who have versus those who do not

I used everything and everyone I could to help me to save that white farmer's land. That family has the land because of what I did. He became a very good friend. I went on to help save many other white land owners through the years

I submit my resignation but in doing so want to put the administration on notice that I will get the whole story out.

My whole life speaks for my commitment to fairness whether white or black.

Dear Mr. Secretary

We have just seen the video of Georgia State Director Shirley Sherrod and are deeply disturbed. Cheryl has put her on administrative leave pending a full investigation. Of course, the video suggests that this is about a farm loan, and those programs were transferred to the Farm Service Agency in 1995.

Shirley explained to Cheryl that this piece of tape shows only one small part of a longer story she told of her personal transformation beyond race, and is about a farmer who came to see her in 1986 when she was working as a farm advocate. The rest of the story apparently explains how she came to assist this farmer and many other white farmers during this time period. She said there is a copy of the entire speech, and Cheryl asked her to provide it as quickly as possible.

American farmers visiting Cuba propose visits to US by Cuban farmers

BYLINE: By ANITA SNOW, Associated Press Writer

SECTION: State and Regional

LENGTH: 381 words

DATELINE: HAVANA

After touring agricultural cooperatives where oxen till the soil and crops grow pesticide-free, black farmers from America's South said Friday that Cuban farmers could teach them much about the advantages of producing food the simple way their grandfathers did.

"We would like to bring some our farmers here so they can really get the feel of a typical farm family," said Ben Burkett, who still runs the family farm in Petal, Miss., that his great-grandfather founded 116 years ago.

"Our impression of Cuban farming has been very interesting," Burkett said as he and other representatives of the Federation of Southern Cooperatives prepared to wrap up their visit here this week.

Burkett said the federation would also like to bring Cuban farmers to the South to see how their American counterparts live and work.

The U.S. federation represents 75 cooperatives of small farmers and credit unions and more than 10,000 mostly black families in 11 southern states. Oxfam America, which provides funds to agricultural cooperatives in both the United States and Cuba, helped put together the federation's trip here this week.

"I think it would be important for more of our cooperative farmers to meet with people from the Cuban cooperatives," agreed Shirley Sherrod, the federation's Georgia director. "Every day here has been good, getting out and meeting with the farmers, seeing the similarities, making the connections."

Those connections will be invaluable when the U.S. trade sanctions are eliminated and federation members, as well as other American farmers, will be able to sell their rice, poultry and other products to Cuba, Sherrod said.

"The United States trades with China," said Mike Espy, a former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture and a former U.S. congressman from Mississippi who joined the trip. "The United States trades with Vietnam. To isolate Cuba and not trade with it is illogical."

Cuba, he said, "is a natural market for U.S. agriculture."

The U.S. Congress last year passed a law allowing the direct sale of American goods to Cuba for the first time in four decades but barred the American government and banks from financing such sales.

Havana has said that it would not buy a single grain of American rice under the existing legislation.

CBC Statement on the Resignation of Shirley Sherrod

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Contact : J. Jioni Palmer

(Washington, D.C.)- Congressional Black Caucus Chairwoman Barbara Lee and members of the CBC released the following statement today on the firing of USDA employee Shirley Sherrod:

"It is troubling that Shirley Sherrod was asked for her resignation as Georgia State Director for Rural Development at the U.S. Department of Agriculture because of an edited video clip. A full review of the clip demonstrates Ms. Sherrod's personal transformation. She was clearly educating the public about the power of redemption. It is now apparent that Secretary Vilsack did not have all of the facts available to him and overreacted.

"The Congressional Black Caucus continues to believe that Ms. Sherrod was unfairly asked to resign, without due process and should be reinstated immediately. There are many individuals still serving in the Department of Agriculture who were responsible for years of discrimination against African American farmers.

"We also believe that a national dialogue on race must be held. Last November, we held a forum on race in Washington DC to begin the discussion. The basis for Ms. Sherrod's resignation is another example of why we must not sweep race under the rug. Rather, we must come together as a nation and recognize that we do not live in a post-racial era and that, while difficult, we must confront these issues head on with clarity and without fear.

"Ms. Sherrod has been an effective public servant and it would be tragic to lose a person of such caliber, competence and commitment to fairness and equality and one who has dedicated her life to working for a more perfect union."

On July 25, 2009 Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack appointed Shirley Sherrod as Georgia Director of Rural Development. USDA Rural Development spends over $1.2 Billion in the state of Georgia each year. On March 27, 2010, while speaking at the NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet, Ms. Sherrod admits that in her federally appointed position, overseeing over a billion dollars, she discriminates against people due to their race.

Shirley Sherrod: The first time I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm, he took a long time talking but he was trying to show me he was superior to me, I know what he was doing. But he had to come to me for help. What he didn't know while he was taking all that time trying to show me he was superior to me, was I was trying to decide just how much help I was going to give him. I was struggling with the fact that so many black people had lost their farm land. And here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So, I didn't give him the full force of what I could do. I did enough. So that when he, I assumed the Department of Agriculture had sent him to me, either that or the Georgia Department of Agriculture. And he needed to go back and report that I did try and help him. So I took him to a white lawyer that had attended some of the training that we had provided because of Chapter 12 bankruptcy had just been enacted for the family farm. So I figured if I take him to one of them that his own kind would take care of him. That's when it was revealed to me that its about poor versus those who have. It's not so much about white...it is about white and black. It is about white and black but its not you know...it opened my eyes because I took him to one of his own.

Fox News Clip:

Geraldo Rivera: Do you denounce in the way that you ask the Tea Parties denounce racists within your ranks?

Hilary Shelton: Yes we do, we repudiate racists within our ranks.

Back to Shirley Sherrod Clip:

I was struggling with the fact that so many black people have lost their farm land and here I was faced with having to help a white person save their land. So I didn't give him the full force of what I could do.

Good evening,

Please see below for statement from Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack regarding Shirley Sherrod's resignation:

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

Erin,

Can you tell me if USDA, under Secretary Vilsack, has accepted any other resignations or has it terminated any other RD State Director or FSA SED for similar reasons? What are the terms of Ms. Sherrod's resignation? Has USDA identified the producer she discriminated against? Are they offering any assistance to that individual? What is USDA's policy when discrimination has occurred? Has this been referred to the DoJ? Will it be? Will USDA provide any training to the federal employees in Georgia to make sure they understand the law and their responsibilities?

CBC Statement on the Resignation of Shirley Sherrod

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Contact : J. Jioni Palmer

(Washington, D.C.)- Congressional Black Caucus Chairwoman Barbara Lee and members of the CBC released the following statement today on the firing of USDA employee Shirley Sherrod:

"It is troubling that Shirley Sherrod was asked for her resignation as Georgia State Director for Rural Development at the U.S. Department of Agriculture because of an edited video clip. A full review of the clip demonstrates Ms. Sherrod's personal transformation. She was clearly educating the public about the power of redemption. It is now apparent that Secretary Vilsack did not have all of the facts available to him and overreacted.

"The Congressional Black Caucus continues to believe that Ms. Sherrod was unfairly asked to resign, without due process and should be reinstated immediately. There are many individuals still serving in the Department of Agriculture who were responsible for years of discrimination against African American farmers.

"We also believe that a national dialogue on race must be held. Last November, we held a forum on race in Washington DC to begin the discussion. The basis for Ms. Sherrod's resignation is another example of why we must not sweep race under the rug. Rather, we must come together as a nation and recognize that we do not live in a post-racial era and that, while difficult, we must confront these issues head on with clarity and without fear.

"Ms. Sherrod has been an effective public servant and it would be tragic to lose a person of such caliber, competence and commitment to fairness and equality and one who has dedicated her life to working for a more perfect union."

The Federation Sends Letter to USDA Secretary Vilsack Regarding Sherrod Resignation

ATLANTA....On July 19, former Federation staff member and head of the USDA's Rural Development Office in Georgia was asked by the USDA to resign her post. The reason was because of the ramifications of a distorted video from a March 2010 speech she gave at the NAACP in south Georgia that was publicized by Fox News. In response to this the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund has sent the letter below to Thomas Vilsack, Secretary of Agriculture.

July 21, 2010

The Honorable Thomas Vilsack
Secretary of Agriculture
Washington DC

Dear Secretary Vilsack:

We at the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund are writing regarding your decision to ask Shirley Sherrod to resign. We think you must reconsider and immediately reinstate her as Georgia USDA State Director of Rural Development.

Your decision to force Ms. Sherrod to resign was taken in haste without a thorough and complete review of the facts, context and circumstances of her actions. We feel you were unduly influenced by distorted and edited videotape that completely misrepresented a speech Ms. Sherrod made to the NAACP in Georgia.

It is a sign of leadership to admit to mistakes and quickly corrected them. We feel you as Secretary of Agriculture must quickly correct this injustice committed against Ms. Shirley Sherrod and the people she has struggled for years to serve. This is the transformative awareness and enlightened judgment we are expecting from you.

We note with interest that your concern is to move forward to solve the problems that USDA has had in the past in terms of its sad record on civil rights. Yet your decision to fire one of the few persons in the country who could likely do the most to help achieve that goal stubbornly negates your stated interest of moving forward toward equal access and equality of opportunity at USDA with integrity.

At the NAACP gathering in March this year, Shirley was sharing with the group her experience in the 1980's of assisting the white farmer Roger Spooner. She, in fact, was instrumental in helping to save his farm. She describes the process of getting beyond her assumption that whites didn't need services and assistance. She realized that being white did not make anyone immune to the problems of and to the lack of access to services. She realized rather that it was a matter of who has and how does not. This was a life changing experience for her. Her message was that all of us need to get beyond race and assist each other whether black or white.

Another of your interests we know is to finally resolve the lawsuits against USDA. Lack of access to services at USDA is the basis for the Pigford lawsuit. In addition to securing the necessary funding for settling Pigford from Congress to finally resolve this injustice to individual farmers, we know that another essential step in moving forward is to assist and assure farmers have access to the USDA programs. Programs, in fact, that are supposed to be available on an equitable basis to all farmers.

Shirley Sherrod in her remarkable career has been one of the most active practitioners in assisting untold numbers of black and white farmers to access the credit, conservation and other programs at USDA. Shirley has essentially been an ambassador for the USDA in her work at the Federation of Southern Cooperatives and as Georgia State Director of Rural Development. If anything, she deserves to be honored for this work and not falsely condemned and forced to retire in disgrace.

We find it ironic that in the one hundred years of USDA's history of discrimination, not a single white person has been dismissed for discrimination, however, a Black women who is doing her job well is falsely accused of discrimination in an altered video and you decide that she can no longer do a credible and nondiscriminatory job of dispensing USDA rural development programs and must resign.

Once Shirley is restored to her position, we feel it would enhance USDA's goals by utilizing her as an ambassador for USDA. She could offer USDA staff throughout the country training and teaching about transformation on the issue of race and what it means to offer service to all farmers with justice and integrity regardless of race.

In summary, the inference that Shirley Sherrod is a racist is beyond comprehension. For you to make a decision without consideration of Shirley's long and impressive work in civil rights is uncalled for. It is not only an insult to her, but also to the communities she has worked for and with all these many years as well as our organization that has for decades fought against racism and injustice in the rural South

We ask that you immediately reconsider your decision to fire Shirley Sherrod, apologize to her and consider instead the tremendous asset she has been and could continue to be for the USDA and rural America. We urge you to learn from this disagreeable incident and make it a shining example of a true change of heart and direction at USDA toward a brighter day of racial reconciliation and justice for all.

Cooperatively yours,

Ralph Paige

Chairwoman Lee Releases Statement Following Meeting with Agriculture Secretary Vilsack

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Contact : Nicole Y. Williams or J. Jioni Palmer

Washington D.C. – Today Congresswoman Barbara Lee (D-CA), Chairwoman of the Congressional Black Caucus, released the following statement following a meeting of the Congressional Black Caucus with Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack regarding the handling of matter resulting in the resignation of Shirley Sherrod.

“We want to thank Secretary Tom Vilsack for meeting with the Congressional Black Caucus today regarding the issues surrounding the resignation of Shirley Sherrod. During the meeting we expressed our concern regarding the handling of the situation. Secretary Vilsack assured us that there would be a full review of the process which led to this unfortunate situation.

“We appreciate the apology issued today by the Administration and Secretary Vilsack personally. He reiterated those same sentiments during our meeting.

“We expressed to Secretary Vilsack that as the Administration and Department of Agriculture begins the process of repairing the damage from this situation, we are willing to work with them to ensure an equitable and fair outcome for Ms. Sherrod. The meeting also provided an opportunity to openly discuss longstanding issues of equity within the U.S. Department of Agriculture such as funding for land grant colleges and the Black and Native American Farmers settlement to address decades-long discrimination.

“Shirley Sherrod’s story – the true story she told as evidenced in the full tape of her remarks that has now been released – is one that we can use as the starting point for a real dialogue on race.

“As Americans, we need to build a shared understanding of our country’s history as we work to build a more perfect union. We look forward to continued dialogue with Secretary Vilsack and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.”

Subject: Secretary Vilsack

Hi Krysta! We met at the event Tuesday evening in Ohio for Governor Strickland. I spoke to you about the Non-profit my sister and I started for a thoroughbred farm in Kentucky. I wanted to ask you to please pass on my support and prayers for Secretary Vilsack.

I find it refreshing for a politician to step up and take responsibility when necessary. After all he is human and said he made a mistake. Too often we hold those who are in office to a standard that is not capable for a human being to reach. He has apologized and offered to attempt to make amends. We all make mistakes but don't always own up to those mistakes. It takes a strong and confident person to stand in front of a nation and take full responsibility for something of that nature and I cannot imagine what he is going through. I have nothing but respect for him.

Please let him know my sister and I are thinking about him and send our full support from Kentucky!
Sincerely,
Aimee Wulfeck

How is it possible that what we get are just the top clips when they are now 20+ pages long, omit any bad news of any sort and include stuff like the following:

Local ag woman goes to Washington (Santa Maria News 7/22)

Ruth Jensen of Santa Maria was among the leaders of American Agri-Women from throughout the country who recently met with policy makers and consumers at the organization's 25th annual Fly-in to Washington, D.C.

Please send us the "all clips" version so we can see what they are like.

RE: Daily Clips

Fitz,

The Office of Communications explained that it sends top clips to the Hill, not all clips. The clips that are sent highlight USDA efforts and programs. Staff at OC did not include Sherrod clips since it was the biggest story of the two days and there were hundreds of pages of clips that all said the same thing.

I hope this responds to your question.

Krysta and Karen,

I know that the last couple of days have been difficult. I certainly wish the circumstances were different. As I am certain you will understand, what transpired with regard to Ms. Sherrod has raised many questions. At this point, I am particularly interested in knowing what happened, when it happened, and who was involved. Please compile this information for me. A timeline of events would also be useful and should be included with the information you send me. I would like the information sent to me as soon as possible and I would like the information to be as specific as possible.

Also, I sent an email message to Chris Mather yesterday and never received a response. I would like the courtesy of an answer to my question.

Thank you.

The Secretary just wants to talk through the terrible situation with Mrs. Sherrod. He hoped to reach the Congressman earlier in the week or at the CBC meeting. As you may be aware, he has spoken with a number of Members and tried to express his sincere apologies and regrets.

We understand the Chairman has questions and maybe they cannot be fully answered by a single conversation. However, the Secretary does feel a one on one would be a good first step in the process of addressing the Chairman's concerns.

If you do not feel this is helpful or appropriate, please let me know. KH

This is horrible. Video just posted on Hotair.com.

The NAACP is about to learn one of the most basic of all lessons in life -- those who live in glass houses should avoid provoking a stone-throwing war. After the civil-rights organization threatened to issue a condemnation of Tea Party activism by equating it with racism (a position from which they ultimately retreated), Andrew Breitbart announced that he would publish at least one video of the NAACP itself cheering racism. Breitbart delivers on that promise today at Big Government, showing USDA official Shirley Sherrod explain to an appreciative NAACP audience in July 2009 how she deliberately withheld information from a white farmer in Georgia trying to save his land and his business:

Chris,

I was just informed of a video of the Georgia State Director that was posted on the Internet earlier this afternoon. It speaks for itself and you need to watch it right away.

I have discussed this with Tim McNeilly. He has instructed the PIC and the State Director not to respond to media without checking with us first. We have not been contacted by any media outlet but expect that we will.

Tim has been asked by me to draft a statement for our review to be issued if necessary.

Georgia PIC just called to alert us to a campaign underway involving Shirley Sherrod vs. the Tea Party people. I understand that this may have been brought to your attention already, but in case it hasn't..... The PIC is looking for guidance if (and I think there will be) media contact regarding the below video.

<http://hotair.com/archives/2010/07/19/breitbart-hits-naacp-with-promised-video-of-racism/>

Looking for guidance on how you would like to prepare and handle any inquiries that result.

Thanks.

Please see below for statement from Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack regarding Shirley Sherrod's resignation:

Today, I accepted Ms. Sherrod's resignation. There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA, and I strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have been working hard through the past 18 months to reverse the checkered civil rights history at the department and take the issue of fairness and equality very seriously.

- 5:00-5:40pm - cell service is spotty on Verizon

I'm thinking 2-3:45pm since it will give us time to set them up.

Any objections to that?

He would like to talk to Chris/someone sometime before the briefing at 2 p.m.

Glen has 2 admin sources saying that Sherrod resignation was asked for and obtained before WH was notified of request. That WH's first understanding of it was when they saw statement.

FOR AFTER THEY CALL

STATEMENT BY AGRICULTURE SECRETARY TOM VILSACK REGARDING SHIRLEY SHERROD

Today, I reached out to Shirley Sherrod to apologize. I also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends.

I reacted too quickly. I should have taken the time to listen and learn.

While I cannot change what happened, I can try to make something out of this difficult incident.

As we know, Shirley has a unique and compelling story to tell. She and her family endured discrimination and overcame adversity. Fighting to advance justice and equality, she has helped farmers who were struggling to keep their land, fought for women in need of social and economic justice, and African-American men and women who faced discrimination. As USDA's Georgia State Rural Development Director, she worked to promote economic opportunity for all people by enabling job creation and business growth. And Shirley has shown tremendous character through the events of the last few days.

Shirley and I talked about a unique opportunity at USDA. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service in USDA's Office of Advocacy and Outreach. This Office was established by the 2008 Farm bill to improve access to USDA programs and enhance the viability and profitability of small farms and ranches, beginning farmers and ranchers, and socially disadvantaged farmers and ranchers. The American people would benefit greatly from Shirley's involvement in this Office, one which will ensure that access is provided to all USDA customers in an equal and fair manner and while enabling USDA employees to be increasingly responsive to the American people they serve.

I did not handle this situation well. I will continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day and I am committed to making sure it does not happen again.

As part of this effort, I also want to renew my firm commitment to put behind all of us the USDA's past record on civil rights. While we have made some progress over the last 18 months, more work is needed.

Here is transcript of the CBC press conference remarks.

Barbara Lee's statement in full:

this is an apology for the secretary, and we asked him to come visit was, and talk about what transpired and you have the statement that we prepared earlier, and we asked him that we want him to ask ms. sherrod to come back to the department of agriculture in a position of empowerment be made, and that we believe he acted too quickly and he did not have all of the facts. the secretary very quickly responded. he has talked to many members of the congressional black caucus and he came to our meeting. he has issued an apology in a really real way, and we accept his apology, and he has talked to mrs. sherrod, and i am sure he will talk to you later about that conversation and we talked about the fact that this is really should be a moment that we look at the department of agriculture and all of the issues that historical issues not addressed, and in which he is trying to address in terms of discrimination, and in terms of land grant colleges, funding for historically black colleges and universities and the pickford lawsuit, and the black farmer's issues and all of the issues that mrs. sherrod understands and has a keen sensitivity to, because of her life and what she has experienced through her life. the secretary understands that very clearly, and he apologized and he -- and when one makes a mistake, we expect an apology, and he did that. and we told him that we look forward to working with him as we begin to move forward. this is a moment that our nation needs to really understand that we have to begin to discuss race. we cannot believe that this is a post-racial era, and in many ways race has been swept under the rug, and we are trying as a congressional black caucus to have this coconversation, and we believe that the secretary is a good partner for us in this conversation moving forward. i thank you very much for being here and members of the black caucus for coming and the secretary for being with us and for being so candid. it was a very good meeting and we really believed that mrs. sherrod deserves our respect. she deserves our applause, and her life now has become very public and her history is one that i hope that the entire country will look at in terms of transformation and redemption which we can all learn from. thank you very much.

President Obama calls Shirley Sherrod

Updated 1:39 p.m. ET

<http://voices.washingtonpost.com/federal-eye/2010/07/shirley-sherrod-wants-to-talk.html>

President Obama has expressed his "regret" to former U.S. Agriculture Department official Shirley Sherrod over her ouster, the White House said Thursday.

The president reached Sherrod around 12:35 p.m. ET and "emphasized that Secretary Vilsack was sincere in his apology yesterday, and in his work to rid USDA of discrimination," the White House said Thursday.

"The President told Ms. Sherrod that this misfortune can present an opportunity for her to continue her hard work on behalf of those in need, and he hopes that she will do so," the statement said.

Obama made the call from his private office on Thursday after twice trying unsuccessfully to reach her on Wednesday evening, according to a White House aide. Staffers tried to reach her again this morning and Obama spoke with her when she returned the call, the aide said.

Sherrod did not indicate to Obama whether she plans to rejoin the government, according to the aide. She expressed reluctance to rejoin the Obama administration earlier Thursday during a series of television interviews.

"I'd like to talk to him about the experiences of people like me, people at the grassroots level, people who live out here in rural America people, who live in the South. I know he does not have that kind of experience," Sherrod told NBC's Today Show.

"We love him, we want him to be successful, because we feel he thinks in some ways like we do, and we think that's good for the country," she said later. "Yes, there are issues out there that we are faced with, issues of poverty. The other thing, I want everything to reflect, I want a good reflection for him as the first black president."

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack offered Sherrod a position with USDA's Office of Civil Rights and Community Outreach, Sherrod said, but raised doubts she would take the job.

"I would not be that individual that the department, everyone is looking to solve the issue of racism in USDA. It takes a lot more to get that job done," she said, noting that other USDA officials have not lost their jobs for discriminating against minority or women farmers.

Sherrod also told CNN's "American Morning" that said she would like to "get back at" Andrew Breitbart, the right-wing blogger whose posting of the video snippet triggered the political storm that led to her ouster. Asked whether she would like to see Breitbart's Web site shut down, Sherrod replied: "That would be a great thing...he's doing more to divide us."

My words were taken out of context. I told about something that happened in 1986 when I was faced with having to help a white farmer save his farm. When so many black farmers were losing their. My point was that I initially did not do all that I could but in the process realized it was not about black versus white but about poor people or those who have versus those who do not.

If they will use all that I said you see that I talked about what I did to save that white farmers farm and from there went to help hundreds of other white farmers

I use the story to try to get people to move beyond race and work together

I feel deeply hurt that someone would take my words out of context and try to make them mean something else

My record of work for others for 45 years will show my love for people and for fairness

Dear Ms. Sherrod:

I recently came across a video of your speech at the NAACP 20th Annual Freedom Fund Banquet in Douglas Coffee County, GA: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=62hPa37v2J4>

In the video, you stated that you did not help a white farmer with the "full force of what [you] could do" when he sought your help. From the context of your speech, you seem to imply that the "amount" of help you provided was due to the color of his skin (white) and because of your sympathy and preference for black farmers.

Are your comments and the context of the comments in your speech correct? As Georgia's USDA Rural Development State Director, do you believe your comments were appropriate?

Thank you,

George Ko

Tom Vilsack, USDA and civil rights

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said early Wednesday morning that he's willing to reconsider his decision to force Shirley Sherrod's resignation.

"I am of course willing and will conduct a thorough review and consider additional facts to ensure to the American people we are providing services in a fair and equitable manner," Vilsack said in a statement that arrived in inboxes after 2 a.m.

But to understand why he sought Sherrod's resignation so quickly, let's go back to February 2009. That's when Vilsack publicly vowed to tackle USDA's troubled civil rights history by ensuring that employees fairly treated minority and women farmers.

"Some folks refer to USDA as the last plantation, and it has a pretty poor history of taking care of people of color," Vilsack said at the time. "You've got outright bias and discrimination."

"Also you've got good people who don't even know that they're discriminating," said Vilsack. "It's necessary to begin the process of reeducating people."

Vilsack made those comments in Albany, Ga., Sherrod's home town. And he said them at a conference hosted by the Federation of Southern Cooperatives/Land Assistance Fund, the same group Sherrod worked for in 1986 when she first met white farmer Roger Spooner.

Reeducating employees required an $8 million consulting contract with Jackson Lewis Corporate Diversity Counseling Group. And it required reviewing tens of thousands of complaints leveled against USDA during George W. Bush's presidency. The review has been led by a 34-year USDA veteran whom Vilsack coaxed out of retirement.

"When this department was established in 1862 by Abraham Lincoln, he referred to it as the people's department," Vilsack told colleague Krissah Thompson in February. "In order to be consistent with that legacy, it's necessary that our programs and our approach reflect an appreciation for everyone's rights. We took a look at [these] prior issues and are in the process of trying to address each of them."

The efforts received little national news coverage until this week when a three-minute clip of Sherrod's now-infamous speech surfaced. Her message -- that Americans need to see beyond a person's skin color -- was tainted by an impolitic delivery White House officials consider too damaging.

"This controversy could make it more difficult to move forward on correcting injustices," Vilsack said Tuesday, adding later that, "The controversy surrounding [Sherrod's] comments would create situations where her decisions, rightly or wrongly, would be called into question making it difficult for her to bring jobs to Georgia."

"Our policy is clear," he continued. "There is zero tolerance for discrimination at USDA and we strongly condemn any act of discrimination against any person. We have a duty to ensure that when we provide services to the American people we do so in an equitable manner. But equally important is our duty to instill confidence in the American people that we are fair service providers."

Did Vilsack make the right decision, or did he overreact at the mercy of the web and cable news cycle? Or did he have to accept Sherrod's resignation in order to reinforce his work on civil rights? It's a question many in Washington will continue asking today.

USDA official's resignation stirs racial tempest
21 July 2010, 07:00 GMT, Los Angeles Times [607 Words]

A feud between the NAACP and the "tea party" movement engulfed the Department of Agriculture this week when the agency ousted an African American official for remarks that some have called racist.

Shirley Sherrod, the USDA's director of rural development for Georgia, was pressured to resign Monday when a video surfaced in which she told an NAACP audience that she had not given a white farmer "the full force of what I could do" to help him save the family farm in 1986, when she worked for a Georgia nonprofit group.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People initially condemned her remarks, which were publicized by a conservative blogger and picked up by Fox News.

» Don't miss a thing. Get breaking news alerts delivered to your inbox.

But on Tuesday, when the video of her full speech was released, the NAACP retracted its condemnation and called on the USDA to rehire her, saying it had been "snookered" by Fox and conservative website publisher Andrew Breitbart. And the farm couple involved in the incident stepped forward to defend Sherrod, calling her a friend and saying that she saved their farm.

"Having reviewed the full tape by Shirley Sherrod ... and most importantly heard the testimony of the white farmers mentioned in this story, we now believe that the organization that edited the documents did so with the intention of deceiving millions of Americans," the statement from NAACP President Benjamin Jealous said.

Early Wednesday, Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said he would reconsider. In a statement, he said he would "conduct a thorough review and consider additional facts" about his decision to ask Sherrod to resign, the Associated Press reported.

Conservative media outlets tied the video to the NAACP's recent resolution calling on the tea party movement to repudiate racist activities among its activists, some of whom are said to have displayed images of President Obama with a bone through his nose and the White House with a lawn full of watermelons.

Breitbart told CNN's "John King, USA" that releasing the video was "not about Shirley Sherrod."

"This was about the NAACP attacking the tea party, and this is showing racism at an NAACP event," he said.

Sherrod said Tuesday that the incident with the farmers took place when she worked at the Federation of Southern Cooperatives. She said the experience helped her learn to move beyond race and that she tells the story to audiences to make that point.

She added that she "went all out" to help the man keep his farm. She resigned, she said, only under pressure from the Obama administration.

The farmers to whom Sherrod had referred told CNN and the Atlanta Journal-Constitution that she had helped them avoid losing their farm. Elaine Spooner, now 82, called Sherrod a "friend for life."

"I don't know what brought up the racist mess," Roger Spooner told CNN's "Rick's List." "They just want to stir up some trouble, it sounds to me."

Vilsack, who said in a statement Monday that the USDA had "zero tolerance" for bias, said Tuesday that the episode affects Sherrod's ability to do her job. He also said that the decision was his, and that he didn't discuss it with the White House.

"I don't believe this woman is a racist at all," he said. "She's a political appointee, and her job is basically to focus on job growth in Georgia, and I have deep concern about her ability to do her job without her judgments being second-guessed."

Below and attached.

We are committed to resolving cases involving allegations of past discrimination by individuals including black, Hispanic Native American, and women farmers as well as ensuring that every farmer and rancher is treated equally and fairly. We have made significant progress on addressing USDA's civil rights record and look forward to providing substantial relief to these farmers in an expedited manner.

- The United States Department of Agriculture under the Obama Administration has made civil rights a top priority, part of which is taking definitive actions to move USDA into a new era as a model employer and premier service provider.

- The Obama Administration has made it a priority to resolve all of the large civil rights cases at USDA. We entered into a settlement with black farmers on February 18, 2010, and legislation required to fund this settlement agreement is pending before Congress. The House passed this legislation, it is currently pending before the Senate.

- We are putting the final touches on a plan that would turn the page on the discrimination claims of Hispanic and women farmers as well.

Additional background on proposal to resolve Hispanic and Women Farmer discrimination complaints:

- Under a plan for Hispanic and women farmers who have claimed discrimination, the United States would make available $1.33 billion from the Judgment Fund to implement a unified claims resolution process for Hispanic and women farmers.

- Hispanic and women farmers who submit claims of discrimination in farm loan programs would go through a streamlined process to have their claims resolved. As with black farmers in Pigford II, payments may be up to $50,000 but actual award amounts may vary depending on the number of successful claimants.

- We are also currently engaged in settlement discussions with a class of Native American farmers.

Hi Aaron -- I write for The Hill newspaper. I'm wondering why Secretary Vilsack dropped out of the rural education summit this morning. Does it have anything to do with the Shirley Sherrod situation? Thanks.

Best,

racist, prejudice, out of touch, just 24 hours, shirley sherrod has been viciously attacked from every end of the political and ethnic spectrum. unfair and outrageous accusations against an african-american whom says she's been fighting for civil rights her entire life. you probably heard her story. have you probably seen the video clips. key word here. if you watched the former usda official address members of the naacp this way, you probly would think she was a racist.

i was struggling with the fact so many black people lost their livelihoods here i was faced with that with the white person. i'm going to give him the full force of what i can do.

okay. it sounds offensive. right? well, here's the problem. that's what happens when you manipulate the message. tinker with the truth twist it. how about we tell you what shirley sherrod really meant. it is funny because this part of the speech never made the conservative blog the first time around.

25 years ago, i couldn't stand here and say what i'm saying, what i will say to you tonight. like i told you, god helped me to see it is not just about black people. it is about poor people. and i have come a long way. i knew that i couldn't do it with hate, you know. as my mother has said to so many, if we had tried to live with hate in our hearts we probably would be dead now. but i come to realize that we have to work together. you know, sad that we don't have room for the white and blacks here tonight. because we have to overcome the divisions we have.

that's right. shirley sherrod was actually preaching not living with hate, overcoming divisions among races, and that's what we are going to talk about this morning. shirley's nonedited message. great to see you.

good to see you.

your life has changed in 24 hours.

it certainly has.

it is going to end up being a good thing, wouldn't you say?

i think so. you know. when we look at all -- what's happened in the last 24 hours, the truth is out there. and people are beginning to see just what happened, how they were manipulate flood thinking one thing when it was really something else. i think it will make us all conscious of how quick we come to judge.

let's have -- do this right. okay. your speech. it was actually a story about redemption.

yes.

decades ago you did have these racist feelings. but you had a revelation. and you wanted to tell members of the naacp about that revelation. let me ask you, why did you feel you needed to tell those members this story?

well, i tried to use my life because that's what -- you know, when you look at where i have come from, you know, it is just not telling them this is what you need to do. it is really showing them where i have come to to get to a place where i don't need to look at the color of a person's skin to determine whether or not i can help them or will help them.

you know, that's bold to be able to say this is how i did feel. this is what i did when i felt that way. but hold on. i did change. you talked so much about your past. let's go back once again a few decades, okay. and your father allegedly killed by racist farmers. that farmer never indicted, we should point out. but that hate crime triggered a huge movement in baker county.

tell me about the murder of your father. and how that impacted you and your thought process.

you know, that was a time in my life just like these last two days when it just seemed so unreal to have our father there, you know, my mother was not much older than i am. she is about 16 years older. he had six girls. there were five daughters. and our mother during the -- during the -- during his lifetime. he was just the perfect father. so compassionate. so much there for his girls. to have his life taken away from us was so tragic at the time. and i'm the oldest of -- there are six. my father always wanted a son. he had -- kept having all these girls. there were five of us. they stopped. then during my senior year of high school he convinced my mother just one more time for this son. and that's -- i found out she kept getting sick. my best friend told me at school one day that -- she asked, she said, how's your mom? i said she is not getting any better. girl, your mother is pregnant. your daddy was at the store yesterday giving out cigars. he told everyone this was his son and, in fact, it was. he didn't live to see him. the son was -- i mean, my father was murdered two months before my brother was born. my brother was born on the day i graduated from high school. and then during that month, we started with the help of the student on violent coordinating committee being led by the person who later became my husband, charles sherrod. we started the baker county movement. and baker county had a particularly bad sheriff during those years. they -- not surprise.

they called him the gator. he liked being called the gator. we had to actually face the gator during the summer of 1965. there was bloody saturday. people don't hear about that. there was bloody saturday in baker county where when the march went to the courthouse, there were all of these white men with chains and ax handles. the person that murdered my daddy was one of them. you know, beating the people who were there to march. and there were many, many times when we had some very, very scary times as we worked to bring change in baker county during the summer. then in september of that year, i went away. i didn't go far. my intent was to go to the north, to college. but after what happened i didn't know whether i would get to go to college at all but ended up going to ft. valley. and calling home in september and found that a group of white men, the klan, that included the sheriff, were burning a cross in front of our home. the house, my mother, my four sisters and baby brother.

can i ask you, was it the murder of your father, was it the cross burning, was it the klan members you saw walking through the town with those chains, is that what created that hatred? is that what led to that moment you talked about in that speech?

that was all part of it. some things that happened even before. i can remember being in high school and back in those days, they have they call what a visiting teacher. segregated school there in baker county. i can see it just like it was yesterday. the visiting teacher that was white coming in and taking over the classroom from the teacher and putting words up on the board and making us pronounce them until we pronounced them like she did, as if we were not being taught. as if we couldn't talk. you know, unless we talked the way she did. i can think of many, many other incidents.

it is interesting listening to the background and what happened to your family. i could understand, i think anyone could understand, where that frustration, hatred, would build. yet, you ended up working for the same organization that at that time had the same racist views, black farmers were being treated so unfairly, totally being thrown under the bus, but your whole attitude changed about white people and even this organization you end up working for this organization. i mean, what -- that's so ironic. how did that happen? how did that turn around?

when you look at the fact that i spent years helping farmers and others trying to access programs through the very agency i ended up working for and having to manage some of the very people who actually did some of those acts, you know, in the early years. you know, you about i felt that i worked on the issues from where i was, outside of the agency, and i felt being in the agency, this gave me a chance to try to bring some of the changes i felt needed to happen from that level. i needed to make sure that the staff and everyone else knew that this was an agency where everyone had equal access. i don't think that was -- most people don't even know what rural development in georgia does. this is one agency that could build a whole city. you know. because we deal with all -- you know, hospitals, homes, you know, just -- getting people into decent and affordable homes. you know, so much can happen from that agency with the right person being at the head of it. i felt because of what i have been through, i was the -- i was time. a person who was right for the could make that difference. you mentioned you manage -- ended up managing people that treated and your family unfairly years back. which leads me to the question the farmer, cal hall, accused of killing your father. did you ever end up talking to him, his family, having interaction? did you ever find peace with that family?

no. we didn't. not at all. i was told, as i remember, he died of cancer some years later. and i think when he was near his death bed, he wanted to try to talk to my mother's brother or someone. i don't think that ever happened.

i'm just having visions of emmett till and what that family went through. your father, i want to bring it back to that, he would be so proud of you.

yes, he would.

today. what do you -- i mean, i am sure that everything that you have been through and how you got to this point is so much in his honor and his death had -- really breathed new life into you and now look at how this has all come. do you even think i if it got to this point you would be able to make the difference you are making now? you are on your way. you have a national audience now to tell your message.

yes.

and to talk about his life and what happened in your past.

this is something i have always -- to talk about his life and what happened to him was one of my goals from way back when i made the decision.

i love the picture we have of him as well. we probably have been looking at it right there. i love this picture. it is just -- you can just tell that -- the love in his face. continue. you have been wanting to tell his story and writing a book.

yes. you know, because he -- he was a person who looked out for the entire community. there are individuals that would tell you back in that day a lot of people didn't have the vehicles to ride in and the kids' activities in school, my father would go around in the truck, picking up in our community, taking people to school. he was very active in the community. and he was just great -- you know, a great person for us and all of these girls. we all had boys' nicknames. he wanted a son so bad.

what was your nickname?

my name was bill.

okay, bill. as we wrap up here, i have to ask you this, would you go back and work for the usda if secretary vilsack said i'm sorry, we want you back?

you know, my first reaction was i'm just not so sure, i don't know. i have been receiving calls. i received a call this morning from the president of the naacp in douglas, georgia, where i made that speech. he said i just called you to say i wish you would consider if they offer going back. he said, i think you can do even more for us at this point. i hadn't looked at it in that light.

naacp, is it still relevant? they were the first ones not to have your back. this is the organization that is supposed to have your back. you would think they would have looked at the whole tape.

yes. you know, and maybe for those at the national level, it doesn't mean to them what it does for those at the local level. i know for some of them it means so much to have the naacp as an organization in their community.

well, it has been a pleasure talking with you this morning. by the way with i want to mention this is now giving you a platform to write about your father. i know a lot of people are going to be eager. have you gotten a publisher yet?

no, i don't. i would love to be able to -- people have been asking me for years, knowing my story, when are you going to write your book? i have always said i don't have time.

i tell what you, we have a blog, cnm.com/kyra. we have all kinds of fascinating people that write in to our blog. i'm sure there are many publishers out there. i'm going to go ahead and plug it now. shall we? let's just say are there any publishers out there? how about any fantastic organizations that would love to have shirley come head your group? let's see what kind of feedback we get. what a pleasure to talk with you. what a pleasure to see something so nasty and so awful turn into such a beautiful thing. now you have a forum to really get your message out there. your background is amazing. it is sweet justice, wouldn't you say?

yes, it is. thank you. thank you. you are the one to help get it started. so thank you.

it is my honor. it is something that my fema and i believe strongly in. that's civil rights. thanks, shirley.

thank you.

Would Tom Vilsack be available today to do an online chat with the Washington Post about the Shirley Sherrod incident?
Would take ½ hour; done online, with questions coming from our WP readers and are screened.
We could do it at 11, 12, 1, 2 or 3 ET today.

Landrieu: Separate Vote Held For Lending Pool

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Andy Leonatti

Senate Democrats will vote separately on a provision of the small business jobs bill that has caused Republican heartburn over fears that it is another bank bailout, one of the bill's architects said today.

The provision, a $30 billion lending pool for small banks to lend to small businesses, will be voted on as a separate amendment, Senate Small Business Chairwoman Mary Landrieu said. The pool is on the main components of the bill, which also contains $12 billion in tax breaks for small businesses to boost hiring.

Landrieu said the bill will pass by the end of the week, adding she is confident she has 60 votes to pass the amendment. When the underlying bill still had the $30 billion lending fund, it survived a cloture vote on a motion to proceed in late June, with eight Republicans voting in favor of the motion.

"They always want to use the private sector," Landrieu said of the GOP at a news conference. The bill will help only healthy small banks lend, she added, and said it "is just shocking to me and very puzzling" that Republican support has fallen off.

On Tuesday, Senate Small Business ranking member Olympia Snowe said she expressed her opposition to the fund in a conversation with Senate Majority Leader Reid and hoped Reid would use a substitute amendment to strip the fund.

"Some people call it TARP junior," Snowe said Tuesday.

Landrieu said today that Snowe was still opposed to the fund. Democrats have been working with Snowe and Sen. George LeMieux, R-Fla., who had also originally voted for the motion to proceed.

Landrieu was joined at today's news conference by Sens. Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., and Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., who all said the fund was reserved for healthy, small banks with less than $10 billion in assets. Merkley added the fund is budget-neutral.

Landrieu also said the amendment on the fund would be the only substantive amendment allowed on the floor. An estate tax amendment from Senate Minority Whip Kyl and Sen. Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark., along with an amendment raising credit union lending from Sen. Mark Udall, D-Colo., will not be considered.

Reid and Senate Minority Leader McConnell had been unable to come to an agreement on the other amendments.

Landrieu insisted there was still time this week for the Senate to vote on the lending-pool amendment, then cloture, and final passage, even though it still needs to pass an unemployment-insurance extension later today or Thursday.

"It will pass this week with this provision in it," she said.

When asked why she would need to hold a separate vote on the amendment if there was enough support to pass the bill with the fund in it, she said Democrats want to "highlight who's actually stepping up."

SENATE RACES

Capito Takes Pass On Byrd Seat

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Reid Wilson, from National Journal's Hotline On Call

Rep. Shelley Moore Capito, R-W.Va., will not run for the seat held by the late Democratic Sen. Robert Byrd and will seek to stay in the House, she said in a statement today.

"With the voters' support, I intend to serve my full term in the House of Representatives and not run for any other office until 2012," Capito said.

Capito's decision robs Republicans of their best possible candidate, even though a deal struck in the state legislature made it possible for her to run both for re-election and in the Senate special election. Capito said the dual candidacy would open the door to a court challenge, which she wants to avoid.

Without Capito, the GOP is likely to turn to one of several wealthy businessmen to step in. John Raese, who took 34 percent of the vote against Byrd in 2006, is considering running for the seat again. Bob Adams, who runs the League of American Voters, is also thinking about a bid.

Neither candidate would have a lot of time to prepare a race. West Virginia voters will select nominees in an Aug. 28 primary and then pick a replacement for Byrd in the already scheduled Nov. 2 midterm election.

Whichever Republican emerges would likely be an underdog against Democratic Gov. Joe Manchin, who said Tuesday he would run for Byrd's seat. Manchin is hugely popular in the state and would have been the early favorite even over Capito, even though President Obama has a dismal approval rating there.

DEFENSE

Departing Commander Bemoans Budget Cut

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Megan Scully

The outgoing commander of U.S. forces in Iraq today bemoaned the Senate Armed Services Committee's decision to cut in half the $2 billion request in the Pentagon's FY11 budget for Iraqi security forces.

Army Gen. Raymond Odierno, whom the Senate already has confirmed to lead the Norfolk, Va.-based U.S. Joint Forces Command when he completes his tour in Iraq in September, said the money is critical to making Iraq capable of defending itself after all U.S. combat forces leave in December 2011.

"With us still on the ground, we can get this done quicker and more efficiently. So that's why I want the money for '11," Odierno said during a breakfast with reporters. "It will be used to work on the border forces. It will be used to ... finish building the Army's strategic logistics."

Odierno said the $2 billion request "is cost-sharing. We're not paying for everything." Iraq plans to spend $11 billion, or 17.5 percent of its budget, on security this year.

The four-star general also stressed the importance of helping Iraq financially as it struggles with a budget deficit estimated at $12 billion. Doing so, Odierno said, will help stabilize the country and could ensure Iraq will be a strong partner in the volatile region.

"We have to be careful that we don't run away from them," he said.

Senate Armed Services Chairman Carl Levin argued during a news conference May 28 that "it's kind of hard to justify putting billions of dollars in for the Iraq army" considering the country's oil revenue and its decision to slash the request for defense spending.

During Odierno's confirmation hearing June 24, Armed Services ranking member John McCain said Levin made the cut "without the consultation with the minority and replaced by earmarked pork-barrel projects - one of the really most unusual acts that I have seen in the years that I have served on this committee."

Odierno today said it would take until 2013 or 2014 for Iraq to produce enough oil where the country would be financially solvent.

"We have to determine what's the right level to continue to provide some support" to Iraq, he said. "It's in our best interest ... to continue to support them to build the military, for example."

Meanwhile, Odierno said the United States plans to build an office of security cooperation inside its embassy to provide long-term technical support to Iraqi security forces as they buy U.S. equipment.

Iraq has already committed to buying M1A1 Abrams tanks, C-130 airlifters and some helicopters. The country is also requesting 18 F-16 fighter jets, which would be delivered starting in 2013.

Vilsack Gets Heat For Sherrod Firing

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Jerry Hagstrom, with Billy House contributing

The Congressional Black Caucus, the Federation of Southern Cooperatives and the Rural Coalition today called on Agriculture Secretary Vilsack to reinstate Shirley Sherrod, the Georgia rural development director who was forced to resign Tuesday amid controversy over remarks on race.

Sherrod has come under fire for comments she made at a March NAACP conference - which were taped and widely circulated - that critics have called racist. As a member of an anti-poverty group 20 years ago, Sherrod said, she denied a white farmer full assistance.

But in extended comments heard only in the full videotape, she said she later helped the farmer, and she used the example to underscore that her job was to help poor farmers regardless of race.

In a statement, CBC Chairwoman Rep. Barbara Lee, D-Calif., and other caucus members said it was troubling that Sherrod was asked for her resignation "because of an edited video clip."

"A full review of the clip demonstrates Ms. Sherrod's personal transformation. She was clearly educating the public about the power of redemption. It is now apparent that Secretary Vilsack did not have all of the facts available to him and overreacted," the statement added.

"There are many individuals still serving in the Department of Agriculture who were responsible for years of discrimination against African American farmers," the statement said, referring to long-standing discrimination cases that are only now being settled.

Ralph Paige, executive director of the Federation of Southern Cooperatives and Land Assistance Fund, called on Vilsack to "quickly correct this injustice."

"We note with interest that your concern is to move forward to solve the problems that USDA has had in the past in terms of its sad record on civil rights," Paige said. "Yet your decision to fire one of the few persons in the country who could likely do the most to help achieve that goal stubbornly negates your stated interest of moving forward toward equal access and equality of opportunity at USDA with integrity."

"The inference that Shirley Sherrod is a racist is beyond comprehension," he added. "For you to make a decision without consideration of Shirley's long and impressive work in civil rights is uncalled for."

Paige also suggested that Vilsack use Sherrod as an "ambassador" to teach others around the country about race. The Rural Coalition, which lobbies for low-income farmers and rural people of all races, said President Obama and Vilsack should apologize to Sherrod for the pressure they put on her to resign as well as reinstate her.

As a leader of a USDA community-based group, Sherrod had "passionately insisted that the injustices experienced by Hmong immigrant producers in Arkansas be addressed by USDA," the group added, arguing that her leadership had set the stage for Vilsack's civil rights initiative.

Meanwhile, National Association of Black Farmers President John Boyd today called on Congress to include the money for the settlement of the black farmers' discrimination case against USDA in the war supplemental bill.

Early today, Vilsack issued a statement to say he would review the situation. But Sherrod said on NBC's "Today" that she is not certain she wants her job back.

Vilsack had not returned a request for comment by presstime.

RNC Feud Over Funds Could Imperil Steele

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Reid Wilson, National Journal's Hotline On Call

With Republican National Committee members set to meet early next month in Kansas City, an old feud between chairman Michael Steele and key opponents on the national committee is re-emerging -- one that could prove a more serious offense, in committee members' eyes, than any gaffe Steele has made so far.

In amended reports filed with the FEC, RNC Treasurer Randy Pullen asserts the committee has millions in unreported debts, publicly calling into question Steele's leadership of the party.

The RNC reported raising just $5.9 million in June and spending $7.6 million, with $10.9 million in the bank. In addition, the committee said it had $2 million in debts at the end of the month -- debts that RNC spokesperson Doug Heye said have been paid off. That means the national committee had just under $9 million, making it relatively cash-poor just before crucial midterm elections.

RNC members have worried about the committee's budget for more than a year, as fundraising got off to a slow start under the new chairman. And Pullen, along with a cadre of senior RNC members who have served on the party's budget committee for years, has openly feuded with Steele over spending authority.

Last year, a group of RNC members realized the committee had neglected to re-pass a rule at the Sept. 2008 convention that instituted strict spending controls. The rule had been standard operating procedure at the RNC for years, but the oversight -- committed months before Steele won his position -- left most major spending decisions up to staff rather than committee members.

Those RNC members -- among them Pullen, New Jersey committeeman David Norcross and Massachusetts committeeman Ron Kaufman -- tried to pass a resolution reinstituting the old rule. Steele took that move as a personal affront, accusing members of trying to undermine his chairmanship by imposing the new restrictions.

The resolution was aimed at providing checks and balances at a committee that long-time members believed was newly unstable. That belief had little to do with Steele and everything to do with a little-known accountant who for more than three decades kept constant vigil over the national committee's budget.

That accountant, Jay Banning, served as the party's chief financial officer. Former RNC officials and committee members say Banning ran the committee's books with exacting precision. Every bill that came in was reported and promptly paid, every expense report was questioned, and every penny was accounted for.

But Banning left the committee early last year, just after Steele took over, and sources said he was asked to resign. The committee held his going-away party at the Tune Inn, a Capitol Hill bar blocks from the RNC. Banning's remaining staff dutifully reported that expense on the following month's FEC report.

Banning is media-shy and loathe to discuss party business outside the confines of the RNC building or beyond the handful of top RNC members he has known for years. But he is a recognized commodity in the political world and remains on contract with the RNC. The NRSC quickly hired him as their top accountant once he left his old job.

Norcross, Kaufman and Pullen trusted Banning to run the RNC completely by the book. Pullen does not trust Steele's new hires to do so. In his other capacity as chairman of the Arizona GOP, he spent several days in Washington between July 15 and July 20, when the FEC reports were filed, and he has accused top Steele aides -- most notably RNC chief of staff Mike Leavitt -- of withholding information.

Pullen went so far as to refuse to sign some documents headed to the FEC. As treasurer, he is legally responsible for the reports' accuracy. And this month, he filed amended reports that reflect more than $7 million in previously unreported debt the committee held. All that debt is now off the books, Heye said.

The biggest hole Banning has left, those with knowledge of his work say, is the absence of a regimented process. Without his watchful eye, RNC staffers paid out $2,000 to a consultant for an evening at a risque L.A. nightclub. Staffers have also voiced concerns over spending on outside vendors, including a former Steele adviser. That relationship has since soured.

Steele himself has taken steps to address the broken processes. Pullen's review of recent FEC filings is the latest in a series of investigations at the committee. Steele created an ethics panel that is looking into the nightclub expense, a panel that has already forced out the top two finance officials at the RNC. And Steele has hired Tom Josefiak, the highly-regarded former RNC general counsel, to take a closer look at the party's books. Heye said Tuesday that the RNC has even hired Michael Toner, a former chairman of the FEC, to keep it on track.

Those independent looks at the RNC and its fiscal house already guaranteed the budget would play a huge role in next month's committee meetings in Kansas City. Pullen's allegations will infuse a usually-dry budget committee meeting with a tension that has been quietly bubbling beneath the surface.

And that tension is likely to spread beyond Steele's usual list of enemies. GOP state party chairmen are counting on money from the national party to fund Victory programs across the country. Already, budgets for those centers have been slashed. The RNC has opened more than 100 Victory centers and are planning to open 225 in 35 states before Election Day.

But while the RNC will have sent $2 million to state parties by the end of the month, members are nervous the money they need may not be there. Although Republicans are likely to make major gains during the midterms, the amount of credit Steele gets from the 168 members of the RNC will depend in large part on whether those members believe the party left seats on the table because they could not compete financially.

Though Steele's occasional gaffes have gotten him in trouble, calls for his resignation are not serious threats to his chairmanship, and new calls will be seen by committee members as a distraction at a moment the party needs to be focused on winning races. But Steele is virtually assured of a challenge when his term expires in January.

Ironically, it will not be Steele's verbal miscues that draw a challenge. Instead, his decision to send a long-time employee packing early in his tenure could prove the most decisive, and damaging, decision Steele made.

Obama Signs Reg Reform Into Law

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by George E. Condon Jr., with Bill Swindell contributing

President Obama celebrated one of his top legislative victories today, signing into law a major overhaul of financial regulations that he promised would shine light on "shadowy deals" on Wall Street and "put a stop to taxpayer bailouts once and for all."

Flanked by many of the lawmakers who pushed the bill through over what he called "the furious lobbying of an array of powerful interest groups and a partisan minority determined to block change," the president said the new law includes "the strongest consumer financial protections in history."

Vikram Pandit of Citigroup was one of the few representatives from Wall Street at the signing, which took place at the Ronald Reagan Building, while members of consumer groups were far more prominent. Also in attendance was Elizabeth Warren, the Harvard professor heavily favored by liberal activists to head the consumer financial protection agency created by the bill.

Warren, who would face stiff opposition from Republicans in the Senate, praised the new law as "the strongest set of financial reforms in three generations." She called the consumer agency "a tough, independent cop in Washington to help clear out the tricks and traps hidden in consumer credit agreements."

But business groups remain wary of the law.

Thomas Donohue, president and CEO of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, warned of all the new regulations to come as well as "unintended consequences that create more uncertainty for American businesses."

Republicans remain unwavering in their opposition to the measure, with many issuing immediate calls for repeal. House Minority Leader Boehner dismissed it as "another big-government overreach that will make it harder to create new jobs."

SENATE

Democrats Keep Blasting GOP Over Benefits

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Dan Friedman, with Billy House contributing

Senate Democrats today used a delay in passing a bill providing an extension of unemployment benefits to ramp up attacks on the GOP while Republicans said the haggling does not affect when the bill will be enacted.

Democrats for months have cited opposition by most Republicans to extending benefits without offsetting the cost to accuse the minority of indifference to the plight of jobless. Democratic senators leapt at a chance to underscore that claim by noting Republicans are forcing the Senate to wait 30 hours after a cloture vote Tuesday to pass the bill.

"We are just burning 30 hours of time, and in my judgment it's just mean," said Sen. Debbie Stabenow, D-Mich., a Democratic spokesperson on the issue.

The bill would restore federal unemployment benefits for more than 2.5 million jobless Americans who have lost them since the end of May and extend them through Nov. 30, allowing people without jobs in high-unemployment states to collect up to 99 weeks of benefits.

Tuesday's 60-40 cloture vote came after Democrats in recent months repeatedly fell short of votes to impose cloture on bills to extend benefits, and it effectively ensures passage when the 30-hour cloture clock runs out at 9 p.m. tonight.

A spokesman for House Speaker Pelosi said today the House will pass the bill "soon after the Senate passes it. ... Maybe late tonight, more likely [Thursday]."

President Obama is expected to quickly sign the bill after House passage.

But Senate Democrats said Republicans should have yielded time to pass the bill Tuesday or earlier today.

"The Republican leadership, supported by the overwhelming majority of its caucus, has stood in front of the burning house and said: 'Everyone wants us to put out the fire, but we're going to sit back and wait a while before we turn on the hoses,'" Senate Majority Leader Reid said. "That is a disgrace that brings shame to this institution."

GOP leadership aides said the party could have agreed to a quick vote on passage Tuesday if Democrats allowed a vote on an alternative Republican proposal to pay for the benefits extension with unused stimulus funds. That vote would have supported Republican arguments that they back extending benefits if paid for. A Republican aide said such a deal was discussed last week.

A spokesman for Minority Leader McConnell said that since the House likely could not have voted on the bill sooner than today, Senate passage on Tuesday would not have mattered.

"The bottom line is, the Senate is going to pass it today; the House is going to pass it today," a GOP aide said. Senate Republicans expect a series of votes this afternoon on motions suspend the rules and allow amendments filed by Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla. Because the motions need 67 votes to pass, they are almost certain to fail, but Republicans hope they will highlight their backing of a deficit-neutral benefits extension.

GOP Senators Fail To Eliminate Ethanol Credit

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Amy Harder

Senate Republicans today sought unsuccessfully in committee to eliminate the ethanol blenders' tax credit, which is expiring at the end of the year.

In an Energy and Natural Resources Committee markup, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., offered an amendment that would have eliminated the subsidy, which costs taxpayers 45 cents per gallon ethanol credit, or about $5.2 billion in 2009.

"Maybe we will stop doing this damned foolishness called ethanol subsidies," McCain said in seeking to add it onto a vehicle technology bill sponsored by Sen. Debbie Stabenow, D-Mich. "It's one of the greatest rip-offs that takes place on the American taxpayers," McCain added.

Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman Jeff Bingaman, while saying he has concerns about ethanol subsidies, said the Finance Committee, not his panel, has jurisdiction over tax provisions.

The amendment failed, with all Democrats and Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., voting against it. Kansas is a leading state for ethanol production -- something Brownback noted before voting against the amendment.

Bingaman requested a report by CBO that found the federal tax credit may have actually contributed to excess ethanol production. Bingaman did not talk about the report in the hearing today, instead delaying conversation for the floor.

"I'm sure that we will be voting on it on the Senate floor between now and the end of the year," Bingaman said. All members agreed though that a broader discussion on ethanol is warranted.

The ethanol amendment was the lone sticking point in the committee's markup of more than 30 bills. Several passed today and the committee is expected to resume Thursday to consider the rest.

The measures approved so far, mostly along partisan lines, include a bill by Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., that would incentivize the use of electric vehicles; Stabenow's bill, which provides Energy Department funding for an array of vehicle technology; two bills directing the Energy Department to provide more research and development for nuclear energy; and another measure incentivizing solar energy.

All of these measures could be added onto an energy bill Senate Majority Leader Reid is crafting. Bingaman said he did not know what would be included in Reid's package and did not elaborate on the negotiations. Democrats are expected to talk about energy and climate issues in a caucus lunch Thursday.

Reid on Tuesday was noncommittal about what might be in the package, as well as whether there will be a carbon pricing system included or whether he will bring any energy legislation to the floor before the August recess.

House Passes Tariff Bill

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Andy Leonatti

Despite warnings by Republicans that they would hold to their earmark moratorium, the House today passed a tariff bill, 378-43, that contains hundreds of specialized tariff breaks for products that are not manufactured in the United States but needed by U.S. manufacturers to assemble products.

Democrats brought up the bill, known as the "Miscellaneous Tariff Bill," under suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds vote of the House. Republicans noted that the bill's individual tariff breaks would constitute an earmark under the definition of their party's yearlong ban on member-requested projects, and some said they would vote against it on those grounds. But in the end, most voted for the measure.

Ways and Means Select Revenue Measures Subcommittee Chairman Richard Neal, D-Mass., praised the bill's transparency rules, which require every member request to be vetted by the U.S. International Trade Commission. In addition, the administration must ensure products being given tariff breaks are not already manufactured in the United States and that they do not cost too much.

Those products include special chemicals, television plasma screens and golf club parts. The vote is a key vote by business groups like the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, who have urged the GOP to drop tariff provisions from their earmark ban.

Senate Panel Cuts Obama's CJS Request

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Otto Kreisher

The Senate Commerce, Justice and Science Appropriations Subcommittee today approved without opposition a $60.1 billion FY11 funding bill that Chairwoman Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., said emphasized fiscal discipline but would allow the covered agencies to perform their missions.

The total is $400 million below President Obama's request and $4.3 billion under the current year's funding. It is also $400 million below the total funding approved last week by the House subcommittee.

Working closely with Senate Commerce, Justice and Science Appropriations ranking member Richard Shelby, R-Ala., Mikulski said "we brought very strong fiscal discipline" to the funding measure. "The very stringent budget environment" forced the subcommittee to make tough decisions, she said.

Mikulski said the bill requires covered agencies to cut overhead expenses by 10 percent, to reduce receptions and representation spending by 25 percent and specifically bans "lavish banquets and conferences."

"We're telling everyone, if you're in the cost-overflow business, you're out of business," she said.

In addition to the "fiscal discipline" she mentioned several times, Mikulski said the panel's focus was on fighting violent crime and terrorism, funding a "restructuring of the manned space program" and supporting science and "the mission of Commerce [Department] to create jobs."

A strong supporter of NASA, which has a large presence in her state, Mikulski's mark would provide the $19 billion Obama requested for the space agency but took a different approach on the future of manned space.

Obama cancelled the Constellation program that was intended to replace the space shuttles, which are due to be retired by the end of the year, and to take astronauts back to the moon then on to Mars. The president instead called for commercial operators to take over support of the International Space Station and set manned missions to Mars as a long-term goal.

The Senate panel would provide $3 billion for a "next-generation Crew Launch Vehicle," which means a rocket engine, and "Crew Exploration Vehicle," apparently as substitutes for the Constellation systems.

An aide said that included $1.9 billion to develop a heavy lift launch vehicle, a powerful rocket engine. Shelby, who also has major NASA operations in his state, said Obama's proposals on manned space flight were "totally unacceptable" by counting on commercial space operators to safely put humans in space.

The House panel had provided the $19 billion but withheld funding for the manned space program until an authorization bill dealing with the issue is enacted.

The Senate bill also provides $1.6 billion for shuttle operations. That includes funding for an extra shuttle mission, but only if an independent commission deems it safe, Mikulski said. It offers $2.8 billion for ISS operations, $5 billion for science and $904 million for aeronautics and space technology research.

The measure contains $29.9 billion for the Justice Department, which includes $8.3 billion for the FBI, $6.8 billion for the Bureau of Prisons, $3.7 billion for state and local law enforcement assistance, $2.1 billion for the Drug Enforcement Administration, $1.2 billion for the Marshals Service and $1.2 billion for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Fire Arms and Explosives.

Commerce would get $9 billion, the National Science Foundation $7.3 billion, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration $5.5 billion and the Patent Office $2.3 billion.

Stearns Urges FCC To Slow Down

Wednesday, July 21, 2010

by Eliza Krigman

House Energy and Commerce Communications Subcommittee ranking member Cliff Stearns, R-Fla., urged FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski today to refrain from putting the reclassification of broadband on the agency's September meeting agenda, saying it would be "disrespectful" to the ongoing House and Senate talks on this issue.

Stearns also said FCC action would shortchange the necessary review of all the public comments filed on this matter by last week's deadline.

He added that lawmakers would only have a few days to assess the reclassification issue upon their return to Washington after Labor Day.

The FCC declined to comment.

His remarks came at a House Energy and Commerce Committee markup of legislation that would update communications laws to ensure individuals with vision and hearing disabilities can utilize Internet-based communication services and have better access video programming, among other technologies.

"We've seen significant technological change since Congress first adopted the Americans with Disabilities Act," said Energy and Commerce Communications Subcommittee Chairman Rick Boucher, D-Va., who called the modernization of the law "timely." Monday marks the 20th anniversary of the law.

Addressing Republican concerns, the manager's amendment prohibits the FCC from mandating the use of proprietary technologies. It also sets accessibility goals but does not dictate on how to get there, and it includes waivers for small businesses.

Similar legislation has been marked up and approved by the Senate Commerce Committee. House Energy and Commerce Chairman Henry Waxman expressed hope the House and Senate will send a bill to the president soon.

Walter McCormick Jr., president and CEO of the U.S. Telecom Association, praised the committee's passage of the bill, which he said "provides a sound and sensible roadmap for achieving greater accessibility."

Subcommittee OKs Transportation-HUD Budget

With little rancor, a Senate Appropriations panel today approved a FY11 spending bill funding transportation and housing programs at the same level as last year. Approved by voice vote, the Transportation-HUD Subcommittee's bill would provide $67.9 billion in budget authority, $800 million below President Obama's budget request. The bill provides total resources for FY11 of $122.5 billion, $700 million below the president's request and $400 million above the FY10 level. The legislation includes $1 billion for investments in high-speed rail, on top of the $10.5 billion provided under last year's economic stimulus package and the FY10 spending bill.

The panel rejected some administration proposals, including the creation of an Office of Livability within the Transportation Department. Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee ranking member Kit Bond, R-Mo., said decisions on livability should be made at the local level. The committee also rejected the administration's proposal for a $4 billion National Infrastructure Innovation and Finance Fund. Other notable provisions in the bill include $900 million for vehicle and driver safety programs. The bill would provide $19.5 billion for housing assistance vouchers, $1.3 billion more than FY10. The full committee is expected to take up the bill Thursday.

Tea Party Caucus Pledges Action

Rep. Michele Bachmann, R-Minn., and her fledgling Tea Party Caucus held its first meeting and press conference this morning, announcing it has 29 charter members. Rather than serving as the Tea Party movement's "mouthpiece," the group will be a receptive ear on Capitol Hill, members said. The caucus so far counts three of the five top House GOP leaders in its group -- Republican Conference Chairman Mike Pence of Indiana, National Republican Congressional Campaign Committee Chairman Pete Sessions of Texas, and Republican Study Committee Chairman Tom Price of Georgia.

Minority Leader Boehner is not joining, citing a general rule of only belonging to the House Republican Caucus. In the closed door-meeting, 24 of the charter members attended to hear a diverse group of Tea Party activists, including minorities, speak about the changes they want to see in Washington. Some of those activists also spoke at the news conference. Their attendance, said Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., should dispel "a lot of rumors about racism and other things."

The Final Word

"Based on the White House's reaction to our report, there's little chance that I will be called away by an invitation to the White House anytime soon to have to miss this hearing."

Statement by Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack Regarding Shirley Sherrod

WASHINGTON, July 21, 2010 - Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack today released the following statement in response to his conversation with Shirley Sherrod:

"Today, I reached out to Shirley Sherrod to apologize. I also told her I was sorry for the pain this caused her and her family and friends.

"I reacted too quickly. I should have taken the time to listen and learn.

"While I cannot change what happened, I can try to make something out of this difficult incident.

"As we know, Shirley has a unique and compelling story to tell. She and her family endured discrimination and overcame adversity. Fighting to advance justice and equality, she has helped farmers who were struggling to keep their land, fought for women in need of social and economic justice, and African-American men and women who faced discrimination. As USDA's Georgia State Rural Development Director, she worked to promote economic opportunity for all people by enabling job creation and business growth. And Shirley has shown tremendous character through the events of the last few days.

"Shirley and I talked about a unique opportunity at USDA. With all that she has seen, endured and accomplished, it would be invaluable to have her experience, commitment and record of service at USDA. I hope she considers staying with the department.

"I did not handle this situation well. I will continue to review the circumstances that brought us to this day and I am committed to making sure it does not happen again.

"As part of this effort, I also want to renew my firm commitment to put behind all of us the USDA's past record on civil rights. While we have made some progress over the last 18 months, more work is needed."

USDA is an equal opportunity provider, employer and lender. To file a complaint of discrimination, write: USDA, Director, Office of Civil Rights, 1400 Independence Ave., SW, Washington, DC 20250-9410 or call (800) 795-3272 (voice), or (202) 720-6382 (TDD).

And one last thing: Vilsack said "the position needs to be filled."

Does this means he offered her an existing position or that bringing her on would fill a position the department needs to have?

And would the job be based in Washington or elsewhere?

In meeting, Messina praised Sherrod handling
21 July 2010, 16:38 GMT, Politico [360 Words]

In a closed staff meeting Tuesday morning, a senior administration praised elements of the White House's initial response to a partial video of a speech by a Department of Agriculture official -- a response that the Administration has since reversed.

White House officials yesterday afternoon told reporters they did not press Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack to demand the resignation of Shirley Sherrod, but that they stood by the hasty decision; last night, they took credit for pressing Vilsack to rehire her when a fuller video revealed that her remarks had been edited to mean the opposite of what she said.

But three Democratic sources said Deputy Chief of Staff Jim Messina, singled the White House's initial response to the incident out for praise in the regular 8:30 a.m. staff meeting Tuesday morning. The sources differed on the substance of Messina's praise, but concurred that he had praised the speed of White House communications in response to the flap, which was driven by a misleadingly-edited video posted to Andrew Breitbart's Big Government website.

One source, who is unhappy with the administration's handling of the incident, paraphrased Messina's remarks: "We could have waited all day - we could have had a media circus - but we took decisive action and it's a good example of how to respond in this atmosphere."

But two other senior officials present at the meeting, who responded to a call to the White House press office, said the gist of Messina's words had been conveyed to POLITICO inaccurately, and that Messina -- a top political operative and senior manager -- was merely speaking in his capacity as Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and "cheerleader" to boost staffers' morale.

Messina was merely praising the White House staff for "communicating well, sharing well, basically rising to the occasion" on the Sherrod story, one official said. "It was an institutional or procedural point."

Messina could not have been praising a White House decision to fire Sharron, the source said, because the decision was made by Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack.

Sherrod case shows power of conservative media

By DAVID BAUDER (AP) – 1 hour ago
<http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/article/ALeqM5iv-NWIPtRIuJVAf76B8YegLInJWOD9H3P8500>

NEW YORK — A conservative blog posts 2 minutes, 38 seconds of video clips of a black federal agriculture official saying she didn't do everything she could to help a white farmer. The blogger labels it racism. Calls grow for the Obama administration to remove her. No one at the Agriculture Department or the White House checks further. The official is forced to resign.

Monday ends, but not the story.

A complete, 43-minute version of the video surfaces the next day, Tuesday, and casts a much different light on Shirley Sherrod's comments: They were part of an NAACP speech about how she overcame her racial prejudice to help the farmer, not about prejudice that stopped her from helping him.

Now, the administration is criticized for wronging her by rushing to judgment.

By Wednesday afternoon, Sherrod is sitting at a studio in CNN's Atlanta headquarters, watching on live television as White House press secretary Robert Gibbs apologizes to her.

She accepts and says: "Being afraid of the machine that the right has put out there — that's what's driving this."

A split screen shows her face and Gibbs' in a surreal moment, concluding a whirlwind 48 hours in which conservative media had the Obama administration on the defensive.

Fox News Channel has been riding high in the ratings since Barack Obama became the nation's first black president a year and a half ago. Commentators Glenn Beck and Bill O'Reilly offer a favorite destination for many administration opponents.

The Sherrod story erupted after BigGovernment.com, a website run by conservative activist Andrew Breitbart, posted portions of her speech at an NAACP banquet in March.

Breitbart's story began: "Context is everything." He said he offered "video evidence of racism coming from a federal appointee," and followed with snippets of the speech.

On the video, Sherrod, hired last August as director of rural development for the U.S. Agriculture Department in Georgia, talked about her unwillingness to offer much help to a white farmer when she worked at a non-profit organization 24 years ago.

The story moved from the Internet to Fox News Channel on Monday night.

In seeking her resignation, Sherrod said, a USDA deputy undersecretary told her the story was going to appear on Beck's program late Monday afternoon. Instead, Beck didn't discuss it that day; it first appeared a few hours later on the top-rated prime-time show "The O'Reilly Factor."

Host Bill O'Reilly showed the brief portion of Sherrod's March speech where she explained that she didn't give the white farmer "the full force of what I could do."

"Wow!" O'Reilly said after the clip aired. "That is simply unacceptable, and Ms. Sherrod must resign. The federal government cannot have skin color deciding any assistance."

As he talked, Fox flashed the news on the bottom of its screen that Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack had accepted Sherrod's resignation.

Fox's Sean Hannity aired the same short snippet of Sherrod's speech shortly afterward.

"This was at an NAACP dinner, and this was racist," Hannity said.

CNN's Rick Sanchez said producers there were intrigued by Biggovernment.com's posting and immediately started reporting on it. But with all the questions involved — Was this a fair characterization of Sherrod's full speech? Can she be reached to give her side of the story? — they wouldn't be ready to discuss it on his afternoon show until Tuesday, he said.

By then, the story rushed by.

"As journalists, we have to protect ourselves the best we can," Sanchez said. "It's easy for it to happen to anybody, by the way — jump to a conclusion, get excited, look at the coverage. It's kind of like creating a bandwagon effect. Once you get on the bandwagon, you can't hit the brakes."

By Tuesday morning, "Fox & Friends" headlined the story "Racism Caught on Tape."

Commentator Laura Ingraham talked about "people who have burrowed their way into the Obama administration with radical outlooks, a radical agenda and, in this case, a racist sentiment. How many more like Ms. Sherrod exist in the Obama administration who weren't so stupid as she was to actually explicitly state her views on the issue of race?"

When the full tape became available later, it was clear that Sherrod said the case taught her a lesson about the importance of helping all those in need, regardless of race.

"What's happening here is that she's guilty until proven innocent," Beck said on his show. "They fired her and now they are back-pedaling. There's no due process here. Doesn't an American have a right to a fair trial? They have politically assassinated this woman. No one has heard the case for or against her, they just took her out. When did we stop having the right to face our accusers?"

It's not clear when, or if, someone at Fox saw the full tape.

Fox spokeswoman Irena Briganti and David Tabacoff, executive producer of "The O'Reilly Factor," did not immediately return calls for comment. Sherrod said that she wasn't contacted by anyone at Fox until Tuesday, when she refused their requests for an interview.

After a video of her full speech was posted online by the NAACP, the White House called the Agriculture Department on Tuesday night, and it was agreed that her ouster should be reviewed.

As more came out Tuesday about Sherrod's speech, Fox's focus shifted. "Race Story Takes Strange Twist" was Wednesday's headline on "Fox & Friends."

"They may have acted without knowing the whole story," co-host Brian Kilmeade said of the administration.

Breitbart did not immediately respond to an AP request for an interview.

But on ABC's "Good Morning America" Wednesday, he said his story "was not about Shirley Sherrod." Instead, he said, the video provides evidence of Georgia NAACP members applauding or laughing at racist behavior, at the same time national NAACP figures are criticizing the tea party movement for having members that express racist sentiments."

Breitbart's BigGovernment.com attracted attention last year for airing video of workers at the community group ACORN counseling actors posing as a prostitute and her boyfriend. This month, Fox News has aggressively reported the story about the U.S. Justice Department choosing not to pursue a voter intimidation cases involving the New Black Panther Party in Philadelphia.

Paul Levinson, a journalism professor at Fordham University, said those cases — and the attention they received on Fox — were likely on the mind of Obama administration officials when Breitbart's story on Sherrod first appeared.

"They panicked," Levinson said. "They're giving the media far more power than they should have."

In issuing his apology, Gibbs said the government, media and interest groups on all sides made quick determinations without knowing all the facts involved.

"One of the great lessons you take away from this is to ask all the questions first and come to a full understanding," he said.

READOUT OF PRESIDENT OBAMA'S CALL WITH SHIRLEY SHERROD

The President reached Ms. Sherrod by telephone at about 12:35. They spoke for seven minutes.

The President expressed to Ms. Sherrod his regret about the events of the last several days. He emphasized that Secretary Vilsack was sincere in his apology yesterday, and in his work to rid USDA of discrimination.

The President told Ms. Sherrod that this misfortune can present an opportunity for her to continue her hard work on behalf of those in need, and he hopes that she will do so.

Hi Justin,
Hope all is well. Just left you a voice mail message. I'm doing a story today looking at USDA's civil rights history. Lots of this I have in my notes from our previous conversations and interviews with the Secretary about the work you all are currently doing to right wrongs.

I do, however, need a fresh comment from you and to address this specific issue: Mrs. Sherrod and others who I have been talking to complain that many of those who discriminated against minority farmers were left in their positions.

I understand that this happened before the Secretary took office but I need something from you all explaining that and the circumstances around it.

Story is for tomorrow's paper.

Thank you,

Hi David -

I know this is a tense time, but I wanted to invite Sec. Vilsack to appear at the top of Meet the Press on Sunday. Even though the Secretary addressed several matters in his public statements yesterday, I think our audience would like to hear from him on this issue as well as his efforts to address civil rights issues within the department.

Please let me know your thoughts. Hope to hear from you soon. Thanks for your consideration.

All best,

Opinion: Sherrod, Vilsack and the Dangers of Our Clip Culture

Updated: 1 hour 32 minutes ago

Special to AOL News

(July 22) — The Shirley Sherrod saga is political theater at the most profound level. It's got layers: nuclear partisanship, racial freight, rich personal narratives -- making it part Greek tragedy, part Southern Gothic. Like Faulkner said, in the South the past isn't history -- it isn't even past.

But these red meat, carnivorous delights have distracted much of the commentary from what seems to me to be the deepest moral lesson here, and that's the dangers of full speed ahead. Because what started this cascade of consequences was a very simple mistake: Tom Vilsack made a snap decision that was dead wrong. He allowed a brutally edited version of Sherrod's remarks, constructed for political reasons, to act as a decapitated proxy for the whole deal.

~~In short, Vilsack allowed himself to become a victim of our cut-and-paste, wrenched-out-of-context, instant judgment, text-happy, BlackBerry-propelled clip culture.~~

~~Like most of us, he has become accustomed to making quick judgments on partial evidence. (Ironic for an agriculture secretary, the cabinet position that oversees the most patient industry in the country.) How often do all of us read part of an e-mail -- or listen to a portion of a voice mail -- and race dangerously off in the wrong direction? How many of us have had our own mini Vilsack moments? I know I have.~~

Our culture has become dependent upon this highlight-reel approach to decision making. CEOs and senior management never get the full picture -- they live in the land of "executive summaries" where a few PowerPoint bullet points, designed by managers who want to shape opinion, give them the same selectively edited worldview.

Even worse, we are encouraged to trust our instincts. Books like Malcolm Gladwell's "Blink" celebrate the ancient wiring of our brains, arguing that our ability to make instant and wise judgments is part of our evolutionary provenance.

But we live in a world where technology can trick us and trip us. Video-editing techniques, Photoshop and other forms of digital manipulation are capable of instantly changing perceived reality and hence deceiving our hard-wired gifts. One can easily sound like a cultural studies professor and wonder if we have de-materialized and mediated existence to the point where we are reacting to ever-escalating derivatives of "real life." Walter Benjamin's "mechanical means of reproduction" on steroids.

Perhaps there will be some upside to this, and I don't mean another photo-opsy suds summit. Perhaps Vilsack's snap decision, so painfully wrong, will serve as a national touchstone for the risks of racing through life without considering the fullness of context. And for not thinking long and hard about the motivations of those who shape and sandpaper "content" for our consumption.

If we replace Blink with Think, life will take a little longer, but we'll all be a lot better off for it. Just ask Tom.

July 22, 2010, 1 a.m. - ...

Unfortunately however, Secretary Vilsack has also thrown Black Farmers under the bus. To date, despite abundant headlines to the contrary, Black Farmers, including the named plaintiffs in Pigford v. Glickman (1997), Lucious Abrams and Cecil Brewington have not even had a meeting with USDA, to settle their discrimination claim. Others who did receive settlements were then harassed by the Internal Revenue Service and had their bank accounts frozen and their Social Security payments offset by any government payments, including stimulus payments. "The actual so-called settlement of the lawsuit was worse than the discrimination that the USDA has admitted to and discrimination is continuing at this very hour," said Pigford plaintiff Black Farmer Eddie Slaughter.

"The President is meeting with everyone except those who brought forward the lawsuit and those who suffered discrimination and the violation of their Constitutional rights," said Lucious Abrams. Eddie Slaughter and Lucious Abrams met with Secretary Vilsack and apprised him of the current situation, but the Secretary to date has failed to act.

The Shirley Sherrod episode shows how quickly legitimate Black interests are thrown under the bus due to fear on the one hand and racial incitement for political purposes on the other hand.

"President Barack Obama should meet with Black Farmers who are leading the lawsuit," said McKinney, who has been active for years on the Black Farmer issue. Despite winning the lawsuit, plaintiffs in Pigford have not been made whole and therefore have not received justice. Over one decade later, lead plaintiffs on the lawsuit have not even had a hearing on the merits on their claim of discrimination, now admitted by the USDA. Claimants got paid, but actual farmers did not. The result is that over one million black-owned farm acres are at risk of being lost due to acceleration of collection of debt, foreclosure, bankruptcy, and USDA and USDOJ deliberate delay resulting in delinquent notes for Black Farmers.

Claimants, who are not necessarily farmers, have been paid out of the judgment fund. Meanwhile, class counsel (Alexander Pires), the adjudicators (Poorman Douglas), the arbitrator (Michael Lewis), the DOJ (USDA is paying DOJ), the facilitator (JAM in Dispute), the monitor (Randy Ross) were all paid over $300 million dollars of taxpayer money, yet actual Black Farmers are yet to be made whole. "Under Agriculture Secretary Vilsack, USDA is still engaged in a racket that will result in the theft of black-owned land," said McKinney.

Both the White House and Secretary Vilsack have issued public apologies to Sherrod.

Justin,

Hi, it's Kevin Bogardus with The Hill newspaper.

I am working on a piece about the Shirley Sherrod incident in the broader context of the Agriculture Department's civil rights history. I had a few questions, which are just for background and below:

-- Do you have a transcript of Secretary Vilsack's press conference discussing the incident yesterday? If so, can you pass it onto me?

<mms://ocbmtcwmp.usda.gov/content/secy/secy072110c.wmv>

-- Can you give me a update on the Obama administration's actions to improve the Agriculture Department's civil rights record? You have done so in the past so I am wondering if there is any new developments.

I have a backgrounder I'm trying to clear so I can send your way.

-- Was Sherrod the first African-American to hold her position as the rural development Georgia State director?

Yes.

-- Was Sherrod a claimant in the Pigford settlement case?

Yes.

Please get back to me by 1:30 p.m. today. That is my deadline. Thanks for your help.

we have all these developments at the white house. hang with me for a second. the briefing is beginning with press secretary robert gibbs.

is there a parliamentaria.

any objections? go ahead, i'm sorry.

thank you. the president has expressed his regret. is it accurate to say he apologized? personally apologized?

yes. reclaiming your time?

did he lobby for her job back or take a new job?

look, that was not what the call was about. and not what happened on the call. obviously as the readout discusses, she has a unique set of experiences and a unique opportunity to use those experiences to help people. that's what he said to her and obviously a decision about what she's going to do is up to her, and i think she is supposed to talk with the department of agriculture at some point today.

she did accept his apology?

yes.

maybe i missed this, but why couldn't she just have her old job back?

i would point you to usda in terms of -- they're handling the jobs discussions with sherrod. what secretary vilsack offered was something that allows her to, again, as the president says, use some unique experiences to help root out what we know is a long -- a department that has struggled with discrimination. she's a plaintiff in the pickford discrimination case.

did the president invite her to the white house?

no.

is it clear why the president wasn't able to reach ore yesterday? did he try? why wasn't she reachable?

it may have been because she was all over tv. the white house operator tried on at least two occasions last night and was both unable to reach her and unable to leave a voice mail.

is the white house comfortable with the fact that she has been on a lot of television shows?

she's free to do and say what every other person in the country is free to do and say.

i would like to ask you about energy.

okay.

Chris,
I write the Federal Diary in The Washington Post and I'm following up on earlier phone call requests, trying to find out what Shirley Sherrod's classification was with USDA.

Was she a political appointee, in the SES or GS? If she was a political appointee, was she a schedule C appointee?

I am on deadline.

Thank you.

Best,

Joe

President Obama calls Shirley Sherrod

Updated 1:39 p.m. ET

http://voices.washingtonpost.com/federal-eye/2010/07/shirley_sherrod_wants_to_talk.html

President Obama has expressed his "regret" to former U.S. Agriculture Department official Shirley Sherrod over her ouster, the White House said Thursday.

The president reached Sherrod around 12:35 p.m. ET and "emphasized that Secretary Vilsack was sincere in his apology yesterday, and in his work to rid USDA of discrimination," the White House said Thursday.

"The President told Ms. Sherrod that this misfortune can present an opportunity for her to continue her hard work on behalf of those in need, and he hopes that she will do so," the statement said.

Obama made the call from his private office on Thursday after twice trying unsuccessfully to reach her on Wednesday evening, according to a White House aide. Staffers tried to reach her again this morning and Obama spoke with her when she returned the call, the aide said.

Sherrod did not indicate to Obama whether she plans to rejoin the government, according to the aide. She expressed reluctance to rejoin the Obama administration earlier Thursday during a series of television interviews.

"I'd like to talk to him about the experiences of people like me, people at the grassroots level, people who live out here in rural America people, who live in the South. I know he does not have that kind of experience," Sherrod told NBC's Today Show.

"We love him, we want him to be successful, because we feel he thinks in some ways like we do, and we think that's good for the country," she said later. "Yes, there are issues out there that we are faced with, issues of poverty. The other thing, I want everything to reflect, I want a good reflection for him as the first black president."

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack offered Sherrod a position with USDA's Office of Civil Rights and Community Outreach, Sherrod said, but raised doubts she would take the job.

"I would not be that individual that the department, everyone is looking to to solve the issue of racism in USDA. It takes a lot more to get that job done," she said, noting that other USDA officials have not lost their jobs for discriminating against minority or women farmers.

Sherrod also told CNN's "American Morning" that said she would like to "get back at" Andrew Breitbart, the right-wing blogger whose posting of the video snippet triggered the political storm that led to her ouster. Asked whether she would like to see Breitbart's Web site shut down, Sherrod replied: "That would be a great thing...he's doing more to divide us."

Hi Justin,

Hope all is well. Just left you a voice mail message. I'm doing a story today looking at USDA's civil rights history. Lots of this I have in my notes from our previous conversations and interviews with the Secretary about the work you all are currently doing to right wrongs.

I do, however, need a fresh comment from you and to address this specific issue: Mrs. Sherrod and others who I have been talking to complain that many of those who discriminated against minority farmers were left in their positions.

I understand that this happened before the Secretary took office but I need something from you all explaining that and the circumstances around it.

Story is for tomorrow's paper.

Thank you,

Krissah

Black farmers' settlement is at the mercy of the Senate

By Ed Hornick, CNN
<http://edition.cnn.com/2010/POLITICS/07/22/black.farmers.congress/#fbid=5bo7ygzlllp>

STORY HIGHLIGHTS

- The case against the USDA was settled out of court 11 years ago
- Qualified farmers could receive $50,000 each to settle claims of racial bias
- The House approved a war supplemental bill that included money to pay for the settlement
- House speaker blasts Senate Republicans for stalling the process

Washington (CNN) – Money to pay for a discrimination lawsuit brought against the Department of Agriculture by black farmers remains stuck in a legislative body described as a place where bills go to die.

In July, the House approved a war supplemental bill that included money to pay for the settlement. It now remains stuck as senators examine the bill.

The 1997 Pigford v. Glickman case against the U.S. Agriculture Department was settled out of court 11 years ago. Under a federal judge's terms dating to 1999, qualified farmers could receive $50,000 each to settle claims of racial bias.

As a senator, Barack Obama sponsored "Pigford II," a measure in the 2008 Farm Bill that reopened the case. In February of this year, his administration brokered a $1.25 billion settlement for Pigford II. But Congress missed two deadlines, one in March and the other in May.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Thursday blasted Senate Republicans for holding up the process, saying that they have "rejected over and over again any legislation that has had the Pigford settlement in it."

House Minority Leader John Boehner, asked about Republican support for the black farmer settlement money, said "many of us are supportive of settling these claims."

"This issue has gone on for almost the 20 years that I've been here, and it needs to be resolved," he added.

The money, along with all the other added domestic spending that the House added to the war funding bill, is likely to be stripped out next week when the Senate is expected to approve money for Iraq and Afghanistan and other emergency spending items.

The speaker said the push to get Senate action has had "no higher priority because of the events of recent days."

Pelosi was referring to the firestorm over Shirley Sherrod, an African-American, who stepped down from her USDA job Monday under pressure after a video clip surfaced of her discussing a white farmer. The White House and Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack apologized to her Wednesday.

Read more about Sherrod's story

Pelosi's sentiments were echoed by John Boyd, a fourth-generation farmer and founder of the National Black Farmers Association.

"We are still stuck in Senate politics, and it looks like it's very bipartisan politics with the Democrats on one side of the fence trying to get something done, and the Republicans focusing on midterm elections," he told CNN.

Boyd urged President Obama to step in and move the bill forward.

"We just need the president to focus in on this thing just a little while longer and ask that the black farmers get a vote on this very, very important issue before the recess," he said. "I want to go on record making sure that everybody understands that we support the president 110 percent. We just feel that we need a little push in the Senate to help get this done."

Boyd added that Obama should reach out to Republicans and Democrats to make sure that the farmers receive justice before the August recess.

The president promised to help black farmers who have not received the $1.25 billion settlement owed to them after years of being denied government farm loans and support from federal programs because of the color of their skin.

White House press secretary Robert Gibbs, in a briefing Wednesday, said the USDA is paying out the settlement for "decades-long discrimination."

"I think as you saw in the statements from Secretary Vilsack that, rightly, the department has a zero-tolerance policy for discrimination," he said. "If you look back at the history of some aspects of the way USDA benefits have been dispensed, they were done so in a way that people have acknowledged were discriminatory."

Vilsack, after a Wednesday night meeting with the Congressional Black Caucus to discuss the Sherrod case, said he was working on getting the Senate to appropriate the money, and "our hope is it gets done quickly so we can resolve the case."

CNN's Shawna Shepherd and Deirdre Walsh contributed to this report.

Justin,

Hi, it's Kevin Bogardus with The Hill newspaper.

I am working on a piece about the Shirley Sherrod incident in the broader context of the Agriculture Department's civil rights history. I had a few questions, which are just for background and below:

- Do you have a transcript of Secretary Vilsack's press conference discussing the incident yesterday? If so, can you pass it onto me?
- Can you give me a update on the Obama administration's actions to improve the Agriculture Department's civil rights record? You have done so in the past so I am wondering if there is any new developments.
- Was Sherrod the first African-American to hold her position as the rural development Georgia State director?
- Was Sherrod a claimant in the Pigford settlement case?

Please get back to me by 1:30 p.m. today. That is my deadline. Thanks for your help.

Sincerely,
