In February 2014 on United from AVP I traveled to Miami and back. In late May 2014 through early June 2014 on US Airways from AVP I traveled to Seattle and back. For the 4 airport security checks no alarms went off and none of my food was taken. I believe your metal detectors were recalibrated to be too sensitive at PHX airport. Also, I am profiled.

When a TSA Employee is addressing a passenger they need to learn COMMON RESPECT to talk and listen. They very often talk, then engage in conversation with coworkers usually of jovial nature then we have no idea what the hell they want or what they said. When we do what we think they wanted, like enter the scanner, they get all ignorant and authoritative thinking we are violating the word of god. I had to enter the stupid scanner 3 times because the TSA agent who was operating it has ZERO people skills and ZERO respect. Then he wanted to pat my pocket down because I had my boarding pass in my pocket. Really? They need help. After I exited the scanner I was asked "is he with you?" turning around I saw my 10 yr old son behind me. After answering "yes", I was talked down to by the ignorant TSA employee saying "You need to stay with your kid, what were you thinking?... what?! I immediately replied with "My wife is behind him". Another badge wearing ignorant jerk.

Caller stated she constantly gets pulled for additional screening after the AIT. Caller stated it is usually the top of her shoulder and the back of her ankle. Caller stated that at Manchester she had 11 alarms. Caller is questioning what causes an alarm. Caller asked what on her body is causing alarms. Caller stated she wanted to speak to a supervisor and will go to media if she needs to.

Resolution:

9/14/2014 2:10:45 PM Automated Target Recognition (ATR), is designed to enhance privacy by eliminating the image of an actual passenger. ATR detects potential threats and indicates their location on a generic, computer-generated outline of a person that appears on a monitor attached to the AIT unit. If a potential threat is detected, the area will require additional screening. If potential threats are not detected, the outline is not generated, an "OK" appears on the monitor, and the passenger is cleared from screening. In addition, passengers are able to view the same outline that the TSA officer sees.

I am unable to tell you what on your body is causing you to alarm the AIT. I advised the caller that the AIT bounces the waves off the outside of the body and looks for anomalies and that causes alarms.

When did this happen? 08 22 2014

Where did this happen? PENNSYLVANIA - PHL - Philadelphia International

What happened?

On Friday, Aug. 22, 2014, , my wife and myself were travelling to San Jose, CA, to attend a wedding. We reached the TSA check point at around 10:45 AM to get security clearance and board flight# UA1185 from Philadelphia to Houston (IAH). I removed all metal objects on my person (shoes, belt, glasses, wallet etc) and entered the AIT. As I am an Asian American and Sikh by religion, I wear turban and sport beard. I was wearing a sky blue colored Caller stated the screener at the airport was so rude. Caller stated she travels with a service animal. Caller flew from Burlington Vermont on September 7. Caller stated she had metal implants and she has visual impairment and she travels with a service animal. Caller stated before of her knees she prefers to go through the AIT machine and her service animal puts on a state and then she will go through WTMD. Caller stated she received the papers to make a complaint if she was discriminated against going through the checkpoint. The caller stated she doesnt feel she was discriminated against she just wants an apology from the screener. Caller wants to know if she can contact the CSM. Caller stated if someone doesnt contact her about the issue she will fill out the papers she was sent.

Advised caller the issue was sent to the CSM at Burlington Vermont Aiport. Advised caller to call 866-289-9673 press option 5 and put in the airport code and she will be given the CSM number.

Caller stated she didnt want the information sent to the CSM she will call them.

Callers wife is getting PreCheck. She has disabilities, he was allow to get PreCheck on the last flight because his wife has a hearing disability. He will be traveling again with his wife and an elderly lady in a wheelchair, he wants to know if she can get precheck along with him and his wife? He says he had traveled before on Southwest out of Boise and when going through screening there was young women that had pony tails that had devices in the hair with base ball caps on and was not ask to remove the hat or devices. He says his wife has thick hair and on the other side of the machine the agent ran her hand through her hair and she ask the officer what she was doing with her hair. The agent just said she had to check her hair. He says his wife had just paid $85.00 to have her hair done and he wants to make sure this never happens again.

Told caller

I explained to him if his wife was chosen at random for PreCheck on a flight did not mean he or she would be selected again. It just means the information they provided met the criteria and they were selected on a per flight bases only. To be eligible for PreCheck on every flight they can apply for one of the programs to get a number to use but it still is random selection so they wont be guaranteed every time.

There are two ways to be eligible to participate in PreCheck, you can be a member of one of CBP's trusted travel programs such as Global Entry, SENTRI, and NEXUS or you can do the application process on tsa.gov.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

I explained to him if there was an alarm during screening they will have to give a patdown to clear the alarm, I too have had my hair patdown and it was to clear an alarm.

I could not tell him they would never have to do this again.

I did not send his complaint to the CSM because it has been sent already.

I only listed the airport and airline for the complaint for the previous flight, he did not say what airline or airport he was traveling out of again.

Caller states that he has a complaint about his screening at SJC. Caller is a Precheck participant and was told that the WTMD alarmed. Caller was sent to go through the AIT. He asked the TSO why that was happening, and she was rude to him about the answer. She said, sorry buddy, this isn't a restaurant! The TSO named (b)(6) answered his questions and was polite. Caller was told that since some people are sent through the Precheck lane that they have to randomly send some people through AIT. Caller is not comfortable with AIT because he is concerned about radiation for health issues.

Advised caller:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

You are not guaranteed expedited screening for every flight. You can opt out of the AIT screening and request a patdown.

Caller is wanting to file a complaint on TSA at DFW. Caller feels he was treated unfairly because he has a disability. Caller stated that is was not discriminatory it was just flat out poor customer service. Caller stated that they embarrassed him and made a huge scene at the checkpoint, they humiliated his partner and now she refuses to travel with him. Caller stated that on the morning of 7-8-2014 he was going through the checkpoint and he is not able to raise his arms to go through the AIT so he requested a patdown in a private screening area. Caller stated that he had 5 plus TSO's yelling at him from every angle and finally he had to yell and ask who am I supposed to be listening to. Caller stated that he requested a supervisor when they tried to force him to go through the AIT and then they got all bent out of shape and he had 3 other officers come up to him before getting the supervisor. Caller stated that he had a similar incident happen at DFW in April 2014 and he plans to fly in December 2014 and wants something done before he tries to do so because this is unacceptable. Caller stated that he requested ODPO assistance on both flights and he was treated awful. Caller stated that this is the only airport that he has trouble flying from.

Disability Description: Caller has heart and lung conditions. She is also in a wheelchair.

Incident Details: Caller flew from MDW and she was in a wheelchair and disabled. Caller stated that she went through the AIT and then she was required to undergo a patdown. The officer told her that it would be on the shoulders and she ended up patting down her breast area which is sore and numb due to her heart surgery she had. Caller stated that after patting down her breast area the Agent started laughing at her she thinks that it was because she has a small chest. Caller stated that she feels discriminated against because she is 70 years old, female, and disabled. Caller stated that in all of her years of traveling that is the first time she has ever had a patdown and she feels like the agent was unprofessional and rude. She also feels like the agent did it to humiliate her because there was no alarm of the AIT. Caller thinks that the agent also violated her because she patted down her chest and she was supposed to do her shoulders. Caller did not know the agents name but described her as a young, female, tall, skinny, who had dark hair put up in a bun and she thinks she should be reprimanded because of what she done to her.

Advised caller:

Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are required to be considerate and thoughtful, and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. The passenger should inform TSOs of any areas of the body that are painful when touched. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. TSA regrets if this was not your experience. Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Support Manager at that location.

Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. I will get you to a MB agent to deal with your discrimination complaint. Airport: Chicago Midway

Flight number: 1444

Departing time: 7:25 pm

Date and time of incident: 09/03/2014 06:30-6:45 pm

Gate or terminal of incident: B23

(b)(6) notes:

Caller said that she wants to let us know she has been flying for 20 years with Southwest out of Chicago. She is disabled and was in a wheelchair and the person she is complaining about saw her get out of the wheelchair and she went through the screening machines. She told her she had to be patted down on her shoulders, but went down farther and didn't have on a bra because she can't wear one due to her surgery. She stated that she turned around after the patdown and the TSO was laughing to her two male co workers about her. She felt like she was being discriminated against because of her disability. She thinks it occurred closer to 6:45 pm.

Advised Caller:

For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations for Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act (6 C.F.R. 15.3(b) and 15.70(d)(3)), it must:

Disability Description: The caller is a social worker calling from Chadron Hospital in NE in regard to a patient that requires oxygen during flight.

Information Request: She would like to send information in regard to use of oxygen during travel and paperwork that would be required for that. The passenger must be connected to the oxygen at all times.

Response Details: I advised that TSA doesn't require documentation. I advised that she contact the airline in regard to their policy as well.

The Federal Aviation Administration does not allow portable compressed oxygen tanks on commercial airlines in carry-on or checked baggage because oxygen is considered a hazardous material. This includes cans of recreational flavored oxygen.

However, the FAA does allow certain portable oxygen concentrators (POC) to be used inflight for medical purposes. If a POC is not approved by the FAA for inflight use, the passenger will not be permitted to bring it onboard the aircraft. Please visit www.faa.gov to find a list of POCs approved for inflight use by the FAA. A passenger may also check with their airline before purchasing a ticket to ask if their POC is approved for inflight use or if the airline will provide oxygen to the passenger during the flight.

. Passengers who can disconnect can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by a metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown. Patdowns are required to clear alarms and anomalies.

The patdown will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

The POC will either undergo x-ray screening or a physical and visual inspection. If the POC cannot be x-rayed and a physical and visual inspection is done, the equipment also will be tested for traces of explosives.

I offered to and emailed the information to the caller.

TSA Cares is a program that can provide assistance through screening for those who have disabilities, medical conditions, or devices. Such assistance can help facilitate the screening process. I advised that I would (and did) email information in regard to TSA Cares as well as a number that the passenger can call to request assistance. We recommend that requests assistance be made at least 72 hours prior to travel.

Disability Description: Caller has type 1 diabetes and uses an insulin pump.

Information Request: Caller would like to know how screening will go for him because of his medical device and his diabetic supplies. Caller is a first time flyer.

Response Details: Diabetes-related supplies, medications and equipment such as , lancets, blood glucose meters and strips, alcohol swabs, meter-testing solutions, urine ketone test strips, insulin pumps, pump supplies and used syringes (when transported in a Sharps disposal container or other similar hard-surface container) are allowed through the security checkpoint once they have been properly screened by x-ray or a hand inspection. Passengers with diabetes traveling with medically necessary items should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of these items and separate them from other belongings before screening begins.

Medically necessary items are not subject to the 3-1-1 liquids, gels and aerosol limitation rule and are allowed through the checkpoint in any amount once they have been screened.

Accessories required keeping medically necessary liquids, gels, and aerosols cool, such as freezer packs or frozen gel packs, are permitted through the screening checkpoint and may be subject to additional screening. These accessories are treated as liquids unless they are frozen solid at the checkpoint. If these accessories are partially frozen or slushy, they are subject to the same screening as other medically necessary liquids and gels.

Medically necessary liquids, gels and aerosols in excess of 3.4 ounces will be screened by x-ray and also receive additional screening.

PM

It is not necessary to disconnect from your insulin pump during the screening process. The insulin pump will be screened and, in most cases, passengers will do a self-patdown of the insulin pump followed by an Explosives Trace Detection (ETD) test with a swab of their hands. If traces of explosives materials are detected, passengers will need to undergo additional screening.

Passengers may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or using a thorough patdown. AIT screening requires that passengers be able to stand still with their arms over their head for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Passengers using the walk-through metal detector must be able to walk through on their own. However, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

If you are screened using a patdown, it is important to know the following:

Patdowns will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.

You may ask for private screening at any time.

A private screening will be offered if the patdown involves sensitive areas.

A companion may be present during the private patdown screening with the TSO or other TSA employee, and this companion will be rescreened when the patdown is completed.

You may request a chair if you need to sit.

You should not be asked to or be required to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

To help discreetly notify the TSO of specific disabilities, medical conditions, or medical devices that could affect screening, TSA has created a Notification Card. Passengers may choose to let the TSO know they have a disability or medical condition by showing the TSA Notification Card. Remember, however, this card does not exempt passengers from screening.

Caller is taking a flight on Wednesday and she has a disability at this time and needs to know what to do to be checked in. Caller has limited standing.

Response: Advised the caller to request the assistance of a PSS or Supervisor and the checkpoint if needed and other than walking through the WTMD she may subject to the AIT and would need to be able to stand without assistance for 5-7 seconds with her hands above her head.

Caller states this is something she can do.

Caller also has two teenagers without ID and wants to know what to do to get them through screening.

Response: For passengers who do not have an acceptable form of ID, the TSO will request that the individual present two other forms of ID bearing the passengers name to assist in the verification of their identity. One of the items must bear the passengers name and other identifying information such as: photo, address, phone number, social security number, or date of birth. Passengers may present documents such as social security cards, birth certificates, marriage licenses or credit cards. There is no standard list of what forms of alternative identification are acceptable, however, TSOs will ask for at least two forms of this identification. And they may have to undergo additional screening.

Caller asked if copies could be accepted and I let her know there s no standard list and she could present the copies.

Wanted to get a copy of the opt out policy.

Does not want to go through AIT and wanted documentation to prove it.

He wanted the information mailed to him, rather than emailed.

Then on to TSA.gov website he wanted me to walk him through step by step.

Rambled on about policies and procedures well after he had been given the information requested.

9/24/2014

Advised caller:

Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown.

<http://www.tsa.gov/ait-privacy>

Caller has a KTN she obtained and April or May. Caller stated that on her last two flights she has been randomly selected for additional screening which was a patdown when going through the PreCheck lane. Caller stated that this time she is not being selected for PreCheck at all and she is wanting to know why she is being selected randomly all the time and not getting her PreCheck benefits.

Advised caller:

1. Are you a U.S. Citizen, U.S. National or U.S. Lawful Permanent Resident? Yes- US Citizen
2. Are you traveling from an airport participating in TSA Pre?™ and on a participating airline? Yes- Southwest-PHX
3. Have you received TSA Pre?™ in the past? Yes- She has just had issues on the last three flights.

- 9/25/2014 2:43:21 PM
- a. If you have received TSA Pre?™ before, has anything changed? no
 4. Do you know your Known Traveler Number (KTN)? (b)(6)
 5. When making a reservation, have you confirmed that the information in your reservation matches any online airline profiles you may use? Yes- Verified everything is correct and matching.
 6. Do you make your reservation through a 3rd party? For example, a travel agent or an employer's online booking system? No
 7. Do you make your reservations online? For example, an airline's Web site or a travel Web site such as Travelocity or Expedia? Yes- airline website.
 8. Have you committed a violation of TSA security regulations, such as interference with security operations, access control violations, providing false or fraudulent documents, making a bomb threat, or bringing a firearm, explosive, or other prohibited items to an airport or on board an aircraft? No

If you are randomly selected not to receive PreCheck then it will not print on your boarding pass at all. Generally if you got through the AIT and there is an alarm then you would have to receive additional screening. I am not sure how you were randomly selected to receive the additional screening two times in a row. It sounds like there was an anomalies indicated by the screening technology. If you have the issue were TSA precheck does not print on your boarding pass at all several time in a row then that would be something that we could escalate and try to find out why but you were selected for PreCheck on the last two flights. I would recommend asking why you are getting the additional screening if it happens again.

Caller was calling for her husband (b)(6) They are both members of Global Entry. She always gets PreCheck and he never does. He is 77 years old. She said that United has him listed as (b)(6) on the reservation. His Global Entry has him listed as (b)(6) Their home airport is McCarran. She discovered during the call that his passport number was entered instead of his pass Id. She said that they will be flying next week. She referred to his KTN as a redress number. She is going to change the name and the KTN with the airline.

1. What is your citizenship? - US Citizen

2. Are you traveling from an airport participating in TSA PreCheck and on a participating airline? - Yes

3. Do you have a valid unexpired CBP membership? - Yes

9/25/2014 4:43:07 PM

4. Have you received TSA PreCheck in the past? - Yes

a. If you have received TSA PreCheck before, has anything changed? - No

5. Do you know your CBP Trusted Traveler PASS ID? - Yes (b)(6)

6. When making a reservation, have you confirmed that your information matches your CBP Trusted Traveler account? - Yes - She said that this reservation is showing (b)(6) instead of (b)(6)

- a. Your Name, Date of Birth (DOB), and gender must match the information that was submitted at the time of application or (if updated) what is on file in your online GOES account
- b. If any of this information is not an exact match, you may be precluded from TSA PreCheck consideration.

7. Do you make your reservation through a 3rd party? For example, a travel agent or an employer's online booking system? - No

The caller is traveling with a minor that is on probation and wearing monitor. The caller wants to know what TSA requires or what they need to do to get though screening. The passenger does have a travel permit.

9/26/2014 3:57:21 PM

Outside of any other law enforcement issues that would prohibit a person from boarding an aircraft, wearing a monitoring device, including a medical monitor, during security screening should not pose a problem. If the electronic monitoring device sets off the alarm on the walk-through metal detector, or produces an anomaly during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, passengers should alert the Transportation Security Officer performing the screening that they are wearing the device. In these cases, passengers should expect to undergo additional screening to resolve the alarms.

Caller asked when you get TSA PreCheck and you don't have to remove the laptop from its case or take off our shoes, why do you get to do that but, to go through the other line you don't get to do that. He asked do they do check on you when you go through the line. He said he is paying for it but he does not understand why. He said he knows you have to pay $10 every time you get PreCheck. He said when he prints out his boarding pass, there is something you have to check to get PreCheck. He said it was US Air that charges that. He asked how does he get PreCheck if TSA does not charge and he never enrolled and paid the $85. ALSO: He said when he went through RSW, the agent asked him what do you have in your pockets. The caller asked why did the agent want to know what he had in his pockets. He said the agent told him to take out the money and hold it in his hand for screening. ALSO: Caller said he did not want to file a complaint about the TSO and did not want to talk to the CSM.

9/27/2014 6:13:17 PM RESPONSE: That is why it is called expedited screening. You don't have to take the laptop out of the case and take off your shoes, plus other items. A background check is not done each time you go through the PreCheck line. TSA does not charge $10 every time you book a flight. It is not TSA that charges you. You will need to contact US Air. If you did not enroll, you are getting PreCheck in one of two ways. You are a FF with an Airline or you are considered a low risk passenger by TSA and are being allowed or invited to get PreCheck. ALSO: To apply to PreCheck, travelers may submit an application through TSA's Web site at www.tsa.gov or visit an enrollment center to submit an application in person. To complete the application process, individuals will be required to visit an enrollment center to provide identification, fingerprints, and proof of U.S. citizenship or immigration eligibility. In addition, an $85 fee to cover an in-depth background check and other operational costs is required. Upon successful completion, travelers will receive TSA Pre✓SM eligibility for 5 years. ALSO: There is no extra $10 charge.

RESPONSE: TSA strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. ALSO: You can ask for a private screening when you have a lot of cash. She had to go through a patdown procedure last night when she flew from Omaha NE back home to Seattle. She had precheck and came to the check point in a wheel chair and she still had to have a patdown. She does not fly much but she had a similar situation occur in 2009 where they took her ID behind closed door on both legs of travel. On the flight from SEA to Omaha there were no problems or occurrences. She states that she feels violated. Later in the conversation she stated that it was a female who did the patdown and they were courteous and explained everything they were doing. But she still feels that the patdown was over the top and she has never been touched like that in certain places. She is a widow on social security but she states that she felt like a drug mule going through screening.

9/29/2014 1:36:20 PM I advised the caller that our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are required to be considerate and thoughtful, and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

At airports nationwide, TSA has implemented streamlined, consistent, and thorough patdown procedures at security checkpoints to provide a higher level of security and increase the safety of the traveling public. Patdowns help TSA detect hidden and dangerous items, such as explosives. They are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, and as part of TSA's random screening activities.

A TSO of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search; however, passengers may need to wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available. As the screening is being conducted, the TSO will be describing the procedures he or she is using.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Support Manager at that location.

TSA strives to provide the highest level of security while ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity and respect. To that end, TSA launched TSA Cares, a helpline designed to assist travelers with disabilities and medical conditions. Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 prior to traveling with questions about screening policies, procedures, and what to expect at the security checkpoint. TSA Cares serves as an additional, dedicated resource specifically for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions, or other circumstances, as well as their loved ones who want to prepare for the screening process prior to flying. I told the caller that this will not eliminate any screening procedures but may be of assistance with communication in advance of travel.

Caller is at the airport and he is not comfortable with being separated from his wallet during screening because he wants to keep his identification and credit cards with him. Are the magnetic strips on the credit cards safe to go through the screening? What about electronics? Is that a reasonable request that the caller gets to keep his wallet on him?

Advised:

9/29/2014 3:37:39 PM (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, keys and change may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint.

I don't have that information as to whether the magnetic strips are safe. I can give you the number to the CSM at the airport? Caller declined. Electronics can be safely screened by x-ray. I can't give you an opinion. You can request that you keep your wallet but that would be up to the discretion of the officer at the checkpoint.

Caller states that he is a GE member. He is usually chosen for Precheck. Caller will fly to Venice, Italy tomorrow and was not chosen for expedited screening. Caller would like to know why. Caller is upset that he paid money, is an ex-military member and government employee, and is not guaranteed expedited screening for every flight. Caller states that he is 75 and would like to know if he will be directed to the Precheck lane because of his age.

Advised caller:

It is important to remember that TSA Precheck does not guarantee an individual expedited screening. TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process. They may direct you to the Precheck lane or not.

While some airports may allow individuals who are traveling with a TSA Precheck eligible passenger to access the TSA Precheck lane, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and this procedure may not be available at all times or locations.

Precheck eligibility does not affect your eligibility for your benefits with GE through CBP.

Caller spoke to us on the 8th. She was flying from AZ to Burbank, CA. All she had was two bags, one with her clothes. She filed a complaint but has not heard from the airport. She went through additional screening. They inspected her chest and did not find anything. They detected an anomaly in her chest. She was scared. They said they were going to do further inspection. They inspected her from her head to her toe including her privates. Nothing was found and they called on a male TSO. They told her to show her ID and her BP. Eventually they said everything was fine. She was left traumatized. She did not have anything offensive so she was concerned on why she would have to go through that especially since nothing was found. Due to the trauma she kept biting her lip due to that for the next days. She will fly to Denver in two weeks and would like to avoid issues. She is dreading the trip due to security. She was told that the airport would communicate with her. Her husband and her went to care for their grandchildren. She was stressed because her daughter and her husband were headed towards divorce. Her grandchildren did not want her to leave. She left one day early. She doesn't know why she received additional screening. Her son is a PE teacher and she will stay with her daughter in law while he is away on a trip with his students. She was told that something she touched set off the alarm.

Response:

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. TSOs must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

TSA recommends that passengers call no less than 72 hours ahead of travel in case it is determined that it is necessary to coordinate support at the airport.

She can call us back with her flight information.

By requesting assistance, it might help make the experience more enjoyable.

You didn't answer my question – you just sent a canned response.

YOU DO KNOW I HAVE THE SAME – OR HIGHER – SECURITY CLEARANCE THAT YOU HAVE???

You do understand that – right??

Evidently not....

Thank you for your e-mail in which you inquire about the reasons for secondary screening.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors. In your case, the Caller last flew from LAX and she was wearing a watch. She didn't have to remove personal items when she went through security. Her watch was demagnetized when she went through the AIT. She would like to know how to avoid this in the future.

Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint.

Caller was at security at the airport and she did not want to go through the AIT machine and is concerned about the exposure to the radiation. The TSO didn't give her the option of opting out and she told him she was concerned about and he blew her off and said that it was safe. She does not remember what the TSO looked like or know his name.

Advised:

AIT screening is safe for all passengers and the technology meets national health and safety standards. AIT machines have been independently evaluated by the Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Standards and Technology, and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, who have all affirmed their safety. This testing took into account special populations that are more sensitive to radiation, such as children, persons receiving radiation treatment for medical conditions, and pregnant and potentially pregnant women, as well as Transportation Security Officers who work near the equipment. In fact, a traveler is exposed to less radiation from one AIT scan than from two minutes being onboard a commercial aircraft at flight altitude. The extremely low dose of radiation from the entire spectrum of TSA screening technology is inconsequential, even to frequent flyers who undergo repeated screening.

8:44:39 PM Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown.

Comment : TSA,

The TSA screening line was extremely large at the ONT airport in the morning, almost reaching the outside doors at the END of the terminal. While people were frustrated and concerned with the enormous line, there were several visible TSA personnel that appeared to be doing nothing, "standing around", where they could have made efforts to alleviate the situation. I am sure it took many travelers 45 minutes to an hour just to get through the TSA process, plus several people MISSED their flights due to the TSA delays.

Once I finally arrived to the "checking of bags" process, I declined the AIT machine, and knew it will involve a patdown, which is expected. I know there is sometimes a slight delay due to inefficiencies, so I informed a TSA personnel (helping with plastic containers), IMMEDIATELY after my ID was checked, so that they could notify the appropriate person. After placing my shoes and items on the belt to be screened, I notified them that I declined the AIT machine. They asked me to wait in a certain spot, which again, is expected. After waiting for a while, and even longer, and seeing many travelers go by, the TSA person standing next to me for SEVERAL minutes finally said the he will do the patdown.

PM

- It didn't appear that he was doing anything significant, or at all, that would warrant the time waiting, especially when I notified them in advance.
- Why couldn't he acknowledge that he would be doing the screening, such as, "I'll be with you in a moment" or something like that.
- I encourage TSA to implement a better more efficient process for those individuals who decline the AIT process.

On a positive note, the TSA person doing the patdown did put on a new set of gloves. When a TSA person puts on new gloves when they look through baggage (touching and handling items) or do a patdown, that is always appreciated.

In summary, please improve the screening process at the airport so that people don't continue to miss flights due to TSA inefficiencies in personnel and/or processes. It is very apparent and clear that TSA is inefficient at that airport when EVEN the airline agents complain and tell their customers/travelers that missed flights are usually due to the TSA delays and that they frequently see TSA personnel "standing around" at certain times. Also, it would be very appreciated if it was mandated for TSA personnel to put on a new set of gloves whenever baggage is opened and items handled and touched, especially in the patdown process.

Caller said he is angry at TSA at the IND Airport and had an unpleasant experience yesterday at the security checkpoint with the TSA Officers but he does not have their names. He said he is 62 years old and was with his wife and poses no threat to anyone. He said he and his wife flew from IND to Denver to Santa Fe, NM and his wife got precheck but he did not. He said he went through AIT and had put his items on the conveyor belt with other people's items and he said he was told to push his items on the conveyor belt and he said the female Officer should have done that not him. He asked about his pocket comb and they told him to hold it up over his head in the AIT. He said a young male Officer came over and took his wallet and comb and laid them down and then started the patdown without asking him. He said then the Officer started going through his wallet without asking him and wanted to xray the comb again. He said he had a camera bag and forgot he had a leatherman inside it and he said that was his mistake. He said he told the female Officer that he forgot he had it and she told him to put it in check bag, mail it or surrender it. He said he needed to get on the plane and it was Sat. and no way to mail it and he said his Daughter gave it to him and he said he talked to an Officer and he asked if there was some way he could get it back. He said he did surrender it and got on the plane. He said there has to be a better way and asked if he could get it when he gets back. He said he is upset about having to get out of line to push his items up the conveyor belt when he said the female Officer did it for other people. He said they swabbed his hands and he should not have had to go through that. He said he still has the wand at that airport and they used it on other people but patted him down. He asked if the CSM will call him back and he said he will get a Congressman involved if they do not call him back. He said he does want the CSM to call him back.

Caller stated that on 9/28 she flew from DFW on her way to MKE. Caller said that she was in the AIT and she stumbled on her way out and fell on to the conveyor. Caller said there was a gentleman who was at the AIT machine who quickly got down and straightened the rug. Caller said that the lady in charge of the station asked her if she was ok and she told her yes. Caller said that she then noticed that her knee and foot were swelling up. She went back and asked for an incident report. She was told to call us for a claim. Caller said that she went to her Orthopedic doctor on 9/29 and she was put on muscle relaxers. She stated that she had a knee replacement in April of this year and something doesn't seem right. Caller said that the medication is not working and she was told by her doctor she would need to come back if it does not work.

Caller requested that I email her the form.

Caller flew from Phoenix to Ontario. She had lost her license. She went to the DMV to get a paper copy but the new ID comes in the mail so she did not have it. She has an expired ID and the paper copy. She was fine on departure but was given the third degree at PHX on the return. She handed the TSO her paper and expired ID and they treated her like a criminal. She was searched from head to toe and they searched through all her baggage. She was embarrassed by the TSO's. The caller was so upset that she was crying on the phone today.

The TSO who took her ID was a young guy. He had light colored hair. He embarrassed her in front of people. She explained that she knows her ID is expired and that she had already called the airline. He told her to stand aside and then another lady asked her if she was waiting on something. She said she had to take her shoes off. The lady at the AIT was rude. She is the one who took her bag and patted her down. The caller asked her if she is going to do this in front of everyone. She was taken to a private room. She said the whole experience was horrible.

10/6/2014 She does not have email. She went through gate C-13 on Southwest Airlines. The caller is 63 and has neck length light brown hair, blue polo shirt, white pants.

I clarified that the airline and TSA are different entities and TSA is who has to verify your identity.

I told her that you can use alternative id such as expired licenses or credit cards and you are subject to additional screening, however TSO's are trained to treat you with dignity respect and courtesy and I am sorry that this was not your experience.

Because your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Comment : Dear sirs, I'm contacting you to complain about the complete disregard for procedure at the Phoenix airport today, October 6, 2014. Terminal 2.

My brother (b)(6) and I arrived for our United flight to Newark at 8:30AM, following your web page recommendations we repeatedly reported to the TSA agents that my brother has two hip replaced and therefore requested a scan instead of metal detector. In spite of our repeated attempts the TSA agents directed my brother to the metal detector which naturally went off.

2:15:04

PM

The triggering of the detector initiated a series of searches which consumed 20 minutes, all easily avoided if the agents listened to us and our repeated appeals for a scan.

The behavior of the TSA agents concerns me at several levels: disrespect for passengers with implants, excessive time wasted on a futile search, and the overall reduction of effectiveness in securing travel.

Appreciate your attention to this matter and hopefully it prevents future incidents.

The caller recently flew from DC to HI. She has a knee implant and she has a card. She stated that she did inform them at the checkpoint. She stated that she goes through the AIT and she is still subjected to additional screening, in the form a patdown. She stated that one lady was very thorough over her breasts and other areas of her body, just because of the knee implant. She stated that the patdowns have to be a violation of the ADA. She stated that she does not want to go through a patdown when she flies, just because she has a metal implant in her knee and she shows the card from her doctor stating such. She stated that she has read on the Internet the generally one or the other is used, and not both. She stated that she has read that she can get a patdown if the AIT is declined or not available, however in her case she normally has to go through both. She asked if TSA has a Prescreening program to say that an individual has such issues to avoid a patdown in the future. She asked why she was not wanted to clear the alarm. She stated that the patdowns are obnoxious and they are a waste of time in her case. She stated that it just delays her and wastes Unnecessary time of the agents as well. She stated that a private screening would just delay her further. She stated that she will contact the ADA to see if there is anything that they can do. She asked if the AIT alarms are generally audible.

I explained that any time a passengers goes through the screening process they have to be screened. She can request a patdown first, rather than going through both process. TSA PreCheck, or any other program will not help her avoid a patdown for screening. I explained that there is no way for her to avoid a patdown. We do not use wands for screening. I explained that she can request a private screening if a patdown is required, which may make her more comfortable with the process. I explained that we use the WTMD, AIT, and patdowns to screen passengers, and sometime additional screening methods that may include testing for ETD. Passengers may present medical documentation regarding a medical condition to help inform TSOs; however this documentation is not required, nor will it exempt passengers from the screening process. I explained that generally depending on the machine setup, the AIT would highlight any alarming areas. The AIT does not penetrate the skin, therefore it would not show the metal implants in her knee.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

Caller wants to file a formal complaint against TSA. Yesterday she was flying from Colorado Springs with her daughter. The daughter tested positive for an explosive test and they were then taken aside full pat down which included her private parts. Caller said her daughter was traumatized. They were told that if they refused that they could be arrested. Caller want to file complaint, get some information, and she requests we update our website to make it clear what happens to a child between the age of 13 and 18 and that they can receive the same pat down as an adult.

RESPONSE:

Every person, regardless of age, must undergo screening to proceed beyond the security checkpoint. Even a baby must be individually screened, however, it is Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy that passengers will not be separated from their children.

When required, children who appear to be 12 years old and younger receive a modified version of the patdown. The modified version of the patdown still requires a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) to pat down the clothed areas of the child's body; however, the procedure was adapted to be less invasive.

PM

The modified version of the patdown is required if the walk-through metal detector alarms when the child walks through it, anomalies are detected during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, the adult accompanying the child refuses AIT screening on the child's behalf, or the child is randomly selected for a search. Also, a patdown of specific areas of a child's body may be conducted if the child is wearing bulky clothing.

The patdown can always be conducted in a private screening location when requested. The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) never separates a child from an accompanying adult. The accompanying adult may observe the entire patdown process and may assist by holding the child's hand. Twos are trained to conduct these procedures professionally and respectfully.

Children over 12 receives the same general pat down as adults.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

Individual Contact: (b)(6)

Disability Description: Caller is a recent breast cancer survivor.

Response Details: I stated they are trained. They would have to conduct additional screening on anyone that triggers an alarm or an anomaly with either screening machine. I suggested for future flights to call TSA Cares and request assistance for the screening process. She could call 8557872227. She could request a private screening and should call 72 hours prior to the flight. She could obtain the notification card which is a discreet way to provide information to the TSO prior to the screening process at tsa.gov. I was not sure what was detected on the AIT Machine.

I stated I would forward this information to the CSM for review. Someone may contact her.

She is a recent Breast Cancer Survivor. She had reconstruction 4 weeks ago. She went through the AIT machine. They pulled her to the side after she came out. The TSO stated they had to search her chest. The TSO asked if she had bandages? She said no. The TSO stated she had to search her. She had to put her arms up. The TSO put her hands on her breasts where she had reconstructive surgery.

The caller stated she had surgery 4 weeks ago and did not want anyone to touch her chest.

The TSO did not offer a private screening. She put her hands on her chest. She was so upset that she was screened in front of everyone. She swabbed her hands and stated she was done. She was humiliated in public. Why are they not trained to screen passengers with Breast Cancer? Would they check a man's testicles in front of everyone? The TSO was Female. After the screening experience, US Air had given her seat away. Will someone contact her? She is not disabled. What did they see on the AIT machine?

She does not want to discuss her medical condition. She was so embarrassed and humiliated. She was not an avid flyer and did not know the procedures or to ask for anyone. The TSOs should be trained to do this.

Caller signed up for precheck recently via TSA and had a bad experience the first time, he has a bad leg and doesn't know what is in his leg other than metal, informed TSOs and still had to remove items from his pockets and remove shoes, belt, etc. and was patted down completely. He was the first one in line and last one to get through because he had to have additional screening.

Departing from PHF and said he stood with his feet on pads and arms above head for screening technology.

He doesn't know what is in his knees, has had 4 joint replacements, if he presents his medical card does that allow him to not go through the removal of everything for screening?

AM

Response:

Informed caller PHF airport doesn't participate with the Precheck program, therefore, not eligible at that location. Must be flying via airline assigned to the departure airport. Not a guarantee for anyone, should be allowed on a more consistent basis, but, TSA doesn't guarantee anyone they can use precheck everytime they fly. Random selection only.

If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins.

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available.

Can present documentation, not required and doesn't exempt anyone from screening process. Cannot allow anyone to circumvent the system by learning how it works and be allowed to get something through that could be detrimental to safety of aviation.

Incident was:

Her children were asked to have be patted down because she did not want them to be over exposed to xrays.

She went through the AIT machine, but the Officer had an issue in doing so. Her 8 year old son eventually had to go through the AIT machine anyways.

The Officer was a large male, medium skinned was accompanied by a thinner person and a woman was somewhere in the background.

A Supervisor never came, it was around 530 am. They refused a Supervisor. The Officer hid his name tag, and said if she did not adhere that they would call the police. The female officer said that another Supervisor was being called. The male officer who threatened her was named (b)(6)

A Supervisor finally came, and protested when the Supervisor let them through.

She does not feel as though this situation had to turn out like this, and was unnecessary.

I did let her know that I was forwarding her complaint to the CSM at EWR.

If she had future issues, she could call this number back chose option 5, and then type in airport code EWR.

Disability Description: Caller has an artificial pancreas and an insulin pump.

Response Details: I advised her that I will refer this to the CSM s at the airports.

Response: To protect a passenger s rights under Federal law and to file a valid claim, travelers must send their claim in writing to TSA, stating the circumstances of the loss and the exact amount claimed (fair market value of lost or destroyed property, reasonable cost of repair for damaged property), within 2 years after the claim occurred. The claim must be signed by the claimant or an authorized representative (e.g., an attorney or other personal representative with appropriate proof of authority). TSA is responsible for reviewing all claims relating to the screening of passengers and their baggage.

To file a claim, you should fill out the Standard Form 95 (claim form) in accordance with the instructions and return it to the address in box number 1. A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. While use of the form is not mandatory, it may help travelers ensure that they meet the legal requirements for filing a claim. If you decide to file a claim, it will be processed in accordance with the Federal Tort Claims Act.

Once TSA s Claims Management Branch (CMB) has received your claim form, you will be sent a letter of acknowledgement and a claim number. You should keep the claim number for future reference when inquiring about the claim. TSA tries to resolve claims as quickly as possible but may need time for further investigation of the facts. If TSA denies a claim, or has not finally resolved it within 6 months after it was filed, travelers have a right to bring their claim to court.

I gave her the phone # for CMB at 571-227-1300.

Incident Details: Caller said she got on a plane 2 weeks ago and that she has an artifical pancreas and insulin pump and cant be around any xrays and that she was put in the ait machine and they fried $1200 worth of medical equipment. She said she had a Dr. prescription that she gave them and they insisted that she go inside the ait machine. She said she had no insulin after that happened at Sacramento and that she was going to Vegas. She said it all had to be replaced and she said this happened at both Sacramento and Vegas Airports with the ait machines. She said she does not have the name of any Officer at either airport and she said the Officers told her she could still go through the ait machine and would not use the wand on her. She said she appreciates TSA but that they need to know what the machines can do to medical items and that we need to be trained more and she said without insulin she can die. She said the Officers were nice but they did not listen to her. She requested that we email the claim form to her. She asked does she need to get the cost of the machine for the claims dept. She said Medtronics overnited the machine to her. She said they separated her and her husband and it may not have happened if he could have stayed with her. She said she showed them the pump right away and that her husband keeps her from getting confused.

Claims: Complaint

Airport: Sacramento

Airline: Southwest

Flight Number: unknown

Departure Time: 09-29-14 at 11 am but they left 30 minutes late

Disability Description: He has a defibrillator.

Information Request: He said he will be traveling again this year but he declined the pss.

Response Details: Response: I advised him that he needs to have his hands free for the screening process and to put the wallet in the plastic bin and to talk to the Officer before screening starts about the concern he has about his wallet. I advised him that he can put it in his carry on bag before he comes into the checkpoint.

If a passenger has an internal medical device, such as a stomach or cardiac pacemaker or a defibrillator, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins. Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds.

TSA is required by law to screen all property that is brought onboard commercial passenger aircraft, including carry-on luggage. To ensure the security of the traveling public, it is sometimes necessary for Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to conduct hand inspections of carry-on bags. TSOs receive training in the procedures to properly inspect passenger bags and are required to exercise great care during the screening process so that when bags are opened a passenger's belongings are returned to the same condition they were found.

Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to reasonably ensure that carry-on items, including disability-related devices and aids, are kept within a passenger's line-of-sight when a passenger is required to undergo additional screening. When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening, TSOs have been trained to maintain control and sight of the passenger's items and to ensure that the passenger is reunited with his or her property once it clears x-ray screening.

I advised him that he needs to declare the defibrillator and advise the Officer that he does not want the xray screening.

I offered to send this to the CSM at the airport but he declined.

I asked if he needs a pss at the checkpoint and that he can ask for a pss or supervisor and offered an email.

If a passenger cannot remove his or her shoes due to possible medical complications, discomfort, pain, balancing problems, or because the shoe is part of a prosthetic, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins.

His or her shoes are subject to additional screening, which may require that the passenger lift the bottom hem of his or her pants. A passenger can request to be seated during this additional screening.

Disability Description: The caller wears an insulin pump.

Information Request: She indicated that she has observed passengers with medical devices being escorted to the WTMD for screening. She indicated that she has seen the chain being removed from the WTMD and a TSO escorting a passenger through. She asked why she can't do that.

Response Details: I advised that passengers can request to be screened via a patdown rather than to pass through the AIT or WTMD.

I advised that in regard to the specific incident with the TSO, I will refer the information to the CSM at PIT to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this.

I advised that I would refer her feedback to our disability department. I opted to do this as the caller challenged the information on our site and feels that it is misleading.

I explained that passengers cannot request to be screened by the WTMD instead of AIT or a patdown screening, however TSOs can approve alternate screening for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions, or devices. I advised that she can request the assistance of the PSS or STSO at the checkpoint with questions or concerns. They can address these and provide assistance through screening. TSA Cares can provide assistance through screening for those with disabilities, medical conditions, or devices. Such assistance can facilitate the screening process for the passenger.

9:18:12 AM Incident Details: The caller indicated that she had a negative experience on 5/22 at PIT. The TSO swore that insulin pumps were okay to go through the AIT. The TSO threatened her with a full body patdown if she didn't go through AIT. She felt that he was forcing her to go through AIT, which she did. She feels that this is due to lack of education of our TSOs and TSA's policy.

United flight 3541 PIT to Chicago departing at 6:35am

The TSO was male, dark brown hair, glasses, average-short build. She went through the scanner in the far right lane.

She has researched and has been advised by the manufacturer of her insulin pump and other manufacturers of insulin pumps that they should not be subjected to AIT. This applies to glucose monitors as well.

She is in the process of replacing her insulin pump. It is covered under warranty and she is not incurring an out-of-pocket. She indicated that she went through screening a few days ago.

She would like for someone to follow up in regard to insulin pumps going through the xray machine. She stated that the verbiage on the website indicates that passengers can go through AIT or the WTMD with the insulin pump. She feels this is misleading.

She indicated that she is happy to provide documentation to website that she has used for her research in regard to the screening of insulin pumps.

Caller lives in the US and has friends who arrived in the US and don't speak good English, everytime they board a flight in the US they have excess screening. What is the problem?

Flying from BUF to Chicago and also mentioned at JFK they had to go through excess screening. Caller wasn't sure of the screening they were referring to, such as a patdown, being delayed by CBP, etc.

Caller said at BUF they had to be double checked and they are traveling with small children.

Asked why they are having to have the additional screening?

Caller disconnected the call at 11:47 AM.

11:35:48 AM Response: TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

Caller has a friend who is traveling with another friend from Russia and they are traveling in the US and have been put on a list at each airport. Why have they put them on this list and they are tired because they have been checked again and again? Thinks it is TSA that is doing the checking because they gave a friend in Omaha, NE the TCC # and were told to contact the TCC for information. [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] is the name of the passengers and caller asked for specific information regarding the two individuals? No specifics regarding the type of screening, just that they are being checked precisely at each and every airport before allowed to board their flights.

(TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile. We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

No specific information for any passenger, just standard process and procedures information, offered to provide via email, none provided.

Caller said he has a KTN, he had an incident at DFW when he was returning to San Jose. He went through the precheck line. He has a prosthetic metal shoulder and it set off all the WTMD and they patted him down. The reason he got the KTN is because he travels often so he can go through quickly. This time when he went through all this additional screening did not help anything. So he is not receiving the precheck he paid for, he is 65 years of and deserves to receive it. He stated we obviously need to change our system.

TSA continues to focus its resources and to improve passenger experience at the security checkpoint by expanding its use of technology and applying new intelligence-driven, risk-based screening procedures. The use of risk-based initiatives allows TSA to maintain its high-security standards and allow more travelers to experience the benefit of expedited screening.

The most familiar of TSA's risk-based initiatives, TSA Pre[®]2713™, allows TSA to identify low-risk passengers for expedited screening. Travelers who are directed to the TSA Pre[®]2713™ lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gels bag in their carry-on luggage.

Explained to the caller that if he went through the precheck line, he was receiving the precheck incentives. But once he alarmed the machine they made him remove his shoes, that is additional screening. Any passenger regardless of precheck status, if they alarm are required to undergo additional screening. Told the caller that for future reference he needs to inform the officers before he goes through screening that he has a Metal Implant so they can direct him to the AIT machine that he would need to go through.

Caller hung up.

Caller says she recently flew and did not want to be xrayed, she said she was directed to the AIT machine and was told to go through this, she again said she told the TSO that she did not want to be xrayed. She ask if this machine put of radiation, I advised her no and this type of screening can be opted out of she said she tried and they would not let her. I offered to take this information and forward to the CSM she declined. She just wanted to make sure there was no radiation and ended call.

I recently received the following response to my TSA complaint. Though I appreciate the quick response, it appears my concerns regarding my personal safety and rights does not resolved any of the issued raised in my complaint. I would appreciate a personal response to the issue raise touching me with contaminated gloves and primarily without my permission.

What corrective action is the TSA intend to make? How can Ebola be controlled when the TSA does not practice protective care to avoid contamination passengers by the TSA agent himself?

Subject: In Response to your inquiry.

Thank you for your e-mail regarding your screening experience.

4 10:10:59 AM The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are required to be considerate and thoughtful, and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

At airports nationwide, TSA has implemented streamlined, consistent, and thorough patdown procedures at security checkpoints to provide a higher level of security and increase the safety of the traveling public. Patdowns help TSA detect hidden and dangerous items, such as explosives. They are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, and as part of TSA's random screening activities.

A TSO of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search; however, passengers may need to wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available. As the screening is being conducted, the TSO will be describing the procedures he or she is using. The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

At any time during the screening process, passengers may request a private screening.

TSOs should also offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. Passengers who refuse screening in both the public and private areas will not be permitted to enter the secured area.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Support Manager at that location. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot

Disability Description: Caller has a complaint.

Response Details: Before the security screening begins, it is important to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if you:

- Have an insulin pump
- Need assistance
- Have difficulty raising your arms
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

It is not necessary to disconnect from your insulin pump during the screening process. The insulin pump will be screened and, in most cases, passengers will do a self-patdown of the insulin pump followed by an Explosives Trace Detection (ETD) test with a swab of their hands. If traces of explosives materials are detected, passengers will need to undergo additional screening.

Passengers may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or using a thorough patdown. Any passenger can request a patdown rather than using the technology.

For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations for Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, it must:

- Be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination;
- Be in writing;
- Include the name and address of the complainant;
- Include the date of the alleged act of discrimination;
- Describe the alleged discriminatory action in sufficient detail to inform TSA of the nature of the alleged act of discrimination; and
- Be signed by the complainant or someone authorized to sign on behalf of the complainant.

In order to appropriately address your concerns, we also need to know the airport at which you were screened by TSA.

TSA accepts e-mails as being signed. TSA encourages passengers to file complaints on their own behalf. If you are filing a complaint on behalf of someone else, please include a statement regarding your authorization to file the complaint on his or her behalf.

If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

Email sent.

I have a complaint about going thru Security at Midway Airport this morning, October 13th with my 92years old mother who has Parkinson's disease and was in her own wheelchair.

When I got up to the screening I told the TSA agent that my mother could not get out of wheelchair to walk thru the security. She told me I would have to take her shoes and lightweight jacket off of her so they could pat down her own wheelchair.

It says in your own instructions that

TSA has implemented a program that revised screening procedures for passengers who appear to be age 75 and older. Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

So why did this TSA agent in who called for someone to take her back and pat her down that I had to take her shoes off and lightweight coat off?

When I flew from Columbus Ohio to Midway, Chicago airport last Friday morning 10/10/14 – they let her keep her shoes and coat on. Now this morning when she was sleeping in her chair as I had gotten her up too early this agent made me take her shoes off.

Then afterwards when I had gone thru security I noticed another agent had an elderly gentlemen who was able to keep his shoes on when he brought him thru security to pat him down.

I think you need to train some TSA agents about this program so it doesn't happen again when I fly with my elderly mother.

Comment : When I used my smart phone boarding pass I was given my license back with a small paper encased in plastic that I gave to the TSA (female) agent. I was told I didn't have to take off my earrings, watch or shoes. I'm assuming the pass I was given exempted me from doing it. From my past travels, I've learned this pass is randomly given. I did open my carry on and gave the female TSA agent, my hand cream, toothpaste and liquid soap I had in a plastic bag for her to review. At that time, I thought I was going to go through the Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) Equipment that swirls around your body vice the regular metal detector but I wasn't. I was directed to come through the metal detector which of course sent off alarms because of the jewelry I was wearing. The male and female TSA agents kept sending me back to take off jewelry, then my shoes and was proposing to do a full body search if the detector went off again. After taking off my shoes, the metal detector didn't alarm when I went through the metal detector. At that point, I was really confused and wondered why they would send me through a metal detector when I was initially told I didn't have to take anything off. I thought my pass bypassed the metal detector. I was the only one in the TSA screening area and felt like I was under some kind of assault. I don't like to play race cards but I almost felt like I was being harassed by TSA because I was black. The TSA Caucasian staff at Daytona Beach needs to be more professional and follow the rules in place. I should not have been subjected to a metal detector and should have been allowed to go through the AIT because of the pass I was given. The experienced left me feeling truly assaulted.

Caller said that every time she flies and goes through the AIT, it picks up something on her body and she has to pass through again. She wants to know if she can get information or pictures about what is causing the alarm. She said that she doesn't know what it could be every time but she flies often and it always happens.

Advised caller that the AIT takes a generic image of the passenger and the images are not something that the airports keep. She cannot get pictures and there is no one that she can contact that can tell her what is causing the alarm. She can ask the officers at the checkpoint what it is and she can ask for a supervisor if they do not help her. The AIT picks up anomalies on the outside of the body. They also used to use the backscatter which is more like an x-ray machine, but she said that she is going through the millimeter wave, which is the AIT.

<http://www.tsa.gov/ait-how-it-works>

Caller flew from SLC on Sept 27th and went to meet someone in the lobby and had to go through security again and he was asked if he had anything else in his pocket and he told them that he just had paper which was $100 bills. The officers made him take the money out of his pocket and hold it above his head during the screening process for everyone to see. He is needing to know why he couldn't just leave the money in his pocket.

10/15/2014 10:06:47 AM
The screening process at the checkpoint requires passengers to empty their pockets so when they go through the AIT screener the items will not show up as an anomaly. The reason that the officers ask him to hold the money during the screening process is so he would not have to place it in a bin to go through the xray machine.
I advised him that I can forward his complaint to the CSM at SLC so they will be aware of this issue or he can speak with the CSM directly. He stated that he wanted to speak with the CSM so I ask him to hold while I obtained the contact information.

When I came back to the call 45 seconds later he disconnected the call.

The caller indicated that she is flying next week on 10 22 to Dallas TX and on 1 17 to RSW. She has a pacemaker and hip replacement. She is advised at the airport that AIT is safe for her pacemaker and goes through AIT. She indicated that it is uncomfortable for her spread her legs for the patdown. She is 88. She doesn't understand why she always has to receive a patdown after passing through AIT even after she advises of the pacemaker and hip replacement. She resents this and doesn't like being touched between her legs.

She indicated that she is in a wheelchair. She passed through screening once at either DTW or RSW and did not require a patdown. She stated that she did not go through screening. She stated that she doesn't recall if she passed through any machines. She doesn't recall when this occurred or at which airport.

She expressed concern in regard to being separated from her purse.

She asked if there is something that she can do not to be screened.

10/15/2014 11:40:15 AM
She asked what happens if she doesn't advise of her pacemaker and hip replacements.

We cannot guarantee that she won't receive a patdown. Also, there is nothing that can be done so that she won't be screened. She has to be screened by TSA before she can board her flight. Patdowns are required to clear anomalies of AIT. I advised that she should advise of the hip replacement and pacemaker before screening begins. She should advise if she has difficulty in raising her arms or remaining the position required for a patdown and if any area of her body is sensitive or painful when touched.

TSA Cares can provide assistance through screening for those with disabilities or medical conditions to facilitate screening. Such assistance does not guarantee that she won't receive a patdown. I advised that she should call at least 72 hours prior to travel to request assistance. She declined.

Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to reasonably ensure that carry-on items, including disability-related devices and aids, are kept within a passenger's line-of-sight when a passenger is required to undergo additional screening. When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening, TSOs have been trained to maintain control and sight of the passenger's items and to ensure that the passenger is reunited with his or her property once it clears x-ray screening.

If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

Caller is calling for her mother. She applied for precheck at LAX on Sept 17. She checked the status and her fingerprints weren't clear. Now they are doing a name check for them. Her mother is flying in 3 days and she has no KTN for her. She wants to know if there is anything she can do to ensure she gets precheck on Saturday. She wants to know who to speak with about the enrollment process to inquire why the fingerprints weren't noticed as bad on the day they were present, and also why it is taking so long.

Advised,

10/15/2014 2:30:41 PM
Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

I advised that there was nothing I could do to get her mother precheck on Saturday.

For additional assistance, please contact the Universal Enrollment Call Center at (855) DHS-UES1 ((855) 347-8371) between 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Eastern Time, Monday through Friday.

Caller said he went through TSA in Chicago and went through the WTMD. They then told him that he would need to go through the AIT machine. He said he went through the machine and for some reason they were only interested in his shoulder. He said they patted down his shoulder. He said they wanted to look through his wallet. He said he was told by a police officer in EWR to never let TSA have your wallet. TSA told him this was a lie and give me your wallet or walk out. He said 4 or 5 TSA officers were in front of him telling him this. He said he did give them his wallet to look through. He asked is this procedure. He asked what is right, is TSA allowed to look through your wallet or not. ALSO: He said that he had some theft of money at the TSA screening in EWR before. He said he was out cash there in EWR. He said he talked to the police at the Airport and they did an investigation but he never got anything out of it. He said he had no money missing from his wallet this time. ALSO: He asked how can he ensure that TSA would not take any of his money. He asked if he can ask for a police officer the next time at the screening when they want his wallet.

RESPONSE: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) posts signs at the entrances of security screening checkpoints advising travelers that their person and property are subject to screening. This advance notice provides individuals with the opportunity to not enter that area. Once an individual elects to attempt to enter a screening location, screening must be completed before an individual is permitted to leave the screening location.

RESPONSE: You can request a private screening of you and your belongings but that private screening would include a patdown. You can ask for 2 TSA employees to look at your wallet at the same time. They will try to accommodate you.

The caller had a negative experience at LGA on the Sept-30th. It appears that she was selected for random screening and had an invasive patdown of her arms and back that angered her. She was very angry and would not stop interrupting me as I was asking for additional information. I was finally able to get her to calm down enough to explain the incident, which did not reveal to me any wrong doing on the part of TSA. She said that her rights were violated but made not mention of discrimination. She told me that the TSO actually said that she was selected for random screening. She wanted to know what procedures that TSA follows during the selection of passengers for random screening.

Advised:

I explained to the caller that some information is SSI and that I can only share a small portion of what occurs afterwards but not about the selection process.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed. (same sex officer patdown and a private screening if asked)

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

Caller wants to place a complaint for her daughter. Her daughter is disabled and they are at Logan right now. She said before going through screening, an agent asked her daughter if she can raise her arms to go through the AIT machine. Her daughter did raise her arms to show him that she could. Her daughters name is (b)(6). She said at the machine, the TSOs name was (b)(6) when her daughter rose from the chair to go through the machine, as soon as the officer saw her limping, he told her to step back from the AIT. He did not ask her if she was able to raise her arms or go through the machine. He saw her limping and told her not to go in. Then her daughter got back in her chair and they called a lady officer over to assist her. (b)(6) GOT ON THE PHONE AND GAVE SOME MORE INFORMATION: She said they did not tell her what they were going to do. The lady took her in a separate area behind the machine and told her she was going to do a patdown. She said the lady officer was kind and told (b)(6) how she was going to do the patdown. (b)(6) said she was upset and started crying. She said her mom came over and told the lady that she could go through the machine but was not allowed. The first officer said she can go through but the second officer said she cannot. She said then the manager, she thinks, came and he tried to fix things. She said then she was allowed to go through the AIT machine. She said the manager told her how she could file a complaint. She said the manager (b)(6) was nice. (b)(6) said she would like to file a complaint.

Where did this happen? PENNSYLVANIA - PHL - Philadelphia International

What happened? Flight 741 near gate B3 After a trans Atlantic flight the alarm sounded when I walked through a portal. I said to the attendant it must be my bracelet. I took it off tried to hand it to her. i ll walk through again. she nodded no directed me to the AIT machine. I repeated to the operator standing opposite side of the AIT (b)(6) after a brief exchange said you had better cooperate. it ll go easier on you.

My hands were up with my bracelet, the silver watch frame. I protested I ddin t want to be in the box. I said I didnt want my body exposed to a viewer, even remote viewer. He said my body

Caller: Caller states she flew from Minneapolis and respects we have to open baggage. Caller states her baggage was opened and her husband had a glass case that is now broken and they had lotion spilled all over their belongings. Caller states officers need to be respectful of peoples belongings. Caller states she has a hip replacement and when she went through Portland it was fine but in Phoenix she would have been embarrassed because of the patdown if she was a person that gets embarrassed. Caller states they need to install AIT like they have in Phoenix. Caller states she does not want to file a claim just wanted tsa to be aware it occurred. Caller asked why is her baggage inspected sometimes and sometimes it is not.

4 2:32:57

PM Response: Informed caller that it was the Airport that decides what screening methods are available at airports not tsa. Informed caller that there are numerous reasons why her bag would have been inspected ranging from random selection to her bag triggering an alarm and I did not have any information as to why her bag would have been inspected.

Disability Description: Caller is in a wheelchair.

Response Details: I just advised that he let them know next time he is over 75, cannot raise his arms above his head, should not have to remove socks and shoes, etc. I told him I would send this up to the CSM, but since I had no further information such as precise details or names and he didn't want to file a claim or have his name mentioned that was all I could do at this point for him. It seemed for the most part what they did was standard procedures for someone in a wheelchair who could not go through the machine, etc. Also advised him that complaints need to be in writing within 180 days of the incident.

Incident Details: Caller said he will be 83 in a few weeks. Because of some health reasons, he has done a lot of flying since March, having had numerous surgeries. He said at every single airport every single time he has been man handled. He said every single time is a nightmare. Even another passenger with artificial limb told him at Little Rock what he went through was horrible, also.

One incident was in Atlanta. He said he witnessed as everyone was going through the screening normally emptying contents in bins and going through the AIT s. He was in a wheelchair. They made him stand up. Made him take off shoes and socks. He didn't argue. They took off his shoes and they removed his socks. Then they had him put on the little paper like slippers and made him stand up. He walked through the AIT and was told to raise his hands. He told them he couldn't raise them high. One officer went around and said you failed; we need to hand search you now. They patted him down. It went on and on and on. He had an hour and 10 minutes in the airport. Even the person pushing his wheelchair was saying we need to hurry because he is going to miss his plane. He pushed him along in a hurry to get there just as they were putting up the ramp. One more minute, he would have missed his plane.

10/21/2014 5:35:17 PM On another such occasion, he was asked to present his ID. He couldn't find it and had his conceal carry weapon permit. They informed him that wasn't a valid ID.

He expressed his dissatisfaction strongly with TSA. He felt singled out amongst all the other people that he felt should have been screened more thoroughly and none were. He and this other passenger at the airport both spoke about the way they were treated and both were rattled.

I asked did he feel discriminated against based on his disability or age. He said yes. After speaking with a supervisor (b)(6) began to gather the following information from him in an attempt to take a complaint based on discrimination.

He said the incident happened on April 11th in Atlanta. Not only did they take his shoes and socks off, but they put solutions on his hands.

I advised the caller this was normal process in lieu of the failed walk through to test for explosive traces. I wanted to continue getting information for filing the complaint and he refused pretty much.

He says that puts the finger on him. He has lived all his life without filing anything. He felt that now TSA employees felt they had authority, it was now him on the chopping block. Then he began to say but said he wasn't threatening, but wait until I call a couple of these radio stations and even get TV involved. He don't want publicized. He has been made offer to tell his story. He just wants to be left alone and not roughed up and embarrassed. He feels he has been knocked on ground and kicked in the face enough, figuratively. He says TSA's interest should be to best serve the safety. If he were king of TSA, he would hear complaints, he would listen to their complaints. He would have program and get documentation so they would not have this.

I advised him I was trying to do that for him by documenting his complaint, but he did not want to continue with specifics on incident.

To Whom It May Concern:

While I am not holding out hope that my concerns regarding the lack of professionalism I was subjected to at Colorado Springs airport on the morning of October 18th will generate any investigation, much less any resolution, I am nevertheless compelled to bring to light this horrific experience in the hopes that someone might pay attention and actually take proactive measures to prevent such an occurrence in the future.

I was travelling on a combination business/personal trip with my 11 year old daughter. Both of us being experienced travellers, we are well aware of the various air travel requirements and expectations and had even reviewed the TSA information site to ensure we were up-to-date on expectations. We arrived at the airport with plenty of time before our flight and breezed through the security checkpoint line in a very timely fashion.

My concerns did not crop up until I went through the AIT station. My child had entered before me and was cleared to proceed; considering I have done this screening several times before and had removed all necessary/required items prior to entry, I expected to breeze through myself. Upon exiting, a rather large and rude female TSA agent barked at me, 'What's in your back pockets?' I responded nothing, which was both true and accurate. She then felt it was necessary to pat down my rear pockets, no warning, and in front of the entire screening area (and as a sexual assault survivor, her actions were nothing sort of assault; she managed to make my stomach churn and brought back some intense overwhelming negative feelings and memories that I have spend many years trying to put behind me). I was shocked and somewhat horrified. Not finding whatever she felt she should have, she then commanded I hold my hands out for residue screening. I attempted to ask for what and she simply continued to bark commands at me as if I was sub-human, ordering me to hold my hands in front of me. It was not until after she wiped my hands she even advised me what she was doing. She seemed rather smug when she announced that I was then in need of a more thorough pat-down and had to wait for another female agent to come over. I was shocked and horrified...she had essentially assaulted me in public and then proceeded to take great pleasure in ordering me around as if I was beneath her. Meanwhile, my minor child was off to the side, frightened by what was happening, and not only could I not hold her hand and reassure her, this awful example of mankind would not allow me to even talk to her! No one explained anything to my child and I was not allowed to...the horror I felt at my own situation intensified into anger at how thoughtlessly and rudely my child was being treated!

After several minutes of unsuccessfully attempting to grab another female agent's attention (no kidding, two agents looked this nasty woman in the eye and then pointedly turned away when she asked for them to 'take my away' for a further screening). Meanwhile, other passengers were pushing against me to move past because I was not allowed to move out of the area I was in yet I continued to be unable to reassure my child. I tried at least twice to explain to the agent I was a military member and to show her my ID card (which I was not allowed to take from my child who was trying vainly to help me) and her only response was that she did not care who I was, I showed positive on the hand screening and that meant a more in-depth examination.

I am writing because I am 5 months pregnant and travel weekly for work. Your policy is that I have to opt out of going through the x-ray machine to avoid permanent damage to my baby. The problem and complaint that I have is regarding how we (pregnant women) are made to feel like criminals when requesting this option. Not only do we have to wait usually over 10 minutes for someone to have time to come pat us down despite the overwhelming amount of staff present but it is also how our things are treated in the process. Secondly, I was recently in Dallas Love Field when I watched them let a woman with a dog and a man with a baby go through the metal detectors when I as a pregnant woman have to get discriminated against and wait for my pat down.

Metal detectors are fine for pregnant women, why can we not use these instead if dog and baby owners are allowed to?

It is really frustrating for anyone to be made to feel that way and especially when you have to travel weekly like myself.

Thank you,

The caller is diabetic, and uses an insulin pump. The pump cannot undergo the AIT or WTMD screening. The caller wanted to know if a patdown of the insulin pump was required each time she was screened. Also, she wanted to know why an insulin pump had to be screened by ETD when a laptop screened by x-ray did not. Additionally, she wanted to know if enrolling in TSA Precheck would negate the need for additional screening of the medical device.

The caller recently flew from LAS, and had a negative experience with young, male TSO. He was rude and inattentive, especially when she was attempting to inform him about her insulin pump. He kept yelling at her to remove her IPOD, but she tried to tell him that the device was an insulin pump. She also indicated that passengers must wait much too long for a female TSO, and was informed by another TSO that the TSA did not have enough female staff. While she did not feel that this was discriminatory, the caller believes that better training should be necessary at LAS. She could not provide flight information.

Also, she indicated that the training should also be enforced at FAT, as the officers there are also seemingly unaware of the proper procedures.

Advised Caller:

Before the security screening begins, it is important to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if you:

- Have an insulin pump
- Need assistance

4 3:50:53
PM

It is not necessary to disconnect from your insulin pump during the screening process. The insulin pump will be screened and, in most cases, passengers will do a self-patdown of the insulin pump followed by an Explosives Trace Detection (ETD) test with a swab of their hands. If traces of explosives materials are detected, passengers will need to undergo additional screening.

Passengers may ask to speak to a Passenger Support Specialist or a Supervisory TSO while at the checkpoint for assistance in understanding what to expect during the screening process.

Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are trained on professional and courteous screening procedures to make the process run smoothly and to reduce inconvenience. We regret that you were not satisfied with the service you received.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 prior to traveling no less than 72 hours ahead of travel in case it is determined that it is necessary to coordinate support at the airport.

TSA Precheck will not negate the necessity of additional screening.

I offered to e-mail this information to the caller, and she declined.

Hello,

I was just at Newark to try to catch a flight from EWR to YYZ. There was chaos at the TSA checkpoints. Out of the three main checkpoints at Newark only one was open, and the one that was open had one of the possible 12 lanes open. This seems crazy on a travel day like a Sunday and a massive inconvenience to all travelers. I missed my flight, had to rearrange travel for tomorrow and change hotels and rental cars, lost some money in the process.

Can you please advise why all the closures and how a traveler can get some advance warning that TSA will be operating a skeleton crew?

Thanks,

Caller stated that he was on a Southwest flight from BWI on Saturday. He went through the AIT machine and he had over 3000.00 cash in his pocket. Caller stated that the machine went off and the officer asked what he had in his pocket. The caller advised him the he had money in bill form. The officer then told the caller to let him see it. The caller said when he took the money from his pocket that the agent jerked it out of his hand and started shaking and fanning it. The caller said that he did not at any point ask him if he could handle his money, and if he was not watching him he could have easily stole some. He is livid over the way the screening was conducted. He is thinking about calling his senator and getting a lawyer. Advised caller if the officer asked to see the money that is an indication that he would have to screen it. The caller said that he showed the officer the money when he was ask to see it however he had to right to handle his money nor jerk it out of his hand.

Resolution:

TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

Because your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

Caller wants to know why TSA screeners at MSP are not educated better on insulin pumps and AIT machines as the caller states her manufacturer advised her not to go through the AIT machine as it could damage her insulin pump. Caller states on a recent screening experience the TSO on duty advised her AIT will not harm her pump.

Resolution:

Advised caller we encourage callers to contact the manufacturer of their insulin pump to determine if it can safely undergo x-ray screening. Screening via AIT is optional and you may request a thorough pat-down rather than using any screening technology. Advised caller if she wants to know why the TSO s are not better educated on insulin pumps she can contact TSA Headquarters at:

Transportation Security Administration

Arlington, VA 20598

Also provided caller information on how to contact the MSP CSM by selecting option 5 through our IVR.

Disability Description: Caller uses a cane and has a metal implant.

Response Details: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint.

He can request a private screening of the money if he has concerns.

The most familiar of TSA s risk-based initiatives, TSA Pre u2713 , allows TSA to identify low-risk passengers for expedited screening. Travelers who are directed to the TSA Pre u2713 lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gels bag in their carry-on luggage.

For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations for Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act (6 C.F.R. 15.3(b) and 15.70(d)(3)), it must:

- Be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination;
 - Be in writing;
 - Include the name and address of the complainant;
 - Include the date of the alleged act of discrimination;
 - Describe the alleged discriminatory action in sufficient detail to inform TSA of the nature of the alleged act of discrimination; and
 - Be signed by the complainant or someone authorized to sign on behalf of the complainant.
- In order to appropriately address your concerns, we also need to know the airport at which you were screened by TSA.

Advised caller that we would also forward this complaint to ODPO.

Incident Details: Caller has a complaint. He flew from IAD. When he originally departed Hartford Bradley he did not have any issues. Bradley was wonderful. He has a cane and an artificial hip. He received Precheck in Bradley and on the way back. In IAD he put his stuff on the belt and he set off an alarm. The TSA agent was rude. They gave him a patdown. The TSO got in his face. He had an accent so he, the PX, could not understand him. He told him he was having trouble understanding him. The TSO said he would have been better off saying he could not hear him over he could not understand him. He took that as a threat. He had to take off his shoes. He is sure he was doing his job and the procedures do not upset him. It was the attitude of the TSO that bothers him. He told the woman by the conveyor belt of his metal implant. She put the cane through. He had money in cash and the rude TSO told him to put it in a bin. It was hundreds of dollars so the Px did not want to. The TSO

For Richmond, they have moved the AIT machine. She is a member of GE and has a pacemaker, which means she can only go through AIT and a patdown. When going through PreCheck, she has actually had to go to the regular line which has resulted in not being able to take advantage of PreCheck benefits.

It appeared that one was feeding into an AIT scanner and one into a traditional metal detector. The metal detector was apparently open for use and there was an officer staffing it. I was in the apparent metal detector lane. When it was time to go through the officer instead said that I had to go through the AIT instead. This was inefficient (long line at the AIT) but fine. However, I did not have everything out of my pockets since this is not required for metal detector. This resulted in my getting patted down after going through AIT, test for explosives residue and having to send my wallet through xray. While this was all fine, it was a big time waster and would have been completely unnecessary if it had been clear I was going to go through AIT. NO ONE was telling passengers on the metal detector side that the metal detector was in fact not open; it was not blocked off, and no one on that side was telling passengers to take everything out of their pockets.

After this incident I asked to speak to whoever was in charge of the checkpoint. I spoke to Officer (b)(6) and explained what happened. He could not have been less interested and did nothing to address the situation. He also claimed that there was a policy that prohibited blocking off the metal detector when it wasn't in use. This does not seem correct because I travel frequently and see that blocked off lanes and devices are routine. In any case, I asked (b)(6) what the reason for the policy was and he stated that he had no idea what the reason was. In my view, no one should be placed in charge of a checkpoint who doesn't understand not only what the policies are but also the reasons for them. Otherwise, you'll get mindless adherence to supposed policies and bad customer service.

I would like to know -

- (1) Whether it is consistent with policy to have no one telling people to take everything out of their pockets before going through the AIT
- (2) Why the metal detector cannot be blocked off when not in use so that people will know in advance that they will be directed to the AIT
- (3) Whether the officer in charge can be counseled to actually listen to customer feedback and address it
- (4) Whether the officer in charge can be informed of the reasons for TSA policies so these can be explained to customers.

Caller travels with Jet Blue. She thinks she was at Buffalo and was randomly screened for explosives. She is wondering why they choose to randomly twice in the same year.

Advised caller

Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a Patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives.

Caller she is not upset about the system. Caller is for that. She feels like she may be targeted. She has seen innocent people with things thrown on them. Also on October Rd she flew out of Kennedy to Fort Lauderdale and had a connecting flight, #2319, to Montigo Bay. In the process she lost $30 worth of jewelry. It was attractive stuff. However, there was not a NOI in her bag.

Advised caller she was referred to airline. She indicated that she had already contacted them and they said they were not responsible. She just wants TSA to be aware that this happened.

Advised caller: Please note that TSA assumes a very limited role with respect to checked baggage handling. We are only responsible for checked baggage from the time it is presented for screening until the time it has been cleared of screening. Once checked baggage has been screened and cleared, airlines are responsible for transporting it to its final destination. As a result, the amount of time checked baggage is under TSA control is relatively short.

Caller told the following story: In the past, she had a wedding in Atlanta and her bag opened and expensive jewelry fall out. A guy seen it and looked at her and her bag. He later stole her bag as it came out. She confronted him and he returned her suitcase. It was already in the parking lot. She thinks this occurred at Kennedy. It is because of this experience that she wants someone aware of the above incident.

She is just reporting it. I emphasized with caller

The caller is a FF and he flies a lot. He stated that he is wanting to complain about TSA Precheck. He stated that he has been told that the AIT has been removed from all Precheck checkpoints. He has a medical implant that alarms the WTMD and he has to get a patdown. He stated that this is discrimination against persons with disabilities. He stated that he has been through AUS, RIC, and ORF. He stated that they all used to have the AIT until recently, and it was removed. He stated that at AUS and RIC he has to get a full patdown. However, at ORF he was able to be placed in the front of the regular line for general passengers, take off his shoes, and go through the AIT, while his baggage went through the screening at the Precheck checkpoint. He stated that he will contact his congressman or senator if necessary. He stated that he wants to speak with someone regarding the matter to find out why he is being discriminated against. He asked to speak with a supervisor if we do not have contact information for someone to speak with regarding the matter. He stated that he has found federal email systems to be useless.

I explained that we do not have any information regarding the AITs being removed from the Precheck checkpoint. Generally the AIT locations depend on the airports, and checkpoint location. I explained that if any passenger alarms the screening process, a patdown is used to resolve the alarms. I explained that this is done regardless of age, disability, medical condition, or other circumstances. We can forward the information to the appropriate office for review and clarification on the matter, however we do not have any contact information to provide.

Escalation Notes (b)(6)

The caller wants to know what the policy is for AIT machines at the TSA check points. He also claims discrimination against people with disabilities because we are removing AIT machines from the Pre check checkpoints.

I tried to explain what he needed to do for discrimination but he kept bringing it back to the Policy question. I told the caller that he could request to be scanned by AIT at a different checkpoint and that brought him back to the discrimination statement. He refused to accept the process to follow. Eventually he accepted to email his question in to get an answer. Passenger wasn't very cooperative and this was the best option to help him.

Caller flew from Charlotte to Cleveland, The TSA agent removed everything from his wallet and looked at every credit card and everything in the wallet. The TSO stated credit cards were now being checked due to a security threat. However on his return flight, noone went through his wallet or his wife's. He later stated he went through the AIT machine. Did this TSA agent overstep her authority? Everything is in the wallet. Another freedom has been taken away. He will post on FB that the TSO s may go through the wallets.

Advised:

I explained it was not a common screening procedure or new rule for TSO s to conduct screening on the wallets.

The wallet may have triggered an alarm which would have led to additional screening of the wallet.

An anomaly may have occurred while he was in the AIT machine which prompted her to complete the additional screening of the wallet.

Today, I went through security at Dulles International Airport. Since I am pregnant, I requested to opt out of the AIT screening and have a pat down instead. Officer (b)(6) was the TSO that I spoke with and he began arguing with me that AIT was perfectly safe and that I get more radiation from my cell phone. When I told him that I was pregnant and that my doctor advised me to not go through these types of scanners, he rolled his eyes at me and continued to lecture me on the subject. I had to request a pat down three times before he finally put out the message for a female assist for an opt-out screening. Even at that point, Officer (b)(6) made comments to me like, "Fine. If that's what you really want to do." In reading information on the TSA website, passengers have the right to opt out of this type of screening. We should not be harassed when we exercise this right.

AM

While I was waiting for the female TSO, another passenger with a broken arm was also waiting for an alternate screening (walking through a metal detector instead). Officer (b)(6) began calling out to this passenger instructing them to get back in the main line to go through the AIT. The passenger had told him that she had a broken arm, which was insufficient reason for Officer (b)(6). The passenger then explained that she could not lift her arm above her head, which would be required by the AIT scan. Other TSOs had already been involved with this passenger's screening process and had already made the decision for her to not go through the AIT scan. However, Officer (b)(6) seemed to take a personal offense to anyone who would not participate in the AIT scan.

I appreciate the service that TSA provides in keeping our transportation infrastructure safe. I wanted to report this incident because this type of experience reflects poorly on all of TSA. I travel frequently and often have to make this request when I am pregnant. Most of the time, I am treated with respect. Today was outside of the norm and not up to the standards that TSA holds. Thank you for your time and consideration to this incident.

The caller was going to apply for precheck. He is 79 and was told that 75 and older do not have to remove their shoes and jackets. The caller states that in DEN on 10-31-14 around 12:00pm he went through screening and he had to remove his jacket even though he is older than 75 and the officer told him the people that put up the signs and do not do the screening so take off your jacket. The officer told him that the signs do not mean anything to him. He caller has hip and knee implants and wants to know if precheck would benefit him. The caller wants to know if there is a number he can call to get an appointment because all the appointment times are taken for when he can go for over a month.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection.

Travelers who are directed to the TSA Precheck lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gels bag in their carry-on luggage.

I advised the caller to contact the Universal Enrollment Call Center at 1 (855) 347-8371 for a phone number to the specific enrollment center.

I advised the caller that regardless whether he has precheck or not if there is an alarm the officers have to clear the alarm and advised him to let the officers know about the implants.

Caller said it has been 18 months since he has come from Germany where he lives in Europe to the US. Nothing really went wrong but he said when you have to go through the scanners while your things are going through you cannot see your things and that upsets him. He said he has noticed how busy it is at JFK and someone could run off with your wallet. Caller asked why the AIT is not facing the other way. He said he does not like standing with his hands up for the AIT like a criminal and asked if he can have his wallet in his pocket or hand during that screening.

Caller would not admit that most of the time his belongings come off the conveyor just as he finishes the AIT. He quipped his things are at the other end about 30 seconds before he gets there.

Caller was nice at the end and said thanks for putting up with him.

RESPONSE:

11/6/2014 4:18:46 PM Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to reasonably ensure that carry-on items, including disability-related devices and aids, are kept within a passenger's line-of-sight when a passenger is required to undergo additional screening. When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening, TSOs have been trained to maintain control and sight of the passenger's items and to ensure that the passenger is reunited with his or her property once it clears x-ray screening.

I asked if most of the time his belongings come off the conveyor just as he comes through the other side of the AIT. Told him I want him to answer my question because unless you are taken aside for additional screening you are usually going to arrive at the end about the same time as your belongings.

I cannot tell you why the AIT faces the way the do.

You cannot walk through the AIT with your wallet in your hand.

Told he could ask for a private screening of his belongings and if the Supervisor on duty feels a manual screening is sufficient that may be allowed. You will receive a Patdown of course.

Caller and husband will travel on Monday. He has a pain stimulator implant. She said the last 2 times he has flown, they made him go through the AIT. She said this has happened at Boise and the San Diego Airport. She said he told them he cannot go through the AIT and wanted the hand wand. They told him too bad, we don't do that and he was made to go through the machine. She said he has a card from his doctor. She asked what can she do to make sure this will not happen again. Caller said she would like some information about the screening emailed to: [b] [b] She said she did not know if it was damaged at this time. She said he had it turned off at the checkpoint.

11/6/2014 6:06:33 PM RESPONSE: If a passenger has an internal medical device, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins. Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology. ALSO: Advised that information about the patdown will be included in the email. Offered the PSS or Supervisor for assistance at the checkpoint.

Disability Description: The caller wants to file a complaint on IAD and United Airlines. The caller flew from Punt Cana to IAD to CLE on Sunday 11-2-14 on United flight 5104 from IAD to CLE. The caller states that she had a United ticket for special services for wheelchair and wheelchair connecting flight assistance. The caller had issues with TSA. The caller states that when it was their turn to go through screening the caller asked the officer where the handicapped line was. The caller told the TSA officer that her mother could not get out of her chair and could stand for no longer than a minute. The officer showed her where to set her mother. The caller proceeded through the AIT and turned around to get her things and a female agent had her mother out of her wheelchair and standing in the AIT and 3 other officers were yelling at her mother telling her to hold her arms above her head. The caller states that the wheelchair was no where in sight. Her mother cannot raise her arms above her head due to injuries and broken bones and cannot stand due to a heart attack and stroke and numerous other health problems. The caller states that the bottom line is that the officers took a handicapped person and made them stand up, took her wheelchair and misplaced it, and when the caller tried to locate her mother a wheelchair before she fell an officer yelled at her and told her she could not go back that way. The caller was screaming and begging the officers to find a wheelchair for her mother before she fell and TSA had a law suit on their hands. The caller states that you cannot discriminate against the handicapped population, make them do things that are beyond their capabilities, it is not standard procedure at any airport to make a handicapped person stand up to go through the screening technologies or yell at them for not being able to hold there arms up.

Information Request: The caller states that after screening and they got to the United gate the United agent told her that they had no information on her mother. She had the boarding pass in her hand indicating wheelchair and connection assistance but the airline agent told the caller that they did not know her mother could not walk. They told her that her mother would have to board the plane from the ground. The airline told the caller they would have to find a ramp to get her mother on the plane and it took an hour and a have to get a ramp if they could find someone smart enough to get a ramp. She had an employee scream at her while standing on the tarmac outside the plane telling her that she should have asked for an isle chair. The caller did not know what the airline employee meant by and isle seat. The caller states that her mother sat in the freezing temperature for over an hour waiting for a ramp.

The caller indicated that he flew yesterday and received expedited screening. The TSOs advised that he remove his jacket. The caller requested a bin to place his jacket in so that it wouldn t get dirty. The TSOs would not provide a bin for him to put his coat in. The TSO stated that if he wanted a bin he should go through the standard screening. This occurred at MSY yesterday at 4:30am. He was traveling on a Delta flight departing at 6am to ALT. He indicated that he was at the checkpoint to the far right. The TSO was female, African American. He indicated that she had 3 stripes on her collar which he took to mean the person in charge at the checkpoint. He indicated that the TSO was very rude.

He flew from ATL yesterday as well. He normally passes through screening with his wallet in his back pocket, however his wallet was in his hand prior to passing through AIT. He was advised that his wallet was too big and that he would have to go through x ray. The caller explained that he always passes through screening with his wallet in his pocket. The TSO asked if he did not speak English and took his wallet and placed on the belt to the opposite side (right) of where the passenger was. After exiting the AIT and undergoing a patdown, he cut in front of someone to get to his wallet so that he could return to the other belt and collect his other belongings. A group of TSOs advised that it was rude of him to cut in front of the passenger. This occurred at the checkpoint at 5:30pm. He indicated that he went through the Delta Sky Priority Lane. The Precheck lane was on the other side of him. The flight from ATL to MSY was on Delta departing at 7:19 PM. The TSO that took the wallet and made the comment is male. caucasian. The group of TSOs consisted of 2 African American male TSOs (one stripe), and a female. He indicated that a TSO with 3 stripes did come over but didn t say anything.

AM His complaint is that the TSOs were rude and has always been able to pass through screening with his wallet in his back pocket but was unable to this time.

TSOS are trained to treat each passenger with dignity respect and courtesy and apologized if that was not his experience. TSA screening procedures are the same at all airports, however interpretation of the procedure may vary from airport to airport and from situation to situation.

I advised that I would refer the information to CSM of the respective airports to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints received so that we can track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

The caller and his wife, who is pregnant, flew from LAS. His wife requested a patdown, as she did not feel comfortable undergoing screening by the AIT or WTMD. The TSO was very rude and argumentative, indicating that the service was not available due to federal budget cuts. The caller's wife asked again for a patdown, and the TSO rudely told her to stand over there and wait because there were no female TSOs present. The caller did not understand why she, as a female, could not conduct the patdown for his wife. The couple waited for over 15 minutes, and asked a supervisor if there were any female TSOs available, and were told that they still had to wait. During that time, over two dozen people were screened, and exited the checkpoint. Finally, the caller's wife gave up, and went through the electronic screening. He was given a slip of paper by a supervisor, and was told to contact the TCC to file a complaint. The caller indicated that the supervisor hinted to him that this was common behavior from the female TSO.

Advised Caller:

Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

Caller appreciates the job that TSA does. He says some rules were broken yesterday as his family went through screening, in regards to his children. He, his wife and child of 3 years old were traveling together. He understands the rules do allow families to stay together. He has been on tsa.gov for information and he clearly understands what it says. He was asked to do something to separate him from his child. His wife and child went through the WTMD and he was asked to go through the AIT. He said he understood that families were permitted to stay together and he was upset he had to go through the AIT. His child and wife were upset that he had to go through the AIT instead of the WTMD along with them. His wife was left to get his daughter and the bags together alone, so she was distressed as was his child. He says they have traveled many times and has always been permitted to go through screening along with his wife and child.

Told caller

11/10/2014 I understood it did say parents won't be separated from their children, I did not know if it meant that both parents would be able to use the WTMD or just one parent could with the child.

4 I would take his complaint and forward it to the CSM at the airport and let them address this for him.

If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. I offered to give the caller the URL for the card.

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a thorough patdown.

Caller has a disability and its called tortes syndrome and his hands shake, he is not able to go through the AIT machine because they can not get a accurate reading on his hands. He has to go through the Metal detector and they always do an explosive trace detection of his hands. He tried to fly back to Houston TX from Greenville and this happens to him every time. He was told by the TSO that they aren t able to get a reading on his hands and would have to do the trace detection, he wants to know why he gets it all the time.

Told caller that it is random that they do this sometimes, however if they are not able to get a reading that would be the reason that they do the explosive trace detection. At that point he ask to speak to a supervisor.

11/11/2014 9:21:05 AM

(b)(6) notes:

Caller said that he has tourettes. When he flies, because his hands shake, he s told that he can t go through the AIT. He flies primarily through GSP and HOU. He said that everytime he goes through they tell him that he has to go through the WTMD and he receives an ETD because they cannot get an accurate reading through the AIT. He doesn t understand why this is happening to him and no other passenger behind him. He wants to know if there is a card that he can use to exempt him from this. He said that he doesn t want to have to file a complaint with the ADA, which is why he contacted us first.

I informed him that there is no card that will exempt him from any type of screening, but we do have assistance we can set up for him and a Notification Card he can print from www.tsa.gov that he can show to the officers to make them aware of his condition. There is no way for us to tell him why he is receiving this screening every time and other passengers aren t, but if the officers tell him they can t get an accurate reading, he would have to undergo additional screening. The AIT is set up for the passenger to stand still for 5-7 seconds while he is screened, and if he cannot do this, he would have to go through additional screening. It would be based on the individual passengers, so I can t give him a reason for why he is receiving it at these airports.

Callers husband is on an Alaska flight. They fly back and forth to Cabo St Lucas. Tonight he was pulled aside and searched thoroughly in Mexico. Then in LAX he was pulled aside for the same thing. He asked why this was done and the airline. She called the airline and they told her no, this is done by TSA. She said that this was embarrassing for her husband. They searched him head to toe and his baggage. She wants to know why. She said he has metal implants so he does usually get patdowns.

I told her that if he had set off an alarm or anomaly of AIT then he would have to be patted down to clear them.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe. TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI).

I told her that having this on his boarding pass does not mean that he has done anything wrong or that it will happen again. I told her that if he does see this again to allow extra time for screening. If it continues to happen you may consider looking at the Traveler Redress Inquiry Program at DHS.gov.

Caller says she was told to call this number to verify what documents are needed for her to go through the PreCheck line. She flies with Frontier, which she says hasn't got their systems ready to accept PreCheck yet. She says that she went to Cleveland Hopkins and presented her paperwork, but was denied entry into the PreCheck line. She said that we should give a PreCheck card that can be scanned at the checkpoint to verify that she has been precleared for PreCheck, so that this can be used when flying with an airline that doesn't participate. She said that people who work for Key Corps or Eaton can just show their business card and go through the PreCheck line in CLE with no questions asked, but her with all of her documentation cannot. She was very upset and said that she is being penalized for flying with a lower cost airline. She wants to know where to go from here. She stated that these individuals she mentioned earlier are showing just a plain paper business card. She says that if she had an employee from one of these two companies give her a business card, she could do the same. She stated that TSA does not look at an ID of any sort or a boarding pass for these individuals. She refused to allow me to speak to a security specialist during the call regarding this. She says it is not her problem and she doesn't want involved.

Advised caller:

10:12:09 AM

I advised the caller that unfortunately there is no documentation that she can present to go through PreCheck when flying with a non-participating airline. PreCheck status has to be confirmed on a higher level and the officers at the checkpoint don't have the discretion to review her documentation and make this type of determination. Advised caller that when a reservation is made with a participating airline all of the information is submitted to the TSA Secure Flight system, where watch list information is checked, PreCheck information is checked, airline information is checked, as well as a lot of other information. This system then decides whether a passenger will get PreCheck or not. There will be random security measures where a passenger doesn't get PreCheck. If we gave her a card to show at the checkpoint, her information wouldn't go through this extensive checking before each flight and she would get it each time. At this point, she needs to either fly with a participating airline or express her concerns to Frontier about them not participating. The information has to be embedded in the barcode of the boarding pass for her to get PreCheck. The only way this can happen is if it is with a participating airline and has gone through the TSA Secure Flight system.

I probed her further about the incident she mentioned about the individuals going through and only showing a paper business card instead of ID and boarding pass. I obtained the information above. I asked her if she would allow me to place her on hold, so I could speak with a security specialist. I advised her that this is a security concern and that we really need to handle this with a security specialist. I advised her that they may want to speak with her for more information, and asked her if she would allow me to put her on hold, so I could check with them. She continually denied as noted above.

CSS Hoskins notes: Contacted caller back she advised people at Cleveland Hopkins are being allowed to show business cards and gain access to the precheck lane. Caller is very upset because she paid the fee to enroll in precheck and people can show a business card that work for the big companies in Cleveland and get precheck. Caller stated there was boards located at terminals that state that employees who work for Keycorp, Eaton and other companies can be sent down the expedited screening lanes.

CSS Hoskins advised caller TSA continues to ensure that all individuals who go through the checkpoint are screened—including those who access TSA Pre✓™ lanes. Additionally, all passengers must have their identification verified by a TSO and will go through a metal detector or Advanced Imaging Technology scanner as part of security screening procedures. Would forward to CSM for review at Cleveland

Caller flew from Seattle to Alaska on Nov. 11 and the lady patted her down and she put something on the palms of her hand. The caller asked what was it. She asked if every passenger have that done. She said they took her toothpaste and she stood in the AIT and asked if that is an xray. She said she has had too many xrays and she asked why did they pick on her. She asked does each passenger have to go through screening and she said they did not tell her that she could refuse it and she said it was not necessary. She asked why don't they pick on the Arabs and she had nothing to do with 9-11. She said she is not going to fly anymore and she said she did not see the ait sign that said she could opt out of it. She said she may get cancer now because of this xray screening and she said she should not be harassed like this. She declined her phone # and her last name. She said she does not have the Officer's name and she did not talk to a Supervisor at the checkpoint. She said she was not given the choice to decline the xray screening. She asked how much radiation was it from the AIT. She asked does her 5 yr. old grandchild have to go through the ait machine. She asked why did she have to go through the ait, the patdown and the hand swabbing.

I advised her that I will refer this to the CSM at the airport.

Response:The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has expanded the use of ETD technology in airports. In addition to the screening of carry-on and checked baggage, passengers may undergo screening of their hands using an ETD swab at the security checkpoint, the checkpoint queue, or at boarding areas.

TSA has used this technology to screen passengers' hands since 2008. ETD swabbing is completely harmless to passengers. The swabs are made of fabric or paper and do not contain any chemicals. ETD screening does not require a new swab, unless it is torn, dirty, or unusable. If an individual would like to request a new sampling swab, they must notify the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) at the time of screening. A TSO first swabs a passenger's hands or accessible property and then places the swab inside an ETD unit. The ETD unit analyzes the swab for the presence of residue from explosives. Any alarm generated by the ETD screening process requires the passenger to undergo additional screening.

I advised her that the AIT is xray screening and before she goes into the security checkpoint she can tell the Officer if she does not want to have any xray screening. I advised her that if she does not want the wtdm or ait machine she can opt out of it and have the patdown process instead. I advised her that there is a sign in front of the ait machine that she can opt out. I advised her that if the alarms were triggered or an anomaly detected then she would have to go through additional screening.

Caller states that she will travel on 11 30 2014 on Alaska Airlines to Kona from SEA. She usually gets PreCheck. Her husband who is 76 years old has not been getting Precheck. She is 71 years old. Caller states that neither one of them applied for PreCheck. Husband got on the phone (b)(6) Caller would like to know why he did not get PreCheck again. Caller would like to know how to get modified screening procedures.

Advised caller:

The most familiar of TSA's risk-based initiatives, TSA PreCheck, allows TSA to identify low-risk passengers for expedited screening. Travelers who are directed to the TSA PreCheck lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gels bag in their carry-on luggage.

Also, travelers younger than 12 years of age, older than 75, and military personnel may receive modified screening procedures at airports nationwide.

It is important to remember that TSA PreCheck does not guarantee an individual expedited screening. TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport.

11/14/2014 2:25:10 PM TSA has begun to identify passengers who may be eligible for expedited screening through a risk-based analysis of passenger data using the same Secure Flight data that passengers have provided for years. TSA's new initiative will use this same information to also identify low-risk passengers to determine if they should be directed to the TSA Precheck lane for expedited screening. These passengers should not expect to be directed to the TSA Precheck lane each time they fly.

Individuals who would like to receive expedited screening on a more frequent basis should consider applying to a U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Trusted Traveler program. Passengers who travel internationally may be interested in a membership with a U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) Trusted Traveler Program, such as Global Entry. Those who travel domestically may prefer TSA's application program. Applicants of either program undergo fingerprinting and a background check before being approved for membership and TSA Precheck eligibility. The application with TSA costs $85 and gives eligibility for 5 years.

As part of this effort, TSA has implemented a program to revise screening procedures for passengers who appear to be age 75 and older.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process. You can request to move to the front of the line if you have difficulty standing and waiting in line due to a medical condition.

If you want to apply for Precheck through TSA you can go to an enrollment center to apply. If approved you generally can get Precheck eligibility within a few weeks of visiting the enrollment center.

She indicated that she had a negative experience at a checkpoint at EWR in November. She was treated like a criminal due to a machine that malfunctioned. She would like to speak with someone to ensure that this doesn't happen again. She refused to provide her personal information as she is concerned about retaliation.

She opted for a patdown rather than pass through AIT to avoid radiation. After the patdown, she was advised that a supervisor would have to conduct a patdown. The caller indicated that there was an anomaly. She had to wait for thirty minutes for the supervisor. She offered to go into a private room to remove her clothes to be screened. TSOs advised that they could not accommodate that. She offered to go through AIT but was advised by a TSO that she could not as she had already opted out of screening.

Her husband tried to approach her to speak with her while she was in a separate room. The TSO would not allow her husband to come near her as if he touched her if he would have to receive a patdown. She explained that her husband wears a hearing aid and is deaf and would need to move closer to her.

She indicated to a female TSO that she believes that the machine that TSOs use to test their gloves was broken and asked questions about the machine. The TSO stated rudely that she was asking too many questions.

The caller feels that she was treated rudely and like a common criminal. She stated that the TSOs were abusive although would not elaborate.

11/15/2014 9:47:53 AM She asked if being a Global Entry would effect screening in the US. She asked what is the AIT screening.

She asked what type of follow up would occur, the name of the CSM, who was the head of TSA and for a contact number or address for them, if Mr. Pistole has a secretary under him that handles customer service complaints, and who to call with such complaints.

AIT screening is safe for all passengers and the technology meets national health and safety standards. The Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Standards and Technology, and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory independently evaluated the AIT machines and have all affirmed their safety. In fact, a passenger is exposed to less radiation from one AIT scan than from two minutes being onboard a commercial aircraft at flight altitude. The extremely low dose of radiation from the entire spectrum of TSA screening technology is inconsequential, even to frequent Flyers who undergo repeated screening.

I advised that once a passenger opts out of a screening technology to receive a patdown, they cannot opt to go through screening at a later time. That is a standard screening procedure.

I apologized in regard to the fact that she felt that she was treated disrespectfully and inappropriately.

I advised that I can refer the information to the CSM at EWR to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this, however without her contact information she would not be able to receive any type of follow up. The CSM acts as a liaison between passengers and TSA. I advised that she would not be retaliated against for making a complaint.

I advised that John Pistole is the administrator and provided his mailing address. I advised that the address is the only referral that we have. I advised that I am sure that Mr. Pistole has secretaries and Administrative Assistants, however we don't have

Call taken over by E Vaisey:

The caller was told to call here. A card was given to her at the screening checkpoint. She slipped coming out of the scanner, she said that the ramp is very steep. She was in stocking feet. She needs to call to see the next step. She did not hit the floor. They asked if she wanted to call 911. They screened her companion in the wheelchair in a separate lane. They sent her through the AIT. The hard plastic on the other side as the ramp caused her to slip. She had to twist and grab the AIT because there was nothing to grab. She did not fall but was immobile for several seconds. They asked her if she was okay but she felt rushed because she did not want to move yet because she was not sure if she was okay. She moved to the side to let the other people go through. They did ask her if she was okay and if she needed 911. She was not sure about her options though because she did not want to miss her flight. She sat down to put her shoes down. The officer ignored her and processed other people at that point. An officer after a while did ask her if there was a problem. That officer got a card and wrote some numbers on her complaint compliment card. She did not get any names of people because it all happened so fast. The officer did tell her about the cameras.

Upon arrival, the airline did not really assist with the companion that needed a wheelchair. They were pushed from curbside to the middle of the airport and then the caller had to help her from their on. She though they would push her all the way to the gate. In MCI the airline did assist her.

We recommend you contact your airline, as consumer and service-related matters are handled directly between the passenger and the airline. If the airline does not satisfy your inquiry, the U.S. Department of Transportation's Aviation Consumer Protection Division operates a complaint handling system for consumers who experience air travel service problems and provides a 24-hour hotline at (202) 366-2220 to record complaints.

I informed her that we can get some information and forward her complaint information to the CSM. I told her that the agent would get back on the phone to get her specifics.

Incident Details: Caller went through checkpoint on November 14th from SFB to GSO and at SFB she told (b)(6) TSO at the screening checkpoint that she had metal implants and wanted to go through the metal detector but she was told by (b)(6) that she didn't get to choose and waited 15 minutes for a supervisor and then was told to go to the AIT and was subject to a patdown. Caller states (b)(6) has a very long last name. Caller would like to know how to avoid this happening again.

Caller tried to use online form to submit a concern and was unable to. Stated yesterday she was at MCO and going through security she thought her purse was closed or zipped, she goes through the AIT and all for screening. Problem was when she retrieved her items they had been moved around and they were in the line that said waiting to be searched. Items were spilled out of the purse into the bin and no one explained to her what was happening. She and her daughter were waiting and her son and husband had already gone through, no one told her what was happening. She told the Agent when she retrieved her items they should have zipped up her purse once searched and the agent told her they couldn't search her stuff. She never had such an experience, she had items in separate bins and a large carry on which she placed in a separate bin and her coat in a separate bin. The ticket is outside her purse and items outside the bag and she thought someone looked through her items because the purse was zipped.

Caller stated the agent rearranged her items and the problem was the way it was handled by not informing anyone what was happening. She went to a desk where 2 female agents were sitting and the agent who was either black or Mexican, larger frame was very rude to her. The manager stood up and asked which line she went through and they finally figured out which line and said they would look at the camera. She isn't missing anything, just the way it was handled, no communicate between the agents with the passengers and the agent told her her items weren't searched and her items were in a line that states waiting to be searched.

She had to board and didn't have time to wait, just wants someone to be aware of what happened. She isn't a new traveler and feels like TSA doesn't communicate with travelers as they should.

Both of the agents were rude to her, the one through the line and also the agent at the desk when she went to speak with them. The agent who was standing in the line was blond and 50-60s, shoulder length hair and the second agent at the desk with the manager was either black or Mexican, larger frame.

The manager was dressed in a tan or off white suit and she was helpful, blondish-brown hair?

Caller didn't like the attitude of the agents when she spoke with them, although she said they were frustrated and she was also, but, would never be rude to anyone. Stated she is a manager for two medical offices and understands when patients get frustrated and how to deal with them.

Response:

Apologized to caller and explained following:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

Caller went through security at BOI. He went through the AIT machine and tsa told him they saw something at the top of the pants and he said he was searched and the officer put his hands down the back of his pants. He said he was humiliated and was not even offered to do the inspection in private. He states he is very angry.

Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering each secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (Twos) are required to be courteous and respectful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. Caller has a complaint regarding a TSO (male) employee at JFK. Caller states he went through the AIT and was waved out by the TSO on the secure side of the checkpoint. Then the TSO began a patdown without any verbal communication with the passenger. Caller states he was not asked if he would consent to a patdown or if he would like a private screening. He asked for the TSO name and ID Number but he says it was busy and the TSO just waved him off. The incident occurred: at JFK between 4:15 to 4:30 EST on 11-19-14 at Terminal 7. Passenger also stated that if a patdown is going to be conducted it should be by the same gender and since the TSO did not communicate with him the TSO just assumed he was a male (which he is but what if he was not?). Passenger thinks this should be reported.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) does not disclose the identity of Federal TSOs. However, a TSO's last name and position are printed on his or her nameplate. TSOs also wear a metal badge with a unique number assigned to each TSO. TSOs must display their badge and nameplate at all times when screening passengers.

Caller says SFB will not allow him to take liquids on the plane and he is a uniformed crew member. He asked for the information in an email.

I advised TSA understands the concerns over the effects the new screening procedures have had on flight crewmembers, including pilots and flight attendants. TSA Administrator John Pistole is committed to ensuring TSA operates as a risk-based, intelligence-driven Agency and launched several reviews of TSA policies soon after his confirmation to ensure all standards are met. He works for southwest.

After evaluating alternative security protocols for flight crewmembers that would maintain our high security standards, TSA released modified screening procedures for eligible, on-duty flight crewmembers that do not require the use of AIT machines. In addition, flight crewmembers are subject to random screening, observation by behavior detection officers, and TSA's additional layers of security.

Please note, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures

I advised I could escalate the issue to the CSM but he did not want that. I sent the email.

Caller got his KTN but his wife, who applied at the same time, on Oct 8. UES said there was trouble with her fingerprints. They are flying on Monday and she still doesn't have a KTN. Caller wants to know what she can do. She also has metal in her body, and he would like to know the easiest way to get through screening.

I advised that he would want to speak with UES about the TPAP process. 855-347-8371

4 1:26:34 Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

PM

- Have metal implants that may alarm the walk-through metal detector;
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

Passengers with metal implants may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. Caller will be flying to Portland, OR with his wife to visit his son. He will be bringing a portable oxygen tank as a carry on. He will disconnect. He is wondering if this will cause a problem because it is not clear from the website.

Advised: The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) does not allow portable compressed oxygen tanks

Caller stated it would not be a metal tank.

Advised: The FAA does allow for certain portable oxygen concentrators to be used in-flight for medical purposes. If a portable oxygen concentrator is not approved by the FAA for in-flight use, it will not be permitted onboard the aircraft. To find a list of portable oxygen concentrators approved for in-flight use by the FAA, please visit www.faa.gov about initiatives cabin_safety_portable_oxygen

Offered to email this information.

Caller asked if he could just carry it on

12:53:04 A passenger may also check with their airline before purchasing a ticket to ask if their portable oxygen concentrator is approved for in-flight use or if the airline will provide oxygen to the passenger during the flight.

PM

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to tell the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

- Can safely disconnect from their oxygen (passengers should check with their doctor to determine whether they are able to safely disconnect during screening);
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

If a passenger can disconnect from a portable oxygen concentrator, we recommend that the passenger check the equipment with checked baggage, if possible. Passengers may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown.

Caller stated he can disconnect from it so he will check with the airline.

Caller:

How can she get on for PreCheck? She is over 75 years old.

She had a bad experience leaving from Columbus. She had a lock broken and there was no NOI inside, just the broken lock.

What about the screening available for CBP and getting back into the country?

Advised Caller:

11/24/201 4 9:48:22 For the lock, she should contact the airline to see what happened. With no NOI, that would indicate that TSA did not inspect her luggage. The time that we are in possession of luggage is very short. Most luggage is electronically cleared and the hand inspection results with an NOI that we are required to use.

AM

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection.

When making a reservation, passengers should enter their 9-digit PASS ID, also known as a known traveler number (KTN) into the "Known Traveler Number" field of their reservation. You may also contact their customer support by e-mail at cbp.goes.support@dhs.gov or by telephone at (855) 873-4637 (855-USE GOES).

Caller states her tablet screen cracked through the security checkpoint. She filed a claim on the 14th of november and was given a paper with the TSA number for a follow up. Caller did not receive a claim number. Caller states she was stopped at every checkpoint for secondary screening from Jamaica back into the US including EWR and wants to know why. She was told it was just random by every TSO at every airport.

I advised caller:

If you have filed a claim and have not yet received a claim number, you may call (571) 227-1300.

11/24/2014

I advised caller:

10:51:46 AM

In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. Disability Description: The caller is diabetic, and must use an insulin pump. Additionally, she is on a liver transplant waiting list, and experiences extreme fatigue. Also, she has knee replacements.

Response Details: Advised Caller:

I apologized to (b)(6) and informed her that I would record her complaint over the phone.

Also, I informed her that the complaint for the TSOs at ABQ would also be forwarded to the appropriate office.

Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 no less than 72 hours ahead of travel in case it is determined that it is necessary to coordinate support at the airport. If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

We have forwarded a copy of your email to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

Please accept our appreciation for you taking the time to share this information with us. Your help and support are important contributions to ensuring the safety and security of the Nation's aviation security.

11/24/2014

Incident Details: The caller's disabilities prevent her from filing a formal written complaint. Instead, she requested that the process be completed over the phone.

11:23:29 AM

The caller and her husband flew from TYS to ABQ for a CALEA (Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies) conference, and was advised by her physician that the insulin pump could not undergo any type of electronic screening. While at the checkpoint, (b)(6) disconnected from the pump, and asked the TSO to wear a clean pair of gloves when conducting the physical inspection of the device due to the potential risk of infection. He informed her that he was unable to do so; therefore, she requested a patdown while wearing the device. A second TSO started yelling at her, and said that they were not allowed to touch her insulin pump. He insisted that she walk into the AIT machine with the insulin pump, but (b)(6) informed him again that the device could not be screened in that manner. Once again, the TSO screamed at her, and said take off the device, put it in a container, and put it on the x-ray conveyor belt. He then made her go through the AIT while the device was screened by x-ray. She was afraid to argue with the second TSO, and thought he would deny her boarding over the incident.

Upon arriving to ABQ, the passenger contacted Medtronic, and was informed that the screening did not affect her readings. However, they informed her that the device should never be screened in that manner again. (b)(6) wanted to file a complaint, and felt that the TSOs failed to accommodate her disability. Also, she indicated that the second TSO was extremely rude, and should be reprimanded for his attitude and treatment of passengers with medical conditions. She plans on contacting her Congressman, John H. Duncan, regarding the incident.

I recently took a flight from Chicago's O'Hare to Boston's Logan air field. I requested to opt out of the AIT machine. The TSA agent assured me it was safe. I again requested a pat down in very clear language. He told me to "go through the machine." I complied. When I told the agent on the other side of the machine that I felt my rights were being violated, he just narrowed his eyes and walked away.

Caller flew out of Medford, OR and had silverware in her carry on bag. She had forks, spoons, and butter knives. At the TSA checkpoint she went through the AIT screening and about 15 minutes later her bags were screened. The TSA officer said she could not bring her butter knives as carry on and the caller stated that she went to the TSA web site and butter knives are allowed in carry-on. She asked the TSA officer if she could take the knives to her checked bag going to Alaska Airlines which she said was about 25 feet away and she was not allowed to do so. Her and her husband missed their flight by less than 5 minutes and had to pay $25 each to reschedule another flight. Instead of going on the first flight from Medford, OR to LAX they had to go from Medford to Seattle to LAX. A 4 hour flight verses an hour and a half flight. When she went through screening for the different flight, the butter knives were allowed to go in carry-on which is what she wanted to do on the first flight. She would like to get her $50 dollars back that she had to pay because of the delay of catching her original flight due to the TSA screening process.

Knives of any length (with the exception of rounded-blade butter knives and plastic cutlery) and tools longer than 7 inches are prohibited in carry-on bags. However, these items may be transported in checked baggage. It is important to remember that the prohibited items list is not intended to be all-inclusive. A Transportation Security Officer may determine that an item not on this list is prohibited.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

I travel several times a year from Chicago (MDW) to Tampa (TPA) and never ever had problems had problems with the TSA being rude. 11-29-14 about 715-800am I opt out of going through the machine AIT machine which I always do. From you website it states it is my RIGHT to opt out. "Q. Can I choose the way I would like to be screened?

A. Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Signs are posted in front of each AIT location advising passengers of this right."

Which the TSA makes me feel that it is an inconvenience to them-but that is why they have jobs. I have no problem with the pat downs but the rudeness of (b)(6) and her supervisor (b)(6) at Tampa Airport yesterday was uncalled for this was terminal C for Southwest airlines. There was another young lady who almost missed her plane because her baggage need to be check besides what happen to me. I saw the complaint cards but did not feel comfortable in leaving them with airport because I thought it would just come up missing. The supervisor (b)(6) made a comment it was the busiest day of the year but they should also be prepared to handed that. I was almost in tears yesterday after (b)(6) yelled at me and made a scene. When I started looking at her name tag she called over her supervisor in which he made the comment about being busy. I do appreciate all the security at the airports that is not my problem. I do not appreciate the rudeness of TSA officers that feels like I am an inconvenience to make them do their job.

(b)(6)

I hope this was video taped and I guess if I was in a wheelchair I would have no problem to opt out of the AIT machine (Just an observation from the yesterday).

Why is there no link on your website to file a formal complaint about rude employees?

Disability Description: The caller is calling regarding his wife. She had back surgery about a month ago.

Passengers Name (b)(6)

Response Details: I explained that we do recommend that passengers inform the TSOs have of any difficulty raising their arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or if any areas of the body are painful when touched. This can help make screening easier for everyone.

I advised the caller that any passenger that is not able to or refuses to use the AIT or WTMD will be screened using a patdown. Passengers that are not able to raise their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds for the AIT must under go a patdown for screening. We do not use wands for screening. All passengers have to be screened regardless of clothing, disability, or other circumstances. However, the TSOs are trained to be careful with areas that are injured or painful when touched.

I apologized to the caller several times. I explained that during a patdown the agents are required to patdown the entire body, and they go upward until they meet resistance.

I told her that I would send her information on how to fill out a complaint since she feels that she was not accommodated, and went over some of the information for the requirements for filing this complaint. I also told her that this would go to the CSM at DEN so that they would be aware of what took place.

Incident Details: She requested a wheelchair at DEN. She was put off the side, and she had a patdown for screening. She stated that she told her that she was not able to raise her arm. She stated that she told her that it was hurting her, and the damage was already done. She is now taking two pills a day, rather than the one that was necessary before. She stated that she is a retired federal agent. She was told by the agent that she did not need a wheelchair. She stated that she was wearing a top with no bra and jeggings, therefore everything could have been seen. She stated that it was not necessary to raise her arm or pat her down. She was flying on Frontier. She stated that she could have been wanded or have gone through the machine with only one arm up. She stated that this was not necessary. She asked if every person with a shoulder injury has to be battered.

She was in a wheelchair, and was told that she could not go through screening since she could not raise her arms. She stated that the TSO that did the screening was unnecessarily rough. She also said that she was told that she shouldn't have taken a wheelchair if she could do this. She told the agent she needs to be careful with her shoulder, and offered to show her the prescription. She said she Caller is flying from SDF to FL and her husband was selected for PreCheck and she did not get selected. Caller has GE. Caller spoke to the airline and all the information was correct. While some airports may allow individuals who are traveling with a TSA PreU2713™ eligible passenger to access the TSA PreU2713™ lane, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and this procedure may not be available at all times or locations. Individuals traveling with a TSA PreU2713™-eligible passenger should not expect to be directed to the TSA PreU2713™ lane each time they fly. TSA PreCheck is random and not a 100% guarantee. To receive TSA PreU2713™ as a member of a CBP trusted traveler program, please include your 9-digit PASS ID, also known as a known traveler number (KTN), in the "Known Traveler Number" field of your reservation. In addition to your PASS ID, please ensure that the name, date of birth, and gender included in your reservation are an exact match to the information on file with CBP. Passengers with metal implants may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. AIT screening requires that passengers be able to stand still with their arms over their head for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device.

The caller flew from Dallas to LAS, and a TSO was very rude. He stated that he embarrassed him in the airport. He stated that the supervisor at DFW told him to call this number. He stated that he was following all the procedures and removed all his metal. He stated that he was trying not to lose track of his items, as he has done before. He stated that he had his ticket and his drivers license in his pocket with a comb. He stated that he realized that after he had told the officer that his pocket was cleared. He stated that he then removed the ticket and drivers license, and then the TSO once again asked him if the pockets were cleared. He stated that he then told him that a comb was in his pocket and removed it also. He stated that the TSO named (b)(6) started lecturing him by saying, Do you know what is meant by emptying the pockets, and he responded by saying yes. He stated that he kept lecturing him, and he was very vocal resulting in the embarrassment. He stated that he is diabetic and he has to make sure that his items are not contaminated by the carpets at the airport, so he has to be careful. He stated that he treated him like a dumb mexican, and he needs to learn to be nice to the public. He stated that he was immature, and arrogant. He stated that he does feel that he was discriminated against. He stated that he was speaking to him very slowly, like he was not intelligent. He stated that he is educated. He stated that he did not say anything to the agent, as he was afraid that it would escalate the situation, and he would miss his flight. He stated that he was afraid that he would have been subjected to a cavity search and stripped.

He stated that he has high blood pressure and diabetes. He stated that he spoke with the STSO (b)(6) and she told him that he should not have done that, and provided our number to call. She also took the information also, and witness his incident.

Dear TSA:

I would like to bring up the issue of racial profiling. This is an issue that affects a myriad of people all over the world. Racial profiling is when race or ethnicity is targeted when looking for suspicious activity. Usually, this means that foreigners are singled out because of their appearance, something they have no control over. I am tired of going to an airport and watching minorities being given "random" searches. There numerous other factors security can look at, such as luggage size, strange body language, and questionable clothes, like thick coats in the summer. Suspicion should not be based on appearance alone.

Ever since 9/11, Muslims especially have been looked as terrorists. In reality, they are just regular people like you and me. There have been so many incidents that I have seen at the airport when a Muslim person is given further checking than the regular person. There would be no alarm set off by any sensor; they would simply be further checked because they look different.

I am Sikh, and so I am a minority. My father wears a turban, which causes security to always spend more time checking him than they would a white person, for example. This is not just for my father, but for all Sikhs around the world. Most people assume that only Hispanics, African American, and Muslims face racial profiling, but it is not just them. It is something that affects all minorities. I have witnessed it in my own life. I understand that it is for safety, but we can no longer call these "random searches."

In my research, I have encountered various racial profiling claims and their results. It is said that "where the profiling is said to have occurred... managers of similar programs nationwide must attend a four-hour class on why racial profiling is not acceptable and why it is not an effective way to spot terrorists" (b)(6) Online). Your association is trying to change the way terrorists are found, but are these courses working if there are still so many racial profiling issues?

The TSA uses many other measures to increase safety. You have travelers take their shoes off to prevent shoe bombs, and you do not allow liquids on the plane in order to prevent liquid explosives. There are body scanners to check through clothes to the skin, but there have still been cases where weapons are carried in body cavities. Even the highest quality machine cannot detect into the body just yet (b)(6) online). Racial profiling is not the only issue that your organization is trying to address, but that does not mean that it is any less important than the others.

Racism is something that this nation has been fighting for hundreds of years now, and racial profiling needs to be fought as well. It is cutting into privacy. On your website it says, "Pat-downs are used to resolve alarms at the checkpoint, including those triggered by metal detectors and AIT units. Pat-downs are also used when a person opts out of AIT screening in order to detect potentially dangerous and prohibited items," (TSA, Online). Often this is not the case. From personal experience, I have

Dear TSA,
After I went through screening at Midway yesterday, I heard a TSA agent shout to another, "AIT". I asked another agent who was near me what AIT means. She said "it's one of our codes". I said, oh, what does it mean? She said I can't tell you. I said OK. A woman carrying a baby on her chest was going through, so I thought the "I" might mean "infant."

Now I'm back home with access to a computer, so I Googled "TSA code AIT" and found out exactly what it means.

I know TSA agents have a serious and stressful job, but replying "I can't tell you" to a simple question that can be answered on the Internet seems a little too uptight.

Other than little annoyances like that, you all do a great job.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Disability Description: Caller has a pacemaker

Response Details: Response: Informed caller that TSA does not have any evidence that the AIT will damage her pacemaker but she should not have went through the WTMD. Informed caller that she can request a patdown instead of the WTMD or AIT if she feels the screening will damage her pacemaker. Informed caller please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures. Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded this information to the appropriate Customer Service Manager. Informed caller to monitor her email over the next few days in case the CSM needs to contact her.

Incident Details: Caller: Caller states she went to the airport and when she went through security she was informed to take her shoes off. Caller states the TSA agent informed the caller that she had to take off her shoes and caller informed the TSO that she was over 75 and did not have to take off her shoes. Caller states she informed the TSO that she also had a pacemaker and can not go through the screening and the officer informed her that it wont hurt her and informed her that she is holding up the line. Caller states the TSO informed her to just go through the screening. Caller states that she reluctantly went through the WTMD as the officer would not give her any other option. Caller states that she regrets going through the WTMD now as she is concerned that it has damaged her pacemaker. Caller states she usually receives a pat down when she goes through screening due to her pacemaker. Caller states the lady that patted her down was very nice and stated she would report this incident to her supervisor also.

Caller is just using her PreCheck for the first time. Caller has GE. Today was put in the PreCheck line, but still had to remove her shoes and do regular screening. She had to remove her coat and then when an alarm went off she had to remove her shoes. She felt embarrassed by the experience because she was holding up the line and other passengers were looking at her like she was in the wrong line. Caller would like to know if she should have shown her GE card at the checkpoint. Caller would like to know if there is a certain type of shoes that are recommended so that she does not have an alarm going through the checkpoint.

Advised caller:

Travelers who are directed to the TSA PreCheck lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gels bag in their carry-on luggage.

It is important to remember that TSA PreCheck does not guarantee an individual expedited screening. TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport.

You can request a patdown if secondary screening is needed instead of going back and forth taking off items. Secondary screening can be required if alarms must be resolved.

Additionally, all passengers must have their identification verified by a TSO and will go through a metal detector or Advanced Imaging Technology scanner as part of security screening procedures. If you have metal in your shoes, it is likely that it would cause an alarm in the WTMD.

When making a reservation, passengers should enter their 9-digit PASS ID, also known as a known traveler number (KTN) into the "Known Traveler Number" field of their reservation. In addition, we recommend that you review your reservation to ensure that your name, date of birth, and gender are an exact match to the information you provided CBP at the time of enrollment or what is in your online GOES account.

If you have concerns about your screening at the checkpoint, feel free to ask for an STSO to address those. Call us at the TCC if you are consistently having issues with getting expedited screening benefits in the PreCheck lane.

Caller and her husband will be flying to tomorrow. He does not have a PreCheck notification and she does. She said that he is 82 years old and can not go through the checkpoint alone. She wanted to know if she can get PreCheck put back on his ticket or if he can go through the PreCheck line with her. She called United Airlines and was told that PreCheck is random. She said that they both enrolled in PreCheck.

I gave the following information: TSA PreCheck, identifies low-risk passengers to determine if they should be directed to the TSA PreCheck lane for expedited screening. If TSA determines a passenger is eligible for expedited screening, this information will be embedded in the barcode of his or her boarding pass.

While some airports may allow individuals who are traveling with a TSA PreCheck eligible passenger to access the TSA PreCheck lane, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and this procedure may not be available at all times or locations. Individuals traveling with a TSA PreCheck-eligible passenger should not expect to be directed to the TSA PreCheck lane each time they fly. In addition, please remember that TSA PreCheck does not guarantee that an individual will receive expedited screening.

1:28:00
PM

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—though not completely eliminate—the need for a physical patdown on travelers 75 and older that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms. It's important to remember, that any individual may be required to remove their shoes or undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means.

TSA continues to incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport and no individual will be guaranteed expedited screening.

I gave information per: <http://blog.tsa.gov/2014/06/tsa-travel-tips-frequent-flyer-profile.html>

If you check-in online before your flight and don't see a TSA PreCheck indicator on your boarding pass, contact your air carrier. They can update your Secure Flight information right away. If everything matches, you will be able to re-print your boarding pass again, hopefully with TSA PreCheck this time!

Caller said his wife flew home yesterday from LAX and went through the AIT machine. He said when she got home yesterday on both undersides of her breasts she had blisters and red lesions. He said it looks like a dark rash and blisters. He asked if it would be a common problem. He said they burn and they look like blisters. He asked if that back scatter wave was safe. ALSO: Caller said he did not want to report this.

PM

RESPONSE: TSA currently uses millimeter wave AIT to safely screen passengers without physical contact, for metallic and nonmetallic threats. All AIT units deployed at airports are outfitted with software designed to enhance passenger privacy by eliminating passenger-specific images. AIT screening is safe for all passengers and the technology meets national health and safety standards. The Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Standards and Technology, and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory independently evaluated the AIT machines and have all affirmed their safety. The testing took into account special populations that are more sensitive to radiation, such as children, persons receiving radiation treatment for medical conditions, and pregnant and potentially pregnant women, as well as Transportation Security Officers who work near the equipment. In fact, a passenger is exposed to less radiation from one AIT scan than from two minutes being onboard a commercial aircraft at flight altitude. The extremely low dose of radiation from the entire spectrum of TSA screening technology is inconsequential, even to frequent flyers who undergo repeated screening.

ADD: Advised caller that we can take some of her flight information and can report this to the CSM at that Airport. TSA does track trends and I assure you that it would not be taken lightly.

Caller requested a supervisor.

M. Doughty took the call. The caller flew from SMF yesterday. He stated he was running late and was only an hour early. The TSA line was long and moving slowly. He stated they only had one AIT running. By the time he got to the front of the line, he only had about 15 minutes to make it to his flight. When it was his turn to go through the AIT, the TSO he just spoke to started sending passengers from the metal detector to cut in front of him to go through the AIT. He stated a female TSO yelled at him and told him that if he wanted to continue, he should keep his mouth shut. When he entered the AIT, a TSO kept jamming the button and the machine kept going around him multiple times. He was upset that he was scanned so many times and thinks the TSO did not know how to work the machine. They asked him what was in his pocket and he told them it was pill form medication. They asked to see his medication and he showed it to them. He also has gum in his pocket, which he states he never got back. The TSO asked to search his wallet. He stated a whole group of TSOs were surrounding him and it was a very embarrassing experience. He stated they were very aggressive, mostly the female TSO. Next, they told him he must have his hands tested. He stated he has never had such a bad experience before.

Date and time: Yesterday, 12-6, at 6:20 a.m.

The call was disconnected and I attempted to call him back at 12:57 p.m. The call immediately went to a voicemail box, so I assume his phone went dead. I left a message and advised him to call us back with his flight details and we could forward this complaint to the CSM at SMF.

Caller was on the phone with a Supervisor that he wanted to speak with, he was in the process of filing a complaint because he was treated so poorly by the TSA officers. He provided the Event ID (b)(6) and requested that I go over

The caller flew from SMF yesterday. He stated he was running late and was only an hour early. The TSA line was long and moving slowly. He stated they only had one AIT running. By the time he got to the front of the line, he only had about 15 minutes to make it to his flight. When it was his turn to go through the AIT, the TSO he just spoke to started sending passengers from the metal detector to cut in front of him to go through the AIT. The caller was asking the officer, if he was merging the lines, why was he placing people through the line in front of him because he was running late. He stated a female TSO yelled at him and told him that if he wanted to continue, he should keep his mouth shut and keep his head down. When he entered the AIT, a TSO kept jamming the button and the machine kept going around him multiple times. He was did not understand why he was scanned so many times and thinks the TSO did not know how to work the machine. At that point another TSO had to come along and help the officer on how to operate the machine. They asked the caller what was in his pocket and he told them it was pill form medication. They asked to see his medication and he showed it to them. He also had gum in his pocket, which he states he never got back. The TSO demanded to search his wallet, he was really shocked that an officer would ask that because they never do, so the caller said he did not want the TSO to be digging through his wallet and it made the officer really mad so their solution was that they put it through the xray machine instead, but the other officer snatched the wallet out of the callers hand and the TSO kept saying everyone can see what is in his wallet regardless how it is searched. He stated a whole group of TSOs were surrounding him and it was a very embarrassing experience because they were holding up other travelers just to look at his things, they were only doing this because he had questioned them about the machine. They were making him feel like they were in charge and purposely making him feel uncomfortable. He stated they were very aggressive, mostly the female TSO. Next, they told him he must have his hands tested. While they tested his hands, he asked if he could put his shoes on and the officer was very spiteful saying there is no way he could put his shoes on until he was cleared. Another officer told this officer to call the Sheriffs office to take care of the caller. The caller was hoping they would because he was needing help, and he stated he is a police officer himself and was really being abused at this point. Caller stated that when a situation gets this way they are supposed to diffuse the situation not add more hostility to it, just smile and be friendly and usually it will end well. He stated he has never had such a bad experience before. At the very end of the screening the female officer that was so difficult from the beginning shewed him away from the screening checkpoint. He stated they had no compassion, that they all just seemed to be rude to him for no reason and he understands that he shouldn't have been late, but he was and sometimes that happens. He pays to buy this ticket and travel through the airport, but these TSA officers are being paid to do this and they need to be able to do it professionally. He also wanted to add, that he will never use this airport again and he will write a letter to the Sacramento Administration to let them know he will never use it. He believes that the airport should be held responsible as well for how TSA treats people when going through screening because it is being done in their airport.

Apologized to the caller and told him this is not the way TSOs are trained, they are supposed to be respectful and professional during the process. Told him this flight information and complaint would be sent to the CSM at that airport, we track trends of complaints to address areas of concern. So hopefully the CSM will be able to ensure this never happens again to other passengers.

Caller states that last Monday he had an experience that seemed strange. TSA made a mistake. Caller flew from LAX to MIA for a connecting flight. He went to Terminal 4 for American Airlines. They were doing additional screening of passengers and swabbed his friend s hands. His friend passed the ETD screening and they went to wait by the boarding gate. Neither one of them ever went through WTMD or AIT and their carry on luggage never went through x-ray screening. They had several carry on bags. His friend said that he did not have anything special to allow him to pass screening so quickly. Caller states that he is concerned about the lax security at the checkpoint because he realizes that is not correct. Caller will be leaving the country to Guatemala on 12 11 2014 and will return 12 182014 in case they need to contact him about the incident later. Caller states that he loves this country, he is a citizen, and takes security very seriously because he was in the military.

Advised caller:

TSA works hard to achieve consistency in the security training process. We inspect screening operations at airports and continue to monitor the number and nature of complaints we receive from the traveling public to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees are the subject of repeated complaints.

This incident will be referred to a Security Specialist.

The caller indicated that his wife has a knee replacement. He and his wife traveled from PHL to DEN and back. The both received expedited screening during their departure and return flight. At PHL, she passed through the WTMD. He stated that the TSO reprimanded her for not advising of the metal implant. She then underwent a patdown screening.

When departing from DEN, a very nice TSO asked his wife if she wanted to be screened via a patdown or AIT after his wife advised of the knee replacement. His wife opted for AIT and the TSO escorted her to an AIT machine a few lanes over. After she passed through AIT, the TSO reprimanded her having her shoes on. She received a limited patdown of her leg area.

He asked if she could not have went back through xray screening.

He asked how they received Precheck prior to completing the enrollment process.
He asked how they received Precheck prior to enrolling

I advised that passengers with metal implants should advise TSOs of the metal implants before screening begins. Regardless of whether a passenger receives expedited screening or standard screening. TSOs must resolve alarms and anomalies via additional screening.

In regard to the incident in DEN, she would not have been permitted to go back through xray. If the AIT was in a standard screening lane, passengers are to remove their shoes during standard screening.

You may still be able to experience TSA Pre?® screening on a flight by flight basis.*

1. TSA Risk Assessments uses Secure Flight Data already supplied to TSA, which allows passengers to access the TSA Pre?® screening lane on a random basis
<http://www.tsa.gov/tsa-precheck-participation-tsa-precheck%C2%AE>

Caller would like to know why every time his daughter flies she gets stopped and gets secondary screening. Caller states she s gotten stopped twice and missed her flight one of those 2 times.

I advised:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

PM

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers.

I advised caller:

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

-Secondary screening

-Delayed or denied airport boarding

Advised he could apply at trip.dhs.gov.

Disability Description: Caller has a knee replacement and her son has Downs Syndrome.

Information Request: Caller is a United retiree and she usually has to fly on standby and she can't call the 72 hours prior to the flight to setup assistance. She was wondering if she could ask for a supervisor when she gets to the checkpoint to help her get through the screening. She would probably know about 24 hours before the flight what her itinerary will be.

Response Details: Asked the caller if she felt like the incident back in April was discrimination because her son is disabled and she said yes. Asked the caller if she would like me to give her information on how to file a complaint in writing and she said she would like the information sent to her but she doesn't want to file a complaint. She would like the information in case it happens again she will know what to do.

Advised the caller we recommend that she call 72 hours prior to the flight but that we can still send it if the lead time is less. Also informed her she could ask for a PSS at the checkpoint to help her through the screening. Caller says she was given the number to the manager at the Honolulu airport to call ahead when she gets there and she wanted to know if that was the same for Las Vegas. Gave her the number to the CSM at McCarran which is Carie Muirhead at 702-577-(b)(6)

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

- Have metal implants that may alarm the walk-through metal detector;
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

4 1:10:12
PM

Passengers with metal implants may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. AIT screening requires that passengers be able to stand still with their arms over their head for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Passengers using the walk-through metal detector must be able to walk through on their own.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger must be screened using a patdown. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a walk-through metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If passengers are screened using a patdown, it is important to know the following:

- Patdowns will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.
- Passengers may ask for private screening at any time.
- Passengers should not be asked or required to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they or their traveling companions or family members:

- Have an intellectual or developmental disability;

Caller is now in Terminal 1 of FLL. She just came through the checkpoint. She had to remove her shoes. There was glass that she stepped on somewhere along the way. At the checkpoint, they sprayed her foot with alcohol and gave her a band-aid. They offered to get her an ambulance, but she declined, indicating that she did not want to miss her flight.

Was a supervisor present?

The supervisor may have been there, but the agents all came over to assist. She wasn't sure if any of them was a supervisor.

I advised caller that I would send her information up to the CSM at the airport and would send her a claim form which does address personal injury.

The glass may have been inside the AIT machine. I apologized to caller for her experience. I advised her that I would send this up for review by the CSM within the hour. I will also provide your contact information as well. I did not make any statement that indicated that she should expect to receive contact.

Caller went Saturday to New York Kennedy airport and had a flight to Israel. He wants to know if the way he was treated is normal procedure. He was asked to remove his shoes and jacket. He went through the AIT and was subject to patdown to clear anomalies. He advised he took his hand and ran it around his waistline and belt. He wants to know if this is normal procedure.

Advised.
You are required to remove your shoes and jacket for screening. If the AIT machine which is the machine you were screened by sees any anomalies on the body you will be subject to a patdown to clear the anomalies. The patdown procedure is what you experienced.
Caller flew on November 29 and her checked baggage had NOI. She had an e-cigarette in her bag and before she left made sure it was tight. When she opened her bag it had leaked all over her items. She also had asked the TSO during screening process questions as to what they were doing and why but was never answered. Example they swiped her hands and never told her why.

Advised Caller:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is required by law to screen all property, including checked baggage that is loaded onboard commercial passenger aircraft. To ensure the security of the traveling public, it is sometimes necessary for Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to conduct hand inspections of checked bags. TSOs receive training in the procedures to properly inspect passenger bags and are required to exercise great care during the screening process so that when bags are opened a passenger's belongings are returned to the same condition they were found. We regret that you were unsatisfied with the manner in which your bags were handled.

Please note that TSA assumes a very limited role with respect to checked baggage handling. We are only responsible for checked baggage from the time it is presented for screening until the time it has been cleared of screening. Once checked baggage has been screened and cleared, airlines are responsible for transporting it to its final destination. As a result, the amount of time checked baggage is under TSA control is relatively short.

Many airports have automated in-line baggage screening systems which can screen and clear a bag remotely, resulting in no physical inspection at all. However, if a TSO needs to open and search a checked bag, the TSO will place a Notice of Inspection (NOI) inside the bag to alert the passenger that his or her bag was searched by TSA. Additionally, the NOI contains instructions on what to do if the passenger has a complaint.

You may wish to file a claim for missing and/or damaged items by completing a Standard Form 95 (claim form). A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. Claim forms are also available on our Web site at www.tsa.gov. If you decide to file a claim, it will be processed in accordance with the Federal Tort Claims Act.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. TSOs must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

Caller has traveled twice and has to have additional screening. Caller wants to know why she has GE and PreCheck and has to go for this additional screening and how it can be fixed.

Response:

TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.
- Difficulty printing a boarding pass at home or at the kiosk.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

Caller stated that his wife (b)(6) was subjected to more screening than necessary at MCO today.

He explained that his wife is over 75 and the first agent told her it was ok to leave on her jacket, while the second asked her to remove it.

Next she showed her metal implant cards to the officer who sent her through the WTMD, and then when she alarmed she was asked to go through the AIT machine. After going through the AIT machine, she was wanded due to an anomaly being found between her shoulder blades.

Caller was furious that his wife had to be subjected to screening three times. He sent in a response via email some time ago, and received a response that the law upholds TSA, which made him more infuriated.

He spent several minutes yelling and telling me the same facts over and over.

He wanted someone from TSA to tell him that his wife would never be subjected to additional screening...just 1 time.

Response Details:

I did tell him that we could send his complaint to the CSM at MCO, and hopefully this type of situation would not recur.

However, I could not guarantee that his wife would never be subjected to additional screening. Especially if there is any sort of anomaly.

Details are:

Airport: MCO

Date and Time: 12.19.2014 4:15am

Flight: 2062

Airline: US Air

Agent was 5.8 around 60 years of age

The caller is calling for her husband. She stated that she is a FF with United. She stated that he is 82 years of age. She stated that she has PreCheck on the flight for Christmas and he does not. She stated that it has always worked, except for the flight for Thanksgiving. She stated that she went to the airline counter then and they were not able to do anything. She stated that they need to stay together as she is 73 and has a cane also. She stated that she thought it was based on age and medical condition.

I explained that TSA Precheck does not guarantee an individual expedited screening, even if they opt in through the airline as a FF, or include a KTN on the reservation when booking a flight, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport to retain a certain element of randomness to prevent terrorists from learning how the system operates. TSA Precheck selection has nothing to do with age or medical condition.

12/21/2014 12:47:55 PM I explained that there will be times that they do not have the benefits together. However, in 2015, travelers who are eligible to participate in TSA PreCheck as a frequent flyer with their airline will see a significant reduction in the number of times they are selected for expedited screening. This change is part of TSA's application of intelligence-driven, risk-based screening procedures and efforts to ensure that low-risk travelers continue to receive expedited screening on a consistent basis.

I explained that if an individual wants to get benefits on a consistent basis, she can apply for a Trusted Traveler program such as GE, or complete the TSA PreCheck application process.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm at the normal checkpoint. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

Caller states that she before she flew from PBI, she had opted out of the AIT on 12 16 at 5:15 am prior to JetBlue flight 762. She says she did not get the names of the 2 TSOs involved, but one had her name tag on upside down. Caller states that she has 2 hip replacements and a plate in her wrist. Caller says that the female TSO standing at the scanner called for assistance and the farther female TSO asked can she stand and caller said yes and the TSO at the scanner yelled yes. She says that then the farther TSO came over and almost knocked her over and all of her stuff ended up in floor and people were having to step over it. She states that she mentioned this but was ignored. Caller says that the worst TSO was the one by the scanner, who had long dark blond hair.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

12/22/2014 10:13:21 AM Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 prior to traveling with questions about screening policies, procedures, and what to expect at the security checkpoint. TSA Cares serves as an additional, dedicated resource specifically for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions, or other circumstances, as well as their loved ones who want to prepare for the screening process prior to flying. TSA recommends that passengers call no less than 72 hours ahead of travel in case it is determined that it is necessary to coordinate support at the airport.

Flight information:

From to: PBI to LGA

Flight date time: 12 16 5:15 am

Flight number: 762

Airline: JetBlue

Airport: PBI

Gate Terminal: C10

Email: (b)(6)

Caller wants to speak with a manager to ask if they put him a watchlist? He was at the checkpoint this morning and refused to go through the AIT or Patdown. He was not permitted to go through the WTMD at his request.

What can he do to avoid the AIT or patdown? He wants to go through the WTMD with the Hand held wands.

He wants to ask what his options are for screening. The police were called at the checkpoint.

He was at the Billings Logan, Montana airport today.

Is Ralph the person he would need to speak with about his name added to a watch list? He did not proceed through screening.

(b)(6)

Advised:

12/23/2014 7:04:57 PM I offered to provide safety and research information about the AIT. Caller declined.

Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown.

He would have to undergo the screening the TSO directs him to.

Whenever a passenger alarms the walk-through metal detector, Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to locate and resolve the source of the alarm. As you know, TSA no longer uses hand-held metal detectors to resolve walk-through metal detector alarms. Instead, a TSO will conduct a standard patdown of the passenger, which allows the TSO to screen for metallic and non-metallic prohibited items.

I told the caller I would forward this complaint to the CSM at LAX.

Incident Details: The caller stated he called the contact center on 12 12 14 to request assistance for his departing flight out of HNL and for his return flight out of LAX. The caller stated he called in 2 different occasions after 12 12 14 to confirm and verify his assistance was requested. He stated he was given confirmation both calls that his assistance was requested. The caller stated the assistance provided to him at HNL was exceptional. He stated he received a phone call in advance letting him know someone would be waiting for his family at the checkpoint upon his arrival. He stated a PSS met him at the gate. He stated he was completely satisfied with the wonderful service his family was provided at HNL.

He stated he received no phone call from LAX. He stated he received no assistance at LAX. He stated when he arrived at the first station in the airport he let the girl know that he had requested assistance. He asked if he could request a PSS since no assistance was waiting for him. He stated the girl requested a supervisor over her radio. He stated he was instructed by the girl to go up the escalator and a supervisor would meet them at the top. He stated no supervisor or no PSS ever met him or assisted him. He stated at the checkpoint he was asked if his father could get out of the wheelchair for screening. He told them no he could not. He said him and his family was instructed to go over to the area of the AIT and that his elder father would be pushed through the screening process. He stated some time later a family member realized that his father was left by himself unattended at the area the family was before being asked to proceed to the AIT area. He stated he was told an officer would assist his father through the screening but that did not happen. He stated the officer just left his elder father in the wheelchair unattended with no body there to assist him. He stated he is very un satisfied with this experience. He stated the employees lacked knowledge and seemed to not have a clue about their job. He stated he wanted to file a complaint about this issue. He did not like the way him and his family was treated that was very disrespectful and rude.

Caller flew from LAS to CA. Caller had SSSS on his boarding pass and got a secondary screening. Caller wanted to know what was wrong.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing it.

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the RCN. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry, but do not have their RCN, may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification from occurring. Caller is flying from MSY to ATL to West Palm tomorrow. Her husband has a pacemaker and cannot go through certain screenings. When they went through from West Palm, he was rushed into the AIT and she wants to know if someone did the wrong thing. She said that they were told that people who have a pacemaker can go through the AIT. She just wants to make sure that it is safe and will not harm him. She also wants to know if she will have to take her laptop from her bag when she gets to the checkpoint.

Advised caller:

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

Advised caller that she will have to take the laptop out of the carry-on bag. They may ask her to power it up as well. She should not place the laptop in checked baggage.

Caller flew from CMH and had to undergo additional screening and present his passport. Caller is having to undergo additional screening when he goes through the checkpoint quite often and wants to know why.

Response:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

Caller is currently at DTW. Caller opted out of AIT because she is a cancer survivor. Caller said she was told to wait, and she waited for 20 minutes. Caller said the supervisor name was (b)(6) and she was African American with short hair. Caller said (b)(6) told her that she didn't want to pat her down because she was going ton break. I advised:

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and identify areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Since your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

The callers mother flew from JFK to CLT on Jetblue today departing at 8 AM. She went through screening around 7 AM. She stated that she has a complaint about screening. She stated that she has locked hair and that is her natural state. She stated that she believe that this is a racial issue and that she was chosen for additional screening based on her race because nobody else during screening gets their hair patted down. She stated that it was her son, her mother, and herself. She stated that her mother was also complaining that her sons genital parts were being touched too much. She stated that she feels that this is all racial discrimination. She stated that they have no reason to touch her hair when she flies. She stated that they should be able to wear their hair anyway that they would like and not been subjected to that. She stated that there were no hairpieces or hair pins involved.

I explained that if she goes through the screening process and her hair anomolies the AIT or we can not clearly see the hair, a patdown would be required to clear the alarm. Even, hairpins and hair pieces can alarm the screenig process, which would result, the passenger's head area must be searched with a limited patdown.

For a civil rights complaint to be official the following has to be completed in writing:

- Be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination;
- Be in writing;
- Include the name and address of the complainant;
- Include the date of the alleged act of discrimination;
- Describe the alleged discriminatory action in sufficient detail to inform TSA of the nature of the alleged act of discrimination; and
- Be signed by the complainant or someone authorized to sign on behalf of the complainant.

TSA accepts e-mails as being signed or she can mail it in. We will email her the information for filing the complaint also.

Disability Description: Caller doesnt need assistance, she says the PSS and supervisors forget about making the request. She says she fell. The supervisor came out and she told him she has a movement disorder, she startles and jerks then falls to the ground. She says they like her to go through the AIT for her screening but she says the movement of the AIT can startler her and make her fall. She has requested assistance for her travel and on 3 different times she has traveled, through Midway, Jacksonville and Reagan she has fallen, the last time was at Midway on Dec 28th. She requested assistance for her flights, she says at Midway the supervisor came to her for screening, the supervisor told the agent that they should not press the button for the AIT until they were told too, yet they did anyway, then the supervisor said to them I told you to wait . She fell because the movement of the AIT startled her and she has now fractured her tail bone.

Response Details: Response Details:

I spoke to floor support, (b)(6) and then spoke back to the caller. I told her to she may need to opt out and ask for a patdown so she would not be startled by the movement of the AIT. She stated this too can startle her if they hit a point in her back. I said to her she can be face to face with the agent and give them the instructions on her needs as well as request the assistance so we can help her as well. She felt they did not want her to ask for patdown. I told her it was her choice and she can ask for a patdown anytime for her screening. I was so sorry they couldnt coordinate this for her.

I explained to her to make this a formal complaint she would need to put the complaint in writing and we have contact information to send it but she did not want it, she said she knew about it already and knew where to send it if she decided to send it.

She can file a claim.

12/31/2014 3:48:00 PM She could get a claim form from tsa.gov and download one for herself. I could mail, fax or email a claim form to them as well. She wanted one mailed to her.

If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

I was so sorry this was happening to her.

I am forwarding her complaint to the CSM as well

She has requested assistance for her travel and on 3 different times she has traveled, through Midway, Jacksonville and Reagan she has fallen, the last time was at Midway on Dec 28th. She requested assistance for her flights, she says at Midway the supervisor came to her for screening, the supervisor told the agent that they should not press the button for the AIT until they were told too, yet they did anyway, then the supervisor said to them I told you to wait . She fell because the movement of the AIT startled her and she has now fractured her tail bone.

Caller is upset because she bought a TSA approved lock and when she arrived at her destination the lock was missing. She flew from McGhee Tyson Airport and when she came back from her trip on December 31st she went to talk to TSA about her missing lock. It was around 11:15 am and 4 TSA agents were standing there and one agent gave her a card and said call this number and they will send you a new lock. She is upset because of the way she was spoken to. She is 75 years old and felt she was being spoken to very dismissive. She bought a TSA lock so it would be easier but since her lock was missing all her items were left for someone to take. There was not a NOI in her bag but caller stated that at McGhee Tyson they open checked baggage there at the check point and normally she watches but this time she did not because she had the approved TSA Lock

Advised Caller:

Please be advised that TSA is not liable for any damage to locks or bags that are required to be opened by force for security purposes.

In cooperation with private industry, TSA implemented a system under which TSOs are able to identify, unlock, and then relock certain locks using passkey sets available to TSA screeners. TSA-recognized locks can be opened and relocked by TSOs without force and with little delay. TSA cannot guarantee that such locks will never be damaged or lost while TSOs and airline employees handle checked baggage. Additionally, TSA has found that many locks break off in airport baggage conveyor systems, which may also cause damage to checked baggage.

while enhancing technology and improving the passenger experience at security checkpoints. As part of this effort, TSA has implemented a program to revise screening procedures for passengers who appear to be age 75 and older.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—though not completely eliminate—the need for a physical patdown on travelers 75 and older that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms. It's important to remember, that any individual may be required to remove their shoes or undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means.

Caller did not want to file a claim for the missing lock she just wanted to let TSA know she did not like the way she was spoken to.

Caller went to express her concerns to a supervisor at DEN due to a negative experience. She was told to call us. She has had similar issues multiple times. She traveled on December 27th with United on flight 6224. She is a Precheck member and went through the Precheck line. She has 2 hip replacements. Since she asked to go through the AIT she was directed to a different lane. She asked if she would have to take off shoes and remove her 3-1-1 bag and she was told No by 2 TSOs. A TSO at the checkpoint she was directed to told her that she needed to. She was holding up the line due to her ability to remove her shoes. The TSO was disrespectful in her opinion. She stated that the TSOs need to be trained to have respect.

Response:

Advised caller that TSOs are trained to show respect and dignity to travelers.

Since your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

Advised caller that she can ask for a PSS before screening begins to get assistance at the checkpoint.

She can also set up assistance by calling TSA Cares 855-787-2227

Passengers who have a disability that does not allow them to easily remove their shoes don't have to even if they are not selected for Precheck. They just need to notify the TSOs about their complication.

Brief Description of Inquiry:

Complaint about TSA screener

Comments:

I was preparing to board American Airlines flight 2563 at DFW this morning (somewhere around 6:30 to 7:00 a.m., though I didn't note the exact time). As I prepared to leave the AIT screening device to move forward toward my gate, TSA Agent (b)(6)

I'd like to give a mild complaint about an incident at Tampa Airport security screening this morning, between 5:10 and 5:45 am. My daughters (ages 16 and 18) and I were catching united flight 1507 to Newark leaving at 5:57 am on January 3, 2014.

I asked the screening agents to allow my daughters to skip going through the AIT machine. The agents set my daughters aside for a pat down while I went through the AIT and waited for them on the other side. It was very busy, so I knew it would take extra time. But after 20 minutes, I started to suspect that the agents were actually extremely annoyed and were trying to teach me a lesson—show me that I'm an idiot, and that they have the power to make us miss our plane (though we arrived nearly an hour ahead of take-off). After my first daughter finally got a pat down, and I saw the hostility directed toward us, I gave up on the second daughter and sent her through the AIT machine. I had no choice really, as our plane was so close to take off.

After we ran for our plane, my daughters told me they were very upset. They said that when they were waiting, the agents were radioing loudly and complaining about "the mother" insisting on a pat down, and basically making a scene to embarrass them. They felt so humiliated. Honestly, I really thought it was our option, so I had been very polite and patient about it.

I do not blame the agents, but you do have the system set up so that it is impossible for a passenger to decline the AIT. I think you need to be honest about that. The security agents are human and "special orders" are going to annoy them when they are busy. Some agents will lose their professionalism and engage in petty power struggles, which they will obviously win at 5 minutes to take off.

Your web site says the following:

Q. Can I choose the way I would like to be screened?

A. Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Signs are posted in front of each AIT location advising passengers of this right.

But please, be honest! Given my experience I would add a few lines to this:

Caller travelled Last Friday from the Dominican Republic. She had travelled there on Dec 21, and on both legs she had 4s on her boarding passes. She was subjected to additional security. Her call was to express concern, and see if she should expect this on future flights

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

Since this is the first round trip with this additional screening, this would be in line with a random selection process. If this happens again on a future flight, then please call us back for additional service.

Caller states that when she became disabled she got PreCheck. She has been getting Precheck for a couple of years. She was not chosen for PreCheck for her upcoming flight. Caller would like to know why. Caller has a broken arm and will not be able to remove her shoes or lift her arm. Caller states that she has a replaced hip so she usually goes through AIT, but will not be able to do that this time. Caller is upset that she won't get PreCheck.

Advised caller:

TSA has begun to identify passengers who may be eligible for expedited screening through a risk-based analysis of passenger data using the same Secure Flight data that passengers have provided for years. TSA's new initiative will use this same information to also identify low-risk passengers to determine if they should be directed to the TSA Precheck lane for expedited screening. These passengers should not expect to be directed to the TSA Precheck lane each time they fly.

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

PM

- Cannot remove their shoes;
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

Passengers are not required to remove their shoes if they cannot remove them because of medical complications, discomfort, pain, balancing problems, or because the shoe is part of a prosthetic. However, passengers' shoes must undergo additional screening, which may require that passengers lift the bottom hem of their pants. Passengers can request to be seated during this portion of the screening. TSA also may use technology to test shoes for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, passengers will have to undergo additional screening.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger must be screened using a patdown. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT.

If passengers are screened using a patdown, it is important to know the following:

- Patdowns will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.
- Passengers may ask for private screening at any time.
- A private screening will be offered if the patdown involves sensitive areas.

The caller flew from EWR to PBI on 12-30. She asked what the rights are for the patdown. She stated that her 83 year old husband had to remove his shoes, belt, and undergo a patdown. She thought that it was very uncomfortable for him. She stated that she thought all of that stopped once a passenger turns 80. She stated that this has never happened before, and the persons in front of him got to go on through. She stated that the luggage did not alarm and it was fine. She explained that there was an officer available and they did the patdown.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile. There is no way for a passenger to completely avoid a patdown for screening.

If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked or required to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

Caller is wanting to address his concerns with the TSA PreCheck lane at LAX united complex departure level terminal 8. Caller stated that they do not have a AIT machine there. When you go through the WTMD and it alarms they were sending passengers back and making them remove their shoes, belt, 3-1-1 bags, and laptops and going through the WTMD again. Caller stated that it causing the wait time for other passengers to go up and was defeating the purpose of PreCheck. Caller did not want to provide any further information or contact method he just wants his complaint to be given to management at LAX.

Advised caller:

Since your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

Caller flew on Oct 25 from LAS to LAX. She was in the precheck line, and she has a knee replacement. Her arm was caught in the conveyor belt. When she got to the AIT she noticed she was bleeding. When she got through AIT, she asked for a band-aid, and the TSO told her they had no band-aids. He did not follow any protocol that the airport has in place. A passenger gave her a wipe and a small band aid. She was a checkpoint B. Flight departed at 10:30 AM, she arrived around 8 or 8:15AM.

Advised,

I advised I would forward her complaint to LAS.

Caller stated that she and her husband are flying from LAS to HNL and he got PreCheck but she did not. They have never applied for GE or TPAP; nor are they frequent flyers. She is currently 74 and wonders if she will have to do the normally screening forever.

Advised caller:

It is important to remember that TSA Pre^u2713™ does not guarantee an individual expedited screening. TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport.

Currently TSA is randomly selected passengers for PreCheck based on their secure flight data. The secure flight data is submitted to TSA from the airlines; then TSA identifies passengers as low-risk.

PM

While TSA's initiatives provide some travelers with expedited screening, passengers should not expect to receive this form of screening every time they fly. Individuals who would like to receive expedited screening on a more frequent basis should consider applying to a U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) trusted traveler program, such as the TSA Pre^u2713™ application program or Global Entry. If you are interested in TPAP or GE, you would have to have an interview, background check and fingerprints. The filing fee for TPAP is 85.00, while the GE is 100.00. With GE the reason the filing fee is more is because when you arrive in the US from travels abroad, you will be able to go through Customs faster.

You can apply on the web either at tsa.gov or globalentry.gov.

For those who appear to be over 75

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

Caller went through Security in Phoenix Airport it was a complete zoo. She was 2 and a half hours early for her flight, and with all of the confusion she left her bangles from India in the tray that was left to go through after her. She travels alot and she knows TSA gets alot of complaints. Every single time she goes through in checked luggage, it is ramsacked. She has friends that travel and never get theirs inspected. She doesnt bother to lock her suitcase that always get cut off. She just was really upset about the way that TSA works sometimes, some of the people there are okay. TSA has no since of compassion for travelers, she had a bottle of vodka once and all she wanted was the bottle she did not care about the actual vodka, she just wanted the bottle. But they made her throw the entire thing away She has had breast cancer and used to request a patdown but she doesnt anymore, she is wondering how the TSOs screen people without a licensing to do. She thinks that all airports should have a lane set aside for first time fliers and passengers with families because Sky Harbor was a complete mess because of a family with small children that had not gone through screening before.

Explained to the caller that we do not actually send passengers through an Xray machine. Explained that we have the WTMD which is just a large walk through metal detector. We have the AIT which does not penetrate the body, it just looks for anomalies on the outside of the body. The only things that actually go through an xray machine are passengers belongings, that would probably be why TSOs do not have to have a license to do the screening and have passengers around the xray. As far as radiation, we have information about the AIT that 2 minutes on board an aircraft exposes passengers to more radiation than going through the AIT.

Caller is questioning why she was flagged on a trip to the Dominican Republic and back. Caller stated that she was patted down and her hands were swabbed. Caller stated that she has a KTN and received TSA PreCheck for the departure and still encountered this. Caller stated that in the Dominican Republic she was only switching planes and never left the airport there and went through their additional screening. I advised the caller stated that when returning going through Dulles she was patted down and went through additional screening. Caller asked why she should have TSA PreCheck if it does not help her. Caller asked if she was flagged for it.

Resolution:

For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

I advised the caller that I can't speak for the security screening she endured internationally, but only for TSA.

I advised the caller that it may just be the random selection and she may not encounter this again as it was only for this one trip. I advised the caller that with TSA PreCheck she will still receive the expedited screening, but TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures.

I advised the caller that I would not be able to confirm or deny if she is on a watch list. I advised the caller that I could give her information about what she could possibly do if she believes she is on a watch list, or if the additional screening is an ongoing issue. I advised the caller that with the one trip it may be random selection for additional screening and she may not encounter it again.

REASON for the call: She wants to make a complaint.

Caller has been going to Orlando airport and is strip patted every time. She flies a lot and even to Mexico and this does not happen anywhere but at this airport. She said this last time she took off all her jewelry and put it in her purse. She was still pulled aside after AIT screening and patted down. She said it was a man who patted her down and fingerprinted her.

She is flying Southwest from Orlando International. She is nervous that it will happen again.

Airport: Orlando International

Description of caller. She was wearing jeans and had taken off her shoes so she had on black socks. She had a hot pink three quarter length sleeves.

Resolution: I apologized to the caller and told her that the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to those who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

In addition, passengers may request a private screening if additional screening is required or at any time during the screening process. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. I told her that patdowns are conducted by same gender officers. TSA does not fingerprint people but we do use technology to test for traces of explosive materials. You may always ask for a supervisor at any time.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

Hi,

1/12/2015 6:06:28 PM
My family of four plus our friends (family of four as well) flew with Spirit Airlines on Tues Dec 30th at 9:43 am from DTW Airport to Fort Myers. Checking our luggage we had no problems. everyone was pleasant. Since my daughter is 11 years old we went into the designated area to show our passports. While waiting in line one of the female TSA officers, swabbed my hands with paper. She did not say what she was doing or why? Our friends went to the counter to show their passports. My daughter and I went to the counter and were yelled at by the lady "one at a time". I went to the counter with my daughter because she didn't know what to do. After that, we went to the screening area, there was a male TSA officer yelling at all of us and giving orders. I have a question and here is where I am making a complaint. My 15 year old son (b)(6) was ahead of me and there was a lady ahead of him, she went through the walk-through metal detector and set it off, she was yelled at by the officer to stand next to the AIT machine. My son went next through the walk-through detector and set the alarm off and to was yelled at by the officer to stand beside the AIT machine. Then I went and the alarm went off, I too was yelled at to stand beside the machine. How come my son was not told to go through the the walk - through metal detector again? The officer had the lady that was ahead of (b)(6) go through the AIT machine and then (b)(6) had to go through it. I heard the TSA officer ask my son 3 times how old he was and he said 15 years old. I thought we have the right to say no to the AIT machine? The officer never gave my son the chance to say no to the AIT. After the AIT my son, then was patted down and he was looking at me, wondering WHAT was going on and he was almost going to cry. He was upset and so was I!! My son set the alarm off once and so did I. How come I never had to go through the AIT or was patted down? I went through the walk-through detector and was fine. My son wasn't mean or not listening, he was quiet and doing as he was told. Is it normal TSA procedure to not explain what is going on and to be yelling at people? If it was a random procedure of screening, why do all three screenings and why a child? My son is a child, he is 15, not 18 and an adult. Our family does not travel very often and this was a very, very upsetting experience, we have never experienced TSA officers treating people poorly before. Coming back from Florida Fort Myers Airport, the Female TSA officer explained when she used the wand to check for chemicals on the hands. The male TSA officer at the counter checking passports was very nice and pleasant, same with at the metal detector and all of us went through and no alarms went off. There wasn't any yelling and ordering us around. They were very kind. The DTW Airport was a bit busy, maybe the officers were stressed out, but that is no reason to treat us terribly. I see on the TSA website that security officers will approach children gently and treat them with respect, we didn't find that at DTW Airport. I realize that with everything that's going on in the world, that TSA is trying to protect us, but, treating people with respect and not like animals should be a big priority. Hopefully, someone can answer my questions and see that the complaint gets read.

Caller feels like she has been harassed at the airport today by TSO (b)(6). Caller stated that she opted out of the AIT as she always does. They advised her to stand on a mat at the checkpoint and the location of the mat prevented her from maintaining line of sight with her belongings. She took two steps off of the mat so she could see her belongings and the officer at the checkpoint threatened to contact law enforcement and have her arrested for doing so. He also threatened to manhandle her if she did not listen to his commands. Caller is very upset and wanting to know what can be done about this. Caller stated that she was not given the option of going through the WTMD which she feels like it a violation of TSA protocol. Caller stated that she has problems every time she flies from RDU and is wanting to know if there is anything that she can do to prevent this from happening as she does not want to pay $85 for TSA PreCheck.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. TSA regrets any unprofessional treatment you experienced. Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded this to the appropriate Customer Service Manager. I am not sure where you go the information that you can go through the WTMD if you opt out of the AIT but that is not the policy. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Please note, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector instead of an AIT or a patdown. Even if you apply for TSA PreCheck that is not going to exempt you from screening if you opt out of the AIT with TSA PreCheck you will still have to have a patdown. Please be advised that a passenger may always request to speak with the Supervisory TSO at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures. There is really nothing else you can do to prevent this from happening. I will include the information that you always have this problem at RDU. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and identify areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification.

Special Notes:

To whom it may concern:

For your review and action as deemed appropriate (b)(6) applied to the Redress program on 12/19/2014. The traveler's concerns are outside the scope of this program. Please refer to the traveler's comments listed below. The traveler's redress case has been administratively closed.

9:38:25 AM The area leading up to the security checkpoint is regulated by the airport and the airlines assigned to that particular terminal. We recommend arriving at least 2 hours in advance of flight time to allow ample time for security screening and boarding of aircraft.

The caller states that she does not need to arrive 2 hours in advance of her flight she states that TSA needs to open more lanes. Caller works at ATL and is needing to know why the process for employees have changed from being able to go through the WTMD to the AIT screening.

1:39:27 PM Airport Federal Security Directors (FSDs) have discretion to exempt TSA airport employees from the requirement to undergo standard screening. However, if an FSD exempts TSA airport employees from screening, the FSD can implement random screening of those same employees at the screening checkpoint. I advised him that I do not have information as to why the screening process has changed for airport employees at ATL so I am advising him to contact the CSM at ATL for additional assistance with this question.

CSMs can be contacted by calling (866) 289-9673 and choosing option 5 from the self-service menu. By entering the three-letter airport code of your departing airport, you will be provided a phone number to reach the CSM at that airport.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the walk-through metal detector or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint.

You may wish to file a claim for missing and or damaged items by completing a Standard Form 95 (claim form). A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. Since the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that location.

Caller has issues when traveling to and from the US. Caller is seeing SSSS on her boarding pass and is having to undergo additional screening when she goes through the checkpoint. Caller normally uses United Airlines and will be flying from HNL to the UK tomorrow.

Response:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation. The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing it to the following address:

DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP)

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the RCN. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry, but do not have their RCN, may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

Caller stated he has a complaint about the rules and regulations at the San Jose airport. The caller stated he was PreChecked the other day and informed the TSO that he had two metal knees and metal in his shoulder and wanted to go through the AIT machine instead of the walk through metal detector. The caller stated he was denied because he luggage has already been screened and the lane he was in did not have an AIT machine. The caller would like to know why he was just not allowed to go to the other line to go through the AIT machine instead of going through the walk through metal detector then having a pat down.

REASON for the call: Caller went through the San Jose airport the other day and had PreCheck but was not allowed to go through the AIT machine because they did not have it on the lane he went through. The caller stated he has metal in his shoulder and two metal knees and had to go through the walk through metal detector and then had to have a pat down.

Caller went through the AIT screening at Austin TX. He put his bags on the conveyor belt and he had two laptops and a speaker in his bags. After he went through the AIT the TSO said they had to inspect his bags and would not let the traveler walk over to where his bags were being screened. He forgot he had lotion in the bags which were over the 3.4 oz limit and was offered to put in checked baggage but then was told it was too late to put in checked baggage. They screened his laptops and speakers and he did not know they had taken them out of his bags because when he fly out of Indianapolis they did not ask him to remove his laptops for screening or take his shoes off there. He was not aware that was the rule so when he was screened in Austin he did not take his laptops out. When he was told he was cleared to go he grabbed his bags. It was not until he was on the plane that he realize his laptops and speaker were not in his bag. He ran to the screening check point and got the items but it caused him to miss his flight. He was scheduled to perform at a church and is now not going to be paid. Very upset that the TSO did not put his laptops and speaker back in his bags since they took them out or at least tell him they had taken them out. He also wants to know if Austin Airport has the option to mail items that need to be left at the check point. Caller asked for the phone number of TSA officials.

Special Notes: He went through the checkpoint at 8:45 p.m. The TSO had white hair, he was the oldest one there, around his 60s, bald on the top of his head, he had a white beard and he was American (later specified that he meant caucasian). He had an attitude and was pushing him around (not literally) but did consider the attitude abusive. He states he has never been treated that way. He was told to not take off his shoes, belt and jacket. He was told to go through the AIT twice because anomalies were detected all over his body. He states he was exposed to too much radiation and that upset him. He received a patdown due to that which he does not have a problem with. He feels he was forced to be screened that way.

REASON for the call: Caller told the screener in ATL she didn't want to go through the AIT. When she flies out of MSP you go through and gather your things and they do the patdown on the other side. In Atlanta they would not do that. She had to wait somewhere else with her belongings unattended. She asked them if she could get her things and they told her no. She told them if her belongings are gone that they were responsible for them. They suddenly became rude to her and told her not to talk back to her. She was coming in from Mexico City through ATL and back to MSP and no one was keeping an eye on her things. One TSO was a man about 6'4", 300 pounds and the other a woman 5'1", 150 pounds with glasses and short, cropped, black hair with gray. The woman was the one who told her not to talk back. What they did was a very punitive thing to tell her to go stand over there and not to talk to her. She finally had to go through the AIT because she was waiting so long and she is reporting this because they are probably doing it to other people.

Caller just experienced a rude screener at the Denver Airport. The caller opted out of the AIT due to the fear that it puts out unsafe levels of radiation. The TSO then asked if she was pregnant and asked if that was why she did not want to be screened via AIT. The TSO proceeded to tell the caller that if she had a cell phone it probably put out more radiation than the AIT. The caller felt that the TSO was extremely rude and her comments were unwarranted. Special Notes:

Caller flew Sunday from JFK and on Wednesday from RSW and in both cases she went through the AIT and was waived out of it someone patted her hair.

She said she filed a complaint in mid summer 2014 and TSA investigated and sent her some information that the agent was in the wrong and they are reviewing policy but that is all it said. She stated she is 36 and she feels she is being racial profiled by the extra screening of her hair and she wants to file another discrimination complaint as well.

Caller wants a packet so she can file a complaint again for racial profiling and she wants to file a screening complaint on both airports and the hair screening rule itself.

COMPLAINT # 1:

At JFK someone patted her hair with no warning after waiving her out of the AIT.

DETAILS:

01-25-15 JFK at 10:45 top 10:50 AM at JetBlue Terminal 5 (Flight 1129)

She exited the AIT and the TSO waived her thorough and then she without warning patted down her hair.

She was a tall african american with cinnamon colored complexion and her long dark brown hair with orange roots was pulled pulled back in a pony tail

1/30/2015 She was at the AIT to the immediate right of the Supervisors desk and she spoke to the Mgr. (b)(6)

12:15:30 Caller stated she wants to file a complaint because it was like being attacked by a stranger on the street to have someone pat her hair without warning.

COMPLAINT #2:

At RSW the agent did warn her that she needed to pat her hair down and initially she declined it and they refused to let her fly unless she allowed the patdown of her hair. She did have some bobby pins but could not remove them without messing up her hair but it was clear to see what the issue was. They called a supervisor and she just rolled her eyes around at her and they called a Manager who said they get into trouble if they do not do their jobs and the AIT showed as an anomaly. It was 5:30 AM and she ended up in tears before it was over.

DETAILS:

1-28-15 she flew from RSW on a 6 am flight from Terminal (did not know) on Jet Blue Flight 130 She was at the checkpoint around 5:10 AM to 5:20 AM.

Her complaint is that the Supervisor who came over to her was not empathetic to her situation at all. (Note: Initially she said the TSO rolled her eyes at her but when I repeated it back she would not agree to what she had said and changed to saying she was just not empathetic and was not a good representative to TSA).

The TSO was a white older lady with dark brown hair with a reddish hue.

Caller and his wife have KTNs and she has a hip replacement. She tried to present her card about her implants. They do not even look at the card. This has become a harder situation for them because they always move her over to another line where there is an AIT. Sometimes they take her to the front and sometimes she has to wait in line and it defeats the purpose of paying a fee and getting a KTN. He has no issues when he travels by himself.

2/10/2015 Callers wife got on the phone. She does not mind the AIT or the wand but does not like to have peoples hands on her.

1:59:00 He asked if they should acknowledge the card. They have flown from FLL. He asked if the AIT is at FLL but his wife said the AIT is there but not at the precheck checkpoint.

PM

He asked if AIT is similar to MRI. He tries to get as little radiation as possible and will sometimes ask for a patdown.

I recently was on another trip to Denver and experienced a problem I wanted to make you aware of. I travel to that airport frequently but I was so surprised to find both my husband and I were both TSA approved for the first time. I have had a knee replacement and after putting all the items on the belt and getting in line I found there was no AIT machine for precheck. All of the other lines had one. I assumed the pre-approval was a reward for being a frequent flyer but here I found it was a punishment. I had to leave my husband (he then had the responsibility of all of our belongings) and go down to another lane to go thru the AIT machine. Otherwise I would have had to wait for an attendant and then go thru the "pat down" (which is not a quick procedure, and not pleasant to say the least).

4:10:49 I always look to see if there is a machine before I get in line and never imagined there would not be one in a pre approval line. I am hoping this makes you aware of the problem and are able to correct it. With the amount of flyers now I would think the money would be available.

PM

Thank you,

REASON for the call: Caller would like to know who to speak with about making a formal complaint on TSA at New Orleans. Her mother rolled her ankle at the airport and had crutches, going through Security. The officers were not very helpful. She was taken out of a wheelchair and put in the AIT machine then given a cane after having her crutches taken away. Her mother is a senior citizen. The treatment was very humiliating and the passenger was treated as she was stupid. When did this happen? 02 14 2015

Where did this happen? FLORIDA - TPA - Tampa International

What happened?

It is my right to opt out of the millimeter wave imaging based screening and since I am pregnant I have been exercising that right. Generally, I am met with rude attitudes and have to wait sometimes up to 20 minutes for a female officer to perform the pat down. I have most recently been made to miss my flight at the C gate for Southwest Airlines flight 4070 at Tampa international airport because of there not being a female officer available... This is especially unacceptable since I was informed of this unavailability by a female officer. I asked if it was possible for her to switch with Another officer and she Disability Description: The caller has a pelvic disorder that causes pain and mobility impairment. She cannot remove her shoes without assistance, but has to travel to Los Angeles often for medical procedures.

Information Request: The caller requested a PSS for upcoming travel, so that the incident would not occur again. Also, she wanted to ensure that she did not have to remove her shoes due to the medical condition.

Return Flights for March 18, 2015: LAX to DFW to RSW

Incident Details: The caller and her son flew from LAX, but was forced to be separated during the screening. The TSO, an African American male, was informed by (b)(6) of her disability prior to the screening. He allowed her to be screened by the AIT with her shoes on, but indicated that additional screening was required. He asked a female TSO to conduct the patdown, but she refused. Then, he was required to ask a second female TSO to conduct the additional screening. She agreed, but told (b)(6) that her shoes had to be removed. (b)(6) informed her of the inability to remove her shoes without assistance, and then offered medical documentation from the Social Security Administration. The TSO refused to read the paperwork, and told (b)(6) that the documentation would have to clearly state that she could not remove her shoes. Again, (b)(6) was asked to sit in a chair, and complete the screening. However, she asked the TSO if her son, who was standing near the checkpoint, could assist. The TSO refused, and said that she could remove her shoes, as she had to have put them on herself that morning. (b)(6) explained, again, that her son had been responsible for putting the shoes on her feet. Finally, they allowed her son to come back into the checkpoint, and assist her in removing her shoes. She feels that she was discriminated against, as the TSOs neither acknowledged her disability nor her request for assistance.

REASON for the call: Caller is trying to get a refund for a missed flight back on 23 February 2013. The TSO manager was being really rude to her because she chose to opt out of the body scanner. He picked on her and demanded her driver's license in addition to her passport and was yelling at her and told her he was making a record of this. The TSO took copies of her information and made copies of her passport. The TSO was a bad manager on a power trip and he had a smirk on his face and wanted make an example of her. The caller thinks his last name was (b)(6) and he was a light skinned Hispanic with dark brown or dark black hair. The caller asked to see the regulations that said she could not opt out of the AIT and the TSO told her she had to go onto the internet and print off something about the rules and regulations. She wanted to go through the WTMD and they wouldn't let her. The caller missed her flight because of all of this. The caller went and spoke with a police officer and they told her they couldn't get involved with TSA. She wants to talk about compensation for the missed flight. She also wants to know if she is on a no fly list.

2/22/2015 11:10:01 AM Caller is a current government employee who is also a disabled veteran with an artificial hip. She wants to know why they took out the AIT machine at RIC? She is a disabled veteran with a metal hip implant so each time she goes through the WTMD it sets it off and she has to have a full patdown. They also made remove her shoes which is very difficult for her. Caller was upset because she was separated from a government issued laptop for a short time during the process and it is not supposed to be out of her view. She said the regular screening line is too long and she does not want to have to go through it just so she can be screened via the AIT. The incidents occurred on 02/08/2015 and 02/22/2015

She requested the phone number for the CSM at RIC so she could personally ask her why the AIT was removed.

Hello,

I am a member of the Global Entry Program and still DID NOT get the TSA Pre check printed on my boarding pass in December 2014? Why did this happen? I paid the $100 and went through all the clearances? Your website states under frequently asked questions that I should receive it? Your answers did NOT answer my question.

Thank you for contacting the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) Contact Center regarding TSA Pre?®.

TSA continues to focus its resources and to improve passenger experience at the security checkpoint by expanding its use of technology and applying new intelligence-driven, risk-based screening procedures. The use of risk-based initiatives allows TSA to maintain its high-security standards and allow more travelers to experience the benefit of expedited screening.

The most familiar of TSA's risk-based initiatives, TSA Pre?®, allows TSA to identify low-risk passengers for expedited screening. Travelers who are directed to the TSA Pre?® lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gels bag in their carry-on luggage.

In addition to TSA Pre?®, TSA has implemented various risk-based measures at all of our Nation's airports, even at those that do not have a dedicated TSA Pre?®. For example, some individuals may receive instructions from a Transportation Security

In no way does this address my original complaint of discrimination. Your response is also incorrect since families traveling with children never go through enhanced screen, and children and older adults leave their shoes on. Clearly you do not screen all equally.

But more specifically, it does not address how your algorithm for the millimeter detector was not trained on a sufficient number of body types leaving some of us more likely to be patted down than others. At this point (5+ years after it being introduced), this is unacceptable. If you have not plans to address it, those of us who are targeted for pat downs EVERY TIME we have to go through that scanner, which clearly fails to work properly, should be given another alternative. Therefore, please address my original complaint that your screening is discriminatory. Either we should be given the option of a metal detector OR we should be given the option of free TSA Pre-check (or whatever it is called), until you have addressed the problem.

Thank you for your e-mail in which you inquire about the reasons for secondary screening.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

Thank you for your scripted response to my e-mail below. I was hoping someone would have actually read my complaint and have enough courage to check into the incident. I would like you to understand this is exact reason I could not speak out at the time these made up rules & policy creation took place, as I would have not been allow to proceed. The stunned look on my face alone, if you took the time to review the video would tell you something is vastly wrong. Your statements below are in direct conflict with my inquiry, yet I am to accept your answer and forget it ever happen? I do not accept your answer and have no doubt that the majority of tax paying US Citizens would agree with me. Your own statement taken from you reply "For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the walk-through metal detector or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property may also be performed." are exactly why I questioned the behavior. I went through the AIT screening and was given the OK to proceed (there was no alarm), picked up my property and put it all back on or in my possession, my bag was pulled out for secondary screening (I fully understand why), I question how you improved the security of the passengers by checking my body as a result of my bag found to have 5 pounds of lunch meat. The same lunch meat I told the only screener who followed policy, that the meat was the item picked up during the initial screening. Then I was told to take my property back off and out of my pockets for additional screening. Additional screening methods performed on people who fail all other respectful means of screening, which I clearly did not. I have been pulled to the side for additional screening when something shows up on the AIT and I understand that completely, but that is not what happened here. I have also never been searched in such a manor when I have been sent to secondary screening. I am not asking you to validate that I am right, I know I am but what I am telling you is people who fly regularly as I do are going to have a problem at this airport & with these agents. We know we actually do have rights. At best there is a total lack of training or at worse a total disregard for your policies and procedures. I would sincerely appreciate someone checking into this matter in an actual investigative manner because this incident could have been avoided by your employees following your policies.

Incident Details: Caller is wanting to file a complaint about the way she was treated at the screening checkpoint at HNL on Feb 15th. She went through the screening checkpoint at 12:30 pm for a 2:00pm flight. The officers were trying to get her to go through the AIT screener but she was in a wheelchair and was not able to stand and walk due to just having knee surgery. The agents were very rude trying to get her to bend her knee but she was not able to. She was crying and trying to tell the agents that she was in pain and could not stand or walk due to just having knee surgery and they were telling her to shut up or they would ee her out of the airport. She stated that the only screening that she went through was an ETD swabbing of her hands. she did not go through the screening technology or a patdown screening.

She stated that she feels discriminated against due to her condition and also feels that she received poor customer service.

Caller said she did TSA precheck and that she is at the Long Beach Airport and she has boots on and when she went through the wtmtd it alarmed and she got the full patdown in front of everyone because she set the alarm off and she said she is frustrated. She asked why didn't she get the option of going through the ait machine instead of the patdown. She said she is still at the airport and that she is going to Phoenix and that she does not have the name of the TSA agent. She asked does she have to remove her shoes at the checkpoint. She said the Officer asked if she wanted a private screening and told her that she could have gone through the ait machine but she was already over there for the patdown. She said she is trying to understand the precheck process.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: I advised her that I will refer this to the CSM at the airport.

Caller flew last year 2 times and both times after the AIT she got additional screening; the first time they search her hair and the second time they searched her breasts. Also, she got specifically and solely asked to show an ID before even getting to the ID check counter. She felt uncomfortable and felt racially profiled. Transferred to MB.

(b)(6) Notes:

Caller feels she was racially profiled on a November 10th, 2014 flight from LAX aboard Virgin American #878 which departed at 12:00PM.

REASON for the call: Caller's wife and daughter flew from Seattle last Friday morning to Baltimore on Alaska Airlines. She has TSA precheck and she is 68 years old and in a wheelchair with medical conditions and she was treated very rudely. TSA couldn't do the prescreen because they didn't have a precheck lane open and put her in the regular line and she had to wait. They made her stand up in the wheelchair and go through the AIT. His wife told them she was able to stand and walk but she probably should have said no. She is not that steady on her feet. His wife went through the AIT and they said she had something on her hands. The TSO did something with her hands and pulled her into a room. The TSO kept questioning her about her hands and said she put something on her hands and she kept telling them she did have anything on her hands. The TSOs weren't very pleasant and it was bad customer service. His wife has peripheral neuropathy on her hands due to damage from cancer. The TSOs were making fun of her because she had a bag with excrement in it and they were rude to her. They hadn't been trained very well and they did not approach her properly and did not know what an ileostomy was. The gals doing the body check weren't very accommodating. The TSOs treated her pretty rudely. They didn't even tell her daughter where her mother was and the wheelchair attendant told her they took her into some room. His wife is 5'8", 210 pounds, blond and 68 years old.

Incident Details: Callers mother (b)(6) flew today she went through the checkpoint, Terminal B at EWR around 10:10 pm on 3/09/2015. She was in a wheelchair provided by the airline, she has a pacemaker and had documentation showing that. She said that her mother can not stand for long periods of time and has difficulty walking, she informed the officer of this information and requested to be screened using a patdown. The TSO forced her to stand up and go through the AIT and she almost fell. After being screened by the AIT they did a full patdown as well. She said that she is concerned about her mother's health because the physicians informed her not to go through any type of xrays.

Caller is wanting to know what can be done about the terrible experience her mother had yesterday when going through the checkpoint. She wanted to know what the policy is for going through screening with a pacemaker.

Comment : I felt that I was very disrespected by two TSA employees while checking in. I am pregnant and opted out of the wave scanner. I notified the first agent that I was pregnant and was opting out. The female agent then asked me to stand in several different places while waiting for another female to perform the pat down. This agent proceeded to get nasty with me each time I did not stand exactly where her finger was pointing. I felt very uncomfortable as I was being asked to stand what I felt was too close to the scanner. A male agent then chastised my decision letting me know that I should just go through the scanner as it is only "radio waves" and that my cell phone is probably harming my child more than the scanner would. Agents should not be giving incorrect medical information or unsolicited advice, especially when the safety of these machines has not been sufficiently studied.

Caller is currently at LAX. She keeps calling the number for their TSA department and is not getting an answer. She wants to talk to someone today before she leaves the airport. She is calling (b)(6). She says that she is flying via Southwest flight 4812 from LAX at 1:55 p.m. She says that she is currently at gate 7. The incident occurred between 11:30 a.m. and 12 p.m. Caller is traveling in a group of 50 individuals. They have 43 students and 7 chaperons. Caller says they were traveling from IAH to LAX and back for a school trip. One of their students has turned 18, but has no driver's license or state ID. All she has is a student ID. They made it through security alright in IAH. However, in LAX the mail document checker said that she was 18, so she had to go to another line since she didn't have a state ID. She says that the officer just pointed in a general direction and didn't give any guidance as to where exactly she needed to go. The caller is not upset that she had to go through a different procedure based on her age. What she is upset about is that the officer was rude to the child and also the adults that tried to help her. The adults began asking him if someone could go with her because they were on a school trip and she had to keep a chaperon. He ignored them. Finally another officer came over and told them that someone could accompany her and showed them where to go. After this, they began splitting the line, sending some through PreCheck and some through normal screening. They sent a big group of the kids through one way and all of the chaperons were being sent another way. One of the chaperons followed the group of kids and an officer said, "What are you doing?" in what the caller describes as a rude tone. She says that the chaperon explained that this was a school trip and the kids had to have a chaperon. She says that at this point one officer looked at the caller and started saying to keep everything on that she was going through expedited screening, not to take anything off. The caller describes this officer as rude as well. She says that she went through the WTMD and it alarmed. She says that she told her that she had metal implants throughout her body. The officer ignored the comment and told her to take off her watch, bracelets, and engagement ring. The caller took all of this off except for her engagement ring. She was sent through a couple of other times. Another passenger told her that she still had her sunglasses on her head. She says that the officer didn't tell her to remove this, but tried to get her to take off her engagement ring. She says that she told her 5 or 6 times that even if she takes all of this stuff off, she will still have an alarm because she has implants in her back, collar bone, left leg, and a screw in her right knee. She was referred for a patdown. She tried to get them to let her use AIT instead and the request was denied. She says that the patdown was done and although she wasn't very satisfied with the fact of having it done, her main complaint was that the officer was once again rude. She says she wasn't rude until the end when she just said "Have a good day!" and walked off. She never apologized or anything. She says that all of that could have been avoided if she would have listened to her from the beginning, instead of sending her through and then take a few things off and then repeat. Also, she says that AIT would have helped avoid this as well. She says that she asked for a supervisor and the officer just pointed off in a general direction and said, "They are over there somewhere." She says that she finally found a supervisor (b)(6) from terminal 1, who kept interpreting it that the caller was complaining about the rules. She says that the supervisor couldn't understand the concept that it was not because of the rules, but just because of the rudeness and ignoring the fact that she had told them she had the metal implants. She says that she wants to speak with the CSM before her flight departs, whether this be in person or via phone.

3/11/2015 Caller was at LIH and someone was at the sterile area of the airport asking where you stayed and how much you spent. He did not like the questions that were being presented. He thought they were for marketing purposes.

Then he wanted to let us know so that we could be aware that the AIT machine in LIH was showing anomalies on his shoulders, but he had a knee replacement that was not recognized.

Caller flew from Orlando International Airport on March 10. He went through the TSA Security screening Checkpoint between 12:30 and 1:00 PM. He was asked to go through the AIT machine and it said there was an anomaly found around the crotch area. He was told that a patdown needed to be performed. When the TSO named (b)(7) did the patdown he was way too aggressive and should not have touched his genital area so much. He would have rather been given the option of a strip search instead of being groped in front of everyone. He felt awkward and very uncomfortable. He walked away and the more he thought about it the more upset he was and went to talk to a TSA Supervisor and found (b)(7) but was not given his last name. (b)(7) simply said that there was an anomaly and that a patdown had to be done. Caller understands this but there is a place and a way to perform a patdown. He has been in law enforcement and is very aware of how a patdown should be completed. Not the way this TSA employee did his patdown. He hopes no one else has to have that done to them in public.

Caller and her husband were flying out of Orlando International with their 9 year old daughter. The wife went through screening first then the daughter and then the father. The daughter had an aerosol can of sun screen which was thrown away. Then they all went through the AIT screening. Next thing the parents know is a TSO agent wanted to take the child to a private room for screening. The parents stated the daughter did not have any alarm in the AIT so why does she need to go to a private room for screening. The TSO did not explain any reason for the additional screening. The father would not let the TSO take the child out of their sight and the TSO did not offer for one of the parents to accompany her during the patdown in a private room. The parents are very uncomfortable about this. And would like an explanation of why the extra screening for a nine year old.

Caller slipped while going through the checkpoint today BOS on her way to Detroit and said that she now has a shooting pain down the left side because it jarred her when she slipped coming out of AIT while standing stepping out in her socks. Caller said she did not want to start anything but she was treated unprofessionally and a male TSO at the checkpoint made the comment Seems like you're just trying to get a lawsuit, instead of asking if she was ok. She said that she went to talk to someone about filing an incident report and they told her she could file a claim and she said she then asked for the male officers name that had made the inappropriate comment and she was told she didn't need his name. Caller said they did tell her that they could find the incident in the video coverage of the checkpoint. She is about to fly back home to Detroit and she will see a physician once she arrives. She described the male TSO as a young man with dark hair and a long dark beard who would be in the video coverage.

Disability Description: The caller is deaf.

Incident Details: The caller was flying with his family, a party of 16, coming back from vacation. The caller stated that the TSO's were screaming instructions advising people not to wait to undress until the last moment and also not to dress until they had collected their things. The TSO's were very rude and talking down to people which the caller felt was uncalled for.

The caller stated that he went into the AIT for screening and stood there and one of the TSO's looked at him and said okay. At this point he left the AIT and progressed to get his belongings. A female officer stopped him and put her nose one inch from his face and asked him where he thought he was going because she had requested he stop. He stated he thought he had been cleared by an officer. The TSO stated he could not leave the AIT until the light was green. The caller looked at the AIT and it was showing green. The TSO said he had asked him to stop and he ignored her. He told her he was deaf and did not hear. The caller stated the TSO laughed at him and said he was not deaf. The caller stated the TSO then turned to her coworkers and said the caller had stated he was deaf and they all laughed. The caller proceeded to get dressed and went back to the TSO to get her name from her badge and she stated to him, oh no, not this again.

She was recently visiting her brother who is terminally ill. She was dressed in plain clothes and she did not see the known crew member lane available. She did not want to go through the AIT and opted for the pat down instead. She asked TSO (b)(6) if she would wear clean gloves. (b)(6) complained about having to do so and proclaimed. This is the third time today with attitude. (b)(6) asked the caller if she would like a private screening. If caller had known how the patdown would go then she would have requested a private screening but she did not. When the patdown began, (b)(6) raised her shirt up in the back. Caller stated she went down one of her legs and when she came back up she touched her vagina. (b)(6) came around the front of her shirt and caller felt her hand on her stomach around her navel. She made the comment aloud at the checkpoint that she felt she was being touched inappropriately and (b)(6) called the supervisor over. Supervisor (b)(6) came out and said. Ma am, you are refusing a patdown. She said she felt intimidated by the TSO and Supervisor. so she called for a Denver police officer. Supervisor (b)(6) came back and took her ID.

According to the caller, the Supervisor forced her to go through a second patdown with (b)(6). She said there were several members of management and no one spoke to her, she said they spoke at her.

However, despite waiting beside the scanner for ten minutes, no one came to assist me. By the end there were two of us waiting but it was clear no one was going to come and deal with the opt out. I am a 67 year old woman. I had polio at age 2 and have walked with crutches and a full length leg brace for 65 years. On Saturday, March 21, I told the TSA screener that I had a full leg brace and that I could stand alone for a short time to go through the AIT screener. I was screened, I held on to the sides while my crutches were run through the conveyor belt. As I walked out of the screener, (b)(6) said to me, I can't see the top of your brace. You have to have a private screening. I have to see your brace. I told her that I had never had to do a private screening and that she was not using the proper protocol. I asked to see a manager. (b)(6) came over. He did nothing but listen to (b)(6). I asked (b)(6) to ask someone else. She brought over another agent. (I don't have her name.) She basically didn't know what to do and didn't want to get involved. Then (b)(6) brought over (b)(6). (b)(6) tried to get more clarification of the situation. She asked someone what to do. That person didn't have an answer. Meanwhile, (b)(6) kept insisting I have to see that brace.

I kept saying, This is not right. This is not the correct protocol. However, I had no power, and if I wanted to attend my only grandchild's 6th birthday party I had to agree to a private screening. I went into the private screening area, pulled down my jeans and showed the brace to (b)(6) and (b)(6). This was humiliating. This was not right. I was discriminated against for a medical condition that I have no control over.

I fly about 4 times a year, and this has never happened to me. Your agents were not informed of how to handle my particular situation. I tried to tell them how I am always handled during a screening, but NONE of them would listen to me. I belong to a polio support group which gives us information about the proper protocol for screening a person with a full length leg brace. I knew what the correct procedure was, but they would not listen.

I understand that some agents choose to pat me down. While I don't like being singled out for this, I have never complained about it. I understand that we all want to be safe. I am a reasonable person and have to accept certain screenings for me because of my disability. However, I do not accept the humiliation of having to pull down my jeans. This is not right.

My intention in filing this complaint is not to make trouble for (b)(6), (b)(6) and (b)(6). My intention is that they learn the correct protocol so that no one else has to be humiliated like this.
Disability Description: The caller uses a CPAP device for a respiratory condition.

Information Request: The caller is a member of the TSA Precheck Application Program, and was using an electronic boarding pass that listed her as TSA Precheck approved. However, the female TSO at CAE refused to accept the paperless boarding pass, and told the caller that she would have to go to the airline to request a white card indicating her TSA Precheck status for the flight. She did so, and presented the paper boarding pass to the TSO, who then allowed her to go to the Precheck lane. However, the AIT machine used for the Precheck lane was also being used by regular passengers. Therefore, the amount of time was not decreased. Also, she was forced to remove her laptop and CPAP from the carrying cases, and wanted to file a complaint. She indicated that TUS never asks her to remove her CPAP from the carrying case.

Date and Time of Flight: March 22, 2015; 12:00 PM
Departure Airport: CAE
Airline: Delta Airlines
Flight Number: 5094
Terminal and Gate Number: Gate 8
Time of Incident: Around 10:30 AM

REASON for the call: Caller stated that the screeners at the checkpoint were extremely rude and were idiots. He feels like they did not have any courtesy and they did not know any proper protocols about the screening procedures. After being treated extremely rudely at the checkpoint he found his checked bag in shambles everything thrown back in the bag and items that had been damaged. He is wanting to know what can be done about this. He was also upset because there was several agents texting at the checkpoint and not working and he took a picture to prove it.

He stated that he feels like he was discriminated against because of his race at the checkpoint. He said that he pulled out his ID showing he was a known crew member. He said that known crew members do not have to go through the AIT. The screener said well you are today in a very unprofessional manner. He refused to go through the AIT and had to have a patdown and they thoroughly checked his carry on as well. The TSO refused to let him go through the lane without the AIT because he was not in uniform. He said that they treated his wife poorly and there was another white guy behind him and they gave him a hard time as well. He said then two Puerto Rican ladies who had an unbelievably large amount of items were sent through the lane without the AIT and was not give any hassle in fact the TSO was joking and cutting up with them.

Disability Description: Both of her daughters (12 and 18) have diabetes.

Incident Details: She read that px can be screened via the AIT and the WTMD. They have requested to be screened via the WTMD. At most airports, including MCO, they have been permitted to pass through the WTMD, however one of her daughters was not permitted to do so at SLC. She cannot go through AIT as it would effect the insulin pump and had to wait ten minutes for a female TSOs to become available.

The px behind her daughter advised the TSO that she had a metal implant and was directed to the WTMD.

She stated that she is going to file a discrimination complaint.

I asked the following:

If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing.

The caller indicated that she was not so much interested in filing a formal written complaint, but that she would like more information and consistency in regard to the policy.

She wants more specific information about how the agent makes the decision as to whether a px with a disability it screened. She believes that px should be able to opt for the WTMD screening if the WTMD does not effective the device.

3/26/2015 The caller's family does not desire to use the AIT and prefers to have a patdown or to go through the WTMD. She has experienced some resistance from TSOs in the past concerning her family's request for patdowns, and there arose a situation in which a TSO caused an ruckus over her 3-1-1 bags that were in compliance. She is anxious about flying again and wanted assurance that the previous experiences should not have happened, and that the future experiences should be better. She asked about special screening procedures for passengers 75 years or older, and for children 12 years or younger.

3/27/2015 Caller is retired military and has medical disabilities. Every time she screened she goes through the AIT and has to have a patdown. This is very embarrassing. She feels she is being singled out.

3/27/2015 Caller applied for the TSA precheck 2 and a half weeks ago and the UES is telling her it is with the TSA and it might take another 6-8 weeks because they had trouble taking her fingerprints. Is there any way she can get this expedited? She has metal, screws and plates in her body. The last time she flew she was wearing a leg brace and she had to remove it and she got a full body patdown after she went through the AIT and her bag went through twice. She wants to avoid having to get patdowns. She used to have a card from her doctor. Would that help? Charlotte Douglas has full body scanners in some areas and others have the older technology. Is there any advantage to going through one or the other?

Hello,

3/28/2015 3:19:13 PM Yesterday I flew out of ITO. I am pregnant and asked not to go through the AT. Instead of allowing me to go through the metal detector, which I was told was only for pre-check passengers, I was made to wait for several minutes and then had a pat down. While I understand that the pat down is one of the screening methods, I do not understand why it would be used in place of a metal detector that is already functioning but not in high demand. ITO is not a busy airport and it is not clear to me why TSA would choose to take a female from her post for a pat down instead of allowing me to simply walk through the metal detector. The pat down, and where it was located, made me feel like a criminal. I don't think it's a very kind way to treat pregnant women and would like to suggest that you reconsider your pat down policy in places where there are working metal detectors. Not only would it save TSA time, but it would also make pregnant women feel less ashamed about their condition.

Thank you for your consideration.

3/30/2015 7:26:51 PM Caller carried his cash in his hand and when he went through the AIT the TSO told him that he would have to see the cash and when he showed it to him the TSO told him he would to hold it in his hand. This upset him because he thinks they were trying to steal it. He wants the written policy for this. He said a person came through with no ID and was allowed through and he wants to know how.

This incident happened at MSY
I advised that a person can get through the check point without ID but they would have to go through an alternate ID process.
Disability Description: Caller has a metal implant and has back problems.

Information Request: Her next flight is with United on the 21st of April. She does not have all the information required to set up assistance but she will call us when she has it.

3/31/2015 3:41:55 PM Incident Details: Caller flew yesterday from EWR to MIA. She had a negative experience. TSO (b)(6) was rude and was not considerate about her disability. She has had surgery and has a metal implant and back problems. She uses a wheelchair and has a cane. She usually gets assistance from the airline. It was with United yesterday. The person with United assisted her. The TSO inspected her wheelchair. She went through the AIT and then was subject to additional screening. She told them that she could only briefly stand. She was asked to remove her shoes, which she was fine with even though it is difficult. They did additional screening on her bag as well. She almost missed her flight. She was in pain. The TSO had a bad attitude. She couldn't stand or bend forward. The TSO requested that she do so. She told them she couldn't and the TSO asked her if -she wanted to get in to a problem-. She flies back on the 21st and she is scared to fly again because of that negative experience. She asked if she could do anything to avoid such cruelty. The TSO finally gave her her name after asking her a 3rd time. She considered calling a lawyer.

4/1/2015 4:26:06 PM On March 31, 2015, I received a TSA precheck boarding pass for American Airlines Flight 943 from St. Thomas, USVI to Miami. I was told to go to the speedy line where I need not take off my shoes. Then a TSA agent loudly asked my if I had any medical implants. I said that I had a metal plate in my ankle. Forget privacy. She then told me to go to the longer line where I would have to take off my shoes. I then had to go through the AIT screening. The TSA agents were barking orders which I did not understand, about which poses they needed. When I emerged from the screening device, a female TSA agent told me to stand & she would wave a wand over my hands. She then told me to stand in front of her and spread my legs. I did. Then she yelled, "WIDER!" I complied, still barefoot, trying to make sure that my carry-on possessions were not carried away. Forget about any shreds of dignity. I am a 67-year-old grandmother of 4, a retired school teacher. I believe that your policies need improvement. Or the TSA agents in St. Thomas need sensitivity training. No TSA agent has ever asked if I had a medical implant. I told the truth. My reward for cooperating with honesty was to be treated with hostility and humiliation. Why exactly did I have to go through the AIT screening AND the public patdown? If I had requested a private patdown, would I have been able to bring my valuables with me? Would I have missed my flight? Please explain why the TSA agent needed to pat me down intimately in public when I had already completed the AIT screening. Are TSA agents discriminating on the basis of disabilities????

Thank you for contacting the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) Contact Center regarding the reasons for secondary screening.

TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. TSA must screen all passengers and their property before they are permitted to enter the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) treat all passengers with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on bags, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the walk-through metal detector or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property may also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, or children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

The primary purpose of passenger screening is to prevent the introduction of deadly or dangerous items into an airport secured area or onboard an aircraft. TSA's policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Each Transportation Security Officer (TSO) receives training on professional and courteous conduct to make the process run smoothly and to reduce inconvenience to the traveling public.

Passengers are permitted to wear any type of clothing they wish through the security checkpoint, however, if the TSO cannot reasonably determine that the clothing is free of a prohibited item, the passenger will be referred for additional screening. This policy extends to all clothing items and is not directed to any particular item or group.

TSOs will use their professional discretion to determine if a particular item could hide a threatening object. Passengers may be asked to remove their outerwear, as TSA requires all passengers to remove outerwear such as suit jackets and blazers. Caller has applied for PreCheck at SFO. Caller has a metal implant, and he alarms the WTMD. Caller wanted to know if there is something that could be done at the checkpoints that do not have the AIT available so he does not get push back in line. Caller wanted to know if there was a card that would allow him to not have issues at the checkpoints.

The caller flew from Miami to LaGuardia yesterday. The caller opted out of going through the AIT and it took sometime for her to go through a patdown. Her bags had already gone through scanning and she was separated from them for sometime. When she got on the aircraft she discovered that her laptop was missing. She wanted to know what could be done about getting it back.

On April 4, 2015 at approximately 9am my husband and I went through security at Burbank Airport. I am not a frequent traveler but as the daughter of a woman who died of breast cancer I am very concerned about excessive radiation when going through airport security. As a result I always ask for a "pat down" and have always received one. On this morning, I noticed their weren't the usual walk through security check points and out of concern I asked what the apparatus was and for a "pat down", I was told by a TSA agent, not to worry that this was not an x-ray machine and that Burbank stopped using those. With no reason to doubt the TSA officer's insistence I walked into the apparatus there was a wand, and i then felt a hesitation and was about to get out and insist that I have a "pat down" before I could react it was too late. On the way to our terminal I had increased doubt as to whether or not I was told the truth and I went on to board my Las Vegas flight.

The very next day, at the airport in Las Vegas I saw the exact same apparatus being used I told the TSA agent there that I did not want to go inside of it, he quickly stated that if I did not mind waiting he would have a female TSA agent assist me with a "pat down". I am not at all certain why the TSA agent at the Burbank Airport would go out of his way to misinform me about the scanner and have me go through it when I was very clear that I DID NOT WANT to go through a radioactive scanner. This kind of negligence makes me very uncomfortable albeit now I understand I cannot/should not take a TSA's word as truth. Perhaps it is not a big deal to some people/TSA staffers, but to others, like myself there are concerns and those concerns should not be dismissed. ALL TSA agents should be informed, and when in doubt give the person the option of a "pat down". My right to decline was taken away when that TSA agent told me NOT TO WORRY that they, Burbank Airport do not use those kinds of machines anymore. When the fact is that THEY DO millimeter waves ARE radioactive (I googled it) HYPERLINK \(b\)\(6\)

2.2. Radiation safety

Although millimeter-wave scanners are becoming the primary full-body scanners used at airport security checks, there is still an alarmingly small amount of information about its potential health effects. The millimeter-wave safety standards are dose rate (power density) standards expressed in mW/m². The power density for a millimeter-wave scan is between 0.00001 and 0.0006 mW/cm² (HYPERLINK http://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S1687850714000168#bib3 Moulder, 2012). These scanners are believed to be less harmful to passengers because they emit nonionizing radiation and presumably do not have the potential for cancer causing DNA damage. The established health effects associated with non-ionizing radiation are limited to thermal effects. The long term effects of this type of radiation are still uncertain but it was reported that these scanners operate at outputs well below those required to produce tissue heating (http://ec.europa.eu/health/scientific_committees/emerging/docs/scenihr_o_036.pdf).

REASON for the call: Caller said when he came through the body scanner a heavy set African American TSO started rubbing him down and never said anything. Caller then asked the TSO what he was doing and he said he was clearing a alarm that was on his chest. Caller asked the officer if he was suppose to tell him before he started touching him and the officer said no. Caller did not get the name of the TSO. Caller was wearing a dark blue silk shirt and blue jeans. Caller said he has grey hair and is about 6 foot 1 inch tall.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: TSOs must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the walk-through metal detector or an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. It may also be necessary for TSOs to conduct additional screening on carry-on items. TSOs are required to be considerate and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience. Since the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

Caller applied for PreCheck. She has a knee replacement and has had difficulty using PreCheck. She is pulled out of the PreCheck line and taken somewhere else for screening. She is not sure why she paid the $85. She wanted to know if I would recommend that she not tell the TSO that she has a metal implant. She said that when she is taken out of line she is always put at the end of the regular line. She thinks there is a way around this. She recommended that all PreCheck lanes have an AIT or that some sort of wand is used.

What happened?

I was escorting my wife and two daughters (ages 3 and 1) through a TSA checkpoint. Every time in the past that we have gone through an airport, a TSA agent would take us all through a metal detector, and sometimes swab my hands, and in the case of my wife to pat down around her head-scarf and put the swab in a scanner.

She can be temporarily reached at the number above. She declined to provide an alternate number.

What are the procedures for filing a complaint against an employee who scolded me for refusing to remove a vest that would expose myself going through the Advanced Imaging Technology equipment at Bush Intercontinental Airport, Terminal A, April 11, 2015?

TSA guide does not specify the requirements to remove such clothing.

Thank you,

Caller has a complaint against a TSA employee at FLG on 04 10 2015 at 2:30. He called someone in the Arizona area and they told him to call TSA and that a lady named (b)(6) might answer the phone.

He was flying US Airways Flight number 2770.

He was getting ready to go through screening at FLG. He told me that he had flown a lot and he has been screened a lot and that this was very unprofessional and he felt like the TSOs there were not well trained. He also informed me that he was a LEO.

He also said that while he was being screened the TSO touched his crotch with his palms turned up instead of down. He said the TSO hit his crotch pretty hard and was very rough with him. He said the TSO pulled his pants down about 6 inches to a foot on the left side of his body. They offered him a private screening but his bags were moving on the baggage conveyor out of his sight so he declined so he could hurry up and get back to his bags. He said he had a police badge and $500 in his carry on.

4/11/2015 6:52:01 PM He said he informed the TSO that he had had a knee replacement which was causing the machine to alarm. He said they did not have the AIT so he had to use the WTMD. He said they only had 5 or 6 employees working at the screening checkpoint and that it was a small airport.

He said the screener was about 30 years old. He described him as a large, which he said was a nice way to describe fat, and that he was either Hispanic or Indian.

He said prior to boarded his flight that he overheard 3 female and 3 male TSOs talking about their private life, such as their girlfriends and things, and thought it was unprofessional. He asked a LEO that was standing at the screening checkpoint who their supervisor was and he pointed out one of the men in the same crowd that he had witnessed talking about their personal life.

Again he stated that he believed the TSO at FLG were unprofessional and badly trained. He said they acted like they might be part time employees.

Caller has a complaint about a TSA agent. Caller said he is a amputee and he usually does not have to remove his belt and shoes. Caller said the officer told him he has to take off his shoes and belt. Caller said the TSO then asked him if he had a problem. Caller said the officer told him to walk over there and do as he said. Caller said he forgot to remove his pen and the officer told him to go back and remove his pen. Caller said he was then tested for traces of explosives. Caller said he had his hand on the gate and the TSO told him to remove his hand off the gate. Caller said he then went through AIT screening and was allowed to go to his flight. Caller said the TSO s name was (b)(6) Caller said (b)(6) was 6 ft tall in his late 40 s with a gray beard and African American.

TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints and regrets any unprofessional treatment you experienced.

I advised the caller that I could take down his information and send the complaint on to the CSM at the airport so they would be aware of the situation. I cannot give him any guarantees that he would be contacted, but the CSMs are very good at handling a situation when it arises. If he wants to contact them directly, he could choose Option 5 in our IVR to get their direct contact info.

CSMs may be contacted by calling (866) 289-9673 and choosing option 5 from the self-service menu. By entering the three-letter airport code of your departing airport, you will be provided a phone number to reach the CSM at that airport.

Caller was at Reno airport trying to get through security. She told me that while she was in line for screening a TSA worker came down and warmly greeted everyone. She asked the TSO who she could talk to let them know that she could not go through the scanner. He told her that she could opt out of the AIT if she wanted to. She gave the TSO a letter from the doctor saying her and her items could not be scanned due to medical issues. She said some of the workers are ignorant and needed to be retrained because they did not know how to screen a passenger with special needs. She said that the TSO on duty, that she spoke to first, had blond hair with pony tail told her that her items would have to go through the scanner. She said she did not get the blond TSOs name. She said the TSO did not even open the letter saying that everyone had to be screened and that all her items had to be put on the belt. She said the TSO was rigid and did not care about the passengers needs.

4/16/2015 10:39:11 AM She said after she opted out of screening and after the bad experience with the blond TSO, a TSO came up to her and screened her the way she needed to be screened. She the TSOs name was (b)(6). She said she was a gem and was very helpful. She went on to say that she gave her triple 10 service. She said it was about 5:30 in the morning and not very busy at the screening area. TSO (b)(6) told (b)(6) to put all of her items in the tray. She took the tray around the door she just opened. She said she gave her a private patdown carefully and gently. She tested her medicine and food like she had hoped she would. She said TSO (b)(6) was competent and concerned. Caller said she told her that since she was in a uniform she did not guess that she could hug her but TSO (b)(6) told her that of course she could hug her. The passenger was crying on the phone at this point. It seemed to be a very traumatic experience for her.

She asked if there was a way that she could acknowledge TSO (b)(6) was so good to her and TSO (b)(6) gave her a card with our phone number on it.

She said she would be flying again in December and would definitely call for a PSS.

Disability Description: The caller wants to know if she should call 1-855-787-2227 to get help through the checkpoint. She also wants to report that she was harassed going through the checkpoint at EWR

Incident Details: The caller says that her medications cant be X-rayed. She also doesn't want to go through the AIT but requested a Pat down. She presented her ID and told the agent that she couldn't go through the AIT. She said she had documentation about her medical condition but they didn't want to read it. The screeners took so long that she missed her flight. She had to argue with them about how she should be screened. One of the screeners told her she had to go through the AIT regardless. The passenger never stated to me if she was given a pat down. Just the unwillingness of the TSA staff to not X-ray her medications and missing her flight. Apparently the staff also was rude to her. The caller is 73 years old. She went on to say that she would sue if this was to happen to her again.

PM She flew on United flight 1736 on 8 April 2015 7:30am. Boarding at gate 74
Her original flight path was EWR to DEN to Reno. She missed her flight and her new flight path was EWR to SFO to Reno.

The caller had a better experience out of Reno. She got help from (b)(6) at Reno. The way the caller describe her (b)(6) is probably a PSS.

Caller is a retired airline employee of AA for 41 years and he said he always only seems to have trouble getting through screening at PHX and that it is the only airport he is repetitively subjected to secondary screening. He said he has to have a hand inspection of his bag, they closed the Pre Check lane as soon as he got up to it, and he said when he was asked to empty his pockets and send the items through the x-ray to go through the AIT that his wallet and pocket change were sent down a different belt than the one near him although his items were still there when he went back for them. He said he flies 50 times a year and out of all of those trips he is only ever receiving extra scrutiny at PHX. He said he doesn't know why it only happens at that one airport but he called to see if their procedures were different. He said they explained to him that each Supervisor has the ability to run things differently but it has been different the past 3 times he has went through that airport.

The caller wanted to know if one of the DEN employees that was let go due to inappropriate behavior was an African American.

The caller stated his son did not want to go through the AIT and was taken through a patdown. The caller stated that he had been waiting for his son. After 10 minutes he approached where his son was going through the patdown. He approached the TSO that was performing the patdown to find out what was going on. When he asked what was going on the officer stated he was not being able to finish his sentence about the patdown procedure.

The officer stated the caller's 21 year old son was not fully complying with the patdown. The question became if the TSO was going to touch a sensitive area of the body. The officer stated he may have to. Two Airport LOE's were called and they stated that the passenger's would have to comply with the TSO in order to clear screening. The caller asked for a supervisor and the officer stated he was the supervisor.

The caller stated the TSO was not professional and did not explain things to where they understood that was going on. He read about the incident at DEN in the news and wanted to know if touching a sensitive area was protocol when going through a patdown.

The caller did indicate that his son stated he was not touched in a sensitive area once the patdown was completed. Caller emailed a complaint. He also wanted to make a verbal complaint. His compliant number is (b)(6). He went through the checkpoint at JFK on 4/19/2015 at approximately 3 pm. He was flying on JetBlue. Upon entering the line he proceeded through the screening process. He was instructed by a TSA agent at the front to read the instructions prior to entering the screening location. The instructions indicated that there was no need to remove shoes or belts and that cell phones should be in carry-on bags. He followed the instructions and went to the metal detector. He entered and exited the metal detector. He did not hear it beep until the person behind him entered. The caller had on a metal belt that he had not removed per the instructions. After it beeped he was sent through the AIT. After he exited the AIT he was told that there was an anomaly in his groin area. He was told that by a black female agent. He did not get an explanation as to what the anomaly was. He was told to go back through the AIT. After he came out the black agent showed him a picture with a yellow flashing square in the groin area. The TSO asked for a supervisor. The supervisor asked if he had anything. He told him he did not. The supervisor performed a patdown. He started at his ankles and he worked his way up into the groin area on both legs. He did not find anything when he got to the groin area. He said that the AIT was not accurate and if it gives a false on him why can't it give someone who has something a pass. He was not given an explanation.

Caller had two complaints:

She went through security at TPA and the customer service there was bad. She did not get a name or badge but the TSO was very rude. She said they spoke to her in a rude tone. They made her go back through the machine because her boots alarmed. The second time when her necklace alarmed, they would not let her go back through the same machine. The screen for the AIT machine is a generic outline of the passenger.

She stated that she has an aversion to the AIT machine and who wants the patdown. Her concern is that even though they say they don't have the naked machine anymore, how can that be true. She thinks the software did not get changed out and someone in a room somewhere is looking at your naked body. She would like to be contacted with information how they changed out that software. She stated that she believes TSA and the public have been lied to. ADD: Caller stated that she had no email.

Caller wanted the phone number for the CSM at Tampa International. She said she saw on her cousins Facebook that after she exited the AIT machine, the screener told her that, He did not know if her husband had told her yet but that she looked amazing.

Caller stated that her parents flew from London to JFK to BOS. She stated that her mother has a breast prosthesis and after going through the AIT at JFK she set off an alarm. She stated that then she had to go to a private screening area and show it. She stated that they are flying again to go back to Europe and she is questioning what to do so that this does not happen. She stated that for now she thinks it is customer service and sending it to the CSM is sufficient. She stated that if it happens again she will call back.

TSA management.

I'm writing this e-mail in regard to a recent trip I had this last week. I don't expect a specific response to my experience nor do I want one stating I'm sorry your experience wasn't more positive because let's be honest when are any of our experiences pleasant when it comes to the TSA and traveling.

What I would like from my e-mail are changes in the TSA system and how it's run but I know this won't happen either since it is a government run program and let's be honest the amount of time it take to purchase new technology or change a procedure when anything is government or state run, the changes are already outdated. It is disappointing that although we live in the United States of America, the greatest nation on earth, we are still light years behind other countries on technology and procedures with that said here is my story.

My first experience in where the TSA is lacking in technology is the AIT machines. I find it ridiculous that with all the money spent on these machines and the invasion of privacy they require that they are not sufficient for screening. By the way, your statistic that states 4 out of 5 people prefer them is completely inaccurate but when are surveys ever accurate?

On my flight out of John Wayne airport on 4/19 at 7:45 am to New Orleans I was screened at approximately 6:15 am. After proceeding through the AIT machine I still had to have a pat down because of my zipper on my sweater. I was told that the next time I should zip it in order to avoid the pat down. Really, with this highly advanced technology, which clearly it is not, I still have to endure a pat down.... In all my trips to Europe I have never, not once had a pat down. Clearly the technology the TSA purchased was made in haste. What type of research and which experts looked into to choosing the technology needed in order to make traveling safe?

4/26/2015 1:08:24 PM My second pat down, in which I was taken to a private room, no explanation on why I was taken to a private room was on 4/25 at the Denver airport. I went through security at approximately 2:30-2:40 pm traveling from Denver to John Wayne airport. Now we had missed our connection the day before, not our fault of course, but because airlines are allowed to provide 45 minutes in between flights which is only enough time to make the next flight when they are on time and let's be honest when are flights ever on time anymore? I was traveling home with my family, which included my husband and 2 young children along with my parents. Clearly my traveling experience wasn't enjoyable to this point and I was upset at all we had to endure so far. I was carrying my one year old son through the metal detector and as usual The TSA needed to test my hands with their state of the art technology which detects chemicals... Well low and behold it tested positive for something and I was told I would need further screening.

So the TSA agent took my items and as she was standing there another female agent came and tested my purse and shoes. Even though these were passed whatever test you do with your state of the art technology I was told I would need a pat down in a private room. Excuse me, a private room? Well at this point I broke into tears. They told me I could bring in a family member including my 6 year old daughter. Well wouldn't that have been pleasant my 6 year old watching me cry as I was getting patted down and asking if they were hurting me. When I was brought into the "private room" I was reaching for a kleenex, located in view at the top of my purse, in order to dry my tears which were streaming down my face at this point, I was rudely asked what I was doing and I wasn't able to have anything in my hands. Once the TSA agent realized I was reaching for a kleenex she told me I could have it. Well, at this point why not let the tears flow. I'm traveling with my family, subjected to a needless pat down in a private room, and told nothing along the way. After the several minute more extensive pat down I was handed my items and told I was clear to go.

Not once was I given an explanation of what chemical was found, and why this ultra sophisticated machine decided to let me go after I was further tested. When my family and I asked for a further explanation on what chemical was detected we were told it was classified and they were only doing their job. Well maybe your TSA agents could do a better job if they were equipped with better technology. The only thing I had put on that day, since we had no baggage, was lotion and my dirty clothes. I'm curious how many false positives you get with your highly advanced chemical detection machines but this is probably classified as well because if the public knew what outdated testing was being done and what a waste of time it was we would all be furious.

Caller asked for a supervisor and she was told one was not available at the San Antonio airport.

5/4/2015 3:44:12 PM She felt she was targeted for training purposes for another TSO. She is disabled and in a wheelchair. She has traveled from this airport before. She had to undergo additional screening due to a Bottle of water and an 8 oz bottle of Ensure. She went through three screenings due to the liquids in the carryon bag. She was patted down twice and it was not necessary. She also was screened by the AIT machine. She was embarrassed and was treated like a criminal. It was unnecessary.

Caller was at TPA today and he was verbally abused by a TSO (b)(6). He went through the AIT and put his hands up in the air like he is supposed to. The agent there told him to pull up his pants and turn around and look at him. The TSO got mad at him and asked him if he could speak English. He called for and got a Supervisor, but that person did not understand. He said he is hurt that he was treated that way. He would like someone to contact him but by phone and not email. Caller gave his email as: (b)(6)

5/8/2015 Caller is confused about TSA Precheck. He never applied for the program but he received the benefit when he drove down to FL last Saturday to deliver a car to his grandson. He said all he gave Expedia was his name and address and his credit card number and he did not know how that would be enough information to decide that he was eligible for expedited screening. When he got to the screening checkpoint they let him right through and he is worried that someone who is not a nice guy like him may get through the Precheck line as a FF. He said he has an artificial titanium shoulder and the AIT did not pick it up. He asked the TSO about it and was told that the shoulder implant did not show up, however, they did pick up a scar on his right leg. He said he did not have a scar on his right leg but he does have one on his left leg from when he was 9 years old. He said he is 74 years old and has had a few traffic tickets but nothing major.

Caller enrolled in October 2014 for Precheck. He has only got Precheck once or twice and flies about twice a week. He has his KTN (b)(6). His wife also has precheck. Her name is (b)(6)

They fly on Southwest. He is trying to find out what is wrong.

5/11/2015 He filed a police report at Boston. He had just had surgery and had liquid protein in his bag because this is all he could eat. He had some issues with the AIT because he had trouble raising his arms. They found his protein drink and wanted to open it and he told them no. He was told he had to be searched. He was taken back in the back and thoroughly searched and was hit in his crotch. They could not tell him why this was being done. The police were called and when the TSO explained that they only go to the point of resistance in the private areas of the body and described what we do to the police they told the TSO this is not how patdowns are conducted. He was very upset by this incident and does not want this to happen again.

The flight was April 12th at about 6 pm on Southwest

He was wearing a blue or gray suit and tie. He had on a black coat and black cap. He does not have a name and description of the TSO but he was training someone new.

Caller flew this morning through the St. Louise airport. She is a frequent flyer and is very familiar with the TSA security process. She stated while she was in the AIT the machine the machine never scanned her. Then the TSO said she was clear and they never did a pat down. She stated she had items in her pocket and still had her shoes on. She also stated she has a metal knee and always gets a pat down, but did not this time. She stated that she tried to tell the TSO that they missed her but they acted like they didn't care. She said they acted distracted.

I flew from SFO to SDJ yesterday. Went through security around 9:30 am. I refused the AIT because of radiation concerns. I asked to go through the metal detector instead and they said no despite the fact that others were allowed to use it. My two traveling companions also refused the AIT and were allowed through the metal detector.

Instead, I had to wait 10 minutes for a female screener. She pat me down in public - the most thorough pat down I've ever had which included contact with my vagina 3 times. Then I was brought into a private room where I was pat down again by another agent.

When asking questions, I was told that "I must not fly very much," "that I don't know procedure" and that this is standard operating procedure. I would like to mention again that my friends did not have to go through this and neither did the couple behind me who also opted out of the AIT.

Reading your regulations regarding opting out as posted on your website, I should have been offered the option of the metal detector and was blankety refused. Instead I had a strange woman in contact with my vagina 3 times. This is a violation of my rights as a passenger and a human being.

I would like to know your response and the action that will be taken to ensure that this NEVER happens again to traveler.

I am sure that this is all on camera somewhere, and I would be more than happy to sort through footage so that these two women can be identified and you can see how I was violated.

UNACCEPTABLE!

REASON for the call: An African American female TSO (average weight, approx. 5'6") was rude, abusive, and disrespectful. The caller passed through AIT and there was an anomaly. A female TSO advised her to pass through again. A different African American female TSO of similar build directed her to collect her belongings. The said female TSO called back. The caller returned to her and politely asked what inquiring as to what she needed to do. The female TSO mimicked her rudely. The caller explained that a TSO had advised that she had directed her to collect her things and identified the TSO. The said TSO stated that she did not do that and that they do not all look alike. The caller feels that she was a rude, disrespectful, and racist comment..

The caller would like a response in regard to her complaint. She feels that the agent needs further training.

The passenger is very upset over an incident that occurred on 4/27/15. The incident occurred between 2:30PM and 3:30PM at Atlantic City Airport. She was flying on Spirit airlines. The caller went through screening with her partner. The caller alarmed the AIT approximately 3 times. Her partner alarmed the AIT as well. Her partner was patted down by a female officer. (b)(6) was not. She stated that a female officer at the security started giggling whenever she alarmed the AIT. After she caused the AIT unit to alarm the last time, a male officer patted her down without any warning. The male officer patted down her chest, her back area and one of her legs.

4:06:47 PM (b)(6) was very upset. She was humiliated and very shaken by the encounter. She went to a supervisor or a Customer support manager and filed a complaint. The person told her that it was an internal complaint and that it was not a formal complaint. She was told that she couldn't have a copy of the complaint and that the issue would be handled internally.

(b)(6) feels that she was discriminated against because she is gay.

Caller's old suitcase has a NOI in it with his locked taped to it. He wants to know why TSA cuts locked. He flew from BNA. The TSS that screening him was a jerk. He accidentally left a napkin in his back pocket. The AIT picked it up. He was asked what was in his pocket. The TSS then informed him that since he alarmed that he would have to conduct a patdown. He refused a patdown from a male, and demanded a female TSO pat him down. He was denied entry. He hung around at the airport, until the TSO's switched shifts. He has already filed a complaint and hasn't heard anything back from the complaint. Caller would like to follow up on the incident, and find out what was done about the rude TSS.

She is a GE and was not told to removed her laptop from the case at Memphis airport.

She said she was harassed at the checkpoint she is on her 60's and was on the precheck line was long and nobody was at the regular line she went through the regular line and when she walk through the AIT it alarmed she wears a brace on her hand she was stopped by the tso in a rude manner that she had to received secondary screening she offered to remove the brace and was told not to move.

Caller traveled 05/19/15 from MEM she went through the security check point gate 18 about 9:30 am central time she was traveling on Delta flight # 82 the flight was schedule to depart at 10:40 am to ATL.

She did not look at the tso names.

CSM RFI---Mishandling RFI

REASON for the call: The caller always opts out of the AIT screening, but has two negative experiences recently with the TSOs. She feels that the TSOs punish her when she opts out by making her wait a long time for a patdown. Additionally, her items have already went through the screening, and were on the other side of the screening area. She indicated that no one was watching these items, and anyone could have taken them. After waiting for a long time at OAK, she started to ask a male TSO if he could make sure her personal property was safe. He cut her off before she could finish the question, and told her that this was her fault for opting out. He then started asking her why she opted out, as it does not use x-ray technology. She did not want to argue with him, so she just said that it was her decision. She was told again that the lengthy wait time was her fault for opting out, and she feels that the TSOs at these two airports punish someone who opts out. She also believes that there should be a better system for watching a passengers personal property.

He signed up for PreCheck a couple of years ago and sometimes he asked to go through the AIT. He believes that there are flaws in the design of the AIT as anomalies are detected on him. He mentioned racial profiling but would not respond when I asked if he believes that he was racially profiled.

Caller is a flight attendant for American airlines. She was going through DFW today and when she went through the screening process her hands tested positive for ETG. She was pulled aside for additional screening by a black male TSA agent. She told the TSO that she did not want to go through the AIT machine and opted for a pat down. The TSO pulled her aside and told her to wait for a female agent. She had to wait a very long time for the female agent to give her a pat down. She said that both female agents were very pleasant and respectful. While getting the pat down she said that the black male TSO yelled at her that you get a hundred thousand more radiation from flying on the plane then by going through the AIT machine. After her pat down she asked for the name of the black male TSO and found out that he was a supervisor and she believes his name is [REDACTED]. The supervisor over heard her asking for his name and became very aggressive towards her. He yelled as she was walking away asking for her name. He also made threats that he was going to file a report against her since she was going to file a complaint against him. She felt harassed and threatened by this TSA supervisor. She would like some assurance that the TSA supervisor will not be able to put her name on a list to where she would be pulled aside for additional screening every time she flies.

Special Notes: TSO conducting the screening was about 25, possibly Puerto Rican, 5 8 and he had a thin beard at the jaw. The supervisor was a short woman and she had just returned from vacation and that was the reason she could not provide her name. The team leader was black. He covered his badge and was covering for the TSO. He said he had just came in. He was about 60. He took pictures and will email those to us.

Reason for the call: Caller wanted to make a complaint on a TSO in DAL. She states the TSO was atrocious. She travels every week and has never gone through anything like that. She asked the TSO if she could step in to the AIT. The TSO called an STSO and asked her if she could give her a patdown. She explained to the STSO that she has blisters. The STSO told her to call in the complaint. The TSO said that she needed to wait since the AIT was stinky and needed to be cleaned.

Date and Time (departure time and arrival time): The original departure time was 7:35 p.m. but it was delayed to 8:25 pm. She went through security at 6:05 p.m.

Caller flew into LaGuardia on the 11th of May. She had gone outside to smoke a cigarette and when she came back in nobody screened her. She said that her and another lady were waived through the screening checkpoint by a TSO. They did not have to go through the metal detector or AIT machine and they walked right past the screening area against the wall. She stated there were 3 or 4 screeners standing around and talking by the AIT machine.

Comment : You should know that both my husband and I were randomly selected for the imaging machine (preTSA check) and for both of us false readings were registered. Seems to us that your machines may require adjustment since post pat downs nothing was found. Seems like a waste of your valuable resources to be patting down a retired federal law enforcement agent and his spouse. We appreciate all that you do and providing feedback to assist in your continuous improvement program.

Comments: on 6/10/2015 at 3 pm in EWR airport, while I was trying to catch connecting flight to SFO from Barcelona, I had to checkout and checkin again through TSA terminal C. I requested padding instead of X-ray machine from two young TSA personnel (a young boy and a young girl). They didn't respect my wishes to get me somebody to pad me and the young black tall girl forced me to go through machine if I want to get to my belongings which was already inspected and cleared and left alone. They didn't find me anybody to do body paddling, would not return my stuff to me to wait for somebody for body padding and forced me to go through x ray if I want to get to my left alone purse and hand bags. I was flying alone and there was nobody to watch my items. I had been under radiation for my treatments and didn't want to expose myself to X-ray anymore. She didn't respect my wishes. I told her I will file complain that she made me to do that. I have been traveling from around the world and SFO and always my wishes been respected except in EWR airport. This is not accepted. a young girl cannot think that she is above everything and my health.

My 14 year old daughter was put through an AIT machine without being provided other options (as per TSAs manual) She was traveling with family friends and was separated from them when this occurred. She was carrying a US Passport as her identification and was already pre-checked. The TSA attendant was male, no female was operating the machine or attending to my daughter when this occurred. My concern is not only regarding unnecessary exposure to radiation but also risk of pornographic imaging of my daughters body.

Thank you.

She wants to know why she has to go through degrading procedures. Such as removing items from her pockets and removing her belt. She also said the AIT maybe harmful.

She asked if you buy a one way ticket if your automatically subject to additional screening.

She also asked if it takes 6 months for a claim to be resolved.

She believes it is insulting to go through a background check for TSA Pre Check.

She also said she has been inappropriately patted down but, it was years ago and she would not like to give any information on it.

Caller had a very emotionally negative day yesterday at ATL. She had asked not to do the AIT and was asked to step aside and wait for a female TSO so she can go through a pat down. After waiting for 45 minutes for a female screener she was told by a female TSO that she can either go through the AIT machine or remain where she was at. The caller was worried she was going to miss her flight if she did not go through the AIT machine. She asked to speak with the TSOs supervisor and the female supervisor told the caller that you do not know the reasons why you were not put through. That was the only thing the supervisor said to the caller. The TSO who was rude to her was African American and around 5'8" in height. She said that the supervisor was either Asian or African American. She did not get a name from either the TSO or supervisor. The caller also mentioned that her husband flies for American and he will also be reporting this incident.

The caller is calling to report an incident that happened with a TSO officer at the Oakland International Airport. He states that he has already filed a complaint with the White House and will also be notifying his brother, who is a Sacramento police officer with a gold shield. When he went through the screening checkpoint he had 3 jars of jam in his carry on bag that was not in a plastic zip top 3-1-1 bag. The bag went through the x-ray machine and the TSO pointed at the machine and yelled, What is that? By doing this he alerted other TSOs in the area who came running over. The TSO pulled the bag off to the side and yelled at the caller, Stay there don't move! They took his carry on bag and ripped open and tossed his belongings out and found the 3 jars of jam. The TSO came over to the caller and told him that he cannot have these items in his carry on bag, he would either need to throw them out or check the bag. The TSO threw his belongings back in his carry-on and told him to go back to the Southwest ticket counter and check the bag. A different TSO escorted him to the ticket counter and told him when he was finished he would need to come back through the checkpoint at a different entrance. When the caller came back and attempted to go through the entrance the other TSO had directed him to, the original TSO started yelling at him and told him that no one could enter here and he would have to go back through the line and be rescreened. When he got back through the line the walk through metal detector that he had went through was closed and they directed him to the AIT machine. The caller told the TSO that he did not want to go through the AIT because of the radiation. The TSO pulled him over to the side again and started yelling, telling him to not move. The TSO came back a few minutes later and told the caller that he would have to have a patdown. The caller told the TSO that he was not going to touch him, he wanted someone else to do it. The second TSO came over and asked why he was being screened again and agreed to perform the patdown. When the caller was cleared the original TSO yelled at him, telling him to get his coat and leave. The caller went over to the TSO counter to ask for the TSO's name and badge number. The TSO manager told him that they do not have badge numbers and gave him a hard time about giving him the TSO's name. The TSO manager asked the caller to explain to him what happened, the caller said a few cuss words to the TSO manager and the manager told him that if he had treated his employees that way that he understood why they treated him the way the caller was saying that they did. He finally got the manager to write down a name on a piece of paper.

Then the screener told him to pull up his pants that his pants were not appropriate because he was white. Then he said they swabbed his hands and it dried his hands out. The caller and her husband have recently been experience off abnormalities when going through the AIT and always receive a patdown. This has not always been so and she wanted to know what could be causing this. She also asked about PreCheck and where the closest enrollment center is to PDX.

Caller has a complaint about a TSO at MCO on a flight she, her husband and her 2 small children took this past Friday out of MCO. She said she was checking in to fly to Louisville, KY and they went through the checkpoint with their 3 year old and an 18 month old children. She said the person doing the screening was (b)(6) and he tried to make her 18 month old walk through the AIT by himself which he could not do. She asked him if she could carry him through and he told her that the child needed to take his shoes off and walk through. The child laid on the ground and cried and would not walk through. She picked him up and told him that she was going to have to carry him through and TSO (b)(6) rolled his eyes and told her to go ahead but they were in the wrong check in line. She said they went to the line for families first and they told her that she needed to go through the regular line so she did. She apologized for being in the wrong line to the TSO and he called her an f*cking ahole. She said the TSO told her that he did not say what she thought he said to her but she is sure she heard him correctly. She told the manager at the screening checkpoint who identified himself as (TSO (b)(6)) that the event occurred and he was not helpful or empathetic to her concerns and gave her a complaint card and told her to file a complaint online or call the TCC.

The caller also stated that she had a pacemaker and requested the AIT instead of the WTMD of which the TSO granted but when she went through they continued to wand her which effected the calibration on her pacemaker and caused her heart rate to speed up. and wand her over her chest and made her pacemaker speed her heart up. The caller was not so concerned about the pacemaker but more of the fact how they would let her through with the wrong boarding pass.

Incident Details: (b)(6) said the last time she and her daughter flew from PDX to Wisconsin she had a very bad experience when she went through screening. She said she used to call (b)(6) at PDX to let her know that she needed assistance but (b)(6) was not there anymore and she had to talk to (b)(6). She talked to her in person and she explained to her that she needed special care going through screening due to her Hyper sensitivity disease. She said that she is not able to go through the AIT and if she does it shuts her brain and she gets very bad trauma.

She said she made it clear to the TSO director that she was going to be using a wheelchair and she could not go through the AIT. She said in most cases when she requested assistance it went very well in the past but this time was a very bad experience for her. She said she usually had a private screening away from the beepers and that kept her from exercising the brain trauma. She also said she used to travel more frequently than she does now but that she had recently moved out of Portland so she was not traveling through there. She said a lady came out and helped her but she did not know her name and she told her she could not go through the AIT but the TSO told her that she has to go through the AIT. The TSO also said that everyone has to go through AIT. She said she had the doctors recommendation in her hand but the TSO refused to look at her paper and pushed her over to the AIT. She went ahead and went through the AIT which caused her to have severe trauma.

(b)(6) said she was screaming, I cant, I cant and the TSO just kept pushing her to the AIT. She said she got out of the wheelchair and ran to keep the TSO from pushing her through the AIT. She said nobody questioned what was going on when the scene unfolded. She said when she contacted TS (b)(6) she told her that she had requested assistance and she had received the assistance. She said TSO (b)(6) had apologized to her and assured her that she would take care of the issue but she had never contacted her back concerning the matter. She wanted to report to us that this has occurred in hopes that she would not have to experience it again.

(b)(6) is a 73 year old passenger who wanted to report that one of the TSOs at ONT airport was very rude to her. She said this is the second time she had experienced a rough patdown and rude screening by the Female TSO at the screening station. She said it started out because the last couple of times she did not have to take her shoes off and this time they made her remove her shoes. She said her shoes went through and then other passengers put their items on the belt and then they made her take her sweater off and send it through the xray and then other people put their items on the belt. She said her items were getting separated as they went through screening and she was afraid she would not be able to find them all after her patdown was done.

She also said she had some VCR tapes and the tape had gotten damaged on a previous flight, she said they had sound but no picture. The airline told her that she could ask for the VCR tapes to be hand screened but The TSO told her that she could not do a hand screening on the VCR tapes. She said she put the tapes on the belt so now she has items in three different bins.

6/24/2015 10:37:33 AM She said when she opted for a patdown rather than going through the ALT she was told by the male TSO at the screening checkpoint to go wait in a certain spot for a patdown. She said the female TSO blamed her for not letting anybody know that she needed a patdown but she said she did let the male TSOs know and kept waving at the female TSO to let her know that she was waiting for her to come over. She said the TSO opened the gate and retrieved her items but she was concerned that all of her items were not in just the one bin. She asked her to get the other bins with her other items in it and the TSO told her that she could only get one bin at a time.

She said her patdown was very rough and when she was finished she looked over at another lady that was getting a patdown by the same TSO and she was being very gently with her. She said the TSO was unnecessarily rough with her when she had her patdown. She said she went through about 9:30 am and the TSO had short brown hair, not too tall.

Hello, I wanted to just make some comments to the response I received.

First of all, thank you for getting back to me in a timely manner. I honestly didn't expect any type of response from an organization the size of the TSA. Secondly, I appreciate the response you gave but just wanted to inform you that it didn't solve my problem, or really address it for that matter. My problem was A) the fact that TSA feels that its prosthetic protocol applies to a two year old, B) and this my main point, the level of training the TSA members had that handled the situation, and C) the fact that they wiped my two year old down for gun powder residue. I didn't even know about the gun powder wipe at the time because I was trying to handle our luggage that the TSA agent was rudely pushing me to take care of. My wife had to tell me about it last night. The agents who handled my daughter first didn't know what to do with the prosthetic and made her walk through the metal detector multiple times. One of them was about to remove my daughter prosthetic until another one came over and said that just a visual inspection needed to be done. After "inspecting" my daughters leg, (though she was wearing shorts already, so I don't know what more they needed to see) they then proceeded to wipe her down for gun powder! I truly do not understand this. Why was my daughter wiped for gun powder? Why not my wife and I? Do you really think my daughter is shooting guns? Do you think my two year old is that close to a gun being shot by anyone? I would please appreciate a valid reason to why the TSA agent did this because there is no rhyme or reason for it. And it is do to this poor training and judgement call from the TSA that has put us in this terrible situation. I really doubt anyone there really cares to do anything about it. But I hope this letter is in conjunction with many others that I'm sure are being received but other dissatisfied subjects, and I hope that is enough to have the TSA reconsider it's goals and training. You are meant to keep us safe. This experience made us in fact LOSE trust with the TSA. Please do something about this because you are costing people dearly.

Thank you

One of TSA's priorities is to minimize passenger wait times at our Nation's airports without adversely affecting the high level of security required in today's aviation environment. This model, which incorporates part-time employees, ensures that TSA has sufficient staff to handle peak periods of passenger volume while downsizing for slower periods. Studies conducted by TSA and by independent organizations such as the Government Accountability Office have found that the model has made scheduling of TSA screening officers much more effective and efficient.

The caller is currently at the SEA airport. He had a bad experience with two of the TSOs working there. The caller asked STSO (b)(6) to have a patdown instead of going through the AIT machine, the TSO said that he was not allowed to receive any other method of screening. Complaint: Asked for opt out of the microwave scanner. Was told nobody was available and I would have to wait for the next shift even though there were tsa employees standing around. Waited 15 minutes and was forced to go through the scanner to catch my plane. We are not supposed to have to go through the scanner and are supposed to be able to opt out.

Complaint:

On 6/17/15, I was traveling with my wife (b)(6) from San Francisco to Miami by American Airlines Flight # 208 departing at 7:00 AM (Our Record Locator: (b)(6)). Both of us are old, infirm, past 75 years in age and disabled. We both had requested wheelchairs. Both our Boarding Passes had Pre?™ printed along with our names. I had a very bitter experience at the Security Check at San Francisco Airport, before boarding the aircraft.

I suffered distress due to the prolonged and unjustified Security Check. I had informed the Security Officer before the screening about metal implants in my mouth and both the knees. Still, the Security Check lasted more than 30 minutes: it included walk-through metal detector, an AIT check, and thereafter a thorough patdown of whole body — including removal of belt and patdown around my midriff and waist. In this process, I had to wait for my turn with each of the four officers who performed the checks one after the other. During the security check, I was moved away from my first screening area for subsequent checks, leaving my carryon bags and cellphone on the belt of the luggage

Complaint: I requested an opt out screening and stood to the side of the AIT line allowing other passengers by. As I stood waiting multiple "officers" assisting travelers in the "Pre" line stood by, looked in my direction and laughed. At no point did they make an attempt to radio for a male assist as they seemed to engrossed in there conversation. After standing for 8 minutes. An "officer" walked up to the gate to allow entry. This officer had zero sense of urgency and seemed more attentive to the conversation of his coworkers in the "Pre" line than his job at hand. As we began to move over to my belongings, his lack of motivation became apparent as what could have been completed in under a few seconds of a walk to around a minute. As we came to my belongings we proceeded with the opt out pay down. When finished the "officer" began looking to swab his gloves and a testing device. To my dismay the only one functioning was located just after the AIT machine. Seeing the "officer" walked up with his hands in the air makes me wonder what contamination could have happened to his gloves and would have invalidated the test. After concluding, I

Complaint: Requested pat-down screening instead of AIT scanning as I am voluntarily permitted. TSA personnel were unable to locate a male TSA employee for about 15 minutes. Most staff were rude. One stout female Asian TSA employee even mocked my requests for assistance with a degrading response. She couldn't look me in the eye later. Finally, after a prolonged wait with my shoes and belt removed, holding my property the entire time, someone with the literal testicles necessary for the male pat-down showed up. This staff member was courteous and polite, in stark contrast to most of the other staff members of "lane 5".

Get your staff into shape. They are a disgrace. All this for 95% failure rate.

I have read the policies on your website and would like to document a complaint. I am 4.5 months pregnant and went through the SeaTac TSA screening checkpoint this morning at approximately 6:20am. I requested to use the metal detector in lieu of the wave machine and was told that my only option would be a highly uncomfortable pat down screen due to "protocol". While I respect the mission to protect passengers, there is nothing on your website or passenger rights site that indicates that pat down is my only option. In fact your pat down site indicates that a pat down is only required if I refuse either wave machine OR the metal detector. I specifically requested to use the metal detector and was denied that right.

While I was forced to wait for a pat down I watched several other passengers - including a middle aged woman with her teenage daughter - be welcome through the metal detector. I am incredibly disappointed that I was not afforded the same rights and opportunity as this other woman and her child.

If you're going to force a "protocol" it should be clearly articulated on your pat down website and in your passenger bill of rights.

Complaint: TSA employee outside of the AIT was notified that I needed to keep my shoes on. Rather than handle discretely, he call the TSA employee from the other side of the AIT, who came through and demanded to know about my condition and to see my documents. I was embarrassed and offended in front of other passengers. He did not relent until I asked for a supervisor. Her solution, rather than send me through the AIT then enhanced screen my shoes, was to order an enhanced pat-down. This type of harassment and intimidation, whether the result of poor training or malice, is unacceptable.

Re: Abuse by a Transportation Security Officer and obstruction of collection of data to report abuse

The following events occurred 28 June 2015, about 04:50, at Nashville International Airport (BNA).

I had checked in at the American Airlines ticket counter to fly standby on AAL 1264, BNA-DFW, departing at 06:00. My 13-year-old daughter was accompanying me. She had been issued a TSA Precheck standby pass, and I was issued a normal standby pass.

Caller travelled from Chicago O Hare, and no one reviewing the carry on bags. They were all allowed through with no screening.

CSS McCoy took over the call:

Caller stated that her and her mother were not screened going through the screening checkpoint at Gate L7 at the last checkpoint going on Spirit Airlines . The caller stated that her mother was able to bypass the AIT and the WTMD. The caller herself was also stated that she too was able to bypass the AIT and WTMD. The caller stated that she asked the TSO why they did not have to go through screening she stated the TSO said, (maybe it was because the mother had on a Navy shirt.)

PM Gate Terminal: L7

Disability Description: Caller has a pacemaker and knee replacement.

Incident Details: The caller, who is 79 years old, has a pacemaker and a knee replacement. When she was going through screening a TSO made her go through a WTMD. The caller told the TSO that she has a pacemaker but she still had to go through it. The TSO kept making her go through the WTMD even though the caller told her several times that she has the pacemaker. The caller stated that her heart kept going out of rhythm and the TSO was very rude and unpleasant. The TSO then told her to take off her shoes. The caller then told the TSO that she didn't have to since she was over the age of 75 but the TSO still made her take them off. The TSO then made her go back through the WTMD. The caller told her several times she has the pacemaker. The TSO then made her go through the AIT and everything was fine.

Caller has a complaint. They were passing through Atlanta on July 4th at 1215. They got in line at the checkpoint. As they were reaching down to put an item into one of the bins, an employee came by and pushed a table that hit the caller in groin where they had hernia surgery 18 days ago. Caller stated they hadn't even seen that person before being hit with the table. The caller was screaming at the officer that they have to be careful as the office ran back towards the AIT machine.

As he was yelling at the officer she turned and yelled at him to not point his finger at her. He told her that she had to be careful. When he went through the screening technology the same woman told another officer to pat him down. After the pat down the officer told him that he could not talk to her like a dog. Caller went to other officers and found out that the officer was the supervisor at the checkpoint. He was advised to call us by the other officers. Caller is surprised they are not in a hospital.

o Description of the experience: He went through the AIT machine, he was pulled aside and waved with the metal detector wand. Normally he has to go through a patdown. He wanted to add that there was a police officer at RSW, the caller greeted him good morning and after that the officers eyes did not leave him. He said he directly stared at him the entire time, even when he was sitting at his gate.

o Names or description of the TSA personnel involved or witnesses, if available: The TSO was a younger black guy who initially pulled him out. The officer was tall, Caucasian, probably 35 or 40 years old.

o Explanation as to how you believe this experience was discriminatory: The caller is French but he looks middle eastern and he is subject to pat downs almost every time. Both his bags were searched and he believes this was not random. He believes the planes delayed departure was due to his bags being searched.

Caller wants to know how come her and the passengers with her were treated so badly at the Wendover airport. She advised she felt like the TSO was picking on her. She went through the AIT machine and she advised that the machine did not alarm but she still received additional screening. She advised that her purse had her diamonds, and money in it and she was separated from it she advised that usually they take her and her belonging to another area if additional screening is needed. Did he get anyones names? No but there was buff guy and his name maybe (b)(6)

REASON for the call: There was an alarm of the screening technology. The TSO (male, 5 10, 215-220 pounds, mid 20s, short black hair that was combed back, appeared Italian) asked where he was traveling to in an authoritative tone (insinuating that he had no rights) and if he was flying home. The caller stated that the officer only asked him this because of his race and that the officer s questioning had racial overtones. He received ETD sampling of his and a patdown. The TSO squeezed his left testicle as hard as possible and it still hurts. He indicated that his insurance would cover his doctor s visit.

He asked where to make a proper complaint as state police advised that he contact TSA because they could not address this. He asked what law enforcement entity to contact and indicated that the TSO would hear from his attorney.

In a separate complaint, a TSO (white, male, 6 feet, 250 pound, balding) asked his the px before him his age. The px replied 14 and was directed to the WTMD. He asked the same of his son who is 14 as well. The TSO directed him to the AIT and asked if he had anything in his pockets. He feels that this was done because of how his son looks (his mother is Spanish and he, the father is Greek).

To-Whom-It-May-Concern,

I am emailing to inform you about an incident that occurred as I was traveling last week which caused me both physical and mental harm.

To preface this incident: I have been diagnosed with Complex Regional Pain Syndrome originating in my left foot/ankle and have an implanted spinal cord stimulator to manage my chronic pain. While traveling, I always carry a medical card that informs people about my medical implant and that it may set off security sensors.

On Thursday July 2, my companion and I traveled from the Philadelphia International Airport (PHL) to Las Vegas (LAS) on Southwest flight 118 with an eventual destination of Portland (PDX) on Southwest flight 1874. We passed through the Philadelphia Security checkpoint at approximately 5:30 AM.

As I passed through security, I took off my shoes and kept my ankle-length socks on. I placed my shoes, bags, and computer on the x-ray machine conveyor belt. I entered the AIT unit as instructed by a male TSA Agent located on the other side of the unit. After the scan completed, I stepped out of the unit and waited on the footprint icons in front of a female TSA Agent. As I waited, the female TSA agent said my foot triggered the AIT. I could see the screen to my left which highlighted my left foot/ankle. Then, without consent, asking permission, or informing me of his actions, the male TSA agent bent down diagonally behind me and grabbed my left ankle region. This caused immediate pain as any pressure, especially without warning, can trigger crippling nerve pain. I also immediately experienced great anxiety and panic due to that pain. There was no opportunity to tell him to be careful because he grabbed my ankle from behind, surprising me and did not ask if I consented to a pat-down.

I exited the screening area and walked to the conveyor belt to collect my belongings. I started to collect my things, still in pain and panic but wanting to remove myself from the area to collect myself and try to calm down. I told my companion what had just occurred and then went to both the female and then the male TSA agents to inform them that I have a serious medical condition and that they need to ask consent before touching anyone as they may have a medical condition like mine. Both agents acknowledged my complaint but with nothing more than a nod and a few words. Neither asked me if I needed medical attention.

Experience: Caller is at the airport and said that two TSA supervisors. Caller is at the Tampa both STSO (b)(6) and STSO (b)(6). Caller went through the AIT, caller is african american and she has dreadlocks but it has no pins in it at all. She stated they all say there are anomalies. Caller stated she did not want them going through her hair, she stated white women had caps on and were never stopped at all. Caller believes they are racial profiling. She told them they were not allowed to go through her things without her permission and they werent allowed to go through it until they were private.

The police officer that was called was (b)(6). She finally decided that she would go through it changed the entire thing and said they did not remember where the anomalies were so she had to go through the full body patdown. Caller stated she was not disruptive and she did not cuss or scream at anyone.

Names or description of people involved: STSO (b)(6) and STSO (b)(6) and (b)(6) at the Tampa Airport police Department

Explanation as to why it was discriminatory: Because she was seeing Caucasian males and females with ball hats on and they were never even stopped and they never were asked to go through the AIT they all just zoomed through the WTMD.

REASON for the call: The caller went through security at SLC, and asked to opt out of the AIT. He was told by a TSO that they make all passengers go through the AIT screening, and he felt forced to undergo this screening as well. He wanted to file a complaint regarding the incident, and believes that the passenger should have the option to opt out.

The caller is a FF with Southwest Airlines, and she has noticed a decrease in the number of times that she has been chosen. She wanted to know why this was happening, and if the AIT machines were safe due to radiation.

She says that she wanted to opt out of the AIT, but the TSO said that she had no right to opt out, and when she pressed the issue, the TSO took her time and acted like she was calling someone but finally did it herself 10 minutes later. Caller has a complaint about the screening process. She is a diabetic and she has an insulin pump. She feels the fact that she cannot ask to go through the WTMD instead of the AIT is a violation of her rights. She also feels the patdown was too invasive. She felt the officer touched her inappropriately in her private area.

7/14/2015 4:48:26 PM
The caller is calling with a complaint. He is traveling out of Las Vegas International airport on terminal 1 at the Egate yesterday at 1 p.m, and asked for a pat down instead of going through the AIT machine. The caller states that no one was watching their bags or the trays going through the screening machine. He stated that no one was paying attention to the luggage and he witnessed someone's luggage be stolen.

Disability Description: (b)(6) has cancer and a painful area around her abdominal area that cant be touched.

Incident Details: Caller said she was just subjected to the most horrific, embarrassing pat-down of her life at PHL. She said she noticeably has cancer and has a very sensitive area in her abdominal area that is very painful when touched. She said they screened her with the AIT machine and after 3 minutes she had to put her arms down and they subjected her to a pat-down. She said that they pulled her to a private room and screened her using a more extensive pat-down. She said the TSO used excessive force in a sensitive area on her abdomen after she told them to be gentle in her abdomen area causing her to scream out in pain.

She said then the STSO (b)(6) STSO came over and told her she was a angry and bitter person and told her off. She said she tried to explain and the STSO kept cutting her off and told her how bitter and angry she was. She feels like this level of discrimination was due to her medical condition. She then said a Federal Agent came over and cleared her from screening and was very nice.

At Minneapolis St Paul on June 13-2015 6:30pm caller had gone through security and was told her son did not have to go through the AIT. He proceeded through the metal detector and retrieved his belongings. She proceeded through the AIT and received a pat down. Caller tried to ask a TSO named (b)(6) why she received a pat down. TSO (b)(6) refused to answer. A supervisor was called to the checkpoint to conduct the pat down. All other passengers were treated with respect by TSO (b)(6)

Caller was traveling through the George Bush International Airport June 27-2015 1200pm. As caller was proceeding through the checkpoint her son was directed to go through the AIT and the caller was directed through the metal detector. Her son was pulled out of line and a pat down was performed. A TSO named (b)(6) was present and when caller asked why her son was being patted down (b)(6) got in her face and stated "You will not yell at me today. Your son must receive a pat down or you will not fly today." (b)(6) then directed caller to gather her stuff and proceed through the checkpoint. Caller was upset and admits to yelling at the TSO (b)(6)

Dear TSA,

I would like to express my disregard with the TSA officers in San Juan, Puerto Rico airport. On Saturday, July 18, 2015 I was traveling with my family from San Juan to Houston (Hobby airport). Contrary to what is in the TSA website, the TSA officers in San Juan separated myself from my wife and 3 year old son for approximately 10 minutes. What follows is a brief synopsis of the situation: As ordered by TSA officers I stood behind the checkpoint line as my wife, son, and all our belongings crossed to the other end. This was a rather stressful situation because any of our belongings or even our son could have been lost on such a busy day at San Juan airport. Thanks to God nothing of the sort happened.

The TSA website clearly states that your AIT is completely voluntary. However, the TSA officer at San Juan repeatedly forced me to use the AIT, and I was only allowed to forgo it after I demanded the pat down three times. Eventually, after my insistence, they gave me the pat down, but this in turn caused me to wait for an over extended period of time; despite them knowing I was traveling with my family and my wife needed help with our belongings and Son.

Lastly, I want to say that of all the airports I have been to, and of those that use AIT, TSA officers have never mentioned that AIT is optional and there is a lack of signs stating AIT is optional. Were these signs available I believe misunderstandings like the kind I recently experienced could have been easily avoided or quickly expedited. As a frequent flyer I try my best to stay up to date with regulations and be as compliant as possible with your officers which is why, it is of great concern to me when I'm presented with situations contrary to information found on your official website. Traveling as it is can be hectic, stressful, and filled with unexpected circumstances therefore I would kindly appreciate it that ill-prepared employees not be added to the mix.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

She has Twisted braids for her hair and it is her real hair.

Are they supposed to change the gloves before the search?

The caller and his wife has been trying to file a complaint through our website and they have been getting a pop up screen saying this platform is not available. They want to file a complaint on a TSA officer.

The callers wife and his three kids were going through the screening process. His Wife told officer (b)(6) that she didn't want to go through the AIT. She was verbally harassed by officer (b)(6). The wife then told the officer that her son was not going through the AIT as well. Officer (b)(6) then started yelling at her to the point where everyone noticed her. The callers children were very scared. When the wife was gathering her things from the belt after screening, Officer (b)(6) snatched the items out of the wife's hand.

Situation:

On 07/03/15 early in the morning at 5:30am at JFK to board a Delta 439 flight leaving to Seattle. It was at Terminal 4 Gate B26. Caller's mother was in a wheelchair, her mobility is short term she gets tired but can stand. When caller's mother got to the TSA checkpoint she said they asked her to stand in the AIT machine and then subjected her to a patdown. She said it was a very rough pat-down and the TSO slapped her on the back. When the caller's mother told her the patdown was painful the TSO began to laugh. Caller said this was extremely outrageous. She said her mother is 85 years old and very frail. She said she believes she was discriminated against due to her disabilities.

Cher Madame, Cher Monsieur.

Mes deux bagages en soute (vol AF 017 pour Paris CDG) ont fait l'objet d'une inspection approfondie par les services de TSA, le 20 juillet 2015 à JFK. Je n'ai rien à redire sur le principe qui est légal et utile pour la sécurité des voyageurs.

Je regrette que l'une des serrures (le cadenas d'un sac Lancel) ait disparu ce qui n'est pas trop grave. En revanche les deux bagages ont voyagé sans aucune fermeture ce qui aurait permis à plusieurs moment qu'ils soient ouverts par des personnes mal intentionnées, surtout si j'avais voyagé avec plusieurs escales.

Ce n'était pas le cas, mon vol était direct, et à première vue je n'ai pas observé d'objet ayant disparu.

Evidemment, il est toujours désagréable de subir une fouille qui est une forme d'intrusion dans la vie privée. J'en comprends les raisons et les besoins pour la sécurité. Je suggère néanmoins que l'administration de TSA

1° prévienne les passagers avant le départ qu'ils ont fait une fouille, ce qui permettrait par exemple de donner aux contrôleurs le code de la serrure pour refermer la valise, et d'être plus vigilants à l'arrivée de leurs bagages

2° qu'un système de fermeture même léger (large ruban adhésif) assure un minimum de sécurité contre des manipulateurs malveillants.

En espérant que mes remarques vous seront utiles.

avec mes meilleures salutations

(b)(6)

PS Pouvez vous m'expliquer pourquoi nos bagages ont été fouillés ? J'ai regardé le site TSA et je n'ai vu aucune informations qui m'aurait été utile pour mieux sécuriser mes bagages. Je voyage depuis 50 ans par avion et c'est la première fois que cela m'arrive.

Dear Madam, Dear Sir,

My two hold luggage have undergone a thorough inspection by the TSA services, on July 20, 2015 at JFK (flight AF 017 to Paris CDG).

I have no complaints about the principle which is legal and useful to the safety of passengers.

However I regret that one of the locks of my Lancel bag has disappeared. Both luggages have traveled without being closed which would have allowed on several times open malicious people to open them, especially if I had traveled with several stopovers.

By chance my flight was direct, and at first I did not observe any object having disappeared.

Obviously, it is always unpleasant to undergo a search which is a form of intrusion into private life. I understand the reasons and the necessity for security purposes. Nevertheless, I suggest that the TSA administration

1- warn passengers that they have done a search, so they could give the code of the lock controllers to close the bag, and they would be more vigilant in monitoring their luggage,

2- put a light closure (wide tape, for example) which will provide basic security against malicious manipulators.

Hoping that my comments will be helpful for anyone,

Sincerely

(b)(6)

PS Could you explain me why our bags have been selected for physical inspection. We didn't see on your web site any information helping us to secure better our luggage. I am travelling by airplane since 50 years and it is the first time it happened

7/22/2015 The caller is filing a complaint on TSA at the screening process in Washington-Dulles International Airport. He said they closed half of the screening and made everyone go through one AIT machine. He arrived at the airport an hour early and because

1:08:00 of the screening closing, he missed his flight by 2 minutes. They booked him another flight, which was not go out for another 9 hours. He is highly upset, and just wanted to make a point.

Hello,

On Wednesday, July 15th around 3:20 PM at Orlando International Airport, Southwest Airlines, I had a horrible experience with your security measures and staff. Your AIT scanner alarmed/flagged my genital area. I received an uncomfortable, embarrassing genital pat down. My hand wipe also alarmed, no idea why, as I spent the day at Animal Kingdom, Disney. I was patted down AGAIN, full body, more thoroughly and aggressively and it was violating. I missed my flight.

Over the past year, your AIT scanners have been alarming/flagging my genital area - this has NEVER happened before. Nothing about me has changed. My only guess related to this flag/alarm are my medical scrotal implants (made of silicone). UNACCEPTABLE. It is absolutely horrendous, embarrassing and discriminatory that I would have to receive a genital pat down EVERY time I go through your security scanner. Your staff should be trained to identify simple/normal medical implants. I am tired of being harassed and violated every time I fly because of this. I will take this as far as I can, because it is downright DISCRIMINATION. The Orlando airport is not the only airport, it has started happening over the last year at every AIT scanner.

This is unAmerican, you are not helping anyone, this is NOT freedom. Take a look at Europe's screening measures, they've had more security scares and they still don't let that trickle down to their innocent law-abiding citizens. This is politics, this is AIT scanner businesses in with the politicians - it's about money - NOT about our (law-abiding people) SAFETY.

Disgusted,

Your canned response is unacceptable (pasted at the very bottom below my original email). Either my email below was not read or it was not understood. Your TSA staff and scanner (AIT) readers are DISCRIMINATING against those with legitimate medical devices (silicone implants - no metal). This is unacceptable. You are violating people and their rights.

Caller flew from LAX yesterday. He does not go through the AIT and usually waits for the patdown. He was waiting for a TSO to come and while he was waiting, they kept piling stuff up on the bin with his computer at the end of the belt. He stated that he felt, because of this, he left his laptop at the checkpoint and it was TSA's fault. He has called the LandF at LAX at 310-242-9073, which referred him to an email. He has emailed them three times, but no one has gotten back in touch with him. He asked if there is someone we can call for him at LAX.
Disability Description: Visual Impairment.

Incident Details: Caller wanted to know what the proper protocol is for passengers that are totally blind and uses a cane. He said at other airports that they scanned it before and after his AIT but when he traveled today through AUS that the TSO made him give them his cane and they kept it for screening for about a minute. He wanted to know why they had to take his cane away from him for when other airport do not. Passenger said he believes the TSO was standing over behind him twirling his cane like a baton. He said he did not believe that the TSO had the cane in his possession long enough to do any real testing on it. He asked me if I thought this would be considered discrimination against him because he is blind.

Caller works for the airline, and prefers to use the AIT instead of the WTMD. Caller was told today that she had to go through the WTMD to be screened, but her metal hip alarms the technology. This is the reason the caller wanted to use the AIT. Caller said that the blonde, short haired, white female that is about 5 feet, 4 inches TSO was being rude to her in front of her co-workers and other passengers about only being allowed to use the AIT. Caller was asked if she had a medical condition that would be an issue with the WTMD, and the caller answered that she did not have to answer that because she feels it is no one's business. Caller wanted to know what the protocol was for the screening technology and if she has to inform the TSOs about her hip replacement. Caller does have a card from her doctor that explains her hip replacement.

Call Reason: - Caller is calling to file a complaint about a TSO named (b)(6). She was completely rude. She ran the scanning machine. He opted out of the AIT screening. HE had to wait 10 minutes for someone to come to conduct pat down. 5-6 people or TSO's were standing around. He complained to the female TSO and she said almost in a threatening manner, "Do you want me to get your stuff and run it again?" In addition when he opted out of the AIT she was rude. She stated we will deal with that when the time comes. He spoke with the supervisor who told him he had a couple complaints today on the same TSO.

Special Notes - She told the TSO that she was 26 weeks pregnant and that she wanted to opt out of the AIT. He told her that the AIT was as safe as her cell phone and that she was stupid for not wanting to go through the AIT. He also told her that she had more radiation in her cell phone. He made her feel horrible. She went through the AIT. She was told that something was showing up in her stomach area. She had to have a patdown. She was told to lift her stomach and her shirt. She was also told to lower her pants. The TSO used a hand held metal detector. This was her first time flying and it was not a good experience. She said that she felt discriminated against because she was pregnant. She did not get the name of the TSO. She flew from PHX to ORD. She wanted to make a complaint.

Call Reason: Caller has a son (b)(6) with special needs. She states that they were at MCO and her son stepped through the AIT and the TSO was sarcastic with her son and upset him and gave him a patdown and then when she said something about it, he said that she should have told him sooner that he had special needs.

Incident Details: She informed the guy running the AIT machine that she has an electronic implant in her butt. She has a card saying that she cannot go through any of the machines. The screener made her go through the AIT machine twice and was very rude about it. Because the AIT screening did not go well she was subjected to a lot of additional screening. She was very embarrassed about it. She was offered private screening and she did do that. Her electronic implant is no longer working and she believes this is because she was forced to go through the AIT machine. The woman who assisted her with the rest of the screening was very nice but she is upset about the way the guy treated her and that he did not take her disability seriously.

Disability Description: She had surgery on her right knee and she was in a wheelchair.

Incident Details: She said on Sunday she flew from Jamaica to FLL to Philly and she was in a wheelchair and she had a yellow carry on bag. She said a young African American female Officer came to her and said there were canned tea beverages, bottled water and lotion in her yellow bag and she was going to have to have a patdown. She said she was not given the option for a private screening. She said the other Officer told her she had to have the patdown done and that she can go to another room. She said the Officer took her shoes and she said this is the second time she has had a patdown done. She asked for a Supervisor and they told her she would have to wait until after the patdown. She said her complaint is on both being disabled and the patdown. She said this happened on Sunday at FLL and that she does not have the Officers names. She said the other patdown was done in Jamaica in May. She said she did not like the patdown done between her legs at FLL and that she had already gone through the ait machine. She requested an email. She requested the postal mail address for her complaint.

The caller has a complaint from 7-16-15. The caller tried to submit his complaint online and the system will not send the complaint. The caller states that he was at ORD at 6:00am and the caller states that it was extremely busy at the airport. The caller arrived an hour and a half to get through screening and he walked on the plane as it was departing. The caller states that at gates 7A and 7B at the American Terminal they have made half the lanes precheck lines and the caller states that the precheck line had no one in it and the caller states that they were all crowded into other lines. The caller states that officers were taking people from the middle of the line and take them into the precheck line and the caller states that the officers should have taken people from the front of the line because they had been there longer. The caller asked the officer that was taking people from the line what about us that are in the front of the line and the officer responded that if he wants to go in the precheck line he should join the precheck program. The officer in question was a white male about 38 years old with light hair. The officer was walking around with an Ipad and was taking passengers to the precheck line. The caller states that when he finally got to the line they had 4 AIT s and one was closed and the caller wants to know why TSA has the machines if they are not going to use them. The caller states that the officers at ORD are very rude. The caller wants to verify that the lines are designated by the airline and airport. The caller thinks that the precheck is a hindrance to other passenger because the volume of passengers does not support the space it takes at the screening checkpoint. The caller states the officer made him feel like if he wants to get through screening quicker he would have to pay for the service.

I requested to opt out of the AIT machine prior to my flight at Dallas Love Field yesterday. When I informed the agent who was waving me towards the AIT machine, he looked at me (and glanced at my body), then said something like, "Uh, you know, breasts, buttocks, groin...?" I told him I was aware of what opting out entails and that I had done it many times.

Usually when I request to opt out, the standard response is, "Step over here. Female assist." The response from the male agent yesterday made me very uncomfortable; I am choosing to believe that he was not trained/prepared to respond to my request and that he wasn't intentionally trying to harass me, although that is how I felt.

The reason that I always opt out of AIT is that I do not feel comfortable with my body being scanned and examined by an unknown person who may be male: I prefer to be checked by a female examiner, even though it is also invasive. Yesterday's experience made me feel like I got the worst of both worlds. I would request Caller says that he was going through security. His 94 year old wife was in a wheelchair. He is 82 years old. Their skycap helped them. His wife was able to bypass the normal security line, but he had to go through the normal line. He went through the first set of machines and there was an alarm. He had his belt on and has multiple metal implants in his body. The agent there supposedly asked him why he didn't tell her before in a rude manner. He then went to the AIT where another agent supposedly rudely told him to remove his hat and then rudely told him he knew better than to leave money in his pocket. They made him take off his shoes even though he is over 75. His screening resulted in a patdown, but he has no complaints of the gentleman who done the patdown; only the two women who were supposedly rude to him. He didn't catch their names. The one at the WTMD was in 30s to 40s with short brown hair and maybe glasses. The other at the AIT was in her 40s to 50s with short hair.

Security Issue: Just a question - is it ok to let TSA employees and airline personel with their families (not on duty) to bypass the line and not go through xray but just through the metal detector? I understand tsa employees are not allowed priority treatment as policy but as I was standing in the "even more speed line" two whole employee families were placed ahead of us. In addition I was travelung with 2 kids that were put through the xray scanner (usually they go through the detector) but the employee asked to be put through the detector and was granted the privilege with his family. Not a corteous experience at JFK as I am used from TSA in other places. Dont think security was breached but not right...

Disability Description: Caller wears a brace and would like to file a complaint regarding her screening experience.

Incident Details: Caller wears a brace. She went through the AIT. The TSO who handled her screening was well mannered and standard. She allowed her to sit during the patdown since an alarm was generated. A STSO came over and was rude. She rudely and raising her voiced asked her "What s in your pockets?". She yelled when she spoke to her the majority of the time. She was in a wheelchair when she arrived and transferred to a chair for a patdown and AIT screening. She had a bad experience obtaining a wheelchair due to a long wait but she recognizes that it is airline related. The brace was made of metal. The STSO said that if she buzzed, she wouldn't be allowed on a plane in a condescending way. She stated she felt discriminated against based on a disability, or like they failed to accommodate her.

8/3/2015 3:00:20 PM Caller said when coming through the PDX security check point he opted out of the AIT and WTMD and the TSO that conducted his pat down seemed nervous and out of sort. When going up the callers right groin his hand was shoved up very forcefully and hurt the caller. He was near terminal E. He did not get a name or a badge number. The TSO had an accent and seemed to be around 50-55 years of age.

Hi, I just wanted to share my experience that I had at PDX. I didn't know much about the AIT scanning that you guys now have through security and I was informed that if I didn't want to do it I could opt out and receive a metal detector and pat down. When I approached the front of the line there was the AIT scanner and the metal detector to walk through.

Now when I tried to stay in the line to go through the metal detector I was asked to move to the AIT scanner.

8/4/2015 8:28:45 AM I asked the gentleman if I could choose to stay in the metal detector line to which he replied with "No you can't, but that's a great question." Now I wanted to make sure I was informed properly so I came to your website to see if, in fact, it is my right to opt out of it if I chose to.

So I guess my question is if that is something I am able to do why do you have employees blatantly tell me that I cannot? Not to mention talking down to me like I am a child when I am a 24 year old woman asking a simple question. If you allow people to opt of the AIT scanning you might want to let your employees know that. I don't appreciate being treated like an idiot when what I was doing was completely within my rights.

REASON for the call: The caller went through the AIT machine at San Francisco airport and the lady told her that she needed to hold her glasses up, then the guy behind the machine told her she needed to put them on her face and he came around and forced them on her face and now the glasses are broken.

8/4/2015 4:04:26 PM The caller is applying for TSA Pre Check. She has had a knee replacement in the past and would like to know if she can be exempt from screening when she gets TSA Pre Check so that she does not have to go through additional screening? She also would like to know why she is not able to collect her belongings while she is waiting on a patdown? She asked if there were any alternative screenings other than going through the AIT if you have a knee replacement?

Caller state that she went through screening at Fort Lauderdale and when she requested a pat down instead of going through the machine they refused. She was made to go though the AIT and she is pregnant. Her doctor told her not to go though this device for medical conditions. When she went to San Diego to come back home the officer allowed the pat down and let her know that she does have the right to opt out of the screening with machines. She just wants to let someone know this has happened and she is upset about it.

Security Issue: I was processing through the Pre Check Lane at JAX around 0927, as I walked through to metal detector I was randomly selected for additional screening. I was told to step back out and go through the body scanner, after a few minutes a female LTSO came over to screen me and the gentleman behind me. When I walked into the machine I handed the LTSO my cowboy hat which I was not required to remove but was trying to be helpful to screening, she informed me that my hat had to go through the x-ray, at that time I politely asked for it to be hand checked, she to me it had to go through and to me it had a metal band (pointing to the wrong place where one would be) I informed her that I was a random selection and did not alarm the metal detector, I politely asked that she hand check the hat three times and was told that was not an option. I had anomalies on my back when I was scanned and she, stated there were no males available, and walked away leaving me unattended for a period of 30 to 60 sec. without saying anything to me. My concern is that had I not known what needed to happen I could have left and been in the terminal without being screened. MAJOR SECURITY ISSUE. I

Caller is traveling with a breast pump and frozen breast milk and every time she flies out of Atlanta Hartsfield she goes thorough the AIT machine and then she is made to have a patdown. And she has had to do multiple patdowns just for one flight. She never gets consistent screening when traveling with Breast Milk and Breast pump.

Incident Details: The caller flew from Oakland to Las Vegas and then from Vegas to Oakland on SW.

She says the TSOs in Las Vegas were horrible to her. She has breast cancer. She wants to know if it is possible to give her travel information and a picture of herself for someone to roll the tape and see of how horrid her experience with TSA was.

She went through the AIT machine and the machine showed the area that she needed a pat down which was her breasts and ribcage. Instead of being offered and receiving a private screening, the TSO gave her a pat down on her breasts in front of everyone, humiliating her. They asked her in front of everyone why she didn't have reconstruction surgery and what the bone that was sticking out of her chest was. They rescanned her over and over and over again. She was very embarrassed and she has prematurely aged so everyone was staring at her.

She also claims that the TSO hurt her. The caller is mortified over this. She was still in pain this morning when she woke up because they pressed so hard during the patdown. She feels discriminated against because she has breast cancer. She even thinks she may have a cracked rib.

The caller also says her checked bag had been inspected and everything was in disarray.

Special Notes - Caller has Multiple Sclerosis. She has a gel medication that cost $800 a tube. The bottle contains 100 grams. She told the TSO about her medication. She went through the AIT and almost fell. She was kept separate from her purse and her carry-on for about 10 minutes. She was taken to a different area. She had to walk on the dirty floor with her bare feet. All the items in her purse and carry-on were taken out. She said that the TSO told her that MS is not that big of a deal. The TSO told her to stand on one leg, hold her arms out, and to spread her legs. She said that the TSO put her hands in her crotch, her buttocks, and touched her breast. She was asked to lift her shirt and turn her pants down. She said that she was overwhelmed. She asked to call her husband and was told that she could not touch anything. She canceled her trip due to the incident. The purpose of her trip was to visit an eye specialist that she has been waiting months to see. She said that on three occasions someone said that she should be treated like someone in a wheelchair and that they should get her a wheelchair. She said that she was molested when she was 12 years old. She was told that all of the things that she went through was because of the medication. She said that she feels like she was discriminated against. She said that they took a picture of her drivers license and told her that she was uncooperative. She wanted to make a complaint.

Comments: As a constant traveler being in the Navy I have noticed through several airports that personnel that work for airlines are permitted to travel through security check points with beverages, belts, items in pockets that causes metal detectors to go off without as much as a flinch from the TSA agents. As being in a position of authority in the Navy, I have come to learn that leading by example is the best way to set a positive example and in this instance relieve favoritism towards airport staff. It seems to me that the enemy would not target airport patrons that rarely travel but those that have constant access to any area. When I asked the TSA agent why a stewardess is permitted to pass through security with beverages and belts she said because they work here and they do what they want. In keeping our nation secure no exceptions should be made for staff or patrons passing through security. I hope that this sheds light on a growing lacedicial attitude that is embodied with keeping Americans safe. Thank you.

The caller said everytime he flies he notices TSO's walking around the metal detectors with bags, thermoses and other items. The caller said he is going to fill out a card he was given and he was going to send in a letter. The caller said he believes everyone should abide by the rules.

I told the caller to the employees have underwent background checks. I told the caller we monitor the number and nature of complaints to track trends.

Not comfortable with images of my undressed person being viewed by anyone. I often prefer the pat-down to the body scan at Security, but I never understood why some people were allowed to go through the metal detector, while others were forced to go through the body scan. So I asked. The man working said I would need to speak to a supervisor. I said, ok, but I wasn't really looking to speak to a supervisor, I simply wanted to understand. He repeated that I would need to speak to a supervisor and that I should have said earlier that I wouldn't go through the body scan. I asked at what point I should ask, and he repeated "earlier." This wasn't very clear or kind, but I figured the supervisor would explain later.

In the meantime, we had been waiting about 7 minutes for the woman supposed to be patting me down, and I was starting to worry about my PC left on the security ramp, so I asked the man if he could go and make sure it was still there. He told me to just wait (not very kindly). I responded I really wasn't comfortable leaving it there, so he let me go to a point where I could see the basket I had put the PC in. That didn't help at all (since I can't see through the basket), but at least a supervisor had arrived so I thought the worst was over and she would let me at least check to see if the PC was there.

This supervisor's name is (b)(6) and she is the most hostile woman I have ever had to deal with in my life.

She came over barking, "What is the problem here!". The man working responded, "She needs a pat down." (b)(6) then said, "Well then you need a pat down and that's it. What's your problem." I said, "I'm fine with that, but I don't understand why no one can check to see if..." She cut me off saying, "Excuse me, lose the attitude. This is a government property..." I honestly don't remember what else she said, it was so absurd and unrelated to what I was trying to say. I finally said I wasn't interested in arguing and that I just wanted the pat down. She continued to bark at me, cutting me off, telling me that "I" was giving Security a problem (this is absurd), until finally she left.

The woman who performed the pat-down was very kind and professional. She asked me if I would still like to speak to a supervisor. I said, honestly, I just don't understand why no one else can explain what the rule is between the metal detector and the body scan. She explained as best and kindly as she could, and I thanked her. She asked me if I wanted to speak to a different supervisor about my experience and I thought that it wasn't a bad idea. The woman who patted me down had a male

So I agreed to speak to another supervisor. But instead of a different supervisor coming over (b)(6) came over having learned I wanted to complain, barking even more about my "problem." So I said to her that I was not happy about the way I was being treated. not an automated reply. Clearly your employees are disgruntled so they pull stunts like this to feel better.

Thank you for your e-mail in which you inquire about the reasons for secondary screening.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

013 10:09:£ We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

We hope this information is helpful.

I returned from a trip yesterday and my bag did not make it. I got it today and saw that my bag was selected for inspection. The same bag was also inspected last week. I now know that my bag did not make it because it was inspected yet again thus delaying it getting to the plane. The odds of a bag being inspected twice on the same trip are so low that this was clearly done on purpose. I think this is uncalled for and an apology at the least is owed.

on 12/31/2012 was at 1:39 pm. She went through the checkpoint at 11:30 am. She is 76 years old and she said that she no longer has to go through a patdown because of her age. She gave the agent her passport. She said the passport shows her age. The agent disappeared with her passport and would not tell her why she took her passport. She told the TSO that she did not want to go through the AIT. She was told that she would go through the AIT or get a patdown. She went through the AIT and still got a patdown. She said that the patdown was just running her fingers under her watch and bracelet. She said that her daughter and granddaughter were pulled aside because they were part of her family. She said that her daughter told her that she was getting a patdown because she was wearing a Jewish Star. Caller asked to go through the metal detector and was told no. The agent's name is STFO (b)(6). She said that there was a gentleman named (b)(6) who was yelling at her that she was holding up his line of traffic. She wants to know what the agent did when she disappeared with her passport.

I gave the following information: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is undertaking efforts to enhance security and focus its resources by moving away from a one-size-fits-all approach and applying new intelligence driven, risk-based screening procedures while enhancing technology and improving the passenger experience at security checkpoints. As part of this effort, TSA has implemented a program to revise screening procedures for passengers who appear to be age 75 and older.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—though not completely eliminate—the need for a physical patdown on travelers 75 and older that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms. It's important to remember, that any individual may be required to remove their shoes or undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means.

I connected her to MB

ACCEPTED TRF to MB:

She stated this is the first time she flew out of FLL for years because she felt she was assaulted before. She was convinced it would be alright this time.

Told her I do not know why the Officer took her passport for a moment and she can contact the CSM by redialing our number and enter FLL for airport code to get the number. The CSM may be able to tell her why the Officer asked for her passport.

I asked if the equipment alarmed when she went through screening. She stated it did not.

She stated she did not want exposed to the machine so she told them she would not go through and they made her have a patdown.

Told her that is procedure and I shared the following info with her:

Caller states: Flying from Reagan to Eugene Oregon with a stop in Salt Lake City on Delta. Caller is traveling with cats and is upset that the cats are counted as her carry on even though she pays extra for them to fly. Also concerned that during screening that the cats will get away.

Advised caller: The baggage limits are set by the airline.

Current Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires that passengers traveling with pets remove the animal from its carrier so that the pet may be carried through the walk through metal detector (WTMD).

If a passenger believes that the removal of their pet could result in escape, a Supervisory Transportation Security Officer (TSO) can authorize an alternative screening measure that he or she deems sufficient. When permitted, an animal may remain in its carrier and be carried through the WTMD by the passenger; however, the passenger, the animal, and the carrier must undergo secondary screening.

Additional screening of the animal may include a visual observation, a patdown inspection, or Explosives Trace Detection (ETD). If additional screening requires removal of the animal from its carrier, passengers may request a private screening. TSOs may ask the owner for assistance during any part of the inspection.

Hello,

013 2:26:50 This is not the first time that an unpleasant and unnecessary incident happened while passengers are being screened at TSA airport premises. Another passenger lost her valuable jewelry since your requirement is to ask passengers to remove them prior to pass the metal detector. Another passenger stole them as the camera surveillance caught it. It happened in Fort Lauderdale International Airport on 12/9/2012 and in Miami not long time ago. TSA should be fully responsible for each passenger from the moment its entrance until its departure from TSA's premises.

If you are not going to take an immediate action, that incident won't be the last one. Do not wait for long as the tragedy happened to Newtown left without any security. We are tired to try to solve the problems afterwards. Open your eyes and do not only follow your rules! Try to work with an open mind!

Please do not reply with a routine answer.

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): George Bush Intercontinental Airport (Houston), United Airlines flight 1490 from San Jose, Costa Rica, connecting to flight United Airlines 1616 to Chicago O'Hare...

Comments: At about 7:50 p.m. on January 3, my family was passing through the TSA checkpoint at George Bush Intercontinental Airport connecting to our flight to Chicago after arriving in Houston from Costa Rica. When asked to pass through the x-ray machine, we opted out.

013 2:26:50 They put us to the side with another woman who had also opted out and was waiting for the 'pat down'. I was then brought with my daughter through the standard metal detector and cleared through security while we waited for my wife to receive a pat down. As we were waiting, we heard a TSA employee (on our side of the checkpoint) begin ranting about how "All these passengers are opting out because they're uninformed about these machines." Not like it's TSA's business why we were opting out, but I opted out not because I am uninformed about anything, but because I believe free people have an obligation to resist tyranny.

In any case, a man a few people behind us in line also opted out and was waiting for his pat down. He was clearly angered by the TSA employee, and the two of them began a shouting match over the short wall. I couldn't hear all of it, but the TSA employee was shouting at the man that the machines "don't use radiation," which is just ignorant. I suppose she could have claimed they use a low or safe dose of radiation (not sure if that would be correct), but it's disconcerting that someone operating an x-ray machine would make a claim like that. In case I'm not being totally clear: someone who doesn't understand that x-rays are radiation should not be operating an x-ray machine.

In my opinion, shared by millions of my fellow Americans, people who refuse to be x-rayed as a condition of traveling in their own country are heroes, and we do not deserve to be treated like this. The clear intent of the TSA employee was to humiliate us in front of our fellow passengers for refusing to submit to the x-ray, which is unacceptable. If the price of opting out is being publicly humiliated by TSA employees, it's not an option at all.

While the TSA employee and the man were arguing, I heard another TSA employee (the one who patted down my wife) tell a co-worker to call security to "deal with that passenger". At no point, however, did any TSA employee step in to deal with the co-worker trying to humiliate and provoke fights with travelers exercising their rights. Oh, and after she cleared security, my wife started crying due to the behavior of this woman.

The employee was a short African-American woman in her 20s, dark skin, hair pulled back. She was working on the post-x-ray side of the checkpoint.

Caller wants to file a complaint. He is at AUS. He flies every week. The TSOs are horrible. Caller was in the line to go through the AIT. A handicapped person was in a wheelchair in front of him, but the TSO makes this passenger get up and walk through which locks up the line because his wheelchair was taken another way and he had to stand in the AIT 7 minutes. The TSOs open the WTMD line and send 20 people behind the caller through that line. The caller asked if he could go through the WTMD and the TSO told him that he could not change lines. All the caller's property is on the other side. He cannot see it and does not have access to it. He told the TSO this but the TSO kept waving people over to the other queue. Caller said the TSO would not look at him and had his back turned toward the caller at an angle. The caller does not believe he should be held in the queue when his property is away from him. He said it was like being held captive because he could not get to his property and could not get out of the line. He flew 160,000 miles last year so he flies very often and this was the worst. He said this kind of behavior is what gives TSA a bad reputation. Caller could not get the TSO's name because he would not face him so the caller could read his name tag.

:013 3:09:1 Caller said that in Columbus the TSOs are friendly, helpful and efficient.

Airport: AUS
Date and Time: January 4, 2013 at 1:50pm (Time he was at the checkpoint)

I apologized to the caller, thanked him for letting us know his experience and told him I would send this to the CSM for review.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Flight # 719/Frontier/Terminal B/Orlando International Airport, Orlando, Florida/Gate:90/Date: 3 January 2013/ TSA agents involved: (b)(6) and (b)(6)

:013 8:06:2 I heard one of the TSA agents call for a female agent for me 3 times before one showed up. During this time, several (at least 6 or 7) airline passengers went through the scanner and went by my items that were sitting on the conveyor belt. I even saw one person (non-TSA) move what I think were the bins containing my items down the conveyor belt. When the female TSA agent finally came to me to let me through the gate for the pat down, she immediately had a negative attitude toward me. I was crying because I could not see my items and I thought someone had already stolen my laptop (the non-TSA person I saw move my stuff from the conveyor belt). I told the TSA agent that I could not see my things clearly and she said no one has passed ahead of me through the scanner. I said to her that "this is untrue". I said it calmly, in a speaking voice (i.e. non-threateningly and not loudly). The TSA agent whipped around and stared at me silently as though she was about to hit me. This woman was angry and I do not know why. She lied to me about my items and when I gently tried to correct her (only once), she acted aggressively. This is not someone who should be in a position of any power or interacting with the public. She had me stand off to the side of the scanner "traffic" and began her schpiel about pat downs. I was still crying because I did not know if my things had been stolen from the conveyor belt and this woman was terrifying. She refused to do the pat down even though I told her I consented to it and I just wanted to get it over with. I repeatedly said that I was NOT objecting to the pat down. She made me wait while she called her supervisor. (b)(6) While we were waiting for the supervisor, this TSA agent told me I was "embarrassing myself" and that I was being ridiculous. I was not shouting, I was following the agent's commands, and no one would have known there was a problem unless they looked at my face and saw me crying. I was upset and being told that this was my fault and that I was "embarrassing myself" by a hostile, angry TSA agent that, at that point, really does have the power to embarrass me. This is a terrifying situation for a civilian. The supervisor came over with another female and attempted to diffuse the situation. The original TSA agent again refused to perform the pat down. I told the supervisor that I was not refusing a pat down and that I would comply with whatever needed to be done. The supervisor still seemed upset and told me that I was standing in the way, despite the fact that I was standing exactly where the original TSA agent told me to stand for the pat down. Finally, the agents let me collect my remaining items from the conveyor belt. I was made to stand off to the side and was finally given a pat down by another TSA agent. During the pat down, the agent went over my genitals twice. I think that this is not protocol, especially because there were no questions about this area (i.e. I did not have on baggy clothing and the TSA agent did not find anything suspicious). I am a petite person and I always wear tight clothing through security to try to avoid this situation. So, to me, that says that I was frisked in an inappropriate manner because I made another TSA agent angry. After the pat down, I was given the all clear to go on to my gate. I later asked another TSA agent the names of the people involved by pointing them out to that agent. (b)(6) was the supervisor and (b)(6) was either the original (angry, hostile) female TSA agent or the one that finally gave me the pat down (they looked similar: black, 30-40s, overweight/obese females with their hair tied back). Having to get a pat down is humiliating enough, but when someone thinks their things have been stolen, TSA agents should be trained to be a little nicer. I would like to know what will be done about the situation I was put in and why it took so long for a female TSA agent to come and get me. I have a complaint about the screening process during my last flight. I recently flew from ABQ to IAD Jan 1. My flight was scheduled to leave at 8:17 but was delayed until 8:45. When I reached the scanning machines- I opted out and requested a pat down. I am 24 weeks pregnant. At that time, the agent requested a female assist with the walkie-talkie. For the next 15 minutes, I waited while he requested a female assist 4 more times. No one came to assist. He eventually asked for a male assist to relieve one of the female luggage x-ray scanners so she could come pat me down. There were only 3 women on the floor at the time- 2 women x-ray scanners and 1 woman supervisor.

:013 1:07:3 If families and children are able to go through the metal detectors- then pregnant women should be able to as well. If that isn't the case, TSA needs to make sure that enough women are on the floor to assist when needed. The long wait time due to staffing was nothing but incompetent.

Yes, I realize this was a day after a holiday- however, this was inexcusable. I hope this matter is resolved and doesn't occur again.

Please feel free to call me to discuss anything further. (b)(6)

Comments: Sunday, December 30 around 12:15 a.m. I waited in line at the Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport gate A main security screening entrance and witnessed a TSA employee who I believe was out of line.

I do not have the employee's full name. I tried to read his name tag but could only see the first letters of what looked like a longer last name starting with (b)(6) or (b)(6). He was one of two agents checking boarding passes at the first point of contact with flyers. He was not the agent with the name (b)(6).

The agent was rude, impatient and made the experience of waiting in a long line particularly uncomfortable and tense.

At one point, I heard him yell to the entire room something close to: "What part of metal detector don't you people understand?"

Another time, after scolding passengers in line who'd bypassed the stanchions, a flyer explained to the agent they were just following everyone else. The agent responded, "Would you follow other people off a bridge?"

I believe it this agent who complained aloud, "I've been here since noon."

I did not directly interact with the man, but witnessed and heard this and other rude comments.

I was also reminded of this by Passport checker. The loud and extremely rude person in question told me to remove shoes and I politely told her my age which she advised me she could tell how old I was and get them off as the metal detector had gone off and she didn't need me to tell her her job. The person behind me said "It's one thing to walk in cattle-pens, but quite another to be treated as same." The line I was in was extremely long and many people were bemoaning the fact they were going to miss connecting flights I made mine with 10 minutes to spare. The incompetence was glaring and attitudes of at least three TSA officials was inconsiderate, loud and aggressive and most unfair for, if one tried to defend oneself under these circumstances I'm sure it would only escalate the problem and the traveler would be on the losing side of the issue. As a footnote: Having traveled through Phila Airport many times during the past eight years customer service has now become non-existent.

Caller stated that he wants to know what the standard procedures are for a general patdown, and whether or not a passenger would have to go through a patdown if they go through the WTMD and it doesn't alarm. He wants to know if there is AIT at LAX. His daughter felt uncomfortable during a patdown procedure, and he wants to know if there is an issue with what happened at the checkpoint, and also if there is somewhere specific that he needs to contact if he does have a complaint. He also wants to know whether or not patdowns are still incorporated randomly, or if there is always a specific reason that they are conducted.

His 19 year-old daughter went through the Virgin America checkpoint, Gate 37 at LAX this morning around 8:40 a.m. She was on flight 781 going from LAX to SEA, scheduled to leave at 9. She went presented her ID at the checkpoint, and then on through the WTMD, which did not activate. Once she went through there, she received a patdown, and this is where she felt uncomfortable. He stated that the officer, whose name she did not get, used the palm of her hand to rub, not pat, the area of her abdomen and up to the border zone of her lower chest area. His daughter felt as though it could possibly be considered sexually threatening, and it made her feel uncomfortable.

A brief description of the officer is that she is an African-American woman, approximately 20-30 years of age, short and above the ideal body weight.

A brief description of his daughter, (b)(6) is approximately 5'6", 120 lbs. She has shoulder length black hair and was wearing an olive green leather jacket, dark blue jeans and dark brown military style boots.

Advised Caller:

Patdowns are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, as well as when random screening activities are conducted.

I told him that a passenger cannot choose to go through the WTMD only, but would have to go through the AIT or a patdown. If the airport or checkpoint they go to doesn't have the AIT, then they would have to go through a patdown. I told him that LAX is on the list of airports that either has AIT or is scheduled to get it, but I could not give him definite information as to whether or not they definitely had it, or if the checkpoint she went through had the machine.
<http://www.tsa.gov/ait-frequently-asked-questions>

The TSO should be describing the procedures he or she is using. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

I told him that I could either take his complaint and send it to the CSM at the airport, or he could contact them directly. He chose to describe the incident to me, since I could not provide him with exact hours of the CSM at the airport. I did explain to him how to contact them by calling 866-289-9673, pressing option 5, and entering the airport code when prompted.

Since he chose to provide the information to me, I told him that I would get his information, take the complaint, and then send it to the CSM at the airport. They could look into the incident, and see if there was anything that was inappropriate during the screening, and could contact him further if they needed any more information from him.

The caller is traveling on Thursday from MKE to IAH to Cost Rica. She has a titanium shoulder and is concerned about going through screening expeditiously because she only has one hour between flights. She has to get from one side of the airport to another.

She asked if there is a way to expedite this in any way.

She indicated that she would have to leave the secured area.

The caller stated that she knew the screening process.

I explained first, that she may not have to go through TSA screening as long as she remains in the secured area of the airport. Depending on the layout of the airport, she may have to leave the secured area to make her connection flight.

She asked where to request AIT screening.

I advised that she inform the TSO of the metal implant and perhaps where it is located before the screening process begins.

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown.

I advised that the only way that to possible expedite the screening would be to be required to receive a pat down. I cannot guarantee that she will not receive a pat down even if she goes through the AIT.

I explained that she would opt of the WTMD and request AIT screening when she presents her ID and boarding pass at the checkpoint. She can inform the TSO of the metal implant and request to be screened by the AIT if it is available.

Resolution:

:013 2:22:5

Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint. For tips and further information about security screening, please visit TSA's Web site at www.tsa.gov.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

Caller said that he might want to contact the CSM at that airport.

Told caller that he can call back choose option 5 code 294 and he will be provided the number to the CSM.

I am writing to bring to your attention an highly unsatisfying encounter with LTSC (b)(6) at the PreCheck lane at Washington Dulles airport, on December 21, 2012 at 11:15am.

I understand the importance of security checks at the airport, and the balance the TSA officers must make to ensure security while keeping the line moving. As a frequent traveler (100+ flights/year) I have regular contact with TSA agents in regular lines, express lines, and PreCheck. It takes a lot for me to have this level of frustration with one of your officers.

To summarize the encounter:

1. My wife (b)(6) and I were travelling from Washington Dulles and expected to use the PreCheck lane. (b)(6) was selected to use the regular lane instead of PreCheck.

2. At the entrance to the metal detector, Officer (b)(6) held up her hand to stop (b)(6) from walking through, and barked at her "You need to stop." Then, "Remove your scarf and all your metal bracelets." (b)(6) asked if she could retrieve her bag, since she did not want to put her scarf into one of the bins by itself. Officer (b)(6) refused, again insisting "you need to remove your scarf right now."

It is difficult to convey her attitude, tone, and demeanor. It felt like she was looking for a way to demean people and exercise her authority – "spoiling for a fight" is the expression that best fits. There was no line, no backup of people waiting, and no visible or understandable reason for her to be so rude and heavy-handed in abusing her authority.

3. After (b)(6) complied and came through the metal detector, she asked another officer where the bin was with her bracelets. The second officer said that sometimes bins get stuck in the conveyer. A third officer, who was at the video monitor, took the bin and slammed it down on the top of the conveyer.

(b)(6) and colleague (b)(6) noticed that a large number of people across all age ranges were not removing their shoes as they walked through the metal detector. The x-ray body scanners were not in use.

As soon as he approached security (b)(6) was addressed by a TSA screener who said, gHello (b)(6) indicating that she knew who he was, and immediately ordered him to remove his shoes.

When (b)(6) refused, citing the fact that innumerable other people had not removed their shoes, the TSA screener claimed that only under 12CEs and over 75CEs were not mandated to remove footwear under TSA policy.

When (b)(6) contested the point, arguing that numerous travelers in their 40CEs had not removed their shoes, other TSA agents ordered him to take off his shoes, before (b)(6) was approached by a police officer who immediately got in his face and started threatening him with arrest.

Despite (b)(6) protests that he was clearly being discriminated against because he was a known critic of the TSA (the rest of the TSA screeners also knew him by name), the officer growled, gTake your damn shoes off or lfm gonna arrest you.h

Not even giving (b)(6) the option to leave the airport, the cop continued with threats to arrest (b)(6) and prevent him from flying as the radio host threatened to file a lawsuit for civil rights violations.

One of (b)(6) primary concerns regarding the removal of shoes was the fact that he had caught athletes foot from that very process in another airport years previously, meaning that he now carries a spare pair of socks to change into when he boards the aircraft. (b)(6) emphasized that he was not a gclean freakh but that he never encountered such issues before having to take his shoes off at TSA security.

Hello,

10:13 9:54:2 My family and I were recently at the Amsterdam Airport on a layover back to the United States from Ethiopia and my five year old daughter was subject to a pat down search after passing through their metal detectors without any warning signals. I acknowledge the definite need to have the security systems in store to protect passengers traveling all over the world. My only problem with my five year old daughter being subject to the pat down search was security would not explain to me or my wife why our daughter was being searched after passing through the metal detectors, nor would they take the time to explain their policy as it relates to searching children. Believe me, you would not be receiving this e-mail had my daughter unsuccessfully passed through the metal detector. Can you please inform me who to contact at Amsterdam Airport's regarding their policy as it relates to pat down searching of children. I received your e-mail address from security at the Amsterdam Airport and advised to contact you.

Thank you,
(b)(6)

Caller stated that he flew out of phoenix and when going through the checkpoint, he was told by a TSO and that there are no options for him to either keep his shoes on or put foot coverings over his feet when going through so he doesnt have to worry about bacteria. He works for a enviornmental agency that checks bacteria in public places and he is wanting to make a complaint because this is very unsanitary.

Comment : This is a "complaint" with some suggestions. After I went through the metal detector and the additional "xray" type screening at Newark Airport, I was "told" that I needed additional screening pat down. I was asked if I wanted it in public or private. I replied "neither" since I was not told why I was being stopped. I am a 58 year old large body female. I told her to go ahead in public but I was not informed why she was having to do the search or even why she wiped my fingers after I was told to "hold my hand out" without any courtesy on her part. The TSA screener performed the search by pushing rather hard on my upper body. (I am recovering from a broken collar bone from a few months ago so she did hurt my collarbone area when she was "inspecting me".) She pushed rather hard inbetween my breasts on my bra, which was a front close type with metal clips. I would suggest that large females might be being stopped because their bras have more metal clips in them so the screeners should be aware of that situation. They should ask if there are any areas on the person's body which may be "sore". I know the screeners have a job to do, but they should do it respectfully and be aware that people may have a physical problem which makes it hurt when they PUSH on someone's body. I was also stopped when I returned from Orlando but the screener did not PUSH hard on my body like the Newark TSA screener did. I was also told that it looked like I had metal in a certain part of my leg (which I did not) and she checked my chest area as well. The two experiences were vastly different. I am very surprised that I was stopped TWICE in one trip as I have never been "patted down" in any previous trip. Have the "xray" body scans more sensitive? I usually travel out of Philadelphia and it has been a more "pleasant experience" going through the TSA screening especially without the added "pat down". I saw another large woman being "patted down" which is why I suggest that maybe the extra clips in large size bras may be the reason. I don't mind complying but it shouldn't be an unpleasant experience like at Newark.

Incident Details: Caller states he had a complaint about the service in O Hare. He wants to speak to a CSR for TSA at O Hare. He had an address for O Hare he wanted me to verify. He wants to know what I can do for his complaint.

Told caller

To speak to someone at O Hare, he maybe able to speak to the CSM or maybe a TSO. He wanted me to tell him who he could talk too. I told him if he wanted to call the same number he had called me on he could listen to the IVR and chose option number 5 to get a number for a CSM. If someone did not answer he could leave a message and they could get back up with him. I told him I could take his complaint if he did not want to call. I would take the complaint and forward through an email to the CSM. He would not give me his complaint. I then let (b)(7) speak to him about his complaint.

Escalated to Supervisor (b)(6) I spoke with the caller who complained that today while going towards gates K and L at ORD in a wheelchair to be screened at the checkpoint, he had an altercation with a TSO named (b)(6). It appears that the TSO made him go through the AIT scanner after the caller asked not to do so, due to his inability to stand for long periods and an imbalance issue. He told them that he could not raise his hands in the AIT scanner because he would fall, he said that the officers completely ignored his requests and comments.

2013 10:55: At this time the caller asked to rather go through the metal detector and the TSO told him no, at which time he allegedly was accused of yelling at the TSO escalating the issue to an STSO, who the caller accused of being extremely rude to him, berating him for his conduct.

The caller said that he was angry because everyone was being rude and insensitive to his disability, causing him to nearly fall because he was loosing his balance and his legs were going weak.

In addition, he was administered a patdown because he has metal implants in his feet, legs and hips.

He made a statement to me that he felt like ORD TSA officers always discriminate against people with disabilities, so I asked the caller if he felt discriminated against due to his disability, he said yes, therefore I gave him the email address, TSA-CRL@tsa.dhs.gov where he could submit his complaint in writing. He said that he would send his complaint there and that he would notify the CSM as well about how he felt.

I gave him the CSM s number and email address due to the gravity of the complaint.

I have been flying for many years and a new problem has cropped up that I am bothers me on several levels. I am female and comply with all the directions and specifications expected by the TSA. However, recently I have gone through two different metal detectors at two different airports and have been stopped BECAUSE OF MY UNDERWIRE BRA. Not only is this embarrassing, but I believe that it is sexual harrasment. Men don't have this problem. The interesting thing is that not all metal detectors are bothered by this (which makes me wonder about my safety at these airports). I am going to be flying a minimum of three times between now and the end of March and do not want to have to go through another pat down because I AM A WOMAN WHO WEARS A BRA.

2013 8:37: How might you assist me with this problem? (And I don't expect the answer to be 1) don't wear a bra - I'm too busty for this, or 2) wear a bra without an underwire - what I wear is support is my decision.) Patting me down is not an effective use of the TSA officer's time. Nor is it a pleasant experience for me.

Thank you for your assistance with this problem.

Upon coming to the first metal detector, the TSA agent told me to step through, and I did so. Before stepping through, the agent told me "You re going to need a pat down." I am a muslim and was wearing my Islamic headress and gown at the time, so I expected something of the sort. However, after stepping through, the agent told me to step in front of her. I did not hear her clearly because she was speaking lowly and mumbling. I had stepped off to the side, by mistake. She then became more loud and said "not in front of me! You don t want no private screening, do you?!" I said "no." After that, she ordered me to place my hands on my head and feel my entire headscarf, then she ordered that I have a strip test done on my hands, to which I did. I understand that there needs to be extra security these days, but just because I am a muslim does not mean I need to be treated worse than an animal. I m a human being, with rights, and have not done anything wrong. I expect respect, just as everyone else. Please work harder on trying to sift through the bad people so the good people don t have to suffer. Thank you.

Subject: Complaint

To whom it may concern:

2013 9:08:z My name is (b)(6) I was traveling at Phoenix Sky Harbor airport on Monday, January 7, 2013, terminal 3, Delta Airlines flight 1492. I proceeded through TSA security lane 2, where I was the only passenger present. I proceeded through the check point between 8:00 am and 8:10 am. There were three male employees working this lane. I beeped as I was walking through the metal detector and I was told to remove my watch, despite traveling upwards of 8 times a month and it has never set off the metal detector in the past. I am also a selected member of the TSA Pre Check program, which is apparently not recognized at the PHX airport. By the time I removed my watch and walked back through the metal detector, the rest of my belongings were waiting. I quickly grabbed my belongings and darted for my gate, as I was running late that morning. I realized on the flight that I had forgotten my watch. I looked up the TSA lost and found number for PHX Sky Harbor Airport, and left a message. After not hearing anything back, I subsequently left a second voicemail with the same information and asking someone to please call me back, which has also not been returned. The situation is concerning to me because I was the ONLY passenger in that line. Not a single, solitary person behind me. I find it extremely difficult to believe that THREE TSA agents who are supposedly paying attention to whom and what is going through a security check point, failed to notice at any time that my watch was sitting in the bowl after going through the x-ray machine and turned over to lost and found. I also find it hard to believe that my watch went completely unnoticed and another random passenger who entered the line at a later time stole it off the end of the belt.

The property that is missing is a Kuji watch. The band is a black rubber material. The face of the watch is black, with copper metal framing. I do not want to have to push this issue further (i.e., subpoenaing tapes, police reports, etc.), but I will have to if I do not receive any response that any type of investigation was completed on this. It should not take someone very long to review the tapes, as my location and time of passing through lane 2, terminal 3, Delta side security line, between 8-8:10 am on Monday, January 7th. I am a blond female, 5'7, with one large black shoulder bag and black carry-on suitcase who went through the metal detector twice after removing my watch.

I do not appreciate the manner TSA employees used to screen my daughter (b)(6) who had a severe surgery in her arm recently, as an American citizen I believe was unacceptable for her to go through intensive pat-downs when she offered to remove the arm sling and her sweater, and they said it wasn't necessary. When she pass through the metal detector, it did not beep, so why taking my daughter who is already not feeling well to a private room, and touch her private areas twice? The TSA employees knew the time of her flight, they took notes of her ticket and driver's license and still they hold her in the private room long enough for her to miss her flight. In your own website it states that Pat-downs are used to resolve alarms at the checkpoint, which was not the case. I am assuming they were just being discriminative towards her. We have huge problem now, she missed an important event in her career, we missed our flight and we were not able to board at all to NYC, we waited the whole day on stand by flights, and nothing was resolved. We lost our flights and hotel that we paid for. We missed business meetings, trade show and on top of all, she will have to wait until next year to be able to reapply for such career opportunity. I am very disappointed with this whole situation, and I don't understand TSA employee's motives for just picking on her, since almost everyone that were around us in the line were not touched in their private areas and probably did not miss their flights.

Disability Description: Caller was flying thru MIA and did not like her patdown.

Information Request: Wants to know if a notification card could prevent her from needing two patdowns.

Response Details: If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

If a passenger has a cast, brace, or support appliance, the way screening will be conducted depends on his or her level of ability. The passenger should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of his or her ability, of the existence of a cast, 2013 1:01: brace, or support appliance, and of any need for assistance before screening begins.

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important.

One screening procedure, which generates discussion and concern among passengers, involves use of patdown searches. Patdowns are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, as well as when random screening activities are conducted.

A Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search, and as the screening is being conducted, the TSO should be describing the procedures he or she is using. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

Passengers have the right to request a private screening, and private screening will be conducted in a room or in an area away from other passengers. However, if a passenger does not permit the search, he or she will not be permitted to board an aircraft.

Offered the information by email but she was already on website.

Caller said she just had a awful experience with a rude screener at BOS. She said she was trying to get through the checkpoint at BOS on January 15, 2013 around 2:15pm she was trying to board a Jet Blue flight 1177 Gate 30 in route to EWR. She said she flies through this airport once a month and never has any problems but today was different. She said she had been in the airport since 12:00 pm. She said she was in line for 40 minutes before reaching the ID checker. She said as she was going through the WTMD her bangle bracelet alarmed and she was asked to step aside. She asks if she could go through the AIT and was told that is not procedure to step aside. She asks can I have a pat down because she could not get the bracelet off. She was told by the TSO yes she could have a pat own but he did not say anything to anyone about her pat down and to step aside. She stood there for 15 minutes and nothing happened no one was called. She said at that time she knew her plane was getting ready to leave. She said she broke the bracelet to get it off of her arm and ask the TSO if she could go through now. She was told by the TSO to go to the end of the line. She said another passenger told her she could put her bracelet in her bin for screening. She said she waited for her bracelet to come through and it never did. She said finally the person that cleans the bins asks her if the bracelet he picked up off the floor was hers and it was. She went onto the catch her plane and it was too late to board. She then went back and asks for a supervisor (b)(6) came over he called over what she called the manager (b)(6) and she told him what happened. His comment was he did not believe her. She said view the video and you will see and (b)(6) told her no. She said the screener that was so rude to her was (b)(6) She said she has flown through this airport a lot and always has the same bracelet on with no problems. She describes herself as in her 40s short with blond hair, black shirt, jacket and boots on. She is still in the airport and waiting for a 6:30 pm flight to EWR.

I apologized to her for her experience and told her we do track trends. I told her because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a email to the Customer Service Manager for review.

Complaints: Discourteous/Rude Employee

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): DFW Airport/AA Flt 1548/Terminal C December 12, 2012..

Comments: When directed to the Radiaion screening equipment, I calmly told the TSA screener that I am a breast cancer survivor who has had radiation treatment. I have been advised by my physician to avoid additional radiation whenever an option is available. I requested alternative screening. I was fine with a pat down.

The TSA employee instructed me "Go stand by the trash can." This was in the unscreened area. I politely backed up and waited about 10 minutes for someone to come get me and do the pat down in the screened area. Meanwhile my computer, my handbag, my carry-on, shoes, etc. were all unattended and unprotected from someone else taking them.

My complaints:

1. The TSA employee was demeaning to me by telling me to stand by the trash can. It made me feel like "trash".
2. Why could I not have the option of going thru the metal detector? If this is an effective form of screening when no radiation is present, it should be an alternative for people who opt out of the radiation.
3. My personal belongings were subject to theft while I was waiting on the unscreened side for the pat down.

I would appreciate a response.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): OGG to SEA on Jan 4th, 2012 departing at 1:25pm.

Comments: First I want to say staff screening in person have been great. Mostly friendly or at least not rude. Usually very efficient. No complaints there.

2013 6:18:1 You have a thief screening checked baggage on the flight from OGG to SEA. I assume it happened at the OGG/Maui airport but I don't know the behind the scenes process. I don't understand why you don't have a process to stop theft from checked baggage. Checking employees bags when they arrive and when they leave? Have them go through the same metal detectors used on passengers? See Nordstroms department store for a process if you don't know one.

You make the form to file a claim so difficult and time consuming I'm sure we will just decide to eat the $200 plus cost of things that were stolen.

You limit carry ons but when we can't trust our things will arrive makes it difficult to send through checked baggage. Partly our fault for thinking things like bike lights and individual bicycle parts, camera parts would be ok. My carry on was full of Christmas gifts I wasn't about to check but my husband went ahead and put some things in his suitcase. Bad idea.

This is our second experience with stolen property from checked baggage. Previously happened at the Sea-Tac airport and then a several weeks after we saw in the newspaper someone was arrested. Well we didn't file a claim then either as didn't have needed receipts and everything else you request. I understand you can't just take someone's word because thieves fly too but you could monitor employees better so that the opportunity is not their to steal from bags.

Pretty sad we can't assume our baggage will be intact and all there when we arrive. I will continue to carry on a large enough bag to hold anything I can't afford to lose. Pretty sad homeland security and TSA can't stop a baggage thief in their employment.

Sincerely, (b)(6)

Comments: Today 1/16 checking in iAd airport. Going through line and diverted to body scanner away from metal detector. In body scanner and screener kept making jokes and delayed start of screen unless I smiled.

Delay of about 10 seconds before scanner started. Scanner malfunctioned and I was told pat down was mandatory. I said I wanted to be scanned by another machine and not patted down. They said this was not possible. After talking to 3 tsa employees, the manager (b)(6) badge (b)(6) told me I had no choice. Either pat down or no flight. He said it was a rule. I asked to be shown the rule in writing and he the rules are not written.

I fly over 150,000 miles each year for 10 years and have never had a pat down. I comply always and completely with all rules and was treated like a criminal suspect with my rights taken away. I felt very violated as the mans hands touched my genitals.

If the machine breaks through no fault of my own why do I become the victim? Why can I not be scanned on another machine?

This was a very humiliating and demeaning experience that wasted a lot of time and was a major violation of my rights.

If you agree this is proper protocol and believe in wasting so much resources on an innocent law abiding citizen, you have little chance of stopping anyone planning to cause harm.

He stated that he read that TSA strongly suggests that recommends that passengers remove belts. He stated that his home airport has recently started to allow passenger to leave on the belts at MHT. He stated that he has a metal knee replacement so he has to undergo additional screening. He stated that the supervisor at BWI told him that he has to remove his belt before screening.

I advised the caller that the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

Hello,

To Whom It May Concern,

2013 6:10: I flew out of Dulles Airport on January 11th in Lane 23/24 at 11:25am. I spoke to the supervisor who gave me this email. His name is S TSO (b)(6). I was waiting for the larger scanning machine and spoke with a TSA agent about going through the normal or traditional metal detector. He told me I couldn't go. Within 30 seconds or so, he told the lady waiting behind me to go. I asked why she can go but I couldn't, he responded, "I don't have to tell you anything!" Another agent came to explain that who gets to go to the regular metal detector is selected at "random." The first agent interrupted the agent trying to explain the process to me by stating again that they didn't have to tell me anything. His attitude was awful and absolutely disrespectful.

I was absolutely discriminated against. If the above is true and it is random, the first TSA agent's attitude was still awful. While I was telling a supervisor what happened, another random passenger complained that the first agent's attitude, "sucked."

I am all for airport security but it seemed obvious that this agent felt as if he had power and didn't have to explain the process of selection. It is absolutely ridiculous that his attitude was so awful/disrespectful.

I suggest you look at the tape and validate everything I am saying. I expect action.

2013 7:34:1 Caller flew out of Kona on the 13th of January. The caller was going through the walk through metal detector and there was an alarm due to the caller having had hip replacement surgery. The caller told the screener he had a hip replacement. The screener then conducted a pat down of the caller and he also checked the hip area. The caller is upset because he did not use the wand to verify the caller had a replaced hip. The caller was flying on Alaska Airline flight 861 from Kona to Anchorage. The caller said he had gone through the screening check point at approximately 1000 hours. The caller believes the screener did not do his job right and wants some feed back. The caller said he normally receives a pat down and wand.

I told the caller I would forward his complaint to the Customer Support Manager at Kona.

Caller landed in Ft. Lauderdale from Costa Rica and went through security receiving additional security at the immigration checkpoint. When his baggage set off the metal detector a TSO agent was called and was joined by an additional agent. The two officers checked for explosives and his baggage was rechecked once again and taken off the conveyor belt to go through additional screening. The TSO agent took out a dish from the baggage and sent his baggage through the conveyor again and another item (an owl with a coffee bean) set off the metal detector again. Caller then replaced his items and later discovered he had lost a camera. He wants it returned or reimbursed. Camera was in a camera bag with a clip and a pouch. He got in the immigration line and was delayed. His toiletries were in a plastic bag but the officer told him he should have placed the items. He talked to the agent and was told to call TSA and file a claim.

Comments: I am a seasoned traveler with approximately two million miles of travel with one airline, Delta. I guess that is the reason that on many occasions I am sent to the pre-TSA check in line. This week when I checked in at approximately 10:15 AM at Reagan, I was directed to the pre-TSA line. I was the only person in line and when I walked through the metal detector, it buzzed. The TSA agent told me I was selected for random screening and asked me to go back through the detector. This time there was no alarm. The TSA agent then used a device to swab my hands. When the testing material was put into the machine, the machine looked like a red color was on the screen. I was told I needed additional screening. At the time, I said to the agent, "There must be something wrong with your equipment."
The agent opened my luggage and swabbed inside - no problems or alerts; my purse was swabbed next - no problems or alerts; my briefcase was next - no problems or alerts; my computer was next - no problems or alerts; my shoes were run back through on the conveyor belt and swabbed - no problems or alerts. I again said that there must be a problem with the machine for my hands to test positive. Next what happened was something I had heard about on the news but never dreamed could happen to me. I was asked to follow the female TSA agent into a private screening room and wait with her while she brought in another female TSA agent. The description of the woman - first agent was black and tall and treated me very nicely and with respect. The woman who was called to assist was short and spoke with a thick accent. The short woman put gloves on and proceeded to rub her hands all over my body - including touching groin area several times with her hand. Afterwards, she removed her gloves and they were swabbed - the result was no positive alerts. I again stated that there must be something wrong with the machine. I told her that I was a Veteran of the US and a grandmother of 5 and couldn't believe I was being treated this way. The short woman told me "I don't have to give you any explanation."
The results of all the testing totally proved that this was done to me in error. When all of the swabs that were taken came up negative after the first one (my luggage, purse, computer, briefcase and shoes), I don't see any reason whatsoever for a private all over body search. There had to be something wrong with the equipment. I was humiliated. If she had said that she was sorry for the inconvenience, appreciated my cooperation or that she didn't know why it tested positive - I probably could have accepted this but to tell me that she didn't have to get me any explanation does not feel like the way an American law abiding citizen should be treated. This was wrong. I would appreciate someone telling me why a TSA agent feels that it is appropriate to treat me this way. I was "let go" so obviously all the tests proved I was not a threat. I should not have been talked to or treated that way. The feeling I got was they had absolute power to do whatever they wanted to me and did not care how it made me feel.

I recently traveled from Jacksonville, Fl to Dallas/Ft. Worth and then DFW to JAX with my cat. On January 10, 2013, I had a very pleasant experience at the checkpoint/security in Jacksonville (JAX). The TSA agents were extremely helpful when I let them know that I could not take my cat out of the carrier because she is one who will try to run away. They immediately allowed for the secondary screening of my cat. On January 14, 2013, I had an unacceptable experience at the DFW airport. I went through security by gate C8 around 5:40 PM. There were only a few other people in line to go through security. AS soon as I showed my ID and boarding pass, I informed the TSA agent I needed a secondary screening for my cat. He had me tell another TSA agent. I informed a female TSA agent prior to going through the scanner that I could not safely remove my cat from the carrier and that I needed a secondary screening, and could I inform the supervisor. She told me to tell the TSA agent as I was getting ready to go through the scanner. I was told by 2 of the TSA agents that it was "NOT POLICY" to have a secondary screening and that it is POLICY that I MUST REMOVE MY PET and carry it through the metal detector. I informed the TSA agents that according to the TSA website, the policy states that if it is not possible to remove the pet from the carrier that I can request a secondary screening. The TSA agents told me that I "COULD NOT" go through security unless I removed my pet and carried her through the metal detector. I told them that I was concerned she would jump out of arms and run off. They continued to argue with me and would not allow my request. I finally gave in to the TSA agents and took my cat out of the carrier and carried her through the metal detector. My cat tried to get out of my arms several times. As soon as I got through the metal detector, my cat was trying to get out of my arms, I asked my mother (who had gone through security just after me) to get the cat carrier off the xray belt so I could put the cat back in. A female TSA agent came up to me and said I can't put my cat in the carrier yet. I have to have my hands swabbed before I can put her in the carrier. The lady said I had to place my hands palm side up, at the same time so she could swab them. I looked at her all confused and stated, "How can I do that when I have this cat in my arms who is trying to get away?" She continued to tell me I MUST do what she says and that I cannot put the cat in carrier until she does this. How am I supposed to do this???? I finally demanded that they let me put the cat back in the carrier immediately. One of the TSA agents brought it over to me. The female TSA agent that was trying to swab my hands stated, "it is against policy to let you put the cat back in the carrier before we complete our security screening". I find this completely inappropriate and unacceptable behavior by this TSA agent. I am an experienced traveler and former flight attendant. I am aware of what the rules are. This was my first time traveling with an animal, but I know it is not the first time anyone has ever traveled with an animal. I didn't think to print out the TSA policy and have it with me.

Comments: I've had double knee replacement surgery last March, and the titanium in my knees set off the metal detector at the FLL Airport. I waited 15 minutes for female screeners, then was patted down, even though I told them it was my knees. The screeners were polite; I am not complaining about them, but the process was humiliating. I nearly cried afterwards. It was like an assault. I'm 69, and my husband who was with me is 78. This did not happen on the outbound flight from Plattsburgh -- they have an xray machine. The screeners told me that even if I had a doctor's note, I would still be patted down. IS THERE NO RECOURSE TO THIS? WILL I BE PATTED DOWN EVERY TIME I FLY? It is an awful experience.

Comments: I am five months pregnant and was forced by a TSA agent working this security checkpoint to go through the full-body X-ray scanner. There was a passenger ahead of me and my family in line who was in a wheelchair and the TSA staff was having great difficulty getting that passenger through the metal detector. As they were completing that process, I was next in line and was motioned over to the full-body X-ray scanner. I politely told the agent, an older white woman with long hair pulled severely back from her face, that I was five months pregnant and preferred not to go through the X-ray but instead to wait for the metal detector. Her response to me was a very brusque and rude "So?" She was bullying and threatening. My husband behind me with our 23-month-old son was concerned that her extremely hostile attitude would cause me to be removed from our family group and taken away, potentially causing us to lose our personal possessions that had already gone through the conveyor belt and the car seat that had already been taken for a hand check and possibly to miss our flight 90+ minutes later, not to mention the trauma that this was causing to our son. I indicated again, remaining calm and polite, that I didn't mind waiting for the metal detector and the TSA agent was again threatening and bullying. With her intimidating and bullying attitude, and my awareness of the frustration of the lengthy line of travelers behind us who had already been delayed by the wheelchair incident, I felt that I was being given no choice and allowed her to bully me into the X-ray machine. I was in tears as the X-ray machine was run and two other agents noticed my distress and attempted to comfort me, but it was much too late and there was no way to re-route my screening or to protect my five-month-old baby in utero.

Distraught as I was at this point, I was unable to obtain the names of the two agents who attempted to help me after the fact, as I would like to commend them for their concern (which stands in stark contrast to the behavior of the original agent who forced me through the X-ray machine). And I sincerely wish I had the name of that original agent, as I would wish to name her specifically in any action that may arise if any harm came to my baby as a result of her intimidation and complete lack of concern for my condition.

My obstetrician has been apprised of the situation and will be monitoring the baby closely for the next four months for any developmental concerns (a complete and in-depth ultrasound examination of the baby performed on January 2 showed no problems, so it will be relatively easy to pinpoint causality). This incident is particularly distressing because I am an older mother who has worked hard to ensure a safe and healthy pregnancy after going through fertility treatments to get pregnant to begin with, and I feel that all of the care that I have been taking may have been compromised by one cold and uncaring TSA agent whose bullying and intimidating actions were completely unnecessary. I will never forget her responding to me with that harsh and biting "So?"

Comments: I am a commuting flight attendant. I always commute in plain clothes, as I often ride the jumpseat and my company suggests that crew travel in plain clothes to avoid having passengers think that we are working crew members that are being lazy. I have "Known Crew Member" status. I have been fingerprinted twice and have had an FBI background check. I have never committed a crime, not even a misdemeanor.

When passing through security, I always "opt out" of the x-ray body scanner. And I always receive a pat down. Instead of wasting the TSA resources on crewmembers like myself (with the pat-down and search), I suggest that the TSA allows us to pass through the regular security process with the metal detector (like all other airport employees) while we are in plain clothes, especially when commuting to/from work and when we display proper identification.

This used to be the standard process until recently. I believe going back to this process will alleviate the additional workload of TSA personnel and allow the TSA to focus on passengers and situations that are actual threats.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Lincoln Nebraska Airport, afternoon Delta Flight to Minneapolis. Saturday, 1/19/2013..:

Comments: Dear TSA: I got a form response from you today which did not address the false positive explosives alert at this airport which resulted in a humiliating, frightening, and highly public experience for my daughter at the hands of staff who treated her like a criminal - guilty until proven innocent - when there was obviously another explanation - glycerin based hand cream. My original complaint is attached below, followed by the form response.

MY ORIGINAL COMPLAINT: "My daughter, (b)(6) was subjected to a real ordeal today by TSA employees in Lincoln, Nebraska when her person and several items in her carrying luggage reportedly set off an "explosives alarm" (4 "alarms"- their term - in all, I was told by the employee, who called me over to watch her stuff while she was subjected to a thorough, repetitious pat down by female TSA staffers). The entire line came to a standstill while this happened. TSA staff did not appear to be in a problem-solving frame of mind even when it was obvious, after looking at every single item in my daughter's purse and on her person, that there were no explosives present. The "alarms" were related to my daughter's hands (here's a clue), clothing, and her cloth computer sleeve. I told the TSA gentleman that we had been in Nebraska visiting relatives for three days and she was never out of direct contact with family members. After she was reluctantly cleared to go, we looked at the ingredients in the hand cream she was using religiously in the dry air of wintry Nebraska, and sure enough, it was a glycerin-based product. A quick look online will provide ample indication that this is a frequent cause of false positive explosive alerts for TSA screenings. Live and learn, I suppose.

It is important to emphasize, I think, that such alerts - a better term than "alarms" - do NOT mean that explosives are PRESENT. Travelers are not guilty until proven innocent, and should not be treated as such, as she was. I am asking for Lincoln, Nebraska based staff to receive sufficient training so that they can distinguish, at some point, a false positive explosives alert caused by hand cream, WITHOUT treating a young woman like a potentially dangerous criminal for nearly 30 minutes in full view and hearing of dozens of other air travelers in a small city airport.

I know this is not an unusual occurrence. What was unusual was this staff's extended drama over this incident, and the humiliation my daughter and I were subjected to because of it. As a retired Washington State Administrator, I was shocked by the lack of consideration and privacy accorded my daughter, and the failure of staff to look for a reasonable explanation for a test result which is documented to have such common, and easily explained false positives.

Thanks for your assistance in this matter."

YOUR RESPONSE: Thank you for your e-mail in which you inquire about the reasons for secondary screening. The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed. TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): John F. Kennedy airport, JetBlue security checkpoint 7. January 21, 2013.

Comments: The way the employees spoke to an Asian passenger was unacceptable. The employee was annoyed that she had to do a search of the woman's laptop bag so she asked her, "were you not listening to the directions from the guy on the other side? If you did you would have known to take out the laptop." The employee is saying this while rolling her eyes. I can tell you that the person on the other side of the glass did NOT say anything to the passengers except scolding them to wait until their belongings got pulled through before walking through the metal detector.

Moreover, After getting through, My family and I were pulled aside so the two juice boxes we had for my 2-year old could be checked which I knew they would because it is a liquid. The man took them out of the tray and left my electronics off by themselves and asked me to come with him. Knowing from watching others. I didn't know if I was allowed to touch the tub with my stuff so I said to the man, "I don't feel comfortable leaving them at a great distance from me." He replied, "so bring them!" I can not believe the level of unwarranted disrespect from not one but almost all of the employees at security point seven at approximately 12:00 today. As a teacher who strives to teach respect to my fifth graders, these people have a lot of lessons to learn. As a former New Yorker, the tourists (including myself) are leaving this city with unnecessary rudeness and perception that NY truly is filled with rude, condescending people. Please revisit a training in which these individuals who have such an important job, can do their jobs effectively without being disrespectful.

Comments: These are the rudest most disrespectful TSA employees I've ever been in contact with. These employees exemplify why the traveling public has such a low opinion of and such a high contempt for this agency. Is it the feeling of power wearing a completely meaningless badge gives these folks? Or is it the knowledge that they are working meaningless jobs with useless equipment? Millimeter machines aren't metal detectors and are completely useless against wet clothing. Great technology! I feel so much safer knowing that rude bullies are the ones operating that equipment.

Comment : I have a known traveller ID and used the TSA Pre-Screen security checkpoint. I was the only person in line, emptied my pockets and put my bags on the conveyor belt. As I went through the metal detector, it beeped and the agent asked me to step back through and take off my shoes and watch. I proceeded through again and the metal detector signaled again. I stepped back through. The only other metal that I had on my person was a basic dress belt. After I removed that, I was able to pass through the metal detector without any alarms. It seems there are inconsistencies in the levels at which the metal detectors are set. While in LAX I went through the pre-screen process - did not remove the same watch, belt, shoes or jacket, yet came through without any alarms. I guess my complaint is that while I feel the TSA Pre-Screen system is wonderful for known travelers, I feel the metal detectors should be calibrated to account for basic things like watches, shoes and belts.

Comments: Dear TSA,

the woman in front of me at the security checkpoint today had a toddler with her and a stroller. Your TSA employee told her she didn't have to take the body scanner but opened the metal detector for her (she didn't even ask for it). Is this the message you're sending? All adults need to go through the body scanner or be subjected to a humiliating pat down but the procreating population doesn't? If that's the case I will make sure to wear a baby doll around my chest next time I fly to avoid the scanner. What a hypocrisy. You're clearly telling us that you're afraid something could happen to the precious child if it got scanned but it's OK for us idiot adults to go through it. I should also mention the lady was carrying big bottles (more than 3.4 ounces) of various liquids and just because there was a goddamn baby attached to her hip, none of this mattered to your agent. Way to teach everyone how to get through security with whatever you want to get through it. Apparently there are differently rules once you pop out a baby. Good to know.

Regards,

(b)(6)

You just sent me an answer to my complaint saying "

However, if an adult accompanying a child 12 years old or younger opts out of AIT screening on the child's behalf, the child will receive a modified patdown. "

The woman I was referring to didn't receive a patdown nor did her child. They simply had the body scanner waived, walked through the metal detector and had none of their liquids inspected. Upon my inquiry with a few friends, I've received numerous confirmations that apparently women with children are not subject to the same rules as everyone else and receive special treatment based on the sheer fact that they have a child with them. I find this utterly unacceptable.

Caller son is a patient at St Junes in Memphis, TN. He has a port that goes to his heart. The port is to draw labs and give chemo. They flew from Tri Cities to Charlotte and then to Memphis. She gave the TSO the card for his port at Charlotte Douglas International Airport. She said that she does not remember getting the card back. She said that they missed the flight from Charlotte to Memphis. They will be flying tomorrow at 7 am from Memphis to Charlotte and then to Tri Cities on US Airways. St Jude told her that they can not give her another card because of the data contained on the card. The card has a unique Id on it and it states that the passenger should not go through the metal detector. Her son has to have a patdown. She wanted to locate the card. She said that it was TSA's fault they missed the plane and she wants to know who is going to pay for it.

I gave information per: <http://www.tsa.gov/airport-lost-found-contacts>

Memphis International Airport
901-348-5400 (TSA)

I advised her that she can contact the airline and ask about getting a refund. I also told her that she can get the number for the CSM at the airport by choosing option 5 on the IVR and entering the airport code.

Complaints: Long Lines / Lengthy Wait at Checkpoint

Comments: i arrived at the newark airport early, but i struggled to find where to check in for my flight because there was lots of construction going on. I eventually checked in and decided to have breakfast before going through security because I had 45 mins before my plane was boarding and the line for security was only 15 people long... by the time i got to the security checkpoint for my gate after eating I had 25 minutes until my flight started boarding and there were about 30 people in line and almost instantly another 30 showed up behind me. I was not worried about missing my flight because security usually goes quite quickly and since there were so many workers, I figured they would open another machine since the line almost instantly jumped from 15-60 people.

However, I noticed that the line was moving VERY slowly and they didn't open any other machines, they just had the one xray machine open. After 10 minutes they had only managed to get 5 passengers through security, they were moving that slowly. I started to get worried about missing my flight and noticed that there were 8 TSA employees 'managing' the xray machine, metal detector, bins, and general security, and an additional employee checking ID. I asked the officer checking our passes if they would open another gate because of how slowly they were getting people through security and passengers were getting backed up between the machine and his ID checkpoint. Other passengers around me also spoke up and complained that they were going to miss their flight too. We were told we could not go to another security checkpoint because this was the one for the gates we were flying out of and we simply had to wait and should've planned for more time.

An Alaska Air employee came to the gate and asked for passengers on my flight to go to the front of the line since our flight was leaving first. we did, but then a delta employee came soon after telling TSA to hurry up because their passengers were going to miss their flight too, which was only leaving 15 mins after ours. there were enough airline employees and passengers kicking up a fuss that they started to get people through faster, but instead of opening another machine they just rushed the screening, which defeated the purpose of the screening.

They refused to open another xray and metal detector even though there were a total of 9 TSA employees managing the checkpoint. I've been through several security screenings where there are as little as 2 employees working just one machine and they manage to get passengers through in less than one minute per person... there were 5 machines available and 9 employees, yet they refused to open more to get us through to our flights.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Aa flight 2287 from Tulsa ok to dfw on 1/25/13

Comments: I always opt out of the invasive screening and only go thru metal detector, but there was only the invasive offered in Tulsa so I opted for the pat down.... Oh my I cannot believe how they handled it, I can still feel the fingers on my crotch.... I complained to the tsa and they said it is how they do it, but I've never been touched by tsa like this.... I never write complaints, but I am appalled by the way I was touched, even after I showed them my global entry card. I feel ur methods are extreme or maybe this only happens in Tulsa. I appreciate ur attention to this matter.

Kind regards,

Caller states he did not want to give his information to power hungry TSA. He wanted to know if he could opt out to the AIT. He wanted to file a complaint about an experience he had at AUS.

Airport: Austin

Airline: He asked if that was necessary

He wanted to speak to a supervisor and did not want to provide specific details about his experience.

mnelson: Caller said he has experienced a patdown at AUS and feels the TSO was too aggressive during it. Caller said he feels you should be able to choose to do the metal detector instead of a patdown. He also did not like it because he had to wait for a male to do the patdown. Advised caller to visit our website where he can place his suggestions about changes in procedures.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Comments: Today I was on a flight from Atlanta, GA back home to Toronto, Ontario and I have a complaint about the way my security screening was handled in Atlanta. I have a disability and arrived to the security check point in an airport wheelchair. When I arrived they took the forearm crutch I use to put it through the x-ray as usual, and gave me a cane that they had on site that was not made of metal for me to use. However, rather than going through the metal detector, the security agents proceeded to attempt to make me go into the AIT body scanning machine. Well on your website it specifically says:

"Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device."

Well for me this is not the case so I wouldn't have been able to go in this machine. You would think that when someone arrives in a wheelchair that this would be obvious. However, the staff were extremely insensitive. I think that the staff at the Atlanta International airport should be more sensitive and knowledgeable about security screening for people with disabilities. I think additional training is required. Even the woman they made do my pat down told me that they should have never made me try to go through it. They seemed very annoyed that I wouldn't go through and it was a very uncomfortable situation. They also made a scene yelling really loudly "OPT OUT" like I was somehow causing a disturbance just because I wasn't going through the machine. Not only do I have medical issues that would not make it possible for me to go through it, but the radiation caused by exposure in these machines is not acceptable to be required to go through. If staff are unwilling or resistant to doing pat-downs if people don't want to or physically cannot go through these machines then they should not be working in such a position. Today I witnessed everyone in the line be made to go through this machine, which I find very ironic considering it was announced recently that these machines will shortly be removed from airports throughout the US. Disgraceful.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Wednesday Jan 23rd, 2-6PM
New York City JFK Airport
Terminal 1, Security Checkpoint for Gate 8
Air-China Flight CA982 .

2013 8:18:3 Comments: On Wednesday, Jan 23rd, I had lost $9,000 at the New York City JFK airport. I believe that this money had been stolen from me by a TSA officer. In short, all of the money was packed in a red envelope then wrapped in a small black plastic bag. Before I left my house on the day of departure, this bag of money was put in my waist bag/fanny pack, which I kept secured around my waist all the time from when I left my house to when I had to remove it for TSA security check. The money was present right before I removed my fanny pack during TSA security check, however when I checked my fanny pack again after it went through the screening conveyor belt, I was bewildered to find that my bag of money had disappeared! Upon reflection of what had occurred, I am very convinced that a TSA officer had stolen my money. Below is a full description of the events.

I had planned on going to China with my 4-month-old daughter to visit my relatives. My Air-China CA982 flight was scheduled to depart JFK at 3:50pm for China bound. I had arrived at the JFK airport Terminal 1 around 2:00pm with my aunt, a friend, and my daughter. Upon arrival, my aunt, my daughter, and I waited in the airport lobby while my friend parked his car. Before my friend returned, I started lining-up at the Air-China counter in order to obtain my boarding pass, while my aunt helped me watch the baby in the lobby. After my friend returned, he brought over the baby and joined me on the line. After receiving the boarding passes, we returned to the lobby and joined my aunt. Next, I made a trip to the bathroom by myself. Afterwards all of us went to get my three large luggage bags checked-in. At this time, the baby woke up and started crying; therefore I spent a few minutes to feed the baby. When we checked that the time was almost 2:50PM, we quickly headed over to the security check for gate 8.

Upon arrival at the security check point, I first had my daughter's and my boarding passes and passports checked. Afterwards, I put away the boarding passes and passports into my fanny pack. Next I transferred my daughter into a baby carrier and continued to walk forward, leaving my aunt and friend behind this checkpoint. At this time, I had my daughter in my chest baby carrier, the fanny pack strapped around my waist, a bookbag on my back, and a small pink luggage I was pulling with my right hand. Next, another airport worker checked my boarding passes and passports. When I put away my boarding passes and passports into my fanny pack, I was unable to fully zip close the fanny pack since I was carrying my daughter and had a difficultly maneuvering. After a short distance I arrived at the main security screening checkpoint, where there were metal detectors and x-ray conveyor belts. A TSA officer asked whether I had anything in my pockets, which I answered with a "no". This TSA officer was an African American woman in her later 20's/early 30's with bob cut hairstyle. (This is the officer who I suspect of stealing my money.) Next I lifted my pink luggage onto the conveyor belt. Then I removed my fanny pack with some difficulty and placed it into a bin on the conveyor belt. I had laid the fanny pack flat down on the bin. However, when I was removing a baby blanket and my shoes, the TSA officer moved my fanny pack to an upright position, with the bag opening facing towards her. Next, I placed the baby blanket and my shoes in the same bin. Afterwards, I took down my bookbag from my back, took out an ipad, and placed the ipad on a bin with the bookbag on top of the ipad. The TSA officer removed the bookbag from the bin and placed it on the conveyor belt in between the pink luggage and the fanny pack bin. During this time, The TSA officer also told the male passenger behind me to go to a different conveyor belt, making me the last passenger on my line. Comments: (b)(6) is what is killing the TSAs reputation among travellers. A bully plain & simple. When i approached the scanner i said i would prefer a pat down. I then realized he was directing me to the standard metal detector. I said "ok. I dont mind those". He then waived me through and made a comment that i needed to say i wanted a patdown before he told me which i was going through. When i tried to respond he started repeating "bye" and waving at me. He said it at least 5 times as i stood there in shock at his behavior. Very disappointing even to a frequent traveller.

The caller was flying from CLT around 7:30 AM. He stated that he was subjected to additional screening and his apple phone charger was broken. He stated that the screener was very rude and he kept telling the passenger that he did not see any damage. He stated that he was flagged at CLT during screening because of his stridex wipes. He stated that when he went through PIT on his original flight, he was not flagged. He asked why he would have been selected for additional screening. He stated that he is 16 years of age.

His flight path was: PIT to CLT and then back from CLT to PIT. He was not flagged for additional screening at PIT on the first flight but was flagged at CLT on the way back.

I apologized to the caller that he had this occurrence. I explained that he can file a claim for the damaged charger by completing a standard claims form. They are available on our website, www.tsa.gov, or I can email the forms with in 24 hours of this response.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at that location.

I explained that TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

Comments: I want to relay a problem I had at Oakland CA airport last night. As I was going through the scanners, the TSA employee closed the metal detector and asked that I use the full body scanner. I declined and was told that I would need a full body pat down. I accepted this. However my personal items were in a tray which was put through the xray machine and were sitting in the open about 50 or so feet from where I was. Other people were picking up items from trays all around the trays which contained my wallet, my tablet computer, my laptop and other item including keys and coins. I quickly realized that anyone picking up items from trays around mine could easily grab my wallet or tablet. I began to complain and it took a minute or two for the TSA employees to realize what the issue was. At first they kept saying that the screener was on the way but finally they realized what my issue was. After my personal items had been in the open subject to removal by anyone dishonest enough to grab a wallet or tablet or laptop for minutes if not longer, the TSA person watching the line realized what my issue was and covered my tray. My issue is not the patdown it is the way my personal items were allowed to remain on the belt while other passengers were picking through trays all around it. I feel I was unnecessarily exposed to a possible theft.

Caller said that she and her husband flew from Phoenix to Burbank and then back from Burbank. She went through the screening and then was told to put her left foot in front of the TSO and her leg was patted down. She said this happened in Burbank when she flew in October as well. She said there was no alarm. She wanted to know why her leg is being patted down. She asked if she should call someone at Burbank to ask why her leg is patted down. Caller said that the TSO did not act inappropriately. She is getting aggravated because her leg is being patted down.

TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

I told the caller that TSA does not keep records of patdowns and I do not know what triggered the patdown. I told her that she can get the number for the CSM by choosing option 5 on the IVR and entering the airport code. I told her that the airport will not be able to tell her why she got the patdown either.

pregnant women & their unborn children. However, many experts are unconvinced that this has been proven (there are no long term studies) & in Europe these scanners are not allowed to be used on a large scale without a medical reason. For these reasons, I choose to opt out.

This morning several travelers were waived through the alternative metal detector next to the scanner. I asked if I could use that instead of the body scanner but was informed by the TSA agent that I can't "ask" to go through it and would have to go through the scanner. I requested the pat down instead.

With regard to "asking" to go through the alternative metal detector, I object to this policy and to the TSA agent's handling of the situation. I am obviously pregnant and, given an alternative, I think all pregnant women should be able to opt for the metal detector if one is available and should not have to be subjected to an unpleasant and much longer "pat down."

2013 3:55:2 I believe a change should be made to this policy when it comes to pregnant travelers.

Please advise, thank you.

Accepted TRF:

Apologized to caller for issues during transfer today.

I asked caller how he feels he was discriminated against.

Caller stated to say he was discriminated against that is a little harsh.

He stated he conveys 2 concerns.

He is an airline Captain with American Airlines and FFDO as well as global entry member so he has had extensive background checks.

When he chooses to travel out of uniform he still has those background checks and is a low level security threat.

He agrees with the security but where it falls apart for him is in the last 2 years he is selected every time he flies out of uniform.

This has happened at different locations: West Palm Beach, DFW, Ohare, JFK and Detroit Metro.

2013 1:40:2 His personal opinion is because the agents have the authority to select and in his case for whatever reason they exercise that power.

None of the equipment alarmed, he was just chosen for extra screening.

He does think it could be petty jealousy and to test his theory a couple of times recently instead of displaying his airline credentials (as he normally does) he used his FL drivers license instead.

That takes him from airline personnel to general public and he was not chosen for extra screening.

He feels the TSA looks bad because of this.

What he is submitting is that he is being selected unfairly because of his airline background.

He flew 1-25-13 from West Palm Beach and was out of uniform and he displayed his airline credentials. When they chose him for extra screening he asked for a supervisor and they could not say why he would have been chosen. Next the woman who came was in street clothing and he assumed she was the CSM. She told him it is in the SOP and she cannot provide it to a traveler.

I explained the CSM could not give him the SOP information or give to any traveler because that is guarded information.

Told him I could possibly send something over to West Palm Beach.

He stated it is an issue at all locations so that would not help and he wants to take this higher.

Told him I could possibly send something over to West Palm Beach.

He stated it is an issue at all locations so that would not help and he wants to take this higher.

I want to have a copy of the actual policy and procedure for this. There is nothing of sensitive nature to this, and does not require a FOIA request.

As noted below, the requirement is that the TSA officer use the back of the hand for sensitive areas, and your TSA officer used the inner palm of her hand to rub my perineum to the point where I felt it on my clitoris and labia.

If I would have had a dress, would she have put her hand up my skirt! Is the same procedure followed for those of the muslim faith that wear full length garb?

You have NOT responded to my question. You have had adequate time to review the film - was this done? I gave you the exact gate, time and screening post. There is not excuse for any of this, and I am not going away until I see that this is investigated.

Thank you for your e-mail regarding patdown screening.

2013 4:07:00 PM The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important.

One screening procedure, which generates discussion and concern among passengers, involves use of patdown searches. Patdowns are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, as well as when random screening activities are conducted.

A Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search, and as the screening is being conducted, the TSO should be describing the procedures he or she is using. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

Passengers have the right to request a private screening, and private screening will be conducted in a room or in an area away from other passengers. However, if a passenger does not permit the search, he or she will not be permitted to board an aircraft.

We understand and regret the discomfort and inconvenience that you may have experienced as a result of patdown procedures. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat, but the use of patdowns provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint. For more information regarding patdown procedures, please visit TSA's Web site (HYPERLINK "http://www.tsa.gov" 'www.tsa.gov').

2013 8:21:5 On Saturday Jan 19, 2013, I went through security at the International Terminal at Baltimore Washington International airport (BWI). When I requested to opt out of the scanner, I was told to wait at a position where I was unable to see my luggage that had gone through the x-ray machine. When I pointed out to (b)(6) (TSA employee) that I have the right to be positioned so that I can watch my luggage, I was in rather unfriendly tone refused to do so. Original tone "You can file a complaint if you don't like it. That's all we can do here". I was upset by the tone of voice and the refusal to follow procedure and allow me to see my luggage with valuables inside. Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Delta Airlines - Flying to Tel Aviv, Israel on Wednesday Jan. 16, 2013 from JFK airport

Comments: To Whom It May Concern,

I emailed the personnel at Delta airlines about an incident that occurred during security procedures that both my parents and I were very upset about and I was told to contact TSA.

2013 8:22: On Wednesday January 16th 2013 at around 6:45ish my family and I were going through the normal security procedures at JFK airport in the Delta terminal. We used the wonderful option of curbside check-in to get rid of all of our heavier items and entered the airport for security. When it came time to put my items through the machine I carefully placed my jacket, shoes, and drawstring bag into a bin and proceeded to walk through the metal detectors. I was waiting at the other side of the security belt for my items and my jacket never came out. After a few minutes my mother and I told one of the male security workers that I had not received my jacket and he was not very pleased to assist us. Never the less, they ended up stopping the belt because my jacket got stuck in there. He pulled it out forcefully and when I received my jacket in return, the waistline of my jacket was ripped from the inside. I tried to approach the same guard who very rudely responded "I did not rip your jacket!". We never blamed him for being the reason that it ripped but we wanted to make him aware. He sent us to the female supervisor who was standing in the room and she handled the situation even worse than him. She was extremely impolite and kept suggesting that the reason my jacket ripped was because I did not place my jacket in the bin (which is not true). After she snapped at me, my mother tried to reapproach her again but she was simply not interested in helping us out. I have 2 issues with the above situation:

1. It was a brand new Nautica black jacket that I purchased only 3 days before my trip. The jacket costed $70 and it is a great quality jacket...there is no reason why I should have to wear a ripped/damaged jacket because of a malfunction on the part of Delta's machines or the way the products were being handled.

2. Despite the fact that I was upset that the jacket was ruined...what burned me up even more was the way that the situation was handled! Had the Delta staff members shown a little bit more genuine interest in assisting me I probably would have walked away with a completely different impression. Instead I walked away not only with a damaged jacket that now needs to be replaced, but rather with a sour Caller stated her friend flew from Orlando to Frankfurt Germany on Flutanza. Caller stated her friend had two hip replacement and TSA insisted that she went through the AIT. Caller stated she wants to complain about Customs and Border and broke the lock on her suitcase. Caller stated her friend wanted to know why she had to go through the AIT even if she has a doctors note.

2013 9:42: Advised caller the following information:

Advised caller if a passenger has a doctors note about their disability that doesn't exempt the passenger from being screened. If the passenger set off any alarms of the WTMD or the AIT the passenger would be subject to a patdown to resolve the alarms.

Caller flew from Minneapolis via Sun Country to Fort Meyers and then back a week later. She was screened by one of the machines and wants to know what it was. It was not the walk through metal detector. She wants to know if it shows a detailed image of the body. She asked if she can request a patdown rather than use the machines. She also heard that they were removing these machines. She said that she was in a wheelchair and was made to rush through and it was not a good experience.

I told the caller that the machine she most likely used is the AIT. Millimeter wave systems project beams of non-ionizing radio frequency energy over the passenger's body surface; the beams do not penetrate the skin. The radio frequency energy reflected back from the body.

2013 1:05: Automated Target Recognition (ATR) software upgrades further enhance passenger privacy by displaying a generic image of a person on an AIT monitor. Passengers are able to view the same outline that the TSA officer sees. The FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012 (FAA Act) directed "the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to ensure that AIT be equipped with ATR software on June 1, 2012. This Act also allowed the TSA Administrator to grant an extension, which he issued for one year, ending May 31, 2013. One vendor's solution (Rapiscan) did not meet that deadline. In order to meet the Congressional mandate, TSA plans to remove all of the Rapiscan AIT machines. Some will be replaced with other AIT units that are equipped with ATR. At the remaining locations, TSA will use multiple security layers to provide a comparable level of security. By June 1, 2013, only AIT units equipped with ATR software that provide enhanced privacy protection for travelers will be used by TSA at airport security checkpoints. As always, use of this technology is optional and she can request a patdown at any time.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Flight #F9 2612, American Eagle, San Diego commuter terminal to LAX departing at 1pm-connecting flights from Denver to Honolulu, HI. January 15th, 2013

Comments: We must figure out a better way to be safe. My husband and I have not flown since the body scans and pat-downs were put in place due to not wanting to be subjected to such humiliation with our two young daughters. However, wanting to visit Hawaii and hearing it wasn't as bad as we thought, we decided to try. I was so relieved in the Denver airport to see the new screens that are much less invasive and felt I was treated with respect-even when my bag was checked and had to get searched-I appreciate it was in my presence. However, in San Diego, we had to leave the main terminal and go through security again in the commuter terminal. I was horrified to see they had the blue x-ray scanners and was greatly relieved when the security ran me and my 2 daughters together through the metal detector. We arrived around 10:45 and had to wait until our 1pm flight. Once in the terminal we found out there were no water fountains in the secured area to fill our now empty water bottles. We did find a drinking fountain outside of the secured area which after an hour and 1/2 of waiting decided to take a drink and go back through security. My husband went first with our two daughters and I stayed behind to watch the luggage-per your rules. After he went, I went to the line again, as before, asked to opt out of the body scanner and was told that I would have to be patted down in order to proceed. I was shocked considering I had just went through the metal detector before and now was not being allowed to. I was informed that it was because my daughters were with me that I got to go through the metal detector and since now I didn't I would have to be either x-rayed by a person I couldn't see with an image I was not allowed to view or be groped all in the name of my safety. I then informed Agent (b)(6) that I would just call to my daughters-30 feet away to come out and get a drink and then go through as before. She told me that now that she knew what I was doing that she would not allow it and I either had to be x-rayed or groped--all for a drink of water. We had been in an airport since 7am that morning. It makes no sense that the metal detector was fine an 1 1/2 ago but not now and that I have to use my children to protect my privacy. So faced with either being molested visually by someone I couldn't see and not being allowed to see the image taken of me or being physically molested by someone I can see. I chose the later. I called out to my husband-30 feet away and told him I had to be groped because I didn't have the girls with me. Agent (b)(6) then threatened to call the police for shouting. She also wanted to put me in a secluded box to grope me. If I am going to be violated I will not do it in secret, so I told her that would not be necessary and we did it in front of all the passengers waiting for flights. I was again, committing no crime. I have the right to tell her of my disapproval of your "procedures." What crime would the police charge me with?-she was just being a bully. Often peoples rights and freedoms are violated by "procedures" and these need to change. My business is with the private airlines not with the government and unless I have committed a crime or you have reasonable suspicion of a crime, you have no right to physically touch me in that way or take a picture of me that I cannot view. I am an American Citizen, I have the right to travel in my country free-from unreasonable searches. I should have the right not to have a naked picture taken of me or my breasts, butt and groin being groped. I would rather you run a background check and profile then grope every American citizen in the name of "fairness" This is outrageous! These are the types of things that have lead other countries down very dangerous roads-Germany, Russia, China. This needs to be changed. I do not fly very often, and I will not ever be flying into the San Diego airport again. I should not have had to go through security again and I should have free access to water if you are not allowing me to keep mine. Please change these. They are unconstitutional and traumatizing. My daughters had to watch in horror at my pat-down and had to watch me cry for the next hour as I had to pull myself together after the "screening". They have never seen me cry and it was definite damper to our vacation. There is a better way and we need to fix this before more women are traumatized. My only consolation is that it was done by a woman. My breasts and my groin have only been touched by my husband and by my doctor. It should stay that way. Unfortunately, I have now been molested twice by TSA and I am not sure I will ever fly again until you fix this or you are removed.

The first time was during a body pat down in the summer of 2011. I have an implant in my body which sets off metal detector. I have had many of these body pat downs, but only the one at the Eugene, Oregon airport was more like sexual abuse than a body search. Each time the female agent approached my crotch (four times: once for front of each leg, and once for back), she hit my private parts hard with her hand. I was so shook up afterwards, I went in the bathroom and cried. It was basically a sexual assault.

Another time, at the same airport, I was recovering from surgery. They took my cane, had me walk through the metal detector, and then instead of giving me my cane, they told me I should just walk over and get it. This meant I had to walk about 15' without the use of the cane that I needed for walking.

The last time was only a few days ago, and this last incident has prompted to write this letter. The date was January 28, 2013 at approximately 4:30 am. I went through the security traveling with my cat. They told me to take my cat out of her carrier and walk through the metal detector. My cat has never traveled before, so I did what they said, but naturally I was holding on tight to the cat with both arms.

I got through the metal detector and one agent said he wanted to wipe my hands with his explosive residue tissue. Okay, but I was still holding the cat! I told him this (although, he could clearly see the large animal in my arms) and he looked at his fellow agent with an expression of, "can you believe this lady? ...what we have to put up with!"

He insisted that I lift my hands, while trying to keep hold of my 12.5 lb frightened cat so that he could wipe my hands. Then I was casually told, "put the cat back in the holder."

I had to flag someone to help me. I was alone. They couldn't have cared less. There was only one agent who would help me by holding the cat carrier while I stuffed my frightened cat back in it, and helped me zip it up. What is going to happen when a passenger's animal gets lose because of their poor attitude and procedures?

This is not the end of this story. Again, as always, I set off the metal detector because of an implant in my body. I was about to have the pat down when I was asked whether I had a laptop in my laptop bag. I said, "yes." (I had understood that if it was in it's own bag it could just go through.) No problem, they could take it out. But the Agent set my Apple Macbook Pro (which is new) on top of the bag, on top of my shoes! The laptop was lopsided, balanced above the sides of the plastic tub. I said, "be careful with that." I was told, "don't worry, nothing will happen." They put it through again, and then when it all came out, the Agent stacked the three tubs on top of each other with my belongings in them with my laptop (which had nothing on it to protect it) on the bottom.

Caller is at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport. She went through the checkpoint on 2/01/2013 about 9 am. She has an artificial limb from the knee down. She said that she went through the AIT and then was sent to machine that took pictures. She said that she flies all the time and this is the first time this has been done. She said the lady who performed the screening did not know how to do the screening. She stated it was not done the right way. She was not offered a private screening. She said that it was very embarrassing. She asked to speak with a supervisor. She spoke with supervisor Howe. He told her that procedure was followed. She said her screening took 35 minutes. She did not get the names of the screeners. She said the first lady was a black lady and the second one was a foreign lady. Her ID and boarding pass was checked when she got to the checkpoint. She said it should have been checked again during the screening and it was not. She wanted to make a complaint.

013 9:38:3 I gave the following information: Regardless of whether a passenger is screened by a walk-through metal detector, AIT, or a thorough patdown, a prosthetic is subject to additional screening. A TSO will need to see the prosthetic device, which may require the lifting of clothing without exposing any sensitive areas or removing a belt that holds the prosthetic to the passenger's body. TSA also will use technology to test the prosthetic for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening.

Cast and Prosthesis Imaging technology is used in some airports. Where available, this technology will also be used to inspect a prosthesis.

I advised the caller that her Id and boarding pass are checked when she arrives at the checkpoint.

I apologized to the caller for her unpleasant experience and told her that I would forward her record to the CSM at Ronald Reagan Washington National for review.

Comments: I'm on TSA pre-check and Global access. I fly over 60 segments a year. Many out of FLL on United. FLL has the most poorly trained and rude TSA agents. Every time I fly through FLL I must go through the full body scan and get patted down EVERY TIME! I've been told to remove my belt after the scan when I show I have none on. I have never been found to have anything in my pockets or on my person other than a boarding pass in my hand. I've seen many "employees" of FLL walk through without scanning with shoes and belts on. Many times I've seen the alarm go off as they pass through the metal detector and still waived through. One time while being patted down I politely asked why I am considered more of a threat than them. I'm told they are "employees" and I received a more thorough pat down! I'm a loyal American and not a threat. I'm not going to be bribed to carry something in! They are more likely too. I've spoken with UA personnel in their United Club and TSA agents elsewhere and all say FLL are the worst! Please do something; it's insulting and dangerous. Please have TSA pre-check at UA in FLL!

Incident Details: Caller flew from Austin Bergstrom airport yesterday. His wife was denied boarding to fly. He is a 100% disabled veteran and has a neuro-stimulator in his spinal cord, the TSO took his stimulator controller which was put through the. The caller wants to know the policy for spinal stimulator remotes.

Advised Caller:

I do not have an exact answer for the remote but for similar devices my information states:

Passengers who have medical devices attached to their bodies, such as bone growth stimulators, spinal stimulators, neurostimulators, ports, feeding tubes, TENS Unit or other types of devices should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the device and indicate where the device is located before the screening process begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening.

If a passenger can safely disconnect from their device, he or she can submit it for x-ray screening; however, passengers can be screened without disconnecting from devices. If a passenger cannot disconnect from the device, the type of screening conducted will depend on the type of device and the passenger's abilities. Passengers should consult with the manufacturer of the device to determine whether it can pass through a walk-through metal detector, can be subjected to Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, or x-ray screening.

The caller stated that he thought this was the policy for reading on the web site. But his dad went through a screening checkpoint with medical documents regarding the issue because the screening of the remote has previously caused the stimulator to bring him to the ground. He requested that it not be x-rayed and was told that it had to be. He stated that they had spoken with law enforcement regarding the issue as well. He was given the CSM contact information at the airport for was told that they do not work weekends. I verified the contact information and advised he get in contact with the CSM to address this issue.

Advised Caller:

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process will enable us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subject of repeated complaints. If you had his flight details I would forward a copy of this record as well.

The caller stated he did not have the flight details at this time. I informed him I would still document his complaint and notify my supervisor. I apologized for the happening.

The caller flew to SFB. He has returned to JFK as of yesterday. He stated that when he took his shoes off for screening he stepped on something in the floor. He has a bump on his foot. He asked if there is anyway to keep from removing his shoes in a unsanitary environment. He has to go to the doctor. He asked how often the floors are cleaned and if they are sanitary.

I advised the caller that screening shoes by x-ray is an effective method of identifying any type of anomalies, including explosives. Our highly trained Transportation Security Officers (TSO) can see if a shoe has been tampered with when they view it on the x-ray equipment. By requiring all passengers to remove shoes at the walk-through metal detector or at the Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) for x-ray screening, we increase both security and efficiency at the checkpoint.

TSA is sensitive to concerns over the issue of sanitation in the screening locations. TSA's Office of Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment reviewed our procedures for screening the footwear of passengers at TSA checkpoints, and they determined there was no need for additional sanitary procedures beyond those already in place.

Nonetheless, passengers are permitted to wear disposable booties, socks, or slippers through the screening checkpoint to help protect their feet at walk-through metal detector and the AIT machines. The disposable footwear may be removed and placed into the individual's accessible property prior to exiting the screening checkpoint.

Although some airports may offer disposable booties or slippers to passengers as a courtesy, this is not a TSA-wide practice or requirement. Travelers who wish to wear foot coverings during the screening process are responsible for bringing them to the security checkpoint.

I explained that I will forward his complaint to the CSM at SFB for review and provide them with his contact information in the event they need to contact him concerning the incident.

5. And my 17 weeks pregnant wife went through the full body scanner because he said so

Question

1. Is it really safer than metal detectors for my pregnant wife and fetus??
2. Does body scanner is safe for my 17-weeks pregnant wife and fetus?
3. And why my pregnant wife should walk through screening machine without checking metal detector first for my fetus's safety?

I had checking web for body scanner at airport but, it is not safe and I would like to get official/actual response from you

Caller stated that she was selected for secondary screening, and wanted to know if she was truly on a list somewhere or if the screening was truly random. She also stated that her boarding pass had four S s notated inside, as she was coming back from Cancun with her children.

Advised caller:

TSA can neither confirm nor deny whether an individual is on a Federal Watch List.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation.

Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly...

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates.

013 6:07:4 Caller states: Daughter is traveling from New Orleans to Dulles. Daughter said that they were not making people take off shoes or jackets and only a few people they were selecting people to go through the full body scan and the others had to go through metal detector.

Escalated to a Supervisor: I explained to the caller that our TCC employees are allowed to exclude their last names. I explained each airport has their own discretion to allow or disallow particular items through checkpoint and that the TCC could do no more than what we already have done. (b)(6) cancer survivor. The TSO stated that these are not x-rays and proceeded that the passenger walk through the AIT machine. Caller wants to know if there are signs posted in the airport saying that each passenger has a choice for screening. Caller wants to know if TSA does not recommend the AIT for cancer patients. Caller is very upset that she had no way of knowing that TSA does not recommend cancer survivors to opt-out for a pat-down. Caller had no way of knowing that having a pat-down was an option.

Caller is 78 years old, does not have a computer, and would like to make a complaint and suggestion. Caller hopes her suggestion will help people like her who did not know, and had no way of knowing that there are options for screening. Caller states that there should be a sign saying so due to the severity of the health condition. Life or death as she stated. Caller wanted to know who she can speak to about this. Caller wants to know what action will be taken and how she will know that something was done. Caller wants someone to contact her as far as the results of this complaint. Caller wants to know how long it will take to review this documentation. Caller wants to know how she knows if an action or no action was taken. Caller asked what happened to the previous machines and why they were taken out.

Complaint: Caller was not offered a pat-down once she informed the officer she was a cancer survivor. There is not a sign saying that cancer patients are not recommended to go through AIT and may opt out for a patdown instead. The TSO should offer passengers to be screened via patdown or the machines. The burden of being informed should not be placed on the passenger, but rather on the government to inform the passengers of the process.

Suggestion: There should be signs stating that every passenger has the right to choose either a pat-down or to go through the AIT. For those who do not have internet, in order to become familiar with TSA travel tips and to be informed, there should be another way of informing them via signs or have the TSO better inform the passenger of the process, their options, etc. Caller states that this is not a simple request, but rather it is very important that other cancer patients, and all passengers are informed with this information.

013 12:35:2 Informed caller:
Apologized to caller. Thanked caller for the suggestion input.

AIT is a classification that covers two similar technologies, millimeter wave and backscatter. Both systems work in a similar way to give Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) a virtual image of a passenger that conspicuously highlights potentially dangerous items. AIT gives TSA a way to detect a wide variety of threats, including suicide vests and other improvised explosive devices that may be hidden under passengers' clothing and cannot be detected by walk-through metal detectors. AIT enhances security, reduces the need for patdown searches for passengers with joint replacements and other medical conditions, and improves passenger convenience and comfort.

AIT machines have been independently evaluated by the Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Standards and Technology, and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, who have all affirmed their safety. This testing took into account special populations that are more sensitive to radiation, such as children, persons receiving radiation treatment for medical conditions, and pregnant and potentially pregnant women, as well as TSOs who work near the equipment. In fact, a traveler is exposed to less radiation from one AIT scan than from 2 minutes being onboard a commercial aircraft at flight altitude.

AIT machines are not x-rays. These machines are made to help find metallic and non-metallic threats under the passenger's clothing. The AIT machine does not catch the metal joints that people have inside of their body, because it is just bounced off the outside of the body.

Clarified with (b)(6) and (b)(7) that this machine is in fact not an x-ray. Informed caller that I am not a radiologist and do not know the complete make-up of what the machine is exactly, but can assure her that this has been tested to be safe for those who have had radiation due to medical purposes. TSA does not recommend that cancer survivors go through this machine due to the previous radiation they have had and the recommendation of the passenger's doctor.

was seriously injured on the job the week after Thanksgiving. The most serious of these injuries was a broken and dislocated ankle. I was advised by my doctor that I could travel to see my gravely ill father who had just been put into hospice, as long as I could elevate my foot and have a wheelchair and/or the use of my crutches.

On 12/21 I spoke with a customer service representative regarding the accommodations I would need to travel safely. These accommodations included a special seat on the plane which would have room for me to elevate my foot, a wheelchair with attendant from the drop off point to my seat on the plane and the ability to travel with my service dog. I was assured and reassured that all of these accommodations would be no problem. I then called back and spoke with another customer service representative to make the reservation and again confirm that all of the needed accommodations would be possible. I was told this was not a problem and not to worry. I made the reservation and then spoke with the Disability Desk, again to be sure all my requests could be accommodated and were on the record. I was for the third time reassured that my needs would not be a problem and were listed on my reservation. I've never traveled injured and requiring help, special accommodations and a wheelchair so I was very careful that every detail was discussed. If anything would have been in question I would have arranged another form of transportation.

On Sunday, 12/23/12 I arrived at the airport for my flight (UA5441) from SFO to San Luis Obispo. A wheelchair picked me up as planned and the attendant helped me check my bags and get to the proper terminal. I was taken to security. It was very busy as people were trying to get home for Christmas. I was asked by security if I could walk. I said that I could not walk but I could use my crutches. He told me I could not use my crutches nor could I use the wheelchair. He said "this is what we are going to do, use my arm for support, lean on me and carry your dog in the other arm." I was not comfortable with this and voiced my concern and asked to use my crutches instead. I felt very intimidated by this security worker, he kept saying this was the only way. I was not offered any other option and felt forced to comply. So I got up and leaned on him with one arm and carried my service dog in the other. Leaning on a persons arm does not provide the same level of support as crutches or a wheelchair. I was made to go through the metal detector twice and when I came out the other side my wheelchair and attendant was not there. The security worker instructed me to walk further to a screening area so they could test my feet and hands. I again asked for my crutches or wheelchair and he said "it's not that far". Finally the screening was done and my wheelchair and attendant showed up. I was taken to the gate and left there. I thought that the attendant was supposed to stay with me but she said that it was too long of a wait till boarding and that there would be another wheelchair to take me on the plane. I sat and waited, my ankle started to swell and I needed to take a pain pill from putting weight on the broken ankle.

When it was time to board, there was no wheelchair for me. I requested one and waited for a very long time. All the passengers had been loaded and they were just waiting for me. Finally it arrived. There was a terrible storm and all of the other passengers were offered airline umbrellas for the long steep walk down two narrow wet ramps that lead down to the tarmac. I asked for an umbrella (as I'd been warned repeatedly not to get my cast wet) and I was told it was against regulation to use an umbrella with a person in a wheelchair. The staff covered me with a yellow tarp. I could not see where I was going. I was wheeled down the steep wet ramps and once I arrived at the plane the tarp was removed. They told me I had to get up the wet narrow ramp to the plane on my own. I asked for them to take me in a wheelchair as I had arranged and I was told the wheelchair would not go up to the plane. I told them I should not be walking. I asked to use my crutches and was told that it was against the airline policy to use equipment not issued by the airline. Meanwhile the storm is windy and heavy rain, my cast was getting wet. They told me to use the railing for support up the ramp and that I needed to also carry my dog. I again asked for a wheelchair and was told there was not a wheelchair that would fit on the ramp and walking up the ramp was my only option. I felt extreme pressure to comply and to get out of the storm. I used the rail for support and carried my service dog up the ramp. I fell into the first seat available, which was the one that I was told was reserved for me so that I could elevate my ankle. Apparently this was another point of failure as someone else had been assigned my "disabled" seat. As soon as I sat down my foot began to swell and my toes turned purple. I propped my foot up on the wall, luckily I'm flexible. I was wearing a hard cast and when the swelling happened there was tremendous pain and pressure because the cast became very tight. I told the flight attendant that there was no way I could get down the ramp when we arrived and asked if there was another way. She told me she would request a small aisle wheelchair but it would take additional time and effort. I'd have to wait until all the other passengers exited the plane. I was relieved to know there was another way but very concerned about my injury.

It was a short flight, about 40 minutes. The crew in San Luis Obispo were very accommodating. I was taken off the plane from my seat on a small wheelchair and taken down the ramp onto the tarmac without issue. I was transferred to another larger wheelchair and taken to baggage claim. I can't understand why this was possible at a small town airport without any issue but a major airport like SFO would treat a disabled person this way.

I was taken directly to see my father in hospice. He was lucid and able to know I was there for him. The swelling continued to get worse even though I elevated it while sitting in his room. After a short amount of time I had to cut my visit short with my

TSA Employee: (If Known) : Short man about 50 with dark hair and dark thick mustache Comment : I do not travel often. I have anxiety issues with the big x-ray screening machines. There was a normal metal detector that the TSA (a man about 50 with dark hair and a dark mustache) opened up as the line was getting long since they were funneling two lines into one machine. If the TSA man had been paying attention, he would have seen that I let 6 people go ahead of me because I was starting to have a panic attack approaching the x-ray machine. The TSA man standing in front of the metal detector opened up the metal detector side and people started to go through. I stepped aside to go through the metal detector to avoid a full blown panic attack. I did not cut in line but he yelled out "quote;I have a line jumper! quote; and I had to go to the back of the line. Like I said, if he was paying attention, he would have seen that I had stepped to the side a bit and I was NOT cutting in line. I did not know you had to line up military style to go through the machines. He would not let me pass through the metal detector even when he decided it was my turn. He told me I had to go through the x-ray machine. I asked him why I could not go through the metal detector. He started to laugh at me and told me "quote;I make the decisions, not you, ha ha ha... quote; He never answered my question. I was trying to keep my panic attack under control, but it wasn't working. I started to get emotional as my panic attack was taking over. He told me to make a decision or I would have to be patted down. I said no, I wasn't doing that and to give me some time. He started yelling. He then sent a tall African American man to pat me down in front of the people waiting in line to go through the machines. I wasn't going to have someone touching me in front of all these people, especially a man! This sent my panic attack beyond my control. The TSA man with the mustache continued to laugh at me. I told the African American man I was having a panic attack. He walked away. The TSA man with the dark mustache then had a passenger with her daughter walk right in front of me to go through the metal detector just to rub it in my face that he was not going to let me go through there. He continued to laugh at me and called a supervisor. The supervisor, a man about 6 3 who was bald came over and I told him I was having a panic attack and I needed some time. He told me that was fine. He talked to my husband on the other side and my husband also told him I was having a panic attack and it was due to the x-ray machine. I finally made it through crying and having my panic attack, for I did not want to get thrown in jail for this. The man with the dark mustache needs some more training on how to treat people. I would NEVER treat anybody the way he treated me. I was told later by my sister traveling with me that they cannot have a man pat you down, so why did he send a man to pat me down? The TSA man with the dark heavy mustache needs more training to learn to identify a passenger who is having a panic attack and not stand there and laugh and humiliate them. I do appreciate the job that TSA people do to make our travel safe, but I do NOT appreciate being laughed at and humiliated by a TSA person due to a medical condition that I cannot control. I just hope that this incident is discussed with him and he is given more training on how to pay attention to what's going on in front of him and be able to identify someone who is having a panic attack so he doesn't humiliate them and works with them. Also he needs to be trained that men are NOT to be sent to pat down a woman. Thank you for your time in reading my complaint. I hope to receive a response. Thank you.

Caller had a bad experience with his wallet in his hand, he was told by TSO and supervisor he couldnt carry in his hand during the AIT screening. The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

While the procedures are the same everywhere, the interpretation of those procedures results in some slight variations from airport to airport and situation to situation. We inspect screening operations at airports and continue to monitor the number and nature of complaints we receive from the traveling public to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. 013 12:05:1 Complaints: Disarrayed items in Checked or Carry-on Baggage. Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Delta from San Antonio to Atlanta to Daytona Beach Airport. Saturday February 2, 2013 between 0930 and 1000. Far right security lane. Comments: As I entered the far right lane I was directed to the total body x-ray (?) machine away from the metal detector isle. As I exited the machine the female employee rudely said, "Get back in there." Following that she did a pat down in areas that included the breast area, which was repeated a second time and at no time was I informed of the process. The second issue during this process is that a male TSA employee asked me if I had a c-pap machine in my back pack to which I answered, "Yes." He proceeded to take my pack back to the front of the far right isle and I began to follow him. He rudely exclaimed, "get back over there." I was very concerned about my new c-pap machine and wanted to observe the way it was handled, but was not allowed to do so. I received my new machine back in parts. I am a Registered Nurse and have never been instructed to dismantle my machine at home or in the work place so I was extremely upset about this entire experience. May I ask what kind of training this person may have had in order to safely dismantle my medical device? This is a new machine so was there something to support the necessity of taking it apart? I will say that I am very supportive of the security processes in place - my son is an 8 year 82nd Airborne vet post 9-11, and since I have never had this kind of experience I was extremely taken back. I might have passed over the rude and condescending manner in which I was treated by both employees, but the (I believe) inappropriate handing of my medical device put me over the edge and made this a pretty traumatic experience. I travel via airline several times a year. Is there anything I can do to avoid this type of treatment in the future? Thank you very much (b)(6)

Incident Details: Caller had an issue with a patdown she received and the treatment of her CPAP machine. Caller did email the TCC earlier, and received an email stating there was insufficient information. Caller is wanting to know what information she would need to supply.

Caller is also concerned about whether or not TSA has to abide by HIPAA. Caller is a private person and did not want to divulge to her friends that she had a Cpap machine.

Caller is informed that her items can be screened privately if she requested a private screening. She did not inform the TSOs that she preferred the Cpap to be private, nor did she separate her Cpap from the rest of her carry-on. Caller was told that since she failed to do either, the TSOs would have screened the items without putting any thought into whether or not she wanted discretion.

Caller's previous complaint is being copied verbatim for CSM review. CCR spoke with (b)(6) on the reasoning behind the initial response. (b)(6) was correct in observing that the caller did not provide flight number, terminal, and gate--caller could not provide these on the call. This record is being escalated without the additional information because of caller's insistence.

Previously when I've flown through Syracuse, NY airport, I've had terrible experiences. As I draft this email, I am standing in an incredibly long line to get through the gates 19-27. The fact that I have time to type an email shows that the wait time is outrageous.

First off, why does this airport not have a priority boarding lane? Don't reply with, "TSA doesn't manage the security wait lines. That's up to the airlines on that side of security." That's ridiculous. Have your many agents standing around simply move the little posts around with the rope stretched between them....and then hang a "First class/priority" sign. Easy as that and you can organize the air travel here. For someone like me who flies almost every day, having that first-class/priority line is a big deal.

Next, last time I flew through this airport, some older gentleman with TSA disassembled by whole briefcase and had all the contents strewn all over a table looking for change. Even as I told him where the change was, he continued. He told me I broke the rules; I asked him what rule says I can't carry money in my bag?!

Now, as I wait here, I witness some younger kid hop in line because he's late for his flight. A man in line is mad at him, tells the agent checking boarding passes and this agent still lets him through! A full argument is happening in front of my eyes and no security!

At this point in the email, I am through security. The patron in front of me had an electronic boarding pass and after waiting in the entire line, WAS SENT BACK TO TICKETING FOR A PAPER COPY!!! He was pissed! I asked if you have a sign indicating they can't accept electronic boarding passes and the agent tells me no! Then I tell him you also need a priority line and he says, "we do, right here" and motions to the lane which has a sign that says "Crew members only." I told him then that you must be missing the sign that says it is the priority line as well!!

When I came through the metal detector, because I'm wearing hospital scrubs to travel, the agent says I require a thorough patdown! So he fondles me in the public area.

This place is a circus. While I type now, I'm witnessing a younger man bowing to some deity, apparently acquiring the courage to do a terrorist attack and no one seems to care. He's on my plane now.

Not that this is your problem but this little Dash-8 is the most uncomfortable plane seat I've ever sat in (which I had to walk out on the Tarmac to board)!!!

My name is (b)(6) and I work for the Department of the Interior Federal Government. On Monday, February 4, 2013 at approximately 6:10 pm at Ontario airport an Employee by the name of (b)(6) was very inappropriately rude to me that I had to write this complaint.

As I placed all of my belongings in conveyer belt to be screen by a TSA employee (b)(6) and was about to walk through the metal detectors. (b)(6) was rudely screamed at me to get my attention to come back to check what I had put in the plastic container which I was very confused of why I was called back since I had followed the rules on the procedures on what to put in the plastic container. I have traveled too many times and traveled the same day to not know the procedures of the security. Also as a Federal Employee I am very aware of following the rules (b)(6) told me in a very rude tone of voice to look at the example at the person behind me on how he placed his laptop in the plastic container bin and to look at my plastic bin. Mind you that I had 3 plastic bins. One was for my laptop only, second bin was my other carry on bag, and third was my laptop bag with my jacket. Therefore, I was very confused on what he was talking about. Then he continued to be little me like I was stupid. I told him that my laptop was removed from my laptop bag, however he insisted that what I was telling him was wrong (basically calling me a liar). Therefore, the person behind me had looked at me and tried to explain to me what (b)(6) was talking about and I told the person behind me that I already had removed my laptop from the bag and it was place by itself in the plastic container bin. Therefore, the person behind me and in front of me was very confused and upset of how (b)(6) approached me with the situation. As I continued to tell (b)(6) that I already placed my laptop in the container bin, he finally went to go checked and saw my laptop at the end of the conveyer belt. He then came back to the screener and did not apologize of how he humiliated and made me feel belittle and stupid.

Therefore, I wanted to make a complaint towards (b)(6) Please let me know if you have any questions or let me know the outcome of this situation.

Caller said her boyfriend flew today through OMA with SW airlines, going through screening the TSO told him as he was going through the WTMD to take off his glasses, he took them off and placed in a bin and something happened as they went through the screening. The glasses were destroyed and they are $1100 titanium glasses, said he spoke to a manager and they were going to take care of him. He said the TSO stated there was nothing she could do for him and when he questioned her she called the manager over and the manager took care of him.

013 6:12:3 Asked if that is standard procedure to remove the glasses, she has flown numerous times and never had to remove?
Caller wasn't sure exactly what happened with his screening because he was boarding the flight and couldn't talk long.

Response:

Explained to caller if he triggered an alarm going through the WTMD they may have allowed him to pass through again and asked him to remove the glasses, not sure and no information concerning the glasses being removed specifically. Advised him to contact the TCC and we can provide a claim form for him.

Caller stated that when he went through the West Palm Beach Airport, he placed items in bin and pushed it through the xray machine. He forgot the AIT screening device was in use and started to make his way through the metal detector. The TSO did not correct him verbally and direct him in the correct direction, instead the TSO stood there with a mean glare like he was about to get into a bar fight. The passenger claims to have felt threatened because the TSO stood there and just glared at him and had a very rude attitude. He stated that the level of unprofessionalism was uncalled for and he would never want to visit this airport again if they will allow him to act like this towards passengers. He continued through screening and he apologized for the confusion he caused the TSO, and the TSO was rude and brushed it off and didn't say anything to him.

013 10:11:2 TSO: Large Male (about 6ft3in), had Pony Tail with salt and pepper color hair color.

CCR informed him that this information will be sent to the CSM at the airport and he can also contact them directly through opt 5 and typing in PBI

TSA will have a lawsuit if anything is wrong with her child. She stated that she asked if the system was okay. She stated that she was not told that she can opt out of the AIT. She asked if she can get some information about AIT in writing. She asked if I had went through the AIT while with child or if I had used the AIT at all. She stated that the last time she flew she used the WTMD, and the AIT was not even there. She asked why we offer the option to opt out if the AIT if it is safe. She asked why anyone would want to opt out if there was no health concerns.

I advised the caller that AIT is a classification that covers two similar technologies, millimeter wave and backscatter. Both systems work in a similar way to give Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) a virtual image of a passenger that conspicuously highlights potentially dangerous items. Millimeter wave systems project beams of non-ionizing radio frequency energy over the passenger's body surface; the beams do not penetrate the skin. The radio frequency energy reflected back from the body and other objects on the body is used to construct a three-dimensional image. The energy the system projects is thousands of times less than a cell phone transmission. The backscatter x-ray system works by scanning the surface of a passenger's body with a narrow, low-dose, low-energy x-ray beam.

However, the radiation levels are far below those of a hospital x-ray machine and any level that might constitute a health concern. The amount of radiation from a backscatter screening system is equivalent to the exposure each person receives in about 2 minutes of airplane flight at altitude or the amount the person receives in about an hour due to naturally occurring background radiation at ground level. The extremely low dose of radiation from the entire spectrum of TSA screening technology is inconsequential, even to frequent flyers who undergo repeated screenings. When evaluating new screening technologies, TSA performs independent studies and evaluations to verify the systems meet regulatory and national consensus standards to ensure the health and safety of the traveling public. This testing takes into account special populations that are more sensitive to radiation, such as children, persons receiving radiation treatment for medical conditions, and pregnant and potentially pregnant women, as well as employees who work near the equipment. All screening systems fully comply with Federal safety requirements, and measured radiation levels for each are well below limits established by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

013 12:43:3 Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo a thorough patdown. Signs are posted in front of each AIT location advising passengers of this right. I explained that I can email the information to her and they TSOs are not required to tell her that the AIT is optional. I explained that I have used the AIT before, and I have went through screening while with child before. I explained that the AIT is not available at all airports at the time. I cannot say why a passenger would opt out of the AIT, I do not have that information.

I explained that I will forward the complaint to the CSM at SMF for review.

On Tuesday, February 5th, 2013 at approximately 1250PM I was going through security at Syracuse Hancock Airport in Syracuse, NY carrying my 8 month old son in my arms, by myself. I previously called TSA before my trip to make sure I could have baby items like food that were oversized and factory sealed. The man said it would not be a problem, just declare them at the checkpoint.

At the Syracuse location, I had 4 pouches of baby food that were unopened and clearly sealed, as well as labeled by the company. I was singled out for "secondary screening", which was fine. I figured they had to just take a closer look at the unopened pouches of baby food. I was never told I needed to be pat down by the TSA officer, who is a WHITE FEMALE WITH BLONDE MEDIUM LENGTH HAIR THAT WAS WORN IN A PONY TAIL AND ALSO HAD ON DARK LIPSTICK, even though I had on leggings and a tight tank top, and I never set off the metal detector or that she would tear my bag apart even though it checked out during the regular screening.

She proceeded to take everything out of my bag, and was borderline shouting at me when I changed my mind once about having her open all of my sons sealed pouches of baby food to "test them". She then told me I had to get the pat down and I kept asking her why when everyone but the baby food was fine and her only response was "I told you that you needed secondary screening. I'm just doing my job".

My 8 month old son started to move because I was standing and sitting for so long, I needed to adjust him because he would have fallen out of my arms if I hadn't, and she was loudly telling me to stop moving and that I wasn't being compliant because of this and yelled multiple times for a supervisor, who arrived 5 minutes later. He asked me what the problem was, I told him, and she tried to argue with me and tell him in so many words that I was lying, and that I was having an issue with her testing the baby food and changing my mind, which was not the case. He said he would stand there and then he never did, he walked away.

After I was packing up my things she tore out of my bag and shoved them back in with total disregard, I told my son, "I hope I got paid" and she then spun around angrily and walked towards me in a threatening manner. I was actually scared for the safety of my son and myself. I thought she was going to physically harm me. Instead, she started yelling at me and it was so bad, another officer had to step in front of her and stop her. The other officer, A AFRICAN AMERICAN FEMALE WITH SHOULDER LENGTH HAIR, asked what I said. I told her nothing and I was packing my stuff and I was leaving, repeatedly. But she would not let it go and they kept questioning me and lecturing me about how "we don't tell you how to do your job" until I walked away.

I have never been so disgusted and felt so violated and embarrassed in my life. Standing there with my infant son, being pat down for BABY FOOD. What does a pat down have to do with FACTORY SEALED POUCHES OF BABY FOOD? I will absolutely be pursuing legal action. The way I was treated was abominable. It was absolutely unnecessary for me to be PAT DOWN and have my bag ransacked after everything else checked out.

The caller flew from SAT to SAN with her grandson. She has metal implants, so she could not go through the WTMD. She had her two year old grandson. She stated that he was crying not to be taken away from her. She stated that she was subject a pardown while he was clinging to her. She stated that he is so terrified to return to the airport because he is afraid that he will be taken again. She stated that she knew a TSO that was working at the airport and he tried to help. She stated that the TSOs tried to separate her from the two year old child.

I advised the caller that Every person, regardless of age, must undergo screening to proceed beyond the security checkpoint. Even babies must be individually screened. You will not be asked to do anything that will separate you from your child or children.

Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are specially trained and understand your concerns regarding children. Your children will be approached gently and treated with respect. If your child becomes uncomfortable or upset, you will be consulted about the best approach to resolving your child's concern.

I can forward the this information to the CSM at SAT for review.

What happened? Air Carrier: Jet Blue (Flight 283, Las Vegas, NV to Long Beach, CA), McCarran Airport

I am a medical doctor, retired Associate Professor of Cardiology, USC, and was reluctant to go through a full body scanner with unknown radiation which is accumulative, but very willing to go through the metal detector as offered at all airports. I was told in that event, I would be subjected to a full body search! front and back. I was given the option of remaining on site or a search being conducted in a private room. I was afraid of the latter. A supervisor, a (b)(6) was called over to supervise the body search by the agent whose name was (b)(6). He proceeded to dictate to me his plan of a full body search in a very demeaning manner with a superior smirk on his face. This was condoned by his supervisor. He did a full body search, front and back with his forehead & backhand, manipulating my genitalia 6 times, twice in the back, twice in the front, twice on the sides, announcing his activities loud and clear so all could hear and take example. I withstood the assault with not a whimper, determined to see the end.

At the end, I put my residual clothes on to retain my dignity. I did remark "I trust you got your sadistic satisfaction". To which he responded "F K YOU!" and I responded "The same to you, Sir." The supervisor then chimed in and said, "Watch your mouth." I then walked away.

When did this happen? Please provide the approximate time of the experience. If ongoing, please indicate when the problem began.

February 7, 2013, approximately 1:15pm.

Where did this happen? McCarran Airport

Date: 22 Jan 2012

Time: 10:50am

Flight number SW 500

Place: main security

Complaint:

As I was going through the metal detector Officer (b)(6) said that anyone with no metal could go through the one check point. I have titanium in my leg after surgery for a broken leg. It has never set off the alarm before and I asked him if it was OK to go through there. He said, metal is metal, and why do people always think titanium is not. He directed me to the other x-ray line. I stepped over to that line and inadvertently bumped the one machine setting off the alarm. He officiously asked me to move. I did. He pointed and said further over.

He was bossy and unnecessarily unkind. Most of the TSA workers are courteous, he is not. If no one flew, you would have no customers, if there were no customers, you would have no jobs.

I spoke with the officer in charge of the area. He gave me an information card to use for the website. I would have preferred to have my information taken down there when the incident occurred, but I am following protocol.

10:13 10:04:

The first time I had interaction with officer (b)(6) was a year ago when I took my 91 year old father on a flight with me. He was in a wheel chair with an attendant. I know you check all wheel chairs carefully. Again, it is just as easy to be courteous as it is to be rude. Officer (b)(6) didn't want me anywhere near my dad when he searched him. One cannot go off and have a late when their father is being subjected to humiliating searches. The search took a very long time. At least half an hour. The attendant said it had never taken him that long to go through security with a wheel chair before.

TSA officers have a lot of responsibility to insure passenger safety.

However, I feel it can be done in a courteous and non contentious manner.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

:013 12:04: I am writing out of concern over two recent screening experiences. They both occurred at the American Airlines checkpoint at Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport:

1. January 22, flight AA 2014; approximately 10:00am
2. February 6; flight AA 862; Approximately 9 am

In each instance, I was subjected to additional screening for potential explosive material. Since this checkpoint does not have advanced screening machines, I am subjected to pat down due to a hip replacement. In both situations, apparent explosives materials were detected after the pat down and during a review of my travel articles.

I have traveled through this checkpoint numerous times during the last 5 years. I am eligible for precheck due to my status on American Airlines. I am the holder of a Global Entry Trusted Traveler identity. Your staff insists that the potential reason for apparent detection of nitrates and some other unnamed material (was not disclosed to me) is because I live on a golf course. I have lived on that golf course for years, carry the same suitcase for years, have my clothing cleaned at the same dry cleaners for years and live in one of the golf meccas of the country. I didn't notice other golfers subjected to the same process.

Caller went through the DEN checkpoint. He is an airline crewmember who was not in uniform. He placed his property through the scanner. He went to the metal detector. He went through. He was afterward approached by a TSO who advised that he had to go through the body scanner if he was uniformed. He refused. He was told that he had to have a patdown. She argued with him, then advised that he had the pat-down.

The TSO kept interrupting him. When he tried to speak, she talked over him. He asked to speak with a supervisor. A supervisor came over and told him that he could go through the scanner. He was advised that he would be stopped if he did not allow them to screen him. He argued with the supervisor about the competency of the screeners. He finally submitted to the screening so he could go on. He could not get the screener's name.

I advised that I would send the information to the CSM for follow-up.

Caller will be unavailable for a couple days, but he does want contact with the CSM for his complaint.

Caller had a knee replacement and kidney implant. Caller asked if TSA has an expedited screening program for persons who have had medical implants. Caller knows how the Precheck program works. Caller stated it is embarrassing for her to have to be patted down every time. Caller asked if there is a way to avoid the patdown.

I told the caller there is no expedited screening for passengers with disabilities but there is a disability lane. I told the caller that with the expedited screening she would no longer remove her shoes, jacket, belt or remove her laptop but she would still have to be screened. I told her everyone has to be screened.
If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

2013 5:05:4 Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a thorough patdown.
Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians.
I told the caller she can request a private screening and she has the right to have someone in the room with her when she is being screened by patdown.

I referred the caller to www.tsa.gov for information about the AIT screening because caller was concerned about privacy issues.

To Whom it May Concern:

2013 8:39:3 Today I was very disappointed in your SFO TSA men and women! I greatly appreciate the job they do to keep us safe but today I witnessed a 90 year old woman in a wheelchair be subjected to the additional security screening where she had trouble physically getting into the screening booth and holding her hands above her head while her caregiver was forced to stand back and watch her go through the process twice none the less. The rest of us who were far more capable of enduring the screening were allowed to simply walk through the metal detector. The elderly woman and her companion acted with such grace and willingness that I couldn't help but be angry on their behalf. I really hope that not all disabled or impaired elderly individual who comes through SFO security is subjected to the same level of screening and are treated with more courtesy and respect. I understand the safety risks but I seriously doubt this 90 year old woman and her elderly caregiver pose a risk to national security.

Caller travels often. She has a GE membership. She thought it would ease her travel situation. She is floored by how she is constantly harassed by the agents. Every area of her body is checked too thoroughly. The last two times from DFW, she was touched so hard on her vagina. She is white, 5 foot 9 inches, and blonde. Is this reverse discrimination? She is getting extra screening for when the alarm goes off or she is being pulled out of line before she gets to the screening equipment.

I advised that, from what she is describing, the extra screening is within TSA policy. However, she will not get the TSA PreCheck option unless she makes the election at the point-of-sale by placing her PASS ID number in the Known Traveler field.

Caller advised something is on her boarding pass because last she went through the PreCheck lane. She didn't want to give her last name because she feared that she would be placed on the No Fly List. Caller mentioned that she is subjected to the extra screening and the ETD test with the chemical on the pads.

2013 9:19:4 I advised that the pads have no chemical on them, and that the test is a part of the process.

Caller stated that she is divesting herself of any metal, but the WTMD is still going off. She has been advised that _it sometimes does that_.

Since caller stated that she was white and blonde, I determined that she did not qualify for an MB referral under the discriminated classes. I conferred with Gary in MB, and he advised that she would not be under the protected classes. However, he advised that I should contact the caller and advise her that she can access the MB section if she wanted to and that her allegations need to be made in writing.

Prior to my trip yesterday, I had decided to opt out of the body scan because I have a chronic thyroid condition and do not want any more radiation unless absolutely necessary. I had to wait several minutes and watched my property go down the conveyor belt to be x-rayed. The five containers with purse, cell phone, tablet, shoes, and coat were unattended and in plain sight of travelers for several minutes. I asked the TSA officer about my concern for my property and he told me not to worry - that no one will take it. My property was lined up in the way of other traveler's property and most of the time I did not have plain sight of it. Finally, a woman officer came and asked me if I minded having the pat down on the other side of the body scan and metal detector; that she could not take me to a private room for the pat down because there was only one woman officer available. I was asked to face towards oncoming travelers during the pat down which placed me again out of vision of my property. Finally, after most of the pat down was conducted, she then allowed me to see my property and I faced my property while I waited for her to conduct some kind of test after wiping my palms. I would like to conclude with the following complaint - the pat down was embarrassing enough without subjecting me to face the oncoming travelers. My personal property was subject to theft and/or compromise throughout the whole process. I would expect that TSA would treat travelers with more consideration and respect during the personal pat down procedure.

2013 2:04:10 What is it about you guys and bad press? You guys are known as incompetent, being thieves and now you give special treatment to celebrities? I recently had the unfortunate opportunity of getting my bag torn apart by your agents even though I'm a veteran and in the reserves all for a bag of coins. but then your just going to let an irrational rapper and his hooker gf go without even having to go through a metal detector? You guys are a pathetic joke. Caller said the inconsistencies when he flies is ridiculous. He has had one of the worst experiences of his life happened day before yesterday when he was departing from Norfolk, VA. He told the TSO that he had a defibrillator. The TSO wouldn't let him go through the WTMD. He asked if it is mandatory that he get a full body patdown. The TSO rubbed his private parts and never even touched his chest where the device is located. Caller states he is always the person to be checked for bomb residue and he is singled out each time. He wants to know what he's doing wrong. This happens practically each time he flies. In December, at Ft. Walton Beach, FL (DSI) a TSA agent said he wasn't allowed to take his toothpaste because it wasn't 3.4 ozs. or less. The TSA agent was performing a hand inspection of his bag when he found the toothpaste. Caller says it doesn't matter where he flies, he is asked to have his bag ETD test. His bag is always part of the random bag checks as well. He doesn't know what he needs to do to stop being profiled. He thinks he is being profiled because they are asking him to inspect his bag after it clears the x-ray machine each time. There is no metal in the bag and the TSOs are constantly checking his bag and hands for explosives. Most recently he flew with US Airways from Norfolk, VA. Caller states he is a white male and doesn't wear a turban so he doesn't understand why he is being racially profiled.

2013 6:19:22 Advised caller the agent was following procedures with the 3-1-1 containers.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology. One screening procedure, which generates discussion and concern among passengers, involves use of patdown searches. Patdowns are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, as well as when random screening activities are conducted. A Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search, and as the screening is being conducted, the TSO should be describing the procedures he or she is using. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand. Explained to caller TSA doesn't profile individuals.

Referred to MB and advised caller someone would contact him regarding his issue and complaint.

Caller flies back and forth alot between Rhode Island and Florida and she feels that a skycap person in Providence Rhode Island was very militant with her. She feels he flagged her because he had a attitude. She stated the skycap person was with Southwest Airlines.

Caller left Providence Rhode Island with frozen seafood (stonecrabs, bag of shrimp and a key lime pie) with gel packs and she stated she had taken the same items back and forth many times and had no problem and the skycap ask her what she had and why she was bringing stonecrabs, then they patted her down and when she got her seafood back it had been opened.

She is wanting to know how to what she could do to avoid aggravating someone so that this doesn t happen because he was very rude with her. Caller also stated that she always tips the skycap person because they are usually very nice and helpful to her except this person.

Caller said she probably needed to contact Southwest Airlines because that was who he was with.

Advised Caller:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

I did apologize to the caller that this happened to her.

Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

I did apologize to the caller that this happened to her.

A customer was miss-treated by a TSA employee by purposefully making them wait unnecessarily as many other passengers passed her by, while her belongings were sitting out of her reach and control. Please explain?

Subject: In Response to your inquiry.

Thank you for your e-mail regarding your recent travel experience.

Because your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

2/13 12:09:

AIT is a classification that covers two similar technologies, millimeter wave and backscatter. Both systems work in a similar way to give Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) a virtual image of a passenger that conspicuously highlights potentially dangerous items. AIT gives TSA a way to detect a wide variety of threats, including suicide vests and other improvised explosive devices that may be hidden under passengers' clothing and cannot be detected by walk-through metal detectors. AIT enhances security, reduces the need for patdown searches for passengers with joint replacements and other medical conditions, and improves passenger convenience and comfort.

AIT machines have been independently evaluated by the Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Standards and Technology, and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, who have all affirmed their safety. This testing took into account special populations that are more sensitive to radiation, such as children, persons receiving radiation treatment for medical conditions, and pregnant and potentially pregnant women, as well as TSOs who work near the equipment. In fact, a traveler is exposed to less radiation from one AIT scan than from 2 minutes being onboard a commercial aircraft at flight altitude.

TSA is sensitive to passengers' concerns about protecting their privacy as it relates to the security screening process, particularly the use of AIT. Rigorous privacy safeguards are in place to protect passenger privacy and ensure anonymity. All images generated by imaging technology are viewed in an area not visible to the public. The officer assisting the passenger never sees the image, and the officer viewing the image never interacts with the passenger. The imaging technology that TSA uses in airports cannot store, export, print, or transmit images and no cameras, cellular telephones, or other devices capable of capturing images are permitted in the image viewing area. To further protect passenger privacy, all facial images are blurred.

Privacy and security are not mutually exclusive, and TSA has had an ongoing dialogue with privacy groups on these issues. AIT is an effective tool in detecting terrorist threats and another tool in our layered approach to security.

Caller had a hip replacement. She told the TSOs that she had it and that that was why the wand was going off. She has a card in her wallet, but it went through the xray. The TSO would not let her access it. She received a humiliating patdown in front of her friends and strangers. She wants to know how to avoid this in the future. This happened November 2012 in NJ.

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT).

A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.
- The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.
- A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

2013 4:37:

- The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.
- A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

She is flying from CLT on to HNL and back. She is not worried about going through CLT, but does not know about HNL and if they have the AIT. I told her that because an airport has the AIT does not mean that they will be in use when she goes through the checkpoint. Any time there is an anomaly or an alarm she will have to have additional screening which would be a patdown. I told her there were three ways to be screened: AIT, WTMD, and a patdown. She would have to have at least one of these and, sometimes, two. If there is no anomaly and no alarm, she will not have to do the patdown.

I told her to always tell the screener before the screening begins that she has the implant. She can ask to speak to a supervisor any time she has an issue. She can also contact the CSM via the IVR -- I instructed her how to do this -- if she feels like she needs additional assistance at the checkpoint. She said she did not know if she would call or not.

I apologized for her experience. I told her that I do not know if the experience was bad because of the surprise of it. She said she thought that was part of it. I told her I do not know if the TSO did the patdown appropriately, but they do tell the passenger what they are doing during the patdown. She said the TSO did do that. I told her that now that she knows what to expect and that she can ask for a private screening knowing she can have a companion with her, it may not be as bad as the first one. She agreed, but also said that people should not be treated this way for no fault of their own. I told her sometimes some TSOs were rougher with the patdown but the procedure is consistent throughout the airports.

I had an unfortunate experience at the TSA checkpoint at LAX airport in Terminal 7(United) at around 8pm on Feb7th,2013. As a result I would like to make some helpful suggestions to prevent or minimize such occurrences for people with medical conditions:

About me: I am 73 years old and have travelled more than a million miles on United alone over the last many years and without incident . I recently(December3rd,2012) underwent knee surgery and as a result have metal implants in the knee. I live in Boston. I am a Professor and former Dean of Physical Sciences and Engineering at Harvard. This was my second flight since the surgery. At Boston(which has mm wave body scanners)I had no problems.

The incident: At LAX I went through a metal detector which of course detected the metal in my knee. I told the TSA agent of my knee surgery and he just did not believe me . Not only was I patted down thrice by 3 different agents and every piece of my luggage was dissected over a period of an hour . Luckily I had come early enough and just made my flight! My 73 year old wife was also with me.

2013 5:05:3 The TSA agents would not allow me to show my knee scar after surgery or even recognize my US Government issued Global Entry photo ID which showed I was a trusted traveler. Somehow the training does not seem to reflect the risk based security policy TSA espouses!

Suggestions:

1 There should be clear signs at all TSA checkpoints or a special line for travelers with medical conditions.(Your website does mention the notification card which I now have printed)and perhaps they could even be shepherded through the preferred TSA line as is the case with most airlines).

2.The agents should have a metal detector wand which if he flashed on my knee he would have confirmed what I was saying.

On exiting scanner, TV screen showed up something unusual around my shirt pocket area prompting TSA official to pat around my upper chest. Nothing was found and I was able to exit. The scanner is too sensitively calibrated and a pat down anywhere else could come close to constituting indecent assault. The pat down was not in my view justified - the scanner should not have shown anything, and the conventional metal detector should have been in use as an option as was the case when I went through security at SFO International Terminal A gates on Feb 11 2013 at 10.00am without incident.

Was in the Fort Lauderdale Airport on Sunday 02/17/13 around 9:30 a.m. TSA Staff there seemed very unorganized and confused. TSA Rep who was at the start of the line even admitted that he was confused. He had waved me through to the wrong line and this was only realized when I saw that he had put my traveling companion in another line. I then got in the correct line. TSA rep didn't seem to know where to send anyone as the elderly man in front of me (who was in a mobile scooter) was also directed incorrectly and was separated from his traveling companion who was assisting him.

Sign was posted saying that those persons over 75 did not have to remove shoes or light jackets. Another sign stated "if you were born before this day in 1937, then you do not have to remove your shoes or jacket." I believe that sign should use the year 1938 since this is now 2013 and anyone born in January 1938 would now be 75 years old. It's been 76 YEARS since 1937.

2013 12:05: While we were in line waiting to send our belongings through the metal detectors, two airline employees rudely bypassed us and broke in line. I understand that airline employees may be on a tight schedule and do not have time to wait in line, but the TSA Staff should have escorted them through to the front of the line and stated why they were being allowed to go in front of us. I picked up my tray to move ahead and the TSA staffer grabbed it from me and abruptly told me to wait. Rude airline employees are the norm, but all of this could have been avoided if TSA staff had been alert and doing their jobs.

Caller flew RSW-PHL last Friday aboard Southwest Airlines. She is calling to file a complaint to which the manner she was screened. She approached the checkpoint in a wheelchair because of a bacterial infection in her ears and mobility concerns with her feet. She was able to transfer out of the wheelchair and was screening by AIT. Caller was advised at this checkpoint in either terminal D or E that the AIT machine picked up traces of TNT on her hands. Caller then underwent secondary screening which included a very aggressive patdown by very rude screeners and ETD testing on her hands, which came back positive. Caller was then shuttled to a private screening locations where she underwent an additional patdown, which once again she deemed excessively forceful. She claims her rotator cuff we reinjured by the screeners and she almost missed her flight due to all this additional screening. Caller states she uses a hand creme, which contains glycerin, that more than likely triggered the additional screening, but is of the understanding that should not have caused an anomaly on the AIT technology. She fears she is on some kind of watch list because of this additional screening and wants someone at RSW to address her complaint as soon as possible. Caller states this incident occurred at approximately 7:50 and her flight, which she does not recall the flight number, departed at 8:45. She also states she was sick on the day of the flight and was a tad on the rude side herself.

Resolution:

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. TSA regrets you did not have a satisfactory screening experience. Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

We consider your concerns to be a serious issue for our attention. TSA appreciates that you took the time to share your concerns with us.

The TSA agents I encountered at O'Hare were extremely rude and mean to the customers. Before I even placed my belongings on the metal detectors, a certain red curly haired TSA agent was yelling at customers to put everything on the belts, etc. I know this is her job, but it was done in a very aggressive manner, as if to suggest she was already in a bad mood. Next, after putting everything I had on the belt, I wanted to opt out of going through the millimeter wave, due to health concerns. I told the woman I wished to opt out, and she told me to stand on the mat in front of the wave. Since I've opted out many times before, I stood next to the metal detector to wait for another TSA agent to come pat me down. The woman looked at me, extremely confused and screamed at me to step on the mat in front of the millimeter wave so that I could go through when the person in front of me was finished. I did as I was told because I assumed that the rules at O'Hare were a little different than everywhere else (since it's a bigger airport). When the TSA agent standing behind the millimeter wave started waving me into the machine, I said "No, I want to opt out", as I had already told the other woman. This man looked at me as if I had spoken another language, made some kind of motion to the woman TSA agent, and she screamed, "female assist opt out", then proceeded to tell me that I had never informed her that I wished to opt out. I left the security checkpoint extremely disappointed that she, and the male agent, had ruined my entire trip home.

I flew out of San Diego Friday, February 15th at 4:50 and I went through TSA. I told them I wanted to opt out of the full body scanner in which they told me that wasn't an option and that if I did I would be fully patted down, felt up, and that it would be extremely uncomfortable. The reason I'm complaining about this is because they were letting A TON of others go through the regular metal detector!!!! Last time I checked, which was it was my RIGHT to opt out of the full body scanner for privacy concerns and reasons. They need to get their act together and make sure this is allowed!!!! I hate flying now a days because agents are rude and treat customers like dirt! Last time I checked, I'm still a human being, eat my food with a fork, and put my pants on one leg at a time. The agents need to stop with the mentality that they are superior to everyone else they encounter.

Thanks,

Brief Description of Inquiry:

Pat down incident Newark Airport 18 Feb 2013

Comments:

Location: Terminal B international gates, time 5.45pm. Travelling home to London on Virgin Atlantic flight VS2.

To Whom It May Concern:

My family traveled from DFW to Chicago November 27, 2012 for my brother-in-law's (b)(6) funeral in LaPorte IN. We arrived at security near gate 24C for flight # AA2320 approximately 5:00 am. I told the first TSA agent with whom we came in contact that my 12-year-old son (b)(6) was wearing a back brace for a recent compression fracture. (b)(6) neurosurgeon with Cook Children's Medical Center in Fort Worth whom we had just seen November 26 advised (b)(6) to wear his brace at all times when in an upright position. The next agent we came in contact with as we approached the metal detector asked me if I would "ok" them to scan him to avoid having them to "frisk" him since he was only twelve. I agreed after she confirmed that no radiation would be involved. The next thing I knew my son was pulled aside with my husband. My husband told me the cloth they wiped (b)(6) hand with tested positive for explosives. My son had not been around any kind of chemicals other than TRESemme' shampoo and conditioner during his shower earlier that morning. Due to this false positive, we missed our flight waiting for some supervisor to come lift up Andrew's shirt and say he could go. We did not go to the local television stations like the girl in the wheelchair recently, but we want to know why this happened. After checking with American Airlines to see if they show any "red flags" for our family, they advised that we contact you.

Do we or did any member of our family have a "red flag" with TSA, from what incident and why? To our knowledge we have done nothing wrong in the past but somehow since around 1998, I have had my bags "randomly" x-rayed and have been "randomly" frisked and "wanded" even when flying alone with two small children at the turn of the century. When I'm not pulled aside during security checks my husband is. I was singled out when returning to the US in Nov. of 2003 at Heathrow in London. I was told by a friend that AA could put a red flag on someone but they just confirmed with me that none is documented with them. If TSA has our family flagged don't we have a right to know and why? Our names and birth dates are as follows:

(b)(6)

Thanks and look forward to hearing back from someone ASAP.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Subject: MHT errors

I fly a lot - over 50 trips last year, many airports - so I'm familiar with TSA team execution in many locations. I'm writing to complain about inconsistent execution by TSA personnel at Manchester NH.

In my experience here (for years) the people here have been more self-impressed (yet inconsistent) than any other airport I've seen. This is leading me to reconsider using MHT, and I'll be forwarding this to the Manchester airport authority.

2/21/13 12:05:

I recently got a TSA-approved Leatherman pocket tool - the one with no knife. It went through security at other airports with no trouble on several trips. A week or two ago, agent Gunter at MHT stopped my goods in the scanner. When I asked what the problem was he said it was this tool: he said he (unlike all the other airports) had to see it to be sure it was the right one. He said it would avoid problems if I took it out and made it clearly visible.

Other airports hadn't need that, but whatever.

The corker was that then, having already determined it was okay, he went back and put it through the scanner again! What on earth is the rationale for that?? It seemed clear to me that he was simply punishing me for questioning him, because I can't imagine any sane rationale for taking time to re-scan something you already determined was fine.

ounces of liquid in the bag. Caller said she cannot control this. Caller is being treated for cancer. Caller said at O hare there was an incident where she was wearing a hat and she had to remove her hat. Caller said she tried to explain to the TSO she did not have any hair. Caller said the TSO started screaming at her and asking her if she was refusing to be screened. Caller said she was traveling alone and she was embarrassed and scared because she lost all of her hair due to chemotherapy. Caller said she did not file a complaint at that time but she should have. Caller wants information about the screening process she can expect with the ostomy. Caller was concerned about the radiation from the AIT.

I told the caller she has the right to opt out of the AIT because of her concern about the radiation.

It is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening about the ostomy before the screening process begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

2013 12:07:

- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.
- The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.
- A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.
- The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.
- A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material.

Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger's ostomy is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the ostomy, followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands.

Passengers who have catheters and ports attached to their bodies should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the device(s) and indicate where the device(s) is located before the screening process begins.

Passengers should also inform the TSO of any pain or medical complications that may result from touching the port and or catheter so it can be screened appropriately.

I told the caller there is a supervisor available at the checkpoint if she has any problems

If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor while at the checkpoint. Passengers also can report concerns by contacting TSA's Disability and Multicultural Division at TSA.ODPO@tsa.dhs.gov or

Comment : This checkpoint continually gets backed up during peak times. I fly virtually every week and seen the lines back up beyond the ID checkpoint. It has taken me over 40 minutes at times to get through security. The reason is TSA has every passenger going through the body scanner which slows the process. Most airports give you an option or open the metal detectors when lines grow. I asked the supervisor why don't they open the metal detectors and their reply is "this is the way we do it here"

I am approved under TSA Pre and Nexus and getting through my home airport is very frustrating.

Note: This security point has 4 lanes: two metal detectors and two body scanners and they never have more than two lanes open.

TSA needs to add TSA PRE to this airport or at least open more lanes.

Thanks

Is it TSA protocol to make parents remove a babies diaper and a TSA agent inspect the babies private parts?

I was holding my daughter when I walked through the detector, the alarm didn't sound and I wasn't padded down or checked with the wand but as soon as I walked through u was told they had to check the baby. The make screener asked that I wait for a female screener to check my daughter and when she arrived she informed us we had to take the babies diaper off, once the diaper was removed the agent spread her legs and lifted her butt to check under her.

This I think at the time was OUTRAGEOUS and just want to find out if this was proper protocol

Subject: In Response to your inquiry.

Thank you for your e-mail concerning traveling with children.

Every person, regardless of age, must undergo screening to proceed beyond the security checkpoint. Even babies must be individually screened. You will not be asked to do anything that will separate you from your child or children.

Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are specially trained and understand your concerns regarding children. Your children will be approached gently and treated with respect. If your child becomes uncomfortable or upset, you will be consulted about the best approach to resolving your child's concern.

The Screening Process - X-ray

- All carry-on baggage, including children's bags and items, must go through the x-ray machine. Examples include: diaper bags, blankets, and toys.
- All child-related equipment that will fit through the x-ray machine must go through the x-ray machine. Examples include: strollers, umbrella-strollers, baby carriers, car and booster seats, backpacks, and baby slings.

Caller is at the PHL airport and she has an ostomy bag and she does not want to go to a private screening room to have additional screening conducted. Caller was really upset over this matter she stated that if they would have just let her go through the metal detector they would have never known she had it on. She also wanted to know if she requested the metal detector would the tsa officer have to honor that request?

Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger's ostomy is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the !013 10:10: ostomy, followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands.

Let the caller know even if an item is generally permitted, it may be subject to additional screening or not allowed through the checkpoint if it triggers an alarm during the screening process, appears to have been tampered with, or poses other security concerns. The final decision rests with TSA on whether to allow any items on the plane.

January 26, 2013

Dear Sir or Madam:

On Friday, January 25, 2013, I traveled through your airport on my way home to Fort Worth. I am writing to complain about the treatment I have received twice now at your airport security checkpoint, the most egregious being the treatment I received yesterday.

I am a 48-year-old handicapped woman, with scoliosis, and walk with the aid of crutches and braces. I am unable to go through the screener without setting off the metal detectors, so I fully understand that I need to be patted down for security purposes. I am used to this, as I have traveled by air all over the country.

Yesterday a little after 5 p.m., when trying to catch my 6:00 flight to Love Field on Southwest Airlines, I was patted down in a more time-consuming and thorough manner than I am used to at other airports, but I expected this, as it happened to me on my trip from Lubbock in May 2012. Yesterday, however, after my hands were swiped and the cloth was put through the detector, suddenly three more TSA agents appeared and were quite gruff with me. I was told I would need a more thorough, private screening because the machine detected something. When I asked what it was, I was told they would tell me later.

At this point, my license was taken and run through, I assume, some computer database. Then I was taken into a private room and patted down more thoroughly. This was not an intrusive search—I did not mind the search at all. However, my traveling companions were forced to wait for me, and from their vantage point, the treatment I received should have been highly embarrassing for me. The whole process took perhaps 20 minutes.

When the TSA agents found nothing, they became congenial, thanked me for my patience, and let me go. When I asked again what on my hands had set off the machine, I was told it could have been anything: "hand lotion, perfume ... I don't know. Maybe our machine needs cleaning." To say I was appalled at that response is an understatement.

I am writing to let you know I am highly displeased with the treatment I am receiving at your airport. For my job, I will have to travel to your city twice a year, and already I am not looking forward to my next trip. Could you please somehow assure me that this will not happen to me again in the future? I am copying Southwest Airlines, so they will know that if I cannot be assured of better treatment, I will be unable to give them my business. I am highly pleased with the service I always receive from Southwest; my disappointment is only with the TSA agents at the Lubbock airport.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Passengers who have medical devices attached to their bodies, should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the device and indicate where the device is located before the screening process begins.

If a passenger can safely disconnect from their device, he or she can submit it for x-ray screening; however, passengers can be screened without disconnecting from devices. If a passenger cannot disconnect from the device, the type of screening conducted will depend on the type of device and the passenger's abilities. Passengers should consult with the manufacturer of the device to determine whether it can pass through a walk-through metal detector or can be subjected to Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

If the device can be safely screened by AIT, passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening. Regardless of the screening method used, the device will undergo additional screening. This may include, but is not limited to, a physical inspection of the device if it is not in a sensitive area, and a patdown of the device followed by testing for traces of explosives.

The caller stated this was the exact procedure that is he normally experiences. However it was not yesterday.

I apologized to the caller that his experience was different yesterday and made him uncomfortable.

The caller stated he wanted to file a complaint regard his screening yesterday of his medical device.

I advised the caller the complaint must be in writing and I would gladly send him the forms to his email.

TSA Employee: (If Known) : unknown (blond woman in her 40's) Comment : I travel about 30 weeks of the year by plane. I am finding that there is little consistency in the rules and the treatment of people. Today the woman watching the screen as luggage came through was stopping nearly every passenger's baggage for a search. She stopped me for the number of liquids which were in a bag and had four liquid medications and cosmetics. I was told by another agent that I would have to forfeit my items, except for the prescriptions or I could check my bag and reenter security. I felt that this was excessive. I go through airport security with the same bag three times a month and suddenly, it is not alright.

I feel that we are all treated as suspects and I am a US citizen and should not be guilty until proven innocent. This is a consistent theme. If I prefer the metal detector, I am told I need a patdown. If I request a patdown I am told that there is nothing dangerous about the scanner--and most times the person informing me is condescending.

We recently went through immigration returning from another country. There was a sign that said they were there to serve us with respect and honor. Clearly this is not the motto of the TSA which I now consider to be more like the Secret Service. I am very unhappy. I want to be treated with courtesy and respect and not be the subject of someone on a power trip.

Caller is complaining about her sixteen year old daughter receiving additional screening at La Guardia on Saturday 02-16-2013 at approximately 1500 hrs in the terminal going to Gate C32 for a Delta flight to DFW. The passenger (b)(6) received a body scan, pat down, and ETD swab. The caller is claiming that her daughter was chosen and no one else received additional screening. The caller also said that the baggage of the daughter had been inspected and the lock had been cut off and the baggage was left in total disarray.

I told the caller the Fourth Amendment prohibits the Government from conducting unreasonable searches and seizures of people, places, and things. Courts have held that the search conducted in the airport screening context is reasonable, in that it balances the privacy interests of citizens against the Government's interest in protecting the traveling public. I also told the caller TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed. TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

I also told the caller enhanced security measures require that all checked baggage undergo at least one form of screening. Depending on the available screening equipment at your departure airport, checked baggage may need to be opened for hand inspection to clear an alarm.

I am writing to let you know that I am saddened at the state our country is in that Airline Officials, with all of their xray technology, would remove a United States Flag from its case to check for "illegal contraband" and desecrate what it stood for and stands for. Let me explain.

On Saturday February 9th, I got word that my father passed away in Tucson, Arizona. I Flew to Tucson on February 13th on Southwest Airlines for his bunal. I had one bag and it was not searched.

I was in Tucson, Arizona for one week, and during that time, not only did I bury my father, but I was also able to morn my mother, who died five years ago. At the time of my mothers death, out of respect for my father, we did not, nor were we able to see my mothers "last effects". So in fact, I was morning both of my parents.

My mother (b)(6) served in the United States Army and was honorably discharged in August 1959. Discharged due to a pregnancy. But while serving our country, she sang in the USO and had served to the best of her ability. When she died five years ago, she was buried in Flagstaff Arizona and her casket was covered with a beautiful United States Flag. Which was then folded and placed in a triangular case, and has been displayed, again honorably.

On February 20th, my family members and I finally had things taken care of and I prepared to fly back to Atlanta, Georgia. I packed two suitcases very carefully because I had mementos and precious items that I felt might not make it if I mailed them. Among the items I packed was the beautiful and precious United States Flag that had been on my mothers coffin. I had arrived early to the Tucson International Airport, and had to wait 3 hours until my flight. I have had my suitcases checked before when flying back to Georgia from Tucson, so I knew that it was a possibility. And most times, my things were tossed around a bit, but nothing like what I found this time.

2013 11:02: Whoever checked my bag, in either Tucson or in Chicago, literally ransacked my bags, and were not careful or respectful of my personal belongings. My biggest shock was my mothers bunal flag. They had removed the back of the case and it was bent, and the flag had been taken out and unfolded. The flag had been folded perfectly, all edges together. Someone with TSA had touched and unfolded a flag which my family had cried on and touched at her funeral 5 years ago and had been respectfully folded by a military person and placed in the triangular box and closed up. My mothers flag has been sealed inside that box until someone with NO RESPECT opened it.

Has our world gotten so bad that officials at TSA felt they had to unfold a bunal flag to check for whatever they check for? Especially since technology in this day and age are so advanced, I am sure that an xray of the flag inside its case or a metal detector would have been sufficient enough to determine whether or not it had anything illegal in it or around it. TSA officials put the flag back inside its case, but the stars are not in the same place and like I said, the back was left off and was bent.

I also had an antique perfume bottle broken and I had two baggies with change from my fathers dresser that the bags were ripped open and the change was all over.

I am not sure if I have written to the correct emails, but I am asking that this email be forwarded to the powers to be of each agency and I expect a response. Again, I understand that checking luggage for contraband is necessary at times for everyone's safety, but not to the point and to the extreme that this person, or these persons took it. Below is the information about my flight and my personal information:

This happened at RDU. I had gone through all the proper screening, detecting, ID checks and was standing in line to board the plane. Dear TSA:

I walked through security at MCI, Southwest airline, gate 40, between 1:30 and 2:10pm.

I emptied my pockets entirely, even of my handkerchief. I removed my necklace, shoes, jacket, etc and walked through the metal detector. I did NOT set off the alarm, however. I was detained until a female officer could do a pat down. She asked if I had set off the alarm. The officer who detained me said no. She told me I was getting a pat down because I was wearing a dress. I always wear a skirt and have had many pat downs wherein both inner and outer thigh are checked but never like this.

2013 4:17:1 I was told that this was the new procedure. I want to inform TSA that I find it extremely intrusive that an officer is placing her hands against my vagina. Why is this acceptable?

Please come up with alternate ways to check passengers or provide us with some other options.

Thank you. I look forward to hearing from you.

I am inquiring about TSA's official policy on carrying wallets through the AIT or metal detectors.

During my recent travels I was allowed to hold my wallet (which holds my identification) in my hand while I was being scanned as long as I agreed to a hand inspection of it. On the return trip, I was informed that I could not hold my wallet and that it must be placed on the belt.

Your response is appreciated.

I just flew from STL to PNS this past weekend. At STL, I went through the metal detector with no problems and on to my plane. When leaving PNS, there was no metal detector. I and everyone else had to go through the body scanner. When I asked about it, the TSA person called for a supervisor.

My first question: Is this standard at PNS and is it going to be standard everywhere?

Second question: Should the TSA personnel be able to handle a simple question of why do I have to do the body scanner without calling for "backup?"

I would appreciate real answer to these questions.

2013 8:13:3 (b)(6) informer her I would prefer the scanner I could have. She would not listen to the fact I had done exactly that on the other side of the scanner. Then after my much more invasive pat down than usual, a different agent just walked off with my things. I kinda of following not knowing what was going on, I was then lead to a private room and then my prosthesis was scanned from every angle. I have no idea what technology this scan is, was I subjected to additional x ray. The process was not explained, rude, and frankly insulting. More could have been seen by my simply pulling up my pants leg. It caused a huge delay, the machine did not work correctly and the agent couldn't sign in. Overall, I was insulted and in my opinion, it was less of a safety measure than what has been done in the past. It just wasted my time, singled me out and insulted my dignity.

TSA Contact Center,

I am reporting a suspected theft by a security agent at the Miami airport.

My husband and I arrived in Miami 2/7/13 at 3:45pm United flight 536 from Denver. Our next flight was American Airlines flight 933 at 7:10pm Miami to Guayaquil, Ecuador.

My husband (b)(7) is partially blind with only peripheral vision in one eye so he carries a white cane and wears dark glasses.

Some time between 4:00pm and 5:00pm we went to Security Checkpoint 2. The line was very long. Before entering the scanning equipment (b)(7) informed the agent that he had an and artificial knee and metal brace. (b)(7) was told to walk through the metal detector anyway. When going through the detector the alarm sounded. (b)(7) told the agent on the other side that he had an artificial knee and brace. That agent then told him to walk back through the metal detector. Then a female security agent with dark hair, about 5' 3or 4", Spanish accent, perhaps in her late 20's wearing a blue uniform, had (b)(7) put everything from his pockets into a plastic bowl (billfold, comb, handkerchief, glasses, Chapstick, etc). She said that the full body scanner was not working at checkpoint 2. While she carried the bowl she had him followed her to the scanner at checkpoint 3. He stood in the full body scanner there. Then she and a male agent about 45 years old who had a small mustache took (b)(7) aside. The agent had (b)(7) hold out his arms and started scanning his body with a hand scanner. When he got to the brace area he had (b)(7) pull up his pant leg. While the male agent was directing attention to the brace (b)(7) turned his head enough that though she was behind him he could see through in his peripheral vision that she had his billfold in her hands and was going through the cards and the bill section. (b)(7) said, "What are you doing with my billfold?" She said she was searching for anything that might set off the alarm. He told her it was obvious that his artificial knee and brace were setting off the alarm. Finally, she gave him the bowl with his personal items and told him to go back to checkpoint 2 where I was waiting and worried because he wasn't anywhere in sight when I got through the checkpoint.

When we got on the plane (b)(7) started thinking about the incident in security and checked his billfold and discovered that instead of $17 he had only $2. When we travel we carry only small amounts of cash in our billfolds because we are cautious about pickpockets. Since we were traveling to Ecuador (b)(7) had put only $17 in his billfold. We certainly didn't think the pickpockets would be in airport security.

We realize that $15 is not much money but think it is important for Airport Security to know some of your agent may be stealing from passengers.

I emailed him the information

Disability Description: Caller said that he is flying with his 6 year old son and he does not want any TSA employees touching his son. Caller said that he talked to a (b)(6) and was told that his arms and torso would only be touched. Caller said he wanted to know if it was just arms and torso and the gentleman refused to answer anymore of his question.

Resolution:

As part of this effort TSA is implementing a program to revise screening procedures for passengers 12 years old and younger. The new screening procedures include permitting multiple passes through the metal detector and advanced imaging technology to clear any alarms as well as the greater use of explosives trace detection. TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—although not eliminate—the need for a physical patdown for children that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms.

1013 11:27: Caller stated that they still do not have any guidelines, caller was wanting to know the limits of the search.

Advised caller that TSA does not do strip searches and the patdown would depend upon the alarm and the anomalies.

Told caller that the patdown would depend where the alarm or the anomalies appeared. I cannot tell you exactly how the patdown would be conducted. It would be over the clothing and be a modified version of the adult patdown.

Told caller that TSA is reducing the need for patdowns in children by permitting multiple passes through the screening.

Caller was wanting to know if his child is subject to a patdown can they refuse and leave.

Told caller if he is referred for a patdown and it is not permissible that he would not be permitted to fly.

Caller requested that I email him the information.

I am a cancer patient and I have flown twice in the past three weeks. I am very uncomfortable with additional X-ray exposure. On a trip leaving Orlando, I requested to go through the older metal detector to avoid X-ray exposure, explaining that I am a cancer patient. I am also a ClearMe customer so have advanced checks on file. I was told I had to have a pat down. This was performed in full view of not only other travelers but also my three children. I carry a card which states I have a port implanted in my chest for chemo (cancer/chemo patient).

I was told because I asked not to go through the X-ray, I had to be patted down-no matter what. My flight home and my next flight, I avoided the pat down and embarrassment and walked through the X-ray. My kids were sad and thought I was hurting myself which is exactly what I felt. And on top of that, because of my implanted port, they still did another check! At what point do the TSA agents use some common sense?

There has got to be another option. A letter from my physician? Doesn't ClearMe provide advanced background checking which should be enough?

This is both an embarrassment and a health hazard to me.

Disability Description: The caller had total knee replacement surgery.

Information Request: The caller does not want to receive patdowns when airports do not have AIT, as he will alarm the WTMD. He wanted to know if there was anything else he could do, as he believes that the patdown violates the 4th Amendment.

Response Details: Advised Caller:

If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

Transportation Security Officers will conduct different patdown procedures to resolve different types of anomalies. During the assessment, officers will use revised patdown procedures in all instances to resolve anomalies.

The Fourth Amendment prohibits the Government from conducting unreasonable searches and seizures of people, places, and things. Courts have held that the search conducted in the airport screening context is reasonable, in that it balances the privacy interests of citizens against the Government's interest in protecting the traveling public.

I joined the Trusted Traveler's Program two years ago. It has proved valuable but I have an issue that I would like you to consider. I had total knee replacement surgery after I joined the TTP. Because the knee has metal components, I will set off the metal detectors at the airports. Being in the airline business, I travel quite a bit and the TTP has afforded me quicker access to the flights. The biggest problem is, I don't get through security very fast. I have to take off my belt, shoes, remove all metal, etc. Then I go through the machine. Pre-check customers who don't have the metal knee don't have to remove the belt, change shoes, etc. So my question is: why am I, and other TKR patients being subjected to a different search? That metal knee could easily be changed or my belt, etc. While anyone can get a card that shows that I have a metal knee, I do carry it and will gladly show it and the scar to any agent who asks.

Comment : I find it ridiculous that women of child bearing age be subjected to X-rays for screening and men too for that matter. As a health care provider I am well aware of the conditions that can result. I've seen these X-rays in other airports but there is always the option of walking through the metal detector. This experience I was rudely told I'd have to wait five minutes by some old man and made to feel like this was a major inconvenience. What if I were pregnant? As a government agency I would expect you to be more concerned with the well being of America's travelers. I'm disappointed.

Caller's mother has had a knee replaced. The metal detector typically alarms when she goes through. She doesn't want to go through the AIT because she doesn't want the radiation. She doesn't like the pat-down. Are there any other options for her? Her husband was in the Air Force for thirty years and she is a low-risk passenger.

I advised that all passengers must be screened. The options are the WTMD, AIT, and the pat-down. If there is an alarm when the passenger goes through the equipment, then the passenger must be patted-down to resolve the alarm. She can opt out of the AIT, but the pat-down is the alternative.

Caller advised that her mother's concern with the AIT machine is with the amount of radiation and when they were last calibrated or checked. How can she get this information?

Advised that the specifics regarding the amount of radiation emitted by the machines is addressed on the TSA website. The information regarding when the machines are calibrated will not be posted as it would create a possible vulnerability. That information will not be made available.

Can she make suggestions about these issues?

I advised that TSA does review complaints, especially if it is for a particular airport.

Caller advised that the pat-down is not a pleasant process.

Caller never did specify that there was a particular issue at any specific airport.

2013 10:03: Good afternoon. My name is (b)(6). I'm a Flight attendant for Silver Airways, a regional carrier and express service for United Airlines. Today, February 26th, 2013 at approximately 5:40 pm, I transgressed through TSA's Security checkpoint at Terminal A. I was instructed to place an open liquid container into a bin with the rest of my belongings. As the bin went through the Xray screening machine, the outer flaps knocked down my drink and the contents spilled all over my belongings, one of which was a Tommy Hilfiger watch and a Samsung Galaxy S3, the watch is water proof, the phone, however, is not. When I brought this to the attention of the TSA agents present, I was told that I, as uniformed crew, could've gone through the metal detector without placing my drink in the x ray machine, however, I was told otherwise before I went through the screening. Now the dilemma is that of my phone. Who am I to hold responsible for replacing a 600 dollar cellphone? Who am I to speak to in order to ensure my electronic is replaced?

Caller states that in the last 4 years, on his way back into the USA he states that they always confused him with someone else, he states that he tried to book a flight and the travel agent told him that he needs to apply for the redress.

Informed caller:

To participate in the program, please submit a completed Traveler Inquiry Form and requested copies of identity documents to DHS TRIP. You may download an electronic form from the website at www.dhs.gov/trip, or you may complete the enclosed form. Please do not send original identity documents as they will not be returned. DHS will review the information submitted and work with other Federal agencies, if necessary, to resolve individual concerns. DHS TRIP will inform you in writing when review of your inquiry is complete.

2013 4:13:24 When you submit an online inquiry, a control number will be assigned to you. The control number will be displayed on the Traveler Inquiry Form acknowledgement page along with your name. Please print the acknowledgement page, sign it, and send it to DHS TRIP along with the requested copies of identity documents. If completing the enclosed form, please sign it and send it to DHS TRIP along with the requested copies of identity documents. Again, please do not send original identity documents as they will not be returned.

DHS can neither confirm nor deny whether an individual is on a Federal watch list because this information is derived from classified and sensitive law enforcement and intelligence information. In addition, DHS cannot ensure that your travel will always be delay-free. Airline check-in procedures must still be followed and other security measures remain in place at the airport. For example, an individual may be selected for secondary screening to resolve a walk-through metal detector alarm or because of random selection. Because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, an individual may still be required to check in for flights at the airline ticket counter and be unable to print a boarding pass from a home computer or airport kiosk or at curbside.

Caller has an insulin pump and travels extensively for work, goes through the process each week and his hands are swiped with a swab. Today it showed positive and he had to have a patdown. The most invasive patdown he has had. Agent said it could have been gasoline where he filled up the rental car or washed his hands in the restroom that caused the positive test. One of the agents swiped his private area 6 times, most of the time he has to have the same procedure, but, it felt really invasive today and he states there were 3 agents and they were very professional and explained each step of the process and the screening was performed in a private area. He asked if there is some way he could be screened without going through that process again and will be flying again next week?

Caller said even though the TSOs were very professional, he felt violated even though he understood why it was done.

Flew from GRB and went through the AIT for his screening, states he didn't ask to speak with a supervisor at GRB.

Asked if there is something that can be done to prevent him from having to go through that process again because he is a professional who travels extensively. Caller states he has had worse experiences in the past and doesn't know if the TSOs have received more training or seen more of the pumps to become familiar with them, but, the screening has gotten better over time.

Response:

Apologized to caller for his experience.

Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or the walk-through metal detector, the passenger's insulin pump is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the insulin pump followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands.

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Comment : This isn't exactly a complaint, but perhaps a request.. I have metal implants in my spine that have been setting off every metal detector since the sensitivity was changed following 9/11.

I have been really happy that since Pre-check was made available, I have rarely set off the metal detectors as long as I have no other metal on me at all (no belt, no metal in shoes, etc.)

Today I once again set off the pre-check metal detector and I assume adjustments were made.

013 10:50: My only request is to please evaluate the sensitivity settings and be sure they are at the intended level and consider those of us who are right on the line for setting off the machine. Obviously they need to be set to levels that are adequate for security.

In other airports when I have set off the alarm in pre-check, they have only done a swab of my hands as additional screening. At LGA, I received a full pat-down. It would be nice to have consistent procedures, especially if it's possible to avoid the invasive pat-down.

Everyone at the checkpoint was friendly and efficient, so no complaints there. In fact I have always had a positive experience at LGA. Thank you for listening!

To Whom It May Concern:

I have always "opted out" of the X-ray screening machine and have reluctantly subjected myself to the humiliating "pat down" procedure.

I strongly believe that rays from X-ray machines are harmful to one's body! I avoid and have refused X-rays that were prescribed by my dentist and my doctor.

On a recent trip I noticed some travelers were allowed to go through the metal detector instead of the X-ray machine. When I questioned what was the criteria for being able to go only through the metal detector. I was told by the TSA agent that if you are 75 years or older that you didn't have to go through the X-ray machine.

013 11:56: On my next trip (at a different airport) I informed the TSA agent that I was over 75 years old and showed him my drivers license as proof. When I told him that I wanted to exercise my right not to go through the X-ray machine because of my age, he insisted that age didn't matter and that I still had to go through it.

Don't all the airports abide by one set of TSA rules or does each airport have a different set of rules and procedures? Aren't all the TSA agents trained the same way?

Please send me some paperwork regarding this "75 year or older" rule so that I may present it to the TSA agent on my next trip.

Yours truly,

013 9:17: The DRO airport is in need of another TSA line, people have to wait far too long to get through security, often longer than in DEN and are missing their flights in some cases. Smaller airports have more lines than DRO, we need our machine back also, you took away the scanner where you take the picture and we are back to the old metal detectors. Now we see in the paper that you are cutting airport TSA people. This is not good, it's the only way to get out of and into DRO. Please help us.

!013 7:28:4 Enhanced security measures require that all passengers and their belongings undergo security screening at airport checkpoints; this includes service animals and pets. Current Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires that passengers traveling with pets remove the animal from its carrier so that the pet may be carried through the walk through metal detector (WTMD).

If a passenger believes that the removal of their pet could result in escape, a Supervisory Transportation Security Officer (TSO) can authorize an alternative screening measure that he or she deems sufficient. When permitted, an animal may remain in its carrier and be carried through the WTMD by the passenger; however, the passenger, the animal, and the carrier must undergo secondary screening.

Additional screening of the animal may include a visual observation, a patdown inspection, or Explosives Trace Detection (ETD). If additional screening requires removal of the animal from its carrier, passengers may request a private screening. TSOs may ask the owner for assistance during any part of the inspection.

Brief Description of Inquiry:

LAX American pre-screen checkpoint

Comments:

I fly every week on AA to San Francisco and am TSA pre-check status. The full body scan has been recently removed and replaced with metal detector which means that all of us traveling public with knee or other replacements now have to do a pat down or find other locations with a full body scan machine technology. Why was the scan machine removed!!!

Hello,

I'm just curious about the "extra security" I had to go through this past weekend while flying from the Dominican Republic. We left with friends for our trip last weekend flying JetBlue and had no issues. However on our return flight I had been "randomly flagged" for "extra security". Basically my boarding pass has been stamped with SSSS and I was swabbed in the Dominican Republic, and put through the same swab and a pat down in New York's JFK before getting on the connecting flight.

The JetBlue attendant says it happens randomly. I asked a TSA agent in New York about it, and she rudely snapped at me that she couldn't answer why, but I was likely a security risk?

I finally asked the man performing the pat down, who was very professional and kind (much unlike the first TSA agent who initially compared my passport to my boarding pass...), but he again couldn't give me a straight answer as to how one is flagged. Is it truly random? Or have I done something to flag myself?

I'm really just curious at this point. I just found it odd that I had 3 different answers, and even more odd that all of the answers were mostly "I don't know for sure, but..."

Any help is appreciated!

10/13 2:03:2

Thanks,

(b)(6)

PS: As a suggestion, I think it would be nice if the escort could walk you through the entire process. In the Dominican Republic I was basically led through a metal detector and left in a corner confused as to what to do next. (I'm guessing they have their own security agency though). But in New York, the rude TSA agent basically dumped me at one of the image scanners, and I had no idea what to do! I was scanned, and stood around. Finally an agent asked who escorted me in, because they didn't know where my boarding pass was.

All the while, my carry-on and personal affects (wallet, keys, cell phone), sat on a conveyor out of my reach while other passengers walked around it, unsecured. I think that agent who escorted me should have stayed with me, especially since this was my first experience. Also it would have been nice if she could have collected my belongings and secured them while I was being scanned. It's not that anything was taken, but it was left in the open for something to happen, which wasn't comforting.

Again, other than the rude agent, I have no problems with the overall experience. I really liked how the pat-down agent explained everything prior to, and during the process, but info on why I was selected would be great. And what would be even better is maybe posting signs at the checkpoint areas explaining the "extra security" measures! That too would make the process a little less embarrassing to travelers such as I, who were being pat down in the middle of everything, getting strange looks from other passengers!

013 10:05:2 I flew at Boston Logan Airport on 03 MAR 13 on JetBlue Flight 687 departing at 1100H. Opted out from the full-body scanner and requested for a pat-down around 0945-50ish and patiently waited for almost half an hour for someone to conduct the pat-down. I was the only person in the pat-down line). During that time, there were about 10 male TSA agents and 3 females behind / pass the full body scanner (13 people behind the security line and 2 people instructing passengers with their liquids/laptops/etc; 15 agents in ONE security lane).

While waiting for someone to pat me down, a two-year old child, a pacemaker, needed to pass through the metal detector but parent had a difficulty making the child pass through because he was crying, and the scenario lasted about 10 minutes. The whole TSA Agent team, including everyone pass the full-body scanners stopped their operation as they just watched the scenario (a couple made indecisive recommendations that did not work).

After the child was cleared, I was still waiting for someone to pat me down. I was patted-down around 1010-1015 (almost after half an hour wait). The person that patted me down was one of the TSA agents pass the full-body scanner, and he was just standing without any action even though the TSA greeter called-out an agent since I got in front of the security lane, which was almost half an hour since I was patted-down.

If there were designated pat-down agents, why was the person that patted me down (Agent's Name: (b)(6)) just stood there for almost half-an-hour? Why did the whole security check operation stopped when a child was being checked?

Caller is planning to take a trip and her daughter has leukemia and she has a port in her chest. Caller was wanting information for her going through screening.

Resolution:

013 10:55:0 Specifically, you were concerned about screening for passengers who have port and catheter devices. Passengers who have catheters and ports attached to their bodies should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the device(s) and indicate where the device(s) is located before the screening process begins. Passengers should also inform the TSO of any pain or medical complications that may result from touching the port and or catheter so it can be screened appropriately. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device(s) that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

Advised caller if a patdown is required she would get a modified version of the patdown.

Caller was wanting to know if she needed any documentation from the doctors.

Advised caller that documentation is not a requirement however if she has it she can present it.

Caller thinks that she is on the Watch List, she remembers that she got the carry and concele and she states that she called TSA and asked if she can carry her gun and they said that in checked. So she took it in checked baggagge and she states that since them she has been having problems with flying, they have been searching her more and her baggage are always searched or broken. She flew from Ft, Lauderdale to Tallahassee the last time. She states that in Tampa International, she was placed in a machine that she calls the Bomb Box, she states that someone told her that if she enters the machine and she has something that she is not suppose to have it will blow up. she states that it was a lot of pressure and air when inside of that box.

She states that about a month ago, she went through the Metal Detector and she got patted down and she states that the TSA officer told her that she had to have a patdown because she had residue on her gloves from her, and she states that another officer came in the room and preformed another patdown and she states that there was no residue on the gloves of that TSA Officer.

Informed caller:

TSA can neither confirm nor deny whether an individual is on a Federal Watch List because this information is derived from classified and sensitive law enforcement and intelligence information. This protects the operational counterterrorism and intelligence collection objectives of the Federal government as well as the personal safety of those involved in counterterrorism investigations. Federal Watch Lists remain effective tools in the government's counterterrorism and transportation security efforts because their contents are not disclosed.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

Disability Description: Caller is visually impaired.

Response Details: CCR informed her:

If the passenger and dog walk through separately, only the party that alarms the metal detector will receive additional screening. It is very important that the passenger not make contact with the dog (other than holding the leash) until the dog has been cleared and inspected by a TSO.

Regardless of how the passenger and dog proceed through the walk-through metal detector, the dog will receive additional screening. A TSO will physically inspect the dog and the dog's belongings (collar, harness, leash, backpack, vest, etc.) in order to resolve the alarm.

The officer followed the correct policy but this information will be sent to the CSM for further assistance.

Incident Details: Caller stated that when she was flying out of Jacksonville she had trouble with a TSO agent at the check point. She is visually impaired and has a service dog. When going through the checkpoint, they left her standing there without telling her what was happening and took her sister away from her to get separately screened. When the TSOs finally returned to her, without her sister, the red haired female officer had her and the dog go through screening. She went through the 013 12:59:4 WTMD first and then the dog followed her in. She did not alarm but the dog did because of the leash. The officer went to do a patdown to the dog and she told her that she was not supposed to touch her dog nor talk to them. The TSO threw her hands up and refused to do the screening and got her supervisor. The supervisor came over and started to talk to the dog like it was a pet and when addressed by the caller, she told her that she was talking to the dog so it would not bite her. This made the caller upset because it is not their job to make the dog not bite, it was hers.

She had no issue on her first flight from Tampa to her destination, and wants to file a complaint because of the way she was treated by the TSO and also how they touched and talked to her dog.

Comment : My daughter travels with medical supplies for Type 1 Diabetes. As required by TSA, we keep all supplies in a separate bag for manual inspection. Per our medical supply provider, we know that pumps and meters cannot go through the x-ray machine. Here is Medtronic's site - <http://www.medtronicdiabetes.com/lifestyle/travel>. The issue we had is that Supervisor (b)(6) made me pass the bag with medical supplies through the metal detector (older style) before she would hand inspect the supplies. This is not required per your guidelines. She should have taken the bag aside and inspected it. In addition, she then said she needed to pass the empty bag through metal detector. What was the purpose if she already did this? She needs to know, as do all TSA agents, that hand inspection does not require passing this through the metal detectors, as it could cause loss of data or worse, complete malfunction of the equipment. Please note that the TSA agents in Boston handled this correctly and professionally on our way down to Ft. Myers (RSW).

Information Request: Caller was wanting information for getting him through screening.

Response Details: Specifically, you were concerned about screening of passengers with intellectual or developmental disabilities. Passengers with intellectual disabilities or developmental disabilities, such as Down Syndrome or autism, can be screened without being separated from their parents or guardians. Parents or guardians should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the child's needs before screening begins. Parents or guardians may offer suggestions on the best way to approach and screen their children, especially if it is necessary to touch him or her during screening.

TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

Caller was also concerned about him standing in line and being around noise.

Many airports have lanes specifically designated for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions, or traveling with young children. Although passengers still may need to wait in line when using these lanes, in general the lines are much shorter and the wait time is less. Passengers may ask to be directed to one of these lanes when checking in with their airline or once they have reached the line used by general passengers. Use of these lanes is not limited to individuals who have physical disabilities. Passengers with cognitive and psychological disabilities who have difficulty waiting in lines also are allowed to use these lanes.

If an airport or checkpoint does not have a lane set aside for passengers with disabilities or families, or a passenger does not want to use that lane, any passenger who has difficulty standing may request to move to the front of any line and be accompanied by his or her traveling companions.

Advised caller that I would email her additional information on traveling with children who have disabilities.

Emailed caller information.

Advised caller that once she goes over the information and if she thinks that she might need assistance that she can call us back 72 hours before the flight with the flight details.

Comment : When you go through security & place all your belongings in trays & it goes w/ your carry-on thru xray; would it be proper & safer that as a passenger to RETAIN & HOLD my US Passport & boarding pass on my person, when I go thru the metal detector. I had a TSA person yelled & commanded me to place my passport & boarding pass(it was in a yellow cloth passport neck wallet) on top of my belongings @SFO. If someone ahead of me takes my passport & boarding pass, I am in a serious dilemma w/ no ID! What do you suggest?

:013 6:10:2 I have one constructive criticism & request that the security personnel speak SLOWER when giving instructions. I realize that they must say the instructions 5,000 times a day or more but I even told one security man that he said it so fast 2x it was difficult to understand, and I am fluent in English!

Disability Description: Caller wears an insulin pump.

Information Request: Caller stated that she is flying out of PDX on Saturday, and she wears an insulin pump and will also be bringing a back up as well. She is required to request a hand inspection of the device according to the manufacturer, and the last time she did that, she had a horrible experience. She was told that requesting the patdown automatically subjected her to receive additional screening and she did an ETD on the device as well. She has heard inconsistent information from other passengers as well as a supervisor she spoke with the last time she called in and had the information sent up. She wants to know what to expect this coming Saturday, along with information about what the protocol is supposed to be for requesting a hand inspection.

Response Details: I told her that there s no way for me to be able to guarantee that she would not receive additional screening. Our information states that she can be screened either connected or disconnected from the device. She can go through screening as normal, whether it be through the AIT or the WTMD and receive a patdown. She can request a hand inspection of the device and it could subject that for an ETD test. Since I m not at the airport, there s no way for me to be able to tell her why she was subjected to the additional screening, nor would I be able to tell her what to expect at the checkpoint Saturday.

I advised her to contact the CSM there, explain the previous situation to them and the inconsistency that she s experienced with her responses. She may be able to give her more information on what to expect.

I just had to write to express how ridiculous this new mandate is!!!!

:013 8:04:5 I cannot believe that to ensure security the TSA makes us walk through metal detectors -taking take off our shoes and belts, x-rays our carry-on luggage, makes us pass through explosive sniffers and be subject to pat downs ---all this to ensure the integrity of flights. Passengers are finally feeling safe and believe it is safe to fly and now you are undoing all of this by letting people carry on knives!

You people need to get a life!

I want to start by thanking you for the tough job all of you do. I can't imagine the stress of your job. You must be impartial, move fast and efficiently and even one mistake could have disastrous results. That's extreme pressure and you are also pulled back and forth with social and political wants. Your service is needed, but regarded with disdain. I understand that your job isn't easy.

I have never had problems going through security screening before my trip on the 2nd. Apparently, the rules have changed again and passengers are now required to empty ALL items out of their pockets before going through the body scanner. I'm not sure when this was enacted, but it has been since I traveled last. It must also be recent enough that it is not even on the know before you go section on DIA's web site as it still instructs passengers to "put metal objects, such as coins and keys, in your carry on bag" and "place shoes, belt and jacket in screening bins". I do not see anything telling me to completely empty my pockets.

If there was a sign instructing me to empty my pockets at the airport screening line, I did not see it. I don't travel often and was making sure I had everything ready- keys in my carry on, shoes off, belt off, drivers license and boarding pass out, etc, etc. This is stressful for the infrequent flier and so there is a good chance I didn't see a sign if there was one.

This brings me to my complaint. After waiting in line and placing my belongings in the screening bin, I started to follow the person in front of me through the metal detector when it was my turn. I was angrily redirected by TSA staff to the end of the adjacent line to walk through the body scanner. I'm still confused as to why I had to stand in line again and why I could not go through the detector as the person in front of me had. No matter, I did as I was told and entered the body scanner when it was again my turn. The machine was run and I was instructed to adjust my hands and be scanned again. Again, I did as I was told. As I exited the scanner I was met by a TSA agent. He stood in front of me and said "TAKE THE THINGS OUT OF YOUR POCKETS!" I took out my wallet and boarding pass and handed it to the agent. He opened my wallet, closed it and literally shoved it back in my hand as he said "NEXT TIME WE TELL YOU TO EMPTY YOUR POCKETS, THAT MEANS EVERYTHING, YOUR WALLET, YOUR TICKET, EVERYTHING!" and walked away. Embarrassed, I said "sorry about that" and was ignored.

May I remind you that I am NOT the enemy. I am one of your customers! I was treated rudely by the person checking the boarding passes, the people at the body screening and finally by the ass that told me to empty my pockets. Furthermore, no one TOLD me to empty my pockets!!! If they had, I would have done so. I can only assume this treatment is accepted because your customers are too afraid to complain and your staff is drunk on the power they lord over each and every traveler. I wanted so badly to say something to the agent who took my wallet, to call him out on his rudeness, to embarrass him like he had me in front of all the people standing in line, but I didn't. His demeanor and body language told me that he would make me an example if I said one word.

So, here I am. Hating your agency for how I was treated and thinking about how you managed to live up to all the complaints and stereotypes I hear. Your staff made my entire flight horrible as I stewed about my experience. I intentionally waited until now to complain so I could cool off and write a rational e mail. But to what end? There is no motive to change as far as I can see, but I thought you should know none the less. Your job CAN be done with courtesy and I'd bet with all the people who are out of work right now, you could find some willing to do it.

If you wish to contact me, I may be reached at (b)(6) at (b)(6) Evergreen, Co 80439
Thank you for taking the time to read this e mail. Sincerely, (b)(6)

Caller has a complaint regarding a situation that happened to her on Monday 3/4 at ATL. She had the worst experience she has ever had in her life. She had to take off her bracelets to go through the WTMD and place them in the bin with other items. She had placed five bracelets in the bin. These included: silver bracelets with stones in them, Ippolita Brand. An Indian lady, a passenger, stole the caller's jewelry from the bin and left all other items. She missed her original flight. She was flying from ATL to SAV. Flight # not available, Delta Airlines which departed at 1:20 PM, she caught a later flight at 3:20 PM. She called the ATL Police Department and they sent a representative to her. She said TSA could have done more to help but the TSO just looked at her when she asked him for help in stopping the lady and he told her he was helping another passenger. This TSO was an African American Male with hair braided in dreadlocks.

The passenger who stole her jewelry was allowed to leave the checkpoint and the TSO didn't offer to help her. Caller said her husband was so irate he is speaking with a lawyer about their options.

An ATL Police Department Officer came up and reviewed the video but the lady was long gone. The ATL Police Department opened a case. The caller has a case number and states she will find the lady and have her prosecuted.

Caller stated if someone can get through the airport with another passenger's property, what else could a terrorist get away with? TSA could have done a better job of stopping the lady. The caller is so upset she doubts if she will ever fly again. The caller's flight was leaving from Gate # D26, when the incident happened.

Caller thinks a Supervisory TSO may have witnessed the whole event.

Response:

Apologized to caller for her experience and explained the TSO may not have been able to leave his location if he was assisting another passenger.

Because your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

have a patdown. The caller stated that she has had multiple surgeries on her knee and it is extremely painful; even her own doctor will not touch it. The TSO threatened to not let her on the plane unless the passenger allowed her to touch this sensitive area.

The caller offered her two other options that other TSOs in the past had done to complete the patdown: one being patting down to just above the knee and the other was let her place her fingers over the scar for her and lifting the skirt to show the scar tissue. The TSO stated that she could not do this. The TSO knocked her hand out of the way and actually squeezed the painful area. She was hurt so badly that she screamed out and almost lost her balance. They began to yell at her for grabbing the booth when she lost her balance because it sounded an alarm. The caller states had she not grabbed it she would have fallen to the floor. She actually patted down the same area twice when she had told her that the pain in the inside area of her knee was extremely painful. She believes this lady should lose her job. The caller has had to go to physical therapy because of this situation. She stated that this situation is horrible and the only thing that will satisfy her is having this TSO fired for what she has done. The TSO told her that if she had been wearing pants, she would not have required a patdown. She stated that the airline did not provide her wheelchair for over 20 minutes either. She stated that the TSO did not care what she was saying or the fact that she had this problem. She stated that she was treated terribly by both the TSO and the Supervisor. She stated that she knows that she will not get any money because this is a government agency but she believes that the supervisor at the checkpoint that day is too young to handle such a job. She stated that the TSO had no business dealing with the public and should get a desk job instead.

Advised Caller:

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, I will forward a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at that location.

To whom it may concern:

I'm a TSA pre-check client and travel over 130k miles annually. I also have a metal implant and today the scanner check was not available so I needed to walk through the metal detector.

I was given a pat down by one of your employees (b)(6). I'm accustomed to patdowns given I travel all over the country but (b)(6) was absolutely the single worst experience I have had with a TSA employee. He purposely used force and overreached his position. I was in the TSA pre-check line and he was apparently not happy because I refused to go stand in the regular line where they have the scanners. So in his own way he violated me just because he is in a position of power. People like (b)(6) hurt the reputation of the TSA and should be immediately reprimanded for events such as this.

To whom it may concern:

I'm a TSA pre-check client and travel over 130k miles annually. I also have a metal implant and today the scanner check was not available so I needed to walk through the metal detector.

I was given a pat down by one of your employees (b)(6) at the Charlotte airport today gate B. I'm accustomed to patdowns given I travel all over the country but (b)(6) was absolutely the single worst experience I have had with a TSA employee. He purposely used force and over reached his position. I was in the TSA pre-check line and he was apparently not happy because I refused to go stand in the regular line where they have the scanners. caller arrived in Orlando she did not have a ticket to board the upcoming flight and asked an officer to help her. This is when he came back and handed her the ticket with the SSSS at the bottom. Caller went through additional screening three times in Orlando airport. When caller left Jamaica she went through WTMD and was taken into the backroom for a pat-down and it was fine. However, when caller got to Orlando, she was patted down in front of everyone and felt humiliated and as if she was sexually assaulted. The TSO lifted up her breasts and her butt while she was wearing a strapless dress, strapless bra, and thong. During caller's two and a half hour layover, she was going through security the whole entire time and was not able to even go to the bathroom and was the last one on her flight. Caller's carry-on was searched by TSA and things were broken. Caller's medication was dumped out in the bag, and because some of the pills look the same she was not able to figure out which one was which and therefore had to spend at least 200$ replacing the prescriptions. Caller flew with JetBlue. Caller also states that while going through security, that the officers were arguing and it was a mess. They were arguing about where to take her through security since the WTMD she went through was getting ready to close. The TSO there called more security to come, and they continued arguing while they were holding her up. Caller also states that her checked luggage was inspected and had no NOI in the bag. Caller said that things in her bag were broken, because of the way the officers put her belongings back in her bag the wrong way. Caller states she cannot prove the value of the items, because they were from vendors in Jamaica. Caller states she will wait until she flies again and has the SSSS on her ticket again or is stopped for additional screening until she applies for Redress.

Informed caller.
Apologized to caller.

Advised caller to apply for the redress program. This program helps to resolve passengers that have the SSSS on the ticket or are always stopped for additional screening.

The passenger has the right to ask for a private screening when a patdown is required.

This information and complaint will be sent to the CSM at the Orlando airport for documentation and investigation purposes.

Because caller's carry-on items were broken, as well, offered to send claim form via e-mail to be received in less than 24 hours. Sent claim form via postal mail and will be received within three weeks.

The "S" notation may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe. TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI).

The instructions are on the claim form as far as what the caller needs to do, present, fill out, etc. The caller has up to 2 years to file a claim. TSA has up to 6 months to finish the claim process. Suggested caller be as thorough as she can on the claim form.

Because there was no NOI in the bag, TSA did not hand inspect the passenger's checked luggage. CBP inspects passenger's bag upon reentering the US, so it is possible customs is who destroyed her bag. Referred caller to CBP to file a complaint claim: (877) 227-5511

The caller's adult daughter was traveling from JFK to SYR and when going through screening she was selected for secondary screening. There was no prohibited item and nothing about the patdown itself that was problem but the caller wants to know why she was selected for secondary screening. I explained that:

!013 3:02:2 TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates.

The caller wants to know how to contact someone with the TSA specifically at JFK to find out exactly why her daughter was chosen for secondary screening. I explained how she can contact the CSM.

I recently traveled from Houston. I have a knee replacement about 14 months ago. All the other times I have traveled TSA has been very courteous with providing me a cane and patience.

My Houston flight was embarrassing. I was sent through the metal detector and provided no cane. I sent my cane through screening.

Perhaps my fault as this time I didn't mention my knee as always before and it was never a problem. The detector rang and I was sent back through. I explained about the knee. I even showed the scar. I was told I should have gone through the other machine. At that point I was sent back and forth through the metal detector again. Another associate came over and heatedly discussed me with the observing associate. I said I will go through the other machine.

!013 8:13:0 This was denied and I had an extremely thorough pat down.

The TSA associates in Houston need to be a little more observant, discuss heatedly in private and be respectful.

I was not allowed my cane until pat down was complete, so I had to walk and stand for a while without it.

Your answer to my previous e-mail was not the least bit helpful.

Your response deals with secondary screening.

My inquiry SPECIFICALLY questions AIT screening of people who are 75 years or older.

Your pre-printed "form answers" which you e-mailed to me do not address my question.

!013 8:13:4 As I stated in my previous two e-mails, at one airport I am not required to undergo an AIT screening since I am over 75 years old. I am only asked to go through the metal detector.

At another airport. I am told that regardless of age, everyone must go through the AIT screening.

Can someone in authority give me a direct answer to my question?

Your truly,

Comment : At the initial TSA checkpoint, I showed the agent my CBP's Trusted Traveler Global Entry card and requested TSA PRE, I was also with my 14 year old daughter, he motioned me towards the screening area, when we arrived I showed the TSA agent the card and said we do not do that at this airport, I proceeded to explain the program, she simply said not here and to proceed towards the scanner. I then requested that my daughter and I have an alternative screen. she then closed the metal detector and said we would both get pat downs. I then said a couple just went through the detector, why couldn't we, she said that was ONLY for small children, and a pat down was our ONLY option. I agreed to the pat downs.

I've had my GE card and gone through TSA PRE and also have had no problems when asking to go through the standard detector in my travels. One purpose of the GE card is to speed things up, especially since I've been interviewed for over an hour and my background has been thoroughly dissected.

Caller indicated that his partner, (b)(6) was going through security today at SEA airport for a Frontier Airlines flight around 0415hrs. She was stopped because of a metal belt buckle alarming at the checkpoint. He said that the belt is made into her dress and the officers told her she must remove it to clear screening. She protested saying that it was made into the clothing and she had no way to remove it. Caller said that she was told that she must remove the item or she could not fly. She therefore had to tear the belt off of her dress, and then required to submit to a patdown. Caller said that the traveler was extremely upset at this as well and felt that the patdown was overly invasive. He stated that she would have called but was in the midst of her trip and provided her email address for communication.

I apologized to caller for his partners experience and explained that the TSOs will use a patdown to resolve alarms of the WTMD and AIT machines. However due to the requirement that she damage her clothing and the accusation of the patdown being inappropriate, advised that we would forward her complaint to the CSM at SEA for review. Also explained the process for submitting a claim for damaged items and ordered a tort claim package to be emailed. Caller wants to file a complaint. The caller and her sister traveled through CLT en route to Montego Bay. She stated they did not appreciate the way that were screened in CLT. She believes that everyone does not get treated the way that she and her sister were treated. She believes that Caucasians do not have to under go the same treatment. She had opted out of AIT and had to undergo a patdown and ETD. She had touched her with something and was told by the gentleman she was clear to go. Then the female officer told her she was puffy down there. She and her sister were taken into a private screening room. Caller states that she asked the officer if she thought she had a penis. The caller was asked why she was traveling to Jamaica.

Transferred the caller to MB.

MB Notes:

'013 2:47:5 The caller opted out AIT and went through the walk thru the metal detector. She had to undergo a patdown. She caller stated that the officer that patted her down stated that she was puffy down there. The caller stated that she was told that she was clear apparently by the person who did the ETD. She was questioned about going to Jamaica and was asked why she was traveling there. She stated that she was asked about the cash that she was carrying. The caller mentioned that she could be wearing a maxi pad. She was traveling on US Air and she stated that she was on a morning flight. She could not tell me what time her flight departed. She does not remember what security line she was in and she does not have the names of the officers involved. She only knows that they were all women. She also had some items taken from her baggage on her return trip back to the US. She stated one of them was a charge and a HDMI (Internet) cable that was worth a lot of money. She stated that she received ill treatment in Jamaica. The caller's sister, (b)(6) also received ill treatment as well.

I advised the caller that she would have to place her complaint in writing. I advised her that I would send her some information regarding how she would need to proceed and I obtained her email address. I told her that I was sorry for her unpleasant screening experience but that before anyone could look into the matter, her complaint would need to be in writing. The caller clearly feels that she was discriminated against due to her race. I also provided the caller with the number to the US Department of state and told her that she could phone them in order to get information on whom to contact in Jamaica due to her unpleasant screening experience there.

Disability Description: Caller had a hip replacement five years ago. She has gone through the AIT before. She flew from JFK to SFO on Wednesday at 4:30pm on Virgin America. She went through the WTMD.

The woman was very inappropriate. She filed a complaint with Virgin America. She had her hand up her crotch and down her pants. The TSO was touching her private parts. She knew if she complained that more people would come and she might miss her flight.

She was never treated like this before. She was highly embarrassed. She

She does not mind being scanned. The TSO said, Do you want to do it privately or out in the open. Caller felt violated. She understands the procedures. Caller was very upset.

Caller stated that she was by herself and so would never have done a private screening.

Caller will be filing a written complaint. She asked if the way the screener conducted herself was how she was trained. I told her that they should tell the passenger what they will be doing. The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

She asked how to avoid this in the future. I told her she could always ask for a supervisor. She could also call us back 72 hours prior to her flight, excluding weekends, and let us know that she needs assistance at the checkpoint. We will get her itinerary and we will send this to the disability experts who will take it from there.

To Whom It May Concern:

My daughter was flying today out of Albany International Airport. She was forced to go through an xray. I am contacting a lawyer in regards to this situation. You have no right to make anyone go through that. We have a history of cancer in our family and my children are advised not to use any xray. She begged the woman at security check point to pat her down or use the regular metal detector. She was poorly treated and embarrassed. She was threatened that it would take time and she would miss her flight. She felt she had no choice but to comply. I need to know exactly who is responsible for hiring these people and whom shall we sent the law suit to?

Comment : For once, I decided to travel NOT in uniform to be comfortable, even though I had my uniform with me to report to work at a later time, BUT after my last dealing with TSA at McCARRAN in Las Vegas, I've decided it's just not worth it to be out of uniform anymore!! There were two lines of passengers, one for the body scanner and one for the reg metal detector. I showed my badge, and the UNFRIENDLY, BOSSY TSA agent directed me to the body scanner, which we crewmembers are exempt from IF we go through security in uniform, as you well know...but as a KNOWN CREWMEMBER, who has been background checked, fingerprinted and has a spotless record, I resent them looking at my badge and directing me to the BODY SCANNER! So as is my right, I opted out! All fine and good with me, but now I can tell they are ticked and I am ticked and they keep me waiting while there are SEVERAL TSA agents hanging around that could have come right over...by the time they do come over, my patience is wearing thin and the agent proceeds to go through the EXPLANATION of what is about to happen, at which point I say to just SKIP the DAMN explanation and get it over with because this is outright ridiculous!.....IS THIS REALLY NECESSARY FOR A KNOWN CREWMEMBER????????? McCarran has ALWAYS had a reputation for harassing crewmembers and this cements that in my mind now! So I proceeded with the typical "molestation" and then they do a bag swab.....wasting MY time and THEIRS! If they insist on being jerks to crewmembers, I will NEVER not wear my uniform again OR I will ALWAYS opt OUT of the body scanner.....I don't know what it uses but I am not willing to subject myself to more unhealthy doses of ANYTHING, I get enough radiation from my job alone! And now passengers can carry pocket knives....?????? Yet TSA makes life irritating beyond belief for a KNOWN CREWMEMBER!!!! NOTHING in this organization makes sense, right behind me was a well-dressed grandmother with her family in a wheelchair that was being harassed as well! I hate to use the word IDIOTIC but that is what comes to mind! Oh is it politically incorrect to use the word PROFILE?????? God forbid!

Also, thanks for confirming the fact that we crewmembers will now be defenseless against knives, boxcutters, what have you AND we will be harassed if out of uniform, even though we are picked up and dropped off planeside, and don't go through security to get on the plane to begin with at McCarran when on a trip!!!! Bottom line is IF I EVER decide to be out of uniform again, and they direct me toward the body scanner, I will CONTINUE to opt out. It is MY RIGHT to opt out and while they take that as a HUGE inconvenience, I take the body scanner as a HUGE insult as a Known Crewmember. If I have the proper badging, Known Crewmember ID and abide by the rules, what difference does a uniform make or not? I am convinced those rules don't make any sense either. If they are going to do away with the body scanner anyway, why are they subjecting crewmembers to it?

I am fed up...this is part of our job and we can't even relax out of uniform without being treated like the common criminal. I would like to add that there HAVE been nice TSA agents along the way, but those with the "power trip " attitude are making crewmembers nothing but GROUCHY before we even GET to work!

I won't sign my name, I don't want a response, I just want a little mutual respect between Known Crewmembers and TSA when we pass through.

Thank you for your time.

man? are you ok? . When the caller went through screening at IAH, the male TSO told him that he did not need to conduct the patdown and just go through the checkpoint. Advised Caller:

TSA policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with respect and courtesy and every Transportation Security Officer (TSO) receives training on professional conduct.

Passengers that alarm the metal detector or the AIT will be required to undergo additional screening. Passengers directed for additional screening will undergo patdown inspections. At anytime passengers may request that patdown screenings are performed in a private screening area, and TSOs are instructed to honor a passenger's request for private screening.

If additional screening is required, a transgender passenger will receive screening by a TSO of the same gender as what the passenger presents him or herself to be. If a passenger chooses to have additional screening done in a private screening area, a traveling companion is permitted to accompany the passenger during the private screening.

I apologized for the behavior of the TSOs.

I forwarded the information to SFO and IAH.
Hi,

013 8:10:0 I am a frequent traveller to Atlanta Hartsfield Airport and was wondering why all passengers are not required to go through full body scanners? It seems like every other lane goes through a body scanner and the others go through some sort of metal detector. If you are going to operate like this wouldn't it be a better idea to have the scanners random? So that passengers wouldn't be able to choose a lane with/without a full body scanner? Just wondering.....

(b)(6)

Let me start by saying that the job you do at the TSA to help protect our nation's travelers and citizens at large is both necessary and vital.

However, the way in which you do it still baffles me and I suspect millions of others. You seem to be taking away the wrong lessons from what happened on 9/11 and other activities since, including the "shoe bomber" and the "underwear bomber."

Here are some curious policies that contradict commonsense. As I list these, I hope you take them in the spirit intended – to improve security – and not as the mind of someone who would ever do one of these illegal or potentially illegal actions (i.e. please don't add me to your threat matrix because I'm going to point out serious gaps in policy and procedure):

Over-reaching policies

· Doing pat-downs on children under 6, UNLESS there is a specific threat indicated by the behavior of the parents or child. I can't see any reason why this type of pat-down should ever be part of a "random" search regimen. You should retain the right to check if necessary, but doing so at random increments puts an unnecessary (and scary) burden on the country's youngest passengers.

· Limiting liquids to a certain ounce maximum. I realized the logic in this (initially), that it would take a certain amount of liquid or plastic-based explosive to cause enough damage to bring a plane down. Now, here's the fallacy of that logic. Unless, I'm mistaken, you generally don't have an automated way to detect chemicals that might be taped or otherwise hidden on the body. So let's assume your 3.4 ounce limit catches 100% of the items which are put through the x-ray machine (even though that's unrealistic to expect). Unless you also find a way to detect an explosive chemical/powder/device hidden on a person's body, the only thing you've accomplished is to unnecessarily burden the traveling public with a measure that can't possibly protect them. I realize you have, over the course of time since 9/11, tested a variety of measures that might help with what I'm talking about – the "puffer" machine (I've experienced it, and I suspect it only works on powdered explosives), the full-view x-ray machine a person must walk through, etc. I'm not a professional security expert, but as the saying goes, "your security is only as effective as your weakest link." This policy is weak beyond words. So you've prohibited me from bringing a sealed bottle of Pepsi through security...and that helps prevent a disaster how? If you're going to restrict anything liquid-wise, you should eliminate allowing beverages in aluminum cans anywhere on planes – even if they are handed out during drink service. Why? Because a person of normal strength could tear the can in half and create a very jagged home-made weapon equally as dangerous as a knife.

· Patting down senior citizens or others who are traveling in a wheel chair. On the surface, I'd agree that age or physical disability make little to no difference in a person's ability to present a threat to the airplane. But here's where the logic falls out for me... I've seen many a wheelchair-bound person asked to stand up (or be assisted) to personally walk through the metal detector. Fine. But what happens to the wheelchair itself? Since it always has enough metal in it to set off alarms in the magnetometer, it is usually wheeled around the magnetometer by a TSA staff member. While this seeming courtesy makes sense, I've NEVER seen the TSA personnel thoroughly check the wheelchair for guns, knives or explosives. If this were a one-time occurrence, I might chalk it up to poor training or chance for that one situation. But that's definitely not the case. Again, I've NEVER seen a TSA person pay any attention to the wheelchair, probably because they realize it's metal and would send off a supposedly false alarm every time. If you're going to make seniors and others with mobility issues stand up and be guided through the metal detector, you REALLY need to pay more attention to the wheel chair. Again, I'm no threat to the traveling population. I love my country and my fellow citizens. But if I can notice this major gap in security protocols, I would expect someone bent on disaster would see it, too. It would be the ultimate low-tech way to smuggle in guns, knives and explosive devices I can imagine. A roll of duct tape before the flight ($3.00) and anyone could strap anything to the underside of a wheelchair's seat. This issue HAS to be addressed, if we're to expect more than lip-service to true, not just perceived safety.

Under-reaching policies

· Why on earth are you going to begin allowing pocket knives on domestic and international flights beginning on 4/25/13? Are there really that many "pocket knife enthusiasts" we're inconveniencing by having them leave those at home or in the car? Granted, you are limiting the blade lengths to a level that some security expert has probably said isn't a significant threat. But I'd be 100% willing to bet that the old-style security personnel at Logan Airport didn't think box cutters could be used to The caller was very upset because of two incidents. The first being that his checked suitcase was inspected and left in total disarray. He advised that he had packed his used underwear neatly and had his vitamins in a container where they were separated from each other. He advised that someone had moved two of the partitions, meaning that they had touched his vitamins. Therefore, he cannot take them now. The second incident was a rude screener. He advised that a male agent was very rude, screaming that no one better come through his metal detector and set the alarm off. There was an NOI in his suitcase.

I will also escalate this record to the CSM at LAS to make them aware of both incidents.

The "incident" occurred at Tunica (Mississippi) Regional Airport on Tuesday, February 26, 2013. I was scheduled to board Republic flight 5530, a charter flight booked via Harrah's Tunica NCM (National Casino Marketing) Junket Flight Reservations Department (i.e., a gambling junket). The flight was scheduled to depart at 2 p.m. The "incident" occurred at approximately 1 p.m.

For starters, you should acquaint yourself with the dynamics of Tunica Regional Airport. It's an extremely small airport which, seemingly, exists primarily to accommodate the gambling junkets (approximately 2-3 arrivals and departures daily) chartered by the casinos. And who are the passengers? Primarily senior citizens, some of whom can hardly walk. I, myself, am a 64-year-old widow.

I placed my carry-on luggage on the conveyor belt, as instructed, and proceeded through the metal detector. No alarm bells went off. So far, so good. Then, I was informed by a female TSA person that I was selected for a "random" pat down. Okay. I was directed to an area at the end of the aforementioned conveyor belt where my fellow passengers were collecting their scanned carry-on luggage and shoes, which we had been ordered to remove. At this point, within five feet of the conveyor belt and fellow passengers, I was met by two females ((b)(6) and (b)(6)). One was obviously a trainee, as she was instructed verbally by the other. The "trainee" spoke so rapidly, I couldn't understand her (I guess she was nervous). When I finally understood what she was saying, it became clear to me that I was being informed I would be touched in private areas (breast, etc.). Since I found this to be invasive, in addition to being extremely embarrassing as I was in clear view of fellow passengers who could only assume I was a criminal of some sort, I asked for the procedure to be conducted in a private area. I (continuation of 3) was led to a room (apparently, a storage area) and expressed how embarrassing this experience was and stated that I would be contacting the TSA. At this point, (b)(6) or (b)(6) called some Herring woman into the closet. I guess she was wanting to show (b)(6) and (b)(6) who was boss and treated me in a brutal, demeaning and degrading fashion. She touched my private parts, asked me to spread my legs (this was going to be done in a public area were I not to demand privacy?), demanded I left up my top so she could touch me under my shirt (again, this would have been done in a public area had I not asked for privacy?) and, having completed patting me down, asked if I had anything in my pockets. (What's the purpose of a pat down?) Well, I had had it at this point (am I living in a third-world country?) and pulled out a snotty tissue from my pocket (I had been blowing my nose in it) and threw it on the floor. The (b)(6) person then made a show of demanding my boarding pass and driver's license and made a big drama of recording the information. I suppose this was supposed to intimidate me. I had repeatedly stated that the TSA would be hearing from me and the (b)(6) person claimed she would give me their names. Well, she never did. What information I have is from having recorded the names on their badges.

What is happening to the TSA? I can show you my passports. I have travelled to over 80 countries and never, even in countries where women are third class citizens, have I been treated in this way. If a passenger's luggage passes inspection and the individual makes it through metal detectors without bells going off, why should she be signalled for degrading treatment by a disgruntled civil servant? I've gone through metal detectors, body scanners and have had metal detecting wands waved around my body but never, never have I been subjected to such degrading treatment.

What was I suspected of carrying on my person? Again, visit the Tunica area. Aside from casinos, it's a farming area. Was I suspected of illegally carrying soybeans on my person?

Caller wants to file a complaint against a TSO. At the beginning of the screening, his daughter took off her shoes. No alarm went off when she walked through the metal detector. She was told she had to do another random screening. She asked if she wanted a private screening, she said no. During the patdown her daughter said the TSO touched her in the groin area. His daughter asked the TSO what she was doing. The TSO stated: I don't have to let you on the plane. You can find another way home. The TSOs dumped out her wallet. They took out every dollar and every credit card. His daughter was in tears. She called her dad who told her to go back to the checkpoint, talk to a supervisor and get the name of the supe and the TSO which she did. When she talked to the supervisor, the supervisor basically said Whatever. I will talk to her (the TSO). He does not have the names with him now but will have them later.

Caller said this was assault, punishable by law. Someone will be held accountable. He is going to talk to his attorney. He wants this to be dealt with quickly.

Location: He does not know

I told him I could either tell him how to get in touch with the CSM or I could send the information up. He preferred that I send it to the CSM. I apologized to the caller, told him I would send this to the CSM.

Caller had a bad experience at the Orlando International Airport, he states that the TSO officer (b)(6) told him that he had to remove his belt, and he didn't want to remove it so after arguing with him over the belt, the TSO officer told him that if he did not then he would not go through screening, so he removed his belt and then he talked to the supervisor at the airport and the supervisor told him that he does not have to take the belt off, caller states that he requested that the TSO that told him to take it off be called upon him and the supervisor so that the supervisor tell him that he was wrong and that the caller not have to take off his belt. Caller wants to know why he has to take it off and where can he find information on the website stating that he has to take this off?

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint.

Informed caller that I do not have the information that he is requesting, informed caller that I can send this to the CSM and maybe they can provide him with the information, caller refused for me to do that.

Caller observed airline and airport employees going thru WTMD only and wanted to know if he could.

Explained that most of these individuals have been thru a STA and if he wanted to participate in Precheck he could visit globalentry.gov and he would be able to leave his shoes on, lighter outer jacket and belt and leave laptop in bag and go thru expedited screening.

Comment : When I went through the screening at O'Hare airport I kindly requested to opt-out of the body scanners. The TSA agent then began lying saying that these were not the ones that give off radiation and made it sound like they were metal detectors. I asked are these the metal detectors and he then admitted they weren't and was very rude.

The additional policies of emptying ones pockets of all items before the body scanner makes little sense if the body scanner is actually effective.

2013 7:58:4 During the pat-down I was groped in a manner that was totally unnecessary. To make matters worse another TSA person told me that I was not allowed to take my unopened jar of peanut butter on the plane as it is deemed a liquid. Since I've never heard of anyone drinking peanut butter this policy makes no sense at all. I even volunteered to eat some to prove it was a food but no it was confiscated (legally stolen) by TSA.

To make matters worse after the groping TSA lost my black belt that was with all of my stuff.

The final indignity is after all of this insanity at the screening area TSA had 6 agents, that I as a tax payer pay for, at the gate doing a secondary check. These agents spoke in a highly crude, loud and uneducated manner.

All of these headaches and TSA has never caught one terrorist. Talk about a waste of tax payer money. TSA is the reason I have reduced my business travel by more than 90% as I find their policies and behavior to be intolerable and unAmerican. Would you like a response? : False

Disability Description: Caller stated she has diabetes and she uses an insulin pump

Information Request: Caller stated she uses an insulin pump. Caller stated she is complaining about the patdown because she informed the TSO that her insulin pump couldnt be screened.

Caller stated she was seeing her mother to the boarding gate.

Response Details: Advised caller the following information:

2013 8:35:2

Advised caller if her insulin pump couldnt go through the AIT or the WTMD then she would be subject to a patdown, because everything that goes through the checkpoint has to be screened.

Advised caller the other diabetic supplies and medication would have to be screened also.

Tried to offer to send the information about the patdown to the caller but she hung up while asking to send the information.

Caller stated that she was in a wheelchair wearing a cast and traveling out of ABE airport last week on March 5th. She claimed that she was required to submit to a patdown after alarming the WTMD and wanted something done about the female agent that conducted the screening.

2013 2:30:1 I ask her if there was a problem and it was clear that she was irate solely because she had to have a patdown and the officers would not let her pass the checkpoint otherwise. She explained that they offered a private screening and would not elaborate in any way that there was something done that was out of the ordinary.

She kept claiming that she was involved in the law and the agent almost pushed her to the brink of a lawsuit; but still would not explain anything that happened that would constitute a valid complaint.

I told her that she could contact the CSM at the airport if she would like to discuss the issues she had or we could email them the information. She said that she would contact them herself.

Information Request: The caller indicated that she travels through SEA and SJC regularly.

She indicated that the insulin pump cannot be subjected to the AIT or xray screening as such may damage the pump. it can be subjected to the WTMD. She requests a pat down and indicated that her hands are swabbed.

She asked if there is an easier way to get through the screening process.

She mentioned that during a pat down at SEA a TSO literally dropped her pants.

She indicated that the screening process in regard to the insulin pump is dysfunctional and TSO are poorly trained.

She asked what is the concern in regard to the insulin pump as opposed to the knives that will soon be allowed.

She feels that the screening process for the insulin pump and passengers with disabilities needs to be addressed and changed.

2013 3:07:5 She asked why Precheck was only being allowed to passengers who are frequent flyers. She is a frequent flyer with Alaskan Airlines, but doesnt meet the requirements.

She asked if there were other alternatives to participate in Precheck.

Passengers should be provided with an option to participate in Precheck directly with TSA.

Response Details: If a passenger uses an insulin pump, he or she can be screened without disconnecting from the pump. However, it is important for the passenger to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening about the pump before the screening process begins.

She cannot request to be screened by the WTMD in lieu of AIT or a pat down.

TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material.

I advised that she does have the option of disconnecting from the insulin pump if she can safely do so. She can request that the insulin pump be screened physically and visually by the TSO.

I advised that additional screening, including the hand swabbing is part of the screening process. I cannot guarantee that this would not occur, or that she would not receive other additional screening.

I am writing to you because for the first time in several years of traveling I had an unpleasant experience going through the TSA security screening.

Last Saturday March 9th 2013 I was traveling with my family (my wife, a 3 yr old and a 5 month old baby) from Caracas Venezuela to our final destination in Cincinnati going through Atlanta as our port of entry in the US.

My wife is still breastfeeding and as we have done several times in the past with our 3yr old and even very recently with our baby she was carrying her breast milk with her so she could feed the baby during the trip.

2013 6:11: As we get to Atlanta and after passing through immigration we start the security process in ECP-ATL and the TSA agent requests that we pass the breast milk through the X-ray. My wife asks if it's possible to do a separate screening for the milk as we have done always when traveling with the baby. This request was denied and the agent mentioned that if we didn't pass the milk through the X-ray we will then have to do an intense security screening.

This was a surprise for us as we've never had to do this in the past so we were asking for more explanations as to why this would be requested as it was never an issue before. And this is when LTSO (b)(6) started to direct the process and all went sour.

He was very difficult from the beginning not listening to us and just directing us in a very rude manner. According to him the process is that all of our things will need to be checked and that my wife and I will need to go through hand screening. I find all this very unnecessary as all of our things (except the breast milk) had gone through the Xrays and we had gone through the metal detector. Even this was done in a very rude manner instead of starting the incremental check with our shoes they let us stand there without them for at least 15 minutes and throughout the process we were treated very rudely by (b)(6). At the end the breast milk was screened just like it has been screened in other airports (including ATL).

I believe that they realized that they had acted in the wrong manner since STSO (b)(6) came into the situation and (b)(6) left and we never saw him again. (b)(6) was very cordial and treated us with respect. The caller is traveling soon and he has a hip replacement. The caller said he is traveling from PHL to FL. The caller said he always causes alarms when he goes thru screening and wanted to know how to avoid this and being a public spectacle. He stated his dr gave him a card and told him if he called TSA that we would have someone waiting at the checkpoint to scan him immediately so he would not have to wait for an agent.

Provided the following info from the template:

I advised the caller he could request a private screening if he did not want the patdown to be performed in public. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening: The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

2013 10:54: I apologized to the caller and advised I did not have ability to guarantee that he would not have to wait for a TSO to perform the patdown.

The caller stated obviously we were having a communication problem and the call escalated.

Escalated to (b)(6)

mnelson: Caller wanted the number for the CSM because he wanted to set up arrangements so he would not have to wait for a patdown. Provided caller with directions on how to obtain the CSM number from the IVR.

Caller stated that she is 77 years old and recently took a family ski trip caller stated that she had a knee replacement surgery a years ago and has metal in her knee and after going through security at ORD she was not to happy about the patdown that she received. Caller also stated that she heard that they will be eliminating the Screening Machines at airports and wants to know if there is anything that will proclude her from going through the Screening when she flies. Caller stated that she does have a card from the hospital stating that she has a knee replacement. Advised the caller that all passengers are required to go through Screening and advised the caller that if she would feel better she could bring a Drs slip and give to the Security officers at the checkpoint.

Gave the caller the following info:

Every person, regardless of age, must undergo screening to proceed beyond the security checkpoint. Even babies must be individually screened. However, a passenger should not be asked to do anything that would separate the passenger from his her child. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are taught to explain what they are doing during the screening process. They should also ask permission when doing something that might cause concern. Please keep in mind that a TSO is required to check the source of all alarms and to follow all screening requirements. While a passenger or guardian may decline to permit a search, a passenger will not be permitted to board an aircraft unless the screening is properly completed. We encourage you to visit our website at www.tsa.gov for additional information about TSA. We continue to add new information and encourage you to check the website frequently for updated information. We hope that this information is helpful.

Gave the caller the following info:

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

To Whom it may concern:

I'am a USAirways Flight Attendant and was going through the "B" screening check point at the Philadelphia airport on March 17, 2012 at approx 14:25.

As I approached the belt the previous passengers neglected to push their animal bag and briefcase through the xray machine. I did not notice this until I went to place my bags on the belt. I turned to STSO (b)(6) and asked if she would push the bags through as I have been told by previous TSA officers not to touch bags that are not mine. I was very rudely informed by (b)(6) saying "I'm not touching no bags" I explained that I'm not allowed to touch the bags either as they are not mine. She again said very dramatically " I said, I'm not touching no bags"! The other TSA officer, TSO (b)(6) yelled across to me to "go around the items". I replied I could not as the bags on the belt were at the opening and were blocking my opportunity to do this. Both screeners became agitated yelling to me and a thrid screener came forward and pushed the bags through the xray machine. I began to place my bags on the belt when officer (b)(6) looked at me and said " your an idiot". I was flabbergasted as this outburst. This took place in front of many passengers while I was in full uniform. I immediately asked both screeners for a Supervisor. When I tried to go through the metal detector officer (b)(6) intentionally and aggressively blocked my path. I told her I have asked for a Supervisor and she stepped aside. A Supervisor met me and I informed him of what happened. He provided me with the names of the officers and a complaint form with instructions. I wish to have this investigated and to be contacted as to the resolution of this formal complaint. This was a disgrace and an extreme example of unprofessionalism by these two officers.

Caller flew on 3/12/2013 from SEA to Juneau on Alaska Airlines flight 76. She has a stainless steel hip. She said that the agent told her that he wishes she had told him about the hip before the screening began. She had to wait 20 minutes for a female agent to show up. She said that she also has a neurological disorder and she was stressed and hungry. She said the agent put her four bins of items on the counter. Her computer bounced off and her phone shattered. She said that the agent did not use care when placing her belongings on the table. She did not want to file a claim. She said that the items still work. She was subjected to an unnecessary patdown because there were no signs posted and her property was damaged. She thinks that disabled people are being discriminated against because there are no signs posted at the airport telling them the procedure for going through the checkpoint. She said that she does not want to file a written complaint. She did talk to a supervisor who was very nice. She wanted information on the screening of passengers with metal implants. She wanted her record forwarded to the CSM because she thinks there should be signs in the airport that provide information to disabled passengers about their screening options. She said that she will never go through this again and she hates to fly from SEA.

I gave the following information: If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device.

I told the caller that to make a formal complaint she would need to submit it in writing. She said that she does not want to make a complaint.

I advised the caller that I would forward her record to the CSM at SEA for review.

Disability Description: Caller flies several times a week on United Airlines out of LAX and has a feeding tube that is surgically implanted. He has sealed bottles of liquid nutrition. He is also a member of TSA Precheck. Every time he goes through screening there is no consistency with the screening of his bottles of liquid. He stated that sometimes they just look at the liquids and pass him through sometimes they do the ETD swabbing and the last time that he flew he had to go through a patdown screening and had to take his belt off.

Information Request: He is wanting to know why the screening process is so different and there is no consistency at LAX.

Response Details: I advised him that when he goes through the AIT screener or the WTMD and an alarm sounds he will have to go through additional screening which would include a patdown.

I provided him with the contact number for the CSM at LAX, Karen 310-244-(b)(6) so he will be able to contact her since he did not want me to forward his information to her.

Email not sent.

Incident Details: Caller stated that he does not feel discriminated against and he feels that its just bad customer service.

Comment : 1. I am 76 years old. When I boarded the plane to Hawaii for vacation from Portland OR., I was not required to remove my shoes or sweater and I was not body padded. I just walk thru a metal detector. On my return flight in Honolulu, it was a complete opposite procedure. Why make life so hard for a US Citizen of any age in traveling within our own country?

2. My wife said the restrooms in the terminal was overcrowded. She waited on line for about five minutes to relief herself. She gave up and had to do it after she boarded the plane.

3. We waited for about two hour sitting in the plane before we took off. The pilot said there was a minor problem regarding an electrical prong broke off while the plane was being charged. We should have been de-planed back to the terminal instead of sitting in the plane breathing in stale air for two hours.

I dipped my fore finger on one of the droplets and sniffed it and it had no smell and I deducted it was air conditioner condensation. Next, a passenger at seat (b)(6) behind us tapped my shoulder and pointed to me that she too was being showered with water. We complained to the air steward and he gave us extra paper napkins to soak up the water.

This flight from Honolulu International Airport was not a pleasant experience for me and my family.

Response Details: Caller was wanting to know what the new screening procedures are for passengers over 75.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is undertaking efforts to enhance security and focus its resources by moving away from a one-size-fits-all approach and applying new intelligence driven, risk-based screening procedures while enhancing technology and improving the passenger experience at security checkpoints. As part of this effort, TSA has implemented a program to revise screening procedures for passengers who appear to be age 75 and older.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process

Apologized to caller and advised her in order for her complaint to be formal that she would need to submit it in writing.

Emailed caller the DRFI. Also advised caller that I would forward her information up for review. If they need to get in contact with her for any reason they will so by email.

Incident Details: Caller said that she placed all of her items in the bins and took her jacket off. Caller said she approached the WTMD and she advised the agent that she could not go through the AIT because she had a brain tumor. She stated that her physician told her to not be exposed to any type of radiation.

2013 3:48:00 Caller said that the agent then told her that she had to undergo a patdown. Caller said that she told them that she could not undergo a patdown because she has psoriasis and she incounters pain when touched. She said that the agent ignored her request and continued to pat her down.

Due to her medical conditions she stated that she has difficulty standing. She said that she told the agent this and requested a chair. She said that her request for a chair was denied and the patdown continued. She stated that she does not wear a bra and the agent lifted her shirt up in front of everyone. She said that she lifted her breast up and searched them as well. She said that her skirt was pulled down and she was searched around the waist.

Caller said that she has been patted down before, but she has never had her shirt lifted up, her skirt pulled down and her breast picked up. Caller said not only was it painful but it was embarrassing as well. She stated at this point she was standing at the screening checkpoint in tears.

Caller said that she is not sure if she was discriminated due to her disability, however she does not understand what happened or why it happened. She said that she went through screening around 12:48 and it took so long that she feared she was going to miss her flight.

Caller said that she flies about 6 time a year and she has never had this happen. Caller said that she was asked if she was 75, and was told if she was that she would not have had to undergo this screening.

Caller was upset and was wanting to know what her age had to do with anything.

Dear Sir, Dear Madam,

On the 19th of January, I took a flight from Geneva to Newark, followed by another flight from Newark to San Salvador. During the TSA passenger screening, before taking the flight to San Salvador, I took off my watch for passing the metal detector. I then left it in the plastic box. I'm 100% certain of the place where I left it, as I became aware of it when entering the plane. The steward told me I didn't have time to go back and get it.

On many occasions I tried to call your Service Line, and I left two messages on the answering machine. I saw you tried to call me back with the number (b)(6) but could never answer the phone.

So I'm looking for my watch, brand JUNKERS, black leather strap, made in Germany.

As you tried to call me on several occasions, I assume you have found the missing object. Could you please answer me by mail?

through the body x-ray. On both flights the TSOs made her get a patdown as well even though she knows there was no alarms sounded. She wants to know what the purpose in the x-ray if the TSOs are still going to give patdowns and hand inspected bags. She stated that she was also upset because the patdowns wwere in front of everyone including men and she felt uncomfortable.

Advised Caller:

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

In addition, passengers may request a private screening if additional screening is required or at any time during the screening process. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. In addition, screeners should offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing. Passengers may choose to remain in the public area rather than go to a private area for screening, however, passengers who refuse screening in the public or private area will not be permitted to enter the secured area.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

2013 4:23:5 The caller does not have the flight information. The caller then stated that one person cleared her and other TSO stopped her. The female TSO went through her cosmetic bag after it had already went through screening. She stated that she has never been offered a private pat down. She also wanted to know if we still did not let passenger lock their luggage. She stated that she has to have wheelchair assistance and if the wheelchair is not there when she arrives it takes to long to get her baggage and her baggage is just left there. She stated that she would just feel safer is it was locked.

Advised Caller:

We understand and regret the discomfort and inconvenience passengers may experience as a result of patdown procedures. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers.

We still do not recommend for passengers to lock their luggage. However, Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are able to identify, unlock, and then relock certain locks using passkey sets available to TSA screeners. TSA-recognized locks such as Travel Sentry® and Safe Skies® are accepted and recognized by TSA for use at all airports where TSA screening is performed.

I apologize that I cannot clarify why you were selected for a pat down in both airports on all three times. I can only tell you that patdown are conducts to clear alarms and can be done at random as. In the future if relieving the patdown in the general public you can always request the private screening. This will be conducted by someone of the same gender and you can have someone accompany you as well.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process will enable us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subject of repeated complaints.

What happened:

I was scheduled on a Delta flight at PBI. Going through security at this airport, metal detectors are not used, and all passengers are required to pass through full body scanners. I opted out of the scanning, as, being a physicist, I do not like to subject my skin to radiation of that level. I have done this at other airports without incident. Usually, my bags are taken off to the side after going through the scanner, and I am then quickly patted down in a professional manner. I wish that I could say this was the case at PBI. I was not allowed to keep visual contact with my bags, which is slightly stressful. At any rate, a mild inconvenience. Yet, the problem came with the patdown. I was forced to wait for several minutes until someone leisurely and frustratingly walked over to take me through to where I would have a patdown. The man was a white male approximately 6ft tall and ~50 years old, with the name (b)(6) something. (b)(6) was on his badge, and he has a rather unique description. Per normal operating instructions, (b)(6) recited all the legalese you make your employees state. He offered a private screening room, which I declined. Then began the patdown. Which took approximately a full ten minutes – far longer than at any other airport. (b)(6) was extremely rough on the nice dress shirt that I was wearing, clawing at me with the patdown gloves. I know that part of patdown procedure is to get trace amounts of detectable particles onto the gloves for analysis. This is fine. Yet the clawing was so rough -- it was something I have not experienced before. I felt as though my shirt were going to be torn off. He then ripped a button off my shirt in this process. THEN, he says "ooooopsss" in a lethargic, humorous manner. Excuse my tone here, but you do not fucking treat people like dogs, which is what (b)(6) under your organization, has done. After the scan (b)(6) LAUGHED ALONG WITH a female, African-American TSA agent, who patted on his back and said "GOOD JOB". I have never experienced something like this in my life. After an extended patdown which is something ENTIRELY DIFFERENT, longer, and far rougher than anything I have ever experienced (and I am a rather frequent flier), you can see how irritated I am that I am writing this. Nowhere in the TSA guidelines does it say to claw and pull at a passenger's clothing. The irritating part, however, is the ATTITUDE. Laughing both at me, as well as along with another TSA agent regarding my humiliating treatment is entirely unacceptable. I cannot believe you let agents such as (b)(6) and his compatriots at Palm Beach International airport work in such a manner. As a citizen of the United States of America, I am treated far worse by TSA agents than I have been in nations such as China with so-called "oppressive" regimes. I honestly cannot remember the last time I was so disrespected.

I know that I am submitting this with the "I do NOT want CRL/OTE to disclose my name to other offices" box checked, out of fear of retaliation from your agency the next time I am flying. I know that it is not your fault, you who is reading this. Also, it is probably not the fault of the person even who hired (b)(6) Yet, I strongly suggest that you review (b)(6) record, as he gives the TSA, and America, a bad reputation (I have not had issues at other airports). Why else would I take the time out of my busy work schedule to write this?

Thank you for your time -- I strongly hope that your agency gets these issues under control.

When did this happen:

Caller stated that her grandmother went through the checkpoint and before letting her leaving the ticket counter with the wheel chair assistant, she told them multiple times that she could not go through the WTMD due to having a pacemaker. When her grandmother arrived in Mexico, she told them that they put her through that screening device. She is wanting to file a complaint for this because it could have damaged her along with shutting of the device.

FLIGHT INFORMATION:

Departing Airport::JFK
Layover::
Arriving Airport:: Juarez
Airline:: Mexico
gate Number:: Gate 4
Date:: 6:45pm

CCR informed her that if this is not declared to the officers, the have no way of knowing that she has the internal device. This information will be sent to the CSM but also she can call the airline as well since they did not listen to her.

She stated that she has urostomy and a hip replacement on the same side. She stated that she went through the body scanner and she got a patdown. She stated that the agent told her that she could not clear her for screening and she was taken to the supervisor. She stated that she was walked through the airport to a supervisor for a additional screening. She stated that she was asked if she could remove her ostomy for screening. She stated that she has never been asked to remove the device before except in Europe. She stated that they took her to a private screening area. She stated that they told what they were going to do and she asked if they could see the ostomy. She stated that they were trying to be nice. She stated that she acted as if she did not know what to do for screening of the ostomy. She stated that she was not asked to pat down the ostomy.

Information Request: She asked how she can avoid this in the future. She asked if Precheck will help avoid this situation. She asked if she will always have to do this and she asked if telling them will help the process.

She did not have all of her previous flight details available, however she provided what she had.

Response Details: If a passenger uses an ostomy, he or she can be screened without having to empty or expose the ostomy. However, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening about the ostomy before the screening process begins.

2013 6:19:3 Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) or the walk through on their own. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT.

Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger's ostomy is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the ostomy, followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands. Even for expedited screening the ostomy may be subjected to additional screening.

Email sent.

I explained that I can forward this information to the CSM at MDW for review. I apologized to the caller for the situation. I explained that I will need her flight details and her email address to forward this information to the CSM.

Incident Details: She stated that this is really an act of poor customer service and she does not wish to file a disability related complaint.

She stated that she has urostomy and a hip replacement on the same side. She stated that she went through the body scanner and an anomaly occurred so, she got a patdown. The callers flight details are as follow:

Caller said that his wife just had a issue in Phoenix where she asked not to go through the AIT machine and they told her she would have to receive a patdown instead. But when they was in Houston they just let her go through the WTMD instead. He asked if what Phoenix said is the correct protocol because even the supervisor at Phoenix said that it was.

Response- I told him that is the correct protocol for when you opt out of the AIT machine.

There was a 31 minute wait in the premium line (timed it on my stopwatch, from line entry to time through metal detector) at Seatac Checkpoint 1 this morning (entered at 6:02 AM, 3/18/2013). I could see the line was long when I got there, and asked a TSA agent whether I would be better off at another checkpoint, but she told me that for N gates, this would be the fastest.

When I got to the front, I asked a TSA agent why the line was so long. He said it was because it was a Monday morning. I fly out of seatac every Monday morning, and the line is not usually nearly that long (typically closer to 10-20 minutes). I then asked him why the other two x-ray machines (out of the three) were not in operation and he told me they were broken.

2013 12:01: If the problem was the broken x-ray machines, I'm sure a reasonable supervisor could have found some solutions, such as directing some premium customers to other checkpoints, and, after the ID check, directing some passengers to the regular lines. I think the supervisor this morning was incompetent.

I fly every week, and I depend on reasonable checkpoint times – I already have to wake up at 4:30 in the morning to catch my flight; please don't make my life any more unpleasant than it already is.

Caller stated that they just flew in from TPA to Kansas City. She had a container of sand from the beach in her husbands bag, and she doesn't understand why they couldn't put the lid back on the container. There was a sticker on the outside that said it was inspected and a NOI in the bag. There are things in the bag that couldn't be ruined, one of which was the batteries for their metal detectors that will now have to be cleaned. She wants reimbursed for what it will cost to have those cleaned.

Caller states she sent her mother to the airport this morning for a flight and got a call from her mother because of her screening experience.

Caller was asking the screening procedures if not making through the screening process?

Caller thinks her mother went through the AIT and stated she also had to have her hands swabbed. I have just been returned the baggage I have been expecting for a week.

It is damaged because of unprecautionary zipping or unzipping from your agents (and though I never put lock just for that purpose).

The result is that the baggage is not fixable, and I have to buy another one.

Can you just tell them never to force without a reason (that's what as always told my father in law) ?

This complaint about my bad experience is also the occasion to ask why TSA agents seem to take the habit of standing in the metal detector and making passengers think corporal screening is mandatory.

I thought Congress has ruled about corporal screening (chance made me visiting the Congress for the first time just that day ; it was interesting).

Caller spoke with a agent who was providing her a claim form. Caller said going through checkpoint and she understands the removal of items in the bin and the TSOs aren't there to act like drill sergeants. They were yelling at her 16 year old daughter, they gave her daughter and brother a hard time and her mother and father who was in a wheelchair. The TSO agents wanted her to push her dad through the WTMD and wouldn't let her go through the WTMD with him. The TSO had no idea she was with anyone else. In her carryon she had a jewelry box and laptop which was in a hardsided carryon. They asked someone else to remove the laptop from her bag, her bag was left open and the laptop removed. The 2 individuals that removed her laptop went through the WTMD (brother and sister-in-law) and her carryon came through and she replaced her laptop and didn't check her jewelry box. The jewelry box is missing from her carryon bag. TSO was yelling at them to 10:13 10:37: When going through security the next area has separate rooms and in the last room they could hear (10 people) a group that worked there were mocking some people that had gone through previously. The TSO told her sister-in-law to go through her suitcase and she was told she wasn't allowed to go through her bag. If she had gone through her bag, her jewelry box would have been in there. Caller stated she had 13 phone numbers and had left 2 messages for Ophelia Ruiz, CSM at EWR. Flying from EWR to Toronto, CA. via Air Canada.

Response:

Confirmed email to caller.

Caller is wanting to make a complaint for a screening incident that happened to her on her flight from DFW to Vegas. The officers pulled her aside and did a patdown to her hair. Since she is an African American woman, she feels that she was discriminated against because of her race since they singled her about because of her hair texture and style.

CCR informed her:

If a passenger's hairpiece sets off the metal detector alarm, the hairpiece must be inspected visually and the passenger's head area must be searched with a limited patdown. If the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) determines that the hairpiece needs to be removed, the TSO must offer the person the opportunity to remove the hairpiece in a private screening area.

CCR transferred her through to the MB branch at x(b)(6) - Rusty

2013 5:03:1 Caller flew from DFW to LAS. Caller went through the body scan, after going through she was told that they needed to patdown her hair. Caller states that this has never happened to her before. She states that this did not happen to anyone else. She believes that this occurred due to her being an African American, with naturally curly hair. She states that this occurred on 3/14/13.

Caller states that when she flew from LAS she went through the AIT there as well. She states that after going through the AIT, the female TSO that was conducting the screening patted down her behind and cupped it. She did not describe to the caller what she was doing, that she was doing it, nor gave a reason for this.

Hello,

The past two times I've traveled by air with my cat I have had my hands swabbed, presumably for explosives detection.

The first time I had passed through the metal detector with the cat and returned her to her carrier when I was pulled aside and had my hands swabbed. No problem.

2013 8:58:4 The second time I walked through the detector and was asked to step aside while still holding the cat. I was waiting for a short while so I asked if I could put the cat in her carrier as she was getting nervous. I was told to stay where I was. When the person arrived to swab my hands he asked me to hold the cat with one hand while he swabbed the other. Then I was asked to switch the cat to the other hand so he could swab the other. Again I asked if I could put the cat in the carrier during this process but again was told I couldn't. I know I am supposed to be able to keep the pet under control at all times, but under the circumstances with noise and people bustling around, it is unreasonable to be expected to do that with only one available hand. When the swabbing was finished I was able to return the cat to her carrier.

I would like to know how I can avoid this second situation in the future. I have no objection to having my hands swabbed, but not while holding the cat. Should I ask for special assistance? I would appreciate your advice on this matter.

Thank you.

I am aware that it is minimal exposure that you get from the scatter and I am probably getting a comparable amount on the airplane...but where exposure can be limited and there are other options for screening? I am a young fertile woman and you send me through to get exposed and then send a 75 year old woman through a metal detector? Is there a method or is it pure randomness? Can we take in to consideration the age of and even the possibility of pregnancy of the people you send through the scatter xray?

Comment : Dear TSA Team,

I wanted to let you know that I have experienced many close calls with my laptop at the airport due to TSA oversights. After you load in your personal effects on the conveyer, sometimes TSA takes liberties re-ordering the buckets without your knowledge after you proceed through the metal detector.

This has caused two separate incidents.

2013 2:06: The first was my laptop was mixed up with another customers, which could've been a disaster.

In another instance, they actually took my laptop off the conveyer and forgot to put it back on until a few minutes after I already passed through the metal detector. As I collected my things my laptop was then perceived as missing, resulting in my thinking somebody ran off with the laptop as I was held up in the metal detector line (which also could very well happen anyway). No one is watching the items coming off the line so if someone wanted to they could very well decide to swipe someone elses things, especially a laptop.

I wanted to bring this situation to light. I'm not sure how to mitigate against this in the future.

Thanks.

Caller just arrived from a flight and noticed that his bag has been inspected. There is a NOI in the bag and a line on it that he believes may be a signature. He says it looks like a squiggly line. Caller says that he had a lock on his bag, but it was just for show. He says that it was only through one of the zipper tabs. He says that the handle that was connected to the zipper and the lock are gone. He says that if the officer had looked, they would have seen that it was not actually locked. Caller is very upset about this. He says that he flies all of the time for work and his bag has never been searched before. He says that he doesn't have anything in his bag this time that he doesn't have any other time. He says that it is just his clothing and deodorant in the bag. He wants to know why it was inspected and what can cause the scanner to alarm. He wants to know why it isn't against the law for us to remove his lock, if it isn't against the law for him to lock his bag. He wants to understand the laws governing this.

Advised caller:

2013 5:43: I explained to the caller that if an alarm sounds on the scanner, we have to conduct a lawful inspection. If a hand inspection is required and the bag is locked, we have to cut the lock from the bag. I explained that it is required by law that all passengers and their luggage have to be screened before going onboard a commercial aircraft. If the bag alarms, a hand inspection has to be done to clear the alarm. This is part of the screening process. He is permitted to lock his bag, with the knowing that if a hand inspection is required, the lock will be removed. I explained that this is similar to the screening of passengers. If a passenger uses the WTMD or AIT and an alarm sounds, they have a patdown. All alarms have to be cleared. I explained to the caller that we are not liable for locks and luggage if we have to open them to conduct a lawful inspection. I advised the caller that we suggest that passengers leave their bags unlocked. There are locks that we have master keys to, which are Travel Sentry and Safe Skies. We can unlock and lock these back for him. We also do random inspection to keep everything with inspections random, so no one learns the procedures of TSA.

I would send claim forms via e-mail and they will be received within 24 hours. Once our claims office receives these, you will receive a letter of acknowledgement and also a claim number. You can use this claim number to check the status of your claim.

Comment : I was very dissatisfied with the TSA agents that were doing the screening. I have a service dog that weighs 30 pounds. She is clearly marked as a service animal with patches and a backpack. I also told them that she is a service animal. I was told to take her backpack, harness, collar, and leash off to take her through the metal detector. I was also instructed to carry her through the metal detector. I am not supposed to lift more than 10 pounds due to a back injury. This was very painful and is still causing me pain. After getting through I was not able to get her harness or leash back right away and I had to hold her. After she was "cleared" and I was trying to get her harness and leash back on I was told that I needed to move more quickly. There was no place for me to sit and put her things on her or to put my shoes on. The agent was very rude and I felt discriminated against because of my age and injury. I am not looking to get anything out of this except agents that are more understanding and empathetic to a person with disabilities. Also maybe a bench at the end of the check point. I understand the job is challenging, but I do not deserve to be treated the way that I was treated. I travel with my service animal all the time and we have never been treated so poorly.

Disability Description: Caller has lost his left hand and has a hook and cable prosthetic and he normally takes his arm off and puts it through the metal detector with his other carry on items. He went through the screening checkpoint at Boise Airport yesterday and he and he was told that he should not do this and should not have to take his arm off for screening.

He stated that he went through the screening process in Spokane and he left his arm on and he received a patdown and that was very invasive and he does not want to have to go through this again so he just started taking his arm off for screening. Concourse C at Spokane Airport Alaska Airlines to Boise at 7:00 am Wednesday Feb 20 flight 695.

Incident Details: Caller stated that he does not feel discriminated against and that he just believes that the TSO that conducted the patdown at Spokane was very poorly trained and he hopes that they will receive additional training on how to conduct a patdown screening.

I regret that this was his screening experience and advised him that I will forward his complaint to the CSM at Spokane so they will be aware of the issue.

Disability Description: Caller uses an insulin pump that he is able to temporarily disconnect from but it is affected by the AIT scanners. An AIT will shut the pump off.

Response Details: Explained to caller that our information states that passengers can be screened without having to disconnect from the pump and they may be screened via WTMD, AIT, or a patdown. However we do not have any information stating that passengers who can disconnect from their medical device may be screened separately from the pump and what the process would entail. Advised him that I would forward his inquiry to the appropriate office for review and request a response. He stated he may be contacted by phone or email in the event anyone needs his most recent flight information from March 10th.

2013 1:55:3 Caller is also curious why he has never been offered the option to disconnect from the pump. TSOs always assume he can not do this.

Incident Details: The caller stated that he typically travels from ALB- Albany to MCO-Orlando roundtrip for business. He is calling because he wears an insulin pump that he can disconnect from temporarily. His issue is that he offers to disconnect the pump and pass through the AIT, because if he wears the device through the AIT, it will shut down the pump and he must have it reset. He states that the TSOs at ALB and sometimes other airports will not let him disconnect the device and have it screened while he goes through the AIT; instead they just require he have a full body patdown and ETD screening which he states always substantially delays him. He is requesting information on the procedures and wanted to know why this is not a possibility for him.

Good Morning-

I am writing to file a complaint against the Denver International Airport TSA. On Friday March 15, 2013 at approximately 11:10pm, I was traveling from Denver to Orlando with a service animal, which was a small dog. This is not the first time I have traveled with a service animal, so I was accustomed to the procedure of going through the metal detector and then having my hands swabbed. On this occasion however, I apparently failed the hand swab. My belongings were moved to another table and the male TSA agent explained that my hand swab had failed, explaining that it was likely the dog had walked through something which allowed transfer to my hands and subsequent fail of the test. He was polite as he did his work and I had no complaint with him, as he was professional and explained what was going on.

It was the female supervising agent and her female counterpart who angered me and in my opinion were HIGHLY unprofessional. Apparently, my bag swab also failed because with NO explanation my belongings and I were silently escorted into a small room, the door was closed, I was given orders and then I received an entire body pat down, including inside my waist band. I felt violated and like I was in a foreign country not America because surely in the United States of America I could expect that before being escorted away into a private room by two female TSA officers, that the situation would be explained to me that both my hands and bags had failed the swab test and that I would be taken to a private room and what would happen once in that room. These two female officers said nothing to me as they escorted me to this room and only barked orders at me like I was a dog. I was not treated with respect or dignity, nor was I given the common courtesy of an explanation of what was going to happen.

I have no issue with TSA doing their job but I do take issue when things are not explained to passengers, so they may understand what is going on and what to expect. Explaining to me that my two initial swabs had failed and that I would be taken into a private room, patted down and the agents gloves tested again does NOT pose a threat to our national security or release security sensitive information, so why your two agents chose to be rude and unprofessional is beyond me. It is experiences like this that leave a bad taste in the mouth of American citizens. I would ask that ALL your agents receive a reminder of how to communicate with the public and how situations like this should be handled.

Again the date was Friday March 15, 2013 at approximately 11:10pm and it was at the South Security check point, I believe. It was the check point nearest the security checkpoint for terminal A, which was closed due to the late hour, prompting me to go down the escalator to the checkpoint below. I went through in approximately the middle of the lanes.

I would appreciate a follow up to this email.

Thank you.

(b)(6)

On March 14 at 5am we were in the middle lane of the security screening area. There was a Hispanic woman working the metal detector we were in line for. She was yelling at passengers myself and family included. She was mocking us and talking about us to other TSA agents on the top of her lungs. She was told to "cool it" by another screener but didn't and laughed and started again. I'm sure it's recorded and should be looked at. It was gate C for a united flight to LA. My daughter is 4 and was very upset at this. How horrible that your agency has turned into this. I hope this makes it to someone that can do something about this. If it was my team that was doing this they would be held accountable and possibly lose their job. TSA agents are supposed to keep airways safe not abuse their "power".

Friday, I was travelling on business and had need to board an aircraft in Rochester, New York necessitating my passage through the Homeland Security checkpoint via wheelchair as I endeavored to reach my ride home from New York. One of my concerns, a concern allayed by your hype regarding non-discrimination in the use of the newer AIT "puffer" scanning device, was the anomalous presentation of my not so regular human body.

You see, when I was born, I was noticed to be anomalous to the eye and the physician worked with my parents resulting in surgery being performed on my body at that very young age. I am an individual properly described as intersexed. My parents chose to have me oriented aesthetically as a male. Unfortunately the internal chemistry of my physique was otherwise. The result is if one were to view me without clothing I would be observed as having an upper torso which is very much female while presenting with a lower abdomen which looks sort of male. The reason I had feared your scan device was the propensity of the revelatory nature of the device to the trained but perhaps less than professional eye would subject me to some form of harassment.

In the view of my business associates, I was subjected to a form of search I have never endured in my thirty plus years of professional travels logging well into the hundreds of thousands of miles within our homeland. I was "puffed" whereupon the operator of the device told me he was going to have to perform a "pat down" search of my upper body. NO ONE in my entire history has ever groped me. No one! That is until Friday.

Never have I ever witnessed an apparent woman, dressed in feminine attire and presumptively presenting with identification documents illustrating a name consistent with what the eye beholds, groped/searched/patted down as to their breasts. Today, in full view of God and everyone, I endured a man feeling my breasts, all in the name of "I am going to have to conduct a pat down search." I was not asked. I was told the way it would occur and in seconds it had happened.

2013 6:08: I was in such shock, mortification, embarrassment and utter emotional turmoil I did not jot down the name of the man who searched me. I know he was operating the single "puffer" machine at that airport location in Rochester, New York at approximately 3:55 p.m. Eastern Time on 22 March 2013. Your own operational log entries and personnel rosters of that place and time will illustrate to you the identity of the individual of whose conduct I complain, by whose hands I was molested.

Just now I have only finally finished my journey home and am reliving the emotional hurt of having my breasts groped. I am weighing what to do regarding the discriminatory and sexually harassing behavior to which I was subjected today. You, at the very least, have a need for determination whether your conduct "patting down" the breasts of anyone falls within the operational protocols of your protection processes.

Your own website details purported compassionate concern for transgendered travellers who may present with prosthetic devices which might scan anomalously. Your words provide:

"TSA recognizes the concerns members of the transgender community may have with undergoing the security screening process at our Nation's airports and is committed to conducting screening in a dignified and respectful manner. These travel tips will explain the various screening processes and technologies travelers may encounter at security checkpoints.

2013 6:08: Comment : I am a frequent flier who went through the Pre Check line. The metal detector beeped when I went through indicating a random screening. My palms were tested and I set off some other obscure alarm. I was then brought into a private screening room and had my genitals touched as well as every other part of my body. I felt severely violated. I asked if I could go into the nude body scanner instead and the TSA agent said 'no'. He was older, african american, about 6 feet in height. I was very disturbed by the violation of personal space and trust. I can't stop thinking about the incident. My job requires that I travel a lot, as do many Americans who are trying to get the economy back on its feet. Ridiculous theater such as what I experienced at SFO makes me want to travel less, thus harming the economy. I am a frequent traveler with a very high elite status on United. I was cleared for the pre-check line. Yet, I was still treated like a criminal when I did nothing wrong. Please let me know how you can apologize and rectify this terrible situation, and what steps you are taking to treat passengers with the respect they are due in the future.

Comment : Hello, I have two inquiries about recent trip I took from Nashville, TN, to Raleigh, NC.

I noticed at the security checkpoint that families with children get to go through the metal detector; the children as well as the parents. I have seen this at several airports. If this is risk-based flexibility, then why do other low-risk groups such as the elderly and women need to go through the body scanner?

As I was waiting in the line at the gate, the TSA went down the line and asked to see into all the women's purses. When approached, I asked what the reason for this was, since I was already screened once. The TSA agents (2 of them approached me) did not answer my question, stating that "it needs to be done". They also opened up my carry-on bag. This baffled me as the security checkpoint is supposed to be thorough and effective. Can you please tell me the reason (please include data if available) for the second screening I received? What could someone obtain in the secure area that would be forbidden if it is truly secure? I feel fine about getting a pat-down at the security check, but I must say that it felt quite invasive when it occurred outside of that area.

Caller stated that she has had some difficulty getting through on several occasions. She stated that on September 4th, 2012 she was going through the checkpoint at CMH. She has a permanent disability that requires her to wear a TENS unit at times. She has herniated discs in her back that prevent her from wearing a bra. When going through the AIT machine her backbrace showed as an anomaly and she was asked if they could perform a patdown. She said yes and the female officer proceeded to do the patdown explaining what she was doing as she did it. When she came to the passenger's breasts she explained that she would have to check underneath. Since the passenger is not able to wear a bra her breasts are not lifted and sag somewhat, causing the officer to graze her nipples. She has been very upset because of this. She broke into tears at the checkpoint and a supervisor was called over. She feels as though she was violated and molested by TSA. She has had another issue going through the checkpoint at CMH where she was wearing a dress and the female officer went up her bare leg. She felt this was unnecessary. She asked what she could do in the future to make her experience less stressful.

There was also an incident in January when she was flying out of Dayton where she was asked to remove her TENS unit which is very difficult for her. It almost caused her to miss her flight.

Apologized and advised caller.

Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

In addition, passengers may request a private screening if additional screening is required or at any time during the screening process. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. In addition, screeners should offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing. Passengers may choose to remain in the public area rather than go to a private area for screening, however, passengers who refuse screening in the public or private area will not be permitted to enter the secured area.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

In the future I advised that you communicate with the TSO at the time of screening to let her know what your concerns are and how she can make the experience less stressful for you. They cannot screen you properly if they do not know what bothers you and what your main concerns are.

Disability Description: Caller wanted to make a complaint about the screening she received

Response Details: Advised caller the following information:

If a passenger cannot remove his or her shoes due to possible medical complications, discomfort, pain, balancing problems, or because the shoe is part of a prosthetic, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. Passengers who cannot remove their shoes can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), the walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown.

Advised caller I would send to the appropriate office for review.

2013 3:01:1 Incident Details: Caller stated she has a complaint about the screening process. Caller stated this occurred during her screening on Saturday March 23, 2013 at Phoenix Sky Harbor to Oakland California on Southwest Airlines flight number 858. Caller stated she is 77 years old and she knows she doesn't have to remove her shoes because she has Rheumatoid Arthritis. Caller stated at 08:00am at security point D and she went through the screening and the alarm went and she was told to remove her shoes. The caller stated she couldn't remove her shoes and was standing with no support. She put her hand on something to have stability and the TSO told her to remove her hands and other passengers helped her take her shoes off. Caller stated she went AIT and found out later she was could have gone through the AIT. Caller stated her shoes through the machine and because of her shoes there are metal and that why the alarm went off. Caller stated she went up to other screeners at the airport and they wasn't any help.

If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

Do you want information about filing a written complaint regarding disability discrimination or are you calling with a different concern such as poor customer service?

Caller stated the incident was simply poor customer service not being discriminated against because of her disability or medical condition or a failure to accommodate to her disability

Caller went thru Chicago O Hare. Caller states that she was detained at the security checkpoint to await a female agent (TSO) because the WTMD went off due to her knee replacement. Caller says that her iPad is now missing from her carry-on bag. Caller states that it was only out of sight when she had to stand there 2 to 3 minutes awaiting the TSO. She says she flew with United and went thru Terminal 1 at the security 2 checkpoint where crew members go through off to the side. Caller states that she went through security from 8:35am to 8:45am and was at the gate at 8:47am. Caller says that her daughter's laptop was taken through twice. It was United flight 1249 direct to Phoenix gate B4 departing at 9:17am. She prefers to be called. She says that she was in the far right line.

Advised caller:

Caller wants to make a complaint regarding his screening experience at MCO at the checkpoint. He was required to have a patdown and the TSO agent was patting his body inside his waistband because the machines showed he may have something metallic in that area. During the patdown, his zipper accidentally came open and he felt offended. Caller stated he opened the zipper to assist the process and the TSO told him he would call the police for indecent exposure.

Caller thought the TSO was inappropriate when he mentioned he would contact the police for indecent exposure. Caller stated the TSO didn't offer him a private area for screening. At that point he requested to speak with a supervisor and the supervisor, SPSO (b)(6) addressed the issue. Caller is very disappointed with the employee who did his patdown. Caller's pants dropped a little and he thinks if the TSO needed to reach inside his pants near his genitals he should have been taken to a private area. The supervisor and another TSO agent took caller to a private area and completed the patdown and he has calmed down but wants to voice his side of the incident.

Comment : This was in Washington DC at Reagan National, which by the way, you don't have on the drop down list. It was apparent that the TSA employees were intentionally slowing down the traveler line. After travelers had placed their material onto the x-ray belt, the TSA security would then turn their backs to travelers and joke with each other, impeding the flow of travelers through the system. This is in the middle of the system out of view of most of the travelers and out of view of management. Essentially not efficiently giving the go ahead for people to enter the metal detectors.

My name is (b)(6) and I wish to register a complaint against a TSA Officer and his supervisor for how I was treated. I am a very frequent flier, I have a Global Entry pass etc. I also have an artificial hip and am regularly screened and have pat downs a lot.

(b)(6)

Somerville, MA 02145

(b)(6)

Here are the specifics of my complaint.

My complaint is with TSO (b)(6) and LTO (b)(6)

I was traveling on March 4, 2013 on USAir from Boston to Washington, DC.

I went through the metal detector at Checkpoint B2 on March 4, 2013 at approximately 5:00PM. As usual, I set off the metal detector and was selected for a pat down.

LTO (b)(6) (if I mixed them up it was LTO (b)(6) did a professional job of explaining what he was going to do and asking for my consent and permission.

The problem began with his pat down. As he stood behind me and ran his hand up my legs, he slammed hard into the joint on both sides, crushing my testicles. As he passed in front of me, I said, "Can you please not slam your hand into my testicles." He told me that he had to do it that way and that he was doing his job. I told him that I have a huge body of experience with pat downs and that no one else had ever applied such force to my testicles in any other airport. He argued with me and I asked for a supervisor.

When LTO (b)(6) came over, I explained what had happened and she told me that TSO (b)(6) had been qualified, passed a test and was therefore doing it correctly.

I said, please hear me, he may have passed a test but he is not doing this right. We went back and forth, with me asking to be treated with decency and respect, and LTO (b)(6) telling me that TSO (b)(6) was doing it right. She never offered me an apology, or recognized that it may be possible that TSO (b)(6) did it wrong this time. TSO (b)(6) refused to complete the pat down, therefore eliminating the possibility of any direct observation. TSO (b)(6) was hostile, and LTO (b)(6) was in total denial of my experience and refused to offer even the least respect to what I was saying. She kept insisting that TSO (b)(6) had been approved and therefore was infallible.

At that point, LTO (b)(6) boss appeared. He actually listened to me, apologized for the experience I had and asked how he could help. He also supervised the individual who eventually came over, restarted and finally finished my pat down.

Staff are not machines, and there has to be a way to accommodate feedback and adjust. To insist that because someone took a test and passed that they will always do their job perfectly or the right way is to deny that humans make mistakes. It also invalidates and disrespects each persons experience.

Please let me know what recourse I have and please tell me that I will not have to endure someone slamming his hand into my testicles again, nor a supervisor denying my experience, and finally a complete refusal to take feedback or accountability for action.

Regards and respect,

(b)(6)

The caller traveled to New York back to Florida and then to California to visit his children a year ago it dawned on him that he has a defibrillator. The caller cannot go through the metal detector and has to have a patdown. The caller states that no one ever looks at his defibrillator cards or swabs his defibrillator to see if there is any explosive material and it bothers him that no one ever swabs his defibrillator or his hands for GSR. The caller sent in an email about a year ago and received a thank you response and no one ever bothered to contact him regarding his complaint. The caller is concerned that someone will try to disguise a bomb as a defibrillator. The caller states he wants to be safe and wants other passenger to be safe as well.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process will enable us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subject of repeated complaints.

I am a frequent flyer and have been flying with American Eagle airlines for over 16 years and am pretty familiar with the screening process and my responsibility as a traveler as well as an employee.

After clearing the metal detectors I stood there patiently waiting for my luggage come thru. I noticed that there were multiple bins piling up so in order to access my bag I pulled one of the bins aside and handed it to an agent so he can store the bin where it belonged.

2013 4:50: After doing so, one of your agents by the name of (b)(6) approached me and informed me that "I needed to put the bin back where it belonged and that it was not TSA's responsibility to pick up after crew members". In the meantime my luggage was still being screened. I informed (b)(6) that those were not my bins and that someone needed to pick them because it is not my responsibility to clean up after the flying public and that was part of her job. (b)(6) continued to argue with me as I waited for my luggage to clear. Not only did (b)(6) accuse me of not picking up after myself she told me that I needed to "get out of her face" and shoo'd me off as if I were a dog with her hand. I then turned to a supervisor for assistance where he was able to intervene. At this point I asked where I could file a complaint and he handed me a yellow card and encouraged me to write up my experience up and the supervisor filled in her name. The unprofessionalism that (b)(6) proved this day is what gives the Transportation Safety Administration a bad reputation.

Sincerely,

On March 26th, 2013 at approximately 9:30 AM my wife, grandchild, and I checked in for flight Southwest 295 to Chicago, IL at 8:30. We arrived at the security check point and I informed the TSA agent that I had a hip replacement and needed to be "hands-on" checked. I also told him that my wife had a deep brain stimulator and she could not go through the metal detector machine. At this time he told me go on through. When I was on the other side of the machine I heard him bark at my wife "Come on lady you're holding up the line" She told him again. "I can't go through that machine because of my deep brain stimulator". The TSA agent again barked the command "There's a line behind you; we are very busy so move on" (b)(6) (my wife) got flustered and went on through. The metal detector made her stimulator dysfunction, which made her body shake and she then had to take medicine (clonazepam) quite often the rest of the trip which made her groggy and sleepy so she could not enjoy the trip.

My granddaughter and my wife went to the customer service counter and there were no TSA agents there. They talked to a Southwest airline pilot and a flight attendant who found the TSA agent. The TSA manager talked to us, said they checked the video and the rude agent was pulled from his duty. In our opinion the TSA agent was rude, negligent and irresponsible. I have been instructed to send you this letter and request some sort of compensation. If compensation is given each time an incident like this occurs the TSA agents will be more diligent and compassionate to the handicapped passengers and receive better training making incidents like this less likely.

2013 4:57: My wife now has to have surgery to replace the battery to the deep brain stimulator on Monday, April 1, 2013.

Sincerely,

Today I had the worst experience with a TSA employee. So bad was the encounter. I hope TSA will have the integrity to follow up with this complaint and reprimand the employee.

My family of six were returning from a spring break cruise.

On March 31, 2013, between the hours of 10 am-12:30 noon, we were passing through security check point C of the IAH airport preparing to fly out on United 4212 near gate B. Unfortunately I forgot the name of the TSA employee. I should have written her name down, but I was so much shock by her bad behavior and that no other TSA worker stepped in to help this angry employee. However, after talking to other female TSA workers near gate B where our flight gate was, it was recommended I should write a complaint against her. Some TSA ladies walking past security gate B gave me this email. They also said they had heard of this poor employee. Apparently she has a reputation of bad manners.

I can describe her. Black American bleached red hair or a wig, about 5'5", heavier side, about 56-65 years old. She wore glasses. I reported to the TSA supervisor at security C, but I really wonder if anything was done about it.

The incident occurred as following:

As my family was placing items on the x-ray belt through security at gate C, this TSA worker was very rough and loud. My husband passed through, then my two older teen boys. As my two younger children, 10 yrs. and 11 years, began taking off their shoes (as this is done at every airport we have been through and they saw their older siblings taking off their shoes) the TSA lady began sarcastically yelling at my children. "Why are you taking off your shoes, you are slowing the line down!" My daughter confused asked, "what do you want us to do?"

I watched in shock as she gruffly yelled "you are slowing the line" The TSA lady yelled at her and told her not to take off her shoes in a bullying and sarcastic manner, then she told my daughter to move out of the line because she was slowing everyone down (which she was not, as I was behind her, and we were not slowing the line down, and should not be expected to run through it either!). WE are not cattle but travelers who should be allowed to pass through security in a respectable manner) Then the TSA lady began yelling at my 10 year old son, and told him to move out of the line and stand off. I was in complete shock. WHY was she not sending them through the metal detector with my husband other two sons? WHY was she separating my children from my family? Why the yelling and rudeness?

As I approached, she was very abrupt with me as well. I stopped just before passing the x-ray machine. She again became very abrupt and pushy, telling me to pass through, therefore leaving my two young children behind. I did not pass but asked why she pulled my children aside as they are minors I would not leave them. She sarcastically said, "well you would have already been through if you would not talk." I told her I would not pass through without my children going first, as by this point I felt the need to protect my kids from this harassment. My children at this point were scared. They are good kids and were trying to cooperate, but this lady was rough and very rude. I told her she needs to find some manners and use them. Then I passed through the detector with my children.

There was no excuse for this bad behavior, and so unnecessary and inappropriate. This harassment is not to be tolerated. Her emotional maturity lacks for the job. It is quite evident her behavior lacked the intelligence to function effectively in her job. The lady was nasty in her demeanor. Her job is to assist where needed. She should be helpful, and be of service. She obviously has forgotten we are the travelers and make her job possible. This TSA female employee should not be allowed to work for TSA if she can not change her behavior. She needs more training at her expense not with my tax dollars!!!! There is never a need to yell at passengers who are cooperating and just trying to pass security. Her harassing behavior should be dealt with. I am a tax payer and the traveler! Her job is predicated upon my taxes and my ability to travel. This lady is unfit for her job.

Disability Description: Caller has an insulin pump as a carry on item and another one attached to her body.

Response Details: If you have an insulin pump that cannot be screened; you should let the TSO know at the checkpoint. You do not have to do the AIT or WTMD if the insulin pump can not be subjected to that.

Also if you wish to file a complaint you can do so in writing; and I will send you the forms that you need to fill out in writing.

Incident Details: Caller stated that she was going through RSW and the TSO agent behind the counter said she had to go through the AIT because they do not offer pat downs there. She wears an insulin pump that can't be screened in this manner. The TSO there was really nasty, and told her that either she go through the AIT or WTMD or she will not be able to fly.

This incident occurred today at RSW at 3:31pm at gate C-6.

Good Afternoon -

I am writing to you out of frustration for my latest TSA experience. Our family just returned from a trip to Hawaii and our bags were chosen (like they are on every single trip we have ever taken) to be searched. I am perfectly fine with the search as we have nothing to hide. However, I am not fine with my luggage having intentional knife cuts through it and contents destroyed for no reason. Bottle that were closed and in bags were open and the bags cut open, clothing and souvenirs were missing. What was returned to the bag was stuffed in as a giant wadded heap. The bag was then only partially re-zipped. All together the TSA inspection cost me at least $400 in stolen and ruined items.

I'm curious as to why this behavior is allowed to continue. I understand searching bags for safety reasons but to intentionally and blatantly destroy items is unacceptable.

I figure I am wasting my time but is there any way to be compensated for the damages? We always seem to have an item or two show up missing but this one is ridiculous. My daughter's bag looked like someone had walked all over it and it's contents was also returned in a wad - but nothing missing.

'013 6:12:3 There has to be a better way to screen. Until then, we will no longer be checking any luggage. I travel a lot and I don't expect miracles but I do expect common courtesy and respect of my person and belongings.

My second concern is the treatment of people who have medical implants and are unable to go through the metal detectors. I have a pacemaker and carry my card. I was treated like a criminal because I couldn't walk through the standard detector. It's not ok for the TSAs to roll their eyes and accuse me of lying and then continue to be hateful to my family. I am in my early 40's and I know it's young for a pacemaker but for heaven's sake, I always have the card out and ready.

A lesson in manners is more than in order for 95% of the TSAs we came into contact with between St Louis and Maui.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

The caller had an accident years ago, and has to wear a shoe lift and brace. However, he always has to remove the items, and wanted to know if there was a way to keep them on.

Advised Caller:

There is an exception to the shoe removal policy; passengers with disabilities, medical conditions, and prosthetic devices do not have to remove their shoes. However, TSOs will give them additional screening. This includes a visual and physical inspection, as well as explosives trace detection sampling of the footwear while it remains on the passenger's feet.

013 10:40:0 Regardless of whether a passenger is screened by a walk-through metal detector, AIT, or a thorough patdown, casts, braces, and support appliances are subject to additional screening. A TSO will need to see the device, which may require the lifting of clothing without exposing any sensitive areas. TSA also will use technology to test the device for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening.

If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor while at the checkpoint.

There are two primary ways to be considered eligible for TSA Pre[®]2713™: travelers may be invited by a participating airline, or they may choose to enroll with one of U.S. Customs and Border Protection's (CBP) Trusted Traveler programs.

Caller had a knee replacement.

This call was accidentally cut off and I called him back at approximately 12:15

Information Request: Caller is waiting at the airport to get on his flight. Caller missed his flight and feels TSA is responsible.

Caller is wanting information on going through screening at CVG and what the numbers are that are listed above the WTMD. She has worked with the CVG airport and has recently had to be patted down and wants to know if it was because of the numbers because she does not like the way things are done for airport employees.

013 12:08:6 CCR informed her:

When going through screening if anything alarms the WTMD or any device then the individual is subjected to a patdown. We do not have information on the numbers above the WTMD and how that screening process is run at that airport since we are not located there directly. It would be best for her to contact the airport directly to get assistance as to what those numbers are specifically used for.

Caller is traveling to Europe and usually wears a money belt but he has to take it off for screening and he is needing to know the process for screening these items. He is wanting to know if the officers have the right to thumb through his money during screening. He is needing to know if there is expedited screening just for the rich people that are flying internationally. Will he need to take his laptop out of the bag for screening.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint. He will be required to take his laptop out of the bag for screening. I advised him that all items have to be screened before they are permitted through the checkpoint.

013 1:25:2 TSA does have a program in place that is TSA precheck and this program is only for domestic flights and it allows passengers to keep their belt, shoes and light outer wear on during screening and they can also keep their laptop on the bag during screening. This is only available for domestic flights.

Subject: LAS screening process

Attention TSA customer service:

'013 8:13:3 I received a very invasive TSA screening at the Las Vegas airport on 2 Apr 13 at approximately 8:55 a.m. I was on Delta flight #590 on my way to gate D 40. This "pat down" was not a typical pat down. Not being able to send the stroller through the screening machine prompted this entire event. I was unable to get my stroller through the conveyor belt because it was too big. The TSA agent then checked it visually and by hand. During his physical inspection the stroller set off his alarm. He told me he had to check me and my bags because this happened even though my bags had already been screened through the machine. I told the agent that I purchased the stroller while on vacation and that it was only two days old. I also told them I am in the military and that I travel all the time. I had never had any issues while traveling. All of this occurred after I had already gone through the metal detector machine removed my shoes and was cleared. I was traveling with my wife and three children.

The agent asked me if I had undergone this type of search and I said no. He then tried to explain the search procedure. The agent started the search by making me remove my shoes a second time. He then began the search and touched my genitals during this process. After performing one "pat down" he conducted another one (that really felt like a rub down). He touched my genitals a second time while running an open hand between my legs, upper thigh, and scrotum regions on 4 occasions. It felt like his thumbs were touching my genital areas/region each time. He also touched my chest twice rubbing his hand up and down my chest and abdominal region.

At this point I felt violated beyond belief and was not quite sure what I should do. I thought I should request a supervisor; however I did not and cooperated with this very grueling and invasive ordeal trying not to draw more embarrassment to myself than was already apparent. The search appeared to have turned into something else (possible groping or something). It did not feel like your typical pat down. I also have 15 years of law enforcement experience/military training and have never received or performed a search in that manner. I fly frequently and have flown all around the world both for protecting our country and leisure. I usually don't complain, but I would be doing a disservice if I did not report this incident.

I immediately reported this situation to the TSA supervisor (b)(6) at the check point. I explained to him that if the search is going to be so invasive and it is protocol that he should provide travelers with the option of a private room or curtain/search. (b)(6) mentioned that a private area was available; however it was not offered to me. He then handed me a TSA contact information card to file a complaint. I called the 800 to report this incident when I arrived at gate 40 D.

Her bag was searched and she has a box of snack bars missing and she had 2 character fountain pens she purchased at Disney and those were broken and a cap from one of them was missing. Her bag was also torn. The TSA lock was only put back through one hole so that left her bag unlocked.

The NOI had: (b)(6) 11:50 AM

She stated she needs to tell someone that everytime she flies she is searched. She is an American and only been out of the country once since 1956.

I asked if it is her person or her bag.

She stated it is her person that is searched.

She has a knee implant and has a card from her doctor.
She stated people who are foreign looking go right on through.

She stated in Nashville the first time she flew she went into that round thing and was able to screen her with it.
She said the FLL did not have that

Told her that would have been the AIT.
We try to resolve the screening using it when a passenger is able to stand with their arms above their head for 5-7 seconds.
We are not always able to resolve it and the passenger still needs the patdown.
Although she has the card from her doctor we still must resolve her screening and everyone must be screened.
I explained that it is not because she looks suspicious, just that she sets off the metal detector.

She stated she just had to talk to someone about it.

Told her I am sorry her items were missing and I will send to her a claim form and cover letter via email.
We will also report her complaint to the Customer Support Manager at FLL.

She asked what about the bag.
Told her she might want to also report the bag damage to the airline as we only have the bags a short period of time and depending on the damage it could have happened with them.
She may file a claim since she had the NOI.

To whom it may concern

013 9:59:2

I was recently at Indianapolis airport when I noticed a flat screen tv advertise that 99% of travelers choose the AIT screenings. This is not true bc there is always a TSA agent directing people to get in line for the AIT screenings. So it's not a choice until you make your agents aware of this. They should make people aware of the choice. Also when the line is getting to long for the AIT your agents should be moving people through the metal detector. Not standing around with their arms crossed behind their backs.

There should be a revised pat down as I feel your agents put there hands in places that are unacceptable. It's basically groping of another adult.

Thanks

To Whom It May Concern,

I am a 73-year-old lady and a citizen of the United States who travels alone by air to visit family and friends living within the country. I have Meniere's disease which causes vertigo (dizziness), gait and balance problems, nausea and tinnitus (ringing in my ears); all of these symptoms are aggravated by air travel and therefore I require the assistance of the airline porters and a wheelchair in the airport terminals. Movement around me aggravates my dizziness and nausea so visual disturbances (lights and motion) also affect my balance and gait; standing or walking is often difficult for me without assistance.

As a result of my neurological condition, I am unable to stand still with my arms above my head without assistance in the new "Advanced Imaging" screeners but have no trouble walking on my own through the metal detection devices. I have become accustomed to informing the TSA officers about my condition at the airport checkpoints and have been generally treated kindly with respect. That was not the case this past weekend (Easter) however! Here is what happened:

On Friday, March 29th, I once again traveled alone from Detroit Metro Airport (DTW) to Chicago O'Hare Airport (ORD). As usual, I explained my condition to the TSA officers and they allowed me to walk through the metal detectors without incident. The officers in Detroit were very polite and friendly.

I expected a similar routine when I returned to Detroit from Chicago on Monday, April 1st but that was not to happen. The TSA officers in Chicago disregarded my explanation and request for metal detector screening; instead, they forced me into an extensive pat-down in front of other passengers! It is my understanding that a passenger has a right to privacy screening during extensive pat-downs—although I requested this, I was denied that option and the officers were very rude in their treatment of me. I was not taken aside but rather subjected to a full pat-down by a lone female officer; asked to lift my shirt/top while she felt my breasts and down my slacks in directly front of other passengers!

013 12:04:5 Throughout this pat-down, I tried to ask why I was denied the right to walk through the metal detector and was told that was not an option because O'Hare was a "different type of airport". This appeared to me a blatant lie since I saw others go through the metal detector and I was not in the international terminal. While I was undergoing this pat-down, I also saw other female passengers who after going through the AIT screeners, were pulled from the screening lines and subjected to hand screening detectors for no apparent reason other than because of their Muslim dress.

Overall this was a very humbling experience. I totally understand the purpose of airport screening and in general accept the responsibility of the TSA towards our safety. However, I do not understand why any passenger should be subjected to a lack of sensitivity for his/her humanity. I have examined the TSA website and the procedures described there for passenger screening do not in any way reflect what I personally saw and experienced in Chicago on Monday. I will be reporting this to my state senators Debbie Stabenow and Levin.

If I was younger and less vulnerable, I would choose to drive to my destinations but that is no longer an option for me. There was a time in this country when the elderly were treated with respect; I can see that is not the rule among your officers or employees. I would suggest that the officers in Chicago are long overdue on sensitivity training.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Dear TSA,

About five minutes ago I checked in at the Charlottesville airport. After going through the metal detector the agent at that apparatus heard a beep as I went through. He let me know that the beep indicated that I had been randomly selected for some additional security check. Just a parenthetical note: I never mind being checked! A female agent asked which bags belonged to me and I indicated which were mine. She then picked up my things which included a sports coat and began to take them to an examination area. The coat was the problem. She put the soles of my shoes right on top of my newly cleaned, going to a business meeting blue blazer! Then to compound her error, when I asked her not to put the shoes on the coat, she treated me like I had asked for something beyond her comprehension.

I don't usually complain and I know air travel is much more like traveling on a bus than it used to be. But, putting dirty shoe soles on a dress coat and then treating me disrespectfully, when I had treated everyone in the line with respect, is unacceptable. I hope that you can include care of travelers belongings in your training.

My wife and I recently cleared Global Entry, received our cards, and I had high hopes of taking advantage of one of the Global Entry benefits at US Airports, that of TSA Pre. Pre was recently initiated at Austin's airport (AUS) and I was looking forward to using it on March 26th as I began a week of travel. My high hopes and anticipation turned very dark during my Pre experience.

As I cleared the initial TSA screening, I was directed to the Pre line. Great, I thought, no removing of shoes, belt, light jacket, laptops, etc. I would whiz through with my Global Entry clearance providing the pathway. A $100 well spent, I thought....

As I entered, I noticed the body scanner that was positioned at the Pre checkpoint had been removed and replaced with a metal detector. This was my first hint of trouble – I have a total knee replacement. As I walked through the metal scanner, my steel knee set off the alarm and this is where the delay started.

I was patted down, asked to remove all the items of clothing I was hoping Pre would allow me to wear, and even forced to be rubbed with the little cloths to detect chemical residue. It was a horrible experience, nothing easy or quick and a bit lengthy compared to the "normal" check using body scanners and removing all items required.

As I left the security area, I spoke with a TSA manager, explained my experience to him, and asked him if he thought any of my experience made sense as a frequent traveler that had qualified for a Global Entry card. He laughed and agreed it may not make any sense...

As I returned to Austin from my week's travel, I spoke with a TSA agent guarding the "exit" area and reviewed my experience with him. He informed me that the Metal detectors were preferred by 2/3 of the traveling public and suggested I use the common traveler (non-Pre) line when traveling. Not the suggestion I was hoping for after qualifying and paying for Global Entry, only to find the experience more painful than not using the Pre check line.

I feel duped.

I signed up for global entry and pre check for many reasons, mostly for two.

I travel more than 80 days a year nationally and internationally AND I had a congenital problem that caused me to need both hips replaced. The ability to move through security easily was a major plus for me and for all the other travelers and for the agents as they could avoid a pat down that is not enjoyable by either party.

Recently in Chicago and BWI the pre check line no longer utilize a modern scanner but an old fashion metal detector, so once again I set these off and get patted down.

I am a physician who travels to teach others how to improve the care they provide and to provide that care in a safer manner. I am about as low a risk to anyone as anyone can get. I went through the application process and sat for a face to face interview only within the last 6 months. Both airports had the precheck line using a modern scanner until very recently.

I could see being wanted to confirm that the medical card I carry is correct if the scanner can not return, but at present the approach used discriminates against folks with artificial joints and hardware. A simple fix is to return to the modern scanners that clearly are better devices than metal detectors.

I look forward to your response.

A. Travelers passing through security checkpoints may bring all medications and related supplies—prescription, over-the-counter items, and homeopathic—through TSA security checkpoints after these items have been properly screened.'

So it goes as above.

And so I did what was required for my 6-month-old daughter's medication - prescription Prilosec to prevent choking episodes from severe reflux.

I traveled with my 6-month old daughter on April 1, 2013, returning home after a family visit, (U.S. Airways Flight 304, Phoenix to Charlotte, Gate A23, 9:29 a.m. boarding time; departure 9:59 a.m., connection in Charlotte for final destination, Fort Myers).

I followed all the instructions required to fold the stroller, infant seat and car base and place all my carry-on, shoes, and required articles on the belt to be screened. I held baby in my arms, went through metal detector and was told to step aside so that TSA could "screen" and/or "test" baby food and medication from my carry-on. Baby food consisted of an unopened, original container of 2-ounce Gerber baby food and prescribed medication for my daughter Ava, Prilosec liquid and dispenser, given to prevent a choking condition from severe reflux. (Carry-on had diapers and other travel necessities for a baby.)

With baby still in arms, no one to help with stroller, my articles, etc., I was taken aside as TSA "examined/looked" at baby food and medication, and then DUMPED things back into carry-on. I returned to security belt to gather the rest of my belongings.

I proceeded to my departure Gate A 23 } quite a long distance away. As my flight was about to board, I heard the PA system paging (b)(6) to return to security. I knew it had to be for the medication because that was the only thing with my daughter's name on it.

Security was quite a long distance away, and I would never be able to get to security and back in time for my flight. I asked the U.S. Airways worker at the gate if she could call security and possibly send someone to bring the medicine to us. I was told quite matter-of-fact to "forget about it." The reason? Because of worker cutbacks.

Those motorized vehicles scoot back and forth all day and night, gate to gate, transporting people, pets, and sometimes nothing, and NO ONE could bring a prescription medication to a passenger when THEY made the mistake of not putting the medication back into its proper place. The food went back in the bag. The meds did not.

Security is a necessity of course and I'm always willing to comply. I understand the need for examination, but after having made that mistake of keeping the medication, something should have been done to get that medication to my baby.

They offered to mail it. That medication has to be refrigerated. It was traveling in a special container. Because of the time change from Arizona to Florida, I had to call the gastroenterologist to refill the meds in Florida to be picked up the next day. This prescription cannot be filled anywhere but by a compound pharmacy. The cost of this prescription is $58 – a whole bottle gone, a new one having to be filled at another $58, and all because "no one was available to drive that little cart" to bring the

On April 2, 2013 I travelled on Jetblue Flight 201 from JFK Airport to FLL Airport. Going through Security I declined to go thru the x-ray machine. I was subjected to a body pat down. Two men at the same time were told they could go through the metal detector and were not patted down. When I protested this, I was told it could be done at their discretion. Just a week before I travelled from FLL Airport. I was subject to a pat down also when I refused the machine - even though a lady before me walked only through the metal detector, no pat down. But at least that pat down was done professionally, politely and I did not feel violated.

(b)(6) used her POWER to abuse me, humiliate me. She ordered me around like I was a criminal. She then proceeded to pat me down very roughly, two and three times over the same areas - inside the waist of my jeans, inside the top of my blouse and especially rude, rough, disgusting was the way she patted me down in the groin three times. When I told her that I had a patdown before and it was not done 2 to 3 times in the same place, she just gave me a look. When she was finished she ordered me to stand and wait for two minutes. Then she returned and said I could go. I AM NOT A CRIMINAL - I WAS A PASSENGER AT THE AIRPORT.

If you're supposed to be straightforward, transparent, and benevolent, why do you lie to the public? One group (first class, business, etc...) gets to go through a simple metal detector while the rest of us get no option, go through invasive pat down or get irradiated, have a uneducated moron telling you they're in charge, and have freedom of unreasonable search removed. We live in a free country and groups like yours are the real terrorists, bent on herding people like cattle. Most of them won't stand up to you, I and my fellow patriotic Americans will.

My wife and i just recently traveled back to Alaska from Valparaiso, FL after a family funeral. While going through TSA check point we observed a lady with two kids, both over twelve, i only know this because they were asked and gave their ages, go through the older style walk through metal detector. After going through the boy was patted down modified style but the mom just stood there and then all three went on their way. My wife, who is 12 wks pregnant opted to go through this way as well. She on the other hand was pulled aside, her bags rechecked after going through the x-ray machine, and then also given a thorough pat down. I asked the TSA supervisor at the security check why my wife is having to go through all this when the lady right in front of us just stood there without having anything done. The lady told me "she is special because she is an employee", i then asked why she is above the same security that everyone else has to go through even if she is traveling and the reply i got was "it's TSA's SOP for employees to not have to go through a full security check". I could understand if the lady was working at the time in the airport, but she had carry-ons, tickets and kids. If someone could please explain why TSA feels that both their employees and airport employees are above the same laws that pertain to the rest of the public who pay their salaries then please let me know.

Comment : I traveled through checkpoint A at the CTB and encountered a number of difficulties at the checkpoint:

-- As I have noted in a prior "Talk to TSA" submission that has not been responded to, the TSO at the TDC podium asked me to state my full name. TSA has no statutory authority to make this request, and should cease immediately.
-- The lines at the MMW machine were too long, causing a backup in which bags were being processed through the x-ray machine faster than passengers were being screened. This meant that passengers were out of sight of their baggage for a significant amount of time. I declined to push my belongings into the x-ray until I can be certain that I could see them on the other side. When I did, the female TSO monitoring the lines behaved extremely aggressively, physically grabbing my belongings and attempting to shove them into the x-ray machine. She was not wearing gloves, and did this without my permission. I requested to speak to a supervisor, who did nothing to address this. This behavior was not acceptable; since the line at the MMW was too long, passengers should have been sent through the WTMD so they could see their belongings. This is particularly important, since as the TSA website indicates, I should "ALWAYS watch your belongings as they advance through the x-ray equipment at the security checkpoints". TSA failed miserably.
-- I opted-out of the MMW to ensure I could see my belongings. When I did so, the TSO manning the checkpoint placed 2 personal-belongings bins upside down in front of my belongings. This triggered a bag search, which was retaliatory for my opt-out.

TSA should address these issues and discipline all employees involved. I look forward to your response.

Comment : Subjecting TSA pre-check fliers to random full security line screenings eliminates one of the biggest benefits of having pre-check in the first place. If I don't know when I'm going to be randomly screened, I still have to leave for the airport just as early as anyone else. I can't imagine full security line screening offers a huge benefit in terms of extra security, as I still have to go through a metal detector and have my baggage screened. Please consider changing this policy. Thank you.

I am (b)(6) a flight attendant for AirTran airways. I have written to you before concerning an incident regarding an item that was taken from me during screening. Today when going through Atlanta security at about 5:50 pm an incident occurred with your Atlanta supervisor (b)(6). He was upset because I removed my insulin pump to be hand checked because I have been told by the makers of my pump to not allow it to be exposed to ex-ray or the metal detector. (b)(6) wanted to tell me it was not procedure to hand check an insulin pump and that next time I should not remove it and he would do it as a curtesy. I tried to explain that it was my right to chose how I wanted to have my pump screened an he became argumentative with me. Lastly, I went to the TSA web site on my cell phone and tried to have him read your public policy stating that my device can be " screened by x-ray or hand." (b)(6) refused to read the TSA information on the website and stated he knew the policy and did not need to read it. I did not like the way I was treated an I vow to continue to report these incidents every time they happen as it has become often with other TSA officers. Your attention to this matter is greatly appreciated and I would like to know how this issue is addressed and resolved. (b)(6) of (b)(6)

Comment : This incident occurred at the Sanford/Orlando airport, in Sanford, FL on Thursday, March 28, 2013. We were flying Allegiant Air from Sanford, FL (SFB) to Belleville, IL (BLV) flight 660, departing at 1535 hours. At about 1400 hours my daughter and I were waiting in line at the Security checkpoint. Upon arriving to the podium, where ID's and boarding passes are checked, just prior to the metal detectors, I gave my and my daughters ID along with our boarding passes to the agent.

The agent reviewed the ID cards and boarding passes then asked my daughter what her name was. Due to my five year old daughter speaking in a lower voice, the agent asked her what her name was multiple times. I then clearly stated her name and she said, "What drugs were you on when you decided that name?" or "What drugs were you on when you came up with that name?" I promptly explained to the agent, "the name was Filipino", it was "my aunts name" and it stood for "the three major islands in the Philippines: Luzon, Visayas, and Mindanao." The agent then responded, "Thank you for the geography lesson" and "You learn something every day". Both the agent and male passenger/customer behind me chuckled as my daughter and I proceeded on.

Clearly, I understand my daughters name is not a common name here in the United States and that she and I will be questioned on occasion and teased. But I do not feel it is professional, for an agent to ask me, in front of my daughter, "what drugs was I on?" when coming up with her name. It is rude to me, disrespectful to my daughter and embarrassing as everyone in line behind and around me could hear the comments and conversation. I am a fairly easy going, light hearted and understanding person. It would be one thing if the agent chuckled or stated that's an uncommon, weird, strange or even confusing name, but to ask me what drugs I was on... Unfortunate.

inappropriate attitude of TSA agent at Sacramento Airport

Comments:

I was laughed at and made fun of by a TSA employee at Sacramento because I am afraid of the ait scanner and asked for a pat down inspection instead. I also was very afraid for my personal belongings which had already gone through Xray (without incident) and were unattended on the other side. The employee was very rude and purposely made me wait 10 minutes while at least 50 other passengers went through metal detector and AIT and 5 went through pat down ahead of me. Since I was

013 3:07:0 I was flying out of the Chicago O'Hare airport to La Guardia on American Airlines on March 26, 2013. The incident occurred when I was heading through security at the O'Hare airport. I had placed all of my belongings into bins and pushed them down the belt to be scanned. I did not want to go through the full-body scan so I was waiting near the metal detector to speak with a TSA agent about going through that instead. The TSA agent was helping some parents with small children through the metal detector and didn't acknowledge me. I thought he may have just missed me, but it became apparent that he was purposefully ignoring me. I said "sir" several times and he continued to ignore me. Finally I told him that I was pregnant (which I didn't feel like I needed to disclose) and he told me that I was not allowed to go through the Comment : I recently had a total metal hip plant done. I have travels well over 30 times a year for the past 20 years until last year due to the surgery. This was my first time trough screening that did not have Imaging. I have gone thru other metal detectors before my hip and if I set it off I was never patted down the way I was on Friday. If I would have touch someone in the areas I was touch I would have been arrested and put in jail.

He touch me a total of (5) times on either my testicles or penis. He touched and hit my testicles once hard enough that it hurt. He would four times twice on each leg he would start his hands just above my knees and quickly move them up my leg (less than a second) until his hands could go no farther and ended up hitting my testicles. The last time he put his hand just under where my belt buckle would have been and ran it straight down pushing hard enough that he would have known he touch my penis.

013 6:09:5 This is in my book as close as you can get to rape without calling rape. I never felt so humiliated and disgusted in my whole life as I felt going thru this in my book grounds for an arrest. Then as they were going thru all of my luggage they made a big deal about why I was packing an electric shaver in my luggage, well lets see I am a man with no beard and I shave daily. I am a well groomed and dressed business man that travels a lot. I have to fly back to Syracuse next week on business but this time I am flying into Syracuse but flying out of a different airport.

If I knew a phone number to call or a person to talk to I would file a complaint about the total mistreatment I was put through.

Information Request: He is traveling from Fort Lauderdale on April 15th at 7 pm and would like to know how to make it easier. He asked if a doctor note would help.

Response Details: I told the caller that passengers who have catheters and ports attached to their bodies should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the device(s) and indicate where the device(s) is located before the screening process begins. Passengers should also inform the TSO of any pain or medical complications that may result from touching the port and or catheter so it can be screened appropriately. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device(s) that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

I told him that a doctor note is not required but he may present it if he wants to.

Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

013 1:24:3 A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

Regardless of the screening method used, the port or catheter will undergo additional screening. This may include, but is not limited to, a physical inspection of the device if it is not in a sensitive area, and a patdown of the device followed by testing for traces of explosives.

I told him to make the TSO aware of the bandages and any pain he may have. Regardless of whether a passenger is screened by a walk-through metal detector, AIT, or a patdown, dressings and or bandages may require additional screening if the TSO cannot reasonably determine that the area is free of a threat item. Passengers can be screened without removing or unwrapping dressings and or bandages.

I told the caller that if you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

Dear TSA,

I just had the worst experience waiting for an opt out that I've had in 4 years of frequent travel. I requested a female assist and waited more than 10 minutes for assistance. In that time, I was caught in the other streams of people going by. They bumped me several times. I also couldn't see my bags where I had a work laptop sitting. It is corporate policy not to allow our laptops out of sight, which I was unable to comply with for 10 minutes. It would have taken that long for me to realize someone had taken or damaged it.

This incident happened at 15:35 pm today, April 7 in Terminal 1 at JFK. Afterward I spoke to Supervisor (b)(6) I was frustrated to see many women staffed but all in positions unable to offer a female assist. When the person manning my lane was replaced by a woman (so she also couldn't offer a female assist) I didn't understand. When it still took another 5 minutes, I was quite frustrated as you might imagine. I have the utmost sympathy for how many pressures the TSA copes with, especially in an airport as busy as JFK's international terminal. But I have a few suggestions:

- 013 4:57:2
- it remains unclear when someone calls out for a female assist that someone even heard them. Like any good restaurant kitchen, it would be great if the practice was to call back that the request was heard.
 - waiting space: is there a way to create spots to stand in that aren't directly in line with traffic? Getting repeatedly pushed and prodded from behind is uncomfortable. These should allow you to watch your bags.
 - is there a way to better optimize female staffing so that there is better support on the floor? I could see at least 4 around me. Why couldn't one be replaced?

Finally, I know airline employees and children don't have to go through the crazy machine. Why should a pregnant woman not be able to opt out for the metal detector. Aren't children in the womb just as vulnerable? To be fair, I'm not showing yet, but I do have strong justification for avoiding that machine right now. I also fly 2-3 times month (that's 4-6 screenings) and am on the TSA pre-check list. Shouldn't that also allow people to avoid frequent exposure to that machine, whether or not they're pregnant.

There was only one other time I've experienced nearly as long a wait (also in JFK but different terminal) and then the only spare woman was on break. People shouldn't be punished merely because they have personal concerns with the machinery. And it is not fair and equitable treatment to be a woman required to wait extra. I hope you will consider these concerns seriously. I admire what the TSA does but don't think this experience is in line with your standards for service to the American people.

Best,

(b)(6)

Good afternoon. My name is (b)(6) and I am and have been a frequent airline traveler throughout the past 5 years, in most years flying over 100 flights domestically. I wanted to let you know that that every time I fly out of the Albany, NY (ALB) airport, the TSA screeners (mostly a woman with blond hair at the initial screening point) try to prevent me from exercising my right to, "opt-out" of the AIT machine technology. Due to the number of flights I am on, I would prefer the metal detector screen or the enhanced pat-down and therefore exercise my right to opt-out. However, every time I state this, the TSA screener makes statements like, "don't worry, you can go in the machine, they can't see under your clothes" or, "Oh great, it's ONE of these people...so, why do you not want to go through, do you just not understand what this is" and "It's not gonna harm you if you go through." I just do not understand why the TSA screeners don't listen to my simple request to opt-out and push me to get mad and answer their silly questions? This has also happened to my mother, where they try to either make her feel bad or pressure her to go through the AIT machine...which is non-sense. Anyhow, I wanted to express my frustration to see if you or someone there can assist for future flights.

013 4:57:4 Please let me know if you can just tell your TSA agents to listen to the passengers and not make snide comments or ask silly questions to the passengers who are simply exercising their right.

Thank you for listening.

013 8:05:0 Comment : As a frequent flier I try to avoid unnecessary radiation and sometimes request a pat-down instead of the backscatter imaging machines. When I do this, I am removed from the security line, through a gate, and to a separate area to be patted down. The substantial breach of security that results from this is the fact that I can go through security without once going through a metal detector or other screening device. This leaves the screening of my person solely in the competence of a single TSA officer. On multiple occasions I have noticed that the officer half-heartedly pats me down, almost entirely skipping over my groin and other "sensitive" areas. This leaves me to ponder the possibility that if one was trying to commit a crime and bring some form of contraband or weapon onto a flight, they need not do anything but tape it to the inside of their upper leg and refuse a scan. As a frequent traveler, this seemingly simple way of circumventing the security remains rather worrisome to me. In my opinion, those who wish to skip the scan should be required to go through the metal detector in addition to being subjected to a pat down. I hope this makes sense.

013 10:01:1 I was a passenger flying to puerto rico on april 7 and had a stop in miami. At approx. 615 to 640 am I went through screening after having a cigarrte. I informed tsa agent I have a medical device in my back and could not go through metal detectors. I also produced a medical card verifying this, while waiting for a male agent to pat me down I was approached by an agent who said I had to go through scan machine. I told him I couldnt due to medical device, i was rudely told if I didnt go through machine I would be refused to continue my trip. I was forced to go through machine. I tried to get agents name, none of your agents wanted to help me. My back has been in terrible pain since this incident. I have notified my doctor and will be seeking care. Please contact me to try and resolve this in a professional manner. You can review video and see me standing waiting for pat down and being escorted to scanner. Caller flew on Saturday from TPA. She was patted down. Caller said she did not understand why a woman in her 80 s would need to be patted down.

TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening.

013 3:10:5 She asked what might cause an anomaly. I told her that something in a person s pocket would show as an anomaly. She said the patdown was only from the waist up, across her breasts and under her arms. She asked if a person had a mastectomy and had the patches in that area would that cause it. I said it could especially if she had not told the screener ahead of time.

Caller said she flies all the time and this has never happened to her before. She said she does not know why anyone who looks like her would be patted down.

The caller traveled from OMA to LAX through DEN and was delayed at OMA because she has a pacemaker and says that the officers at the checkpoint argued with her for approx. 20 minutes that she can use AIT even though her doctor has told her not to go through it, before finally agreeing to give her a patdown. She then needed to wait for about 10 more minutes to get a female TSO to do the patdown.

I apologized for the experience and explained that:

013 5:39:3

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

Caller states that he just got a message from Zac at the TCC in regard to an email he sent earlier to complain about a screening experience. Caller states that he flew from SFO to PR departing on the evening of the 6th and was in MIA for layover on 7th. Caller has a neural stimulator with copper wiring in his back and cannot go through the WTMD due to the device. Caller went out to have a smoke during his layover in MIA. Upon returning, while going through the opt out screening procedures, a TSO (b)(6) told him he had an attitude and was being hostile and said that if he didn't go through the WTMD he wouldn't be allowed to fly. The TSO asked if he had a pacemaker and caller told him no and explained his medical condition. Caller states that his back is swollen right now and he doesn't feel well. He is in PR but doctor is in CA and won't be able to get medical treatment until his return. Caller is very worried that going through the WTMD has damaged the wiring of his medical device. Caller states that he is 100% disabled and has showed his card and gone through screening procedures properly at other airports. Caller was calm throughout the call, but obviously very upset about the incident. Caller would like corrective action to be taken, video surveillance to be reviewed, and to make sure that similar incidents do not occur again in the future. Caller would like to be contacted about the way the complaint is being handled.

I am currently 31 weeks pregnant and had two completely different experiences when flying this weekend and would like to know what the formal process is for a pregnant person flying, because in my opinion, I was treated like a hostile passenger for refusing to go through the xray machine.

I left Atlanta on Friday April 5th, on my way to White Plains for my baby shower. I didn't have to explain to the TSA agents that I didn't want to go through the x-ray machine. As soon as I took off my jacket and they saw I was pregnant they directed me to the metal detector, no questions asked and I was on my way. On my flight back yesterday, April 8th, was a completely different experience.

Caller wants to know the policy for a baby going through screening. Caller is concerned about the x-rays and the pat-down.

I read to caller:

As part of this effort TSA is implementing a program to revise screening procedures for passengers 12 years old and younger. The new screening procedures include permitting multiple passes through the metal detector and advanced imaging technology to clear any alarms as well as the greater use of explosives trace detection. TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—although not eliminate—the need for a physical patdown for children that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms.

In addition, passengers 12 years old and younger will be allowed to leave their shoes on. However, children may be required to remove their shoes and could still undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means. Transportation Security Officers use their discretion based on how old a child appears.

Caller also wants to know if his son will have to go the metal detector. Can he opt out?

He can opt out of the AIT, but not the WTMD. If a passenger opts out of the AIT, the alternative is a pat down.

:013 9:10:0 Caller is not enthusiastic about his son being patted down. He advised that he would contact his congressman about the issue.

I advised caller that, the easiest route is to go through the WTMD and AIT. If there are no alarms, then no further screening would be necessary.

Can they bring formula? Caller heard that the passenger may have to taste test the formula or breast milk.

I advised caller that this is not TSA policy.

Caller said that he found it on the TSA website.

I ran a quick search for the term taste and found and confirmed to caller that the alleged screening procedure is NOT found on the website. The alleged procedure would be as offensive to TSA as it would be to a passenger and is not a part of the procedure.

I offered to send caller the relevant policies via e-mail and he provided his e-mail address for the purpose.

I entered _complaint_ for the interaction type in all three work rows because caller expressed his disapproval of the policies, though he stated that he just wanted information. Explained that he does and if he has difficulty to ask for a supervisor.

Recently 7 April 2013 I was traveling on a flight from Long Islands MacArthur airport in the town of Islip. As required I was preparing to go through the metal detector when I was told to go through the body scan which is optional so I declined. I showed my TSA card indicating I have metal implants in my knee and shoulder and would rather have a pat down like I have done on many occasions without incident. However, this time the TSA agent with the last name of (b)(6) who was providing the pat down was about as condescending as they come. His poor attitude and condescending way in which he spoke to me was totally unacceptable and I will not tolerate that type of treatment again.

2013 2:03: I would appreciate this individual be counseled on the way he deals with the public and to treat them with respect as I'm sure he demands it of them. My drill instructor in basic training didn't have the attitude (b)(6) had which is to say despicable.

Comment : As a NEXUS card holder and Trusted Traveler, I enjoy the benefit of expedited screening. However, I also have an implanted pacemaker/defibrillator in my chest, which prevents me from using a traditional metal detector. I gladly use the full-body wave scanners when available to avoid the time-consuming full-body pat down. At SeaTac, my home airport, most security checkpoints have at least one full-body scanner.

On the Precheck lane, however, there is only one detection device and it is the traditional metal detector. On my most recent trip - the first one where I was able to use the Precheck lane at SeaTac - I was forced to remove my shoes and then wait for a screener to come over for a full pat down. (This also caused everyone else to wait until they could clear me.)

2013 2:05: So the problem here is that my Trusted Traveler status actually made it more difficult for me to pass through security and subjected me to a full pat down, which I prefer to avoid if I can.

I wonder if it would be possible in the future for the agent who came over to give the pat down to simply escort me over to the wave scanner, wait the few second while I am scanned and cleared, and then escort me back to the Precheck lane to retrieve my bag. This would be faster than the pat down and residue check, and less invasive as well. If not, the Precheck lane and my Trusted Traveler status are almost useless to me.

Thank you!

Comments:I am a sixty + senior citizen that have metal joints in my hip. I cannot pass thru a metal detector. I currently hold active DoD, Department of Justice, Department of State, and DHS clearances. I have designed major communications systems for FAA in the past that have allowed me unlimited access to Centers such as Washington Center and TMAs such as DCA, JFK, and DFW. I currently hold a TS/SCI DoD clearance and have access to major Navy, Air Force and Army strategic facilities yet I cannot board a US commercial flight without being sexually abused. I was virtually undressed (had to remove my dress coat, belt, shoes, socks, etc.) in front of all passengers entering the security boarding area while the agent placed his hands inside my pants and intimately touched me all over my body. My concern is this happens every time I must fly into an airport that does not have proper scanning facilities (Syracuse NY this past Monday). I have access to all US Government buildings including the US Capitol (I have had USCP identification). US Commerce. Pentagon, and other secure facilities.

Is it possible to obtain TSA documentation that will provide me from relief of this embarrassment in the future? I hope that the answer is not that I have no choice but to submit to such behavior,"that is not even tolerated in our society", because of my age and implants.

2013 2:40:1 Why do I need my boarding pass out when I go through metal detector at Baltimore, but nowhere else in the country? Lines are slow because rules keep changing. Tsa agents in Louisville are super-friendly. Baltimore's are rude and arrogant (at least those I experienced). What are the rules? Define them and stick with them so we know what you want.

Dear Sir,

2013 6:26: I am writing to report a problem with TSA security on a recent trip from Las Vegas to Atlanta. (flight DL1490) on April 5 2013.

This is what happened. My stored bag was searched by TSA on this flight. In Las Vegas I won some money paid in quarters ($30 in coins) This probably caused an issue with my bag probably a metal detector scan. The bag was searched, though I was not informed of this search. This is when the money was stolen. (about $30 mostly in quarters) Also I am diabetic and had stored a blood glucose meter which the testing strips (drum roll) was removed and reinstalled backwards. I noticed this after returning home. When I arrived in Atlanta. I walked to baggage claim without delay less than 5 minutes and my bag was on the carousel. There is no way baggage handlers in Atlanta could have stolen my money

Delta offered to pay the $30, but I refused as it was not Delta's fault. This in my opinion is an important issue as I consider it a breach of public trust. I hope you agree and take a serious look into it. (b)(6)

The caller flies from ACY, and wears a transparent paper flip-flop called airport booties. Each time he attempts to fly from the airport, the TSO indicates that they must be removed. However, he is able to wear the items at other airports. The booties were purchased from the following website: www.airportbooties.com, and, according to the website, are approved at security checkpoints. The caller was concerned about health issues.

Advised Caller:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has developed standard screening practices for all of our Nation's airports, and passengers can expect essentially the same procedures. While the procedures are the same everywhere, the interpretation of those procedures results in some slight variations from airport to airport and situation to situation.

2013 8:55:4 TSA works hard to achieve consistency in the security training process. We inspect screening operations at airports and continue to monitor the number and nature of complaints we receive from the traveling public to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees are the subject of repeated complaints.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager at that location.

Nonetheless, passengers are permitted to wear disposable booties, socks, or slippers through the screening checkpoint to help protect their feet at walk-through metal detector and the AIT machines. The disposable footwear may be removed and placed into the individual's accessible property prior to exiting the screening checkpoint.

My family recently travelled from the Wayne County Metro Airport in Michigan to the Fort Lauderdale Airport in Florida and had very different screening processes at both airports. In Michigan my two children and I walked through the "old metal detector". My husband followed behind me but he was called out to go into the AIT machine. He asked the officer "Don't I have a choice?" The officer said "No Sir, you do not have a choice." In Fort Lauderdale my husband went first in line and said to the officer "I don't want to go in that machine." The officer said "That's fine Sir, you can go through the other one." There were signs clearly posted in Fort Lauderdale that being screened by the AIT machine was optional. Clearly my husband did not have an option when we were in Michigan. Why did this happen?

All the information that I am able to recover is that it was Delta Airlines, Flight DL1604, April 7/13, and it departed at 0726. We went through security at approximately 0530 at Detroit Metropolitan Wayne County Airport. I also may add that after they forced my husband through the AIT scanner, they swabbed his hands for bomb residue, in front of our two children. I was unable to find the gate information but hopefully this will be enough information for you.

Comment : I am 76 years old. I went on vacation for Portland OR to Hawaii March 2013.

At Portland, I kept my shoes and light jacket on and I just walk through a metal detector. No pad down. Done. That was great.

On the way back from Hawaii, I was harassed along the line by that I had to remove my shoes, and suit jacket. I was also force to have a pad down.

I thought Hawaii is part of the US. American citizens are being treated as aliens. Who is in charge of TSA? You people need to get your act together and make sure all policies should be uniform.

We should keep in mind that all so-called terrorists are aliens NOT AMERICANS. STOP treating American citizens as terrornsts.

2013 9:08:3 What happened? Describe your complaint. Give as much detail about your experience as possible, including the name of the air carrier, if this occurred at an airport.

I encountered officer (b)(6) at his post on my way to gate C42 on the evening of April 5th at around 7:45pm. He was manning the metal detector/security apparatus that passengers walk through. He needs some remedial training in being courteous (while at the same time authoritative) manner in providing instruction to passengers. His several hundred counterparts I have encountered, that are no doubt reflective of the tens of thousands at TSA that on a daily basis handle large number of passengers with a balance between politeness, efficiency, and assertiveness.

Officer (b)(6) represents is lacking on the politeness axis as he barks instructions like a Nazi Sargeant; he is/was not rude specifically to me, nor does it seem to me he is a rude person. But his instructional tone, with no use of the words please, sir, or maam do give that impression. This was how he acted with the passengers before me, me, and those behind me. Please have supervisor or you look out for this and see if there is a difference between how he handles passengers and others do. If he was having a bad day and decided to be rude, than enough said. But if this is what he is doing on a daily basis, than it needs to be corrected so we as passengers continue to respect authority.

When did this happen? Please provide the approximate time of the experience. If ongoing, please indicate when the problem began.

Security checkpoint around Gate C42 on April 5th between 7:45pm and 8:15pm

Caller wants to know when he goes through screening can he put an athletic cup on before he has to have a patdown. He just wants to put it on at the checkpoint, not have it on already. He was denied boarding yesterday because he had tested positive for the swab, he wants to know what he was tested for. He was then brought in a private room for his screening where there were 4 men in the room with him. He had something that happened to him as a child and touching him and haveing him in the private room almost made him have a panic attack. He is traveling out of St Louis Lamber. His swabed his palms of his hands not his bag. He makes products from Hemp, would that be something that would have tested positive?

Told caller

The majority of passengers can be screened without being touched by a Transportation Security Officer (TSO). Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

I could not tell him he could put on the cup while at the checkpoint.

13 12:27: For future flights he could call TSA Cares and let them make arrangements for him, let them give the airport a heads up. So they understand he had some issue. TSA Cares is for passengers with a disability or medical condition. For his flight tomorrow he can call the CSM so they can understand what happened to him yesterday and maybe let them know why this is difficult for him.

When/Where did this happen?

Boston Logan Airport, Security checkpoint around Gate C42 on April 5th between 7:45pm and 8:15pm

I am in my early 50's and have a severe hearing loss. While I use hearing aids, they are not effective in noisy environments with many voices and hard surfaces that reflect sound. Places like TSA security checkpoints at busy airports!

Consistently I get frustrated traveling through SeaTac, our local airport, when TSA agents give an instruction I cannot hear. I try to explain that I cannot hear them due to a hearing loss, and they simply repeat the instruction. I explain again that I cannot hear what they are saying, and again, they simply repeat the instruction. This is my experience on pretty much every trip through security at SeaTac.

On a recent trip, the lines seemed especially long and confusing. While I was waiting for my turn to approach the x-ray machines and metal detectors, I noticed a TSA agent who had apparently been assigned to walk up and down the lines approaching the x-ray machines and explain...something. I have no idea what. But judging by her gestures and "route" up and down the line, she was clearly giving an instruction to the approaching passengers. It occurred to me that a surprisingly large number of people in this country have a significant hearing loss. Furthermore, at an international gateway airport, many travelers could be non-English speaking. Many people in these groups would not understand the agents instructions.

So why are there not better signs and posters clearly illustrating the steps required to go through the security checkpoint? These could include numbered photos (or carefully illustrated posters) shown in sequence to show what items to remove, how to place shoes and coats in the bins, etc.

2013 12:00:

I have started to carry a button and card that explains I cannot hear in noisy situations, but at the TSA security checkpoint, I would have to remove the button (it's metal) and there is no way to give the card to every TSA agent involved in the process.

How does TSA recommend someone who is deaf or severely hard of hearing make their needs known to the security screeners?

Is TSA in need of assistance in making the security checkpoints more usable for people who are deaf or hard of hearing?

Thank you for considering these issues.

TSA Employee: (If Known) (b)(6) (?) Comment : This TSA agent was unprofessional, unorganized, and very rude. This resulted in an extremely inefficient security checkpoint proceedings. She was excessively loud, and rudely pointed her index finger at every traveller. Because of her unprofessional behavior there was a very long line through the metal detector. One specific action should be addressed. During this inefficient line for the metal detector she rudely directed that an elderly woman give up her walking cane to run it through the x-ray machine. Then she put two or three people through the metal detector prior to this elderly lady who after a few minutes was visibly uncomfortable with no place to sit and not having access to her cane to lean upon. I understand the cane needs to be sent through the x-ray machine. But this should be managed gently and professionally so that the elderly lady can give up her cane and proceed directly through the metal detector, or through additional pat-down if necessary, without having to wait for several minutes without her cane or a place to sit.

I am an airline crew member with a valid airline ID. I was not in uniform, and I was going through C South Checkpoint at Houston Intercontinental Airport. I sent all my belongings through the x-ray machine, and at that time they closed the full-body scanner for "calibration" and sent me through the metal detector, and I did not set it off. After I cleared the metal detector, the TSA Supervisor, (b)(6) (that's the name he gave me whether it's right or not, I am not sure, but I believe his badge number was (b)(6)), came and confronted me and started harassing me for my ID. I asked politely why, and he kept asking for it. Finally, he asked if I was working a flight, and I informed him no, at which point he says I have to go through the full-body scanner. I exited the checkpoint and went through the full body scanner. After passing this check, I asked for his Badge Number. He gave me a post it note with his information and asked for my ID. He took my ID and proceeded to leave my sight to the back office. I was not allowed to go with, when he returned I demanded that I have to be in sight of my possessions at all times, and he laughed me off and gave me my ID back, and in his other hand he had made photo copies of my ID.

2013 10:02: This happened on 4/17/2013 at 17:43 at the C South Check Point at Houston Intercontinental Airport. I have also emailed the ACLU.

Response Details: If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

I apologized to the caller for the experience of her passenger. I provided the caller the email address and the mailing address to file a written complaint.

Sent the D RFI to passenger.

I incorporated the flight info in the recent flight info and itinerary.

Incident Details: The callers friend is blind. She was traveling from San Diego on 4-10-2013 at the TSA checkpoint. The caller said her friend alarmed the WTMD because of her white cane. The passenger in question then was asked to have a patdown. The caller said during the patdown the TSO agent refused to allow the blind passenger to have her cane present. Also during the patdown the TSO explained the process but was very rough with the passenger and knocked her off balance. The caller then requested that the cane be returned and the passenger in question reached her hands out to find the cane. The TSO agent told the passenger to calm down. The caller then at that point requested a Supervisor on behalf of her friend. The Supervisor (b)(6) advised the passengers friend to next time contact TSA Cares for assistance for the flight to avoid an issue like this.

2013 1:08: The caller said that she needed assistance with the situation going on in front of him but the supervisor simply told her what she can do for the next flight. The caller said that she told Supervisor (b)(6) to handle the situation at that very moment. The TSO then advised the cane would have to go thru the x ray screening but the caller's friend refused to put the cane through the x ray. The last time she had her cane x rayed by TSA, it came out broken and unusable so she was reluctant this time. The caller said the TSO agent disassembled the cane and sent it thru the x ray anyway, and the cane did break during screening. The caller said her friend now has a broken cane and wants to report this abuse. The caller provided the flight info for she and her friend.

The caller does feel that this was a failure to accommodate to her friend's disability.

The caller stated that she will file the written complaint on behalf of her friend. Since she is blind, she is unable to file it on her own. The caller also wanted to know how to contact the CSM at SAN. I provided the caller the IVR and option 5 information.

The caller also asked how to file a civil rights complaint with a group that represents the blind such as a coalition or group.

The caller said the last time she flew from George Bush Intercontinental in Houston, her metal implant did not set off any alarms. The caller wanted to know why the metal detectors are not detecting her metal implant. The caller said she flew 6 months ago on American Airlines. The caller said when she goes through the metal detectors at the jails her implants set off the alarms.

2013 4:47:5 I placed the caller on hold and spoke with a security specialist. I told the caller I would forward the information for her so it will be reviewed. I told the caller I would send the information to the CSM. I decided not to forward the information to the CSM because the caller could not provide a specific date and time she flew from Houston. The caller did not know the flight number she flew on.

Callers daughter has traveled to Ft. Lauderdale from Long Island twice and she has been pulled aside both times. Caller states that her daughter has flown many other times and had no incidences. Caller indicates that on one of her flights, she was pulled aside and her fingerprints were taken. Caller wants to know why we are doing this to an American citizen.

Advised Caller:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a pat down on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

2013 1:12:3 TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

Preston took over the call.

Caller is concerned because ever time her daughter flies out of FLL she is pulled aside for additional screening. Caller stated that her daughter was pulled aside and fingerprinted for a previous flight. Advised caller that TSA does not fingerprint passengers but her daughter could have been screened by ETD. Advised caller that during the ETD testing the officers would have ran a wand with paper attached to the end of it, and then tested the paper. Advised caller that this could be what her daughter confused as fingerprinting.

Callers daughter has traveled to Ft. Lauderdale from Long Island twice and she has been pulled aside both times. Caller states that her daughter has flown many other times and had no incidences. Caller indicates that on one of her flights, she was pulled aside and her fingerprints were taken. Caller wants to know why we are doing this to an American citizen.

Advised Caller:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a pat down on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

2013 1:12:3 TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

Caller is concerned because ever time her daughter flies out of FLL she is pulled aside for additional screening. Caller stated that her daughter was pulled aside and fingerprinted for a previous flight. Advised caller that TSA does not fingerprint passengers but her daughter could have been screened by ETD. Advised caller that during the ETD testing the officers would have ran a wand with paper attached to the end of it, and then tested the paper. Advised caller that this could be what her daughter confused as fingerprinting.

On April 8, 2013, my mother (b)(6) 86 year old female, my son (b)(6) and I (b)(6) was at Fort Lauderdale airport flying back to Virginia. We had checked our bags, my mother was assisted by an airport personnel in a wheelchair and we were going through security check. My mother ID consisted of her Social Security Card, a state issued Photo Senior Citizen Card with her signed signature and social security number on the card and a Commonwealth of Virginia Voter Registration Card.

The airport security would not allow her to proceed, he called his supervisor, and the supervisor would not allow her to board without additional screening. He tell me she need a driver's license or a passport. My mother do not drive and she do not have a passport. The supervisor wrote on her ticket NO ID. Two female airport security had her to pass through a metal detector, thorough patdown, her purse and medicine bag searched and her shoes swabbed. No problem found.

Checking your website:

www.tsa.gov/traveler-information/acceptable-ids there are acceptable ID. I don't understand what the problem was with her ID. My mother loves to fly but after what she went through this last flight she says it will be her last. I am very outraged. How would you feel if was your parent?

What happened?

Leaving St. Croix the metal detector went off. The agent (female) said she would have to do a body search. As I was in a short above the knee dress that was also sleeveless & presently without shoes I assumed she meant pass a wand over me and perhaps lightly run the back of her hands over my body excluding my vagina. She seems intimidating & hostile. She then asked me if I wanted to be searched in a private room. I told her no, my husband was waiting & by this point I was feeling very uneasy. She proceeded to have me spread each leg & she ran her fingertips along the inside of my panties. She did it several times on each side 6-7 times. My husband was watching & I was really upset by this time. One of the fingertip brushes crossed the opening of my vagina. Finally, after about 7-10 minutes she allowed me to join my husband. I felt like crying & was so freaked out. He saw how I had been touched. I thought about complaining but was so scared I would not be allowed to get on the plane & get away from there.

I have travelled a lot, all over the world. I have been searched before but never have I been touched in my privates. This was sexual assult. I'll never go. Back to St. Croix again. That woman is a sex offender that your agency allows to assault women.

Caller:
Caller is calling in behalf of his wife who finds the full body patdown really embarrassing and invasive. She has two knee replacements. She has received a patdown the last three times they have traveled. They travel on Alaska Airline. He wants to know if there is any document she can obtain to be exempt from receiving another patdown.

Advised Caller:
I told the caller there is no way that she can avoid a patdown by having paperwork saying she has two knee replacements. If she is not cleared by the WTMD and AIT then she will have to go through a patdown. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

- 2013 5:39:3
- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.
 - The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.
 - A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

I am a member of the Pre-Check/Trusted Traveler/Global Entry Program. I have a total knee replacement on my left leg.

According to the TSA web site, the Pre-Check/Trusted Traveler/Global Entry programs allow a qualified person to leave shoes, belts, pocket change, etc. on their person and liquids, laptops, etc. in the carry on luggage. I assume that belt buckles, etc. will set off a metal detector alarm and agents are used to that but would allow a Pre-Check/Trusted Traveler/Global Entry Program to pass.

I have a total knee replacement on my left leg. Like pocket change, shoes, metal belt buckles, etc. the knee will set off a metal detector. So, what is the difference between my Pre-Check/Trusted Traveler/Global Entry Program total knee replacement and the pocket change, belt buckles, shoes, etc.

I joined the Pre-Check/Trusted Traveler/Global Entry Program to speed my passage through security. In most cases, it doesn't. Now that the TSA is going to allow small knives (which I am against), etc., why not also consider total knee/hip replacements!

2013 9:31:6 Thank you for your consideration.

Caller is wanting information on how she can vote for the AIT vs the pat down. She read in the Washington Post that she can vote at the Federal Register website but can not find the voting section on that page. She does not like the screening procedures that are set in place and has avoided flying because of this. She thinks that the WTMD and the dogs at the airport are the only way that should be screened at the airports. She feels that the screening procedures are a violation to her constitutional rights.

2013 10:45: CCR informed her that we have no information on this and since it was created by the Federal Register she can go through them directly. Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. She can voice her opinion by writing to TSA HQ, but caller stated that she isn't good at writing.

Caller went through the checkpoint in SAN and he had to take off his hat they told him that he held this. When flying through PHX, they made him take this off and put it on the xray belt. When it can out on the other end, there were marks all over this and it was all bent out of shape. He was handed a card by the TSO that told him to call into the TCC.

2013 11:17: CCR informed him: TSA strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories before beginning the security screening process. Some airports allow these to go through the WTMD with them and some want it to go through so it would be best to just place this in the bin before hand.

A claim form will be sent to him within 7-10 business days to file a claim.

Comment : Traveling with severe sunburn with skin blisters. I always opt out because I do not like radiation risks. Asked to use metal detector because skin hurt badly...was told no by a nasty arrogant worker who proceeded to let an entire group through because they were "a family". Woman came and I attempted to lift my ankle length dress up to knee level to show her the burns and blisters. She "scolded" me for being inappropriate and said "put your dress down now". Then I pulled the sleeve down on my dress to expose the burns and blistering on my shoulders and tries to explain burns were on my chest area and pulled the neck of my dress over slightly to show my chest area. I asked her to not touch these areas. She threw her hands up and shouted, "I'm done". A supervisor came over and got quite close to my personal space and said he could keep me from getting home. I spoke to my husband who was standing on the other side of the gate without stepping out of the footprints on the floor. The supervisor said "You don't talk to him. You talk to me. I talk, you listen. He then called another woman over and conducted their "pat down". The rubbing on the back of my legs broke some blisters and causes pain. But nobody gave a damn. I was never treated with such disrespect in my life. I am contacting my state representative. I thought TSA was supposed to take medical and physical conditions seriously. Guess they still are low paid apes that think they are in charge of everyone. I am a US citizen and human being and was treated like shit. Aloha to travelling by plane again I hope TSA goes broke as a result of government cut backs....and I hope all the workers involved get second degree burns on their useless bodies. And of all places...I just spent a week in Hawaii being told that Hawaii believes all people are family and should be treated as such. Would the TSA apes have treated their mother or sister that way.

Caller stated that she didn't want the AIT or walk through metal detector in fear that she'll get radiation poisoning. Wanted to request a patdown and wanted to know what the process would be for a patdown.

2013 1:34: Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search, and as the screening is being conducted, the TSO should be describing the procedures he or she is using. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

Passengers have the right to request a private screening, and private screening will be conducted in a room or in an area away from other passengers

Caller is in a wheelchair because she is pregnant and has difficulty standing. She told them at the checkpoint that she cannot go through the metal detector. It took 15 minutes to get an agent to check her. An agent by the name of (b)(6) came over and asked the other TSO if she can stand and the caller responded to (b)(6) yes, she can stand and she cannot go through the metal detector because she is pregnant. She was taken around a gate and was taken to an area beyond the WTMD. (b)(6) was rude throughout the whole process. Her stuff had already gone through with her husband. (b)(6) asked her husband which stuff was the callers, and told him not to touch it, and then she asked the caller which stuff was hers. The caller pointed it out and then literally threw it on the belt. The caller stated that there were fragile items in the bag and luckily nothing was broken. Then (b)(6) patted her down. This was at JFK on April 3rd at 10 pm. Terminal 3 via Delta flight number 268 to Tel Aviv.

She wants to file a complaint. She does not think the treatment was disability related just poor customer service, although she feels that people in wheelchairs do not get the treatment they should and TSOs need to be trained in how to treat people in wheelchairs.

I apologized to the caller and told her that the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

(b)(6) stated that he feels there was a potential security threat at Dallas Ft. Worth yesterday evening. He was flying back into the country and had a layover at DFW. When he was going through the TSA security checkpoint, they were getting ready to close and he feels that the officers were not doing their job properly. He stated that they kept making comments and acted very unprofessional. He stated that they whisked him through security very quickly and he even set off the metal detector, but they just told him to go on without resolving the alarm. He stated that he did not feel safe with them performing in this manner.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc) :

Comments: The TSO working at the metal detector redirected me to the body scanner, and when I declined and requested a pat-down, she tried to patronize me and tell me it's not an x-ray machine. I still declined, and she told me it wasn't dangerous, and I repeated that I wanted to opt out. She then tried to ostracize me and yelled out that "We have an opt-out and the guy won't even stand next to the machine" then rudely told me it would be a long wait, even though I counted almost a dozen male TSO's ambling around either side of the security checkpoint, and in fact had to wait around ten minutes.

I think it was inappropriate and rude for the TSO to try and disrespect me for deciding not to go through the scanner.

Caller went through security and now has 2 items missing from her purse. She is missing 2 silver coins from her purse, worth $25 each. They are special mint coins, not a common coin. She bought 13 of the special coins and now she only has 11. The wheelchair attendant placed her items on belt and the caller didn't observe anyone looking in her personal belongings. Caller was in a wheelchair but she walked through the metal detector.

After she was screened, she got back in the wheelchair and the attendant from the airline that was assisting with her wheelchair brought the items back to her. She said the bag was zipped up when she gave to the attendant and it was open when it was returned to her and she closed it. She didn't think about items being missing from it at the time.

Caller flew from Birmingham, AL to DTW via Delta, Flight #3804, Gate #A7.

I am TSA Pre qualified and last month I had a full knee replacement.

Unfortunately, the screws in the knee set off the metal detector.

Since I am Pre qualified, the only security issue should be to verify that there isn't anything else on me that would set off the metal detector.

This could be done quickly and efficiently with the hand held metal detector wand.

Instead, I am subjected to the full body pat down and chemical test.

2013 9:58:1 This doesn't make sense because before I had the knee, none of that happened.

I am still Pre qualified.

Please change the procedure in the TSA-Pre line only to use the wand in these situations.

It will be quicker, more efficient and a better experience for all concerned without compromising security.

Thank you for your consideration.

(b)(6)

Yesterday I was travelling from Atlanta, GA to Dallas, TX and went through security at approximately 3:15

While going through security they opened another line and had the traditional metal detector in place. For some reason it kept going off. I had nothing on me. I removed all of my jewelry which had to be sent through the machine which was completely fine with me until they let my jewelry sit there amongst other's belongings until I asked them several times to please pick my jewelry up so it wouldn't be stolen. The gentlemen that were there were completely professional. They thought it could be my underwire bra setting off the detector. At that point I don't understand why I couldn't have gone through one of the other machines that were in the other lines that are mostly used now instead of the older metal detectors. Or why couldn't someone with a wand could have come to isolate the area that was setting off the alarm?

Once they couldn't figure out why the detector went off they called a female to pat me down. She was extremely rude and inappropriate. I was wearing skinny jeans which are form fitting so you can tell there was nothing in my jeans. During her pat down she placed her hand (mostly fingers I'm sure) down my pants and in my panties. I was mortified and almost in tears as this was done in public. As well as it being painful since my jeans were tight without someone putting their hands/fingers in them. She had asked if I wanted a private screening at the beginning which I said I didn't need however I didn't know the inside of my pants would be searched especially when my jeans were form fitting and you could have easily felt if something was there. I've never had a pat down where hands were inside my pants and pull them out far enough to look down inside. Also as she inspected my breast, her hands were all over them and following every line of my bra including separating my breasts in the middle.

I've traveled many places and many countries. When this has happened before the people have been very nice and not been so invasive. She was very rude, but did apologize when it was obvious she was hurting me because she was wedging her hands in my pants. I've never seen anybody place hands/fingers in someone's pants before at an airport.

I understand the reason for security however if people are going to do this then there should be another witness watching and a private wall set up. I didn't want to leave the area because I had my young son with me as well and didn't want to leave him.

Disability Description: The caller has liquid medication. She is calling because she wants to get expedited screening. The caller states that she has to undergo additional screening each time that she flies.

Information Request: The caller wants to know if she can get expedited screening and she wants to know why she cannot get a background check and then forgo getting additional screening due to the fact that she has medical issues?

Response Details: The caller did not phone in on the ODPO line. The caller phoned in and was very unhappy whenever I explained to her that TSA was not expanding expedited screening to cover people with disabilities.

The caller believes that she and other persons with disabilities are getting an unfair amount of screening due to the fact that they have disabilities. She basically said that she did not feel like she was being a good citizen because she had to undergo the additional screening.

She stated that she did not necessarily set off the metal detector but she had to undergo a patdown especially at smaller airports due to the fact that she had a medical liquid, Glucerna. She stated that at smaller airports she had to undergo a patdown because additional testing could not be performed.

2013 3:38:2 The caller also stated that she has underwent multiple xray tests in the past and will not undergo AIT. She stated that each time she opts out of AIT she must undergo a patdown. She stated that she felt that the additional screening was a violation of the American with Disabilities Act.

I advised the caller TSA policies were not put in place to make people uncomfortable. I advised her that the policies were in place to ensure the safety of the public as well as the aircraft. I advised her that whenever people needed to take additional liquids on the plane or if they caused an alarm then they would have to undergo some additional screening.

I advised the caller that she could apply for a program such as global entry but that her medical items would still have to undergo some additional screening. The caller feels that there should be some way to prescreen persons with disabilities so that would not have to undergo the additional screening.

Since the caller is complaining about policy issues, I advised her that I would send her information to a disability specialist. I advised the caller that I could not promise that someone would call her but I advised her that I would send her information for review.

Caller flew from LAS to Monterey yesterday and thinks she is on some kind of list because her screening process is beginning to escalate, she was told there was some sort of anomaly that showed up when she went through the AIT. There were 3 in her party and they contacted Allegiant that her mother couldn't make the flight and requested a medical refund, which was refused. Allegiant knew her mother wasn't on the flight and the skycap asked where her mother was. They only received 2 boarding passes and the other individual was on another flight. There were 3 people who traveled, should have been 4. They had to change planes because something malfunctioned with the plane and the skycap called for her mother who had cancelled. Caller states her bag was tagged by the Skycap with the other persons name and her tag was placed on the other persons bag and that bag is missing. Stated the bags were mistagged and she was pulled out of the line and tested for explosives and this is happening too often. Caller says she usually goes through the AIT and has been told an anomaly was detected during the screening.

Response:

Apologized to caller for her screening experience and advised if an alarm triggers or an anomaly shows up going through screening she will have to have secondary screening to resolve and complete the screening process.

Once checked baggage has been screened and cleared, air carriers are responsible for transporting it to its final destination. TSA has no jurisdiction over lost or rerouted luggage. We encourage you to contact your airline for their policies on lost luggage, or to file a complaint with the customer relations office of the airline.

2013 5:06:4 If the airline does not satisfy your inquiry, the Department of Transportation's Aviation Consumer Protection Division (ACPD) may be able to help. The ACPD operates a complaint handling system for consumers who experience air travel service problems and provides a 24-hour hotline at (202) 366-2220.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

Explained to caller once the bag has been screened and cleared by TSA we no longer have access to a passenger's bag and the baggage handlers are responsible for sorting and transporting baggage from that point on to the destination. The changing of the planes and 4 hr. wait was her airline.

Explained to caller the ETD screening process is another way of screening and may be performed randomly, some airports may use this method of random screening more than others.

Caller flew from MCO to SLC to PDX today. He had two souvenir shot glasses that were wrapped in his clothing in his checked bag. He says that when he opened his luggage, one of the shot glasses was shattered. He says that this was not repacked right and now there is glass throughout the bag. There was a NOI in the bag. Caller says that he doesn't know if the shot glass was broken during inspection or if it was not packed right and broken during the time the baggage handlers had it. He says that when they went through the security checkpoint, the officers were more worried about getting people through the line quickly than checking them. He says that before he went through the WTMD he stuck his boarding pass back into his pocket. He says that an officer asked him what he put in his pocket and he responded with his boarding pass. The officer made him take this out and show it to him, then said okay. He says that if it were something he shouldn't have had it would have alarmed the WTMD. Caller says that the officers were arrogant. He says that he had some foil pouches of coffee in his carry-on bag and he assumed they would need to take a second look at this, but they didn't. He says that at the checkpoint, he was probably in the 6th or 7th lane from the right if you are looking at the checkpoint as if you are going through it.

Advised caller:

The officer probably questioned what he put in his pocket because the WTMD alarms for metal items. Non-metallic items do not alarm the WTMD. The officer probably did not pack the shot glass back correctly, which caused it to break when the baggage handlers were tossing the bag.

I explained to the caller that I would send claim forms via e-mail and he will receive them within 24 hours of this phone call.

I would forward a copy of this information to the CSM over TSA at MCO to make them aware of the situation.

Brief Description of Inquiry:

TSA treatment of traveler with Alzheimer's Disease

Comments:

Today I traveled from Columbia SC to Washington DC with my nephew, his wife and children, and my husband who has Alzheimer's disease. We encountered a TSA agent who was insulting and unkind in dealing with my ill husband.

I arrived at LAX this morning and transferred from Tom Bradley International to AA Terminal 4. One of your staff at the security check point at T4 was a total nightmare - screaming and shouting at passengers and shouted at me to remove my glasses and an eye-cover that was around my neck!!! Since when can you not wear glasses through airport security.

She then started shouting at other passengers to not just queue up for the regular metal detector screening but go through the new all-body screen, even though there was a rail up in front of that to stop people going through!

2013 2:05:0 Your staff do not have the right to be abusive or to bend the rules according to their own whims.

At the very least, they should do their jobs properly and behave professionally, not like illiterate idiots.

No wonder security in this country is a nightmare. I wish I had taken the name of this individual as she should be fired.

Callers daughter is flying from ATL to John Wayne and will be having surgery there on Friday. Caller states that her daughter will have to bring a cat with her. Caller is requesting that, do to the cats nature, I guarantee that the cat can stay in the carrying case.

Advised Caller:

Enhanced security measures require that all passengers and their belongings undergo security screening at airport checkpoints; this includes service animals and pets. Current Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires that passengers traveling with pets remove the animal from its carrier so that the pet may be carried through the walk through metal detector (WTMD).

2013 2:18:1 If a passenger believes that the removal of their pet could result in escape, a Supervisory Transportation Security Officer (TSO) can authorize an alternative screening measure that he or she deems sufficient. When permitted, an animal may remain in its carrier and be carried through the WTMD by the passenger; however, the passenger, the animal, and the carrier must undergo secondary screening.

Additional screening of the animal may include a visual observation, a patdown inspection, or Explosives Trace Detection (ETD). If additional screening requires removal of the animal from its carrier, passengers may request a private screening. TSOs may ask the owner for assistance during any part of the inspection.

Caller requested that she speak with a supervisor, Missy took the call.

Complaints: Inconsistent Screening (Different Practices between Airports).
Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Mon Apr 8
Flight 211

Depart San Jose (SJC) on Southwest Airlines at 09:35 AM
Arrive in Phoenix (PHX) at 11:20 AM.

Comments: This was another terrible experience with TSA. Several issues:

#1 inappropriate screening/pat down screening. I was directed to walk through the metal detector, then was escorted to a private area, and given a very intimate pat-down. My doctor doesn't even grope me as much as the TSA employee did. The employee felt my chest, armpits, back, buttocks, legs, thighs, testicles, and overall groin area. I was very upset.

#2 Inconsistent screening. Never before have I received such an intimate pat-down.

#3 Long lines. The TSA employees were slow. Half of the machines were shut down so we were filed into 2 or 3 areas. I arrived early and still almost missed boarding my flight.

This is a violation of my privacy, civil rights, and general human courtesy. I hate flying because of the TSA process. Horrible, horrible, horrible operation going on here.

They were screened in Greensboro and Salt Lake on the initial trip.
At Phoenix on the return trip she walked through the metal detector and it set off the machine and she got a patdown instead of the AIT.

In the screening process his wife was told by TSA Officers that it was OK to go through the AIT machine wearing her insulin pump.
They just called the manufacturer they said the Animas pumps have not been tested for magnetic fields so they do not know if it will affect it.
It could cost them a lot of money later if it causes an issue.

I asked if the pump is malfunctioning.

At this time the pump is functioning alright but he said this could have caused an issue which could potentially be life threatening.
He is upset that the Officers said it is safe. They said it is not like X Rays.

Told him all the information I have is regarding how to be screened.
We do not have information either way.

I explained ultimately it is the passengers responsibility to know if their equipment is safe with the screening equipment.
She does have the right to Opt Out of the AIT and have a patdown. Signs are posted at each AIT location advising of this.

He insisted on registering a complaint. Told him I will send over his complaint and I need the date and time of the AIT screenings.

He told me that she was screened:
3-26-13 Greensboro at 3:30 PM She was at screening around 2:30 PM They Flew Delta.
3-26-13 Salt Lake at 12:30 PM She was at screening around 11:30 PM . They Flew Delta

In reviewing notes the times did not seem right.
Also at the beginning he said it was the 27th when they began their trip.

Did a callback:

(b)(6) said she is unsure of the dates so call her husband at (b)(6)
She also said she cannot remember which airport it was that had her remove her pump and send it through the machine.
She said it was all a case of mishandling.

Told her I will call her husband as I need to be sure of the information in sending up the complaint.

Called (b)(6) and explained the discrepancies of the information given. I realized he confirmed 2 different dates and the times of day do not seem right either.

Caller works for United Airlines at the Newark Airport. He was calling for his nephew. His nephew flew on 4/23/2013 from LaGuardia to FLL and then to Santiago, Dominican Republic on Spirit Airlines. He did not have the flight number. His flight was at 7 pm and he went through the checkpoint between 4:30 and 5 pm. He had a laptop and a new nitron camera in a bag. He did not take the laptop out of the bag. The TSO told him that the laptop would have to go through the metal detector again. The TSO took the laptop out of the bag and sent it back through. He said that he went through the checkpoint to the left of the Spirit counter. When he arrived in the Dominican Republic he found that his new nitron camera is missing. Caller wanted a claim form emailed to him.

I gave information per: <http://www.tsa.gov/airport-lost-found-contacts>
LaGuardia Airport
718-662-5043

I gave the following information: TSA regrets that you found items missing from your carry-on luggage. TSA To file a claim you should fill out the claim form in accordance with the instructions and return it to the address in box number 1. Once the Claims Management Office (CMO) has received your claim form, you will be sent a letter of acknowledgement and a claim number. You should keep the claim number for future reference when inquiring about your claim.

I emailed him a claim form. I advised him that I would forward his record to the CSM at LaGuardia Airport for review.

I am writing in regards to an incident that occurred on Saturday, April 20th at around 4:00pm at the Hartford, CT airport (BDL). I entered the TSA security area as I have many times before. A female TSA officer asked me to remove my bracelet, so I immediately followed her instructions and placed my bracelet in the bin to go through the scanner, and walked up for my turn to go through the metal detector. When I retrieved my bin after the check, my bracelet was broken. The clasp had been torn off and several of the silver balls were scattered throughout the security bin. I was very sad and a male TSA officer witnessed the incident, and told me that I actually did not have to take my bracelet off; that it was optional. This was not told to me; I thought I had to do what the female TSA officer said and know better than to cause any commotion at an airport by questioning authority. A supervisory male TSA officer (b)(6) then came over and told me that I could fill out a TSA comment card and be reimbursed for my bracelet. So, that is what I am doing in this email.

Please see below for a receipt for my bracelet. It was $32.00. Will you please have a new bracelet mailed to me, or have a check mailed to me?

Thank you,

To Whom It May Concern:

I would like to complain about how I was treated by a TSA officer at a checkpoint. Chicago O'Hare. Terminal 1, checkpoint 2, 9:00 p.m. (+/- 5 min) April 25. The officer was white, 40s, slightly balding, and mentioning his need to go on break.

Our conversation was something like this:

Me: "So who gets to use the metal detector?"

Officer: [misunderstands question] No. [pause, no response] It's for airport employees. Are you an airport employee? [pause, no response from me] Negative. You can get out of line and have a pat-down. Would you like a pat-down today?

It was a polite question that got a rude response. While I am a patient person, I find it appalling that our country is represented by rude officers to thousands of international travelers. Even more concerning is his need to remind me who is in control, by his use of "pat-down". It was completely inappropriate, and I'm sorry to say I have seen power-tripping in TSA employees before. Please get this under control.

I recorded this while sitting at my gate, so please be assured it is an accurate account.

Sincerely,

To whom it may concern

Between 1130 hrs & 1200hrs on Friday 26th April I checked in at the delta terminal at JFK airport. Whilst going through security I am pretty sure I have now dealt with the rudest apathetic group of people in the airport security world! This is my first time travelling through the USA since that terrible day in 2001, so I am still getting used to your procedures and am travelling with two children! Your staff all have a sour look on their faces. I was trying to ask the guy at the metal detector if I needed to remove my shoes, I had to ask twice a got a look like I was an idiot and I think a nod of the head! When we were trying to get organised at the other side which had been clear prior to us all of a sudden my children were asked to move so that one of them could push a trolley full of trays away. I then asked one of them standing on the side about my wife returning through security because she is a smoker, he managed to look up from his phone for a second to mumble about I D and boarding pass before looking back down at his phone and continuing with his text/facebook or whatever he was doing! I am sure someone will say something about the stress of law enforcement etc. well I can say that I have been a front line (general duties/patrol) police officer in Australia for 13 years, and if any of my members were acting that way I would definitely have words to say about there attitude. I don't expect a brass band welcoming committee just some common courtesy and not to be looked at like an idiot!

Comment : I use the TSA Precheck and depending on the airport I sometimes set off the metal detector. I have an 8"x1/2" titanium rod inserted into my left lower leg. When it goes off they say that it was my lower legs. Why does this then precipitate a full body pat down? My groin does not set it off, my shoulders and chest are not setting it off.

Also when they start to explain the pat down process doesn't it seem reasonable that a known traveler in the Precheck lane would know these procedures? It seems like they could simply ask rather than going through the whole speal when it would not be necessary.

Subject: Issue at Reno airport on 2/25/2013

To whom it may concern,

Apparently I have been sending my issue to the wrong email address. I have written 2 other times on this issue, but have never received a response. I will try again.

On 2/25/2013 I was traveling from Reno to Phoenix. Unfortunately I do not have the flight number at hand. I can tell you that my flight departed Reno at about 12:40pm. I was flying US Airways. Somewhere around 10:30am I was in line to go through the checkpoint at gate "C". I was with my girlfriend. In front of me in line were two people who had "CREW" tags hanging around their necks. The first was an African/American man. He took his shoes off like all of us, and placed his bag on the conveyor belt and walked through the metal detector. Like WE ALL do. The second was a blondish white female. She struck up a conversation with the TSA person standing by the scanner. I noticed she placed her large cup on top of the conveyor belt machine. She then walked through the scanner. She never took her shoes off as she laughed with the TSA person monitoring the scanner. As she passed through I noticed the TSA person reach up to take her cup off the top of the machine. The TSA person then handed the cup to the "CREW" person. The cup never went through the "x-ray" machine, and the TSA person never even took the lid off the cup. It wasn't a small cup either. It looked more like a large coffee cup one might get at a coffee store. The "CREW" member then continued on her way.

I thought this transaction was a bit odd so after I went through I asked to speak to someone in charge. I was directed to the elevated desk where (b)(6) introduced herself as the person in charge. I told her what I had just seen, and her immediate answer was "she's a crew member. If she wanted to crash the plane she could do it with less than a cup of coffee". This reply came across as very unprofessional and very confrontational. I immediately told her so. I explained that I have to take my off my belt, watch, ring, hat, sweatshirt, shoes any tiny piece of paper has to come out of my pocket, and this person has to do none of it? I also pointed out that the "CREW" member in front of her followed the rules. That is when another TSA employee who was standing there the whole time chirped in. This TSA person was a bit overweight, white man in his 20s. He told me if I wanted to know why the "CREW" member got to go through like that I should ask her. That seemed very ignorant on his part. I thought by going to the TSA person in charge I would have gotten much more of an intelligent response.

Thank you for your email message. We appreciate that you took the time to share your concerns with us.

Because the described incident occurred at a security checkpoint, we have forwarded your email to the Customer Service Manager at the given airport.

2013 10:58: TSA monitors the nature of inquiries we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process will enable us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

We also encourage you to check the latest information at HYPERLINK "<http://www.tsa.gov>"www.tsa.gov.

TSA understands your concern regarding the effects the new screening procedures have had on flight crewmembers, including pilots and flight attendants. TSA Administrator John Pistole is committed to ensuring TSA operates as a risk-based, intelligence-driven Agency and launched several reviews of TSA policies soon after his confirmation to ensure all standards are met.

After evaluating alternative security protocols for flight crewmembers that

Hi,

My name is (b)(6). I work on the North Slope of Alaska as a contractor to ConocoPhillips. I have a disability. I contracted Polio during the 1940 to mid 1950s epidemic and have to wear braces. At the Anchorage Alaska Airport on April 16, 2013 I told the young man I wear braces and cannot take my shoes off. I have trouble standing in one place and have difficulty standing in the new screening device. If there were a handle to hold on to at the top of this device I would have no trouble. But there isn't so I cannot go through the new screening. He challenged me as to how I was walking and said "you seem to walk just fine to me".

The discussion elevated to an argument about whether I was going to be let through the screening area or not. Finally another TSA person came and got me and took me through the line. I was instructed to take off my shoes. To which I said "Okay you are making trouble for me, I will make trouble for you". When I pulled up my trouser leg they said "You wear braces". To which "Yes and I told that idiot out front, I had Polio at age 4 and wear braces and could not take my shoes off".

Now I am still working and was on my way to catch the company charter plane to the North Slope. I am 72 years. I am a white male U.S. Citizen and have worked overseas in areas such as Indonesia and Ivory Coast, West Africa. I have a disability. I have weak calves and ankles due to Polio at age 4. I carry a US passport and have traveled extensively in Europe and South East Asia. I strongly object to the way I was treated by these new hires in TSA. I can ask for a private screening but until now have never had a reason to.

Why are American citizens hassled when going through the security screening? I really believe the new device should be friendlier to disabled travelers or let disabled travelers go through the old metal detectors without question or hassle. My braces are made of carbon fiber and do not have any steel parts, I will not set off the alarm. What is with TSA on these issues?

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT).

Good afternoon,

My name is (b)(6) and I would like to report a concern re a TSA employee at the Kennewick/Pasco PSC Airport today April 28, 2013 at 4:30pm. While traveling with my fiancé, after placing my items and bag on the xray belt, (b)(6) addressed me to please reposition my bag. I did this immediately and positioned the remaining bags in a similar fashion. (b)(6) then asked me whether I trusted my traveling companion (fiance). I said that I did and went back to stand with him. We then waited for our bags to start through. (b)(6) left the metal detector directly after I went through (prior to my fiance going through) and stated that he needed to go through my bag. I felt very odd at this moment that he was targeting me.

He then proceeded to empty the entire contents of my gym type bag except the shoes. He even attempted to open my small red wallet, but was unable to understand the clasp. He then wiped everything down individually and sent the bag and the contents back through separately.

2013 8:12: When this was complete, he motioned me with his index finger to follow him to the repacking area. He proceeded to repack my bag and patronizingly explain to me how to pack my bag. Quote..."This morning when you woke up and packed your bag, it was an unfortunate sequence of events. You packed in such a way that the xray machine was unable to distinguish your two cell phones which were packed together." I had been quiet and compliant throughout this odd experience and politely thanked him by name at this time. I was unclear whether he was sexually harassing me or just simply targeting and harassing me today. It was very unpleasant and uncomfortable and extremely unprofessional. I am frequent traveler, holding Platinum status with Delta and MVP with Alaskan Airlines, so am not unfamiliar with the TSA screening process. In addition, I am an employee and surgeon for the Veterans Administration Health Care System and am very familiar with federal government security processes. My experience today, was as stated above, very unprofessional, personally invasive and bordered on targeting vs harassment. It may be advisable at this time to re-educate/remediate some key TSA employees at the Kennewick/Pasco Airport including (b)(6). Thank you for your time and attention to this matter today.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Response Details: If a passenger uses an ostomy, he or she can be screened without having to empty or expose the ostomy. However, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening about the ostomy before the screening process begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions.

Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger's ostomy is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the ostomy, followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands.

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

I explained that I can forward her concern to the appropriate office for review. I explained that I can email the information to her regarding the written complaint.

2013 12:35: I apologized to the caller for the situation.

Email sent.

NOTE:

I tried to call back for further details regarding the EWR incidents, however the number was busy. Sending to ODPO and CSMS for review anyway.

Incident Details: She stated that he has an ostomy and he has a pouch. She stated that today, at SDF, he had to empty his baggage completely. She stated that his hands did not pass the search, so he was taken to a private area and basically strip searched. She stated that they took a granola bar from him. She stated that he has to have certain foods for his condition, in the event he is not able to relieve himself on the flight. She stated that they would not give their last names and badge numbers to him at the checkpoint. She stated that his ostomy is a private part of his life, and he does not want everyone knowing about it. She stated that he used the blue card to let them know of his ostomy. She stated that he was treated as a terrorist.

She stated that this happens at EWR all the time, however not usually to this extent. She stated that in the past at EWR he was required to expose his ostomy bag by lifting his shirt. No specific details were provided regarding the incidents at EWR.

She stated that she does feel that this is disability discrimination because, if he did not have the ostomy this would not have happened. She stated her son does intend on submitting a complaint in writing.

On this occasion, he was at Terminal A at SDF, flying to EWR. She stated that the supervisor was (b)(6). The TSOs that were involved (b)(6) (male), (b)(6) (male), and (b)(6) (female). They conducted his screening. She stated that he

The caller want to know the policy regarding the AIT. The caller opted out of the AIT due to pregnancy and was not allowed to go through the metal detector at IND. She was made to have a patdown. She travels every week and IND is the only one that requires her to have a patdown instead of going through the metal detector. The caller said the website states that if you do not want to go through the AIT you can go through the metal detector.

Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown.

A passenger can request to be screened by imaging technology if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown, but cannot request to be screened by a metal detector in lieu of imaging technology or a patdown.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at IND.

Hello,

I would like to complain about the TSA screening service I received at ATL Airport on Friday, April 26, approximately 12:50PM.

The incident took place at scanner 22 with a male TSA agent. After seeing a mother and child bypass the body scanner and go through the metal detector, I requested that I too avoid the body scanner and simply go through the metal detector. Instead the agent said "No, you have to go through the scanner." I did not reply back and did go through the scanner, then was asked to wait outside. Another agent asked if I had anything in my pockets and I replied "No," and received a brief 5 second pat down outside the scanner on my backside where my pockets where. After nothing was found, I was then instructed to wait again, and follow a female agent to have my fingers tested for residue. After I passed, I was free to go.

My complaint is three fold. First, asking to bypass the scanner is not only allowed, but the TSA agent should inform the passenger that this is possible but going through the metal detector and a standard pat down is required if bypassing the body scanner. The agent did not inform me of this right, even though it is standard process according to the TSA blog. Second, I watched approximately 20 people ahead of me go through the body scanner, and none received a post body scanner pat down. Finally, I would like to note that I was again singled out and required to go through the hand residue test.

All that I ask is that you inform the team at the ATL about the scanner opt out request and ensure they are fully trained. That is all, thanks.

I, the husband, was holding the baby. Female screener (b)(6) guarding the walk-through-metal-detector (WTMD) directed my wife to the millimeter wave (MMW) Nude-O-Scope (NoS), causing me to hand the baby to my wife, myself be directed to the NoS with a dirty look from the screener, and opt out.

Unpublished but obvious TSA policy for quite a while has been that all parents traveling with a child under 12 are allowed through the WTMD and able to avoid the NoS or opt-out process. This screener insisted on separating us, and the male-assist who performed my opt-out grope defended her and claimed it was SOP to send only one parent through the WTMD. This is blatantly false as evidenced by my many trips with this baby through many airports, including BOS, in the past year where we 013 12:04:4 have not been separated.

TSA unexpectedly separating myself from my wife during this period made it much harder for her to re-pack our property, protect it from damage and potential theft, and simultaneously handle the baby. It also backed up the x-ray line. Male assist performing my opt-out grope claimed that he didn't care since he was paid by the hour and not per passenger screened. That is evidence of classic government-bureaucrat mentality.

Comment : I was witness to very rude, disrespectful treatment of the traveler two people in front of me in line, going through the screening process. At the head of the line, the traveler asked if he could NOT be screened as he was concerned about electromagnetic energy from the machine, as he was trying with his wife to have a baby, and as a physician there were concerns about electromagnetic energy and birth defects (he was very polite yet serious). The nice TSA lady said she didn't think the machine emitted energy, but that he could request a pat-down instead of the metal detector. At the point of going through the metal detector, the traveler very politely asked for the alternate/pat-down screening. Three TSA representatives and what appeared to be a senior officer were involved, telling the man that he must go through the metal detector and that he was in the wrong line for a pat-down, and that he needed to go through now as he was holding up the line. The man, continuing to be polite, said that he had been told he could request the alternate, and if he could be directed to where he needed to go, he would comply. At this point, the senior officer raised his voice saying that the traveler had two choices: He could go 013 8:43:2 through the metal detector now, or the officer would alert the air line that the traveller had refused to be scanned and he would not be allowed to fly today or perhaps in the future. The officer said this at least three times, in a loud and intimidating voice until the man complied. I am writing because it is shameful that this traveler was subjected to such treatment, particularly when he had alerted the earlier TSA agent of his wishes and was just trying to do what he could to ensure that he would have a healthy baby. The traveller tried to be polite and was bullied by the senior officer. I regret not getting the man's badge number or name, but quite frankly, I was worried that he would then come after me as a possible accomplice to whatever crime he felt the traveller had committed. The traveller had what might have been a scandinavian accent, which further upset me that he was a guest in our country experiencing such rude treatment and lack of respect for his rights. I have a lot of respect for what the TSA and law enforcement folks are trying to do to protect us, but the senior officer's behavior was wrong and embarrassing. I was compelled to write as I hope the traveller has also filed a complaint, and mine can serve to support him.

The caller indicated that the female document checker had problems with his TWIC card that he presented for ID. The female TSO (b)(6) medium build, black hair) accused him of tampering with the TWIC card; however he was permitted to enter the checkpoint.

A blonde female TSO that was very nice and polite pointed out that he had forgotten to remove a cell phone in his pocket.

He passed through the WTMD with no problem; however a male TSO by the name of (b)(6) Lead Supervisor) roughly grabbed his shoulder and indicated that his pants were too baggy and that he would have to conduct a pat down. The caller feels that there was no reason for the pat down and that he was deceived. The caller indicated that he was wearing Wrangler boot cut cowboy cut jeans and when pulled out at the thigh there is about two inches of slack fabric, less than the pants of the TSO uniforms and regular slacks worn by other passengers. The TSO roughly touched his private parts.

The caller asked if there was video of this.

The caller indicated that he doesn't like that he cannot always see his things during the screening process. He indicated that he has not been able to maintain line of sight with his items. He should be permitted to collect his belongings and bring them with him if additional screening is required.

10:13 8:41:3 TSA still owes him $850 for cross and chain piece of jewelry that became missing a couple of years ago as it he was required to remove it at the checkpoint. It was never found. He indicated that he did file a claim and it was ignored.

He indicated that he did not like the attitudes from TSO's as they act like their have God like status and if a passenger disagrees with a TSO, the TSO can prevent them from flying or get them arrested.

The caller indicated that he would like to provide kudos to the two female TSO that were very nice and polite.

The caller asked if there was a restriction in regard to powder and a fungal powder was not permitted. He indicated that screening for residue was not conducted.

The caller indicated that he requested a contact number from one of the female TSO's and indicated that he didn't want to speak with anyone at the airport. He indicated that he didn't want to speak with a supervisor however the TSO Lead (b)(6) came over and was rude to him (b)(6) provided a comment card which the passenger completed and placed in the appropriate box.

The caller stated that this is the only airport that requires him to remove his shoes and place on the conveyor belt. Other airports require that the shoes be placed in a bin and not on the conveyor belt directly. TSO are hard on passengers if they don't place shoes on the conveyer belt. They badger people and TSO make their own rules.

The caller asked how long he should allow for the CSM to contact him back.

I apologized in regard to the experience and advised that I had documented all of the information provided. I explained that TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints that are received and that I would also refer the information to the CSM at

Comment : TO whom its my concern,

My name is (b)(6) I'm been working for LAX for the last 4 years with Virgin Australia under the contract of Virgin America. On April 30, 2013 around 8:30pm, I had an incident with the TSA females at terminal 3. It all started when I was going through security with a wheelchair passenger. When the wheelchair was taken in to do a female assist. During that time I was walking through the metal detector, the alarm went off. I went in the first time, TSA asked me to put my badge in the machine, then walk in again. Alarm went off again so that's when TSA decided to get me a female assist. While I was waiting, I asked TSA if I can get my badge back because I don't feel safe without it. She kind of gave me a attitude just because I was asking for my badge. Then, when I went through with TSA, she asked me what else do I have in my pocket. My answer was my money, then she asked me to take it out and put it in the container; as well my shoes, belt, and ring. When I did that she took the container and walked away. I ask her excuse me why you taking my money, can you please leave it on the table. I don't see the need for you to put the money on ex-ray belt. Then, she took my stuff to the ex-ray belt, other TSA staff approach me to give me instructions on how is the procedure of pat down. When she started with the pat down, I felt uncomfortable and humiliated knowing that I been working at the airport for the last 4 years. In the other hand, TSA she should only said, 10:13 2:26:4 remove your belt not your badge maybe I would've not gotten the pat down. Also, when I went back to get my pen from the table. The group of TSA that checked me and wheelchair passenger. They making me feel humiliated and they were laughing I got a pat down.

I understand that all of us we have instruction's to follow and work to do, but all with Respect. "Not with humiliation"

Please take this inconsideration for future customer's or staff.

Comment : I travel regularly for business. I know the routine well and comply with all regulations a requests. Today I saw the worst of TSA. As I was going through the metal detector there was a beep. The agent said it was a routine random inspection. No problem, he told me to wait there and someone would come to get me. So I waited. Next, a very large woman walked toward me, unable to make herself take the walk all the way and she said something like I told you to follow me, in a very mean and terse tone. So, I headed that way but went to the belt to get my things. She made no attempt to bring my items and she yelled at me not to touch anything. I asked her if she was taking personal responsibility for my wallet, personal items and laptop. In a huff she grabbed part of the items and said again in a terse tone, follow me. I tried to get the rest of my things and she yelled at me. So, I left them there. We got to her station and she used some tape thing on my hands that burned, put it in a machine and walked away. She didn't say a word other than to turn her back. I stayed there waiting to be released. Finally after walking away, she said you can get your other things. I asked to see her supervisor and talked to that lady. She said she would address it. (Will she really? The supervisor said the other person was supposed to gather my things and bring them with me to the station, but obviously she had no intention of doing that until I asked her if she was taking responsibility for my items.) Being treated like a criminal by a gruff mean spirited person that is too lazy to do her job is not what I expect out of TSA or anyone. I understand the importance and am glad we protect our travelers. The random checks are fine too. But usually you get told it is random and what they are doing and a friendly demeanor. This person thought she could treat me like dirt. I hardly look like a terrorist, unless you consider a white, protestant, 53 year old in a suit with nothing on him, to be a threat to national security. This kind of thing needs to stop. I am angry at the lack of professionalism and suspect this person is a regular problem based on her attitude.

In 1998 I had a total hip replacement (all metal).

I am very sorry to hear that the TSA will soon discontinue use of Advanced Imaging Technology (backscatter and/or millimeter wave), which was very convenient for people like me. I travel fairly frequently, and am wondering if there is anything I can do (pre-screening, etc.) to avoid a full pat-down every time I pass through security, because I know my hip will set off the metal detector.

Respectfully,

In the past few years, I have successfully used the body scanner without being discriminated against due to my knees. This trip, I found out that the body scanner at SMX had been sent to Fresno and I was forced to undergo a body patdown after setting off (obviously with my knees) the metal detector alarm. This discrimination is unfair! Please obtain a replacement body scanner for the SMX airport so that all passengers will be screened fairly! Comments: My daughter uses a insulin pump and every single time she flies she gets abused by the TSA in Tampa. Intimidation must be part of the training because it is the norm for TSA to push her through the screening process when her pump manufacture tell her not to go through the metal detector. No matter who she gets the TSA agent argues with her each and every single time. She dreads flying out of Tampa more than any other airport. This time during the arguing her carry on was out of site and she asked for it and the TSA agent told her she should have thought of that when she wouldn't go through the scanner. The pumps cost 2 to 3 thousand dollars and she has replaced one already. How insulting and unprofessional.

What is the point of showing your boarding pass twice before you go threw the check point where tsa checks your Id then pass . I do no Not under stand why I have to show again before I go threw a hole body scanner . That is telling me you dnt trust the tsa agents who scan your boarding pass then Id . Also I have notice that. This airport security is so slow it should not take that long to go threw security . Metal detectors should be a option not fenced off . Your airport is deficient in getting passengers threw in a timely manor . You should look at Boston Logan airport and model after them maybe you will be able to process passengers threw security in a timely manor .

The caller is a frequent traveler at ORD. The caller state that TSA admitted there is a flaw in the screening process. The caller states that due to the sequesterian the security is being compromised. The caller states that due to the long lines they are opening up lanes and letting people go through the metal detector instead of the AIT. The caller wants to know why they are being allowed to go through the metal detector. The caller states that if very alarming because a passenger could possibly get through screening with a bomb and it be undetected by the metal detector. He went through screening today and last Wednesday and very upset because he feels this issue has caused the TSA checkpoints to become less secure than before.
The caller states that it is very risky to let passengers go through the metal detector. The caller states they can email him and give him a phone number if they needed or wanted to talk to him.

Because your complaint concerns security screening at a particular airport, we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Service Manager at ORD.

The caller has two knee replacements. The caller said everytime she travels she has to go through the metal detector and she has to receive a pat-down. The caller said she always has to go to a private room and have a pat-down performed again. The caller said she is a 78 year old woman and she is not a threat. The caller said she will be traveling again and she wanted to know what she needs to do to avoid this happening.
I told the caller if she goes through the metal detector or the AIT and alarm sounds or an anomaly appears she would have to under-go a pat-down. I told the caller she would have to under-go a pat-down even if she tells the officer she has the metal implants. I told the caller she can request to speak with a supervisor.

She stated that they were coming through PHX to BUR today, and went through security around 7:25-7:30 a.m. Her husband has 2 knee replacements, and generally he goes through the AIT, but there was only one of those available, and it was at the other end. She thinks that there should be a sign saying that any passenger with metal implants would need to go to the specific line that has the AIT. The lines weren't long at all, and they got to walk up and go right through, but because there was no sign there saying that he should go through the AIT because of the metal implants, he got a patdown because he set off the WTMD. She thinks that the patdown was too much for an 88 year old. She doesn't understand why they didn't have them all open. Once he went through, and was patted down, they sent him back through.

Airline: Southwest

Flight #: 3384

Went through security: 7:25-7:30 a.m.

Departure Time: 9:25 a.m.

Departure Date: 5-6-13

Terminal Gate: 4 C6

Advised Caller:

I told the caller that I would send her information up to the CSM at that airport so that they would know that she was upset about the fact that there was no sign, and that she thinks there should be a sign set up so that passengers can know if they have metal implants then they should go through the line for the AIT.

Dear TSA Customer Service,

Going through your security checkpoint at Newark Airport, Terminal A, was a frustrating experience on May 3. My plane from Glasgow, Scotland, landed at 11:30 am. My next flight out of Terminal A was scheduled to take off at 1:09 pm. There should have been enough time to make the flight, but your security checkpoint was a major bottleneck that day and I missed my flight by minutes. The result was I had to go to a different terminal and wait for another flight at 3:30.

Some details: My flight number was UA 4129K to Washington, Reagan, taking off from Gate 26 in Terminal A

The problems began upon arrival at the Terminal A checkpoint. The line spilled over beyond the main waiting area. People were asked to stand across from the main queue to allow other airport patrons to pass through. Meanwhile, the priority boarding line was empty and being tightly controlled by a TSA rep.

Once through the area where boarding passes were checked, a long line formed down a narrow passageway. TSA agents told people to keep moving down, which we did with some difficulty (because it was narrow). I ended up at the 4th screening area, where there was virtually no movement for 15 minutes or more. As I got closer, I observed some problems. The TSA agent wanted people to present their boarding pass (which presumably they had already done when they entered the area), but informed one patron after she had already put her carry-on items and boarding pass through the screener. She had to get it and present it to the agent. For some unknown reason, a man in a wheelchair and his wife waited in front of the metal detector for about 10 minutes before they could pass through. A couple who had a metal water bottle in their carry-on brought everything to a halt. Instead of being asked to step aside so their luggage could be searched, everyone had to wait for this issue to be resolved.

At no time did any TSA agent ask patrons about flight times and attempt to move people through faster so they could make their flight.

Maybe the airport is dealing with space issues at this checkpoint? I realize it's important to screen people before flights. But right now, this process is really inefficient and would think twice before flying through Newark again.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Comment : There needs to be consistency in the level of sensitivity of the metal detectors for PreCheck to really be effective. I have gone through various airports in which the detector doesn't go off, goes off because of my belt, goes off because of my shoes or both my belt and shoes. It starts making PreCheck a hassle when I have to re-screen three times when the point of it is to be able to walk through.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

Comments: I was going through security at Logan airport and one of the TSA employees was cursing and openly complaining about people going through the metal detector before their bags were on the belt. There were children around while he said "I'm so sick of this shit". Maybe he should find another job then. These people need to watch their mouths and act professional.

Caller wants to file a complaint. He has worked for United Airlines at ORD for 16 years and it happened at 12:28 PM today, Terminal 2. Employees go through the WTMD. The person in front of him had on sunglasses and he was asked to remove his glasses. As caller went through the TSO was an older guy with glasses and asked him to look into his eyes. He showed his ID and as he was walking through the TSO told him he should look at his eyes. He is Hispanic and the TSO was white and he was only asking people who were not white. He said 5 white people went through and barely saw his ID and he doesn't think it is the procedure.

8 MAY 2013

TSA

To Whom It May Concern,

This morning, May 8, 2013, my flight crew and I encountered one of the worst TSA experiences in recent memory. I have been led to believe that TSA video records the security checkpoints, and I certainly hope so, because someone needs to review this particular agents conduct. If she is not trainable, she should be let go.

I was the captain of a crew of five, all dressed in our airline uniforms with ID prominently displayed. We were attempting to pass through the Concourse B security checkpoint at Philadelphia Int'l Airport at about 4:10 AM.

The previous evening, I had asked a TSA representative which checkpoint would be open either 24/7 or very early, as we had a 4:45 take-off scheduled. They said that it had been "C", but now it was the "B" checkpoint.

So, here we are at the "B" checkpoint, which is supposed to be a 24 hour checkpoint, at 4:10 AM. As we approached the screening area, a TSA rep started yelling that she wasn't ready yet and go to C. She was waving the gray plastic trays around for no discernable purpose. There were two screeners manning the portal, one seated at the x-ray machine operators chair, and numerous others in the background. I tried to ask her if she was talking to us, because she never looked at us, just waved the trays in the air and seemed to be yelling to no one in particular that she wasn't ready. I asked her to look at me so I could talk to her but she refused. Meanwhile, another, non-uniformed employee passed us by, went through the metal detector, and continued on their way. Still, she would not allow us the courtesy of a face to face explanation, let alone, passage. She called for a supervisor. I was, frankly, relieved to hear that, but when he showed up, he too, said they weren't taking any passengers and we had to wait. Recall that I said we were all in full airline uniform, with ID! I asked him, "What part of this outfit makes you think I am a passenger?!" Then, two more non-uniformed employees passed us by, went through screening and departed.

Comment : I flew out of San Antonio back home in February. I went to a line that had a metal detector, not a scanner. When I was ready to go through the detector, I was guided to the scanner. The gentleman in the scanner line was sent to the detector. This is ridiculous. Get rid of the scanners.

Comments: While traveling with my adult daughter who has autism we encountered the incompetent and rude tsa screener (b)(6). After going through the metal detector there was a very long delay which caused my daughter to scream a lot because she was separated from her personal possessions. We explained her condition and requested they move her backpack ahead, but (b)(6) refused. We asked to speak with a supervisor, but the supervisor refused. It is unfair to other passengers as well as those with disabilities to be treated this way. We were only requesting a small accommodation that would not cause any security issues. The refusal of the tsa (b)(6) to provide assistance should not be tolerated. The supervisor refused to talk with us. TSA needs to have procedures for dealing with individuals with autism. We will be sharing our experiences with the greater Autism community. This is not the first time we have had such problems with TSA airport screeners who do not know how to handle individuals with autism. I can only assume they do not receive any training.

I was blown up by a road side bomb in Afghanistan and it injured my back.

I have a morphine pump that is implanted in my abdomen to control my pain,

The device is made of metal and it always sets off the metal detectors.

It's incredibly embarrassing when the TSA agent tells me to pick up my shirt so he or she can see where the pump is implanted.

I avoid flying as much as I can because of this.

I carry a medical card from the pump manufacturer that states I have a device in my body but the TSA always does a full pat down and body screen with a hand held metal detector.

10/13 10:00:

Is this the best treatment I can get from the TSA?

I don't like people staring at me.

Thanks

Hello,

I have some question about my rights as a working airline crew member. At airports without Known Crew Member must I submit to a standard pat down or do I have the right to a modified pat down? I have a knee replacement so I WILL set off the metal detector, and I choose not to use the new screening technology. What are the proper procedures? Until recently I was given the modified, but lately I have not been extended this courtesy. I appreciate your time and look forward to your answer.

Caller traveled in February from Atlanta via Southwest. He was going to go through the AIT with his watch and belt on but it was closed down so he went through the metal detector. He took off the belt and the watch (b)(6) and (b)(6) from TSA signed a paper and said that they saw him put his things in the bin. Now his watch his missing. It is a 1000 dollar watch. The TSA supervisor (b)(6) tried to help him. They reviewed the tapes but the tape for that lane was not working that day. There was a police filed as well. He is trying to fax his claim in to 571-227-1904 but it keeps going to a sex line.

I told the caller that TSA monitors these complaints but we do not process claims here. He would need to contact the Claims Management Branch at 571-227-1300 for assistance.

Disability Description: Caller said she called to get assistance and no one has called her back. Caller is flying from MCO tomorrow. This is her return flight. Caller asked if there is someone she can call to find out who will be assisting her tomorrow.

EID (b)(6)

Disability Description: Caller's son is autistic and cannot stand still for the AIT screening. If a patdown is required, he may need assistance.

Information Request: Caller asked if there is someone she can call to find out who will be assisting her tomorrow.

(b)(6) 526 Return 5/15/2013 2:17:00 PM JetBlue MCO Upcoming

Caller is concerned that they may need assistance if he is required to have a patdown.

2013 2:19:00 Response Details: I told the caller I will send the request again. I gave her the CSM number to contact.

Name (b)(6)

Phone (b)(6)

I called (b)(6) back because I realized there was an incorrect date on the return flight. It was listed at 05/17/2011, but should be 5/11/2013. Caller said she spoke to the CSM and was able to make arrangements for tomorrow.

Informed caller that I would forward the information to ODPO and emailed the information on autism screening. Passengers with intellectual disabilities or developmental disabilities, such as Down Syndrome or autism, can be screened without being separated from their parents or guardians. Parents or guardians should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the child's needs before screening begins. Parents or guardians may offer suggestions on the best way to approach and screen their children, especially if it is necessary to touch him or her during screening.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

Caller is concerned that her son will not be able to perform the standing still part for the AIT and that he would not react well to the patdown procedures.

To Whom It May Concern:

On Wednesday, May 7, I flew on Southwest Flt. 504 from Newark airport (EWR), Terminal C. I was escorted to Security in a wheelchair at around 5:30 p.m. When I reached Security, the agent manning the line motioned for me to go through the full body scanner. I declined, and asked for the pat-down. He ignored me, and let five or six people pass through the scanner and/or metal detector. The agent's name is (b)(6) I was unable to get his badge number.

He then turned to me and directed me to put my carry-on, purse and shoes on the belt, but did not call for a female agent. I said that I would wait until I was ready to go through the pat-down, so that I would not have to let my personal items be out of my sight. He then continued to ignore me, letting many more people through the security procedure, and made no attempt to get an agent to attend to me. I then asked if he would call the female attendant, but to no avail. He turned away, and did nothing except let more people through.

Eventually, a female agent turned up, (b)(6) whom I recognized as the same agent who gave me the pat-down a month earlier on a different flight. She stood on the other side of the glass half-door from where I sat in the wheel chair, but (b)(6) still would not open that door to let me through. Finally another agent showed up next to her, saw me sitting there, and let me through.

(b)(6) was friendly, thorough, yet gentle, and she is to be commended for her professionalism on both occasions. (b)(6) on the other hand, was hostile, snarky, disdainful, disrespectful, and lacking in compassion for the handicapped and for humanity in general. It was blatantly obvious that this man was on some sort of power trip. I am seriously considering filing a lawsuit under the Americans with Disabilities Act for the harsh and discriminatory treatment I was subjected to by him. This agent needs to be dealt with appropriately, and I would appreciate your feedback.

Thank you,

Disability Description: The caller broke her wrist and arm. She has a metal implant.

Information Request: The caller wanted to know how she would get thru the checkpoint since she had the metal implants.

The caller said that she was told if she had a letter from her doctor she would be ok.
She said she was on the TSA website and it said she only had to present a card.
The caller feels the TSA agents are thugs and unprofessional.
The caller said she feels the patdown is degrading.
She stated I should watch the way they act, and she does not want them patting her down.
The caller stated she will probably will not fly anymore if she is going to have to be groped and degraded.
She asked where she would file a complaint after she is groped and degraded.
She wanted to know if anything would be done with her complaint if she filed one.

The caller said she would not be groped and degraded and then disconnected the call.

Response Details: I told the caller if a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins.

TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions.

A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT.

I told the caller the TSO will use the backs of hands for sensitive areas and the front of hands for non sensitive areas during the patdown.

I apologized to the caller for the concern and advised the caller she may request to speak to a supervisor at the checkpoint.

I told the caller if she refused to have the additional screening she will not be allowed to enter the secure area of the airport or board the flight to travel.

I told the caller she could call back if she had a complaint and I would help in document her information.

I would then provide the to the correct department.

I advised the caller I could not really speak to what if situations, but I would help her if she wanted to file a complaint.

I offered to send the info regarding the patdown and metal implants to the caller, she refused and disconnected the call.

Information Request: They would like to avoid their experience from the previous flight. How can they better prepare for the screening process?

Response Details: Passengers with intellectual disabilities or developmental disabilities, such as Down Syndrome or autism, can be screened without being separated from their parents or guardians. Parents or guardians should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the child's needs before screening begins. Parents or guardians may offer suggestions on the best way to approach and screen their children, especially if it is necessary to touch him or her during screening.

If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

2013 5:32:0 If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor while at the checkpoint.

For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations for Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act it must:

Be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination;

Be in writing;

Include the name and address of the complainant;

Include the date of the alleged act of discrimination

The caller opted to file the formal complaint. So I am emailing her that information as well as the screening process for the autism spectrum.

Incident Details: They had a bad screening experience recently at CLT. They were flying to Orlando. She set off the WTMD. They separated her from her son. Her husband was attending to their 2 year old. So he could not give their son his full attention. He was running around on his own while she was finishing her screening. At the end she was subjected to a patdown. She had to lift up her shirt in front of the other people at the security checkpoint. She did not know that she could request a private screening. The TSO stated that if her son touched her he would have to have a patdown also. A supervisor pulled the TSO to the side and corrected her. The TSO s were courteous and trying to help resolve the situation. But they were bnnng more TSO s in to help which was causing her son more stress. She would like to make a formal complaint if it can help others avoid the same situation.

I very much hope that you can help me with an important lost valuable item.

Upon my arrival home in Tulsa just now as I unpacked, I realized that I did not gather my Ipad from the security bin. I have been calling 718-662-5043, and I have not been able to speak with an individual. I left a message at that number with information on my forgotten iPad.

I came thru LaGuardia TSA security this morning, May 11 close to 10:30 am. My carry on/shoes & Ipad went through the line to my right, and was directed toward the center, to the left of the closed rotating scanner to simply walk through a metal detector (?) gate. I was flying out on AA #397 from gate D-5. The Ipad was in a bin by itself and has a simple black case on it. The case is the sort that you slide the Ipad in and then it snaps at the bottom. Then the cover folds over (It is plane-Jane). I am sure you can imagine my angst about leaving this item as it has work and personal archives stored in it. When the power comes on, there is a silly split photo of my daughter, who is 20 and has long straight brown hair. I do hope someone can get back to me asap.

I will certainly cover insurance & shipping expenses back to OK as soon as that can be arranged.

I thank you sincerely for your efforts in my behalf. And I promise to brag to the world about TSA helping get my property back to me!!! It seems to me that you guys take a bad rap too often.

Subject: Security checkpoint complaint

First let me say that I would like a clear, personal response to this complaint. I don't want some canned reply. I am an educated taxpayer.

On Sunday, May 5th in San Diego, we went through the security checkpoint after checking in for our flight on Frontier Airlines at about 5pm. I am a regular business traveler, and I'm quite familiar with the procedures. They were not using the metal detector for regular passengers, but I did observe a crew member (flight attendant) in uniform going through it. I went through the backscatter advanced imaging technology. I was not given a choice, even when I asked for one. Your own video (b)(6) will be given a choice.

I was wearing shorts with a cloth belt that came with the shorts. When I went through security in Denver, I was wearing a leather belt and asked the TSA agent there if I had to take it off. He said no, and I was NOT checked in my belt area. I also asked the supervisor in Denver TODAY if I had to remove my belt and I did not.

In SAN, the agent said I had to remove the cloth belt. It is made of the same material as the shorts and has 2 rings for a buckle, about 2" in diameter 1/16" thick. There is no way the rings could conceal anything, and the cloth belt itself is invisible to the scanner technology. I said to the agent he was free to search me and he ordered me to remove the belt. I said I would be happy to go through the metal detector and he and a supervisor standing near said it was inoperative. Interesting since I had just seen someone screened with it.

The agent could easily have checked my beltline without making me remove the belt, which is not designed to be removed from the shorts. It is very difficult to thread through the beltloops as it is flimsy and can't be pushed through the loops like a

I was assisting my 21 year old special needs son yesterday at the Philadelphia airport (Terminal B). When we went through security at approximately 3:00 p.m., I was designated for a supposed "random" physical search, despite the fact that I did not have a boarding pass, only a gate pass. When informed of the mandatory search, I immediately told the TSA agent that I was accompanying my special needs son, who had already passed through the metal detector, and requested that he be able to be close to me while the search was conducted. My request was ignored and my son was required to stand approximately 20 feet from me and we were not allowed to communicate. The process resulted in my son not understanding what was occurring, him fearing for his safety, and him being left alone and without assistance while I was searched. Afterwards, I was not able to calm him, or convince him of his safety. He was not capable of boarding his flight.

While I understand the need for searches at airport security checkpoints, I would urge TSA to consider modifying procedures when people with disabilities are involved.

Instead of having to be scanned by a machine that you have no idea why exactly is happening, pregnant women should be able to use the metal detectors only. The only other option is being publicly molested by an agent? This is ridiculous and not ok. There isn't even any clear information about the technology and whether it will hurt the baby. Caller is wanting information on why their equipment was taken out of the luggage. It looks like a big battery but it is a metal detector. This was taken out of the checked luggage but there was not a NOI within the bag.

CCR informed her:

2013 1:24: If a TSO needs to open and search a checked bag, the TSO will place a Notice of Inspection (NOI) inside the bag to alert the passenger that his or her bag was searched by TSA. The lack of an NOI suggests that TSA might have never physically opened a passenger's luggage.

We can forward the flight information to the airport directly when ever she receives this from the 2 individuals who flew.

I am writing to you regarding two separate employees of the TSA that I experienced, both through the Jet Blue terminal last week. On Wednesday, May 8th I had a flight that was departing at 5:00 p.m. enroute to Boston/San Francisco. I have had a total knee replacement and notified your person as I passed through the metal detector. I was asked to step into the little booth area and wait. I was approached by an Asian woman, dark, bob type hair do, medium build-She did not speak to me, but rather grunted. She took my tray of personal belongings, id, ticket etc. Later I was called over the intercom to return to pick up personal belongings. I approached a gentleman and asked what it was. She walked by me, literally, and said I left my id (first, I didn't leave it, she failed to return it to me). I asked the gentleman where I picked it up. He said that she was probably going to get it. I mentioned to him that she was the most miserable human being I had ever encountered. He said maybe she was having a bad day-NO EXCUSE! Miserable people like this do not deserve to have a job of this nature. They are employed by the people, and if they can't treat people with common respect, they don't deserve to have a job that many other happy individuals would surely love to have.

Unfortunately, my plane did not depart that night and the following day, Thursday, May 9th I had a departing flight at noon. Again, through the Jet Blue security area, I was again waiting in the booth. An African American woman, short, with glasses approached, but I actually wasn't sure where she was going. She was moving at a snails pace. This is not an exaggeration. Sauntering, slowly toward me. She slowly walked me back to the station, had me put my arms out, and proceed to yawn, the longest yawn, directly in front of me...inches away.

2013 8:36: It is clear that your agents, at least in this area of the airport need additional training and customer service.

I would appreciate a response from your agency. Thank you.

I am writing about an experience I had today while flying. I was leaving Orlando, Florida and returning home in Denver, Colorado on a 9:05 Southwest flight.

During the security screening process, I was positioned to go through the ProVision scanning machine, and I elected to receive a pat-down instead. I nearly always do this, as I worry that ProVision and similar scanners simply has not been around long enough to understand the long-term health risks it may pose. My entire family, 6 other people, also chose the pat-down as well.

When I was pulled aside for the pat-down procedure, the TSA agent who performed the patdown was courteous and polite. He did everything right, telling me what he was going to do before doing it and how he was going to do it.

Unfortunately, another TSA agent also followed us over. This gentleman had no role in my pat-down, he did not perform any actions whatsoever in that capacity, it seemed the only reason he came over was to talk to me while I got my pat-down.

His conversation started friendly enough, with him asking me why I was choosing the pat-down instead of the scanner. In turn, I answered politely, stating I was worried about health risks they may pose. He said they aren't X-Rays and I said I understand that, but I prefer to play it safe and take the pat-down. I reiterated that it was my right to do so, and he replied "Yeah yeah, of course it's you're right, we're in America, land of the free." I thought that might be the end of the conversation, but he continued.

2013 9:13: He told me that the machines emit less radiation than a cell phone or a television. I said I don't really believe that, but thanked him for the information. He told me he's just telling me the facts. I said okay, and proceeded to try not to discuss the matter with him further. This seemed to make him quite angry, because everything after that was more akin to verbal assault.

He told me that if we had another 9/11, I can "bet [my] ass" that I'll have to go through ProVision and not get a pat-down. I asked why so many people are allowed to go through just the metal detectors, since I've traveled many times when a ProVision machine was malfunctioning and everyone in that line (including me) went through a regular metal detector instead. He told me only airline employees go through that, and I said I'm not an airline employee, but I've gotten on a plane after going through only a metal detector dozens of times, even since ProVision became commonplace in airports. He said what I was saying was impossible, a particularly humorous comment since I looked behind him to see that, since the 7 of us elected the pat-down instead of Provision, every single person in my security line was now going through only the X-ray.

He continued to badger me for no reason, telling me what a fool I was for not trusting in the ProVision. I was polite in return, though I was unwilling to yield any ground in the discussion and agree with anything he was saying. At no point did I insult or harass him, though he repeatedly did so to me.

The gentleman actually performing the pat-down ignored him, and I tried to do the same, but the other agent kept trying to re-engage me in some kind of debate, including one time when he ended his sentence with "end of discussion" only to let a few moments of silence pass before harassing me some more. He referred to me and my family (including my wife) as "a bunch of right-fighters over here", but the real kicker came at the very end of my pat-down, when he told me, "I'm surprised you're not on the no-fly list." and then walked away.

This was very insulting. I'm a very well-behaved flier, and I have never had any run-in with any kind of law-enforcement aside from my wife getting a speeding ticket once. I pay my taxes, I vote, and I'm a generally upstanding citizen. I don't see why exercising my right to a pat-down is something that should indicate I should not be allowed to fly ever again. I found this agent's behavior extremely rude and unnecessary. When he walked away, the agent that performed my actual pat-down shook his head and said "sorry about him."

What happened? Describe your complaint. Give as much detail about your experience as possible including the name of the air carrier, if this occurred at an airport.

On April 23, 2013 around 11 am in Austin, TX airport flying American Airlines departing to Los Angeles, CA. On this morning I was traveling with two carry on suitcases my traveling was for only four days due to grandfather passing away. After entering TSA security I was asked by (b)(6) if on that she look into my suitcase. After looking in suitcase Security (b)(6) found items which was asked to throw the items away since everything was under $10. Security (b)(6) then stated "I would have to place your luggage on metal detector again." I said go ahead she walked away and placed luggage on the detector as she return I notice another lady of difference opening her suitcase to place either her lab top or something back into the bag. I then notice lite green bottle container which seem to be the size as the face lotion. Security (b)(6) requested I throw away. After (b)(6) return to me I asked her to look at the lady suitcase why are those items ok but not my face lotion. Security (b)(6) then stated "that I am not worried about her I am worried about you." I then asked her to please explain why it is ok and not me again. I then stated that to Security (b)(6) I am not upset of the items going into the trash if it is a rule then it is a rule but I think it should be a rule for everyone no matter size or race.

When did this happen? Please provide the approximate time of the experience. If ongoing, please indicate when the problem began.

I have not spoken with any Customer Service manager or agency I wasn't given any information to contact Customer Service Manager the Austin Police gave me a white index card with a phone on there. I called and directed to fill out this form for a complaint.

Additional information:

I then asked Security (b)(6) since you are unable to tell me why it is ok for the lady items to go through and not mine, can you bring someone over who can answer that question for me? (b)(6) called her other co-worker over and I then started to explain. I asked your coworker if she can explain a question to me and was not successful doing so. I explained to (b)(6) that I feel that (b)(6) was not fair because I asked (b)(6) to glance at other lady's suitcase and she immediately said, "I am not worried about her I am worried about you." I then expressed to her coworker that I felt (b)(6) was racist for making the comment "I am worried about you." I feel (b)(6) could have handled the situation a little better.

He said what I was saying was impossible, a particularly humorous comment since I looked behind him to see that, since the 7 of us elected the pat-down instead of Provision, every single person in my security line was now going through only the metal detector.

He continued to badger me for no reason, telling me what a fool I was for not trusting in the ProVision. I was polite in return, though I was unwilling to yield any ground in the discussion and agree with anything he was saying. At no point did I insult or harass him, though he repeatedly did so to me.

The gentleman actually performing the pat-down ignored him, and I tried to do the same, but the other agent kept trying to re-engage me in some kind of debate, including one time when he ended his sentence with "end of discussion" only to let a few moments of silence pass before harassing me some more. He referred to me and my family (including my wife) as "a bunch of right-fighters over here", but the real kicker came at the very end of my pat-down, when he told me, "I'm surprised you're not on the no-fly list." and then walked away.

Caller flew to Seattle from NY. She left Seattle and the metal detector beeped. She had two suitcases and she flew from SEA to BOS to Albany.

She got home and went to get her medications and there were TSA locks on it. There were no locks on her suitcase before.

She had to cut the suitcase to get it open because she needed her medicine.

2013 5:48: She wants to put a claim in for this suitcase cause she can't afford to replace it. She found the form and it's requesting witnesses and she has a lot of questions regarding filling out the form

Caller Advised:

Please contact the Claims Management Branch (CMB) at 571-227-1300

They may give more information for filling out a claim

Caller flew from ATL on May 5th to Asheville, NC and returned Wed May 8th. At the checkpoint in ATL she went right through. Coming back through Asheville she beeped twice even though she was wearing the same thing she did in ATL. She was told that she had to take her liquids out of her suitcase in Asheville. She has never had to do so in ATL in all the times she has flown from there. Caller said the screeners in Asheville were incredibly rude. She said she has never seen a more rude group of screeners at any airport. The TSOs in ATL were incredibly friendly and went out of their way to help her because she lost her driver's license at the checkpoint. They actually found it for her. She said she did not want a return call, but she wanted someone to know about the rude screeners and she was curious about why she had to remove her jewelry and her 311 bag in Asheville, but not ATL.

Airport: Asheville

Airline: Delta

2013 11:24: Flight Number: She does not remember

Date and Time: Wednesday, May 8th. She went through screening at 11:45am or so. The flight left at 1:05pm

Location: There is only one there

I told the caller that the reason she had to remove her jewelry in Asheville is because it caused the WTMD to alarm. Since she went through the AIT in ATL, she may not have caused an alarm there. It is procedure to remove the 311 bags prior to screening so they can be screened separately. I told her she should do so on every flight. She said she would from now on. I apologized that she experienced rude screeners at Asheville and told her that I would send this to the CSM so they would be aware of her experience.

Caller flew last Thurs from BWI to ECP and she hasn't ever had her bag screened before. She has a colorful Vera Bradley bag this time with NOI inside checked baggage. Then she flew back on Southwest Airlines flight number 1799 from ECP to BWI and she opened her bag and all her items were disarrayed and no NOI was inside but she knew it had been gone through by TSA.

Advised Caller:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

2013 9:09:56 TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

I apologized to the caller about her disarrayed items and I told her to call the same phone number back and push option 5 and put in the airport code ECP to speak with a CSM.

Comment : Yesterday morning I was late in catching my flight which left at 0700. I had developed an upper respiratory infection over the previous 24 hours and had gotten the math mixed up in my head, instead of arriving at the airport an hour and a half early I left my house an hour and a half early, arriving to the airport an hour early. I immediately realized my mistake upon arriving to the airport, and I am the type of person who is never late, I am always early, and if I am running late, it usually just means I arrive on time with everybody else, so I was very anxious about making my flight. I do not usually travel at this time of day or on this day of the week, so the airport was much more congested than I am used to, especially at the security check point prior to going to the gates. The amount of congestion increased my anxiety somewhat because this trip was a special trip. For the first time in 2 years I was going to fly one way in order to move my husband back to Virginia Beach. Luckily they had a great number of agents working and all lines open, so they were able to cycle through the line fairly quickly. I went through the expert traveler security line because I was traveling alone and I travel frequently because my husband lived in Oklahoma to go to school, and my job is in Virginia Beach. I had my laptop pulled out in a separate bin, my liquids were in a clear plastic bag and out where they could see them, my shoes were off, I had taken my sweatshirt off so I wasn't wearing any baggy clothes, and I had removed everything metal on my person including my watch only leaving my wedding band, which I refuse to take off. My belongings actually made it through the xray before I did due to the metal detector being backed up, and the gentleman in front of me voiced some concerns because the bins on the other side of the xray machine were starting to run into each other and his laptop had flipped out of his bin into the floor. This concerned me greatly because my husband had just gotten me a new laptop for christmas, and it was in a bin in the area that was starting to get stacked up. The gentleman in front of me notified some TSA agents of the situation and they went and rearranged the bins and removed some things from the belt to make room. When it was time for the man in front of me to go, he set off the metal detector because he had left his belt on, so he had to go back and take off his belt and send it through separately. In the mean time the TSA agent signaled me to go through the metal detector. I went through with no problems, it did not alarm, but the man had me stay there for further screening. I didn't think anything of it because I had been randomly selected for further screening before, even though I was running late it just consisted of them using a metal detecting wand or something equally quick and easy so I wasn't overly concerned, but I was watching the clock because by this point it was 0630. A female TSA agent escorted me to an area a few feet away from the main screening point and informed me that she was going to have to pat me down. I have never had this type of screening done before, and I don't understand why I had to this time. I was wearing Victoria Secret yoga pants, which are spandex-like and form fitting, and a T-shirt, nothing that was baggy since I had removed my sweatshirt and sent it through the X-ray machine, so there was no way I would be able to hide anything in that outfit. I allowed the agent to pat me down however, simply because I needed to go or I was going to miss my plane, and I figured it would be faster to just do that, than to try and argue that it was completely unnecessary. After she finished with that, a male TSA agent came over and asked me which luggage was mine, so I started to walk over so that I could show him, and he blocked my way and told me not to move from that spot and just describe my luggage to him. I did so, but I was getting pretty frustrated by this point, and very anxious. He asked me why I was so anxious, and I explained that my flight leaves at 0700 and they are likely already boarding right now. He told me that I had plenty of time, and not to worry. They pulled my belongings over and asked me if that was all of them, I told them that it was, and they asked me for my plane tickets. I stepped forward to point to my sweatshirt pocket, and again the TSA agent blocked my path, and told me just to describe where they were at. They pulled out my tickets to go over them. I do not understand why they would have to do this since they had already checked my ID and my tickets at the first part of the security check point. Are the people checking IDs and tickets not qualified to be doing so? Why are they checking them again? Then the TSA agents informed me that they would have to go through all of my belongings one by one and inspect them. This upset me greatly. I'm already running late, and this is a huge invasion of my privacy. The man starting pulling things out of my suitcase and the first couple of things were my computer and phone charger cords, and my flip flops which I had chosen to pack instead of wear because they are flatter than tennis shoes and take up less space in my suitcase. The are Reef brand flip flops and for some reason that particular brand thinks its "trendy" or "cool" to have bottle openers built into the bottom of the shoe. The man that was going through my suitcase showed my flip flops to the man that was standing with me talking to me, and I explained to them about the brand and what it was, the TSA agent standing next to me stated that he also had a pair like that and we started talking about how foolish and unsanitary it was and how now they even started putting small flasks in the bottoms. Then the TSA agent that was going through my suitcase got to the main part of my suitcase and started pulling out my undergarments. I started to voice my frustration and displeasure and he told me "It's okay, he has 3 granddaughters." This older TSA agent seemed like a very nice man, but I don't care if he has 50 granddaughters, he is not my grandfather and he does not need to be going through my panties, especially not in front of all of the other passengers going through security. The only person who should be seeing my undergarments is my husband. I started to get very upset at this point, because it is very frustrating and humiliating to be treated this way like I was a felon, which for the record I don't even have so much as a speeding ticket on my record, so I starting to cry and cover my face and a female supervisor came over to me and asked me why I was so upset and crying. I explained that I was afraid of missing my flight and how wrong I thought it was that I was being treated this way with a strange man going through my undergarments, and she told me, "At least he isn't holding them up one by one." Like I should feel lucky that they are being more discreet than that. The the older TSA agent again showed the female supervisor my flip flops with the bottle opener on the bottom, and I again explained that it was a dumb thing that the brand built into the shoe. She Caller stated that he does not fly much any more due to bladder cancer that he just went through. Caller stated that he has a Urostomy and feels embarrassed at time when he has to go through the screening process. He wanted to know if there was any way that the process could be speeded up some what if feels it is to much of a burden to fly. Advised the caller that he may want to check into one of TSA precheck programs and this might smooth things along some what better for him. Asked the caller if he ever takes any medical documentation along with him to help and he stated that he hasn't lately.

Gave the caller the following info:

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown. If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

Gave the caller the following info:

Frequent flyers and other travelers who did not receive an invitation and would like to participate or would like to be considered eligible for TSA Preu2713™ benefits on all participating airlines should apply for membership with one of CBP's Trusted Traveler programs. Individuals who apply and are cleared for enrollment in one of CBP's eligible Trusted Traveler programs are automatically qualified to participate in TSA Preu2713™ when flying on a participating airline at a participating airport. For more information, including enrollment, please visit <http://www.globalentry.gov>.

Caller flew from PHL yesterday and found a NOI inside her bag and everytime (last 3 times she has flown) she has had one in her bag, why is her bag pulled?
She isn't missing anything or nothing is damaged in her bag and she is just complaining.

Caller flew on 5-6- from LAS. and said the TSOs were demanding and unnecessary in the way they treat people. she doesn't like the fact that there is no diversity at LAS.
Caller says there are too many TSOs sitting around and they are only black, every single TSO agent was black, only black race was represented and she is sick of being told what to do by the people who she is paying their salary and retirement.
Doesn't appreciate their attitude and they aren't pleasant or polite, they are useless and she hates them and they haven't stopped a single terrorist, there should be a better way to go about it.
She is offended and was told the metal detectors were being shut down and everyone had to go through the AIT and everyone was patted down also.
Do the TSOs have to go through scanner when they report to work?

2013 1:19:2

Response:

Enhanced security measures require that all checked baggage undergo at least one form of screening. Depending on the available screening equipment at your departure airport, checked baggage may need to be opened for hand inspection to clear an alarm.

Explained to caller there are many things that could trigger an alarm such as books, food items, metal objects, etc.

Explained to caller the AIT has signs posted advising passengers they have the option to opt out of the AIT and they would be required to have a full body patdown to complete their screening experience.

Explained to caller the TSOs have to have extensive federal background checks and are issued security badges allowing them access to the secured areas.

This should go to the CSQIM as it is customer service related. The "agent became surly and attempted to confiscate my cheese so that he could eat it."

Comment : I filed a complaint early this morning about how I was treated at the security checkpoint. I was told that I was chosen for additional screening and they proceeded to pat me down and go through all of my belongings. I did not set off any alarms at the metal detector, and my luggage could not have been the reason for this additional search and screening because they did not know which one belonged to me prior to patting me down. I requested a response and received an automated email telling me that I must have set the alarm off to require such extensive searching. This was not the case at all. I believe this was an unlawful search and that they infringed on my rights. I am extremely unsatisfied with an automated response and need to speak to a TSA representative. If I do not hear from a TSA representative I will be contacting a lawyer for what I believe was harassment on the part of the TSA agents.

Comment : For the past 16 months I have been taking Forteo which is a medication which cannot go through X-ray screening. Each time I go through screening I must ask for hand screening. In 20 or more TSA screenings that I have gone through in this time period, I don't think I have ever found consistent treatment. Yesterday for the first time I was required to carry it through the metal detector portal. There is always a lot of confusion and running around. Some will tell me they can't do that. Others seem to just make something up. Training is seriously needed in this area.

I am writing to file a complaint concerning an agent of the Transportation Security Administration (TSA). Here are the details of my encounter:

1. On Tuesday, May 14, 2013, at 10:00 a.m., I was scheduled to fly from New York (JFK) to San Francisco (SFO) on Delta 1765.
2. I passed through the TSA security checkpoint in Terminal 3 at JFK at approximately 8:30 a.m.
3. Before I passed through the metal detector, Officer (b)(6) asked me if I had anything in my pockets. I patted my pockets, found them to be empty, and shook my head "no."
4. I then walked through the metal detector. Officer (b)(6) was clearly angry about something and made me go back and walk through the detector again.
5. Before I passed through the detector a second time, Officer (b)(6) asked me again if I had anything in my pockets. I turned my pockets inside-out to show him they were empty.
6. At this point, Officer (b)(6) started yelling at me for not communicating with him orally -- even though I did not know I had to communicate with him orally. He accused me of trying to be "sarcastic" through my physical gestures -- even though I was simply trying to show him, physically, that my pockets were empty. He brought his face, contorted with anger, to within inches of mine, like a drill sergeant in the military.
7. I felt very afraid for my physical safety during the time that Officer (b)(6) was berating with me; he struck me as psychologically unstable. (If he ever does anything in the future to another passenger or to a fellow TSA employee, this message will serve as evidence that TSA received warnings and complaints about Officer (b)(6).)
8. After I passed through the metal detector and collected my belongings, I remarked to my boyfriend that I did not like TSA agents engaging in power trips.
9. After my boyfriend and I exited the screening area, Officer (b)(6) abandoned his TSA checkpoint post, chased us down inside the terminal, and started yelling at me for my "power trip" remark -- which was not even directed at him, but heard by him because he was eavesdropping.
10. I felt afraid and menaced by Officer (b)(6), especially since he had left the TSA area and was in the main terminal with me. I did not know that TSA agents are allowed to abandon their stations to yell at passengers in the main terminal.
11. Although Officer (b)(6) did not make any remarks to me about my race or sexual orientation, I will point out that I am Asian-American and gay and that many observers can notice this about me in casual interaction. I do not know whether these factors played a role in his decision to harass me, to berate me, and to chase me down inside the terminal -- well past the TSA checkpoint, which he abandoned -- to yell at me.

I would like to receive a written response to this complaint. Here is my mailing address:

On Tuesday, 4/30/13, around 11:30am, at LAX in Los Angeles, CA, I was at the security checkpoint for American Airlines economy section. All passengers were to go through a body scanner—however, I noticed that the first class passengers on the other side of the glass wall only had to go through a metal detector. Near the front of the line, I informed a Hispanic or Caucasian or Islander male TSA agent in his 20s-30s that I was requesting a pat-down in lieu of going through the scanner. He asked me to wait in front to the side, precisely where all other passengers would drop off their items on the conveyor belt and walk in front of me into the body scanner. This felt uncomfortable like I was in the way and subtly encouraged to just go in the scanner like everyone else was doing. The agent had generically called out for a female agent assist. I waited for several minutes when I made eye contact with the agent again, and this time he made a more concerted effort to get a female agent over to do the pat-down. This is not the first time I felt an unjust wait to move through the checkpoint when refusing the body scan. I paid my ticket like every other passenger and I am entitled to get through security as fast as anyone else. I suggest the TSA needs more organization to execute this common-sense service. After approximately 5-10 minutes (which is extremely long given my position in the midst of a crowd of people), a female agent became available, and the male agent I had spoken with as well as another one then called out "Lockdown!" several times so everyone at the checkpoint could easily hear. It was horribly humiliating. I had done nothing wrong, merely wanting to avoid the invasion and x-rays of the body scanner and yet I felt like a potential security threat, when I had done as much as any other passenger going through security, and no one was calling out lockdown each time the first class passengers went through security, as they weren't going through body scanners either. I felt completely discriminated against and degraded for my rightful choice of an alternative security method. I should have been able to go through a metal detector like the first class passengers as my luggage perfectly checked out too... I took off my shoes, sweater, pulled out my laptop and baggie of liquids all less than 3 oz.; it's like nothing I do is enough to be considered who I am—just a person flying to the midwest to see family. The experience was awful and makes me want to avoid flying whenever possible. The TSA should never call out tense words like "lockdown" on ordinary passengers. We should all be treated with dignity and respect—innocent until proven guilty comes to mind, yet I felt guilty until proved innocent.

I refused to pass thru the AIT Machine and the Metal Detector, and asked to be patted down instead, as I informed him that my Electrophysiologist and Cardiologist has told me on numerous occasions to NOT pass thru either machine. The TSA Employee proceeded to tell me, and I quote "Your physician doesn't have ANY idea what he is talking about, the AIT Machine has no effect on pacemakers or implanted devices, it's just cell phone technology." Well, on the contrary, cell phone technology CAN in fact have adverse effects on Implanted Defibrillators. So much so that I can not have a cell phone within 6 inches from the site of my implant. Cell phone technology has been PROVEN to carry a risk of programing erasure of Defibrillators. The TSA Employee proceeds to yell across the room "OPT-Out, I need a pat down" and tells me to position myself and stand in a small area between the ATI Machine, Baggage X-ray Machine and Metal Detector archway. I told her no, I was not going to take a chance in potentially causing myself physical harm by waiting in such a small area wedged between the very machines that I am not suppose to be near. After about ten minutes of standing off to the side next to another TSA Employee who for some reason would not proceed in a pat down, but rather just stood next to me, not allowing me to move, while my family and friends waited on the other side. When I asked the male TSA Employee next to me why we were just standing there waiting and not completing a pat down, another woman TSA Employee behind the baggage x-ray monitor rudely replies, "Anybody who OPTs Out deserves to stand and wait". I was so utterly shocked by her response that I was literally speechless. My family and friends became so enraged by the way that I was being treated, they approached a TSA Manager and demanded answers. I was finally allowed through and the male TSA Employee that escorted me and had been just standing there next to me during the entire ordeal, doing nothing, proceeded with my pat down. I received no apology from anyone for the way I was treated. I was made to feel as though I was a serious inconvenience to all TSA employees I encountered, and I left the security area feeling horribly mistreated because of a medical condition beyond my control. I did NOT choose to suffer 7 cardiac arrests at the age of 37, nor do I like the idea of having a foreign object implanted in my chest and wired to my heart, but this something I live with to keep myself alive. TSA Employees are NOT Electrophysiologists or Cardiologists and should NEVER advise any medically challenged human as to what will and will not effect them adversely. I was informed enough by my doctors to refuse. The next person with a similar condition to my own might not be as informed and could suffer serious medical injury at the hands of TSA Employees giving medical advise when they have NO business doing so. It is not at all difficult to treat another person with kindness and dignity. What happened to me today, should NEVER happen to anyone living with a medical condition that can not be controlled. It was extremely unkind, rude and unappreciated.

Caller flew OAK-LAS yesterday morning aboard Southwest Airlines #312. Caller is unhappy with the manner in which her pat down was conducted. Caller indicates at approximately 11:30AM yesterday morning, she was undergoing screening at the checkpoint to the far right of the Southwest terminal when she was selected for additional screening. A short Caucasian or Hispanic lady conducted her patdown and feels her breasts were cupped for an extended period of time in an unnecessary manner. Her arm was also grabbed rather forcefully by this female TSO. The caller is 83 years old and travels with a cane and was going through the checkpoint for persons with disabilities and medical conditions. Caller wants her complaint investigated and addressed specifically by personnel at OAK.

Resolution:

Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience. Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. Caller flew OAK-LAS yesterday morning aboard Southwest Airlines #312. Caller is unhappy with the manner in which her pat down was conducted. Caller indicates at approximately 11:30AM yesterday morning, she was undergoing screening at the checkpoint to the far right of the Southwest terminal when she was selected for additional screening. A short Caucasian or Hispanic lady conducted her patdown and feels her breasts were cupped for an extended period of time in an unnecessary manner. Her arm was also grabbed rather forcefully by this female TSO. The caller is 83 years old and travels with a cane and was going through the checkpoint for persons with disabilities and medical conditions. Caller wants her complaint investigated and addressed specifically by personnel at OAK.

Disability Branch

Disability and Multicultural Division

601 South 12th Street

Arlington, VA 20598 Thank you.

I told the caller I cannot tell her what the results will be, but that TSA does take disability complaints very seriously.

I emailed this information to the caller.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) does not disclose the identity of Federal TSOs. However, a TSO's last name and position are printed on his or her nameplate. TSOs also wear a metal badge with a unique number assigned to each TSO. TSOs must display their badge and nameplate at all times when screening passengers.

Passengers may register a concern or complaint with security through the TSA Customer Service Manager (CSM) or TSA supervisory personnel at each airport.

Specifically, you were interested in filing a civil rights complaint because you believe that you, or someone you know, were discriminated against by TSA on the basis of his or her disability or medical condition.

Referred to CSM and ODPO per Amber.

Good Morning

Normally when I fly, I have nothing but respect and accolades for the employees of TSA. This morning I flew through LAX and really have to complain about the TSA staff at LAX. As a member of the military I am authorized to utilize the pre check lane at airports that have pre-check (according to your website). This morning when I asked where pre check was I was directed to the same line as every other passenger. When I asked the screener at the metal detector where the pre screen was he pointed to the far corner of the security area, and I asked why when I asked I was not directed to it. He asked why would I be authorized to use Pre-check if my ticket does not say it. I explained to him that I am a member of the military and have a CAC card. He told me that my military id makes me no more special then anyone else and that I cannot use pre check. I told him I have used it in the past at Charlotte, Atlanta, and Honolulu. At that point he got a Supervisor over and I asked about Pre-check and the Supervisor even said I could not use pre check, he said someday the military can use it but right now they cant.

Although I am not going to make a stink about your employees comment about me being in the military, I must comment on the lack of training of your staff at LAX. Please if I am wrong, correct me and accept my appologies but if your website says I can use the lane I should be able too. It makes things easier for TSA, the traveling public and myself.

For your information I travelled through the Delta terminal 5 Lax security checkpoint at the 50's gates and went through the first or second line from the left (facing the metal detectors)

Thank you

The caller wanted information regarding the removal of shoes at the checkpoint, and then wanted to know if booties could be worn during the screening. He was upset about the process.

Advised Caller:

2013 10:50:

Mandatory shoe screening by x-ray is an effective method of identifying any type of anomalies.

Nonetheless, passengers are permitted to wear disposable booties, socks, or slippers through the screening checkpoint to help protect their feet at walk-through metal detector and the AIT machines.

Good afternoon.

My name is (b)(6) and yesterday, May 20, 2013 between 2 and 2:30 p.m., I went through security at Alaska Airlines at SEA Airport with my guide dog.

I was first asked if I would take my guide dog's harness off to which I said "no". I explained that the TSA rules did not require me to take off the harness or the handle, but that I knew they could certainly check it.

I proceeded to put my dog in a sit/stay position before the metal detector and walked through without sounding the alarm before I called the dog through. The TSA Agent at Lane 5 told me that I had to be patted down even though the alarm did not go off when I went through, but because my dog did set the alarm off. I explained that her harness, training collar and such would set off the alarm and that she could be patted down. The agent told me that because the dog was with me and sounded the alarm, both of us had to be patted down. The agent called for his supervisor, and both of them told me I had to be patted down. They did so as I was reluctant to give into something that they were obviously not well trained in, but I needed to catch my flight.

I had flown to Seattle just four days earlier from Burbank, CA with no issue, and told the supervisor that they were not consistent with how they enforced or even knew their rules.

I do believe that memos need to go out to all of your TSA agents (supervisors for certain) regarding service animals as they are not uniformly following the rules pertaining to service animals, and I would appreciate a response with a good reason for the harassment I encountered yesterday.

Thank you very much.

(NOTE: The following information is from floor support.).

The wand is a miniature metal detector. It is not an xray device.

What I am concerned about is the unfairness of allowing some people to walk through a metal detector and while others have to be radiated. I believe that constitutes profiling etc. I will never go thru that machine again. You are treated like a criminal and I believe women are targeted for it more than men. I just want to know how you can decide who gets to walk thru a metal detector and who has to be emotionally violated with the radation? I am sure I will now receive the same non answer but I would really appreciate your direct answer to my direct question.

TSA Employee: (If Known) :

2013 4:21:5 Comment : I'm an DTW airport employee that has been going through both the North & McNamara terminal for almost 9 years and I have never been treated so rudely as what your TSA agent treated me today. I came through the Red 1 check point about 6:05-6:10 am this morning on 5/22/13. I did not get her name, she is an African-American female, about 5'10" and has braids on both sides of her hair, glasses and had a TSA sweater on. Your metal detector that is on the left side of Red 1 is set extremely sensitive so I took my lanyard off to hand it to her to let her know it beeps. She wouldn't accept it, stating "she doesn't handle badges". I had to put my badge in a bin and put it through the x-ray where it wouldn't move due to the bin not being heavy enough. The other TSA agents that were standing there could not believe that she would not take my lanyard and they just rolled their eyes. Its not fair that this metal detector is always set more sensitive than the others it should be the same across the board. I have never had a problem with any other TSA agent when I've done this and I feel that she should not be working with the public and maybe should have some sensitive training to deal with the general public and be taught to respect the employees that are just trying to get to their jobs. You once had an airport employee line to get through security and I feel you need to bring one back to make it easier on the employees to get to their jobs. It should NOT be an inconvenience to get to your job.

Disability Description: The callers mother (b)(6) flew from MCO on 5-22-13. His mother is 75 and has a pacemaker. She gave the card to the officers.

Response Details: If a passenger has an internal medical device, such as a stomach or cardiac pacemaker or a defibrillator, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so. Your complaint can be sent to either

I advised the caller that he did not have to file a complaint right away.
I emailed the caller the information.

Incident Details: The complaint concerns the officers at MCO. The caller states that one of the officers jerked his mother, (b)(6) out of the wheel chair and made her go through the machines after her sons had given the officer her pacemaker card and told the officer that his mother had a pacemaker and had to have a patdown. The officers insisted that (b)(6) had to go through the machines. His mother went through screening around 6:25pm through the JetBlue terminal. The caller states the female officer was very rude to his mother. The caller states they are going to take their mother to the doctor and make sure her pacemaker is not damaged. (b)(6) was wearing a Black dress with a Brown jacket. The caller wants to know if they have to file a complaint right away.

was told to raise her hands and she was standing around and she fell she had been there longer than the few seconds she had experienced in the past and they told her to raise her arms again, which she did and they were busy talking and she was told to exit. As she exited the machine she was told to wait, when she walked out of the machine she saw photos on her left side, a whole group of photos and the TSO told her they had to pat her down. They told her, "Don't leave yet, we have to look at your picture, the photos were in vertical form similar to a filmstrip and individual pictures, approx. 5-6 photos. There were several agents looking at images and one of them told her to wait.

As she was having the patdown she objected and the agent stopped when she asked why they were doing the patdown? She has flown many times and been through the AIT and nothing has ever shown up and it has been 5 years since her surgery and nothing should have shown up.

Flight # 939 via SW, Gate # not available.

She said it made her very uncomfortable and very nervous and her husband is handicapped and she is a Colon Cancer survivor and she should have asked more questions.

Even though there may have been something that could have shown up she should know about and is nervous about going through this technology again.

She would go through again if she was explained what happened and she would like to know what the images were and if something showed up she would like to know.

The screening makes her feel comfortable and she doesn't mind that, but, she thinks passengers should be told what is happening and provided more information. She said they could have been training agents or something and she is a former school teacher and thinks people should be told if they are training agents.

She states the images were posted on a wall as she exited the machine on her left, when she turned around it would have been on her right and then she said she was unsure if the images were on a wall or screen, but, she saw the images that appeared to be a filmstrip.

She would like to have reassurance she wasn't exposed to anything that could bring on another cancer.

Response:

Apologized to caller that she had a negative experience and explained information would be provided to the CSM at MDW for their review. Advised surveillance video may be available to for the CSM to review to see what took place with her screening.

All images generated by imaging technology are viewed in an area not visible to the public. The officer assisting the passenger never sees the image, and the officer viewing the image never interacts with the passenger. The imaging technology that TSA uses in airports cannot store, export, print, or transmit images and no cameras, cellular telephones, or other devices capable of capturing images are permitted in the image viewing area.

AIT is a classification that covers two similar technologies, millimeter wave and backscatter. Both systems work in a similar way to give Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) a virtual image of a passenger that conspicuously highlights potentially dangerous items. AIT gives TSA a way to detect a wide variety of threats, including suicide vests and other improvised explosive devices that may be hidden under passengers' clothing and cannot be detected by walk-through metal detectors. AIT enhances security, reduces the need for patdown searches for passengers with joint replacements and other medical conditions, and improves passenger convenience and comfort.

Millimeter wave systems project beams of non-ionizing radio frequency energy over the passenger's body surface; the beams do not penetrate the skin. The radio frequency energy reflected back from the body and other objects on the body is used to construct a three-dimensional image. The energy the system projects is thousands of times less than a cell phone transmission.

The backscatter x-ray system works by scanning the surface of a passenger's body with a narrow, low-dose, low-energy x-ray beam. This system uses ionizing radiation—the type people usually think of as "radiation." However, the radiation levels are far below those of a hospital x-ray machine and any level that might constitute a health concern. The amount of radiation from a backscatter screening system is equivalent to the exposure each person receives in about 2 minutes of airplane flight at altitude or the amount the person receives in about an hour due to naturally occurring background radiation at ground level.

The extremely low dose of radiation from the entire spectrum of TSA screening technology is inconsequential, even to frequent flyers who undergo repeated screenings. When evaluating new screening technologies, TSA performs independent studies

Comment : The tsa agents at the midway gates were extremely rude.

1. We were traveling with our 9 month old. My wife was holding our son, I had the boarding passes and I.D. The agent insisted that my wife hold her own boarding pass and I'd, even though she held our son. He did not let us pass till I gave her her I'd and boarding pass after which he looked at those and finally let us pass. This is how you treat families?

2. At the actual metal detector/baggage screenings, multiple employees did not know how to talk with civility. when an elderly guy speaking no English didn't take out laptop from his bag they spoke to him in synch a loud voice to remove his laptop.

2013 2:07:2 Others helped the poor old man remove his laptop and communicated with him in his language.

3. When I flew out of Ontario, they had me remove my iPad during screening and run it separately in a bin. When I did that here, again one of those agents said in a very loud and rude voice that I did not need to remove iPad. I spoke up, and she just yelled back.

4. Treating flyers rudely and yelling like this doesn't accomplish anything. I have never had such a negative experience as I did in midway, from multiple tsa agents.

Caller is flying in a few week for the first time with her 10 yr old son. Son takes miralax. She wants to know if that will be a problem. She also has body piercing.

Indianapolis to Orlando on Southwest, probably on AirTrans.

Response:

2013 2:13:1

-Passengers are allowed to bring medications in pill, powder or any other solid form through security screening checkpoints in unlimited amounts, as long as they are screened.

-An individual will never be required to remove or show a body piercing. If, during the screening process, a body piercing results in an alarm of the Walk Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or an anomaly during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) will resolve the alarm or anomaly by conducting a patdown. In order to ensure security, patdown inspections may include sensitive areas of the body and TSOs are trained to maintain the highest levels of professionalism.

Response Details: In addition to screening the passenger, canes and other devices must undergo x-ray screening. If an item cannot fit through the x-ray, or the passenger cannot be separated from the item, it must be physically inspected by a TSO. Passengers should tell the TSO if they need to be immediately reunited with the device after it is screened by x-ray.

For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations it must be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination.

I will forward this information to the CSM at both airports per sup (b)(6) I also requested that if the caller was able to get the other flight information, such as flight number, departure time, and location to call us back.

The caller was unable to note the event ID so I told her to make sure to tell us that she needed to add it to her previous record.

If this situation happens again, you can contact us within 180 days to file a complaint.

I will send an email with information.

Incident Details: The caller has flown through DEN and TUL. She went through WTMD and both times the TSOs have taken away her cane and told her that it had to go through the x-ray. She told the TSO officer that she needed the cane to get through the checkpoint but they refused to do a hand inspection.

2013 5:47:4 She said that they also took her technological devices for x-ray screening and though she can be separated from them they have caused damage to the devices.

The caller is unable to do written complaint because of her disability.

The caller has another flight in month and wanted to know what she should tell the TSO if she was told that she could not have her cane again.

Caller opened her suitcase after her trip home and she had documents inside and upon arrival her clothing was in a heap and her documents she had for her work were destroyed. She said her TSA lock was also broken.

I asked if she saw her bag after clearing Customs or could it have been cut off in the foreign country who may not have been able to open the TSA lock. She stated she did not look at her lock so it could have been.

She had a NOI. It did not have a time stamp on it.

She flew from Kigali to Amsterdam and entered the US at Detroit and boarded a flight to Louisville SDF.
She flew on Delta Flight #6027 from Detroit to Louisville, KY departing at 12:30 AM 5-24-13
Bag Tag (b)(6)
The bag is a black cloth large suitcase, Wenger brand.

2013 4:23:3 She stated her documents cannot be replaced unless she goes to Kigali and gets them again, and she would have no guarantee they would arrive in the US undamaged. She does not wish to file a claim.

Told her I am sorry she had that experience.

She stated she also feels persecuted because she is often patted down and it is because she has large breasts.

She stated it happened in the foreign country as well.

I started to say something and she said she is aware TSA is not in other countries.

She stated In Detroit she was wearing a bra and a knit shirt and knit pants so she does not understand why her large breasts caused a patdown.

She stated nothing on her should have caused a problem with the equipment.

Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

Todd her I will send over a copy of her complaint to the Customer Support Manager.

In typing up my notes I realized I did not read a date back to her so I called her back and confirmed the Detroit flight was today.

Disability Description: Caller had a knee replacement about 18 months ago. Caller is 75 years old.

Information Request: Caller does not want to have to have a patdown at all. Caller will not fly anymore because she doesn't want to have a patdown. Caller saw a patdown procedure being done on TV and does not want to have to go through one. Caller is almost in tears and very distressed and angry. Caller would like to know what ID is better: military ID, driver's license, or passport. Caller would like to know why people have to take their turbans off for screening. Caller feels that suspicious people are not screened as much as she is. Caller would also like to know why TSA does not do screening like Israeli airports that do background checks.

Response Details: The Transportation Security Administration's (TSA) Screening of Passengers by Observation Techniques (SPOT) is an additional layer of security using behavioral observation and analysis techniques to identify potentially high-risk individuals. BDOs are specially trained in the operational SPOT process to identify and screen travelers of interest.

Secure Flight is a program developed by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to provide uniform watch list matching by the Transportation Security Administration (TSA).

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device.

2013 5:10: Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce though not completely eliminate the need for a physical patdown on travelers 75 and older that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms.

The Transportation Security Administration's (TSA) identity verification policy requires all adult passengers (18 and older) to provide a valid Federal or State Government-issued photo identification (ID) for inspection before entering the security checkpoint. In addition, Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) always have the option of requesting a second form of ID. Military ID, driver's license, and passport are all acceptable.

We understand and regret the discomfort and inconvenience passengers may experience as a result of patdown procedures. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. If you want a non-traveling companion to accompany you during the screening process they need only request a gate pass from the airline ticket counter. Emailed information to caller.

wants to know if a under wire bra will cause an alarm in the machine that shows her naked. She wants to know why the TSO told her that she can pat down her breast in the public and send her through but if she requests a private screening she will have to have a full pat down. She wants to know an alarm on her chest would cause the TSOs to test her hands and clothes for bomb residue. She wants to know why even after applying for Redress and using her RCN that she is still getting additional screening. She stated that TSA ruins every trip that she takes. She wants to know why the web site does not say that requesting a private screening will result in such treatment. She stated that she has had people fill her up, put their hands in the pants, grope her, and harass her enough.

We do not have an itemized list of possible things that could set off alarms in the AIT.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

2013 6 38:5 TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

This request will be granted if the TSA screening supervisor believes that a physical inspection is sufficient to determine that the item does not conceal a prohibited item.

In addition, passengers at any time may request a private screening. For Example: This option is often exercised by passengers carrying jewelry or gold bars, so as not to alert other individuals about the presence of valuable property. During a private screening, another TSA employee will be present and the passenger may also be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing. (Explained: the additional TSO and companion is for witness for the complete additional screening)

In addition, passengers may request a private screening if additional screening is required or at any time during the screening process. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. In addition, screeners should offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing. Passengers may choose to remain in the public area rather than go to a private area for screening, however, passengers who refuse screening in the public or private area will not be permitted to enter the secured area.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport I can forward a copy of your letter to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at that location.

Complaints: Discourteous/Rude Employee

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): This was at the Atlanta airport on 5/24, my flight came in at 4:30 from Grand Cayman on Delta. This incident was at approximately 5:15-5:30 at security after customs and immigration.

Comments: I was not sure which category to put this complaint under, but was very upset at the absolute rudeness of more than one TSA employee. I am 25 weeks pregnant, and visibly pregnant. The two employees manning the line, were very friendly and professional. As we were funneled closer to the security line we ended up in a line with just scanner and no metal detector. I couldn't get anyone's attention to opt out of the scanner. My husband was in front of me and as he went through the scanner told the 3 people on the other end that I was opting out due to being pregnant. They just stared at me and said that there was nothing they could do. I told them I was not going through the scanner and they replied that I was holding up the line. I said can I walk through the scanner while it is off and then have a pat down? She said "NO!" and then "you need to go to the back of the line and go through another line". At this point we had been waiting for 30 minutes and I told her I needed to sit down and that I was 25 weeks pregnant, she repeated that there is nothing she can do. All of my belongings and shoes at this point were through the machine and out of my sight (thank goodness my husband was there). So, I go to the next line and try to just go up to the metal detector to go through. I was stopped by a male TSA employee who said "what are you doing, go to the back of the line" I told him what was happening and he said, "where are your belongings?" I told him they were on the other side of the machine with my husband, to which he replied "you can't do that!" So, I walked away and up to the metal detector and told them I was opting for a pat down. I was told them by the female in this line (one line over) that I held up the line, and where were my things, my things needed to be with me. The female TSA employee came over and led me to the pat down. She asked if any areas were hurt or were sensitive, and I replied that I was pregnant. Her reply was a large eye roll and "Ma'am I did not ask you to state the obvious." She then asked me where my things were and I pointed to my husband 10 feet away. Then she said that my things needed to be with me. I get it, but you wouldn't let me be with my things!! After the pat down I asked her if that is how we treat people who are pregnant in this country, and she replied, "I just do my job". I could not believe the lack of respect, but not one, but 4-4-5 TSA employees. I left feeling sick, and tired as I did not have the energy with being pregnant to deal with this kind of nonsense behavior.

Caller flew from St. Louis to ATL to Sarasota on 5-23, second trip in a row she has lost or lost, wrecked or broken her TSA lock. In April the lock was damaged so bad she had to get a bolt cutter to cut it off. She thinks they opened and failed to place the lock back on, but, there wasn't a NOI inside her bag. She asked security who provided her comment card. Delta, Flight #1179, Gate # B 4 or 10?, Taggage Tag (b)(6). Flying frequently and always get stopped because of metal in body, always gets a patdown, inconvenience and holds up the line and can't view her items during the patdown. Could she get on the expedited screening list.

Response:

Apologized to caller and provided claim form via email.

2013 8:05: We are responsible for checked luggage from the time it is presented for screening until the time it has been cleared of screening. Once baggage has been screened and cleared, air carriers are responsible for transporting it to its final destination. You may file a claim with TSA by completing a Standard Form 95 (claim form) in accordance with the instructions. A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response.

If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device.

There are two primary ways to be considered eligible for TSA Pre✓™: travelers may be invited by a participating airline, or they may choose to enroll with one of U.S. Customs and Border Protection's (CBP) Trusted Traveler programs. For more information, including enrollment, please visit <http://www.globalentry.gov>.

Random selection only, not a guarantee for precheck, guarantee for GE when reentering the US from international flight.

May not have to remove shoes, jacket, computer from bag, etc., if an alarm sounds or an anomaly shows up may still have to have a patdown.

Earlier today, my 2 boys and I returned to our home in San Diego - via San Francisco airport (SFO) on Southwest airlines. We removed all necessary items, and pushed our items through the conveyer belt. We had to wait quite a while as the TSA personnel were busy with other matters. We finally went through the metal detector, and retrieved our belongings - which included 2 black bags, and 2 trays with other items such as belts, wallet, etc. Later this afternoon, we discovered that my sunglasses were missing. They were dark brown, Maui Jim sunglasses.

2013 8:33: Were these returned to lost & found? If not, is there video to see who might have taken these sunglasses?

Please contact me at your earliest convenience. (b)(6)

Caller is a Global Entry member and is registered for TSA Precheck and has used it before. Then he was denied 4 out of 5 trips. He said he was denied twice then selected then denied twice. He knows it is random but he said he is denied more than selected but also said he used to receive it all the time. He mentioned receiving it at Hobby and via Southwest a year ago but corrected himself later. He asked why he can't go through the metal detector. When he asks they direct him around it. He flies via United from Newark, Delta from Cincinnati, and American from DFW. He also asked what I mean by an appropriate flight and why he can not use all the participating airlines from any participating airport if he is in the system.

I told the caller that the screening technology is optional and he cannot request the metal detector in place of the AIT or a Patdown.

I also told him that TSA Precheck is a random process and there are no statistics. This is to keep terrorists from gaming the system. I told him to go to his frequent flier profile and verify that his name, birth date, and member pass id match his Global Entry card exactly.

2013 9:09: I told him to verify that his information is correct and try again and if he is continually not selected, then to call us back with his flight information within 3 days of flying from a participating airport on a participating airline and we can send this to the appropriate office for review.

TSA is expanding the TSA Precheck initiative to the Nation's busiest airports and will announce additional participating airlines and airports once operationally ready. The location chart can be viewed at www.tsa.gov. Southwest and Hobby do not participate at this time. You must be flying on an airline that participates at the participating airport.

In addition, participants who have opted in for TSA Precheck will not know in advance if they have been selected for expedited screening. If TSA determines a passenger is eligible for expedited screening for a particular flight, information is embedded in the barcode of the passenger's boarding pass. TSA reads the barcode at the checkpoint and the passenger may be referred to a lane where they will undergo expedited screening.

Information Request: Caller wanted to know what to expect at screening.

Response Details: Mobility aids such as crutches, canes, walkers, support braces, orthopedic shoes, and prosthetic devices are permitted through the screening checkpoint after proper security screening or inspection.

If a passenger has difficulty walking and uses a mobility device, the way his or her screening will be conducted depends on his or her level of ability. It is important for a passenger to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of his or her level of ability before the screening process begins.

TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

2013 11:04: If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

Caller ask if he can take the brace off and send it through screening.

Advised caller that he would be permitted to do that.

Emailed caller information.

The caller stated that he will be flying from Dallas to FL. He has a colostomy and wants to know what to do for screening.

Advised Caller:

2013 5:04: If a passenger uses an ostomy, he or she can be screened without having to empty or expose the ostomy. However, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening about the ostomy before the screening process begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger's ostomy is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the ostomy, followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands.

We do not require medical documentation.

2013 8:29: Comment : When I went through the security checkpoint, I did not set off the metal detector but I was told that I had to go through the body scanner. After I was scanned, I was told that I had to be patted down! A woman with TSA came over and commented that she didn't know why I had to be patted down since I was wearing a light cotton dress and it was obvious I wasn't hiding anything but she patted me down anyways. I wish I had asked for the man's name who was making me do all of this because he was also very rude and intimidated me. I'm a 53 year old grandmother and certainly don't look like a terrorist! I work in law enforcement in Phoenix and understand the need for security but I think this was going too far since I did not set off any alarms and they didn't even bother to search my bags.

2013 6:07:56 Comment : While going through the security check at front of the airport I was treated poorly. The man who checked my id and my boarding pass was very kind but when I went to the conveyor belt I was yelled (literally yelled) at by the lady on the other side of the metal detector. First she yelled at the gentleman in front of me because he wasn't following her unclear directions. Then she yelled at me because I zipped my purse before I laid it down on its side inside the bucket. She said "its not going anywhere quit wasting time and just lay it down already." I did not want to Hebe the contents of mu purse spill so I took the 4 seconds to zip my purse. Then I was selected for a random screening. The lady that took me over to do that screen yelled st me as well because I tried to take my purse and carry on with me. She was very forceful and would not take the time to tell me what was going to happen with my belongings. Both of these employees made the screening process very upsetting to me. I understand the reason for the process but I was cooperating to the best of my ability throughout and yet was not treated with respect or with even decent customer service. I hope these employees will have the importance of customer service and taking the time to explain procedure instead of screaming at everyone for no apparent reason.

2013 6:07:56 Comment : My friend and I were waiting on line to go through the body scanners, at other airports it seems more random, with some people going through the metal detectors and some through the body scanner, but here at that time everyone was being ushered through the body scanners. I saw a sign saying I could opt out, so I requested to opt out. The TSA agent (a male) seemed very annoyed by my request and a woman TSA agent near by stated something about how I would have to "wait a very long time" and they encouraged me to just go through the body scanner. I politely declined. At this point my friend had already gone through and was waiting for me on the other side: after a couple of minutes a women TSA agent (not the same one that encouraged me not to opt out) proceeded with the pat down, she was very polite and professional. I then boarded my plane and arrived safely in my destination. I was just offended that I felt my right to opt out was being frowned upon, I was treated like an annoyance and was frankly kind of embarrassed for making a decision I SHOULD be allowed to make. Thank you for your time.

I travel to the Des Moines Airport about 3 times annually and almost every time encounter issues with the TSA staff there. About a year ago, after reluctantly going through the scan, I was then patted down. I had initially been fearful of receiving additional radiation but was informed there was no radiation. I was told to either go thru the scan or be patted down. Apparently it made no difference, because both procedures were implemented. The reason? The worker indicated it was "because you have on a skirt."

So the next time, I wore tighter fitting slacks. However, the same thing occurred again, so apparently it was not my skirt. When I questioned it, the TSA worker indicated that's just the way things are. I inquired why I always was made to go thru the scan while some others were not. I was told "it is random." OK, I can understand that. But what I don't understand is why obvious Middle Eastern individuals were NOT required to go through it right before me.

2013 8:31:46 This past week I encountered still another problem. I offered no resistance but stepped into the scan after watching a man ahead of me just go thru the metal detector. After going through the scan, I was abruptly asked what I had in my chest. I indicated I'd had breast cancer and was wearing a breast prosthesis. The girl then asked if she "could feel around it." I was reluctant, but before I could answer, she was already probing around my body in that area of my upper chest. She then felt around my neck (posteriorly), then inquired "what do you have in your pockets?" At this point I became annoyed even more, as people were watching her touch my breast area and now were looking at my legs. I commented that I had "nothing" in my pockets and became frustrated because the pants were a stretchy white denim fabric. I indicated that if something was in my pockets, it would be more than obvious visually as well as on the scan. Then she signaled another TSA worker and insisted my hands be checked (I'm assuming for explosive materials).

All this time my small purse is available for anyone going thru the line to pick up as well as other personal belongings. I was made to stand a distance away and often my view was blocked by TSA workers to see if my purse was still there. At no time was I offered a private area to be checked, but was humiliated in front of several individuals going through security, most of which were not questioned and many of which did not go through the scan.

I would like an explanation as to why TSA workers are so intent on humiliating women that are already sensitive to having lost a breast and made to stand in full view of other travelers while her breast area is felt. Since there are thousands of women experiencing mastectomy procedures, I'd assume breast prosthesis are fairly common. And most seem to be made similarly, so I'd think TSA individuals would be well aware they were looking at a prosthesis, not some sort of explosive device. There are no wires present or fluid of any kind in this prosthesis, so I am uncertain why TSA individuals feel it necessary to go to such extremes.

What is even more alarming is that the procedure differs from time to time with this experience being the worst. Why do TSA staff feel they have to humiliate women? Even the supervisor I talked to just sounded like a broken record repeating himself that this is what they have to do. Another TSA woman interrupted our conversation and became quite nasty in her conversation, finally glaring at me, leaning into me thereby violating my personal space, and told me to "have a nice day."

Since this experience at Des Moines keeps increasing in intensity, will I next be asked to remove the prosthesis??

She stated she normally flies from FLL so she is not at all familiar with that airport.
She stated she is 90 years old and has 2 knee replacements and an insert in her back.
She wants to take advantage of our services.

I asked if she is needing help getting to the checkpoint.

She stated she is not.
She stated screening is horrible because they feel her all over because of her legs.
She stated her knees make a noise and she is only 4 ft 8 inches and looks like a little person.

Told her we will talk about her metal implants.
Because her joints set off the metal detectors she needs to let the Officer know about them and we may be able to resolve her screening with the AIT Machine.

She stated she cannot use it because her implant is something like a pacemaker except on another part of her body.

2013 11:11: I explained the patdown is all that is left since she cannot do the metal detector or the AIT machine, and we must screen her in order to clear her to fly.
All passengers must be screened.

She stated everyone else goes on through right away if they do not make a noise but because of her knees she gets a patdown.

Told her normally if a passenger does not set off the machine they go on through but sometimes we do random patdowns so other passengers may receive one as well.

She ask why we must pat her down.

Told her we must make sure she does not have anything concealed and to clear her screening.

She stated the Officers told her they were looking for explosives. She does not know where we think she would hide them.

She said an article she read indicated we could help old people or partially disabled.

Told her we do help by providing information on what to expect at the checkpoint and other things but I cannot promise her she will not receive a patdown.
Because she is over 75 she may keep her shoes on and light outerwear.
Caller had traveled from NY, LaGuardia to Denver. At Denver during screening, she says at LaGuardia she uses the old xray. Denver has the newer machines. Her husband had a pacemaker and was able to use the AIT. She was wearing some necklaces. She was told because of the necklaces she had to get extra screening, she got a patdown. She is upset she had to get the additional screening and did not have to do this before.

Told caller
We recommend all personal items to be removed, things like a belt, wallets and jewelry.
The officers can make a judgement call per passenger. I told her if there was an alarm during screening the officers would have to give a patdown to clear any alarm. If the officer felt comfortable enough to allow her go through with out a patdown to clear any alarm then that would be left up to that officer.

2013 3:53: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

They will clear any alarm during the screening.
They do offer a private screening when there was an alarm of a sensitive part of the body.
We try to make it as safe as possible to travel.
I told her if she wanted me to I would note my call as a complaint for her.

Comment: It took 29 minutes to clear security when only 60 or so people were ahead of me. Below are my observations:

- UNMOTIVATED AND INEFFICIENT EMPLOYEES: Only ONE PERSON was checking IDs/ boarding passes at an International Airport. Only 2 scanner belts were in use. All while a minimum of 4 to 6 agents stood idly. They blamed their inability to open more lines on scheduling (and being short one person). However, it didn't look like they needed more people - they just needed to work the job they are hired to do. They also asked me to hold a card for the TSA agent to timestamp. Not only was I not told what the card was for, but I also didn't understand why one of the 5 people standing around couldn't be bothered to use a watch.

2013 12:00: - ON-THE-JOB TRAINING? One person appeared to be training on the job. Why isn't this done in a training program? Why would you have this going on when the lines are backed up? If your mission is to protect American lives, how are you sending someone into a job without knowing what to do? That'd be like pulling someone off the street to perform a medical procedure.

- INCONSISTENT PROCEDURES: They started to cattle people through the metal detectors vs. the body scanners even though we were "older than 8." Airport employees seemed to be sneaking around the system/lines, and preferred passengers were flying through the line since she rotated one for one with the "regular" passengers to the "preferred".

Also, I was unable to submit my complaint in the online format because one of the drop down menus wasn't available for Mac users.

Ultimately, this level of service is unacceptable. You can and need to do better.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Caller stated he has a complaint but does not want it sent to CSM. He states he just wants tsa to know the process did not have to go that far. He stated the officers Badge# (b)(6) @ JFK but he don't think the officer was rude just did not have to go as far as he did.

2013 12:36: Caller stated he is a Turkish Airline pilot and flew into JFK airport. Stated he was going through the checkpoint as a regular passenger. He states he showed his Turkish Airline Id which does not have an expiration date, and requested to be screened with the metal detector, not the AIT machine. He states the officer told him because his Id don't have a expiration date, he will have to have a patdown. Caller stated to TSO he didn't want a patdown. Caller states he was told to put on his Pilot shirt and then he was allowed to go through the metal detector.

Advised: I will document call, offered to send his complaint to CSM at JFK but he said no.

I just observed a TSA agent in Amarillo, Texas that was very disrespectful towards a child passenger with cerebral palsy that uses forearm crutches to walk. Instead of getting a wheelchair to help him through the metal detector she made him use two canes to walk through— this is very unsafe and disrespectful. I work with people with disabilities and know that this is also risky behavior that easily could have resulted in injury to the child. I spoke to the mother and also suggested that she make a complaint regarding this behavior.

Sir,

On 5/31/13 at RSW (sw regional,fl) I went through the security screening gate at (d) gate at 600am.

I am disabled and have a service dog. When I approached the screening TSA agent I asked him what I should do to get through the security gate, He seemed very unsure of himself and what to do. He was an older white male ,tall, with a white mustache and gray hair.

He did not know TSA search policy on service dogs.

He told me to take all the restraints off the dog and have the dog walk through the metal detector in a very busy screening area. I knew he was violating TSA policy and I tried to explain this to him that I can't remove the collar,lease. I requested a Manuel pat down, anything other than doing this.He refused and ordered me to release my dog there by separating her from me entirely without control or restraint. I reluctantly complied, He was lucky she is well discipened and did not sprint through security. All the screening of me and my dog was done with the dog separate from me. . Again, I was required to be separated and all restraints ,collars, harness to be

Your agent put me,the owner of this dog,as well as the security of the airport in danger.I could have been held civilly responsible if my dog got scared and bit a person and or another dog that was in the area, Serious traing is need there.

Comment : The TSA agent we dealt with on Sunday May 26 was very rude and disrespectful. We think she singled out my wife for her own personal reasons. My wife tried to start a conversation saying "I once got hired for this job", and the agent softly mumbled "It isn't worth it!" and quickly changed the subject and went about her business. As we all finally got through the first checkpoint my daughter overheard her say to another TSA agent (Male) about my wife as she passed through the line "She is rude and she has an attitude and she had nothing to do with her from the start!" Then the TSA agent then noticed my daughter and turned her head and spoke lower so my daughter couldn't hear. Previous to this she questioned my 10 year old daughter as to where are you going? Your age? How long you are going to be there? When my daughter answered with our final destination of Las Vegas the agent was getting annoyed because my daughter didn't realize we first had a layover in Denver. My wife tried to answer for our daughter and the Agent quickly snapped at my wife and said "NO! she needs to speak for herself!" My daughter which had been up since around 4 AM wasn't focused on all the particulars of the trip and relied on her parents to get her to where we were going.

This agent checked our ID's to enter the gate area and as soon as my wife got through the metal detector area (Metal detector did not go off) she left her post and spoke to somebody and proceeded to tell my wife that she needed to be further checked. When my wife asked "Why?" she was told that all women wearing dresses are checked. The dress was closely fitted so you could clearly see the outline of an object if there was anything there. We know for a fact that other women wearing dresses were not checked. We spoke to another female wearing a dress, which also flew out on the same day, who lives and works in the Kansas City area and she told us that she was not searched. She also asked if she needed to be searched and was told no. She and her husband further commented and said "the KC airport TSA agents are rude, and have no customer service skills."

We can certainly understand if women wearing dresses need to be searched, but we feel all need to be searched if that is the criteria as the agent stated. There is a way in doing the searches tactfully and being respectful of the person being searched. We would also like to add that the TSA agent, upon the completion of the screening, knew my wife was upset and was telling me about her experience. She could see and hear that my wife was upset. The TSA agent tried numerous times to interject and look for ways to confront my wife. My wife then told the agent that she was speaking to her husband and looked at my wife and then she walked away. We can certainly understand the role of security and by no means try to underhand the measures in place, but we feel that some people abuse their positional power.

Caller has a complaint about FLL. Caller states that his wife is 6 months pregnant and her doctor told her not to go through the xray. He says that she requested the WTMD, but the TSO refused and did a patdown instead.

TSA Employee: (If Known) (b)(6) and (b)(6) a supervisor Comment : Traveling with my family today business select. Family consists of me, wife, 13 yo daughter and 11yo twins. The TSA agent at the screener allowed me and my twins to go through the normal metal detector. The agent then separated my wife and daughter and insisted they either submit to the full body scanner or a body pat down. I objected as I do not want the images or the extra radiation. (I am aware of TSA's position that the scans are safe. I am also aware of the argents to the contrary.). The agent stated that of my wife and 13 yo daughter had immediately followed us, instead of being 10-15 seconds behind us, they would have been allowed to use the regular metal detector. (b)(6) was called and also insisted the pat down of my child was necessary. After much back and forth he allowed my daughter to walk through but insisted my wife submit to full body screen or a pat down. The supervisor (b)(6) was zero help and took a hostile approach. He stated I needed to educate myself and if I was so concerned not let my daughter use a cell phone. I am used to the lack of customer relations and the inflated sense of authority that many agents possess. Today was a new low. I am disgusted with TSA and the continued disrespect they show the traveling public. To insist a 13 yo girl be subjected to a pat down by a stranger is unfathomable. Furthermore, after allowing my daughter to walk through, having my wife patted down was a pun stove measure. You should have more prde and professionalism in your ranks. Simply disgusting and a new low for TSA. Unbelievable. .

The caller stated that she flew from Seattle on May 31st and had the worst expenence that she has ever had. She provided me with the following information regarding her experience:

She has two metal knees and told the officer that she would set off the metal detector. Instead of having her go through the AIT, he sent her through the metal detector anyway. When it set the alarm off, she had to wait 10 minutes for a female officer to become available to pat her down. When she finally received the patdown, she stated that all of the officers equipment was not working properly and it took 12 minutes to receive the patdown. She was already running late and informed the officers of this. She ended up missing her flight and was very upset. She spoke with a supervisor at the checkpoint, but she was not satisfied with the response she received. She stated that the checkpoint was short-staffed and that they should have had more than one female officer working. She also mentioned that she has heart palpitations and this did not help her condition. The caller does not have an email address.

Advised caller:

I will forward her complaint to the CSM at that specific location.

Caller had a bad experience at FLL. She wants to know what her rights are because she is pregnant. She said that she does not want to go through screening technology. She opted out of the AIT and asked for the WTMD. She had to have a patdown and even was made to pee when the TSO's hand made contact with her crotch area. She had told her that her breasts are tender but she pushed on them anyway and even pushed on her stomach so hard she moved it. She had asked her to lift her shirt and pull her pants down 6 inches to see where her pants met her shirt. She asked for a supervisor who was not cooperative either. He told her that she had to have a patdown because she declined the AIT scanner. She did this because she is pregnant and had been allowed to use the WTMD at both Boston and Chicago Midway with no issue. He made her start completely from the beginning again and this is when she started crying. The TSO did offer a private screening but she declined it because they would not let her husband go with her even though he is military and has an id. After the screening she was hyperventilating and no one even cared. She was going through the JetBlue terminal F8 on June 2nd at 3:30 pm.

1013 2:32:3 I apologized to the caller and told her that the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification or specific employees or teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

I told her that passengers can opt out of the screening machines but would have to have a thorough patdown. The screening machines are optional and signs are posted of this right.

I told her that passengers cannot ask for the WTMD in place of the AIT or patdown.

Passengers can request a private screening at any time and be accompanied by someone of their own choosing.

Dear Sirs:

I object to the intrusive and potentially dangerous body scanning that is used in screening passengers who fly.

The United States operates one of the most intrusive passenger screening systems in the world. Yet I am concerned about the health and effectiveness of the body scanners.

As a 68 year old grandmother, I fly perhaps 12 times a year. I have always opt-ed out of the body scanners, having survived breast cancer and being aware of the dangers of too much radiation. Not only do I find the pat-downs annoying, I feel they are unnecessary. Last month I had to wait 50 minutes to get to the head of the security line in BWI, and then another 20 minutes for a female assistant to pat me down. I nearly missed my flight (the flight itself was only 1 hour).

I watched adults with children go through the metal detector instead of the body scanner. Why not grandmothers?

Since TSA is thinking of deciding to make body scanners the primary screening technique in US airports, I wonder if we would really benefit from this. Israel questions all passengers, and has staff trained to spot potential terrorists. Why can't the US do the same?

Body scanners are expensive, especially for their use in small airports. Terrorists, even if deterred from using airplanes to kill people, will devise other plans, as did the Boston Marathon bombers, the Oklahoma building bombing, the Newtown school massacre, etc.

1013 5:08:3 Please consider my comments when deciding your policies.

Sincerely,

I'm afraid this doesn't quite answer either of my questions.

For item 1 – I've received confirmation from all three airlines that my Nexus ID was included on my reservations. I absolutely understand that random screenings will occur, but I have actually been turned away from TSA Pre every time I've attempted to use it. Can you confirm that I don't share a name with a suspicious person, and that there is a possibility that I will not be randomly selected on a future flight?

For item 2 – Why does it need to be a female agent? And in the case that I must be screened by a female agent, what is being done to decrease wait time, particularly at DCA? There are very few female agents in comparison to male agents available for screenings at DCA; it's not unusual for 2-3 male screenings to occur in the time I'm waiting for a female agent.

:013 3:54:1 Thank you

Caller went through checkpoint at St Louis traveling to LGA. She wanted to know why it was a practice at that airport that white men go through the WTMD, everyone else go through the AIT. The caller opted for a patdown so she could watch this happening. She felt like she was racially profiled. This happened at Terminal 1 going to the C gate. She was flying on American. Her flight was scheduled at 11:50am but was delayed. She went through the checkpoint at 10am.

I told her that was not the procedure and transferred her to MB.

ZSmith took over the call.

:013 5:06:5 Informed the caller on how she can make a formal complaint. Listed the following things to the caller about the requirements for her formal complaint.

- Be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination;
- Be in writing;
- Include the name and address of the complainant;
- Include the date of the alleged act of discrimination;
- Describe the alleged discriminatory action in sufficient detail to inform TSA of the nature of the alleged act of discrimination; and
- Be signed by the complainant or someone authorized to sign on behalf of the complainant.

In order to appropriately address your concerns, we also need to know the airport at which you were screened by TSA.

Escalating this record and recommending classification as MB Orange.

agent asked if there was metal in the brace. She said yes, and the agent told her she would need to take it off, so she did. She told her that she needed to go through the AIT because of the wires in her knee because they would set off the WTMD. She told her that she would have to wait. She told her that everything had already went through the scanner, and she needed to get to her things. They were cleaning the floor and they had the machine shut down. She stood and waited and she said her stuff was just sitting out there and that someone would get it. She told her to just go through the other one, and she said that it would set it off. The agent told her that she would just need to go through the other one because she didn't know how long it would be shut down. There was a black TSO there named [h1/r] who was very hateful. She said as soon as it went off that she needs to step right over here. She said that she needs someone to pat her down so she can go get her things. The TSO said that she would have to wait. She said that he ignored her when she asked for him to call a female over. She said that she needed to get to her items, and the TSO told her that her items would be fine. She asked if the male could just do the patdown. She said that about 8 people went through while she was trying to explain to him that he needed to call a female over. It had taken about 15 minutes to get this done. She asked him at this point where she needed to go to file a complaint and when he asked her why she said that it was because he was very rude. He told her that this is where their conversation ends, and that he would no longer talk to her. At that point he called for someone and a Supervisor came over and she explained to her what happened. She went and got someone to do the patdown and the TSO doing the patdown told her that the other officer had done her wrong and that she needed to go up to the podium and file a complaint. Once the patdown was complete, she went up to the podium and spoke with [b)(6)]. She asked her if she wanted to fill out the paper or just tell her and she just told her what had happened. They were in the closest scanners to the Homeland Security that were there that day. At this point [b)(6)] told her that she needed to take the paper and file a complaint so that they could come check that airport. They have had several complaints on him, and she said that she had also been over there twice to tell the ones who were cleaning the floor that the passengers were more important. They weren't calibrating the machines or anything so they should've been open. She's been through many airports and have never had anyone refuse to call a female, and has been through many patdowns as well due to her knee.

She also wants to know about the PreCheck and the programs that are available to pay $100 for to get through screening faster.

Advised Caller:

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

There are two primary ways to be considered eligible for TSA PreCheck™: travelers may be invited by a participating airline, or they may choose to enroll with one of U.S. Customs and Border Protection's (CBP) Trusted Traveler programs.

Currently, TSA PreCheck™ is limited to select airlines and each is contacting eligible frequent flyers with an invitation to opt-in.

Frequent flyers and other travelers who did not receive an invitation and would like to participate or would like to be considered eligible for TSA PreCheck™ benefits on all participating airlines should apply for membership with one of CBP's Trusted Traveler programs. Individuals who apply and are cleared for enrollment in one of CBP's eligible Trusted Traveler programs are automatically qualified to participate in TSA PreCheck™. Tonight I was badly mistreated by two TSA agents at the security checkpoint at Terminal E in Philadelphia. [b)(6)] and her supervisor [b)(6)], unnecessarily humiliated me, an 8 month pregnant US citizen. I travel OFTEN for work, and every time I do, I am graciously offered the metal detector rather than the controversial, unsafe X-ray-like machine/body scanner. Normally, I don't have to ask, men and women alike kindly and Wisely offer me this option as it is safer for my baby. Tonight, I was embarrassed when [b)(6)] screamed "supervisor!!!" as I was speaking to her and getting visibly upset. I began to cry and they insisted on doing a pat down. I told them I didn't want a pat down as the last time I did that, it was an invasive, inappropriate, and uncomfortable experience. I was furious to opt for the X-ray machine. I am livid that I was embarrassed, that my health, safety and dignity was not considered, and that [h1/r] and her supervisor [b)(6)] felt it was okay to treat a pregnant woman this way. I would like to see her disciplined, if not fired. This is unacceptable behavior and something that should stop immediately. Pregnant women in this country should not have to choose between putting her baby/fetus at risk and enduring a humiliating pat down. Time to readjust your priorities, TSA!

013 9:02:0 I look forward to your follow-up.

Caller states that she flew from Omaha to SEA. Caller states that she requested assistance at the checkpoints a long time ago from both the Omaha and SEA airports. Caller states that she has extreme anxiety and OCD and the WTMD and AIT machines utterly terrify her. Caller states that every time she flies from SEA she always has an issue with her screening.

The Omaha agent was extremely nice and very helpful and set up a specific time appointment for them to meet. Caller states that they walked her through the exit, to avoid the machines, and conducted a private screening for her.

013 9:42:5 Caller states that the SEA CSM never returned a phone call until today, an hour before the CSM left, who stated that she can call any time for help. Caller states that she has called the CSM several times over the past few weeks and even attempted to contact her tonight, but was told she was out of office for the time. Caller states that she is flying out of SEA at 6 AM tomorrow and wants to know if there is anyone else that she can talk to tonight at the SEA airport for assistance in the morning.

Caller wants me to forward this to the CSM so as to make her aware of the fact that she failed to attempt to assist her in any way, because she has been trying to get this help for weeks.

Advised caller that the only thing that we can tell her to do in the morning is at the ID checker is to ask for a Passenger Support Specialist. The PSS is specifically trained to assist passengers with any form of disability. Advised caller that if they are not available she should ask for a supervisor. She should explain to the party her disability and explain the assistance she received in Omaha. Advised caller that I cannot guarantee that she will receive the same or any assistance, but the party, if they are available, will attempt to help her as best as possible.

Advised caller that I will forward this to the CSM for notification.

I am resending the email below since I did not get an answer yet and my fly is going to be pretty soon.

I would really appreciate if you can be a little more specific about what documentation I should need in order to pass security control with a muscle relaxer devise which is not attached to my body.

I just want to make sure that this device will pass control security airport after pass the X Ray since this device is very expensive and I will need it during my travels.

Thank you for your answer but I would like to have a more concrete answer.

My devise is not attached to my body so the body screen does not affect me in any way.

My only concern is that I will carry this devise with me since I need it during my fly so I was wondering if during the checkpoint the Transportation Security Officer will required to show him/her some medical documentation to prove that this devise is a medical devise.

I am waiting to hearing from you.

RE: T. S. A. INTERACTION WITH PASSENGERS

Dear Mr. Thompson,

This letter is a follow-up to numerous attempts to reach you by telephone. I would like to notify you of an upsetting experience that my family and I had at the Chicago Midway Airport on Monday 27th May, 2013 at 8:00 p.m.

My family and I were on our way back to Atlanta on Southwest Airlines. Since we were travelling with a toddler and a stroller we were taken to the "Special Assistance" area. Upon arriving at that area I was mortified to see the harsh interaction and overall lack of professionalism that the T. S. A. agents were displaying towards the passengers in front of us.

When it was our turn, my husband (b)(6) folded down the stroller and placed it on the conveyer belt. I had a bottle of water and one of the agents told me to just place it on the belt for it to be scanned; I did exactly as I was told. I then carried my son through the metal detector with (b)(6) in front of me. Just as (b)(6) walked through the detector, the lady monitoring the screen screamed "BAG CHECK!" She was an Italian or Latino lady with her hair in a ponytail. Then she motioned towards him rolling her eyes and said "DO YOU HAVE LIQUIDS IN THIS BAG???" I said "Yes, we are travelling with my 1 year old son and there was juice in the bag for him to drink during the journey" she rolled her eyes and shouted again "BAG CHECK!!!!" Someone came over and explained to (b)(6) that he would have to be searched because they could not open the juice pouch; he agreed. Just then my water bottle was passing through the monitor. Again, she boorishly yelled "WHOSE WATER IS THIS???? IS THIS YOUR WATER?????" I told her that it was, she then yelled "IF YOU WANT THIS WATER GO OUTSIDE AND DRINK IT!!!" I was horrified at how impolite she was and I said to just simply throw it away. I was then told that I too had to be searched for the juices. By this time both (b)(6) and I were fed up with the insolence and we said to just throw the juices away. One of the other agents (an older Caucasian gentleman) tried to explain to the agent that said that I had to be searched (a younger Caucasian gentleman) that (b)(6) had already been searched for the juice, but he simply paid him no mind.

Needless to say, I have never been so indignant in my entire life. After seeing the same treatment to the family ahead of me, I would hate to believe that this type of disrespect is common place among the T. S. A. at the Chicago Midway Airport; what hurts most is that this was being done in an area where there are families travelling with young children, which in itself is already a stressful circumstance.

(b)(6) is from Chicago so it is likely that at some point we will have to return to the Chicago Midway Airport. It is my hope that some form of action is taken so that we or anyone else do not have to endure such a debased experience with the discourtesy displayed by those T. S. A officers.

I look forward to your reply and resolution of my problem. Please contact me at the above address or telephone number.

Query:

Caller has a partner that is flying with him. Caller s partner has a pacemaker and he is wanting to know how she can go through screening.

Resolution:

If a passenger has an internal medical device, such a stomach or cardiac pacemaker or a defibrillator, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins. Verbal declaration, doctor s notes, and written declarations can be utilized in order to inform the officer of a particular concern during screening.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

TSA does not require passengers to have medications in their original prescription bottles; however, some states have individual laws regarding the labeling of prescription medication which passengers may need to comply. Medications in daily dosage containers are allowed through the checkpoint once they have been screened.

Comment : Why is it that TSA insists that I show my passport when takings an international flight ? TSA staff before the metal detectors refused to allow me to proceed until I showed my passport .

TSA website clearly states that a drivers license is all that is needed to board ANY flights. No distinction whatsoever is made for INTERNATIONAL flights. A passport is a document required only for entry to the USA, not to leave the USA. A person can be a legal RESIDENT of a country but NOT have a passport for that country and gain entry to the county only with a residency card. So that being the case why are you asking for a passport ?

If a passenger has issues at their point of arrival, why is that TSA's problem ?

TSA should be involved with security issues not possible immigration or customs issues.

Thanks !

Airport : CIU - Chippewa County International Date/Time of Travel : 06/01/2013 Airline & Flight Number : Delta 6:25am flight to DTW Checkpoint/Area of Airport : TSA Checkpoint at CIU TSA Employee: (If Known) : N/A Comment : We had a fairly small number of passengers onboard and it took an INCREDIBLY long time to get through screening. EVERY passenger was made to wait before going through the metal detector while the TSA employees reviewed the images of bags going through a scan. I understand that there were new employees being trained but it was completely ridiculous the amount of time it took to get screened. Delta started boarding and folks were going right onto the plane with no waiting after going through the screening because it was so slow. Going through the checkpoint at this airport has always taken longer than it should because of the setup (which I think could be improved upon) but this experience was unacceptable. There are only two flights/day going out of this airport so managing it to speed passengers through should be easy, particularly with four agents working the screening point.

Information Request: Caller asked what are the requirement for take a POC through TSA. I gave the caller the information in the template, but the caller was still not satisfied.

Caller said a friend with an POC received grief over taking the his device through TSA security. Caller said he was told that he could not take his POC when in reality, TSA was wrong and he was allowed to take the POC through. Caller said he was concerned about having a hard time getting his POC through the security checkpoint.

Response Details: Generally, the Federal Aviation Administration does not allow portable compressed oxygen tanks on commercial airline flights because oxygen is considered a hazardous material. However, passengers may check with their airline before purchasing tickets to ask if they will test an oxygen tank for safety (48 hours ahead of the flight), allow passengers to carry a specified portable oxygen concentrator (POC), or provide oxygen to the passenger.

If a passenger uses a POC, the manner in which the passenger is screened depends on whether he or she can disconnect from the oxygen concentrator. Passengers should check with their doctor to determine whether they can safely disconnect during screening. It is important for a passenger to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening whether he or she can disconnect before the screening process begins.

If a passenger can disconnect from his or her POC, it is recommend that the passenger check the equipment as checked baggage whenever possible. Passengers who can disconnect can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by a metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

013 12:58:2 If a passenger cannot disconnect, or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material.

I advised the caller the POC will be screened by xray if he can disconnect, if not it will be screened by other methods. Caller still was not satisfied. I offered to send his flight information over to ODPO to make arrangements to get help getting through the checkpoint. This caller was still not satisfied with my answer and the caller does not have any flight arranged. Caller then asked where he can write to get an answer to his question. I turned the call over to Missy.

The caller flew from EWR to ATL to MLU, and was forced to go through the WTMD three times. However, she was also given a full patdown before being cleared. On the flight from MLU, she was forced to undergo the WTMD three times again. However, she was only wearing a lycra shirt, cotton jeans, and had no belt or shoes on. She asked the screener if the problem was her belly ring or underwear, and he indicated that was not an issue. Then, she was subjected to another patdown before being cleared. However, she is upset because of past trauma, and believes that she was discriminated against due to her gender. The caller maintained that no male was forced to undergo these procedures. She wanted to know why she was chosen for additional screening.

Advised Caller:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

I forwarded the call to to MB:

The caller is very upset and wants to know why she caused an alarm whenever she went through the walk through metal detector. I advised the caller that I could not tell her why she caused an alarm. I advised the caller that all I could tell her is that if there was an alarm, then the officers at the security checkpoint would have to clear the alarm. I advised the caller that in order to clear the alarm they would have to perform a patdown. The caller also wears an underwire bra. I advised the caller that the underwire could possbly cause an alarm.

The caller attempted to get me to tell her what she could wear to avoid getting a patdown. I advised the caller that I could not tell her what would cause the alarm to sound. I advised her that unless I was there I could not even begin to do so. The caller stated that she also felt discriminated against because her breasts were large as well. I advised the caller that she would have to place her complaint in writing. I advised her that she would receive an email with a link that would allow her to place it in writing.

room and to show the ostomy and was ask to remove his pants to do so. He stated that he is a FAA representative and has GE he can not believe all this would be necessary for as often as he flies.

Advised Caller:

If a passenger uses an ostomy, he or she can be screened without having to empty or expose the ostomy. However, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening about the ostomy before the screening process begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at <http://www.tsa.gov/sites>.

Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening.

Regardless of whether the passenger is screened using AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger's ostomy is subject to additional screening. Under most circumstances, this will include the passenger conducting a self-patdown of the ostomy, followed by an explosive trace detection sampling of the passenger's hands.

If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

Do you want information about filing a written complaint regarding disability discrimination or are you calling with a different concern such as poor customer service?

We traveled through Miami the morning of June 5th and experienced the rudest TSA "officer" yet. I'm sorry that I did not get his name. He was directing us through the metal detectors by snapping his finger rudely left or right with a power-happy smirk and barking that we had to push our belongings onto the conveyor or "the boss would take them away and keep them". He also directed his taunts to busy families with small children.

These check points are humiliating at best, but this was too much. If we had the time to spare I would have certainly filed a complaint on the spot. How can I be expected to believe that travel is now safer because jerks like him are on the job? It's obvious these people know that they have a guaranteed government job that they can not get fired from.

I'll be surprised if this complaint actually gets an individual response.

Caller just returned home and Maui and she is disabled. The caller had a temporary Hawaii drivers license, elderly affairs picture ID and boarding pass. She was in the process of changing the name. They did not give her back the boarding pass, temporary ID and elderly affairs ID. The Hawaiian airlines agent put her name in and found her seat, because the TSO took her boarding pass. Caller questioned the TSO and he said you must have put it in the folder, which had the itinerary. She remembers the TSA man took her by the wheelchair and was given a wooden cane to stand and go through the WTMD. She was then taken to side for a patdown, because she did not provide a valid photo ID. She gave a grey-haired older man in a TSA uniform, her documents. One woman searched the carry on and another search the caller. This all happened in Kahului around 11:15 this morning. Caller went through 6 marriages and divorce decrees. Caller already contacted the CSM and left her contact information.

Advised Caller:

2013 7:45:1

You may contact the Kahului Airport lost and found at: 808-872-3421. You may also redial the number, select menu option 5 and enter the airport code. We will be forwarding your information to the CSM at the airport.

Airport: OGG

Airline: Hawaiian Airlines

Date and Time: June 10th 2013 10:40AM

Gate Terminal: One security for all departing flights.

Officer: Large framed Grey-haired Older man in a TSA uniform

Caller had difficulties three years ago going through PHX because the AIT was not working and he had to go through the WTMD even though he had informed TSO of his metal implants. When he alarmed not only did he have to have a pat down he was then subjected to a secondary pat down in a private room. Caller wants to request an appointment for an AIT screening.

Relayed the CSM contact through option number 5 on the IVR and relayed the TCC number and he stated he had called in on the Cares line but it was not identified on the telephone screen.

She he has demagnetised titanium rods in her back and neck.

She indicated that in the upper part of her buttock lower back she has an implanted computer that runs her stimulator. She has a card in regard to the device. She doesn't want to miss her flight. She will get there early.

Information Request: She asked if newer AIT technology is used or if the old ones are still in use at BDL. She indicated that knowing such would determine how what she can do at the checkpoint.

She asked if he advise of the computer ahead of time and expressed concern that TSO may think that it is a bomb.

She asked if there TSA's website is were she would go to see the prohibited items list. She indicated that she was on the website under Traveler Information. She asked if she should select the link for liquids.

2013 11:30: She is traveling from BDL to SLC.

The caller mentioned that she thinks that she will be screened via a patdown as that seems to be the simplest way.

She asked if this applied at all airports.

Response Details: I explained that the information that I have indicates that BDL is listed as an airport that has or is scheduled to receive AIT. It does not indicate which technology is listed. I advised that she can determine this by contacting the CSM via 866 289 9673 and option 5.

I advised that she inform the TSO of the metal implants and internal devices before the screening process begins. Doing so, can help facilitate the screening process. If there is an alarm or anomaly, TSO will know that she advised of the metal implants and internal device.

Disability Description: Caller wants to know if he needs a letter from his doctor.

Information Request: Caller has metal clips in his abdomen and he does not alarm when going through the WTMD but he does alarm when going through the AIT.

2013 1:05:1 Response Details: Explained that the AIT does not detect metal objects but I have no way to determine why he is alarming when he goes through the AIT but if he will call 72 hours prior to his next trip with his travel information we will forward the information to the ODPO prior to his travel.

Offered the information on screening of metal implants but he was already on the website.

What happened is he set off the metal detector and they patted him down.
He had a coffee mug in his hand and the Officer told him that he needed to wand him down around the coffee mug while he was holding it.
He wanted to know if the word wand is an actual word or is it an acronym.
The Officer used a black metal stick and went around the edge of the cup.
He is not filing a report with TSA, he only wants to know the name of the equipment.

I asked if the Officer mentioned he was doing an explosives trace detection.

He stated he did that with the swab and gloves.

He stated that he just wants the name of the black stick the Officer used.

I asked if he had liquid in the cup.

He stated he had coffee in the cup.

2013 1:57:2 I asked him if he is not aware of the liquid rule.

He stated he is a pilot and he can do that.

I asked what airport he was at.

He refused to provide it. He said that should not matter and he is not making waves.
He just wants to know the proper name of the stick.

Told him that he can decline telling me, that is his choice.
Since I was not there it would be difficult to say but I am researching and will see what we can tell him.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) often uses Explosives Trace Detection (ETD) technology in airports as part of security screening.
That would have been likely since it was used around the edge of his coffee cup.

He interrupted and said that was not what was used and he already knows we no longer use the hand held detectors and he will just try to Google it.

Comment : I have two separate issues I felt necessary to communicate to TSA. Please note that I no problem with going through airport security and I completely support it to make our travels safe.

1) During identification checking of boarding pass against photo ID, I felt the particular TSA agent that was checking IDs in my line seemed rather cold towards passengers and portrayed that he was unhappy with his job. He seemed like he was depressed and annoyed. That does not make a passengers' experience a positive one when the first TSA agent they interact with exhibits a depressed attitude. It actually made me concern about the agent and if he was even happy.

2013 2:21:1 this. For me in particular if someone is talking from my side and not visually looking at me or talking loud enough, I may not immediate hear the agent say that I can move forward. Since the imaging machine directs the passenger to stand facing outwards while the agent is to the side, this can be difficult at times. I know that I am not the only one and I am sure there are many people without hearing aids who may have similar problems especially with the increase of hearing loss in America. I suggest that there be initiator lights visible to the passenger of when to stay or move out of the imaging machine and then given permission to continue through by the TSA agent. With walk through metal detectors you are always visually facing the TSA agent who is able provide directions or assistance.

Again these are not really complaints but just suggestion of ways to improve service.

The caller said that his bag was searched and the zipper was re-zipped in the wrong position, causing it to get ripped off. He said that there was an NOI in his bag. He said that he always zips his bag so that the zippers cannot get caught on anything and damaged.

I told him that he can file a claim for reimbursement for the damaged zipper and I will send him a claims form package via email. There will be an attached cover letter and instruction sheet with guidelines for filing the claim.

2013 8:52:4 Then, he said that he was randomly chosen for additional screening as well at SAN and another one of his previous flights. He was not happy that he was chosen for additional screening 2 out of his last 4 flights. He asked why he would be chosen for additional screening.

I told him that there are different reasons for additional screening. Passenger are subject to additional screening if their carry on bags alarm, of they alarm the WTMD, an anomaly is detected by the AIT or simply chosen at random. If he was told that he was selected at random, then he was selected at random.

He wanted a clear number on how many passengers go through before someone is randomly selected.

I told him that random means that there is not a select number of passengers that go through before someone is selected.

Caller wrote a complaint into TSA 6 months ago. Caller wanted to know about cargo pants because he was pulled aside for screenings. Caller stated he flew from Grand Rapids Michigan back in September 2012

Advised caller the following information:

All members of the traveling public are permitted to wear any type of clothing they wish through the security checkpoint. Individuals may be referred for additional screening if the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) cannot reasonably determine that the clothing is free of a prohibited item. This policy extends to all clothing items and is not directed to any particular item or group.

TSOs will use their professional discretion to determine if a particular item could hide a threatening object. Passengers may be asked to remove their outerwear, as TSA requires all passengers to remove outerwear such as suit jackets and blazers, athletic warm-up jackets, and sport coats for x-ray before proceeding through the walk-through metal detectors

The caller said that he wanted to file a complaint. He said that for the last 12 years, he has traveled approximately 50 times and always removes his shoes before screening and puts on disposable booties. Today, he was asked to remove the booties. He said that two TSOs and a manager was very rude to him. He wanted to know if he is permitted to wear these booties through screening.

He did not have any information about the TSOs or manager that was rude to him.

I told him that passengers are permitted to wear disposable booties, socks, or slippers through the screening checkpoint to help protect their feet at walk-through metal detector and the AIT machines. The disposable footwear may be removed and placed into the individual's accessible property prior to exiting the screening checkpoint. Since he encountered a rude screener, I will forward this record to the CSM at JFK. I apologized for his screening experience.

2013 8:59:4 Comment : I am pregnant and did not want to go through the X-ray machine. I told the attendant and he mentioned it was safe but i was not about to take a 21 year olds word for it when my babys health is at stake. A sign with fda information and radiation levels like what is posted on your website would have convinced me but you have nothing posted. So the not so friendly officer screamed out "female assist". I waited. No one came, for approximately 5 minutes. The attendant was right in front of me and showed absolutely no concern for the fact that I was waiting. Neither did the other officers around who saw me waiting. I told them that I needed to go through and they showed absolutely no concern and just screamed out again "female assist", loudly but to no one. In short, I waited for over 13 minutes (according to my phone) until finally someone came when I insisted I talk to a supervisor. In those 13 minutes, several people were simply walked through the metal detector Because they were travelers accompanying minors with no pat down while i and another pregnant woman waited. After the pat down; I had to run to my gate and was the last person to board the plane. Your lack of signage advising about the radiation of the machine is silly, especially when you do had multiple signs about potential impact to undeveloped film! The lack of systems to get assists other than yelling out to thin air is backwards and clearly ineffective and inefficient, and ultimately, the absolutely lack of concern or customer service mindset of your officers is simply appalling. I hope you take this into consideration across airports. I am absolutely respectful of your work to keep us safe and never complain about any of you measures, but the least you can do is remember that you are paid for by us the taxpayers and at minimum, should act with a sense of urgency and customer service mindset.

"Opting out" policy subjects you to intimidation, delay, denigration and overall hostility. I was told "opting out" denies the option of the metal detector screener. The "pat down" seems designed to punish you for being a belligerent. The "low grade" radiation exposure they insinuate is "low risk" is anything but. "low grade" radiation lodges in the body instead of passing through like an xray. What is it doing to children and women of childbearing years?

2013 8:30: Michael Chertoff et al is making a fortune from the machines. You are irradiating the entire flying public dangerously. Are you tracking birth defects and miscarriage and cancer rates? It would be less galling if you had only stopped the Boston Marathon bomber. I am a 66 yo silver haired 4' 11" female with a NY Irish ancestry. I am not the profile of a terrorist bomber. Screening policy should emulate the Israelis.

This absolute invasion of our bodies in the name of security is far more damaging than the NSA spying. We met New Zealanders who told us no one wants to come to America anymore because of the TSA harassment & irradiation exposure.

I want Janet Napolitano to read this! Her TSA has left a bitter taste to the end of an otherwise fabulous family trip to Italy!

To Whom it may Concern:

I am writing to formally complain about the distressing, overly invasive and extensive pat-down performed on me by TSA employee (b)(6) recently. This event took place on May 10, 2013 at IAH Terminal B, at about 1:15 p.m. I do not believe that the exam I received could ever be described as a "pat-down." I was subjected to an invasive, aggressive search that even involved searching certain body cavities.

As I went through the security area in Terminal 8 at IAH, I informed the TSA agents that I had an implanted intrathecal pump that required me to avoid the scanners and the metal detector and that I required a pat-down. I was placed near a swinging half-door. Caller attempted to fly on Monday from JFK to Orlando. Caller states that the lines at the airport were very slow and were continuously stopped. Caller states that when she did get to the checkpoint she was treated very disrespectfully by officers at the checkpoint. Caller indicates that the officers were extremely rude. Caller indicates that the officers did not take into account her disability. Caller is not satisfied with the fact that she is not getting to use the AIT machine because she has an animal. Caller feels that TSA does not accommodate people well enough that have medical disabilities.

Caller is wanting to know if there is any kind of expedited screening process.

Advised Caller:

2013 6:32:3

We are sorry that you are not able to go through the AIT machine with your animal. You must remain with your animal at all times and while you are in the AIT machine, you will not be with your animal. You can be screened using the WTMD or by use of a patdown or both.

We do have an expedited screening process that is called TSA PRECHECK. It is important to remember, that even if a passenger opts in for TSA Pre\u002713\u2122 with their airline or includes their CBP trusted traveler information when booking a flight, TSA Pre\u002713\u2122 does not guarantee an individual expedited screening.

If you join on of CBP TT programs there is a 100 dollar fee that last for 5 years.

Disability Description: Caller states that he is 80 years old. He has a hip replacement.

Incident Details: Caller flew out of DCA on 6-12-13. Caller went through the checkpoint with no issues because he used the over 75 screening lanes.

Caller states that the next day he flew out of LGA. Caller states that he was told that he had to take his shoes off or he would then need to go through the WTMD. Caller states that he was subjected to a patdown due to his metal hip implant and ETD of his shoes.

2013 4:23:00 Caller states that he got about 10 steps and was told to come back to the checkpoint because he was required to come back and take his shoes off. Caller states that he was given the reason that he set the WTMD off. Caller states that he told the officer that he always sets the WTMD off due to his implant. The caller then explained what happened in DCA to the officer, who then became annoyed at the caller.

Caller does not want this forwarded to the CSM at LGA, as he feels that they will just brush it under the rug, because the officer that was being rude to him was supposedly a Supervisor there. Caller states that he will be completing his complaint with the DOJ against said officer.

Caller would not allow me to start or complete the disability complaint portion of the record.

I am a 73-year-old female with 2 knee replacements. As a result, when I fly, I always have to undergo a pat down. Sometimes, these are quite unpleasant, especially when I am banged between my legs - often twice - with the side of the examiner's hand. Sometimes, the examiner is very pleasant. I have sent - at least twice - perhaps more - favorable comments about such exams. I don't understand why all that is done to me is necessary, especially the explosive residue check. I'd prefer the former metal detector wand!

Despite my intensive dislike for these exams, I appreciate all you do for air travelers' security. That is why I am letting you know about the following.

On 12 June 2013 I was in line at the security check at Sky Harbor airport in Phoenix, Checkpoint 4. I was there early to catch a 9:55 a.m. flight. While waiting in a long line, with lots of people waiting in between the ribboned zigzag line, I saw a greenish suitcase on the floor at the beginning of the check system - where the bins are. As I got closer, the suitcase was still there. I reported it to a man in uniform (light blue shirt). He completely ignored me. I then walked to the walk-through screening device, losing my place in line, and told the TSA employee there. She reacted immediately, and called someone to come. A male TSA employee came, picked up the suitcase, and put it over a partition behind the baggage belt. He took his time. I saw no indication that the abandoned suitcase was a cause for concern.

2013 9:30:4 I learned that the employee in the light blue shirt was a "contractor." That apparently explained his lack of reaction. Shouldn't all employees in a crowded pre-security check area, when an abandoned suitcase is reported, either be required to react or to direct the reporting person to the appropriate personnel? Uniform colors are not well-known enough to me to be able to distinguish who is and who is not a TSA employee. That is probably true of other people going through security as well.

I can only laud the lady at the security gate for her quick response, but I was frankly appalled at the time it took for her to get a response to her call, and then the casual nature of the response.

Surely you have video you can use to check the accuracy of what I have described here.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I do not need a reply from you. I hope, however, that you will do what is needed to see to it that an abandoned suitcase in a crowded -pre-security line is better handled - as a matter of course.

Thank you.

I was very disturbed today to see the TSA agent manning the JFK Terminal 4 Pre-Check/Sky Priority desk at 3:35pm wave through the person ahead of me even though she didn't get the 3 beeps. I couldn't tell if he knew her or just thought she was pretty. Either way, how can we be secure if this is happening. I mentioned to the lady who was standing at the metal detector and she just shrugged her head.

On 6/16/13 @ 6:15pm, my family and I were going through the Gate B security checkpoint at RIC airport. I was traveling with my husband, 7 year old, and infant. I was carrying our infant, and my husband was taking care of our 7 year old. The TSA agent told me to walk through the metal detector with the infant and then motioned for the 7 year old to go through too, stopping her father that was watching her and having him go through the scanner instead. This left me with the infant, 7 year old and our stuff on one side. As I try to get our infant back in his carseat, a TSA agent grabbed our stuff and moved it 30 yards from me and out of my sight...Leaving it there unoccupied. I find this to be extremely unsafe and can't imagine it falls within protocol.

I ask for you to confirm what the protocol is, and for the RIC staff to receive more training to 1) not separate a child under 7 from their parent and 2) to not remove items and place them out of sight of the traveller.

Calling from Trinidad, Tobago, flew to Caribbean for vacation from JFK, and had an incident going through security screening. She had to take off her shoes and place in the tray. When she retrieved her shoes something stuck her in her right large toe and one of the TSA agents went to get a swab, tweezers and something brown was stuck in her foot, unsure if the object was metal or what, said they couldn't determine what it was. The TSA officer removed the object and dressed the toe for her and now she is unable to walk on her foot. When the incident happened the TSA agent went to another officer and he walked to where she was sitting and asked what he could do and he told the TSA agent to get the supplies to take care of her toe. Caller states she was in a wheelchair, she walks with a cane and she couldn't raise her arms in the AIT and they directed her to the WTMD and that is when she felt something in her foot.

2013 8:46:5 States she is a borderline diabetic and won't be returning to the States until 7-24-13.

Flight # 525 via Caribbean Airlines, Gate # 3,

She is in Trinidad at the current time.

Response:

Mailed claim form to caller for injury.

Is there a reason that I needed to wait in line for more than 45 minutes this morning at TPA's American terminal's security? That only one body scanner and 1 metal detector were open (with the metal detector completely devoted to the priority line)?

Are you people not able to add up flight information and determine how many lanes you will need open? Your average seventh grader could do that math.

2013 2:09:0 It's embarrassing to the country, but I suppose, government as usual.

I was in line to pass through security in Concourse C at LaGuardia Airport last Thursday, June 13th at about 11:30 am, when I witnessed something that will only serve to give the TSA a bad reputation. First, I should say that I am a frequent traveler and am a member of the Pre Check program (which I believe is one of the greatest inventions in the history of mankind) and I am very supportive of TSA's efforts to keep us all safe.

Concourse C has no Pre Check line and, as such, I was in line to go through regular security. Just before I got to the metal detector, an elderly woman was rolled up to the machine. She was obviously infirm and had a great deal of trouble standing on her own. She very much wanted to cooperate but it was clear she was physically unable to do so to the satisfaction of the TAS agent present. They asked her to stand and walk through the metal detector with a cane they provided for her (instead of the one she had with her) and asked her to walk through. It was almost too painful to watch. She could barely make it through, and in fact, had to be helped to stand and walk. She set off the alarm because of her belt and then had to walk through again...and then again after that. All of this is in slow motion as you can well imagine. In the meantime, the line started to back-up and the grumbling started. All for this could have been prevented if the agent had recognized the issue she had on her hands and had had the woman rolled through another gate, had asked her to stand and then wanded her. But common sense did not prevail that day and as a result, everyone in the back of the line felt put out by the fact that the line came to a complete stop.

2013 2:09:3 No one disputes the need to make sure the individual was checked, but the method used was not in keeping the practical needs of the situation. In the end, all that happened was that TSA looked a little silly forcing this elderly woman back and forth through the metal detector when it was pretty clear another way would have been much better for all involved.

Thank you.

Caller said she flies a lot on Southwest and was told by the airline that hair spray could be placed in her checked baggage. Caller has flown out of Oklahoma and the hair spray went to Louisiana with her. Today when she flew from Louisiana to Oklahoma, Caller got home and found three Notice of Inspections in her baggage, one of the Notice of Inspections had one hair spray removed and the caller wanted to know why her hair spray was taken out. The caller also said when she flew she was wearing a new pair of jeans with elastic waist and the AIT at both airports indicated an anomaly in her back pocket. The only problem with that is the jeans do not have back pockets. Caller asked the TSO s at both airports why was it saying she had something in her back pocket and she had no pockets. The TSO s at both airports notified their supervisor.

I advised the caller:

2013 7:31:5 She would receive a claim form and instruction in 24 hours. I told the caller to fill out the claim form and send it to the address on the claim form box 1 and mail the form to the Claims Management Branch. Claims Management Branch will respond with a letter of acknowledgement and a claim number to monitor the claims process on the tsa.gov website. I told the caller that the claims process was under the Federal Tort Claim Act.

As TSA screens bags for prohibited items, TSOs may find dangerous or hazardous materials inside checked baggage, which could include common household items. When carried in checked baggage these items may present a threat to the safety of the aircraft. Aircraft operators are notified when these items are found, and they will make the final decision to remove or allow dangerous or hazardous materials from checked bags following inspection.

Patdowns are used to resolve alarms from the walk through metal detector (WTMD), when anomalies are discovered through Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, as well as when random screening activities are conducted.

I then said that I have the right not to go through the metal detector and was then told I have to wait. I then stood for an additional five minutes while the employee re-stated why I should "just go through the metal detector".

It's my opinion he attempted to make me as uncomfortable as possible during the search. The employee (b)(6) aggressively pressed rather than simply touching me as he was patting me down. I was further subjected to the employee (b)(6) derogatory demeanor that left me upset and scratched. Because of his rough handling of the pat down search, by pressing extra hard while rubbing his hand over the waist band firmly against my skin, it caused a red abrasion on my stomach from his 2013 8:20:2 gloves.

I am disappointed that better training isn't provided to employees. As such, I strongly suggest that this employee receive both anger management training and psychological testing before returning to active duty. Without further training, the flying public will be subjected and TSA liable, for this employee's physical and verbal abuse.

2013 10:51: Caller was returning from Paris and upon arrival in ATL was subjected to secondary screening and in the process the TSO left her passport and boarding pass out of her carry on bag. She was contacted by lost and found stating they found her documents but that she was going to have to pay for shipping the documents to her. Caller requested that I send her the documents and wanted to know why she was subjected to secondary screening. Explained that in the future she should inform TSO before screening begins that she has metal implants so she could be directed to the AIT instead of the WTMD and she said she did. I explained that if she alarmed during either one of the technologies we are required to clear the alarm by a thorough pat down. She then stated she never heard any alarms and she doesn't understand why this happened. Caller stated she was told by (b)(6) that when they found the passport they would send it to her. Mailed the SF95 and informed caller how to relay information to the CSM through option 5 on the IVR. birds and screens them in a back room. This time they required him to take the birds through the metal detector.

Caller stated that these are baby parrots, and he will pursue the matter if anything happens to them.

Caller advised that (b)(6) a supervisor, was the only agent who gave the caller his name. Others also refused to allow him to take the birds into the back room as well, and compelled him to go through the metal detector. Usually, they allow caller to go through the metal detector while the screening supervisor takes the container-cage with the birds from him for screening in the back room.

I advised that I would pass the caller's information to the CSM for further action. I advised that I would recommend the CSM contact caller, but I could not promise that they would do so.

Caller expressed his dissatisfaction with this statement.

Could I tell him when he would be contacted?

No, I could not, as I did not want to provide incorrect information.

2013 3:06: Caller again expressed his dissatisfaction.

What should he do if the birds are affected?

I advised caller that I am neither an avian nor legal expert and would not be able to provide any information to him that would be of any use.

How does he get in touch with Delta?

Does he realize that he is talking to TSA?

Who would be in charge of screening?

TSA, but he may also want to pursue the matter with the airline as well.

Do I have a number for Delta?

No, I do not.

Caller flying in a couple days and asked if something is a security threat why isn't everything done across the board?

In LAS everytime she goes through the line when she gets through they pat down her head, she has dreadlocks in her hair and can see her scalp, there's nothing that could possibly be in there. States she doesn't use any type metal pins, etc. She said it feels degrading and is embarrassing and it is the only location she is having her head patted down and wonders why?

She is going through the AIT and the TSOs don't tell her why they are patting her head down and she thinks it is because she has the dreadlocks. She has been flying frequently and doesn't want to be singled out and if it only happened everynow and then she wouldn't think as much about it and she said it didn't happen the last time, but, when she traveled a couple weeks ago.

States if it happens again she will call back to the TCC with names, etc. States she is more aggravated with the process than the TSO performing their job and she is all for security and safety, but, just wonders why she is having to have the 2013 4:18:6 procedure?

Response:

Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening.

Informed caller she is welcome to speak with a supervisor at the checkpoint for any issues she is experiencing.

Dear sir or ma'am,

Recently I had the opportunity to contrast the performance of Italian airport security agents and that of the TSA. Sadly, TSA loses by a mile.

For example, I was in the security line at Fiumicino airport, a long line because of a large influx of passengers at that time. The security agents were quite patient and polite in getting people through the checkpoint. While I was waiting in line, a woman who had short time until her flight boarded brought that to the attention of security. Two agents escorted her through the line and ushered her to the front and expeditiously screened her, easing her way onto her flight.

In contrast, at the Philadelphia airport, going through another long security line to be rescreened after clearing immigration and customs, another woman had a short time until her flight departed. The TSA agent told her that she had to receive permission FROM EVERYONE ahead of her in the line to get through quicker, there WAS NOTHING HE COULD DO! At the same time, there were three or four agents standing around doing nothing but jawjacking (Thousands Standing Around!) at the checkpoint verifying boarding passes/tickets and ID. One of them could easily have helped this woman, who was forced by your lackeys to beg other passengers to allow her to pass through (which we did). It would seem the twit claiming there was nothing he could do didn't want to be bothered to do more than stand there with his thumb up his anterior orifice. Oh, he did smirk a bit when he claimed he couldn't do anything...

Since TSA was created, which was a major error by the government to begin with, I have become ever more convinced that hiring the minimum wage, low qualification 'rent-a-cops' who formerly performed airport security screening was simply stupid.

2013 9:03:1 Putting the same twits in a fancier uniform, giving them more power over the flying public, unionizing them and making them federal government employees just gives them a greater sense of entitlement and allows them to lord it over the public who is forced to put up with the ineffective screening hassles.

TSA has prevented, as far as I know, exactly zero airline terrorism incidents since the boondoggle agency was created. The attempted airliner explosions were stopped by alert passengers, aided by incompetent wanna-be bombers, not by TSA.

In my opinion, TSA has done nothing but cost the taxpayers billions of dollars and create another unnecessary government agency. We, the flying public certainly aren't safer for your presence or screening groping.

Far from it, we hate going through the process, but are forced to do so by bureaucrats who have exempted themselves from complying with the rules they impose on everyone else.

Oh, before I forget, the Italian security screening doesn't require one to remove shoes. Mine had to come off due to setting off the metal detector (steel shank in shoes). Maybe they know something about reducing unnecessary hassles that you could learn... They are certainly more efficient and helpful to the public.

sincerely,

(b)(6)

Caller stated that she is upset that she has to go through a patdown because of her metal knee. Caller stated that she went through the WTMD and had to receive a patdown afterwards. Wanted to know what she needed to do so she doesn't have to receive a patdown.

2013 9:40:5

Advised caller:

She could go through the AIT that doesn't penetrate the skin so it shouldn't set off any alarms. If it does alarm, the passenger would just receive a patdown of the area that was alarmed.

Caller wants to know how to avoid the AIT and to have a private patdown, he has a metal implant in his back. During his last screening he was asked to lift his shirt and was embarrassed by the public exposure.

If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown. If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

2013 11:35:0

A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.
- The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas.

A TSA agent told her no, she had no choice but to go through the scanner and didn't have an option. When I went through earlier in the morning I had a choice of scanner or full body pat down and my husband was told to go through the metal detector. Is it PDX TSA policy to send women and girls through the scanner and only men get the option of the metal detector? Please advise. I'm extremely upset over how my daughter was treated!!!! Not that I would be happy if I heard she had full body pat down either, but it seems suspiciously unfair and unethical.

Caller stated that she was flying out of Denver International Airport and she was prompted to go through the WTMD. She was alarmed because there was metal in her clothing. Caller stated that when she was told that she was going to have to receive a patdown, she requested it to be in a private screening location. The TSO left the caller's purse on the conveyor belt. Caller stated that she was concerned because it was at the end of the conveyor about 10 feet away from her. Caller was requesting to get her purse that way it's not left for someone to just take it and the TSO wouldn't let her get it nor would they get it for her. Comment : The Precheck checkpoint wasn't open. When I asked why, I was told that "they close it down when there aren't enough staff." I counted 16 TSA employees in the checkpoint area, even though all passengers were being routed through a single full-body scanner. At least four of the TSA staff were just standing there the entire time I was in line. It only takes two people to keep the Precheck line open (1 on the X-ray, 1 past the metal detector). Clearly, insufficient staff was just an excuse for "can't be bothered and don't care about the traveling public." Precheck was a great start to bringing sanity back to our airport security. TSA shouldn't let the laziness of staff sabotage that effort.

I am writing because I think that one of the airport security personnel has violated the law. I went through Newark airport yesterday 6/19/12 at 5:30 am, Terminal A screening. I am pregnant and I chose to opt out the metal detector. The lady there said "you will be fine, go there" and she pointed toward the metal detector machine. I passed the metal detector without any alarms but after that she asked me to swab my head cover.

I really felt this was not appropriate. First because she argued against my choice of opting out and second because she swiped my head cover.

Looking forward to hearing from you brace. He also wanted to know how to transport the syringes. He said that she does have a notification card.

I gave the following information: If a passenger has a cast, brace, or support appliance, the way screening will be conducted depends on his or her level of ability. The passenger should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of his or her ability, of the existence of a cast, brace, or support appliance, and of any need for assistance before screening begins.

TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by a walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

- 2013 8:58:0
- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.
 - The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.
 - A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.
 - The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.
 - A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening. Regardless of whether a passenger is screened by a walk-through metal detector, AIT, or a thorough patdown, casts, braces, and support appliances are subject to additional screening. TSA also will use technology to test the device for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening.

A companion, assistant, or family member may accompany a passenger to assist him or her during any private or public screening. After providing this assistance, the companion, assistant, or family member will need to be rescreened.

The screening process for a wheelchair or scooter is determined by a passenger's ability to stand and walk, although a passenger can be screened without standing, walking, or being required to transfer out of a wheelchair or scooter. Passengers should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of their ability before the screening begins.

The below message throws one more absurdity on to the pile. You seem to be saying that a random enhanced search of a few passengers will deter a terrorist, because he or she won't be able to take precautionary measures based on the knowledge of a more specific targeting methodology. Point one: A terrorist always faces the hazard of being detected in advance and is reconciled to it. Knowing that he or she is unlikely to be profiled, and that a 76-year-old white-haired lady is as likely to be searched as a more suspicious looking individual, decreases the risk element in the terrorist's calculations. Point two: A terrorist willingly faces martyrdom. From that standpoint, the risk of being arrested must seem a minor price to pay. Surely a place in paradise is guaranteed eventually to those who try and fail.

Thank you for your e-mail in which you inquire about the reasons for secondary screening.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

The below message throws one more absurdity on to the pile. You seem to be saying that a random enhanced search of a few passengers will deter a terrorist, because he or she won't be able to take precautionary measures based on the knowledge of a more specific targeting methodology. Point one: A terrorist always faces the hazard of being detected in advance and is reconciled to it. Knowing that he or she is unlikely to be profiled, and that a 76-year-old white-haired lady is as likely to be searched as a more suspicious looking individual, decreases the risk element in the terrorist's calculations. Point two: A terrorist willingly faces martyrdom. From that standpoint, the risk of being arrested must seem a minor price to pay. Comment : This is not really a complaint, but more of an inconsistency. For some reason at the FLL airport you are required to show your boarding pass as you pass through the metal detector, which is about 15 feet beyond where they just checked my boarding pass and ID. Seems like a big waste of time and energy, especially when I have to retrieve my boarding pass from my bag that has just gone through the X-ray. I do travel extensively for a living and this is the only place I can recall this being

My name is (b)(6) and I would like to provide feedback to you regarding a few of the TSA personnel stationed at the RDU airport.

I was traveling with my family (wife, 3 year old daughter, and infant son) from Raleigh to Providence, RI via SW Airlines on 18 June, 2013. Our flight originated @ 10:55AM.

First off, the gentleman who checked our boarding passes and ID was exceedingly professional and courteous. I cannot remember his name, but his service was noteworthy and my family appreciated his friendly demeanor.

After passing through metal detectors, my family was gathering our belongings and preparing to be on our way. As we were tying our shoes, my wife noted a small yellow prescription pill on the ground beside the conveyor belt. Because we have small children, we are especially cautious about them picking things up and putting items in their mouths. In a helpful way, my wife mentioned to the TSA officer nearby, "There's a pill on the ground, I'm not sure if you'd like to pick it up." This was her way of collaborating with TSA to ensure the safety of other travelers. The officer who heard her comment laughed and walked away. As he walked away, another officer (b)(6) appeared. Officer (b)(6) immediately escalated the situation by saying "Why don't you pick it up?! What you going to do if this was in yo [sic] house?" This struck me as not only unprofessional, but also confrontational. My wife and I were both aghast at being essentially yelled at in public, in front of our young children, who were equally appalled.

While my wife explained to our 3 year old that the officer was clearly frustrated and that everything was okay, I said to officer (b)(6) "That was a little aggressive, don't you think?" She countered with, "How 'bout [sic] being assertive?!" While I don't understand her retort, the delivery was anything but warm and professional.

This interaction/scene was witnessed by countless other travelers, as well as TSA officials, NONE of whom came to our assistance whatsoever. In fact, when I approached the lead officers on duty (2 stationed at adjacent podium), they would not tell me officer (b)(6) name, but rather tried to evade the question, presumably to protect their offensive co-worker. I finally was able to obtain an orange TSA Customer Comment Card from these officers, both of whom at least offered an "I'm sorry," and "We saw it.", but nothing more. No words at all to the effect of "That was waaaay out of line", etc. In fact, I came away from the experience feeling like I was inconveniencing these officers by wanting to submit a comment.

I appreciate and applaud TSA's efforts to make traveling safer. It is sad to me that the administration's reputation was damaged by officer (b)(6) and the other officers who were complicit with her bullying of my family.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Query:

Caller has a security concern about LGA and a specific checkpoint, Concourse B in Terminal D. Caller says that he travels frequently out of many airports, and LGA seems to be the most un-secure airport that he goes through.

An incident occurred approximately a week and a half ago, where the caller noticed the irregular behavior of another passenger. Caller informed the TSOs at the screening checkpoint and received word from the TSOs that this person would be screened more thoroughly. Caller watched the person go through screening without receiving any form of additional screening. Caller would also like to express his concern about the lack of a body scanner at concourse B in Terminal D, the only concourse that does not have a body scanner. Caller says that the LGA supervisor said that his concern was legitimate and it would be one year from now until they get the scanners. Caller was advised to fly out of a different concourse or airport if he was concerned. Caller believes that this was totally inappropriate because it is a security concern. Caller has also noticed that there are no swabbings done at LGA in his last ten visits. Caller is not trying to get anyone in trouble, caller is just wanting to make the concourse safer.

Caller is informed that his concerns will be sent up to the CSM at LGA for additional review.

Caller is wanting to speak with a supervisor.

Escalation Notes (b)(6)

The caller has expressed concerns that about LGA. He flies out of there twice a week and flies out of 15 different airports and LGA has serious security problems. He has two issues he wants to address.

1. He saw someone that kept touching his shirt like he had something hidden there. He told the TSO s and they said they would check. When the passenger that was touching his shirt went through the checkpoint the TSO s just sent him through the metal detector without a patdown. This concerned the caller.
2. He flies out of Concoours B terminal B and there are no body scanners there. He also says they never swab anybody. When he spoke to a supervisor about this she said that they would be getting a AIT in about a year. She informed him do to budget reasons is why there is only one at LGA. The caller expressed great concern about a TSA supervisor expressing concern over a security flaw at that airport.

I assured the caller that he would speak with a security agent from the TCC and we would send this to a CSM at LGA.

I am sending a complaint as my boss (the senior ranking Command Sergeant Major of the Pacific Asia) and I were trying to get through airport security in dress uniform and were humiliated by TSA agents. We were told to take off parts of our uniform which is highly unprofessional. Then we had to be patted down extensively in front of all the people going through security.

Then I was made to go to a room where I was patted down in my genital region six times and all my property was swabbed for explosive material. I am a staff sergeant with over 12 years of service in the United States Army, a secret security clearance, and two tours to Iraq and Afghanistan. It is now a Policy when service members are traveling on orders that they wear their dress uniform unless coming from over seas.

The airport we were were searched in is El Paso international airport and the time was approximately 1115 am on 21 June 2013 near the B gate terminals. The TSA agents did not know the proper procedures when they sent my boss through the metal detector and he was told by another agent that it was the wrong procedure for him to go through the metal detector. He was moved through the scanner two times and was made to wait approximately 5-10 mins to get patted down. He has 33 years of service, a top secret clearance and has multiple tours to both Iraq and Afghanistan.

This is unacceptable behavior and highly unprofessional. We as Soldiers should not be treated this way and TSA agents should know proper procedures. There needs to be a change. We are Soldiers of the United States, and should not be treated this way.

Sir/Ma'am,

I'm (b)(6) an active duty Soldier traveling from El Paso TX to Honolulu HI. I and my Aide are traveling in dress uniform and have been treated other than service members to our country.

This began when the first set of screener's (both females) ran us through the metal detector even though they clearly seen us in dress uniform with awards and badges. Once the Alarm was set off they explained that we needed a pat down.

The second screener (male) began to explain me to begin to me that they should have never sent me through the metal detector and began to tell me to remove items from my uniform. I explained that this is a uniform and removal of items are not authorized. I also stated that my aide was through and wants photos of this search/pat down, his response was "I don't have time for this", my response was neither do I. He escorted be back out to began the entire process again? Meanwhile, my aide somehow and now both surprised that he suddenly tested positive for explosives and was taken to another room? Exactly at the time when he was reaching for his camera.

I have been proudly serving our country for the past 33 1/2 years and never have I been treated in such manner. Civilian travelers did take photographs with their phone and captured the entire event with one stating " this is embarrassing can't you see he is a Soldier in uniform serving our country".

I am not looking for an explanation or apology I am looking to get this fixed before more is added to the great TSA record it has become known for.

Caller s 7 and 8 year old grandchildren flew home unaccompanied from BUR to PHX after visiting her. There mother is muslim and meet them at the gate at PHX by obtaining a gate pass from the airline, US Airways. The mother stated that her private parts were touched after she had to have a patdown. She believes that the patdown was inappropriate and does not understand why she had to have the patdown since she was not boarding a flight. The mother (b)(6) told the caller that the TSOs would not allow her to use the AIT scanner because it was out of order, nor could she use the WTMD. The mother also said that she feels she was profiled based on her religion and required to have a patdown. The flight that the children were on was US Airways 2836 that arrived today, June 21st at 1130hrs, and the incident occurred around 1100hrs. Caller would like to file a complaint with the manager at PHX due to the inappropriate patdown and was calling to see if someone could look into this as discrimination or profiling.

Apologized to caller for her daughter-in-laws experience and explained that every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we will forward the complaint to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location for review. Also, explained that if she feels that the incident occurred due to profiling, she will need to put her complaint in writing to TSAs Multicultural Branch. Explained that we will send her a email containing a request for information that she can respond to in order to request the investigation.

Response Details: I gave the caller the email and postal address to file a complaint

or vis postal mail to:

Transportation Security Administration Office of Disability Policy and Outreach
601 South 12th Street TSA-33
Arlington, VA 20598-6033

If a passenger has a service dog due to a disability or medical condition, both the passenger and the dog will be screened. The passenger should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) that the dog is a service animal and not a pet, and we recommend that passengers have documentation or that the dog wear gear (a harness, vest, etc.) to indicate that it is a service animal.

2013 1:31:5 Passengers are expected to maintain control of their animals by holding onto the leash throughout the screening process, and they should not be separated from their dogs by TSA personnel.

Passengers with service dogs will be screened either by a walk-through metal detector or thorough patdown. If the passenger and service animal are screened by a walk-through metal detector, they can proceed in one of three ways:

The passenger can walk through first with the dog following behind on its leash.
The dog can walk through first on its leash with the passenger following behind.
The passenger and dog can walk through at the same time.

If a passenger and the dog walk through at the same time and the metal detector alarms, both the passenger and dog are subject to additional screening, including a thorough patdown. If the passenger and dog walk through separately, only the party that alarms the metal detector will receive additional screening. It is very important that the passenger not make contact with the dog (other than holding the leash) until the dog has been cleared and inspected by a TSO.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening.

Regardless of how the passenger and dog proceed through the walk-through metal detector, the dog will receive additional screening. A TSO will physically inspect the dog and the dog's belongings (collar, harness, leash, backpack, vest, etc.) in order to resolve the alarm.

I emailed the caller the information.

I will be traveling on June 25, 2013 from Nashville to Dallas at 11:15 on American Airlines.

I wear 2 medically necessary devices that MUST NOT go through any Xray or millimeter wave technology under any circumstances according to manufacturer's EXPLICIT instructions. My devices are a Medtronic Minimed insulin pump and a Dexcom G4 platinum transmitter, receiver and sensors.

I will be placing the receiver and sensor in a plastic bag PRIOR to walking through the metal detector which is the ONLY permitted device that will not destroy, impair or affect medically necessary computer functions on these devices.

In the past at MANY airports, both domestic and international, I have encountered poorly trained agents who really are unaware of the serious consequences of placing sensitive medical devices through various X-ray scanners, etc.

This has been well documented in the news and I reference a teen who had her insulin pump destroyed by an agent waiving her through the body scanner in Salt Lake City.

2013 1:38:2 It can be quite difficult as a physician to explain this to people who may not even have a high school diploma, and medical technology often moves at a quick pace so that non medical people do have difficulty with ever changing advances in medical devices.

I have offered in the past to be a resource to enable your organization as a consultant in order to stay current in how diabetes devices can be safely screened through security areas. I have had no reply but still offer my assistance in this area.

I am an academic physician at a top 20 medical school so I do have the ability to help.

Comments: On June 20th, 2013, we, my husband and 11 year old daughter, arrived at JFK on a Delta flight from Heathrow. We went to terminal "C" to make our connection to our final destination, Cleveland, Ohio. The incident that is the subject of my complaint took place at around 2:30PM.

My family approached security with my daughter in line first, followed by myself and then my husband. After placing our baggage and personal belongings on the belt, my daughter approached the metal detector. The agent, (b)(6) looked at me and asked me how old she was since she did not have her shoes off. I had instructed her, per your posted policy, that she could leave her shoes on (b)(6) was rude and curt from the very beginning of our interaction. When I told her she was 11, he rolled his eyes in disbelief but waved her through. The next thing I knew she was taking her shoes off. When I asked him why, he stated that her shoes were making the metal detector go off. He was outwardly perturbed and raised his voice and had a rude tone when he was speaking to me. During this exchange I was queued up to go into the metal detector following my daughter. After my daughter cleared the metal detector (b)(6) waved through 3 young children and their mother from the converging line. At this time my daughter was on the other side unaccompanied and out of my sight. I asked (b)(6) if he was going to tell me where to go as there were two metal detectors available. He told me to lose the attitude and that if I didn't he'd make me go through the other metal detector (the newer style,) to which I replied I don't care. He still didn't wave me through and I posed the question again about when was he going to instruct me where to go. He finally instructed me to go through the newer model. Keep in mind that there was a 30 minute back up to get through security.

The way that the two detectors were set up, the newer model to the right and farther back, I had to walk past (b)(6) to get to the metal detector. As I passed him, he said, "bitch." This was heard by my husband who was queued up to go through the metal detector next. I spun around and said, "you called me bitch." He said no he didn't.

At this time I asked for his supervisor at which time LTSC (b)(6) came forward and asked what the issue was. I told him what happened. He told me that this was not the first time they had these issues with (b)(6) I asked to speak to LTSC's supervisor. At this point LTSC (b)(6) waved over a woman dressed in a suit. She asked what happened and seemed generally disinterested in the issue. She called over (b)(6) and asked me to repeat my story in front of him and of course he denied calling me a bitch. I asked LTSC (b)(6) how I should persue my complaint and he told me to log the complaint through this website.

After some research, not only is there an issue with how (b)(6) treated me. I understand that by unnecessarily separating my daughter from me like he did, he violated your own policy. By the way, when I was finally able to reach my daughter she was upset and crying as she was left on the other end of the security line trying to figure out what was happening and how to deal with our belongings that were piling up at the end of the conveyor.

My expectations are that I will recieve a prompt response specific to my complaint about how this issue was handled.

When we approached the metal director, we were notified by the TSA representative that my son, again 4 years old, was randomly selected for a random security screening. I asked, before anything was done, what he would be required to do. All the TSA rep said was "additional screening". I told them I did not want him out of my sight but i was held back at the metal detector and he had to go with my wife.

I understand that you randomly select people for screening but when they see it is a 4 year old child, don't you think the dumb shits should allow a manual override and let him go?

Comment : The TSA staff at TVC Cherry Capital must undergo updated training about proper screening procedures for breastmilk, which is classified as a medically necessary liquid by TSA's own policies.

On June 24th I was traveling with my husband and 11 month old daughter. I alerted the TSA officer at the security checkpoint that I had bottles of breastmilk. When I had traveled previously from/to Denver and Austin, the guards took the milk around the X Ray device to engage in a separate screening, since x rays damage breastmilk. Today, however, the officer running the primary scanning machine (an older woman with gray hair) told us that it had to be x rayed. We disagreed and pointed to TSA's own policies. She said that if we didn't x ray it, we would have to have ALL of our luggage examined (not just the breastmilk, which was standard procedure in the other airports) and that I would have to go through a pat down (even though I did go through the metal detector, and TSA policy states that pat downs are only necessary when a passenger opts out of the imaging technology or metal detectors).

To expedite our travels (and since the TSA guard would not budge), my husband and I agreed to let them search all bags as long as they did not X-ray the breastmilk. I also agreed to undergo a pat down since the screener insisted that it was necessary since the milk wasn't x rayed.

It was not necessary for me to be subjected to a through pat down, especially since I was carrying the baby on me. In every other airport, we were simply given a hand test (swab?) when carrying the baby, but the screener made me move the baby, who became agitated. This is an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

We also asked for the supervisor. The supervisor was an older male. My husband told the supervisor his staff needs to re read breastmilk guidelines. The supervisor became defensive and insisted they were "fully trained on all SOPs". The supervisor refused to explain said procedures (such as the need for a pat down when not using x ray), but he did (thankfully) correct staff that any bag that went through the X-ray did not need to be searched. The screener did insist on searching through diaper bag even though all bags had successfully passed through X-ray. My husband asked another older female screener for the business card of supervisor, and was told that the older gentleman was the supervisor. We were never given his name, though we requested it.

The supervisor then called for security, which was not needed since all my husband was asking for was supervisors name. This escalation was not needed and made the situation more tense. Clearly he did not like the fact that my husband questioned him and was overly defensive of the situation.

I recommend entire TVC staff gets training on handling of breastmilk, breast pumps and other child safety issues. This is a tourist destination airport and I am concerned for other families traveling here as staff is clearly not trained for these situations.

The TSA clearly has a poor public reputation (and pending lawsuit) stemming from improper execution of TSA policies regarding breastmilk. It was shocking that there were at least six staff at the TVC airport who were NOT properly trained (or were afraid to confront the supervisor) on these matters.

Comment : I recently traveled out of Philadelphia with my husband, 3-year old and 10-month old. Prior to traveling to the airport I checked the travel policies regarding travel with children and infants on the airport and TSA websites. I packed juice boxes and unopened pouches of baby food for the flight and placed them in a clear Ziplock bag, and alerted security to this prior to going through the metal detector. While packing things up (and trying to contain my 3-year old and 10 month old) I was informed that anyone traveling with a liquid of any kind, including juice boxes, greater than 3 oz was subject to a full pat-down and manual inspection of all baggage. I asked twice to clarify, as I have not had this experience in the past and the TSA website did not indicate anything about this policy. The TSA agent said that only one person needed to receive a pat down and that we could pick which one of us was pat down but that our bags would need to be hand inspected as well. My husband then was pat down while I tried to keep my children calm at the checkpoint. If I had been traveling alone, there is no way I would have been able to receive a patdown at security and contain my small children at the same time unless we went to an enclosed area. I found the entire experience to be very odd, and would like to clarify if this is indeed the policy. If so, it should be recommended that parents not travel with juice, as I certainly never would have brought it if I knew it would be such a hassle. If this is truly the policy for individuals traveling with small children, I will clarify with all of my friends and family not to travel with juice boxes. If it is not the policy, I would greatly appreciate if you provide additional education to the TSA agents in the Philadelphia Airport.

Caller is trying to reach someone in traveler ombudsman and Traveler Engagement, Office of Civil Rights and Liberties. She says an officer done something unusual and she wants to know if this is considered discrimination or violation of her civil rights and liberties. Caller wants to speak with the Ombudsman.

Advised caller:

I attempted to find out if the incident was an alleged act of discrimination. We have a multicultural branch here that handles Civil Rights and Liberties.

CALL TRANSFERRED TO MB AGENT MATT BURNS

2013 11:36: Caller states she is an experienced traveler, never has anyone asked to check her hair for any reason. Is this action normal to receive secondary screening in the form of a patdown on the hair?

Caller Advised:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed. TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates.

Caller did not wish to pursue a civil rights or liberties complaint.

Caller's husband has had a knee replacement. She called recently and spoke to someone whom gave her the information about what to expect during screening regarding his implants. She wants to report that the screeners were told at two different airports that he had a knee replacement, but that they checked the wrong knee both times despite his indicating the knee with the replacement. Caller advised that he went through the AIT at both locations.

I advised that the AIT is not looking for metal and wouldn't have alarmed with his knee replacement. Did it alarm when he went through the metal detector?

Caller advised that she did not know, and her husband was at work at this time and wasn't available to provide details. She advised further that she thought about calling the news, but decided to call TSA instead.

2013 5:37:3 I advised that I would take the flight information and forward the issue to the CSMs at the two airports for appropriate action. She could not provide descriptions of the screeners as the issue was relayed to her by her husband.

Caller provided:

1. SEA-TAC, June 21st, around 0545 hrs., Flt 221, Southwest Airlines - checkpoint nearest the Southwest gates.
2. Orange County, June 28th, about 1410 hrs, Flt 192, Southwest Airlines - checkpoint at the main Southwest gates.

Caller asked how to recontact me to provide the missing information. I provided the EID in case she recontacts TCC.

TSA Employee (b)(6)

An unfortunate incident occurred this morning that was clearly preventable. TSA Agent (b)(6) directed my son through a metal detector after I repeatedly requested a pat down. Because I used the word "x-ray" versus "metal detector" he refused to listen any further as to why my son should receive a pat down. Regardless of the reason why... it is my understanding that if I request a pat down, my son should receive a pat down. As a result, Agent (b)(6) has needlessly subjected my son to a shunt malfunction (my son has a programmable shunt that has a magnet controlling the valve)

I am going to first state the facts as to what occurred on 6/27/13 at approximately 8:30am and then I will summarize:

Facts:

- 1). When my son and I finished taking off our shoes in the security line we found ourselves in the body scan line 2). I reached out to TSA Agent (b)(6) and told him my son needed a pat down - he cannot go through the scanning.
- 3). Agent (b)(6) directed my son and I to follow him towards the metal detector to which I replied he cannot go through the "x-ray". - he needs to be patted down 4). Agent (b)(6) got very firm in his tone and again directed both of us to follow him towards the metal detector. Agent (b)(6) repeatedly stated that TSA has not used x-ray for sometime.
- 5). While moving towards the metal detector I repeatedly tried to explain that my son has a shunt with a magnetic valve and he "cannot go through this machine".
- 6). Agent (b)(6) was agitated and directed an older gentleman on the other side of the metal detector to take my son through....I asked if this machine is turned off - no one answered me and they directed my son through the metal detector.
- 7). At this point the machine beeped and I turned to agent (b)(6) and asked him why he was so disrespectful and why would he not listen to me.
- 8). Agent (b)(6) then told me that I said he could not go through x-ray and this was not an x-ray.

To the best of my ability, this states the sequential facts of what occurred. On the surface, this might appear to be a simple misunderstanding and perhaps questionable customer service. In reality, Agent (b)(6) had an attitude from the moment I engaged him and asked for a pat down. In my opinion, Agent (b)(6) was disrespectful and arrogant. At no time did he stop to listen to my concerns. Agent (b)(6) is going to stick to his position that I indicated my son could not go through x-ray - which is true I did make that statement. However, that does not negate the fact that I originally requested a pat down for my son and I insisted that he not go through the metal detector. Agent (b)(6) heard me reference x-ray and that was the end of the story - he quit listening and frankly tried to make a point that my concerns were unwarranted.

I can only assume that Agent (b)(6) went about his job the rest of today without regard to the impact that he had on my son and our family. But, the reality is that his arrogance and disrespect needlessly subjected my son to a potential life threatening situation. I am not being overly dramatic here - google the impact of subjecting a programmable shunt to a metal detector - if the valve moves, the result can be critical. When we arrived in Tampa we contacted our son's Neurosurgeon who at this point wants us to closely monitor his behavior and if we seen any changes go straight to the ER...what a way to enjoy vacation... And why? Because agent (b)(6) was in to big of a hurry to exert his power and act as if he knows more than the customer - what a shame!

In speaking with the supervisor after the incident I was instructed that in the future I should absolutely refuse to go through the metal detector... Honestly, I never felt that completely disregarding a TSA Agents direction was an option...

2013 12:05: asked if I could go the same route and be on my way, I was told that because I had already opted out of the scanner, I had to wait for the patdown, and was ineligible to pass the way all the other passengers were going. I waited for a few minutes, asked again, and was denied again, all while other passengers were passing me through the alternate detector. This delay was in my opinion unnecessary and prejudicial. I stated I didn't want to use the large scanner, and was held up, while people who said nothing got exactly what I wanted, in front of me, while I was made to wait. This was unfair, frustrating, and caused delay and extra hassle not just for me, but for the already busy agents at security. This policy appears to be faulty, and should be revised. Should someone opt out of the scanner, does it not make sense that they use the same alternate method deemed acceptable for passengers whose only difference is that they did not voice a preference?

What happened? Describe your complaint. Give as much detail about your experience as possible, including the name of the air carrier, if this occurred at an airport.

I live in Dallas and use DFW frequently but also travel to a number of airports. Although I am cleared for Pre-Check, I have a surgical implant in my knee that sets off the ancient metal detectors. When can we expect to see body scanners replace metal detectors at the Pre-Check checkpoints, specifically at DFW? Going through a secondary pat-down defeats the purpose of Pre-Check.

2013 1:08:1 thanks, (b)(6)

The callers daughter flew from RDU to Houston. The caller dropped his daughter off before 5:45 am to catch a flight with Southwest airlines. She checked her bag curbside. The caller states that the TSA agents at the checkpoint forced his daughter to go through the metal detector after she told them she had a pacemaker. She also showed them her Pacemaker card. After screening she complained of being light headed. The caller was very upset about this. The caller was unsure as to whether his daughter went through the WTMD or AIT. He did not feel that she was discriminated against or anything of that nature, just that the officers would not listen to her.

I advised the caller to have his daughter call us to give us more details. I apologized to the caller and told him I would forward this information to the CSM if we haven't heard from her by the end of the shift. She is on her way to Houston now. I went over the procedures for a pacemaker with the caller. I provided the EID to the caller.

2013 1:44:0 If a passenger has an internal medical device, such as a pacemaker or a defibrillator, it is important for him or her to inform the officer conducting his or her screening before the screening process begins. Passengers can use TSA's Notification Card to communicate discreetly with security officers. However, showing this card or other medical documentation will not exempt a passenger from additional screening when necessary.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by a metal detector and should instead request to be screened by imaging technology or a patdown. While TSA has no evidence that screening by imaging technology will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians.

Hi,

I wear a hat, not a ball cap, when I go through security I am made to put my hat in the tray that goes through the x ray. In the past I had hat damaged or dirtied. Why can I not go through the metal detector with the hat in my hand. If I have to go through the x ray, then why can I not hand the hat to some one to check, if I could not wear it in the x ray. Both of these options I have been denied, why? Who pays for damage done to property in the screening process? No one would tell me why. On two separate times that I asked why I could not do one of the above. The reply was "don't give me any attitude." There was no "attitude" it was a question. Then I was told to move along and " don't say another word".

This is asked because I have seen on several times in different airport, the last being in just the last 10 days. Females with headscarfs and men with different head wraps, not being required to remove them for checking. They just go through the ax ray or metal detector. I have not seen anyone even touch the head wear to see if any thing is in it or to question them. They just go through the machine, pick up their stuff if they had any and go on.

2013 3:04:5 When I questioned this I was told by airport TSA, that it is a religious issue and they could not be asked to remove it or have it checked. This does not make sense. It is a safety matter and not a religious one. What says that just because they say it religious means that they will not try to bring something on board. I suppose if some religion decides to carry a belt knife then they will be allowed? The rules/requirements should be the same for all in this matter and if they do not want to follow them then they should not be allowed to get on a plane. Either do the job the same for everyone or don't do it at all.

I know you have a tough job and people do nothing but complain. Thank you for the work you do and the attitude of the TSA workers for the most part has improved but there are still some who act like they are Gods and the people are nothing but cattle to be herded around.

Thank You,

2013 4:56:5 The caller asked about the AIT. She went through the scanner at her departing airport without any questions. She stated that on the return flight she was asked if she had hair extensions. She asked what the scanner reveals. She asked why she was not subjected to this on the departing flight. She stated that this was embarrassing. She did not want the people she was flying with to know she had them. She asked if this was harassment. She stated that she patted down her head. She stated that she will just call the airport directly.

The AIT identifies anything foreign objects on her body. I explained that bobby pins will do the something, from personal experience. I explained that a pat down procedure is use to resolve any alarms of the WTMD or anomalies identified by the AIT. I explained that I am not sure which technology was used on the departure flight.

When entering the security screening area I was asked for additional ID other than my Airline ID and complied with my drivers license. I was then asked if I was going to use the full body scanner or going to opt-out; which I have never been asked in the years of the TSA's existence. I asked the TSA agent what was going on, and she said the supervisor at the HPN airport considers Flight Crewmembers of non-scheduled airlines to not be Crewmembers at all. Then I was completely discriminated against, even denied the ability to walk through the regular metal detector type scanner (even though I did it anyway) and then given a complete hand/body pat-down, all while showing them my Airline ID badge that clearly has my TSA Compliant CHRC and Air Carrier ID number. My bags were searched even after going through the x-ray scan and my water's, toothpaste, and hair spray were all confiscated. I literally travel on-duty on the airlines several times a month and have never, ever been given this type of search anywhere else than here and today. My First Officer who was traveling with me was also subjected to the same truly overwhelming search. This was absurd. As a Flight Crewmember, in uniform and on duty being subjected to this search, even after passing through the metal detector and not setting anything off, smacks of a deliberate attempt to intimidate. Whomever is managing this station should be fired. Not only is what happened to myself and my First Officer a complete waste of time and TSA's resources, I feel it was a sick, deliberate attempt to show some authority where none is truly deserved. In fact, I am so sure this is happening to Flight Crews traveling on duty with airline tickets that I am going to request media attention from people I know in the NYC media market to film this happening and show what an complete idiot you have running this station. The only positive thing I have to say about this experience is that the TSA agents working the security checkpoint seemed genuinely apologetic for having to do this screening and continuously repeated they were doing it because they had to because the supervisor demanded it. Well, I am demanding this supervisor be fired. They have gone completely rogue. Conduct your own investigation and ask the agents on duty if they are constantly giving Crewmembers who are traveling on duty the same treatment I received today, and you will find out exactly what I am talking about. Either that, or you can wait and watch it on the evening news.

Caller flew DCA-MCO yesterday aboard JetBlue #823 which departed at 2:40PM. Caller has metal implants and was subjected to secondary screening, which including a thorough pat-down, pat-down of her head, and ETD sampling on by two different agents at separate times. This occurred at approximately 1:30 PM at Terminal A. Caller does not remember specific gate number but advises it is the first to the left upon entering Terminal A. Caller stated the female agent patted down inside her shirt and blouse and did not offer her a private screening. Caller is unhappy with the manner in which her patdown was conducted and wants to make a complaint.

Resolution:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to those who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience. Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints. We consider your concerns to be a serious issue for our attention. TSA appreciates that you took the time to share your concerns with us.

I hear several stories and some that make the press of individuals losing valuables as they go through screening including laptops, iPad's, cell phones, etc. including what I am sure are other individuals being screened as well as your own TSA staff that have made the press.

The physical screening process was fine. It's the separation of my eyes and my belongings while going through screening to prevent any theft situation from occurring that gave me great discomfort and quite honestly a moment of panic.

Here is how your process happened in my case

I entered one of the two available screening lines - the one with the metal detector as the line looked shorter. My belongings went into the x-ray that I would consider was for the metal detector line however I was directed to the body scanner. It's at this point I noted my belongings had already been through the x-ray available for anyone to grab while there were still two individuals in front of me to go through the scanner in addition to myself.

While not a long period of time, I was unable to keep an eye on my belongings while I was facing the required position for the body scanner. I know working in a school district and students that it's just a matter of seconds leaving items unattended that they can disappear.

While I do not fly often I would strongly encourage changing the method in your screening area so individuals can better watch over their belongings as they go through the process. In looking back, something as simple as doing the "random selection" prior to everyone preparing their items for scanning in the x-ray machine would seem an adequate solution. In the San Antonio case, I would have been able to do the body scan as requested AND kept a watchful eye on my laptop, iPad and iPhone as they exited the x-ray machine. It seems to me that with today's technology that there should be some type of 1:1 solution to best keep passengers and belongings together during the screening process aside from the items going through the actual x-ray machine of course.

I do not know the ultimate solution to enable individuals being screened to go through this but I would hope you look at the situation as I have described and come up with better systems in the screening area so that we can have peace of mind knowing we can as much as possible keep the watchful eye over our belongings through the screening process.

Thank you from a concerned citizen,

Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Virgin America Flight vx 205 leaving from Chicago O'Hare to SFO on June 22, 2013:

Comments: (b)(6) at O'Hare was extremely rude and disrespectful. I requested a pat down instead of full body screening. My family (with a toddler) went through the metal detector and I was left waiting for 15 minutes. I asked to speak to the supervisor and (b)(6) appeared. He said I'd just have to wait and implied it was my fault for not wanting the full body screen. When I finally had a female officer help me, he proceeded to tell me why he was right and I was wrong and he started to lecture me on how professional he was being. I asked him to stop talking to me as I had to join my family and catch a flight, but he kept talking at me. In addition, I witnessed TSA officers take away baby food from another family. That family was so upset that they gave me their contact information and asked me to pass on their experience as well.

Caller says he had an incident at JFK on June 5. He was trying to find out the result of his incident. The manager he spoke to that day gave him a number to reach her at. He called her for 3 weeks and finally reached her a couple of days ago. She told him he needed to file a complaint. He says that no one mentioned this to him and he done his diligence at the airport. He says that the incident was disappointing and disgusting. He wants to know if he needs to take further legal action.

He was going through security and was in line for the AIT. There was an elderly woman, who didn't speak English, holding up the line. The female officer at the AIT machine was mouthing and making eyes to the black man behind him. This individual then went over to the WTMD and went through it. Caller says that he asked if he could go over too. The officer told him no that he was the wrong color. He asked her again and she told him the same thing. He asked for a manager who completely blew this off. He says that he spoke with another manager who asked the male officer at the WTMD about the incident. He confirmed what the female officer had said. The manager gave him her number to follow up. He says that the female officer came to the gate and was talking about the fact that the black male who got to go through the WTMD was her cousin. He says he is a white male. He says that race should not come into play with him going through security and what methods of screening he is able to use. He travels a couple of times per month.

Caller asked for any associated ID numbers.

Advised caller:

Advised caller when there is an accusation of discrimination of race, regulations require the complaint be put in writing to be considered formal. Advised caller that I would e-mail him the instructions on how to file a formal complaint.

Provided caller with my employee ID number and EID (b)(6)

Response Details: Advised caller that when traveling with a service animal you have to remain in possession of the service animal at all times and the service animal has to go through the WTMD. This means she has to use this as well. Anytime and alarm sounds a TSA agent has to conduct a full patdown. Advised caller that she could request a private screening at any time.

If she feels she has been discriminated based on her disability and race, her complaints have to be put in writing to be formal. Advised I could e-mail the instructions for making these complaints formal. Advised caller that since she does not have internet, I would have to read these to her.

For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations, it must:

Be filed within 180 days of the alleged act of discrimination;

Be in writing;

Include the name and address of the complainant;

Include the date of the alleged act of discrimination;

Describe the alleged discriminatory action in sufficient detail to inform TSA of the nature of the alleged act of discrimination; and

Be signed by the complainant or someone authorized to sign on behalf of the complainant.

013 2:01:1 In order to appropriately address your concerns, we also need to know the airport at which you were screened by TSA.

The caller basically repeated the same story as below and would not allow me to interrupt her. The caller repeated referred to herself as a disabled white woman. She stated that the officers more or less did not reassure her before the patdown began and that they glared at her. She believed that the passengers were discriminating against her because they staring at her because she had a pat down. The caller stated that she had done a lot of research in regards to getting a pat down and she stated that TSA was doing pat downs wrong. She stated that she felt that she was raped in regards to the patdown and she feels that the officers, who were African American, glared at her because she was white. She stated that she feels that she was Disability Description: Caller has a respiratory ailment.

Response Details: I thanked the caller for calling to let us know. I told her in the future she can contact TSA CARES 72 hours prior to her flight at 1-855-787-2227. Her information will be sent to a disability expert who will make a determination as to the best way to assist her. If necessary someone will contact her either by email or phone. When she gets to the airport, if she has not heard anything, she can ask for a PSS. She asked if this was a generic or a TSA person. I told her it was a TSA person.

I told her I would send this up to a disability expert and I would send her the RFI. She does not know if she wants to file a written complaint now.

She just wants to get the ball rolling and she feels as though she has. She would love to be contacted by someone about her medical condition.

Incident Details: Caller wants to complain about TSA's inability to handle passengers with unusual disabilities. She has a respiratory ailment. The Delta agent took her to the wheelchair attendant. She was taken to the front of the line. She had her respirator and if she did not have it she would have had a serious problem. She asked for a private screening but they did not do it, they told her to hold on to the side of the WTMD.

She asked for a supervisor. The supervisor told her she could go out, take her pills and drink. In Prescott, AZ they understood and were wonderful with her.

013 5:08:4 She has a metal cane and they let her use the wood cane they had available. Food got through, the drinks did not. Her third drink was confiscated. She told them it was medically necessary. The STSO began quoting rules and regulations. Caller said she kept talking and saying unless it was medically necessary. The STSO told her she needed to bring doctor's note next time. She had the papers but they would not look at them. She said she was being scolded the whole time. She was told that she was out of line. She raised her voice so that they could hear her and so she could get their attention.

She believes when she told them she had breathing problems they should have put her in an isolation room to figure out what to do with her.

Airport: JFK
Airline: Delta
Flight Number: 120
Date and Time: June 29 near 7am

She wants this to lead to a better understanding of how to deal with people with unusual disabilities. She wants TSOs to be educated.

013 11:35:3 Caller stated that he wants to know if there is a security specialist where he can report negligence in procedure. They gave him the patdown, and did not have him go through the metal detector. He wants to know what would have happened if he had shoved a Saturday Night Special up his orifice. He could have gotten through with a gun. The lack of having him go through the metal detector as well makes him lose faith in the TSA, and he wants to express his issues elsewhere.

Advised Caller:

I told him that the system we have in place looks for prohibited items that are brought through the checkpoint. If a person chooses to opt out of the AIT, then they receive a patdown. The system isn't fool proof but generally items brought through are caught. I told him that they have specific procedures in process, and they were followed based off the information we have. I told him that if he wants to email his complaint in, then he can do so. TSA-ContactCenter@dhs.gov
The caller has started working for a new boss. She stated that he has a CBP program and he has Global Entry. He stated that he should have TSA Precheck and he is not being chosen. She stated that it is not working. She asked if it will provide a different method of screening such as not using the scanners.

TSA Precheck allows select frequent flyers of participating airlines and members of U.S. Custom and Border Protections Trusted Traveler Programs who are flying on participating airlines, to receive expedited screening benefits during domestic travels. Eligible participants use dedicated screening lanes for screening benefits which include leaving on shoes, light outerwear and belts, as well as leaving laptops and 3-1-1 compliant liquids in carry-on bags. I explained that if he cannot or chooses not to be screened by the AIT, he would be screened using a patdown instead. He cannot choose the WTMD over the AIT or the patdown.

013 1:24:0 CBP trusted traveler program participants, should enter the PASS ID from the back of their card into the known traveler field of their frequent flyer profile or enter it at the time of booking to be eligible for TSA Precheck benefits. Travelers should ensure that their PASS ID is included in the known traveler field correctly. In addition, program members should enter their full name, date of birth, and PASS ID exactly as it appears on their membership card. For example, if the name listed on a traveler's card includes a middle initial or middle name, it must be entered that way in their reservation and airline profile.

TSA Precheck does not guarantee an individual expedited screening. Even if a passenger opts in for TSA Precheck with their airline or includes their CBP trusted traveler program ID when booking a flight, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport to retain a certain element of randomness to prevent terrorists from learning how the system operates.

Date/Time of Travel : 06/28/2013 8:45 PM Airline & Flight Number : Southwest #2613 Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Terminal A TSA Employee: (If Known) :

Comment : This was my 2nd flight after knee replacement, I had no difficulty traveling from PHL to MCO, but on the return it was a nightmare.

I showed my medical card when entering security and was told to go through the handicapped line. I showed my card to the screening agent and was told to go through the metal detector—of course it went off.

A female security agent ran over, looked at me and said "You're in trouble now"; the agent who told me to enter said "It was my fault, she showed me her card but I couldn't hear what she said so I waved her through"; he was ignored and she told me to stand by the x-ray scanner and said extremely loud "STAY THERE AND DON'T MOVE";

I waited there, she returned to the cleared side of the scanners and had a conversation with another female security officer. When they were done talking, the original officer left and the 2nd one approached me and told me to go through the x-ray scanner. Since this was the scanner I went through in Philly it made perfect sense, so I did. As I exited, the first officer returned to the area and YELLED as she reached the end of the conveyer belts (I was just exiting scanner) "YOU'RE IN DOUBLE TROUBLE NOW, I TOLD YOU NOT TO MOVE."

She came over to me, told officer #2 to leave, and informed me that now I was going to be patted down. I was pretty much in shock over the whole thing, everyone was staring because she was yelling, and right in the middle between two carry on conveyer belts she started rubbing her hands all over me. Ok, I realize you have to make sure nothing is hidden, but when she got to my breasts she totally groped them, squeezed, several times each breast, then stuck her hand between my legs and rubbed there, never asked if I wanted privacy, was nasty and rude, and then after she was finished she did the entire process a second time. When that was done she put the liquid on the square, checked my hands, and then rubbed that square on both my breasts as well. Afterwards she stated that once you set off an alarm this procedure is required. I told her I could understand that, but I could not understand why she did nothing but yell at me when the agent had told me to go through the detector. I was told he'd be back to talk to later.

I mentioned this humiliating experience at a picnic yesterday and was told I should contact you immediately and I should check the website for guidelines. According to what is on the website, if she was going to be handling private areas I should have been offered a private screening with another attendant present. I was not checked, I was groped, squeezed, and roughly handled, almost losing my balance as she went down my legs—I am only a few months past surgery.

I was too stunned and embarrassed to think of looking at the offensive agent's name tag, but I'm 5'7 and she was shorter than I am, on the heavy side, probably in her 30's, and black.

The agent who told me to go through the detector was a gentleman, 50's or early 60's, average build/height, with greyish hair.

The 2nd female who told me to go through the scanner was older than the first, probably 50's, tall, thin, and very very light hair, blunt cut.

I think it is important to note that at no time did I argue, talk back, or not do as directed. I understood there was a problem, even if it wasn't my fault, and knew it needed to be resolved before I could continue on. I kept my medical card in my hand, We are here now but the lady at the metal detector was extremely rude to us and the people in line behind us however there was a very nice man that did apologize and helped us we don't fly often this was my second flight ever and I was a little confused. My husband and I usually don't comment but she was rude. Thank you but everyone else here has been very nice and helpful

Disability Description: Caller's son has a cochlear implant.

Response Details: I advised the caller that we generally do not use wands. Passengers who are deaf or hearing impaired may be screened without removing hearing aids or cochlear implants. It is recommended that passengers who are deaf or hearing impaired notify a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. It is also helpful if the passenger informs the TSO of the best way to communicate during the screening process.

I explained that we do have the WTMD, similar to the wands which are metal detectors, and the AIT. She can opt out and receive a patdown for screening. I advised the caller that I will forward this information to the CSM at DFW, so that they can be aware of the situation.

The caller's flight details are as follow:

She stated that the TSOs laughed at her and told her that her doctor does not know what he is talking about. She stated that five other agents came to her also. She stated that they did give him a patdown and wanded him. He has cochlear implants. She stated that they argued with the agents for 20 minutes over this incident. She stated that he has a magnet in his brain. She stated that the TSOs tried to say that the device was similar to a pacemaker. She stated that they treated her as if she was a criminal. She stated that she was standing 5 feet away from the line and they told her to get away for the line.

Caller traveled from El Paso. Caller complains that he does not have to take off his belt at other airports but does there. He said that he does not have to take it off at DFW. He claims that his belt does not trigger the alarm on a metal detector nor on the AIT, but after screening there he was surrounded by TSOs and forced to take off his belt. He wants to know proper steps to take in this situation and claims that making him take off a belt is a step towards taking away his right to vote. He says that he was screened by a short lady with short hair and 2 supervisors working now. He states that he went through 5 minutes ago and says the supervisor is named (b)(6)

:013 5:21:2
Advised caller:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as belts may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

Response Details: I explained that the use of the hand wands at the checkpoint has been phased out. I advised that the child or passenger can request to be screened via a patdown. I advised that the passenger or parent advise TSOs of the cochlear implant before screening begins and then request the patdown screening.

I advised that her sister would have had to obtain a gate pass in order to escort her son through the checkpoint and to the gate.

Incident Details: The caller indicated that her nephew traveling on 7 7 13 from DFW on American Airlines flight 1472 departing at 11:30am Terminal C. She indicated that they were at the checkpoint for Gates 17-19 between 9:45am-10am. Her nephew was traveling to ATL with a group for a camp. The caller explained that her nephew cannot be subjected to the AIT or WTMD due to the cochlear implant. The caller first asked if he could be hand wanded rather than to use any of the technologies.

The caller went on to explain that the mother requested that her son be screened via the hand wand and pat down. The caller indicated that the five TSOs laughed at her and her son at this time. She doesn't have name or a description of the TSOs.

The caller stated that the TSO kept telling her sister to stay behind the red line. The callers sister did not have a gate pass to escort her son through the checkpoint and to the boarding gate.

The caller indicated that they do not want this to happen to someone else. The caller indicated that her sister did feel sort of that her son had been discriminated against.

013 8:03:0 I advised the following

If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

Do you want information about filing a written complaint regarding disability discrimination or are you calling with a different concern such as poor customer service?

I offered to provide information on how to file the complaint in writing which the caller first declined. The caller was very indecisive as to how she wanted to proceed. She at first didn't want to submit a written complaint, however she wants this to be addressed so that it doesn't happen to someone else and does feel that her nephew was discriminated against, in a sense. She seems primarily upset though in regard to the fact that her nephew and sister were laughed at, and that her sister was very upset. I emailed the RFI to the caller in the event that she wanted to submit a written complaint in the future. I advised that I would also refer the information to the CSM at DFW to address the issue. I apologized and explained that I had documented the information to the caller. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints received so that we can track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

I advised that her sister or nephew can always request the assistance of a PSS at the checkpoint to assist them through the checkpoint.

The caller mentioned that she may call in with a description of the TSO, is she can obtain such.

013 8:16:0 Comments: The metal detector was broken for the far left two lanes. All families with children for three lanes were being forced through one line of scanners, on top of the much heavier traffic, that particular line was moving extremely slow. There were two people looking at the scanner monitors and it appeared that one was a trainee. It took over 20 mins to get through. At the end of the line, I asked if I could make a suggestion and was told I had to talk to a supervisor and pointed to the back counter. There I spoke with a supervisor (b)(6). He was rude, dismissive and verbally dressed me down for not knowing the proper name of the equipment (I called the metal detector a scanner). I suggested he may want to swap people around such that a trainee was not working the line with triple the flow. He told me it was not a trainee and that wait times were only 8 minutes. At the point that he got extremely rude to me, supervisor (b)(6) stepped in and said he heard my suggestion and would check in to it. He also confirmed that the person at the scanner of the line in question was a trainee (b)(6) was being dishonest). At that point a lady came out from behind a door and cut him off and said to me, "Goodbye. You need to leave now." I asked who she was and she said, "All you need to know is that I am the manager and you are leaving. Goodbye." She was very flippant and waived me off with her hand in a very demeaning manner. She had no uniform, no visible name tag, and she refused to give me her name. She is a blond caucasian female.

I felt poorly treated and helpless to do anything about it. I could not even get her name...and she is the one that is supposed to handle complaints. She was abusive of her power.

When government mistreats the people, who then is able to check their authority?

I would like to discuss this incident. Please call me at (b)(6) or an email.
Thank you for your time.

Disability Description: Callers daughter uses an insulin pump

Information Request: Callers daughter flew from HNL to Kauai. She had an insulin pump on. She told them it cannot go through the x-ray machine. However she was forced to go through the WTMD wearing the pump and now the insulin pump is damaged. It caused a big mess with her well being. The pump company said it is common that the machine is damaged from the WTMD. Caller is very upset and wants to call a lawyer regarding this issue. Caller stated they did not allow her to disconnect from the pump. She is 14 years old and was forced through the WTMD. Caller stated it put her life in jeopardy. She was visiting her grandmother. Caller stated his wife is the main contact and provided the number: (b)(6) Caller wanted to know if TSA can do anything now, as the pump was damaged.

Response Details: Advised Caller:

I truly do apologize the item was damaged. Security Officers receive training to exercise great care during the screening process. We monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at that location. You may wish to file a claim for missing and or damaged items by completing a claim form. A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. We will be sending you an email with information about filing an official disability complaint.

Comment : This airport has no TSA prescreen lane. A suggestion would be to allow those passengers who clear pre check to use the metal detector lane like families with children. Otherwise, TSA prescreeners like myself opt out from the scanner only delaying the process for others and utilizing a TSA agent for pay down. Even though this airport has no prescreen lane, the ticket still identifies pre check and it makes sense to run them through the metal detector instead of the scanner. Just a suggestion to move the process along. Thanks.

Caller went through security at the airport at Harrisburg. She was immediately told to go through the body scanner and she has issues with them because they have naked images. Today she had a patdown and her private area was touched which had never happened before. She wants to know why she was not given the option of the walk through metal detector. She asked if there is a difference in people and the way they are screened such as someone who shows up with lots of clothes looking suspicious as compared to her who was clean with no earrings and does not look like a threat. She wants to know who she can talk to about her screening and who she can write a letter to about our very civil rights violating screening process.

I apologized to the caller and told her that our security officers are trained in the proper manner to conduct patdowns and should explain what they are doing during the process. They will use the back of the hand on the more sensitive area to point of contact and the front of the hand for less sensitive areas. I told her that screening is risk based and unpredictable. I told her that when you opt out of the AIT then you will have a patdown for screening.

I told her to please send all written correspondences for John S. Pistole to the following address: John S. Pistole Administrator Transportation Security Administration 601 South 12th Street, TSA-1 Arlington, VA 20595

I also told her that she may dial 866-289-9673, option 5 and MDT to reach a CSM to voice her concerns about her experience today.

Caller wanted to know who to call and file a complaint. The entire experience was poor and the Helena Airport. Caller is a retired marine 17 years ago and the air traffic control manager in Hawaii. He was visiting his father. Caller traveled from Helena Airport at 3:55PM to SEA to HNL and the TSO in Helena were less than professional. Caller stated they were ignorant. Caller stated every person that went through had their bag opened up and was screened. The TSO checking the ID against the boarding pass took an excessive amount of time to verify the ID. He kept looking at the ID and back at him. Callers wife cannot be screened by the WTMD due to a neurostimulator. Caller stated it was very humiliating for his wife to get the patdown in the public. Caller had bow cases with archery equipment and went ahead of time. Caller requested that after TSA checks these, he would like to zip tie them shut. The bag check lady assured him that if they zip ties were removed it would be placed back on. She told him to leave them unlocked and they will lock it back up. They asked the lady at the counter to see if they were zip tied shut. She came back and said it was zip tied and locked up. They arrive home and the archery case lock was gone. The zip ties were connected. The other case was opened, it was $1000 bow and $139 arrows. All arrows were popped out of the holder and they tried to take the tips off them. Caller had a second bow case different colors and the second case was fine. The quiver was wrapped and the TSOs unwrapped and it was not placed back. They did not put it back in the same condition. His wife s luggage also had a NOI. There were 4 one gallon bags with toiletries that were opened and left open. They were all closed when the bag was checked. Caller stated there was gel all over her items in the suitcase. Caller did not want reimbursement. Caller wants someone to go through the Helena Airport because they are too excessive and are they are not putting checked luggage together right. Caller stated other customers were getting upset, during the screening too. Caller stated a TSO started to open an iPad case at an angle. Caller told him it must be opened flat. The TSO did not even open it after he was told to open it flat. A TSO asked for a supervisor because a passenger asked the agent to be careful when taking papers out of a bag. Caller flies a lot. The experience in Helena did not do TSA any good. It could be better because it is a small airport. Caller stated nothing was damaged. However, the TSOs are short, curt and excessive. Caller stated you cannot see them when luggage is checked and they do not believe the TSOs are following the proper training. Caller stated arrows were not placed back in clips. There were NOIs in all the luggage that was checked.

Advised Caller:

We regret that you were not satisfied with the service you received. We seek to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all passengers. Security Officers receive training to properly inspect passenger bags and are required to exercise great care during the screening process so that when bags are opened your belongings are returned to the same condition they were found. We monitor the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this incident to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at that location.

Airline: Alaska Airlines

Description of Bag: Dark blue skyline suitcase with big red heavy duty tags stating (b)(6) and a Black Bow case with the same tag (b)(6) made by Plano.

Caller went to the airport this morning with his 11 year old grandson for his return flight. Ticket had escort for round trip via Delta, he goes through security with his grandson, put his cellphone in his pocket and went through the WTMD and it beeped, took off watch and glasses and placed in the bin, he stepped through again and no noise. One of the TSA reps took the bin with his items while he sat down for a random check. Saw his watch in the bowl and his glasses weren't in the bin and behind a couple pieces of luggage his glasses came through smashed and bent. There were approx. 6 TSOs there and one said they should call a supervisor, one TSO attempted to insert the lens back into the frame and didn't do anything to correct the bent earpiece. The supervisor said he needed to fill a form out and he said he had to get his grandson to the gate for the flight. When he returned to the checkpoint there was another supervisor there and he didn't say anything.

2013 4:07:0

States they were Rimless Glasses and the incident happened at the Fayetteville, NC airport.

Caller said his daughter paid $350 for the escort ticket for the child and $35 for the checked bag and when he took his grandson back to the airport he had to pay $35 again for the bag, why was it not included in the ticket price she paid initially?

Response:

Apologized to caller and explained how to complete the claim form and submit (caller had already printed claim from the website). Advised he must estimate the value to either repair or replace his glasses.

Once the Transportation Security Administration's (TSA) Claims Management Office has processed a traveler's claim form, he or she will receive a letter of acknowledgement and a claim number. The claim number should be kept for future reference when inquiring about the claim.

Explained baggage is priced by the weight and must be paid for each direction of the flight. Referred to airline for their policy regarding baggage fees.

"Passengers who cannot remove their shoes can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), the walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own."

My wife can walk through metal detectors on her own, but she needs a simple cane for balance. We take a metallic quad cane which goes through the screening device used for shoes, backpacks, etc so she can't use that. If TSA had a standby simple wooden cane available to temporarily lend her for balance, she could walk through the metal detector on her own. In my experience, no such cane has been available or offered to her. Having one would save lots of time for everyone by avoiding a patdown. Once through, her shoes could be taken off and run through the same screening device used for her metallic cane.

Please let me know if TSA will consider this suggestion.

Yours,

Subject: time-saving suggestion re people in wheelchairs

Due to a stroke, my wife is unable to walk through the TSA security gate without her shoes on and perhaps an outstretched hand on either side of the gate (or better yet a standby wooden cane) for balance. As a result, she sits in a wheelchair for ten to twenty minutes while a TSA woman checks her out for explosives, etc. This has happened on our last eight to ten airplane trips. She does need a wheelchair to get to the departure gate because of the long walking distance.

I don't understand why she can't walk through the gate with her shoes on and a little help for balance, sit back down in the wheelchair, take off her shoes and run them through the security check just like all other shoes. That would save lots of time.

A response would be appreciated.

Caller is wanting information on the Precheck screening and if it will give her a pass through screening to where she will not have to wait 30-45 min everytime for a same gender officer to give a patdown.

CCR informed her:

2013 8:50:2 There is no program that will allow her to get a pass through screening. Even with the precheck, she will have to go through a WTMD, AIT or a patdown to get through the checkpoint.

She can write her suggestions about adding more patdown screeners to HQ if she would like to.

If she still would like to do the precheck, she should apply for membership with one of CBP's Trusted Traveler programs. For enrollment, please visit <http://www.globalentry.gov>. There will be an online application, face to face interview and a fee that can be clarified on that website.

Caller wanted to know why he is forced to go through the AIT or have a pat down. He witnesses other passengers, with children, going through WTMD. He says he feels discriminated against and it's not fair. He is currently at Charleston and he experienced it at JFK on his flight down there as well.

2013 10:10: I apologized and advised him:

I cannot tell him why he is not being permitted through the WTMD. I attempted to tell him of other screening lanes for specific passengers and advise him maybe that's what he's noticing but he interrupted me and wouldn't let me finish. He asked why he was being subject to the AIT. I told him I don't have that information but the AIT is optional and he will be subject to a pat down. If he feels discriminated against I can take his complaint and forward to the appropriate office for review but I would need his contact information and a basis for discrimination and more specific details from his complaint. He refused to provide me the information and said he just wanted to make a complaint.

To whom it may concern:

I am writing to report a violation of personal preference to not be scanned through the metal detector in my recently visit to the Charlotte Airport.

I am currently pregnant and expressed to 3 different TSA personnel, one who specifically asked me if I've "requested to opt-out" to opt-out of the scans. The one who asked me stated "just walk this way" through the metal detector. My assumption was that there would be no scan and I would be subject to a pat down on the other side; however, no one addressed me on the other side and I watched the man on the other end of the metal detector watching the indicator on the scan.

I am very upset about not only the potential harm to my unborn child by this - but, also about the complete blatant disrespect of a request to multiple individuals.

I am considering discussing this issue with my attorney - and can only hope (and you should hope) that there is nothing wrong with my child.

2013 4:20:1 I would address this with your staff and address this issue - as it is a great concern.

I went through the A terminal security checkpoint on 7/11/13 at approximately 2:15 pm.

I would expect the airport to have video surveillance of this if requested by the proper authorities.

Regards.

"Get used to a different way of looking at things. A change in perspective brings a whole new world of opportunity"

My pregnant wife is stopped from walking through the metal detector while a person with a dog is allowed to walk right through without question. They told us they were not using that machine and right in front of us they open it to let a pet through. That is ridiculous!

Sincerely pissed.

Dear TSA,

I am a 57 year old Grandmother, born and raised in the USA. I have never been arrested. I am a hard working law abiding citizen. I am also a licensed mortgage broker which requires me to register with NMLS, the National Mortgage Licensing System. I am also licensed with the state of Florida. These licenses require credit checks, background checks and finger printing annually. I am also a Clear card holder which means more finger printing and an iris scan.

I refuse to go through your full body scanners and fail to see how making me do so would help national security. Therefore I am constantly subjected to pat downs when there is a perfectly acceptable metal detector standing near by but only used for traffic control. I fail to see why, with the information just stated, I can't be allowed to only go through the metal detector machines.

I do not believe the safety information given on the new scanners. I believe it will be years before we know if they are harmful or not. I also don't think they make a huge difference in our national security. But my main purpose for writing is I think it's ridiculous to force me to choose between a potentially harmful scanner and an invasive pat down. I should probably be writing this to my newspaper, television station or politician if I really expect any results but since you're the direct connection, I'm stating my case.

Sincerely,

animals. She says the person ask for a private screening and was told by the officer they did not have the facilities to have a private screening. The caller wants to know if this is true that some airports do not have private screening locations. The passenger had a kitten with her. Her organization is called Where is Jack for a cat that was lost at JFK and it was lost by American Airlines.

Told caller

I wasnt sure why the passenger was told they could not have a private screening. I would be happy to send her complaint to the CSM at DFW. She did not have all the flight information but I told her I would send it anyway.

If a passenger believes that the removal of their pet could result in escape, a Supervisory Transportation Security Officer (TSO) can authorize an alternative screening measure that he or she deems sufficient. When permitted, an animal may remain in its carrier and be carried through the WTMD by the passenger; however, the passenger, the animal, and the carrier must undergo secondary screening.

Additional screening of the animal may include a visual observation, a patdown inspection, or Explosives Trace Detection (ETD). If additional screening requires removal of the animal from its carrier, passengers may request a private screening. TSOs may ask the owner for assistance during any part of the inspection.

Subject: SJU airport American Airlines Terminal

Dear TSA,

2013 3:31:2
I am a Flight Attendant for American Airlines. On July 9, 2013 approximately 6:55 in the morning. Going thru security I was harassed and humiliated in front of passengers and co workers. I have been flying out of Puerto Rico for 20 years now. I have gone thru security the same way before TSA took over the airport. All these years I go thru the lane that is for employees and wheel chairs. In uniform we pass the people in wheel chairs and go to the agent, show our ID and continue to the metal detector. This day I did the same but was told by the agent whose hair was red that I had to wait. I said okay. She said no, behind the line. I said ok I am sorry I guess things changed. I tried my best to get behind the line but there were wheel chair passengers waiting there. Then another agent came over and called me up who was supervisor [REDACTED]. I went to show my ID when he started yelling at me telling me you do not step up to my agent when she has passengers and I am to wait behind the line until I am called up. I started to explain why I did that and he cut me off saying there is a sign there. I asked to explain, when I told him that not only myself but all the employees are used to passing the wheel chair people and going straight to the agent. This is the first time I am hearing that we need to wait. I said if things have changed we should be notified so we don't do it again. He said well you got your notice and you will never do it again. I said I won't but it really needs to be communicated to everyone. I asked for his name so I can let my supervisor know procedures have changed in San Juan to notify all crew members and airport personal. He ignored me and walked away and I then asked him again. He told me its [REDACTED] and do what ever you want with it. Walking away from him to the metal detector I said to myself such harassment. Next thing I know he is screaming to the agent at the metal detector he is not going thru here. He just called me an ASS. I look over and I am shocked. I told the TSA agent opposite to where I am putting my luggage asking her what is wrong with your co worker and to why he is treating me like this. She said to ignore him and don't let him ruin your day. As I am waiting to put my luggage thru he comes over and stops me and tells me you are not going thru here. No one calls me an ass. I said to him what are you talking about? I never called you an ass. I asked for the supervisor and he said I am the supervisor. I told my co worker [REDACTED] who just passed thru to get a supervisor. Standing there being humiliated as he pushes my bags out of the way to let the other passengers go thru. Finally a supervisor from American Airlines comes over and I explain what happened to her. Then there was another lady that came over and I believe she was a TSA supervisor. He then talks to them in spanish and I hear him say in english a asshole. I told them he is bold face lying. I never said that to him. They told him to let me go thru. I went thru then spoke to the American supervisor and the other lady I can't believe how he has embarrassed and humiliated me in front of everyone treating me like a criminal. The whole situation had me shaken up. My two co workers [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] comforted me and said lets go to the airplane to calm down. The American supervisor said she will let everyone know the procedure now. The other lady apologized to me and said she will have a talk with [REDACTED]. The other TSA agents witness to what happened. Antje my co worker also said the red haired agent was not nice to her. His actions stopping me would of canceled flight 572 because we were operating with minimum crew. This would of disrupted approximately 184 passengers lives on that flight also the crew and to where that airplane was to go next. I would like for you to view the video tape for this day to see how Supervisor [REDACTED] was out of line the way he spoke to me. He was unprofessional. He is also a liar. He should not be in a supervisor position. He needs to learn how to speak and communicate with people. You can also view the videos for other days to see how all the employees are accustomed to going to the front of the line. I know feel intimidated to go thru security in San Juan because of the way I was treated. I respect and I am very appreciative for the job TSA does for keeping me safe on the airplanes that I fly everyday. I will like assurance when I go thru SJU again I will not be harassed by [REDACTED]. I witnessed something that offended me deeply. Recently I was at the Nashville airport (Wed. morning). There were a bunch of U.S. Army soldiers in fatigues. They went right to the front of the line to get their boarding passes/IDs checked. So far so good. But then they were held up and treated like common citizens at the metal detector/bomb detectors. It was absolutely RIDICULOUS. Its almost as if they got more harassed than the rest of us. They had to take of their infantry boots and I saw several of them have to go through the detectors multiple times. It was an embarrassment. I was so embarrassed to be a U.S. Citizen at that point. These soldiers should have valid military IDs that should fast track them directly through security with minimal disruptions. We TRUST THEM to defend the constitution with their LIVES, but we don't trust them on commercial airlines.

The caller said he went thought screening on 7 13 2013 at 3:30pm on Southwest Airlines flight#2350 from Denver. The caller said he went through the checkpoint with his wife and 4 kids. The caller said he was able to go through the metal detector with his children but his wife had to go through the AIT. The caller said he is upset because he was standing in front of his children and his wife was behind the children trying to get them through the line. The caller was worried because his wife was not able to help his children through the line. The caller stated he talked to a male TSO and the officer told the passenger that it is a new TSA policy that 1 parent can go through the metal detector with their children and the other parent has to go through the AIT. The caller stated he did not get the name of the TSA that told him about the new policy. The caller wanted to know why he was not aware of the new policy. The caller said he was going to write a letter to his congressman.

I told the caller I have never heard of the new policy. I told the caller I would forward the information to the CSM for further review. I forwarded the record because the caller stated he was going to write a letter to his congressman.

July 13, 2013 - 3:30 PM (Estimated Time) Denver International Airport Flying on SouthWest Airlines Flight #2350

To Whom it may concern,

I was flying with my family (Wife: (b)(6) Son, (b)(6) 11 years old, Son (b)(6) and Daughters, Thea and (b)(6) both 3 year old twins.

We put all of our carryon baggage onto the x-ray belt and then I let my 11 year old go through the metal detector, then sent my 5 year old through and then my two 3 year old daughters.

2013 4:17:00 I then went through the metal detector and to gather up the children and our carry on.

My wife was supposed to follow right behind me to help gather the children but was being put through the x-ray scatter machine.

We where not told that this was a new policy to only allow one parent through the metal deceptor before hand and by not having both my wife and I to gather our children it put them in immediate danger. Young children under the age of 5 need to be attended to. They can easily be knocked over by a back or another passenger in a hurry to get their belongings off of the belt. My wife and I travle often with our children and this was sprung upon us.

I strongly voiced my concerns to both the TSA agent working the end of the security belt and the supervisor and the both strongly agreed with me that this new policy is not safe and is inexcusable.

Where did this happen? Place (name of the airport or other facility): Denver Internation Airport
City: Denver State or Country: Colorado

Who treated you unfairly?

The older gentelman TSA agent that was working the metal detector seemed more interested in talking to the nice young lady than insuring the safety of the young children that where coming through his station.

I did not catch his name or badge number but it would have not been good if any of our children where hurt while going through TSA security. If you are going to put in new policy it is VERY IMPORTANT that you make parent aware of the new policy so

Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Terminal A security checkpoint TSA Employee: (If Known) : Field Comment : OMB 1652-0030 I have used a wheelchair as a result of a spinal cord injury in 2004. I have flown domestically over 50 times since then, and each time I fly I get patted down because I can't go through the metal detectors on account of having too much metal from surgeries.

On June 13 I was flying from Sacramento to Denver for a wedding, and was expecting a routine security screening. Because I have been screened so many times, I know what to expect and prepare myself well by removing anything from my wheelchair and person that could be a problem. However, I do utilize a urinary drainage bag strapped to my right thigh most of the time. I almost always mention it to the screener at the beginning of screening, and it has never been a problem.

I was screened by Employee (b)(6) on June 13, 2013, and as I normally do, at the beginning of the screening I told him I had a urinary drainage bag on my right thigh. The bag was empty at that moment but when he came to the part of the screening where normally employees use the back of their hand to feel the groin area, he used the front of his hand and felt extensively, asking what was under my pants. I reminded him that I was utilizing a urinary drainage bag - and again, it was obviously empty at that moment.

2013 5:15:2 He continued to feel around in my groin area with the front of his hand until I asked him to stop. He then said he would need to inspect the drainage bag. I told him I didn't think that was necessary as it had never been requested in previous screenings. He then said he could just swipe it and do a chemical screening on it. I declined because I wasn't going to have him reach down my pants. He said that I could touch the device with my hand and then he could swipe my hand for the chemical screening. Again, I declined as this would have required me to reach down my pants in a very public - and already embarrassing - situation.

At that point he seemed to not know what to do and wasn't going to let me through the checkpoint, so I requested to speak with his supervisor, the supervisor came over and I requested a different screener. He asked why, saying that Employee (b)(6) was one of his best screeners, but Employee (b)(6) was still there so I asked to speak to him (the supervisor) privately. I told him it made me feel very uncomfortable to talk about it in front of Employee (b)(6). He did not seem to consider my request.

So I again asked for a different screener. Finally the supervisor agreed. Another employee came and completed the screening without incident and I went on my way, though embarrassed and feeling incredibly uncomfortable after being unnecessarily groped in public.

The good news for me is that on my return flight I decided to try the new body scan screening method - as I can stand up for short periods of time - and there were no problems.

There are many factors to consider. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

Gate C9

2013 9:09: Comments: On July 8, 2013 at approximately 16:15, I was accompanying relatives through checkpoint Charlie to gate C9. As we began our screening process, I was instructed by TSO (b)(6) who was positioned as DO, to step in line to undergo screening via the AIT machine. I then informed him that I was medically unable to lift my arm up due to shoulder complications resulting from a surgery I underwent. He acknowledged my injury, asked how my healing process was going, and instructed me to proceed through the metal detector once he was in his proper position. I went through the metal detector without alarming and proceeded to gather my things. While walking to the conveyor belt, I spoke to and acknowledged a few of my co-workers, whereas STSO (b)(6) was watching and quickly walked pass me, ignoring as I spoke. As I was putting my shoes on and retrieving my purse & cell phone, STSO (b)(6) approached me by pushing my purse and cell phone out of my hand back into the bin, nastily and rudely saying "You need to go back out on the other side." I then asked, "Why? I was already screened and cleared." STSO (b)(6) then began to raise her voice saying "You need to go back on the other side to be screened." I then informed her that I was unable to lift my arm to go through the body scanner and didn't understand what the problem was. She then said "That's no excuse, you need to go back out and be patted down." Frustrated, confused and embarrassed, I walked back through checkpoint and stood outside of the gate next to the X-Ray #1. TSO (b)(6) looked at me confused and asked, "What happened?" and before I could respond STSO (b)(6) approached TSO (b)(6) and said, "Winston, you know better, she needs a pat down." I asked "Why do I have to be patted down? I didn't refuse screening with the AIT, I CANNOT lift my arm to go through, and was cleared when I went through here [the metal detector]. That's not the proper procedure...this is ridiculous." STSO (b)(6) then rolled her eyes and walked away. TSO (b)(6) then called for a female assist, where as I had to wait over 5 minutes because by STSO (b)(6) disappearing, there were no available females on the floor and had to wait for TSO (b)(6) to be "tapped" from her AIT position to come pat me down. While waiting LTSO (b)(6) walked past and jokingly asked, "Are you up here causing trouble?" I replied "No, that's your supervisor making me get a pat down after being cleared and telling her I couldn't lift my are to go through AIT. (b)(6) this isn't right." He acknowledged that he knew, and relieved TSO (b)(6) to come and get me. I explained to TSO (b)(6) that I didn't understand why I was embarrassed and humiliated and forced to be patted down because I could not lift my arm to go through AIT, and that I couldn't lift my arm for her to properly pat me down. She acknowledged my concern and proceeded to pat me down.

CRCL received the below and are forwarding to you to handle as deemed appropriate.

Caller wanted to know why she has to go through a pat down if she opts out of the AIT. Caller wants to do the metal detector only. Caller has health concerns as a breast cancer survivor. Caller also wanted to know why TSA does not have TSA Pre at the El Paso airport. Caller also wanted to know if she could carry on yogurt in a 3 ounce container.

2013 9:35:4

I advised the caller:

Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Signs are posted in front of each AIT location advising passengers of this right.

Yogurt in a 3 ounce container can be placed in your 3-1-1 bag.

Caller said she had an Apple iPhone 4S cellphone that came up missing at the checkpoint. Caller said she had gone through Customs and then when she went through security, her bag was pulled and they unzipped the bag because they wanted to look at something in her bag. Caller said her cell phone was already out of the bag and she had placed it in a bin by itself. Caller said she then went through the metal detector. Caller said she could not find her cell phone after she finished her screening. Caller spoke to someone on the phone who told her the phone was not listed on the manifest and suggested she call the TCC. Caller said she was told the phone should have been transferred offsite, but whoever she spoke to could not find any record of the missing phone. Caller will file a claim online.

Caller refused to provide his name or contact number.

2013 5:24:3 Was at the JNU airport and was subjected to a pat down after her opted out from the AIT machine. There was a TSO there at the checkpoint who was allowing women women to just go through the metal detector and onto their flight. When he asked her why he was subjected to the patdown she told him that she did not have to tell him and it was none of his business. He also indicated that people are not nice and unfriendly. He also stated that the TSO was biased towards women.

Advised caller:

That it is at the discretion of the TSO at the checkpoint. However if he feels he was treated differently or the TSO was biased towards women....

He then indicated that he wanted to speak with his lawyer before he provided anymore information and hung up the phone.

Caller works at O Hare International Airport, caller stated that he usually does not go through TSA checkpoint, he instead uses separate entrance, however he had to go through security after having an accident. Caller had several staples in his head and when he went through the metal detector on July 14th at Gate 6 TSO agent [b)(6)] stopped him because of an alarm and patted him down and put his hands down his pants, all the way around and touched his genitals and butt. When he complained about it, the agent stated that he should have gone through AIT machine. Caller put in complaint at airport but has heard nothing back.

2013 9:44:1 Advised Caller: Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. All TSOs are required to be considerate and thoughtful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

Caller stated there is health problem with having to take off his shoes and walk barefoot through security. He requested a patdown and he was required to go through barefoot where many other people walk barefoot in DEN.

Advised Caller:

013 11:36: Screening shoes by x-ray is an effective method of identifying any type of anomalies, including explosives. TSA is sensitive to concerns over the issue of sanitation in the screening locations. TSA's Office of Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment reviewed our procedures for screening the footwear of passengers at TSA checkpoints, and they determined there was no need for additional sanitary procedures beyond those already in place. Nonetheless, passengers are permitted to wear disposable booties, socks, or slippers through the screening checkpoint to help protect their feet at walk-through metal detector and the AIT machines.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): EMPLOYEE (b)(6) (sp?) (b)(6)
LOCATION: EWR Airport, 21 July 2013, Approx 13.40, Terminal C Premier Line/United Airlines

Comments: I was removing my computer from my bag & taking off my shoes to go through the metal detector/send bags on the belt. No one was behind me. (b)(6) (sp?) (b)(6) approached with more plastic trays as I was doing so. She said to me, very rudely, "You need to move, I'm adding these." I said I would be happy to move as soon as I could but I needed to get my shoes off. She says it needs to be "now" although no one is behind me, there are few people in the area in general, and trays remain in the tray area. I repeated I was going as quickly as I could and would soon be progressing. As I am finishing organizing my items and moving my trays forward, another woman came up behind me in the line and (b)(6) tells her (though this woman has yet to remove shoes etc. so if she went ahead she'd slow the situation down more), "Go ahead. Go before [me]. [This woman] is too slow." That is, (b)(6) was telling people to cut in front of me in line, in effect. At this point, I asked (b)(6) her name and said I'd like to talk to her boss and she says, "Do whatever you want, I'll be here, anyway" very rudely. In fact, she was so rude the woman (who (b)(6) instructed to pass me) asked, "Is that TSA employee giving you a hard time?" I travel over 100,000 miles/year. I'm not holding up lines; I know how to organize in security (b)(6) simply decided she didn't want to wait 45 seconds for the space between the end of the belt and the plastic trays to open up so she could add them. She is rude an unprofessional and shows a blatant disregard for supervision - apparently she has tenure at TSA and can mistreat anyone and everyone and will still be back at work in the morning? This is unfortunate -for folks like me (just back from Europe and was happy to be home after 5 months!) and for visitors who see a side of the U.S. that is simply rude - no other explanation nor justification. I hope she will be instructed in respectful treatment of others. Thank you.

Caller has PTSD and major depression and he has severe back and neck issues. He said that he flew three days ago from ATL. He was traveling with a service dog. He has metal in his body and can not go through the metal detector. He said that the TSO asked the same question over and over again. He kept asking him where the metal in his body is. He said that he told him that he does not know. He said that he was asked four times. He said that the TSO made him break down. He said that the supervisor told the TSO to give him a patdown like any other person. He said that he is member of Precheck. A different TSA agent took him to the gate and Delta escorted him from there. He is not military and does not qualify for wounded warrior. He was a civilian Army employee who is now on disability. He said that he is treated like a worthless piece of person. He wants the same benefits as the wounded warrior. He said that all of his information is in a packet with the dog and anyone should know that. He stated that he did not want the information on filing a complaint. He asked if he should go through the handicapped line or the PreCheck line. He does not have a flight scheduled at this time.

2013 9:21:4 I gave the following information: TSA strives to provide the highest level of security while ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity and respect. To that end, TSA launched TSA Cares, a helpline number designed to assist travelers with disabilities and medical conditions.

Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at 1-855-787-2227 prior to traveling with questions about screening policies, procedures and what to expect at the security checkpoint. TSA Cares serves as an additional, dedicated resource specifically for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions or other circumstances or their loved ones who want to prepare for the screening process prior to flying.

The hours of operation for the TSA Cares helpline are Monday through Friday 8 a.m. – 11 p.m. EST and weekends and Holidays 9 a.m. – 8 p.m. EST. TSA recommends that passengers call no less than 72 hours ahead of travel in case it is determined that it is necessary to coordinate support at the airport.

I told him that when he calls TSA Cares they will provide him with information on what he should do and expect at the checkpoint.

The Eastern Iowa Airport

Disability Description: Caller is a breast cancer survivor.

Information Request: She would like to be able to go through PreCheck, and she cant find information on how to do that. She wants to know if she can contact Alaska Airlines, if she flies with them all the time to see if they can send her something.

Response Details: I told her that I would send her an RFI that she could fill out to send in her write-in complaint, and I would also send this up to make them aware of the incident and that she feels discriminated against because of this.

There are two primary ways to be considered eligible for TSA PreCheck : travelers may be invited by a participating airline, or they may choose to enroll with one of U.S. Customs and Border Protection s (CBP) Trusted Traveler programs.

Currently, TSA PreCheck is limited to select airlines and each is contacting eligible frequent flyers with an invitation to opt-in.

2013 5:28:2

For more information about the Trusted Traveler program, including enrollment, please visit <http://www.globalentry.gov>.

I told her that she can contact her airline to get information about it and see if they can send her an invitation.

Emailed the RFI and information on enrolling into PreCheck to the passenger.

Incident Details: Caller stated that when she walks through Gate B with Alaska Airlines. She goes through the WTMD, and the last few times she does this, they have her go for additional screening. The last time she went to leave to go to Portland, they canceled the flight and sent her through LAX. The only time she has a problem is going through BUR. She feels discriminated against because she wears a bra that has additional padding because she is a breast cancer survivor. She went through the WTMD and it set off, and they pulled her off to the side and conducted some additional screening of her. This is the only airport it happens at, and she feels this is happening because of the bra she has to wear because there is extra padding. It only happens at BUR, and the most recent date was today, 7-22-13. There is no extra metal in this bra, she only has extra padding in it.

Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Terminal 4 TSA Employee: (If Known) :

Comment : Traveling through this terminals security checkpoint at about 11:15 pm while trying to catch an international flight to Georgetown, Guyana that was leaving at 12:15 am. The people working the checkpoint were the most unorganized and unhelpful TSA I have ever experienced. There were lots of foreign passengers going through this checkpoint who obviously didn't know the process. The TSA was doing nothing to keep things moving or help direct these people through. Once I got through the metal detectors, the guy working the screening monitor/conveyor belt started speeding up the movement of people's items so fast that the plastic bins were hitting each other and it caused several to derail and hit the ground. One of which was my bin that contained my laptop computer. Fortunately, my computer works. However, I still said something to the guy working the monitor that he needed to be careful. I have never experienced such behavior at any checkpoint. The crew working was the worst I have ever experienced. No regard for the flow or helping those that clearly needed assistance. I even asked the guy working on the front end to help the large family in front of me. His response "they don't speak English, what am I do to?". We'll continuing to stand there with your pockets isn't belong either.

013 10:05:

My comments are direct as again, this was the worst experience ever at a checkpoint. Maybe it's because it's an international terminal, that it was late and this was the end of their shifts. Whatever the reason, I and whoever is over this group, would expect a higher level of interaction.

I have a friend who is a manager at the Charlotte airport and thy suggested I wrote in.

caregiver and he is being separated from her. He wanted to know how to get through the checkpoint as fast as possible. He said that he does have a RCN.

I gave the following information: If a passenger has a cast, brace, or support appliance, the way screening will be conducted depends on his or her level of ability. The passenger should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of his or her ability, of the existence of a cast, brace, or support appliance, and of any need for assistance before screening begins.

TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by a walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

013 10:44: A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.
- The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.
- A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.
- The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.
- A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening. For more information about the technology used to test for traces of explosive material, please visit http://www.tsa.gov/press_releases/2010/02/17_tsa-expands-use-explosive-trace-detection-technology-airports-nationwide.

Regardless of whether a passenger is screened by a walk-through metal detector, AIT, or a thorough patdown, casts, braces, and support appliances are subject to additional screening. A TSO will need to see the device, which may require the lifting of clothing without exposing any sensitive areas. TSA also will use technology to test the device for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening.

Cast and Prosthesis Imaging technology is used in some airports. Where available, this technology will also be used to inspect a cast. A companion, assistant, or family member may accompany a passenger to assist him or her during any private or public screening. After providing this assistance, the companion, assistant, or family member will need to be rescreened. The passenger should inform the TSO of his or her need for assistance before the screening process begins.

Caller wants to make a complaint.
She was at Phoenix AZ (Sky harbor) and had problems at screening.
7-23-13 at 4:30 AM to board a Delta Flight #1492 bound for Minnesota and on to Louisville, KY at 7:AM.
They were at Gate A5.

She was traveling with her daughter (b)(6) and her cousin (b)(6)
The name of TSO was (b)(6)

He did a swabbing with something blue on her cousins hands. She asked her daughter and she thought they were checking for chemicals.
There were several people in line and they were the only ones that were chosen to be checked.
At that point she made a remark to her cousin that maybe she should not have but she said to her: maybe we are being racially profiled.
She feels he heard her remark and that started it.
Once he sent her cousin to her lane, when she and her daughter came into the line they put their things in the bin.
He followed them over and said something to the other Officer.
When they ran her things through they were told their things needed to be checked again.
They ran them through the scanner twice and even opened them.
He was standing there with the other Officer laughing at them. That made her angry.

2013 11:31: They also took her cousin to another lane and patted her down. She told them she had a catheter and a coloscopy and they made her raise her skirt.
Her cousin (b)(6) was offered a private patdown but refused it. After she would not go to another room with them they told her to raise her skirt.
She will have her cousin call us since she was not with her and does not know all the details.
Told her we will be happy to take her complaint so please have her call us about it.
I explained I take calls off the computer but any agent can assist her Cousin.

Another Officer was very nice but she does not have his name but he gave them the name of Officer (b)(6)
She stated right after they came through a lady came by and set off the metal detector and told Officer (b)(6) she had a metal knee and he told her to go on. He was too busy with them at the time.
She does not know why they separated her and her Cousin.
They did not go through her Cousins bag, just her and her daughter.

I asked if she feels she was discrimated against or does she feel it was a Rude Screener.

She stated it is a Rude Screener issue.

Told her I will send her complaint over to the Customer Support Manager.

Comments: Machine showed something on my thigh and I have on shorts where you can blatantly see nothing was on my thigh. I was then subjected to a full body search which really made me uncomfortable and brought me to tears. Of course nothing was found and the only explanation provided to me was that I must have a feminine item inside if me which was not the case at all. I feel as though a machine that takes an X-ray of my body should be able to detect that I had nothing on me and feel as though this machine is faulty. I feel that the only option given to me in order to fly was the body search was inappropriate when if I would have had a kid who was a teenager flying with me i could have just used the metal detectors and not had any of this happen. I feel only letting those with "children" use the metal detectors and subjecting others to what I was is wrong. I feel they really need to check their machinery or its operators. The whole situation was embarrassing and unsettling especially since no explanation was provided or could be provided. Also just because I am traveling with a kid who is old enough to travel on their own I should not get special priveledges to skip the full body scan. Seems very discriminatory to me.

Caller wants to know if they have to touch your breasts and groin. She says that she has a complaint. She says that she and her husband had been visiting their son in Florida. Her husband has stage 4 pancreatic cancer and she is disabled as well. They were both in wheelchairs. She says that when she got to the WTMD, she was asked if she had anything on her. She had change in her back pocket and put it in a bin. Then she went through the WTMD. The officer then asked her again if she had anything on her. She says that the officer then performed a patdown in public. She says the officer touched her breasts and groin. She says that the officer then sent her through the AIT machine. After she went through this, the officer asked her for the third time if she had anything on her. The caller told her that she had already been searched and been through the machine. The caller told her that if she had anything, she would have found it by now. The officer then sent her bags back through x-ray screening and inspected them. They then told her she was clear. She says that they even checked the wheelchairs, which belonged to the airport. She says that she was harrassed. She says she doesn't know why she was harrassed, but she was. She says that the officer was rude, nasty, and didn't like her. Caller says she had a 10 hour delay. She gave me two flight numbers, 3120 and 2186. She doesn't know which flight these go with. She says she traveled from Orlando, to Washington, D.C. to LGA via US Airways. She does not know which airport in D.C. this happened at. Caller says she will call her lawyers and let them handle this. Caller says that this all started when she presented her EBT card because she didn't have her state issued ID. She says that her EBT card is government issued. She was complaining that the airline took her boarding passes and there was a delay of 10 hours.

Advised caller:

The patdown process requires every part of the body be patted down, including breasts and groin. The officers have to go up the leg until they meet resistance. Advised caller that additional screening is done if a valid, government issued ID is not presented. Her EBT card may be issued by the government, but it is not an acceptable ID. I could send her complaint to the CSM if I knew what airport this occurred at. Advised caller that her complaint about the delay and her tickets being taken away is for her airline. Advised caller that she should call US Airways, obtain her airport, correct flight number, gate boarded through, arrival time from Orlando, and flight time. Then we can send her complaint to the CSM.

The caller stated that she has a disability, pregnancy. She stated that in the ADA, it clearly states that pregnancy is a disability. She flew from Orange County and wanted to go through the metal detector instead of the AIT. She did not want to be touched and receive a patdown. However, they would not let her be screened by the metal detector and performed a patdown. She already had papers that she printed off from the website regarding disability discrimination and she did not want me to send her the RFI. She asked for an email that states passengers cannot choose to go through the metal detector.

1013 6:54:

Advised caller:

AIT safety has been verified. This testing takes into account special populations that are more sensitive to radiation, such as children, persons receiving radiation treatment for medical conditions, and pregnant and potentially pregnant women, as well as employees who work near the equipment. All screening systems fully comply with Federal safety requirements, and measured radiation levels for each are well below limits established by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. According to TSA policy, passengers cannot choose to be screened by the metal detector. If you opt out of the AIT, you must receive a patdown. You can always request a private screening and be accompanied by a traveling companion.

Sent email.

The caller stated that her daughter has a metal headband braided into her hair and that set the alarm off at Helena Regional Airport. She stated that her daughter asked the TSO's if they could just clear it with a wand and was told no that she must undergo a patdown. The caller wanted to know how we could screen a female properly without using a wand, in the scenario that the individual had items inserted into their rectum and vagina. The caller wanted to know why we don't use wands. The caller stated that she had called a TSA person at Helena Regional Airport yesterday to ask about the use of wands but had to leave a message. She stated that the man called her back today between the hours of 9:15 AM and 9:45 AM and that he was rude and condescending. The caller wanted to make a complaint about Helena refusing to use a wand.

1013 11:38:

Advised Caller: I advised the caller that TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Advised that wands may be used at some locations but not all. Advised that I could not release information in regard to why we do or do not use one screening method versus another. Advised the caller that her complaint would be forwarded to the CSM.

She stated that her daughter asked the TSO's if they could just clear it with a wand and was told no that she must undergo a patdown. The caller wanted to know how we could screen a female properly without using a wand, in the scenario that the individual had items inserted into their rectum and vagina. The caller wanted to know why we don't use wands. The caller stated that she had called a TSA person at Helena Regional Airport yesterday to ask about the use of wands but had to leave a message. She stated that the man called her back today between the hours of 9:15 AM and 9:45 AM and that he was rude and condescending. The caller wanted to make a complaint about Helena refusing to use a wand.

Advised Caller: I advised the caller that TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Advised that wands may be used at some locations but not all. Advised that I could not release information in regard to why we do or do not use one screening method versus another. Advised the caller that her complaint would be forwarded to the CSM.

have the AIT. She stated that she would normally fly from Colorado Springs, however she had a bad experience there about two years ago. She stated that she was subjected to a patdown, for screening and she is not comfortable with that type of sexual assault. She stated that she refused to fly and gave up her right so that she would not have to get a patdown. She stated that they made her stay in the checkpoint until the patdown was complete. She stated that she would prefer the AIT.

She stated that she was told that Colorado Springs was getting the AIT a few years ago, however the lost the funding for construction. She stated that she was informed the other day that Colorado Springs was undergoing construction for AIT placement. She stated that she spoke with (b)(6) and Colorado Springs regarding the situation, and they told her that they were getting the AIT, however instead a different airport got their machines to replace the back scatter machines in place at that location. She stated that they did not get the scanner and this is absurd. She stated that the other airport had too many complaints regarding private areas showing during screening by the back scatter, and they had to replace the machines. She stated that TSA is choosing those individuals complaining over a disabled person.

She stated that the WTMD is not safe for screening, because people can place bombs in their underwear and get through, just like the underwear bomber.

I explained that I am not aware of this happening, nor do I know why Colorado Springs does not have the AIT. I explained that we have screening process in place, such as ETD testing of belongings, and passengers, patdown inspections randomly administered, and other process. I explained that I am not familiar with the underwear bomber.

I explained that the website has a list of AIT locations and scheduled AIT locations. However, Colorado Springs is not on that list.

Charlotte Douglas International Airport (CLT)
Chattanooga Metropolitan Airport (CHA)
Chicago Midway Airport (MDW)

Corpus Christi International Airport (CRP)
Cyril E King Airport (STT) (Virgin Islands)

I am a very frequent traveler (TSA Precheck, GOES) who never comments on anything but I really think that having to show a boarding pass a second time when it is on your cell phone is a recipe for a lost phone. After you show it at the metal detector, you need to put in a separate bin and hope that you remember it when you collect your other belongings. This was started only recently and it does nothing to enhance security or safety. All the TSA agent does is look at a bar code from 4 feet way. It could be barcode from anything.

Thanks for reading this and for everything the TSA does to keep us safe in the skies.

TSA,

2013 9:03: I'm concerned about the authoritarian and communist aspects of your program Screening of Passengers by Observation Technique, it reminds me of programs initiated from very restrictive regimes from around the world. Will American citizens be detained or refereed to law enforcement for refusing to talk with you if the otherwise comply with the body x-ray, metal detector, etc?

Thanks,

Dear TSA,

I am writing you due to what I experienced this past week with Delta and what I saw at JFK airport when boarding my flight on Wednesday morning. I included my Delta complaint below which talks about TSA scheduling of agents (highlighted in red).

As a traveler, WE should not have to WAIT as long as we do. If you think so, you are wrong. We are the customers, not you. You should do as you are told, since we PAY your salaries.

My complaint here is specifically to what I saw that morning. An elderly woman in a wheelchair, who could barely stand with a cane, much less without one, was helped into the body scanner with the help of one to two TSA agents. The female I while this is going on, the elderly lady is hearing her daughter or care taker. "I'm right here". "I'm right here", which meant that the elderly woman was "out of it" and scared that the TSA agents were going to drop her. Then, the TSA agents decided that they had to have her walk through the metal detector instead. This took a full 5 minutes to get the elderly woman to walk through, which backed up the line since the TSA agents did not allow any one of us to go around her. That was ridiculous since our wallets, luggage and laptops were exposed on the other side of the screening device. [Don't give me that crap that "we have cameras", since cameras do not stop theft, they only record it.] I shared my disdain with your agents over the handling of this elderly woman and the holding of the line. They just smiled. They smiled not at my complaint, but happy that they were able to piss off so many at one time. It is like a game with them and that is pathetic.

2013 12:01: In my opinion, this incident looked like the first time TSA ever dealt with a handicap person. In my opinion, these ill trained TSA agents had NO BUSINESS putting this elderly woman through this type of testing. In my opinion, TSA should have a lane dedicated to elderly/handicap and families where they take the longest time to go through. Why should the PREPARED/EXPERIENCED traveler be subjected to the long lines created by those who need more time. [Don't give me that crap about all of us being equal either, or you should cut out the First Class and Dignitary lines.]

I believe in security and I appreciate what you all TRY to do, however you need to TRY a little harder in reducing the lines. If you need help doing that, I would be more than glad to offer my services at $150 an hour. That is a cheap rate and I can guarantee you a better experience for us frequent and infrequent travelers.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Disability Description: She is a passenger who is blind and has a guide dog that she has traveled with through many airports.

Response Details: For your complaint to be considered complete according to Department of Homeland Security Regulations for Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act (6 C.F.R. 15.3(b) and 15.70(d)(3)), it must be in writing and including the following information:

The name and address of the complainant;

The date of the alleged act of discrimination;

A description of the alleged discriminatory action in sufficient detail to inform TSA of the nature of the alleged act of discrimination; and

The signature of the complainant or someone authorized to sign on behalf of the complainant.

In addition, to appropriately address your concerns, we also need to know the airport at which you were screened by TSA.

2013 2:39:4 Also sent caller a claim package for the damage to her carry on items. Emailed the RFI to the passenger.

Incident Details: Caller says that she had a horrific experience. She is a passenger who is blind and has a guide dog that she has traveled with through many airports. She states that she took Delta flight 2001 and had an incredibly rude screener who was very condescending. Caller said that she would like to put her dog on sit and walk through the WTMD herself with her service dog following on a long leash. Caller states that the TSO refused to allow this and also refused to allow her friend flying with her to hold the dog while the caller went through and even chased the friend away and would not let her be with her while she was being screened. She says that she was forced to walk through the WTMD at the same time as the dog, which of course set off the WTMD due to the collar. Caller says that her dog does not like to be touched while in a harness, so she started to take the harness off for the patdown. Caller states that she was screamed at and told dont do that and then the TSO took the whole harness off and put it through the xray and did the patdown taking an excruciatingly long time saying where she was going to put her gloved hands and asking questions like Are you capable of moving your foot? and Are you capable of moving your arm 2 inches? . Caller feels that the patdown was excessive and vengeful; furthermore caller says that the TSO did not test her hands for explosives and did not pat down the dog, but destroyed her purse and removed an expensive sleep preventative for the dog without telling her, only leaving the open box and instructions. Caller said that she requested a supervisor early in the process, but no supervisor was brought until near the end of the process. She says that when she complained to the supervisor, the supervisor gave her a comment card and said There is nothing you can do just take the card. She says that neither the TSO nor the supervisor gave their names even when asked for their names but her friend said that the supervisor was named (b)(6) Caller states she was told that all dogs are screened the same and told them that hers was a service dog and was told that they did not care.

I was pre-check cleared at IND on Friday 7/26. Upon arrival at the pre-check screening point, I asked for a scan as opposed to a metal detector and pat down due to a hip prosthesis. I was advised that I would have to undergo a pat-down as the scanner had been taken from the pre-check screening point. A deactivated scanner is sitting unused in lane 7 at IND. I have undergone all processes and background checks to be able to use trusted traveler program and the pre-check process. It is ridiculous that I should have to have a pat down, when a perfectly good scanner sits unused. Please fix this situation. Thank you.

I was assured that traveling with my wife and daughters (9&7) would exempt us from any pat downs and the body scanner. After my wife and daughters walked through the metal detectors, an agent put a chair in the way and stopped my walk. He then rudely ordered me to go to the body scanner. I WAS separated from my family (unlike what your website says). When I questioned this process, I was told only ONE parent goes through the metal detector and that TSA has discretion with the body scanner and who goes through it. None of this happened at the SMF airport when we went to Tennessee a week prior. Why did this happen? This may stop my further air travels.

The caller traveled from Phoenix left two expensive bracelets in the bin. She contacted the Lost and Found Dept and they found one bracelet. She took them off to go through the metal detector and then got her things but forgot her bracelets. She stated that since they found one, they should have the other one and would like to know how they can this situation looked at and someone watch the video cameras to see if someone just took it or it fell under the table or something.

You may wish to file a claim for missing and or damaged items by completing a Standard Form 95 (claim form). A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. Claim forms are also available on our Web site at www.tsa.gov. If you decide to file a claim, it will be processed in accordance with the Federal Tort Claims Act.

The caller was complaining because TSA is getting rid of the AIT machines, which save her a lot of the time from having to undergo a patdown procedure. She said that she is 79 and has both knees surgically repaired. She said that when she travels through an airport that does not have AIT, she has to undergo a very invasive patdown procedure. She wants to know if there is any other way to be screened than a patdown. She said that she usually flies out of ABE, FLL, PHL and RSW.

2013 4:13:2 I told her that TSA is replacing the old rapiscan technology with new technology, AIT s are not being completely removed. I reviewed the list of airports that have, or are scheduled to receive, AIT. I told her that the only airport that she travels out of that does not have AIT is ABE. TSA has modified the screening procedures for passengers under the age of 12 and over the age of 75 to allow multiple passes through the AIT and WTMD, to try and keep from a patdown procedure. However, if those technologies keep alarming, a patdown procedure must be used to resolve them.

<http://www.tsa.gov/ait-frequently-asked-questions>

Caller stated that he had an bad experience at JFK that was very disturbing to him. Caller stated that he has a metal implant in his shoulder and after he was informed the TSO s at the checkpoint about the metal implant he was still prompted over to go through the WTMD. After he walked through and the alarm sounded the TSO gave him a patdown instead of wanded him like they have at other airports. They then proceeded to do Explosive Trace Detections on his hands, shoes and computer. Then the person that was scanning his carry on had a couple other officers help her with dumping the items out of his bag and going through it more thoroughly. Caller stated that he didn t think that the workers were very professional with how they did the additional screening.

Caller never stated that he felt singled out due to his metal implant, just felt that the staff at JFK wasn t very professional.

2013 9:24:0 After he went through his wife went through the WTMD and she has a metal knee. She proceeded to explain her metal knee and they quickly examined her knee and sent her on through and she didn t have to go through all the stuff he did like taking off his shoes even tho he is older than 75.

Caller stated that he was flying on May 26th, 2013 around 3:00PM. The flight was a connecting flight from Moscow to ATL. Flying through Delta. Caller stated that he thinks he flew in from Terminal F and had to go through Terminal B which had him go through the TSA checkpoint.

Advised Caller:

I apologize but anytime that you re alarmed through a WTMD the TSO may prompt you over for a patdown and do a ETD to make sure that you ve not been exposed to any kind of explosives. That is part of our policy. I apologize that he had to go through all the additional screening but it sounded like the experience that he went through is all part of our policy when an alarm is made through the WTMD. I would send a copy of his complaint on to the CSM at JFK so they know of the complaint.

Dear Transportation Security Administration Contact Center,

Recently I just got back from Vail, Colorado with a group of wounded warriors, and we were there with the Vail Veteran program for recreational therapy. We left out of Ronald Reagan Airport in Maryland, and arrived in the airport in Denver. There were absolutely NO problems or concerns when leaving from Maryland. We were not stopped or pulled over the side for further searching from security. The security in Maryland really worked with us and made sure the wounded soldiers with us were not made to feel uncomfortable or put into more pain. I was extremely pleased with the service we received from the curbside at the airport until getting on the plane. I don't think I could ask for better service and all the wounded warriors with us were pleased also. The staff there made sure everyone was treated with the accommodations they needed and they had all of our bags taken off the bus and checked in before we could make it to the ticket desk to check in. I wish I could say the same thing happened when we left out of the Denver Airport upon our departure.

After our visit to Vail, Colorado we arrived at the airport in Denver and someone was there right at our assistance and made sure they got our bags from us, handed our tickets, and made sure we were set to go before reaching security. We were all thankful we didn't have to go through the trouble of getting our tickets and waited for the rest of our group to arrive and headed towards security. When we reached security we were allowed to skip the line, but we had to deal with people all around us making rude comments because we were allowed to skip the line. These rude comments were not only upsetting, but uncalled for and these soldiers should not have to deal with this. We made it through the rude comments and then the searching started. My fiancé was told five different times to take on and off his shoes and was told other times he could keep his sling on and then to take it off and everything just kept getting him confused. He was then pulled over the side along with the two in wheelchairs that were with our group and they began the alcohol swabs and they had my fiancé and the two in wheelchairs standing up and making sure they were not "hiding" anything. After all the alcohol swabbing my fiancé still wasn't done and they pulled him over the side. The security officer told him "this will be the last test and if you don't pass this one, you will be escorted to the back for a rectal exam".

My fiancé was hit by a 107 rocket in Afghanistan on May 16, 2013 and just recently became out patient and is staying at Walter Reed Hospital in Maryland. He suffered a broken collar bone, a foot of intestines removed because of shrapnel that has entered his body at many different angles, and nerve damage that caused him to lose the bicep movement in his dominant hand (right). These trips are to help wounded warriors become more comfortable in society and to be able to cope with the fact they were hurt overseas. My fiancé gets very anxious in crowds and doesn't like to feel overwhelmed so when the security officer told him all these things and had him up against the wall and pressing down all over including his arm IN A SLING, he was pretty upset. My fiancé was even showing the different pieces of shrapnel that has made it to the skin and that was why he set it off, but the officer didn't want to hear him out at all. His arm is extremely sensitive to touch, and I couldn't believe that they actually had the men out of their wheelchairs (one is a double amputee, and one experienced radiation where all of his muscles are slowly diminishing) and searching for things and causing more pain.

I know that these officers were doing their jobs and I know the security of other people on the aircraft is very important, but is it really necessary to put all these wounded warriors in difficult states when they have shrapnel that has entered their bodies and we know why the detector is going off? Is it really necessary to threaten someone with a rectal exam if they were fighting for your freedom overseas and was hurt? Do these officers really think that these wounded warriors are trying to get things onto a plane?

I do believe that if these security officers that help with airport security were more understanding of wounded warriors and knew that there are things that these soldiers can't do that other normal citizens can they wouldn't be pushing them to do certain things. Wounded warriors have many things that could set off the metal detector such as prosthetics, shrapnel, and many other things. I believe if these security officers were more accommodating they would see that these soldiers have nothing to hide, and it's just things that come along with their injury. Not only are these soldiers dealing with the physical problems from their accident, but they are dealing with the mental problems as well. Becoming overwhelmed in the airport because they are setting off the metal detector because of the shrapnel in their bodies should be the least of their worries. I fully understand the importance of security in the airport, but I don't believe in making these wounded warriors feel uncomfortable.

Thank you,

Subject: Incident at Newark (EWR) Airport July 29, 2013

I'm writing to bring to your attention and file a complaint with the TSA regarding one of your employees at the Newark airport security line on Monday July 29th, 2013.

new machine that returns a nude image. She says that she feels like she is being viewed nude by the AIT machine. On the 13th of June the TSO poked her in the right breast. At approximately 9:00 a.m. that morning she had a procedure on that breast. The TSO tore a stitch and dislodged the drainage tube. She once again states that the pain behind this was blinding. She said that she was bleeding pretty badly for a good length of time. She made her flight to Seattle. The airline helped her stop her bleeding. Alaskan airlines is who the lady that helped her worked for. When she arrived in Seattle she spoke to Alaska airlines and they found her a hospital. Her hospital classified her as a victim of a violent crime. The doctors had to reinsert the surgical tube and re-stitch the wound. She now has a horrible scar were there should have been a very little one (b)(6) would do nothing for her about this situation and (b)(6) has hung up on her a few times. He stated that there will be no consequences to the TSO that did this to her. She is mad about this response from (b)(6) Her letters that she has written have been returned endlessly to her. We sent her an email that said TSA contact center has referred you to the office of chief council. She received an email stating that her previous email on seeking how to file a criminal complaint has been received. TSA can not give you legal advise is what she was told. She has been referred to the office of internal affairs, the department of Homeland security, the FBI, and the U.S. Department of Justice. She read a report to the German parliament. She said that it stated the L3 screener was rejected in Germany. The caller stated that there are major stockholders with TSA and that s why the L3 scanner is let in. She also stated that the L3 gives a 50% false positive on people it scans and 100% false positive on people with disabilities. She also states that this report is only readable in the German language but can be found on the internet. All the blogs and complaints she has read that TSA are making children taking off their braces. She has read about amputees have to take off their artificial limbs. She stated that is kind of like asking her to take off her underwear and show you her crotch. She stated that breast milk does not have to go through X ray it can be accordingly screened. She read a blog post were TSA made a lady miss her flight. They would not let her through the checkpoint with her breast milk because it was over 3.4 oz. She states that she read another blog about someone who had already been cleared and they stopped one of them to pat them down for additional screening due to breast milk. The caller is flying again in September. She wants to know how to stop the ones who think it's their job is to torture and torment the disabled. She states that the callers who call to file complaints with us just get laughed at. She went to court over this issue. The court told her that they did not have jurisdiction and that she needed to go to Washington to the federal court system. The CSM at SMF (b)(6) has stated that there is nothing he will do for her. The caller stated that he is playing a game of alphabet soup which is the way the federal government plays the victim. She states that her person was violated and tormented. The FBI called her and told her the same things. She lost her temper and she said that (b)(6) best fashion accessory would be an unmentionable a second time. She stated if she sees an obituary for (b)(6) that she would have a street party. She would not be the cause of that obituary, but she would celebrate it. The caller states that she follows the teachings of Ghandi, and she would never hurt anyone under any circumstances. She said that the FBI said they only investigate people who offend their public officials. She stated that someone sent her more contacts: the office of civil rights, internal affairs, and inspector general for the DHS. She asks what she can do to prevent any further torture from SMF. She stated they should not be touching her at all PERIOD! She should be able to walk through the L3 machine, which she still knows doesn t give a cartoon image of her, or the WTMD without further molestation. She states that she is physically able to go through the AIT machine. She states that anything keeping her from traveling on an aircraft is a violation of the interstate commerce clause. She states obviously SMF is not on her side. She declares that Sacramento is not on her side. The caller states that the FBI or attorney general are not on her side. She also believes that the Federal Securities director is not going to be on her side. She does not believe that ODPO is going to be on her side. She told the emergency room to send all her medical treatment against the TSA as we are the direct cause of all of her injuries so we should pay for them. She states that disabled people get a lot of abuse because they do not have a lot of money. She got a phone call from the FBI today that caused more abuse to her being a disabled person. She states that she has never had a problem at any other airport except SMF. She has to look at an ugly ragged scar on her body. BLOOD...HAS...BEEN...SPILLED..... She stated. There is nothing she can do to minimize them spilling more blood she asked. She stated that she feels sorry for me because I have been educated by them. She stated that a good 4 year degree from Ole Miss. would help my education. Then she reiterated to say maybe I should go to Notre Dame were they would make fun of my accent. She then told me to NEVER thank her for calling the TSA and just to tell her to have a good evening.

Advised caller:

Providing her name would be to help us identify this record. I informed her that I did not have access to her records without her name. I advised her that it is my job to record and document what she says and I want to be sure to be as accurate as I can be. I apologized to the caller for her experience at that airport. I advised her that the procedures she was describing should not be happening. Advised that those people who were wrongfully screened could call the TSA and file complaints about those situations. I stated that our procedure would be to submit the complaints to the CSM at the appropriate airports. I informed her that it is not our intention to maim or torture anyone in any way form or fashion. It is the TSA s intention to try to make the skies a safer place to travel for all of the citizens. I offered to see if her case had been escalated already. I explained to her that we had already escalated her case to the appropriate body for investigation. I explained that we can escalate her situation to the CSM and to ODPO. I then explained to the caller what ODPO was. I advised her that we have no specific time frame on how long it will take for her investigations to complete. If they do contact her it will be via an email or a phone Dear Sir or Madam,

When I am traveling out of my uniform, with my airline ID badge visible, I have found that there is absolutely no consistency among TSA agents in allowing me to go through the metal detectors instead of the body scanners. I believe the whole point in allowing crew members to opt out of the body scanner is to lower our exposure to radiation. Over the course of a typical career a flight crew member is exposed to twice the radiation of the average population due to the effects of altitude alone. When going through security, we are not less prone to radiation when we are not in our uniforms.

Occasionally, when getting a pat down, the procedure is explained in a somewhat condescending tone and the procedure itself can be over reaching. Last month, while leaving Chicago, I got in a lane that was sending passengers through a metal detector. Then, all of a sudden, they closed off the detector and started sending passengers through the body scanner. When I asked why I couldn't go through the metal detector, after showing my ID, again I was treated with condescension and

Why are your agents wasting time patting down crewmembers when it seems that they should be performing more worth while tasks?

Sincerely,

Caller traveled from EWR at 6AM and there was an incident. Caller said the TSO pushed her buttons. She was wearing her grandmothers bracelet which is 18k gold and it beeped. She put the bracelet in the plastic bowl. Caller asked if she could she put it with other items and the first container had her shoes, she put her bracelet in the second bin. Her daughters items were behind hers. She went through and cleared the WTMD. The bowl came out empty with both bracelets missing. Caller had to argue with the officer running the machine. The caller said she put it in the bin the and the TSO said no she did not. It got loud and a supervisor walked over and said, this matter better be rectified immediately. Another TSO came over and confirmed that she did place the items in the bin. After that they said, "oh they found them".

Caller said they were not nice. If her daughter had not been traveling behind her it would have been worse. Caller was in a rush and did not get any names, no numbers. Her daughter said do not start here. They took both items and it took them 4 minutes to decide to hand it over. Caller said a TSA worker stole the items.

Advised Caller:

2013 12:37: Regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Most airports are under video surveillance. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint. Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this incident to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at that location.

Caller did not remember any identifying information about the TSO.

Wanted to voice concerns about violations of rights TSA doing. Like multistation and he was profiled a few years ago for having darker skin. Was patted down and had to have ETD 6 years ago he is Italian. He states he doesn't feel safer by having people pat him down. Caller felt we are all just drones here and don't see how we are blind to all of the bad things TSA does. Also our company should not be growing but shrinking

2013 3:48:

Response:

Apologized that he felt this way and had a bad experience but officers are trained to perform patdowns so they do not violate a persons rights they will use the back of their hands when going over sensitive areas. Also the only way anyone will receive a patdown is if they request this or they set off some form of alarm when going through the AIT or WTMD machines. Explained that TSA is here for the safety of passengers. Asked if I could place him on hold to see what else I could for him if he felt he was violated and other people were being violated however the caller would not allow it he continued to state how we were no good and only there to violate people. Also advised that TSA will never perform a strip search.

Caller states that she is contacting us in regards to an incident that happened on May 13 that she contacted us about on May 25.

Caller states that the officers at the time of the screening never advised her of the screening procedures as they ran her and her service animal through the process. She states that after they went through the WTMD and were ETD swabbed, they were then taken to a private screening after needing to wait for several minutes. She and the airline assistance both began voicing their concern that she was going to miss her flight. She believes that the officers then took more time to make certain that she missed her flight.

2013 4:01:

Previous record:

Caller went through inspection at the OAK airport on 05-13-2013 at 4:30 pm flying on US Airways flight 325. She was flying from OAK to PHX to FLL. She has mobility problems and has an emotional support animal. Caller had to go through private screening along with her pet. Due to the screening process she missed her flight. Caller said that the airlines told her to blame TSA for missing her flight. She wanted to file a complaint. Told caller that I will document her complaint, told caller how she can contact the CSM at the OAK airport about the screening procedures.
TSA,

I wanted to provide comments and feedback on the lack of availability of the TSA Pre-screening lane at LAX. The lane was down this past Monday morning, one of the heavy travel days of the week at Delta. The reason provided was the metal detector was now and they were waiting for it to be fixed.

2013 4:10:

I would like to suggest that there should always be a TSA Pre check line open, and if there is any broken equipment, it should be a priority to repair. As a routine traveler that has gone through the TSA Pre check process, I feel this is a reasonable approach.

Thank you,

My name is (b)(6) active duty military member proudly serving in the US Navy as a Seabee. I want start my letter by complementing the thoroughness, patience and professionalism your teams show while doing their job. I travel all over the world, out two weeks out of the month from Ankara Turkey, to Sasebo Japan and everywhere in between, and know that your team's hard work and dedication keep us safe.

On 13 July 2013 I was flying out of Regan National Airport on official orders, my flight was scheduled to depart at 1400. Knowing the area I decided to show up at 1130 to avoid the crowds and have time to relax while I waited for my flight. While in line at the security check points, I placed all my valuables in the X-ray machine, did exactly as I was told, everything out of my pockets. PC out of its case, ect. But I failed to notice my Oakleys, (HYPERLINK "<http://www.oakley.com/products/6419/23732>" Polarized Fuel Cell) were on my head. As I was about to pass through the metal detector, one of your agents politely asked me to take the sunglasses off, luckily I was able to place them on top of my other items in the plastic tray and she politely waived me trough. As I recovered my Items I failed to pick up my glasses and walked away. After no more than 20 yards away I ran back and asked the agents present if she has seen my sunglasses, not even one minute had passes and no one has seen anything. I was polite and patient, but I was treated as if I were crazy. I asked politely again to see if they has seen or found and turned in top the lost and found and again I was treated like a fool. I then stopped being polite and demanded someone point me out to the lost and found. After that, which I think is totally unnecessary, they listened and "helped" me.

The glasses were never found and I was brushed off and all they said is "...Trust me Sir no one here wants your sun glasses." I use my sunglasses as part of my gear; they are not only for protecting me from the sun, but safety glasses while shooting, a $150 piece of safety gear. This is the first time I've ever lost anything while traveling. It is also the first time I have been treated so... strange. I was not at all disrespectful or demanding asking for something unattainable, if they would have just gave me the respect I gave them everything would have been OK.

2013 8:26:1 I do not expect anything from this e-mail; I just can't let it go without at least saying something. Again, I commend TSA on a job well done and I recognize the hard work that is performed and that thanks to you guy's we are safer as a country. I know this is true, I appreciate it more than most because of the amount of travel I do, and I hope my little gripe will help you guy's fine tune the TSA screening system, when or if a small issues like this ever happens again.

Very Respectfully,

his wives bag was not re-locked and she had items sticking out of the bag. His wife used to work for United.

He says they showed up at 4:15 am, they went through the line. He told the gentleman that worked there he was disabled, he doesn't have toes. He told the officer he could not take off his shoes, he cant walk without his shoes. He had traveled before through Dulles and used the machine for screening and swab his shoes for him, he went through the WTMD for this flight. He told the officer he could swab his shoes. He was told by a black man and a blond headed man with blue eyes that he can't have his items back. The plane began to board and he says they were about to miss the plane. The blond headed man told him he did not care if he missed the plane. The blond headed man gave him a patdown and touched him in a sensitive area. He did not offer him a private screening for the patdown. He had offered to the officer to show him his toes were missing. He says the officer was very rude and crabby, he was sweating. He did not get the screener's name. He feels his 4th amendment rights were violated.

At first I understood he said he worked or TSA but he then stated he used to work at a airport he was a taxi cab driver. He was wearing a watch and told the officer the alarm was caused by the watch. The officer gave him a patdown anyway. He was unhappy at how the screening was handled. He says the officer should have told him to take the watch off for screening. He says the officer did not care if he embarrassed him in public or that he was about to miss his plane. He says the officer did not respect him, he has spoken with an attorney already.

He says the officer was not a police officer and had no right to speak to him like this. He is upset he almost missed the flight because it took so long to go through screening and the officer told him he should have arrived earlier. He does not remember the officer offering him a private screening for the patdown. He says he has traveled a lot and knows how screening should go with TSA and this is not how it should be. He was upset at the patdown but more upset at how the officer handled the screening.

Told caller

I could take his flight information and send it to the CSM at the departing airport so they could be aware this happened.
I told the caller I was sorry this happened.

Anytime there is an alarm the officer will give a patdown to clear the alarm.

He should remove all personal items before screening starts so there may not be an alarm.

He was very upset so I again told him sending my record as a complaint to the CSM so they could be aware as well. They would have to handle or address his complaint for him.

I am writing to express my frustration when I go though TSA screening. I am an airline employee and work in Minneapolis but travel to Detroit and Fort Lauderdale often. I always seem to have a problem when I go though TSA screening. I have several health concerns, I have had 3 back fusions, arthritis, I have an implanted pacemaker/defibrillator, and have breast cancer. When I go out of Minneapolis I go through the employee check point, there always seems to be several TSA agents there. I can not go through the metal detector as it would stop my implanted device, which in turn would stop my heart. I have been told by different agents in Minneapolis that I should walk down to the other end of the terminal to go through the Advanced Imaging Technology. I go through the employee line because it is shorter so I don't have so far to walk. I can not go through the metal detector so I request a pat down. Although there are always several agents there standing around I always have to wait. I am always told I should go through the imaging technology, I always request a pat down and always have to wait. This past week when I traveled it was the first time an agent felt my right breast which I have had removed and question what was "hard" in there. I told her it was my expander from my mastectomy. Which after all this time (I had my surgery last November, and fly at least twice a month) has been the first time it has been an issue. I was taken to a private area and should her what it was. I am curious why no agent before her ever questioned it. I get a pat down often.

In Detroit I go through the imaging, which I don't like to do (I get a enough radiation which all my medical issues) and was asked what my defibrillator was. I was told to remove it, I told the agent (again many agents standing around) that it was implanted and I could not remove it, she said remove your device mam, I again told the agent I could not I was implanted, the agent got very irritated with me and said if you don't remove you device I will getting a supervisor. My response the was if you can get a surgeon here to take it out of my body, then I will remove it. This finally sank into her head and she said oh okay, and I was cleared. In Fort Lauderdale I was told I had to go through the imaging and could not be patted down (this past weekend). I was running late and did not want to argue with anyone as I was pretty worn out from work and my medical issues. I take air reservations all day and always asked about TSA security. I refer them to the web site, but can appreciate the frustration. I realize this is the way it has become since 911 and accept that, however agents need to be more sensitive and accommodating when it comes to the disabled. I could stay on disability and may have to some day, for now though I work and think as a citizen deserve more respect and empathy. (b)(6)

Caller wants to complain about discourteous treatment from a TSA agent. Caller and his wife flew on Saturday. Caller and his wife usually opt out of AIT and request a pat-down. He requested once at the line, that he be able to walk through the WTMD. The officer raised his voice at the caller, and was very, very negative telling the caller go to an area that left the caller unable to see his carry-on luggage.

Caller waited in this area with his wife for around 5-10 minutes for the pat-down. Lead Officer (b)(6) was the name of the TSA employee. As the caller and his wife finished with their pat-down, he walked by the officer to see his badge with the officer saying: "Oh my he is going to complain" and the caller felt he was trying to embarrass him.

Dear Sir: After reading the news about TSA theft this AM in the local and national newspapers, I felt that I needed to address a loss that we suffered last year at Jacksonville International Airport. My granddaughter (b)(6) (13), went through the security check point on the morning of 13 October 2012. She was catching a flight on Southwest from Jacksonville to Denver and was told by security that she had to take off her ear rings prior to going through the metal detector, which she did and placed them in the bin. (We were later told that taking off ear rings was not necessary prior to entering the metal detector.) Her grandmother had just given her a pair of diamond ear rings (to celebrate her 13th birthday) prior to her flight home to Denver. On the other end of the security line, she found only one of the ear rings in the bin. We immediately scoured the empty bins and made a report to the on duty TSA supervisor. The ear ring was not found and the supervisor gave me the lost/found phone number to follow-up later, which I did.

This note is probably too little too late, but I wanted to bring in to management's attention. Thank you.

Subject: Travel Experience

To whom this may concern,

:013 2:41:4

My husband and I recently traveled from Billings, Montana where we were visiting family to our home in St. Louis, Missouri this past week. We arrived at the airport with plenty of time to get through security and to our gate without being rushed. However, that all changed when we noticed that TSA decided to shut down the right side of the line. There were nearly 20 TSA employees standing around, some working and others just talking and laughing, while only one line was moving. Prior to the two lines being closed down to one, there was just a body scanner and a metal detector, however, only the body scanner was the one being used. As I am pregnant, I opt for a pat down because I do not want to endanger my child. I know the protocol and the rules that come with it. However, prior to even getting patted down, the 8 people ahead of my husband and I all had to have their bags checked and scanned multiple times. Everyone's belongings went through the machine twice holding the line up. Finally my husband got through the body scanner and his bag needed to be checked again....They were suspicious of my breastpump which I clearly need as a mom and a mom to be. They took everything out of the breastpump bag and touched all of my babies bottles and products that I use. Never in my life have I been so violated. They touched all of my things that go on my body and feed my child. I did not have anything to use to clean or sanitize it with after my belongings were dealt with like trash. They were not gentle with any of my things and fiddled and threw things as if they had no meaning at all. I am disgusted with how your service treats moms and parents alone. It is extremely rude and a violation/destruction of ones belongings that are very personal. It is 2013. Figure it out. A breastpump is not a weapon. Your employees were so worried about my pump that they failed to see that I had accidentally left a liquid in my purse that was not in a plastic bag. How does that happen? How do your employees find interest in a breastpump, but not in a liquid that was not in a bag.

I am disgusted with the TSA. Something needs to change!

not board her plane. Caller stated she had nothing on her feet. She had to go into a private area barefoot and without her jacket. Caller stated she was wearing her shorts, shirt, bra, underwear and that is all.

She was singled out and searched, she does not know why. She went through WTMD. A female TSO told her to stand over there. Caller stated the TSA agent said they were going to strip search her. They took her luggage off the conveyor belt as well as her purse, hat, four pieces of luggage, and all the items she put into the bins. They took her into an area behind the checkpoint.

They told her they were going to full body search her. She told the screeners they were not going to touch her. There were many female TSOs in the room. One of the female TSOs went to get a big male TSO who came in and asked what was going on. Caller stated that she would not allow anyone to touch her.

The TSOs called the police and a Mexican officer named (b)(6) came in and began to interrogate her. He asked if she takes drugs. She said no. He asked if she uses alcohol. She said no. He asked if she was taking any medication. She said she was and they could call her doctors. She told him that she was not going to answer any more questions. She told him to give her her phone. Two other police officers came in.

She said at this point she was circled by female TSOs and the male TSOs and three police officer. Caller stated she did consider running away. By this time she was crying.

One police officer asked what was going on. Caller stated she would like to know but no one would tell her. She stated that she had been traveling and that someone tainted her along the way. Caller said all the TSA women were laughing and chuckling. The Officer (b)(6) had a smirk on his face. She told him to take the smirk off his face. He took two military steps toward her and asked if she would talk to authority like this. She said yes when you treat me like this.

013 2:45:1 People all over the airport were looking at her. She said she felt like a terrorist. The second officer who had come in told the Mexican officer to back off that he would take care of this. The Mexican officer took two military steps back and went around behind the others in the room. He said They do this to all Americans. She said they do not because she did not see anyone else being treated like this.

She believes this is abusive. She said she is 71 and was traveling alone from Rochester and now was leaving SEA.

She is going to call (b)(6) SEA Police Department, her Congressman and report this. She is going to tell her medical doctors, her son who was a military police officer, FOX News. She will get this publicized in local and national newspapers and get on the radio.

I offered to email the information on filing a formal complaint. She said she did not have email and wanted to know why it could not be mailed. I told her it was not set up to be mailed. She wanted to know who made that rule. I told her I did not know. She asked if it was Congress or TSA. She said old people do not use email and some people are too poor to have a computer. She said some young people do not use email. She wanted an answer as to who made this rule. I told her I did not know, but I could give her the information. She told me now I was getting upset with her. I asked her if she wanted the information.

I told the caller that if she wanted to file a formal complaint it must:

government told me Agent Orange was safe in Viet Nam and we all know what happened with that), I was watching an old women, 78 years old, being taken out of a wheel chair by a group of TSA agents and manhandled into the radiation machine. This poor old woman could just barely stand up, barely walk and had extreme difficulty standing upright with her arms up so she could be properly radiated. It took a group of TSA goons on both sides of the machine to get her in, get her radiated, and get her out without her falling down. While all this was going on, people were zipping through the metal detector so I wonder how important the x-ray machine really is.. What bothered me most is the lack of consideration for an old women, obviously somebody's Grandma and obviously NOT threat to our security.

First of all, has the government lost all compassion for America' elderly and for American citizens??

Secondly, one look at this woman who is obviously someone's grandma and could hardly be considered a threat so why go through the exercise?

013 6:05:2 Do the TSA line personal have less sense than our government as a whole?

I'm a combat disabled and decorated veteran of the Viet Nam war which was fought supposedly to contain communism, I'm also a citizen and a taxpayer. I believe that those machines are a violation of my Fourth Amendment rights against unreasonable search and a violation of the Bill of Rights against being searched without being charged with a crime. The pat down is absolutely criminal because I've not been charged with anything. I went to war to protect those rights, at least that's what they told me when I enlisted. I understand that in these days and times we need to be vigilant, but this exhibition was just unconscionable in addition to a violation of rights afforded us by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

On another topic, the TSA agents told me that flying is a privilege not a right. Is this true??

I would like a response to all of this.

I would like to report a lack in security at Miami International Airport.

I fly thru MIA often, as it is my home airport. I use the PreCheck line every time, since I have Global Entry and am also Platinum with American Airlines. At MIA, the PreCheck line is on the left side, with a dedicated agent and metal detector. This morning, at approximately 8:30 a.m., I used the PreCheck line at MIA. I noticed that a separate line with travelers that did not have PreCheck was feeding into the PreCheck lane. Just like myself, these travelers did not have to remove their shoes, and take out their toiletries and electronics. I asked a few people in line with me if they have PreCheck, and they had no idea what I was talking about. It seems that in order to relive congestion in the regular security lanes, an agent was sending travelers without PreCheck thru the PreCheck lane. I feel that this decision compromises my security, as well as the security of other travelers, as those passengers have not been prescreened. I hope the next time I travel out of MIA this error has been corrected.

Thank you for your attention.

Dear Sirs/madams:

I just went thru security at Newark intl airport, united airlines, terminal A. Going thru the metal detector a buzzer went off and I was told that I was randomly selected to be checked. I then waited 13 minutes for a supervisor to come and check me. The security people were rude and ridiculing while we asked what the delay was about. They ran out of bins, were rude to other travelers etc.

When the supervisor arrived, she was apologetic and explained that people had not shown up for work.

TSA- we can do better than this!!

Disability Description: Caller has a hip replacement and is retired from Pan American and he worked for Delta. He is a veteran as well.

Incident Details: He stated that at Reagan the TSO offered him to go through the AIT and he told him that he has metal implants and even told him he may keep on his shoes. He is 80. The experience was nice and smooth.

On his return from LaGuardia, he got in line and he told the guy he has hip replacement and the TSO told him to take his shoes off. He told the guy he is 80 but he still made him take off his shoes. He ended up going to the end of the line. He alarmed the WTMD. When the TSO was finished screening him the caller asked if he was done and put on his shoes to leave. He saw two TSA agents talking and pointing to him. He said he took 10 steps to leave and the second guy, who was a supervisor, came running toward him and made him come back and take off his shoes off for a second time. They tested them for explosives. He thinks this was retaliation. He called the Americans with Disability Act and filed a complaint. He is getting the runaround and was told that he needed to call TSA. He is an active Democrat and he is not going to let this go. He said that this is age discrimination and other things. He is very upset and said that he is going as far as to speak with his Senator. He said that the American people have no voice.

Response Details: I apologized to the caller that he is unhappy with the service that he received. I asked him if you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition. Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

Do you want information about filing a written complaint regarding disability discrimination or are you calling with a different concern such as poor customer service?

He stated at this point that he had already filed the complaint and he said that I could forward his information to a CSM on his behalf but he did not have any of his flight information other than the airport. He stressed that he was not interested in providing any information or receiving any information on how to file a complaint in writing regarding this incident.

I referred this to a CSM and ODPO as a FYI.

1013 6:01:5

The callers were flying from Fiji to Honolulu. The caller had a stop over in Western Samoa and was told they have a contract with the US government for screening. The airport is APW. The caller wanted to inform TSA that crimes were committed. The caller stated he was horrified that US passengers travel and get treated bad. They were suppose to stop for an hour and all the passengers were forced off the plane and go through security again. The caller took off everything and went through the metal detector. The security did not ask him or give him any information about a patdown. The security just started doing Patdown and touched everyone in very inappropriate ways. The items that the passengers purchased were from Fiji and security took and gathered up everything and left the building. The passenger never has been so humiliated and touched so profoundly or treated so horribly. There was no reason for a patdown or physical searches to any passenger. The caller stated they were forced off the plane without any word and were touched in bad ways. The caller was told that there is a new contract with Western Somoa and TSA to do screening.

Response:

Advised the caller that TSA is not in Western Somoa and that we have no information on who he will need to talk to. Advised the caller to see who does the screening there.

Ms. Agrasto,

1013 6:15:4 I think your indifference to the issues brought to your attention is a direct reflection of the problems in your organization and with your employees.

Additionally, for you to claim that I am naive is simply ignorant. As an army transportation officer and a commander of a unit, I closed five bases in Iraq on my last deployment, to include supervision of air and truck terminals. I trust you cannot share the same experience. That being said, I certainly understand that there are times when threats exist, and there are times when threats do not exist, to include varying threat levels. Your organization, and self-serving individuals such as yourself, can claim that there is always a threat, because you simply do not want to resign and provide the opportunity for someone more competent to take over those positions that will do the proper assessments. And claiming that there is always a threat is a way of keeping your jobs and your current budget, because most people do not want to be bashed by people like you who pretend to have an inherent competence.

But you are not being paid to say that there is a threat then to go back and drink your coffee, while you treat everyone as a threat, that type behavior is the definition of ignorance in this regard.

All of these things are very clear to me. But it is all beside the point, in this case, I believe I have a valid complaint, and I believe that you should properly address it with the source of the problem, which are your TSA employees in Ithaca and elsewhere, not by accusing me of ignorance.

2:35 PM August 2nd.

Comments: I have been traveling via LAX for years and have always found it to be a pleasant experience. Today, even, the TSA screeners were upbeat, friendly, and courteous. However, the woman stationed at the x-ray machine at the United Airlines premier security line was so inappropriate with me, I feel compelled to share my story.

At about 2:35 PM today, I was waiting for my carry on bag to go through the x-ray machine. The family in front of me had held up the line due to inappropriate carry on items, so the rest of of travelers were dealing with a long line and a backed up conveyer belt. As a result, the handles of my bag got caught on another passanger's bin. My bag (a purse) tipped over, and all of my personal items fell onto the conveyor belt. I alerted the TSA agent (a middle aged (b)(6) hair in a bun). She proceeded to berate me in front of other flyers, saying I hadn't put my bag in right. As I scrambled to collect all of my personal effects, which were scattered because of the incident, the TSA woman yelled "YOU'RE WELCOME, miss," in front of everyone. I apologized and thanked her for stopping the belt, but she gave me a dirty look. I do not understand why she felt the need to berate a frazzled traveler. I was planning on thanking her for her help, but regardless, that is no way to speak to a traveler. Everyone else was professional and courteous despite the long lines-- especially the guard who politely asked me to take my necklace off when it set the metal detector off.

I did not get the woman's name, but I believe she should be reprimanded for being so egregiously rude and inappropriate with a frazzled traveler just trying to make her flight. I am a very quiet, unassuming person who is respectful of TSA employees and their demanding jobs-- but this situation was so embarrassing and insulting, I had to say something.

Thank you for your time, and for all the hard work you do to keep our airways safe.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I would appreciate some clarity on carry-on liquids, as I have experienced different interpretation of policy by TSA agents.

My 7 year old son has severe food allergies, so we must carry on liquid medications and also a few juice boxes (single-serve, branded) over 3.4 oz. Have a doctor's letter on medical necessity.

Flying out of Philadelphia, we declared the medications and juice boxes. My wife and I went through AIT. TSA agent opened one of the medicine bottles for testing. No problem. Smooth process and kid-friendly TSA agents.

Flying back home a week later from Orlando, FL: Same liquids and doctor's letter. We were told that since the TSA couldn't open the juice boxes, one of us (me or my wife) would have to be patted down. I asked the agents (2 different agents) why I couldn't just go through AIT like I had at PHL --- no answer given at all -- just that I had to be patted down. OK, no big deal, I went through pat-down. But what's the official policy here? And why couldn't I get an answer to my question? Not consistent. And, what is the logic to having one of us being patted down and the other 3 going through simple metal detector? No testing was performed on any of the liquid medications in bottles that could have been opened.

My other comment here is an overall attitude of the entire TSA team at Orlando. Every time I've flown out of Orlando with my family (3 times now), the TSA experience has been poor. Worst of any airport in the US --- and we've traveled a fair bit. I would think Orlando TSA would be among the best with children, given the Disney location.

Example: agent at x-ray machine feed-in kept telling me I had to push my bags onto the feed-in belt to the x-ray machine, then asked me why I kept pushing when the belt was stopped. Simple answer: I couldn't see if the belt was moving from where I was standing because I had a long line of luggage on tables, kid car seats, etc, with my kids in front of me in the line. I'm a frequent business traveler with an IQ north of 150. I know how the x-ray machine feed belt works. All the agent had to do was communicate clearly or simply help me push the luggage into the machine when the belt was moving instead of standing there making unhelpful comments.

Example: Agent at Orlando security line intake, upon being presented with multiple boarding passes at once (with my two kids standing next to me) tells me each passenger has to present their own boarding pass. I told him I'm not going to have my children hold their own boarding passes, due to their ages and likelihood of passes being dropped --- we're all standing right there together. Attitude..... Again, no problems in Philadelphia, and no attitude from the agents.

I'm all for keeping everyone safe in the air. Seems to me PHL agents did their job just as well or better than Orlando agents, with a much better experience for my family.

Other observation for lack of consistency: Some airports' TSA demand that boarding passes be kept in hand when going through metal detector/AIT (Newark NJ), while others do not, and in fact insist that nothing can be in my hand at all when going through AIT. What's the policy? When I put my boarding pass in a bin for x-ray, with other materials, and the TSA agent at the metal detector wants to see it, it's already in the x-ray and the agent's not happy....

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

The caller was coming through Phoenix Sky Harbor Gate B. He stated that they had the line open for the AIT machine but the WTMD line was closed down. He stated that the line was very long and that he was separated from his personal affects because of the long wait time. He just wanted to call and inform us of this issue.

:013 11:52:2

Advised caller:

Apologized for his experience. Advised that all of our records are recorded and his complaint would be documented.

Caller flew from Las Vegas to San Diego on Friday on Southwest flight#: 1622, she had several sets of keys for homes that she owns in her bag. The keys are now missing. There was no NOI in bag. Caller also wants to let us know that she went through the WTMD on another flight and the machine hurt her arm. She said that her arm became painful right after she walked through the machine, and her skin on her arm formed bumps. She went to the doctor several days later and discovered that her blood had thickened. She wants to warn us about the dangers of metal detectors.

Advised Caller: At most airports across the country, TSA has procedures in place for handling lost and found. Items found at screening checkpoints and areas where TSA performs baggage screening are turned in to the appropriate, designated airport authorities. We suggest travelers contact the airport where their items were misplaced or lost.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process will enable us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subject of repeated complaints.

1013 8:11:0 Comment : I was traveling with an adult with a severe/profound intellectual disability (think 2 or 3 year old) who uses a wheelchair for distances. When we flew out of PHL screening went great. When we flew out of MIA they refused to let my son walk through the metal detector and then screen the wheelchair which is what we did in PHL. So they insisted on a patdown. I was fine with that. When they asked him to put out his arms we told them he would not understand and do that so just continue with the patdown. My son stood up and they didn't start patting him down. Then he started to wander away and they didn't do anything to stop him. My daughter jumped up and ran to get her brother and held his hand to keep him standing still while they patted him down and of course she was then subject to a patdown. I have no objection to a patdown but to let a person with a severe intellectual disability walk away and make no attempt to stop him was ridiculous. He has no concept of safety and could have easily been hurt. (My daughter at one point once she was helping told me she told the guy if he was afraid to touch my son he should get someone else to do it.) As far as I know there was no reason to refuse to let him walk through the metal detector and since he was wearing a diaper it would have been more effective to do it that way. I admit I forgot to call TSA Cares before MIA but we set nothing up as a result of my call before we flew out of PHL. Your staff needs to understand that if the parents/companions are not allowed to assist in a patdown (and I read that if they were under age 12 parents are allowed to hold their hands) they need to do something other than letting the person walk away.

Disability Description: The caller and her son flew from MSP to MDW on 8-1-13 and went through screening around 5:30pm through the middle checkpoint.

The callers son has Hydrocephalus. He has 2 shunts. One in his Brain and the other in his spine. The caller requested a patdown because one of his shunts is magnetic.

Response Details: Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

I emailed the caller the information.

Incident Details: The TSO asked her son why he could not go through the AIT machines. The son told the TSO he could not go through the machines as well as the the mother told the the TSO that her son could not go through the machines. The officer got rude with her and was suggesting to her son that he should go through the machines. The caller states the officer was very rude with her telling her that he did not have time to educate her about the machines and took her son to be screened and at that time she could not see her son. The caller states the officer wanted to pat her son down and the son told him that he wanted to wait on his mother. The mother states the officer was very firm when he did the patdown on her son. The caller states the officers put her in a position of trying to explain to him what her sons disability was and she does not think she should have to educate the officer about her sons disability. The caller states a supervisor came and helped her and was very friendly but states the TSO was very rude. The caller states the officer did accommodate her sons disability needs. The officer in question was officer (b)(6) and he was at MSP. The callers son was 14 years old.

The caller states the officer was very rude and condescending and her nor her son were treated with respect, dignity, and courtesy. The caller states the officer yelled at her. The caller states that she should not have to give her sons medical history to the officer to be able to get a patdown.

Caller stated that she recieved a patdown and the female security touched her. She did not like the patdown and feels that the patdown is against her privacy. She first went through the screening devices and then was subjected to additional screening.

She is wanting to file a complaint about the way the policy says a screening has to be done or she cant fly to SFO.

CCR informed her:

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. If subject
:013 3:34:5 to additional screening, then a patdown procedure will have to be given. Patdown are conducted by same-gender officers. However, passengers who are not willing to go through the screening process will not be permitted to fly.

Since she does not like the policy of a patdown and she feels that it goes against her privacy, she can write her concerns into HQ.

The caller stated that she has been flying a lot over the last few years and has never had a complaint about TSA, until now. On 8-5-2013, she took Jetblue flight 1059 from BOS to PHL at 3:15PM. When going through screening, she was in line for the WTMD. She was screened by the WTMD multiple times and it kept alarming, even after she had removed all of her jewelry and anything else that could have been metal. She was patted down and cleared through the screening checkpoint. She later realized that she was wearing a new bikini top that had a metal decorative piece on the top of it. She was upset that she got through screening and this was not caught. She asked why the AIT was not used to pin point this metal piece and she wondered if it would have pin pointed the metal piece.

I told her that the patdown is used to clear a person through screening if they alarm the WTMD and cannot be cleared by the WTMD. The patdown procedure is used to verify that the person does not have any prohibited items on their person. If she was already in line for and used the WTMD, the TSOs would not send her through the AIT. The procedure is to clear an alarm of the WTMD by using a thorough patdown. I cannot specifically state that the AIT would have caught this as an anomalies
:013 12:26:3 or not.

She was not happy with this answer and stated that she could have got through screening with wires attached to her body and that she needs to speak with someone else. I placed her on hold to talk with a CSS here at the TCC. I spoke to CSS Wayne and he felt that this was not a security issue.

I told her that our CSS did not feel that this was a security issue, as the TSOs followed standard protocol.

She requested to speak with someone else. I turned the call over to (b)(6)

Caller works at a hospital. One of her patients has a new defibrillator. What information about screening does the patient need?

Advised caller:

:013 5:43:5 If a passenger has an internal medical device, such a stomach or cardiac pacemaker or a defibrillator, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins.

To whom it may concern:

It had been several years since I have flown, and the last time I went through security you all had the old metal detectors. I am very cautious when going through security at the airport, always waiting for instruction from the TSA agents to give me the go ahead to continue through the designated area. I never want to do something wrong, because I know how serious airport security is. I waited on the other side of the new scanning devise, and the agent never instructed me to enter the machine, she simply stared at me, so I continued to wait in fear of going too soon and getting yelled at. Eventually, I asked if she was ready for me, and she replied, "Do I need to go get security!? Are you really going to hesitate and be uncooperative??" I said, "No ma'am, I was just waiting for your instruction so as to not do anything I wasn't supposed to." She then said, "Um no you're hesitating and not cooperating!" I said, "No ma'am, I'm more than willing to cooperate, I was just waiting for the go ahead from Disability Description: She is 72 years old and uses a wheelchair.

Response Details: Advised caller that when a passenger is wearing a head scarf, we do have to do some additional screening. Advised caller that if the ETD tests positive, which could be from any number of things, we do have to conduct a patdown. This is the same screening procedure for everyone, no matter what race.

If you believe you were discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition or have a claim of racial discrimination. Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

Do you want information about filing a written complaint regarding discrimination or are you calling with a different concern such as poor customer service?

:013 2:38:0 Advised I would send her the instructions for filing a written formal complaint.

Incident Details: Caller recently traveled. She says that she was in a wheelchair, but did go through the WTMD. She was wearing a head scarf, so after the WTMD, the officer told her that she could rub her head down and they could test her hands, or they could do it. She told the officer to do it. The ETD tested positive. Caller says that the woman's hands could have been contaminated for all she knows. Caller says that a white woman told her she would have to take her to another area. Caller told the officer that her traveling companion who is 89 years old, cannot see, and is also in a wheelchair, would have to come with her. She says that they done a patdown on her. She says that she has had the same nappy hair on her head for her entire 72 year life and has never had a problem before. Caller says that she told the officer taking her for the patdown that her people had lived here for 450 years and have never hijacked one of your (whites) planes. She says that the officer threatened her with the police. The caller continued and explained that she is a descendant of slaves. She says that we (whites) took her voting rights away and murdered the little boy recently. Caller says this was discrimination and poor customer service. She says her complaint is not going to go anywhere.

Caller stated that she has a Breast Prosthesis and the last time she flew she stated that she was given a hard time when she went through the screening Check point. She stated that she had no idea that she was suppose to tell the officers at the check about her prosthesis and was given a hard time and had her hands swabbed for explosive traces. She stated that they are getting ready to fly again on 08 30 2013 and needs to know if there is any way she can avoid all of the hassle s again at the check point.

Gave the caller the following info:

:013 3:41:4 A breast cancer survivor who wears breast prostheses, has mastectomy scars, wears head coverings or a compression sleeve may want to inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of her needs before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform TSOs about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf Passengers can be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Similarly, passengers can be screened using walk-through metal detectors only if they can walk through on their own. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a thorough patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a patdown.

Comment : My experience going through the security screening process is unacceptable. Using PDX as a comparison, OAK TSA is inefficient, unorganized and lacks in quality of service.

I started going through the security line, it was about 100 people deep with what seemed like one person checking boarding passes and IDs. It took about five minutes for the one line to break into three, but there was only two agents checking documents, ONE passenger at a time. I left Portland the same time of the day with about the same amount of people in line, and while there was one line, there were three agents with two lines on either side of their table checking IDs. The line went fast. At Oakland, it felt as though their thoroughness was hidden behind the slow service.

:013 8:05:2 Also in Portland, they have the option to go through the body scanner or the metal detector with no pat down if it is cleared. I felt punished in Oakland's Airport for opting out of the body scanner. Not only did I have to wait in a separate line, I was expected to be pat down regardless as to whether or not the metal detector went off or not (it didn't in my case). I waited 15 minutes out of sight of my valuables and personal items including my boarding pass, ID and laptop for someone to become 'available' to pat me down. When I asked agents around me if I could watch my stuff or how long it would be, they told me too bad -- I have to wait and they walked away. Meanwhile, agents were chatting with each other. When I finally did get through the metal detector, I was thoroughly pat down. I felt physically violated.

I do not feel safer knowing that this is a requirement of the Oakland airport. I would rather spend more money flying out of other local airports than dealing with being treated like I am being punished for not going through the body scanner.

Hello.

I always "opt out" of going through the metal detectors at airport screening, and generally have had no problems with the pat-down, etc. However, on occasion, I have been queried by the TSA agent about why I am opting out, and sometimes that agent has challenged me about my concerns regarding the health hazards of the machines. On a recent trip out of Boston, an agent told me that TSA personnel are not supposed to query passengers in that way, and certainly not make them feel in any way defensive about opting out. Indeed, he instructed me to see a TSA supervisor if any agent did act in that manner in the future. This evening, my wife flew out of Boston, was queried by an agent when she requested to opt on, and when she reported her concerns to a supervisor, he rudely told her the agents could ask whatever they wish.

For my own records, for future travel, can you tell me just what the TSA policy is on opting out, and, if it is in writing, where I could find it?

Thank you very much for your help.

Caller said that his 13 year old daughter traveled alone on Sunday and she went through the full body scan. Caller said that after the body scan that she was pulled aside for a patdown. Caller that you did on or the other. He wanted to know what she was patted down. He said that same thing happened to his nephew and this is questionable.

Resolution:

TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

Caller and his wife signed up for speedy or Global Entry. His wife has a pacemaker and is a diabetic. He says she practically strip her down for screening. He says he heard about pre screening while waiting on the phone. He wants to know if his wife has to be screened like that everytime?

Told caller

I explained to him for screening we have 3 means. We have the AIT, WTMD and the patdown. If his wife has a pacemaker she probably opts out and she would receive a patdown for screening. If she want able to use the technology for screening they will have to give her a patdown for her screening.

I explained what the expedited screening was,
Expedited screening could include no longer removing the following items:

:013 3:04:3

Shoes
3-1-1 compliant bag from carry-on Laptop from bag
Light outerwear jacket
Belt

I told him this probably would not help his wife because this screening also includes using the technology for screening, she would still have to have a patdown for screening.

I explained to him we can never assume any one passenger was fine to go through without screening, we have to make sure everyone on the plane was safe to travel.

Response Details: I explained that the information on our website is current and up to date.

I advised that his written complaint should be sent to TSA's Disability Branch, Disability and Multicultural Division.

I advised that I would email information on how to file a complaint in writing that would include the address to submit his complaint.

I advised that I did not have specific information on what his rights are under the American With Disabilities Act are, and advised that I would refer this inquiry to the Disability Branch as well.

He may be contacted by phone.

The caller indicated that he would prefer to be contacted via email rather than by phone.

1013 3:14:3

Incident Details: The caller indicated that he visited our webpage prior to traveling regarding medical conditions and disabilities, particularly in regard to passengers who cannot remove his shoes.

He indicated that the information indicates that passengers who can't remove shoes should inform TSO before screening begins of this and can still be screened via the AIT, WTMD, or a thorough pat down.

He indicated that generally when he travels he advises that he cannot remove his shoes and passes through screening without being required to remove them. The shoes are often swabbed.

He traveled from BOS and SAN and at both checkpoints he was required to remove his shoes. TSO directed him to go through the AIT screening with his shoes on. He was then permitted to sit while he removed his shoes. His shoes were placed in a bin and went through xray screening.

TSOs at both airports advised that if he did not go through this procedure he would not be permitted to enter the checkpoint and be screened.

The caller asked what is different this year in regard to the screening procedure. He indicated that he makes this trip every year and has done so for the past ten years.

He asked when there was a change in policy and what rights he has under the American with Disabilities Act.

The caller asked where the written complaint would be sent and requested that the information on how to submit a complaint in writing be emailed.

Dear TSA Agents:

Today, at the Wichita Falls airport, I had the sad experience that I was (what they called randomly selected) selected for a second security check. I know that seems normal, but when it is the 4th consecutive time, it becomes weird and it looks like profiling. Today, 8/8/13 was my fourth time from my last fourth trips out of SPS-Wichita Falls Municipal Airport that I was randomly selected for a check. I proceeded like I normally do in these checks, but I first asked the TSA agent why I was being selected? and I was told sarcastically that I can ask that to the metal detector machine. I told him and to another one that this is very weird that I am always selected when going through this security check point, but I have never had any problems in any other airports. I will like to request a review of the process in this airport. I understand that one person complaint is not enough to make it valid or important, but I will be sending this email to the blogs and social media as well to some news channels. I am just tired that in this small airport, the agents think in profiling people because they color and race. This is very disgusting and insulting. You need to teach them to be respectful of the integrity of others.

I sent the following inquiry last night (just below) seeking information on TSA policy. I received a response (the following document below), which I much appreciate, but which did not answer the main question I asked. That questions is: first, what is the policy regarding what TSA agents can say/do when a traveler "opts out" (i.e., can they query that traveler about why they are opting out, forcing them to defend that traveler's request -- the agent I talked to in Boston this past July 18 [JetBlue security, c. 8:00 AM] was adamant that the TSA should not ask the traveler why he/she was opting out, and should in no way make that traveler feel defensive about the request); and, second, is that policy in writing? As I said, my wife had a bad experience last night in Boston -- including, by the way, with the supervisor to whom she complained! -- and I would like to know my rights the next time I travel.

Thank you.

My original email, sent last night, August 7,:

Hello.

013 4:03:4 I always "opt out" of going through the metal detectors at airport screening, and generally have had no problems with the pat-down, etc. However, on occasion, I have been queried by the TSA agent about why I am opting out, and sometimes that agent has challenged me about my concerns regarding the health hazards of the machines. On a recent trip out of Boston, an agent told me that TSA personnel are not supposed to query passengers in that way, and certainly not make them feel in any way defensive about opting out. Indeed, he instructed me to see a TSA supervisor if any agent did act in that manner in the future. This evening, my wife flew out of Boston, was queried by an agent when she requested to opt on, and when she reported her concerns to a supervisor, he rudely told her the agents could ask whatever they wish.

For my own records, for future travel, can you tell me just what the TSA policy is on opting out, and, if it is in writing, where I could find it?

Thank you very much for your help.

Your response, received today, August 8:

Thank you for your e-mail regarding the rude behavior you experienced from a Transportation Security Officer (TSO).

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

I told the employee I could not go through the detector & she rudely asked me if I was "opting out" & that they were short staffed & I would have to wait. In the meantime all of my luggage had been scanned including my work computer & she refused to move it to a more safe location. Everytime I asked her why it was taking so long she just said "you opted out", as if I really had a choice! It took at least 15 minutes for someone to come & do the pat down, to me this does NOT seem like there is really an option to not use the screening machines! I am flying again today from a smaller airport & I am anticipating getting the same treatment, if TSA wants to say that every passenger has a choice whether to use the machines or not than I expect that the choice should be honored in a timely & courteous manner!

TSA appears to have abandoned its responsibility to make sure we have no explosives on commercial flights. At peak traffic times I found that TSA is shutting the lines to the scanner and sending people through the magnetic machines because it is faster. Dummy me, I thought that the purpose of the scanners was to make flying safer because the scanners could tell if we had a shoe or underwear bomber with explosives trying to get on the flight.

The following story explains how I found this out.

I flew to St. Louis, Mo. in February to do a commercial. When I was returning I was at Lambert Field and waiting to go through the scanners when I was told that the scanner wasn't working and that I had to go through the old metal detector. I refused to because I have 3 metal joints and I always set them to ringing. I told the attendant that I wasn't going to be patted down when there was a perfectly good scanner setting there.

And then I asked what was wrong with the scanners. Nothing I was told. It is too slow when there is a lot of travelers and just use the old style metal detectors. I didn't think too much about it until the second incident in Atlanta. But back to St. Louis.

The attendant took me to the rear after I asked to speak with a supervisor. I sat on a table and smiled at all of the passengers going by who were cleared to their gates. When the third supervisor came, she asked how long it would be until my flight. It was about 1 PM and my flight was at 5:30. So she went to get the 4th level of supervisor.

At the 5th level I was finally told that I could go through the scanner but woe to me if there was a problem because I would still be patted down. I cleared and was on my way.

2013 1:09:5 Fast forward to July and we are going to London and departing from Atlanta. I got the same song and dance but my flight was in an hour so I had no choice but to submit to a pat down. While being patted down, I ask to see his supervisor. The supervisor came over and admitted that the rules came from "above" and when they were busy, they would shut down the scanners and use the old methods.

What was the point of spending billions for scanners if we aren't going to use them? Does TSC do a profiling behind the scenes or are they just praying that no one with explosives wants to board at that time?

Oh, TSA did have a bomb sniffing dog working. It was in the basement where we picked up our bags after clearing customs on the way home. I have a picture of the 85 year old lady whose bags were being checked the TSA officer. Really, she just got off of the plane and now you are sniffing her bags?

If doesn't make me feel good to know that no one on the plane went through a scanner. Why did we waste the money?

Greer, SC 29651

Hello!

6 of August 2013 my family (my wife, our 4 years disabled daughter, our 2 month son and me) were in the airport of Miami. We had a flight to Moscow (SU111, Aeroflot) from gate F17. On the security control it was a very huge queue because only one line was open and passengers were minimum for two flights. We have spent about 40-50 minutes waiting for control (from 4:00 pm till 4:50 pm). There were no exceptions for passengers with small kids or anybody else. So we quietly were waiting our turn.

When we finally reached a control people from ICA asked to give pushchair of my 4 years disabled daughter for inspection. I gave it to (b)(6) take a daughter into my hands (because she can not stay or walk) and have gone to transporter for handbags and metal detector. There we spent several minutes passing all these devices.

After metal detector I have come to (b)(6) still with my daughter on my hands) asking for our pushchair because our pushchair was standing near (b)(6) But he refused. Because he had suddenly remembered that he need to gave it to a special control. So when we were passing metal detector and transporter for previous several minutes he was staying doing nothing and even forgot to give our pushchair for special control.

2013 9:14:5 As it was rather heavy to hold my daughter I asked (b)(6) to help us with our handbags and shoes on transporter. We needed them to take on and not to block the work of transporter. (b)(6) also refused to help us. He continued to stay and doing nothing. He was not involved into control of somebody. He was just staying. And he even didn't call anybody to help us.

So I was slaving to hold my daughter next several minutes, transporter were blocked with our handbags and shoes. a huge queue was waiting to pass the control, but (b)(6) was staying idle and didn't help us and didn't ask anybody else to help.

During 3,5 monthes spent in Miami we never saw such indifferent, arrogant, rude, ruthless and arrogant attitude to us. I was in several other government and local authorities like Department of Highway Safety & Motor Vehicles, Florida Department of Health and others. And nowhere we have met such an awful attitude.

I can understand that (b)(6) may be doesn't like tourists and kids at all. But why then he is working on the border with tourists. May be he will fill himself better like a security in some prison with murders and rapists?

Hope for you understanding.

I recently received a pat down when my carry on luggage triggered an alarm. I had already gone through a metal detector without triggering the alarm. Are the rules that I receive a pat down rather than just my luggage being searched? The agent only said that this was how they resolved any luggage alarms. However, I don't see anything that says a person receives a pat down because of a carry on alarm. Looking for clarification.

Caller has a complaint regarding Hilo Airport. She forgot to take her 3-1-1 bag out of her carry on. She had a bag that contained liquid medication for her kids in sealed bottles. Security noticed the bag inside her carry on so they ran it through the equipment again. As the Officer asked her to come over to the station she asked her about the medication. The Officer was looking inside the bag. The Officer asked the passenger to open the bottles of medication and she told the Officer she would rather she not open the sealed bottles. The officer asked her to stand while she patted her down. When she asked the Officer about why she was being patted down, the officer replied it was due to not wanting the bottles of medication to be opened.

Declared liquid medications and other liquids for disabilities and medical conditions must be kept separate from all other property submitted for x-ray screening. It is important for those to be declared because of the LGA rule.

She stated it is difficult to remember everything and she did forget to declare her liquids.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

2013 9:53:2 I explained because she did not declare her LGA s she had additional screening.

She was not satisfied with the explanation given.

They ran the bag through twice so she does not know why more was needed. After she got upset with the Officer, the Officer claimed she had told her she could open the medication or have a patdown.

Her name was Officer (b)(6). She thinks the Officer was having a bad day. She was at the checkpoint 8-T1-13 at Hilo at 6 PM at Terminal (She does not know) At Gate 6. She was going to fly Hawaiian Flight #381 bound for Honolulu.

She asked me for the CSM number. Told I do not have that available for her but she can obtain it from the IVR but if she is going to call direct we should not refer this over. Told her I will forward it to the CSM.

She stated to repeat herself again (she had several times already). Told her we have this covered unless she has a new question.

Thank you for that information, but it is not answering my specific question. I went through the body scanner at Detroit Metro Airport and after I stepped out of the body scanner the TSA officer asked me to stand there for a second because she had to examine my hair. Now I and a African American woman with short dred locks. Now my question is, is it "standard procedure" for some one to have to get their hair examined when there was no type on metal clips, bobby pins etc. in their hair. I hope that I can get a better response because I don't want to have to take legal actions.

Thank you

I was traveling out of Ft Myers last week and I have a question about screening. I was traveling with my 9 yr old son and wife. My son and I went through the metal detector. My very attractive wife was sent through the scanner. There was no reason for this other than the thrills of the man looking at the monitor. I actually overheard the female "officer" standing next to him say "ya liked that one". I started to tell her to opt out but she would then have been groped for 30 min. I would like something to be done about this. I have yet decided what I can do myself but this is ridiculous. The tsa goes against our rights on many fronts but sexual enjoyment goes into a whole new direction.

Caller said that he is a founding member of homeland security. He has a bilateral hip replacement. He said that every time he flies he receives additional screening. He screening is because his metal implants set off the alarm. He wanted information on filing for TRIP. He thought that would stop the secondary screening. He said that he has a TWIC card. He said that the notification card is a waste of taxpayer money. He said that the additional screening because of the hip replacement is harassment.

I gave the following information: The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.
- difficulty printing a boarding pass at home or at the kiosk.

If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. This card can be found at http://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/disability_notification_cards.pdf.

2013 8:06: C Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a thorough patdown.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

- The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.
- The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.
- A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.
- The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.
- A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

In addition to the patdown, TSA may use technology to test for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, the passenger will have to undergo additional screening. A companion, assistant, or family member may accompany a passenger to assist him or her during any private or public screening. After providing this assistance, the companion, assistant, or family member will need to be rescreened. If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor while at the checkpoint. I told him that he can ask for a passenger support specialist at the checkpoint if he needs assistance. Disability Description: Caller stated she had a complaint about the screening process at an airport.

Response Details: Advised caller I would send to the CSM at FLL airport for review.

Called the passenger to ask if she felt this was a failure to accommodate or discrimination.

2013 10:17: C Caller stated she felt like it was a failure to accommodate. Advised caller I would send her some information through to her email address about the incident and she would need to send the complaint in writing about the incident.

Incident Details: Caller stated she was flying with her disabled son who is in a wheelchair from FLL to PHL on Southwest Airlines. Caller stated she went through the screening at the airport and she advised the screener that her son couldnt walk unless he had assistance through the checkpoint. Caller stated the TSO screener made her son get out of the wheelchair with a cane to go through the WTMD and when her son got up he fell to the ground. Caller stated when her son fell to the ground the screeners was nice and then he was screened while he was in the wheelchair. Caller stated the screeners were rude and unprofessional at the checkpoint but she didnt get their names. Caller stated she wanted to make a complaint about the screening process.

All the bins, about 3 of them, crashed together and fell to the floor.
Her glasses were broken and she needs them to see and drive. She stated they look like a truck ran over them.
She is sure if she tried to get them fixed at an eyeglass center they would laugh at her.
Her watch face was cracked also. So far her cell phone seems to be working.

She did talk with a supervisor and he took photos of her glasses and other items.

She stated she is going to have to order glasses from Rochester and she does not want to pay for them.
She wanted me do to something today.

Told her I am very sorry that happened
I can order a claim form.
That must be processed through the Claims Management Branch.

She said her son wants to know if she files will TSA reimburse her
Told her I could not speculate on the outcome of a claim.

She stated the Officer at the checkpoint gave her a form and took photos. He could not believe her glasses got so damaged.

She stated the claim form he have has McNeal Security and it is 2 pages.

Told her I am sorry, That airport has a private contractor and she would need to use the form provided to file to that company.
She would not use the TSA standard form.
I would suggest she copy anything she sends off.

Caller told me she was putting her son on the line. Her son (b)(6) said he is a pilot and he knows there has to be a way to contact McNeal Security.
He tried calling the phone # off the internet.
The form itself did not have a phone # on it. It only had an address to send the claim to.

He had to go so he put caller back on. She is in Chicago and said she is not doing without her glasses for a week and wants something done about it today.

Told her the best thing she can do is file the form she was given.

Information Request: Last time she could not see her stuff while she has the patdown. She does not want someone having her bag because her ID is in it and her camera.

Last time the wheelchair attendant had her stuff but she does not like not being able to watch it.

Nothing was missing but she likes to watch her things.

She walks at screening but it is hard for her to not do the wheelchair assist with all that walking. She thought of not getting a wheelchair assist this time but thought why should I suffer.

2013 12:43: Response Details: Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to reasonably ensure that carry-on items, including disability-related devices and aids, are kept within a passenger's line-of-sight when a passenger is required to undergo additional screening. When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening, TSOs have been trained to maintain control and sight of the passenger's items and to ensure that the passenger is reunited with his or her property once it clears x-ray screening.

I asked if she went to a room for a private patdown.

She stated she had it in the public area.

Told her since last time the wheelchair attendant collected her things trying to be helpful it may be she could just ask them not to do that.

TSA will watch her belongings when she cannot see them.

She began to tell me nobody likes the TSA and the liquid rule is ridiculous. She sees no point in it.

I asked if she had a question.

The caller flew from LEX yesterday, and he is pilot on ASJ express. He stated that he filed a complaint regarding the sensitive WTMD at LEX. He stated that he removed his shoes, watch, personal items, and he had the patdown, with nothing found. He stated that he feels as if his civil rights violated by the patdown and the system, and they ran their hands up his crotch and all over his body. He stated that he is a known traveler, pilot, and he has a CrewPASS. He stated that two other crewmembers went through with no issue. He stated that he filed a complaint at the airport and he felt as if it would fall on deaf ears. He stated that the flight was delayed because of the additional screening.

We understand and regret the discomfort and inconvenience passengers may experience as a result of patdown procedures. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat, and the use of patdowns provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint.

Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

Flight-deck crewmembers who use this program are subject to random screening, observation by behavior detection officers, and TSA's additional layers of security.

I explained that we can forward his complaint to the CSM at LEX for review.

2013 1:32:2 The caller's flight details are as follow:

Departing Airport: LEX
Destination Airport: ATL
Airline: Xjet airline (DELTA)
Flight Number and Time: 5364 @ 6:00 am
Terminal: B
Gate: B4
Date and Time: August 13th, 2013 @ 5:15 am

I explained that no matter his complaint or his credentials, there is no way to guarantee that he will not be subjected to additional screening.

The caller stated that her son traveled from Tokyo to Kennedy Airport and that he has been subjected to a patdown and ETD and wanted to know why he was selected for this. The caller stated that her son had been selected in advance as the boarding pass had SSSS printed on it and wanted to know what it meant. The caller wanted to know why he was selected and if he was on a federal watch list. The caller did not know if the officers had been professional or not.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include random selection, or alarm resolution. TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

2013 2:01:2 The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation.

TSA can neither confirm nor deny whether an individual is on a Federal Watch List because this information is derived from classified and sensitive law enforcement and intelligence information. This protects the operational counterterrorism and intelligence collection objectives of the Federal government as well as the personal safety of those involved in counterterrorism investigations. Federal Watch Lists remain effective tools in the government's counterterrorism and transportation security efforts because their contents are not disclosed.

TSA Contact Center

Caller said he had items stolen from him at a checkpoint. Caller said he had a small razor phone stolen from him. This happened in SFO. Caller said he filed a claim and got paid for the phone. Caller said he has a $500 Ipod and he does not want to lose this when he travels to Hong Kong. Caller asked if he can ask for a supervisor to screen his IPOD so it does not come up missing. Caller said he wants to avoid having his IPOD stolen. Caller asked if he can bring a BIC razor and his toothpaste and toothbrush.

I told the caller SFO is screened by private contractors.

2013 5:26:1 Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a thorough patdown.

There are two primary ways to be considered eligible for TSA Pre[®]2713™: travelers may be invited by a participating airline, or they may choose to enroll with one of U.S. Customs and Border Protection's (CBP) Trusted Traveler programs. Frequent flyers and other travelers who did not receive an invitation and would like to participate or would like to be considered eligible for TSA Pre[®]2713™ benefits on all participating airlines should apply for membership with one of CBP's Trusted Traveler programs. Individuals who apply and are cleared for enrollment in one of CBP's eligible Trusted Traveler programs are automatically qualified to participate in TSA Pre[®]2713™ when flying on a participating airline at a participating airport.

I told the caller he can bring his toothpaste if it is 3.4 ounces or smaller.

Response Details: I advised the caller that if a passenger has an internal medical device, such as a pacemaker, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

The AIT is not a metal detector, however it does create a 3D image of the body, highlighting any foreign items on the body.

I explained that if a passenger is not able to use the WTMD, they would be directed to the AIT. They can opt out of the AIT if preferred.

I explained that I can forward this information to the CSM at JFK, and to a disability specialist.

TSA Cares is a helpline to assist travelers with disabilities and medical conditions. Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at 1-855-787-2227 prior to traveling with questions about screening policies, procedures and what to expect at the security checkpoint. TSA Cares serves as an additional, dedicated resource specifically for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions or other circumstances or their loved ones who want to prepare for the screening process prior to flying.

2013 5:27:1 The hours of operation for the TSA Cares helpline are Monday through Friday 8 a.m. - 11 p.m. EST and weekends and Holidays 9 a.m. - 8 p.m. EST. They can call 72 hours in advance of the flight for assistance and information that may be needed.

I advised the caller that if they feel that they need any assistance with the screening process, they can request a PSS from the Travel Document checker, and they can assist them through the screening procedures.

Email sent.

Incident Details: The caller called about 5 minute ago regarding a complaint. She stated that her elderly parents flew from JFK. She stated that he was forced to use the AIT and he has a pacemaker. She stated that he has a doctors note that states that he cannot be screened using a metal detector. She asked what the AIT is exactly. She stated that this is disrespectful. She stated that they had an airline wheelchair and attendant.

She stated that she feels as if this was a customer service issue, however they did not have any concern for his medical condition, or the documentation submitted. She stated that this is a failure to accommodate his medical condition.

She stated that he has had the pacemaker for a short time and they are not aware of our technologies, and she is concerned for him.

Airport Departing: JFK

Destination SJU

Airline: Jetblue

He has a titanium metal implant in his knee.

He is asthmatic as well and takes medication for that.

Information Request: He was advised to call 72 hours in advance of his flight. He has requested a wheelchair at the airport as walking a long distance and standing in a long line is difficult.

The caller asked if the new rule allows passengers who are 75 to leave shoes on. He asked if he had to remove his belt.

Response Details: I advised that TSOs may check their gloves for explosive material and this is a standard part of screening. I explained that passengers are chosen at random for additional screening. Additional screening, including a patdown, is required to clear alarms and anomalies.

I advised that TSA has phased out the use of hand wands.

72 hour advance notification is only required if the passenger is requesting a specific assistance at the TSA checkpoint. The caller indicated that he did not want to request such assistance.

2013 7:04:2

I advised that many passengers with metal implants prefer to be screened by AIT. Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown.

Passengers who appear to be 75 years of age and older are permitted to leave shoes on. TSA recommends that belts be removed and placed in a bin before passing through the WTMD or AIT to reduce the need of an alarm.

Incident Details: He indicated that the last two times that he went through security at LAX, the WTMD alarmed and he received a patdown.

The TSO walked over to his desk and removed his gloves. The TSO explained that he had to check for gunpowder residue. The TSO advised that the radar doesn't pick it up. The caller indicated that he is elderly and not a threat. He also expressed concern that other passengers did not receive additional screening of this nature and could have had gunpowder residue on them. He indicated that many passengers went through the checkpoint without receiving a patdown.

The caller indicated that this happened last year.

He indicated that he has complained to people at LAX.

The caller asked why can't they use the wand.

What happened? Describe your complaint. Give as much detail about your experience as possible, including the name of the air carrier, if this occurred at an airport.

I was at the TSA screening checkpoint at Jacksonville International Airport (KJAX) on August 09, 2013, to catch a Southwest flight, when at approximately 6:25 PM, I opted out of the body scanner screening option. I asked if I could go through the metal detector instead of the body scanner and was told that I could either go through the body scanner or receive a pat-down. Even with a DoD ID (I am active duty Navy), I was told, the metal detector alone was not an option. I witnessed a Sailor in uniform and several families walk through the metal detector with no body scanner and no pat-down. I was told that these two groups were exempt from the body scanner.

I was taken to a pat-down site a few minutes later and given the pat-down instructions. The agent began his pat-down, then stopped when he was about to pat-down the lower, front section of my body. He informed me that he would be touching sensitive areas. I requested that the agent not touch my genitals. At this time, the agent called his supervisor.

The supervisor came over and went back over the pat-down instructions with me.

I assured him that I understood the instructions, just did not want my genitals touched. After a little bit of back and forth, I found myself surrounded by TSA agents and a police officer. I explained that all I wanted was for my genitals to be left untouched during the pat-down process. The supervisor could not assure me that my genitals would not be touched during the screening. I asked the supervisor if he would like his genitals touched by strangers, at which point I was threatened by the police officer to comply with the search, or gather my belongings, leave the airport and miss my flight. I then gave in to the intimidation and told the supervisor to conduct his search. He patted me down with much firmer hands than the previous agent, touching my genitals in the process. After the search, I gathered my belongings, and continued on my way.

Is there any other information you want us to know about or consider?

Disability Description: Caller has metal implants.

Information Request: She said that every time she flies she is practically raped by the TSO s because she alarms the metal detector. She wants to know if there is another alternative because she doe not want to be felt up.

I asked her if she is referring to a patdown and she stated that (if that s the terminology you want to use).

She said that they do not have a AIT at Portland, Maine, so every time she alarms.

Response Details: I told the caller that many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). The AIT will reduce the chances of having a patdown but not eliminate the chances of a patdown.

I told her that if there is no AIT then she can use the metal detector and if there are alarms then they would have to do a patdown. TSO s are trained to be courteous and respectful during this process and they should explain what they are doing in the process.

I told her that if she gives us her itinerary within 72 hours of her flight then we can send a request for assistance for her at the checkpoint. Also she may ask for a PSS while at the checkpoint if she needs assistance.

Caller did not have her flight information yet.
She also did not want email.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I just went through a busy security line at Midway Airport in Chicago. While nothing unusual happened to me personally during the check. I feel compelled to report some unnecessarily rude behavior that was exhibited by a "lead officer" toward the woman in front of me. TSA Officer (b)(6) (as his name tag read) told this woman not to come through the open metal detector line, but instead to stay in the longer full-body scan line. She did so. After a moment, a female TSA officer told the same woman that she could now go through the metal detector. As the woman started to follow that direction, (b)(6) yelled at her to stop. She said "sorry, she told me to go," referencing the officer whose direction she was dutifully following, to which Patterson snapped, in an extremely rude, condescending, and angry tone "AND NOW I'M TELLING YOU NOT TO." It may seem like a minor incident, but it was really uncalled for conduct, especially inexcusable from a TSA employee whose name badge denoted him as a "Lead Officer." This woman was perfectly polite, was just doing what she was told by a uniformed officer, and did nothing to deserve to be yelled at. TSA is supposed to make us safer, not to make the airport feel like a police

I don't know her name, but she was a middle aged white woman. I choose to "Opt Out" of the screening and be patted down. The female TSA employee that I spoke to asked me to walk around to the far side of the security checkpoint, where I would not be able to see my belongings come out of the x-ray machine, in order to bypass the scanner and metal detector, even though there was a gate right in front of me that I could have walked through and be able to watch my belongings. I responded by saying I'd like to keep an eye on my things the whole time. She gave me attitude, made me wait, which I didn't mind, while she let a family walk through the gate right in front of me first. I was able to watch my belongings come out of the x-ray machine, but only after I asked and asserted my rights.

Once I was standing on the yellow footprints. She went through the rehearsed speech about the procedures of the pat down, which I have heard many times, since I always opt out and travel frequently for work. After the speech, she put on gloves and proceeded with the pat down and told me her opinion in a way that was bullying about why I don't need to be afraid of the scanning machine and I should just go ahead and go through the machine instead of opting out. I did not ask for her opinion nor did I appreciate being scolded while in a very vulnerable position of being pat down in public. It is my right to be able to opt out and hearing a TSA employee talk down to me about my rights is unacceptable.

I am a cancer survivor and the reason I do not go through the scanning machine is because my doctor's orders because she doesn't believe that the machines have been tested enough to know if their effects could bring my cancer back. I told this to the woman who then continued to tell me her opinion and said that my doctor was incorrect.

I do not mind taking the extra time to be pat down to avoid cancer again and have always followed directions of the TSA employees during this process, but I do mind being told their personal opinions. It is none of her business why I choose to opt out and it was unprofessional for her to try to tell me otherwise.

TSA,

I left KCI airport on Tuesday Aug 13, with about $3 to $4 thousand in my pocket and was questioned about the amount that

I was carrying. The money was mostly brand new from the bank $100 bills all put together in the left pocket of my jeans. Once I walked through metal detector a female TSA employee asked whats in my pocket and with no hesitation I pulled out my money to show her thats the only object in my pocket. She demanded that I hand her my money which I thought was strange but I did because I didn't know what else to do. She proceeded to go through my money which got me upset and I questioned what she was doing. I was told that quote you guys can't have a lot of money going on plane or we will take it. Now 1st of all I'm a black male in my 30s, a husband, father and owner of 2 businesses and My wife has a degree in finance and makes good money. Their is no reason for me to be questioned or embarrassed for having my money in my pocket, what right does TSA have to do that? I don't want to turn this into an racial incident but upon further research I'm starting to see minorities are getting profiled when having cash on them, wow didn't know that to be a crime in this country. So I'm writing and documenting this letter in case this event happens again in the future I can go to my Congressman, Senator and perhaps the NAACP. Now whats funny is the only thing on your website that mentions currency say's $10,000 or over must be declared to customs on international flights. So if their is a limit on currency on a flight it is your obligation to let the traveler know this ahead of time instead of your TSA employees embarrassing minorities.

Comment : I don't feel the full body scan is safe and feel it is embarrassing to be scanned. At the DFW airport, I opted to do the body search rather than the body scan and was treated very rudely by the security officers.

2013 3:12: #1 I would like a list be sent to me of what airports use the full body scan and I will not travel to those areas.

#2 If a person does not want to be subjected to the full body scan, they should be allowed to go through the metal detector or at the very least be treated in a professional, considerate manner by your employees for the body search. Your Dallas Ft Worth employees need more training on how to treat the airlines customers.

Caller: said his 2 yr old son just went through the Detroit Metro Airport checkpoint today with his mom and was separated from her during his screening process. He wants to file a formal complaint. He would not give his last name nor his email address. He said his job was in the legal field but he did not say he was an attorney.

Response: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is undertaking efforts to enhance security and focus its resources by applying new risk-based, intelligence driven screening procedures and enhancing its use of technology, while also improving the passenger experience at security checkpoints.

2013 6:40: As part of this effort TSA is implementing a program to revise screening procedures for passengers 12 years old and younger. The new screening procedures include permitting multiple passes through the metal detector and advanced imaging technology to clear any alarms as well as the greater use of explosives trace detection. TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—although not eliminate—the need for a physical patdown for children that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms.

In addition, passengers 12 years old and younger will be allowed to leave their shoes on. However, children may be required to remove their shoes and could still undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means. Transportation Security Officers use their discretion based on how old a child appears.

TSA continues to incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport and no individual will be guaranteed expedited screening. Airport security checkpoints are only one part of a multi-layered system for aviation security. Also advised him would send this to the customer support manager at that airport.

To whom it may concern:

I am a parent who was recently picking up my son from a family summer visit from United Airlines at LAX. I can't begin to tell you first of all, in all my travels, and all the times I've been to the airport, how professional and courteous most everyone has always been. I have had a lot of experience or enough to know when things are done well, necessary (all be it frustrating at times) for our safety and security, and even when some employees go above and beyond to listen and be helpful to get you through the process or help you make your flight on time. I will take this opportunity, first and foremost to all of those employees and your management for placing those people in the right positions and for giving the right personnel the training and tools to take on the responsibility of utilizing the authority to protect and our Nation's security from any harm.

2013 9:22: Now, with that said, I would like a formal inquiry into the actions of a specific employee on the evening of August 11th at approximately p.m. PST. My mother and I went through security to get passes and then through the routine security scan etc...My mother, who has an artificial Hip replacement, knew she would register the metal detector and did which was not a problem. She went to the side and allowed the necessary search and cleared with no problem. The women was also very nice and courteous and professional. She asked to see her things and went through all the proper questions, used gloves and performed a routine pat down and search. I went just to support my mother and everything was fine. I was putting my things in the plastic container down on the counter and putting my belt back on. Keep in mind, I was not under suspect and my items had been cleared in the x-ray and routine examination. I returned upward to the plastic container and was blocked by two agents standing at the counter (space is limited there) I was patient and waited, then asked politely if I could get to my wallet and keys. During this time, my mother and I both realized that the male agent was rummaging through my personal items. He did respond and we heard him say "Oh this looks interesting, I haven't one like this...." "Did someone leave this here". I said, excuse me can get to my things. He seemed startled and put my wallet and items down and walked away. I expected him to ask to search my things or say I needed to search the items or something, but it was obvious that something else was happening when he just quickly walked away. Bewildered, I asked the women who searched my mother "Hey, what was that about." She shrugged her shoulders and said I don't know. I repeated myself and so the agent came back over. I asked why he was searching my items and not asking or answering me. So he stepped closer to me and said rudely, "Ok sir! Can you open this for me? When I flicked the lighter he said, "There, now you have to surrender it." On the way out to take it back to my car as one option that was given, he made a snide comment. I turned and asked to speak to his supervisor. On the way to the supervisor he stated another comment. "I wasn't going to make a big deal out of it and let you keep it (as in the terminal) until you had such an attitude". After speaking to the supervisor she was shocked at the comments he had made. Everyone refused to give me a name or ID # of any kind, but two people referred to him as (b)(6). This "agent" has short red hair and is about 5'8" 170#. After all the things I stated above, I don't even have a problem with them sending me to the car and am glad that there are precautions even if I'm not that aware of them. But, there are boundaries and you train your officers to handle situations in the same way with every person for a reason. In this instance, Burt did not follow protocol, did not inform anyone that he was searching personal affects and did not protect the airport according protocol because he was stopping me from taking a lighter onto terminal. He was abusing his authority with complete disregard for protocol and was caught in a dishonest act. This man should not have a badge, he should not be in the position he is in so that he just can abuse his authority with others. I've had contact with many TSA and airport personnel. He slipped through the cracks of your background checks. He is not the type of person who should be at that position. As I stated, I would like a formal inquiry and at the very least would like a punitive letter placed in his file for his next review. Furthermore, I would be happiest to come down to the TSA office and sit in room with a supervisor and an internal investigator to make him feel how he tries to make others feel when they just trying to comply and travel or get to their family members. Concerned citizen.

Most seriously,

Comment : In November I had spinal fusion surgery which resulted in a titanium implant in my lower spine, and I carry a card from my doctor stating that fact.

After waiting 45 minutes to check in at Jet Blue, I was in severe pain from standing so long. When I went to the security area, I saw an overhead sign saying, "Wheelchair Access, Medical, Families, Liquids." Believing that the TSA agent located here could be of assistance, I chose that line and waited for several families ahead of me to be processed.

Beyond the agent were two lines of passengers proceeding further to the actual screening area. The left line had perhaps 75 people in it; the right lane had about 10 wheelchair-bound passengers and those accompanying him.

After he checked my boarding pass, I offered the TSA agent my implant card. He had no interest whatsoever in looking at it. I clearly explained to the agent, a black man perhaps in his mid- to late 20s, that I was in extreme pain, and asked whether I could please be admitted to the right (wheelchair) lane, hoping to at least lessen the additional time I would have to stand. He adamantly refused. Incredulously I said to him, "It doesn't matter that I have this card from my doctor verifying what I'm telling you?" His response was, "I'm not a doctor," and again refused to assist me.

I made it clear I was not asking for anything more than permission to enter the shorter of the two lines. I had approached "his" line because the overhead sign indicated that people with medical needs -- as I do -- could reasonably expect the TSA agent stationed there to be responsive (or at least receptive) to such requests. And many of those accompanying passengers in wheelchairs were more fit than I am.

2013 9:23:0 At this point, another TSA officer (b)(6) [I may have misspelled his name] approached the area where I stood, while solving someone else's problem. When he was finished, I asked him if he could assist me. He took one look at my card, and not only allowed me access to the shorter line, but escorted me all the way to the metal detector and stood by me while I rid myself of shoes, wallet, belt, etc. in preparation for the scan. He then met me on the other side of the scanner unit and saw to it that I was alright.

As a 66-year-old retired school teacher, I don't ever remember wishing (or needing) to identify someone by his race, and I personally find it distasteful to do so, but regrettably in this case this and his age are the only two descriptors I have that might aid in identifying the agent who refused to assist me. If this gentleman is to be stationed again at the entrance inviting those with medical needs, I believe he needs significantly more training in how to deal with simple requests, more compassion and at least some sense that he is there to assist people as well as protect them.

I also wish to commend Officer (b)(6) for service far beyond anything I expected. His compassion and willingness to assist were commendable reflections of what I otherwise have always experienced from other TSA agents in my travels. I filled out a comment card on his behalf at Orlando, but again wish to thank him for his exceptional kindness and assistance.

My name is (b)(6)

I took Southwest Flight 1643 on Sat. Aug. 17th from Tampa Int'l Airport to Chicago Midway. One of my checked luggage pieces had a note inside that indicated that the TSA had inspected my bag at 2:53 pm (5:10 flight). I am not sure what made the TSA inspect the bag, HOWEVER, also in the bag was two pairs of cufflinks that were in plastic and safely put away. I believe they have been stolen. They were extremely meaningful to me and in my frantic search for them in every bag, have decided they have been stolen by the TSA.

I have called TSA only to get recordings, even called the Tampa customer service TSA line and left my name and phone number for a return call.

2013 1:05:1 Because I am disabled I had to go through the NON-metal detector, but it was not at that point that I had my luggage. It was my checked in luggage that had been inspected.

I expect a call (1-630-880-2270), to discuss how the cuff links mysterious disappeared. There is someone checking luggage that should not be.

Went through terminal 2 minneapolis, humphrey terminal, at 12:10 pm sunday august 18, 2013. Why would someone be subjected to a patdown after going through adv security screening? I have a hip replacement and travel often from both chicago airports and have never never never been patted down after this type screening. When going through basic metal detectors i have been wanded and briefly patteddown but today was subjected to a pat down which i consided to be abusive by a female tsa staffer, who also patted my breasts down even though i informed her of the hip.

In addition, my husband has been informed numerous times by tsa staff to hold cashand wallet, without any metal, above his head during these type screenings for security purposes and to not put cash etc on the conveyor line due to possible theft by travelers or even staff. Today the same female staffer took his wallet gave it to another staffer who then sent it through the conveyor line screener. Normally a staffer will open and inspect in front of him but this female staffer said you cant do what he did though he always does it in full view of tsa. While this took place his wallet was completely out of view.

It appears that the female staffer whose name i did not get due to her curt and abrusque nature requires some counseling and re-education. In addition what are the proper procedures? I have never complained about this whole inconvenient process until today. The female staffer appeared to be in her 60's, with salt and papper hair, pulled back, and she wore glasses.

Thank you

I just went through TSA and fortunately I was here ahead of time because there were 10 agents standing around talking to each other not working and only one agent checking IDs! Three more agents were sitting in a side room. The TSA only had one screening area open, while the line of passengers was backed up! The father, son, and grandmother in front of me all were allowed to go through the metal detector. I told the agent directing individuals into the machines that I had a diabetic sensor on my abdomen and he wouldn't let me go through the metal detector,he said it will be fine, and made me go though the radio wave detector. I went through and as I was leaving the screening area to get my bags on the x-ray machine, I was stopped by a female agent that said she had to pat down my left side. I said no it is a diabetic sensor and the agent I told before I went thru machine said it was fine. She did not listen to me and reached out and touched exactly where I told her not to! I said no Do not to touch it and after the fact said oh sorry did I move it? I said you need to listen to people and not touch a device that someone tells you not to! I am so sick of my civil rights being violated every week with your Gestapo staff!

2013 5:25:2 Then I proceed to the x-ray machine to get my carry-on luggage only to have my lead glasses (which I pull out of my work bag every week going through security as a courtesy) have 2 agents pull them out look at them. I told what they were prior to the agent opening up the box to examine the glasses. Then he says I have to run tests on all the boxes for explosives! Excuse me? I fly with these 3 wks/month for the past 3.5 yrs! So I had to wait why he put on exam gloves then slowly swiped each of side of the four boxes! Just because the idiots that work for your TSA don't know that lead glasses are for radiation protection in hospitals used by doctors and staff doesn't mean I have to go through this scrutiny in order for me to do MY job every week!

We arrived at JFK at 7:00 AM for 9:59 AM departure to Grand Cayman on JetBlue Flight # 765.

The baggage check-in lines were very long and not moving. When it was finally our turn at the counter, we were told by JetBlue personnel that it was too late to board the flight. We explained that we had been on the line since 7:00 AM.

After much discussion, we were lead by JetBlue personnel to the TSA security carryon and metal detector check point, at which point our luggage was put through the TSA scanners. At that point, TSA opened our three suitcases and removed over $500.00 worth of shampoo, soap, medicine, perfume, make-up and discarded it.

Had we known we were going to have to throw out all of our liquids that we packed in our LUGGAGE, not carry-ons, we would have insisted to take a different flight or have the baggage sent on a different flight. We attempted to discuss this with the TSA personnel but they were at the very least, uncooperative.

2013 6:15:1 As a result, we had to purchase all new shampoo, etc in Grand Cayman, where everything is twice as expensive as it is in the U.S., plus the USdollar/Cayman dollar exchange rate.

When we arrived in Grand Cayman, I filled out a report with JetBlue but never got a response.

I have sent a picture of the products.

It is ndiculous that we weren't informed by JetBlue or TSA that following JetBlue and TSA personnel's directions would result in over a $1,000.00 expense that we didn't budget for.

I look forward to your response.

Thank you,

Dear TSA staff,

As an archaeologist I travel frequently between the US and Kenya. I recently returned from Nairobi, departing last Thursday (more than a week after the fire destroyed the Arrivals area of Jomo Kenyatta International Airport or JKIA). I don't know who to report this to, but I want someone to know that the security screening for departing passengers at JKIA is not as rigorous as it used to be.

Before the fire, there was a good security chain like elsewhere in the world: You would have all bags screened as you entered the airport, check into your flight, pass into an immigration area for passport stamping, head up an escalator to the gate area, pass thru a rigorous gateside security check specific to your flight, where bags would be passed thru metal detectors before entering your walled-off gate area. There was no backtracking, no serious choke points, and no commingling of passengers on different flights after gateside security checks.

The Kenyans have clearly tried to get things back up to speed after the fire, but the new system has all three of these flaws.

Now you have all bags screened as you entered the airport (same), check in to your flight (same), pass into the immigration area for passport stamping (same). So far so good.

- 2013 6:15:2
1. But then you backtrack BACK from immigration to the main terminal, mixing with all the other passengers again (thus there is the opportunity to switch passports or identities with someone after "clearing" immigration).
 2. Everyone heads down to the end of the hall where there are two X-ray machines to handle a screening of carryon bags for ALL passengers together. Often two or three flights are departing near the same time so lines are long and backups are severe at this choke point. We were not asked to take our laptops out: I had a Macbook and two Netbooks in my bag, removed none of them, and passed without comment. Clearly the security staff are detecting SOME stuff, as the line of water bottles, swiss army knives, etc attested (the Chinese lady ahead of me was asked to find/remove the fork from her bag). But things are way too high pressure for the screeners to do an effective job.
 3. Once thru, passengers for all flights congregate together out on the tarmac before being called to their flight. It is not isolated like a gate area. OK, I'm sure there are some guards looking to make sure nobody enters/exits, but when you're talking about easily 2-300 people standing outside on tarmac AFTER DARK with, frankly, not much light, I find it easy to imagine circumstances in which this "isolation" could be violated. Plus people can have physical contact with people who are on different flights.

Again, I'm sure the Kenyans are doing the best they can. But I think TSA needs to know that basically any flight arriving in Europe, Dubai, etc from Nairobi has passengers that have not been optimally screened. Hopefully nothing will come of this, and hopefully more robust facilities will be put in place in Nairobi soon. But I just thought it would be good to "say something."

Thanks so much,

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): SJC on Saturday the 17th at around 18:15

2013 8:29:6

Comments: I arrived at SJC to pick up my unaccompanied minor. The airport was empty and I opted out of the AIT scanning.

The screener on duty required that I go through a pat down (even though a family after me just walked through the metal detector without the unnecessary extras) and then called for a "male assist". After waiting about 5 minutes (other staff were standing around chatting but otherwise not caring) a male staff member walked past me and it was mentioned to him that I was waiting for a male assist. He looked disdainfully at me but likewise ignored the staff member who was asking for assistance. Another staff member walked through the gate shortly after and the scene was repeated.

Finally, the older officer came back (after yet another request being called out) and took me aside for a full pat down.

My issues with this experience are:

- 1) I waited around for the better part of 15 minutes in an empty airport with staff just standing around.
- 2) If other parents can go through the metal detectors (they haven't lost their effectiveness, obviously), then why was I not able to without the extra, unnecessary, hassle to collect my unaccompanied minor?
- 3) Metal detectors work just fine (the rest of the world uses them and we still trust them enough to let parents and several other groups through) so why are we treating people who choose not to use the AIT like terrorists? Last I checked, we were meant to be The Land of the Free, not the land of the pointlessly paranoid.
- 4) The staff member who patted me down (I didn't get his name) was gruff and obviously incensed that anyone would opt out of AIT scanning.

Disability Description: The caller thinks she was publicly raped by TSA due to a hip replacement. She flew from GTF and was patted down.

Information Request: The caller states that she flew under (b)(6). The caller states that she is patted down ever time she flies from every place that does not have a body scanner. The caller states she cannot take it anymore. The caller states that her son is getting married September 14th in Buffalo and states she does not even want to go to his wedding because she has to be patted down. She would be flying from ANC to BUF and from BUF to ANC. The caller states that a female officer in GTF groped her breast and did not use the back of her hand. The caller states that it does not matter whether they use the back of their hands or not she is tired of being raped. The caller wants to know why TSA does not require every airport to have a body scanner to prevent patdowns. The caller wants someone to help her so she will not have to have a patdown. The caller wants to know if they screen all turbans.

Response Details: A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. The passenger can request a private screening at any time.

2013 2:22:1 I advised the caller that if she has medical documentation she could present it to the officers but she would still have to have a patdown if she sets off alarms.

I advised the caller that if she has concerns she could ask for a PSS.

I offered to email the caller the information but she declined.

I advised the caller that if turbans set off alarms they are patted down as well.

To Whom it May Concern:

I am writing to complain about how I was treated at Houston intercontinental on August 11th 2013. I am a United States Marine, and I was traveling under orders with a diplomatic passport. After waiting for my bags, I went through customs, dropped off my bags and got in line to go through security. A TSA agent was moving people through the line, and was being rude and unprofessional to many of the flyers. My flight was already boarding at the time, and I needed to make the flight. I asked the lady if I could be moved to the front of the line and she refused. I then stated I was a Marine and a diplomat, and I was traveling under orders, and she then told me that it wasn't her problem and I should have gotten there sooner. My carry on bags were then scanned an excess and I was put through the metal detector more than once. I had missed my flight by almost 20 minutes. I eventually made it to my destination with little time to spare. Luckily I reported in to an understanding Staff Sergeant who had similar experiences previously.

2013 6:08:2 I'm not one to complain about people doing their job, but the mission of the TSA isn't to belittle and delay travelers. Their job is to keep us safe. I request that action be taken because of this. Something must be done for diplomats and military members to move through security faster in order to make their flights.

Respectfully,

(b)(6)

Caller needs to speak to someone over TSA.

He has went through the cost and aggravations for PreCheck. He has a metal alarm everytime he travels. He has a bad knee and has to the the patdown. He wants them to wand the knee and look at his knee and see the scare. He says he has gone through the AIT before and has not had a problem. He wants them to put the AIT in the PreScreening line.

Told caller

I could give him an address for John Pistole, he did not want it. I had ask him if I could help him. I tried to explain to him about the procedure for screening with metal.

Anytime there was metal in the body, let the officer know where the metal was located in the body. If there was an alarm during screening the officer will give a patdown to clear any alarm. They are just verifying it was the metal in the body instead of something on the body.

The PreCheck was designed for passengers with disabilities but was for more of a bussiness traveler. Anytime you go through screening and there was an alarm they will have to give a patdown to clear an alarm. He can write Mr Pistole a letter or he can go on the blog to make his suggestion of having the AIT at the PreCheck locations.

2013 9:31:4 He kept saying a four letter word so I told him if he said that one more time I would turn over the call to a supervisor, he said he would be glad to speak to a supervisor. I turned the call over to Jeff B.

It may or may not cause an alarm, it would depend on several things like the kind of metal or even how deep it was in the body.

Escalated to a Suoervisor: I spoke with the caller and explained that there is simply no way for the TCC to put an AIT in the Precheck line. I offered him an alternative by having private screening when a patdown occurs. He was not happy with my suggestion. I offered him the HQ address he declined, I then told him that I simply do not have the authority to change the screening equipment in the checkpoints and that he needs to simply accept the procedures for what they are. security for his personal safety.

He felt irritated that he has been approved for Precheck but has to still have a patdown due to the WTMD being in the Precheck line. I apologized and told him that there simply wasn t anything that I could do for him here and ended the call. J Burke

I am writing to complain about Officer (b)(6) who I was fortunate enough to encounter on July 25th at Dulles International Airport as my family and I were travelling to Los Angeles, CA. On that day we were headed to LA to visit friends. As we have done on multiple occasions when traveling with our little girl who is now 3, we pack at least one box of organic milk for her and a few packs of organic fruit puree like the ones found here: (<http://www.diapers.com/p/horizon-organic-lowfat-chocolate-milk-8-oz-18-ct-153605> and <http://www.diapers.com/p/plum-organics-tots-mish-mash-blueberry-oats-quinoa-220598>). You will notice the fruit puree is 3.17 ounces.

I placed these along with some other food (cereal, various snacks, nuts) for her in a plastic bag and had that bag separate and apart from the rest of our carry-on luggage as we went through security. After going through the metal detectors, I looked up to see that Officer (b)(6) had opened the plastic bag and placed his hand inside plastic bag handling the items asking who owned the bag. I responded that I did and that it was food for our daughter. He asked me how old she was and I replied "she just turned three". He immediately responded with a very sarcastic "Oh so sorry. Looks like she just missed the cut off. I am going to have to confiscate these and throw them away". I let him know that I never heard of the cut-off for three year olds before and he said "Well look on our website". I asked for an exception given that she is just three and he said "Oh so I am supposed to make an exception just for your daughter? Sorry that is not going to happen. But you can wind all the way back through security and check it with your luggage" – this of course defeats the purpose of carrying on pureed fruit for my daughter. This was all in front of my daughter who was watching him throw her food in the garbage.

The pureed fruit packets are simply that – fruit and or vegetables pureed (like apple sauce). The size typically is a 3.17 ounce size and sometimes 3.5 ounce. Officer (b)(6) argued with me vehemently that this was juice and not "food". I told him to look at the packet, which he refused to do, which clearly state what it is pureed fruit and vegetables and not a liquid. He basically said "no" and "tough". I asked him what if I took a bite of an apple chewed it up and held it in my mouth - -would that be a liquid or a food and he said liquid. Seriously?

Sarcastically, I admit, I turned to my daughter and told her that while I have told her that all police are nice there are some that are not so nice. Officer (b)(6) in turn addressed my daughter directly and said "Your daddy does not want you to have this food and is letting me throw it away – that is the type of person he is". I told him to not ever speak to her.

I asked for a supervisor at that moment and he called for one. They looked uncomfortable about the whole situation but did not want to overrule Officer (b)(6). An officer took down Officer (b)(6) badge number and name and gave me the card to file and profusely apologized to me about his behavior. When I went back to gather the rest of my belongings, Officer (b)(6) asked me what he did wrong and I simply replied that I did not need to speak to him anymore.

Caller: said she filed a complaint with TSA, in April, asking for a copy of video footage and she said that we only sent 1 response from TSA that we got her request for video footage. She said harrassed by security officer at checkpoint at the metal detector and she said she was buzzed on purpose. She said it did not beep the first time but had to go back through the metal detector and it went off 3 times. She said she filed an online complaint through the homeland security website and in writing. She said she sent her complaint to Homeland Security in Arlington, Va. She did call TSA contact center originally but never got eid #. She said she talked to a John here at TSA contact center on February 20th. She said the incident happed at the Honolulu Airport. She said she had Victoria Secrets items with her such as lotions and was told oversized items by security officer. She said she was told to check it in or go back to airline. She said she refused to do this and they told her they would have to discard it. She said it happened at 6:30pm or 7pm, at the Honolulu Airport. She said she would pay for the video. She said Lori Hangai told her that disciplinary action was taken and gave her a phone # to (b)(6) who told her cant give her a copy of the video footage. She said she will look into this through Congress. She asked for a phone number for John Pistole.

2013 3:56:1 Response: I advised her we can not verify that she ever called in before today about this complaint and gave her the CSM phone # per supervisor (b)(6)

Caller flew from Boston Logan to Tampa. She said last August she flew from Boston to Florida her hair piece was missing from her purse. She said that her hairpiece is missing yet again. She said that this is the third time this similar type hairpiece has gone missing from her purse. She discovered it missing when she got home. She said that she was pulled aside for a search because she had an anomaly with the AIT. She said that leads her to another complaint.

She is always searched. Even when no one else is searched, she is. Another lady made the AIT buzz and the TSO just let her go. She said that she could not see her image on the AIT to see if there were boxes on it or not. JetBlues line was long and after 45 minutes a man left the line because he was so aggravated. Then they brought in more TSOs and the line started moving. She went through the AIT and had to have a patdown. She said that they wanded her down below and she does not know what that was all about but her whole body was searched. By the time she reached the gate the plane was late and everyone was mad, but she made the flight.

I apologized to the caller that she is missing an item from her purse. I told her that she may file a claim for the missing item and I told her she would receive the form in her postal address in about 7 to 10 days.

I also apologized that she was not happy with her screening experience. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Passengers may also be selected at random for additional screening.

I told her that if there are anomalies detected by the AIT they show up on a generic outline of the passenger. Without seeing the other passengers image we cannot assume why she was not patted down.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Caller flew PHX-ATL last night aboard Delta Airlines #1646. He is calling to report a rude screener who was working Terminal 3 last night at approximately 10:35PM. Caller indicates a heavy set African American female with curly hair named (b)(6) began berating passengers because one had failed to remove their laptop from its carrying case. She raised her voice and said, "You damn people don't know the rules after 11 years. There was also a younger female passenger whose bag was stuck on the conveyor and she berated going as far as to make the motion with her hands as if she was shooting her as she went through the metal detector. Caller indicates he is a frequent traveler and has never witnessed such behavior as he did from TSO (b)(6) last night. He wishes to file a complaint and requests someone review the video surveillance which clearly shows the shooting motion with her hand.

2013 3:41:4 Resolution:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

I appreciate your response to my email below but it does not address my concern. Before I sent my email I researched TSA policy and fully understand that Crew Members are not subject to the AIT machines. That issue was never in question. If you read the TSA policy though it does clearly state that all bodies, including crew members, must go through basic metal detectors and have bags checked in xray machines. In the incident I am reporting, a Flight Attendant bypassed both. She entered a active airport without anyone questioning her belongings or what could be in them. If this happens on a daily basis and is compounded overtime the possibility of a security breach surely increases.

TSA policy should be intact to protect the masses. I don't expect anything but the best and clearly that wasn't demonstrated.

Thank you,

(b)(6)

Subject: In Response to your inquiry.

Thank you for your e-mail regarding your concern about the Transportation Security Administration's (TSA) use of Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening for flight crew members at our Nation's airport security checkpoints.

TSA understands your concern regarding the effects the new screening procedures have had on flight crewmembers, including pilots and flight attendants. TSA Administrator John Pistole is committed to ensuring TSA operates as a risk-based, intelligence-driven Agency and launched several reviews of TSA policies soon after his confirmation to ensure all standards are met.

After evaluating alternative security protocols for flight crewmembers that would maintain our high security standards, TSA released modified screening procedures for eligible, on-duty flight crewmembers that do not require the use of AIT machines. In addition, flight crewmembers are subject to random screening, observation by behavior detection officers, and TSA's additional layers of security.

Comments: After I'd stepped through the metal detector, a TSA employee stopped me, placed his hands on my shoulders, left them there for an extended moment while he spoke to a colleague to the side, then asked me "Do you have anything in there" I presumed that he was reaching to pat a pocket, but he placed his hand to my crotch and jostled me there.

On reflection, I believe that this inappropriate action was deliberate on his part.

If you wish further description of some of the TSA group at that screening site, do not hesitate to contact me.

Comments: I was in line #1 for security at Midway in Chicago, the TSA agent asked my husband and myself how we got in the line, rather gruff. We told him that we were sent. Then I got to the full body scanner I had to wait for a Female which took 5 min, the kind older TSA agent in line two, was going to have me go through the metal detector but the agent in line 1 put his arms up and blocked me from moving. And loudly yelled that I must go through the full body scanner. I always choose to go through the full body scanner, so it was no big deal. What was a big deal was the rude and disrespectful way I was treated. I hate flying a it is, and I did not need to be yelled at on a Sunday morning when I did nothing wrong.

On or about 07:05AM, 21 August 2013, at Luis Munoz Marin International Airport, SJU; I was treated unfairly by TSA personnel. I was diagnosed several years ago with severe Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). I've served my country for over 30 years and served in four different combat tours. I have been awarded two Bronze Star Medals for heroism in combat and a Legion of Merit for my military service.

2013 5:16:1 About a year ago, I obtained a service dog that was certified by Train-a-Dog Save-a-Warrior Program in San Antonio, Texas. My service dog helps me control my PTSD and Panic attacks. I decided to go on vacation to Puerto Rico from 13-21 Aug for R&R (Rest and Relaxation)

According to TSA guidelines, passengers are expected to maintain control of their service dogs by holding onto the leash throughout the screening process and they should not be separated from their dogs by TSA personnel. TSA personnel in Texas followed these guidelines meticulously as my dog was screened in SAT.

On 21 Aug 2013, during my boarding process for Flight AA1755 from SJU to DFW, I proceeded to a TSA check point with my working dog.

My dog walked in from of me as he walked through the metal detectors. Logically, my dog has vaccination dog tags and a metal collar which activated the metal detector. The TSO instructed me to remove my dog's collar and reenter the metal detector with my dog.

I refused to remove my dog collar and explained him that I'm required to maintain my animal on the leash as he conducts pat down on my dog. I further explained that I must maintained control of my service dog.

This infuriated the TSA agent; he proceeded to raise his voice and scream at me, and stated " You don't know "shit" about my job".

His combative attitude triggered a PTSD episode and panic attack as I was confined to a small plastic cage. Another TSA agent screamed at me to shut up or I will be arrested, his name is (b)(6) Finally a TSO agent and former Armed Forces Soldier understood exactly what I was going through and very cordially proceeded to screen my dog and I.

What happened? Describe your complaint. Give as much detail about your experience as possible, including the name of the air carrier, if this occurred at an airport.

2013 5:16:1 This complaint applies to the following airport TSA security checkpoint locations: LGB, JFK, LAS. For the past several months, at EACH TSA security checkpoint, we used my FAA official Government identification. It is our understanding that our shoes and sweaters/jackets may be left on our person while going through the checkpoint and that we will be allowed to use the standard metal detector instead of the full body scanner. At each location, the TSA agent told the two of us that we were wrong and they demanded us to follow protocol of every other passenger. Finally, I started asking for their supervisor and each time the supervisor would inform the agent that FAA employees may proceed as I described. We demand respect and proper treatment, not only as traveling US Citizens, but even more as employees of our Caller flew with AA #1154 from Kingston, Jamaica on 8-21 to MIA. When arriving she had 2 phones, US and Jamaican, while at the airport in Kingston, she used her Jamaican phone to call her relatives. When she got on the plane and told to turn off the phone she turned off and placed in her pocket. When she got to the last checkpoint and walked through the WTMD and something triggered an alarm, she walked back and had to go through again and when she touched her pocket she realized the phone was in her pocket and the TSO behind her took her phone and asked her to go through the WTMD again. When she completed screening she got back in her wheelchair and there were 2 TSO ladies and she had a bottle of ginger wine in her hand and the ladies told her she couldn't go through with it and she didn't get back her cellphone from the male TSO.

Flew to BOS from MIA, Flight # not available, Gate # not available.

At most airports across the country, TSA has procedures in place for handling lost and found. Dear Sir or Madam:

My name is (b)(6) and I recently travelled from DFW to Denver on American Airlines on Wednesday, July 24th, 2013. At about 9:30 pm, I went through a security checkpoint at DFW Terminal A. This checkpoint was using a millimeter wave machine to screen travelers instead of a metal detector, though a metal detector was present and operational. When I was directed to go through the millimeter wave machine, I asked for a pat-down instead. I have encountered this situation many times in the past few years of my air travels and have never had any issues. I do not feel comfortable being in the millimeter wave machine and have asked politely for a pat-down, which, up to this day, had always been administered professionally. I have had multiple pat-downs in multiple states and airports and never had any complaints. This trip was unfortunately a different experience.

2013 6:16:4 The female TSA agent that had originally asked me to step into the millimeter wave machine indicated I should step through the millimeter wave machine to the other side to wait for my pat-down. I responded that I did not want to walk through the machine - that was the whole point. She sighed and rolled her eyes and allowed me to walk around the machine to wait. Her attitude indicated I was causing a great inconvenience for her. She then had me stand and wait for a female agent to be available to do that pat-down. There were several female TSA agents present at this time at the checkpoint, including the one directing me, but they none of them offered to pat me down. I was instructed to stand in an area such that I was directly blocking the exit of the millimeter wave machine. As a result of me being in the way, so to speak, by standing where I had been told, the next several travelers behind me in line were screened with the metal detector and allowed to collect their belongings and proceed to their gates. When I saw this, I asked why the other travelers got to go through the metal detector and not the millimeter wave machine, and I offered to move so I was not blocking the millimeter wave machine or to go through the metal detector like the other travelers to save time (since it seemed no female agent wanted to jump to the task of patting me down). The agent who had directed me to stand there snippily told me I didn't get a choice and to stay where I was. I was taken aback by her rudeness and unwarranted sass.

After a few minutes, another female TSA agent whose badge indicated her last name was (b)(6) came up to me and took me over to another nearby area for the pat-down. She explained the process, giving the prepared memorized instructions I have heard before. She then began to give me the most invasive and inappropriate pat-down I have ever experienced. Initially, the pat-down was rather rough and Agent (b)(6) applied unnecessarily hard pressure in running her hands over me. She pulled and pushed on me with such force that my body moved back and forth and my clothing (jeans and a sleeveless cotton shirt) became disheveled. My jeans were standard boot cut; I was not wearing a belt. Agent (b)(6) insultingly told me I had better hang on to my pants so they didn't come off. She then proceeded to run her hands down my legs. However, instead of starting on my upper thigh and patting downwards towards my ankles as I have experienced in the past, she actually put her hands on my vagina and then moved down to my thighs and continued from there. I found this alarming but felt I should give Agent (b)(6) the benefit of the doubt. When Agent (b)(6) proceeded to my other leg, she did the same thing, again touching my vagina through my jeans. I considered my options. I could make a fuss, but I knew I was already making the TSA agents at this checkpoint frustrated, based on their rude and unhelpful behavior towards me so far. I said nothing.

Caller stated that he had a Pacemaker. Caller stated that he felt that TSA employees should actually have to request for medical proof stating that he has a pacemaker because of an article that he read stating that someone could get on the plane with an internal device similar to a Pacemaker and blow up a plane. Caller stated that he spoke with a supervisor at the BOS airport and they stated that the rules are made by congressmen and she wasn't one to suggest it. Caller stated that he would like to see this in effect because whoever has a pacemaker is provided with a card stating that they have a pacemaker.

Advised Caller:

2013 2:29:3 passengers who have internal medical devices like pacemakers or defibrillators. If a passenger has an internal medical device such as a pacemaker, it is important for him or her to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening before the screening process begins.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) should affect such devices. This is done for his safety to ensure that he can safely go through screening.

I have notated his suggestion.

Caller flew out of the El Paso airport and was made to remove his belt. He said that he was surrounded by the TSA agents and forced to remove it. None of them could agree however if it was policy to remove it. He is requesting an e-mail of our official policy.

2013 7:37:1 Advised Caller: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) strongly recommends that passengers remove all items and accessories from their pockets before beginning the security screening process. Removing items such as wallets, belts, bulky jewelry, money, keys, and cell phones may reduce the chances of requiring a passenger to undergo additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. To avoid the chance of leaving personal items behind, we recommend passengers place their belongings in their carry-on baggage before entering the checkpoint.

TSA SEARCH/SCREENING VIOLATION COMPLAINT

AT: HUNTSVILLE (HSV) AIRPORT

SUNDAY, AUGUST 25TH, 2013

ABOUT 5:45 am - 6:10 am

Report By: (b)(6)

Bahamian Passport: (b)(6) Exp: (b)(6)

TSA Supervisor: LTSC (b)(6) (Incident reported to)

TSA Officer: TSO (b)(6) (pat down violations)

Report of the Incident as it occurred:

2013 8:02: On Sunday, August 25th, 2013 I arrived at the Huntsville (HSV) Airport about 4:55 am and after turning in the rental car keys at the Dollar car Rental drop box I checked-in at the Delta Airlines ticket counter on Flight DL 1878, departing from Gate 8 at 6:30 am for Atlanta, via DL 717 en-route to Nassau Bahamas my final destination. On entering the Security check point line, I passed through the metal detector and in one of my carry-on luggage was an 8 oz carton of Almond Milk, which I take for medical purposes: post Prostate Cancer therapy and extra Calcium for bone replacement health due to a spinal injury of four (4) lumbar vertebrae. My focus was on the security check, and I did not recall the almond milk supplement. When a lady security officer asked me if it was for medical purposes, I confirmed this and indicated the medical conditions already named.

She informed me that since it was a few ounces over the 3.5 limit, I would have to get a pat-down search. As she pointed me to a male officer, another female officer told me to move all of my personal belongings over to another search counter. I complied and in the midst of this activity, having four trays, my shoes, my wallet and my carry-on to move over, this could not be done in two or three trips. I saw the attitude of the male and female officer changed drastically towards me: he called me to stand on a shoe marked-pad with, out-stretched arms while she sternly said: "Sir you must move all of your belongings over to that counter." I responded saying: "I am doing the best I could, you need to give me some time." Then as I returned to get the carry-on pulley, she took it and said: "I got this." So I responded: "You told me to move my things, so I can take that." She said roughly, "I got it, I am just doing my job, I do this all the time." Then she made some sort of head motion to the male officer. I did not refuse the search but when the male officer, TSO (b)(6) told me how he would conduct the search, that on the pat down of the legs he would come into contact with my crotch/private, I objected saying, this would be uncomfortable for me and I requested a private search; in which, I would remove my pants to dispel any suspicions. Officer (b)(6) responded saying: "This is the procedure we follow when someone carries liquid in their carry-on for medical purposes, as you did." He also asked where on my body I was having pains (he saw my walking cane) and I showed him the abdomen area, the small of the back, both hips and thighs, due to my spinal injury. As officer (b)(6) conducted the search he patted up my legs and thighs right into my crotch/private touching my genitals. I expressed my objection and uncomfortable feeling about this and asked him not to come in contact with my genitals on searching the other leg. However, he did the same thing patting up into my crotch/private and touching my genitals. Again I expressed my disapproval of this and he responded in the same manner, saying that he was only carrying out the search according to procedure. I expressed again my feelings of public embarrassment for I felt that my privacy rights were violated. Officer (b)(6) actions appeared to be racially motivated, therefore, I asked for a supervisor and LTSC (b)(6) heard my complaint. He indicated a private search request was an option and should have been respected. He then told me about the complaint form and my right to file a formal complaint. Supervisor (b)(6) also indicated that he would speak with TSO (b)(6)

I showed LTSC (b)(6) my passport indicating that I am a Pastor in the Bahamas and that I will pray about this matter before I decide what to do. I have prayed about it and giving the Truth along with seeking just recourse and redress is why I am. The caller advised that TSA broke her daughters bracelet while going through screening yesterday at PHL. The caller advised that she was wearing the gold bangle bracelet when she went through the WTMD and it alarmed. The female TSO asked her if she was wearing any metal jewelry and she had forgot that she was wearing the bracelet. She took the bracelet off and gave it to the TSO. The TSO placed it in a screening bin to be x rayed. The caller advised that she then went through the WTMD again. After she was cleared this time, she asked for her daughters bracelet and the TSO had forgot about it. When they found the bracelet, it had been damaged. She either wants reimbursed for the damages being fixed or for the value of the bracelet. She was told by TSA at PHL that she could file a claim by going online to www.tsa.gov or by calling the TCC.

I told her that I will send her a claims form package via email. I confirmed her email address from a previous record where she had called in to file a claim for items missing from her husband s checked bag, EID (b)(6) told her that I will also forward this record to the CSM at PHL for their review.

Time of screening: 11:06AM
Departure Time: 11:40AM

The caller asked why she could not file the claim over the telephone with the TCC.

I told her that she must complete the claims form package and submit it to the TSA CMB because the CMB processes all claims.

Caller stated that every time he flies from JFK he wears paper slippers and they give him a hard time. He just traveled to Orlando on August 8th. They asked him to remove them and he said that he cannot remove them. Then he had the patdown and the girl still insisted that he take off the paper shoes. This only happens at JFK and has occurred on several occasions. He said the supervisor just stood there with his hands on his hip. The TSO that patted him down was a black female, about 160 or 170 pounds. The supervisor was a white male who wore glasses and was about 200 pounds. He asked if he can get a copy of the policy.

2013 6:50:2 I apologized to the caller and told him that because your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. Screening shoes by x-ray is an effective method of identifying any type of anomalies, including explosives. Our highly trained Transportation Security Officers (TSO) can see if a shoe has been tampered with when they view it on the x-ray equipment. By requiring all passengers to remove shoes at the walk-through metal detector or at the Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) for x-ray screening, we increase both security and efficiency at the checkpoint.

TSA is sensitive to concerns over the issue of sanitation in the screening locations. TSA's Office of Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment reviewed our procedures for screening the footwear of passengers at TSA checkpoints, and they determined there was no need for additional sanitary procedures beyond those already in place. Additionally, TSA entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with the U.S. Public Health Service to further review our screening practices and to advise us of any appropriate additional steps we might take to assure the health of travelers. TSA will continue to evaluate screening practices and make changes as appropriate.

Nonetheless, passengers are permitted to wear disposable booties, socks, or slippers through the screening checkpoint to help protect their feet at walk-through metal detector and the AIT machines. The disposable footwear may be removed and placed into the individual's accessible property prior to exiting the screening checkpoint.

Although some airports may offer disposable booties or slippers to passengers as a courtesy, this is not a TSA-wide practice or requirement. I also told him he may ask for a supervisor at any time. Sent email. I apologize

2013 2:16:2 Comment : When going through security check point with my family of 4 after our vacation cruise (son-8 (b)(6) son-17 (b)(6) wife-41 and I am 47). After waiting some time in line, I found it odd when it was our turn to show our ID's at the podium, all the lines behind the podium closed and 4-6 TSA officers formed a line about 10 ft. behind the podium. My older son and I both noticed 2 TSA officers rocking back and forth and one of them said "I've been wanting to get busy"; Another TSA officer said, "Step this way, there is no waiting in line"; I thought that was odd because it was PACKED with people. My wife and son(17) were told to go one way and my son (8) and I told to go the another way to the metal detectors.

My 8yr old, worried but by my side, I told him "Don't worry, this is just like we've done before"; He asked, "Why is (b)(6) and Mom way over there?"; I said "I don't know, just stay by me and behave"; I told 1 of the 2 female TSA officers that I have an artificial hip,(like we are suppose to do). The next thing I heard was 1 of the 2 the women on the radio asking for a male TSA officer for a manual pat down and search because I refused to go through the metal detectors. I said no such thing!!

I was taken to an area where I was thoroughly patted down,told to keep my palms facing up, stand up straight because I tried to keep my pants from falling off! My son got scared when my pants started falling down (he was thinking the same was going to happen to him). My hands were wiped down and tested for explosives. This was our first time flying as a family. I understand you are there to protect us, but if you review the video tapes, what was done to me was over the top.

I was honest gave all information upfront and complied. Now my son (b)(6) is having a hard time understanding,if your honest and tell the truth why would the TSA embarrass and intimidate you in public. We had no problem the prior week when we went through Detroit and every port of call on our week long cruise.

Dear Sir or Madam

I hope this email finds you and your team in good spirits!!

I recently completed a domestic trip from NY LGA to Atlanta Hartsfield Airport. My trip originated on August 14 and completed on August 27. During this trip, I was travelling with a 3yr old, a 5 yr old and 7 yr old. I have always carried tetra packs of milk for the children and until now, never been stopped. So as I was leaving NY - they scanned the bags, checked the tetra pack of milk and let me go on my merry way.

On return, on Atlanta Hartsfield Airport, TSA agent objected to carrying milk. It was organic tetra pack of milk as my child can't drink others. Unfortunately the makers of tetra pack of milk are not aligned with TSA requirement of 3.4 oz of milk size. They make only one size for travel. I tried to tell the agent the milk was for a child but his response to me was " she not a baby anymore, she does not need milk". Another TSA agent came along and offered for me to keep my Tetra pack, but in exchange, I, the adult had to have a entire body pat down, through examination of all of my carry on luggage. I would like to understand, how does carrying a 4oz Tetra pack of milk equate to having an entire body pat down and examination of my carry on luggage. I know TSA due to their policies have right to examine all of my luggage and I am happy to allow them to do so. And they did. My hand luggage went through xray, I walked through whatever metal detector I was guided through. What I don't understand is how is ability to carry milk equate to having an entire body pat down and 'thorough' check of my bags? Mind you, this tetra pack was sealed with straw attached / glued to the box as it is sold.

As a law abiding citizen, I do realize that TSA has to take precaution to keep me and other safe. I have no issues with rules (i don't agree with some of the rules, but am happy to abide by them). But above was just uncalled for and I would be very interested to know how having or exchanging for entire body pat down on me the adult would justify allowance of milk to be carried for a toddler.

Thank you in advance for your consideration.

Best Regards,

Comment : I went through security at the Indianapolis Airport. Most agents were friendly and helpful as they are most times. I had my pet in my arms who is very non aggressive and was in my forearms. The agent asked for a person to check my hands as is always done. The metal detector agent called for an officer to check my hands. The officer took a few minutes, walked over, and said in a rude manner, "I don't touch any person holding a dog. Put the dog in the carrier. (I could have very easily placed something in the carrier by (b)(6) being distracted. I would have thought he would want to check me first as all other agents have done in the past. (b)(6) continued in a rude manner, used the device for my hands and checked. He did not even bother to come back but just knotted and went on. This was not a busy time. I was traveling with my family through Logan Airport on August 19 on American Airlines. My 20 year old son went through security with my 12 year old daughter. They were allowed to go through the metal detector. My 18 year old son asked for a pat-down, as did my husband and I.

My 18 year old was given the pat-down fairly quickly. I was told to wait. Officer (b)(6) told me that it would be at least 30 minutes and I needed to go through the scanner. I told him I was not going to go through the scanner and would wait. A few minutes later, another officer escorted my husband through and patted him down. When that officer finished, he did not return to take me for a pat-down. I waited a few more minutes and then asked Officer (b)(6) to call someone again. He told me in a very sarcastic voice that he was not going to do it, he had already asked (about 10 minutes had now passed and the rest of my family was waiting on the other side).

I asked him to again ask for someone. He argued with me and told me that he had told me it would be at least a half-hour wait and that I should just go through the scanner because no one was going to help me any more quickly. While this was occurring, other TSA officers were just standing around talking to one another on the other side of the security checkpoint. I told (b)(6) to call someone again that this was ridiculous (I was now about 15 minutes into the wait). He then gave me a dirty look, and said loudly in the general direction of the other side "this guy is tired of waiting, he wants me to ask again". I waited longer. Finally, another officer came and did the pat down.

While I was waiting (for at least 20 minutes), the officers present, including (b)(6) let anyone with a child go through the metal detector, but directed anyone else to go through the scanner. Aside from the rudeness and abusive treatment by (b)(6) which I demand be addressed, I find it laughable that you people would think that terrorists would not use their children as a means to get through security. What kind of stupid policy is this?

The caller flew from SAV, and was identified for additional screening with a patdown and ETD. He wanted to know why this happened, and if this would happen again.

Advised Caller:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online. DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the Redress Control Number. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry but do not have their Redress Control Number may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification.

Participation in the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program is voluntary. The Redress Application process can be found at www.dhs.gov/TRIP.

The caller flew from SAV, and was identified for additional screening with a patdown and ETD. He wanted to know why this happened, and if this would happen again.

Advised Caller:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online. DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the Redress Control Number. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry but do not have their Redress Control Number may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification.

Participation in the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program is voluntary. The Redress Application process can be found at www.dhs.gov/TRIP.

Greetings TSA,

I wanted to pass along some concerns about security lapses at airports in Minneapolis and Chicago. I fly occasionally for business. I opt out of the body scanner. On every occasion that I have opted out, I have been passed through security and prior to screening, left unsupervised with others (who have been screened) while the agent retrieves my belongings. I have had access to other people and even my own baggage on the other side of security before being screened. My concern is this lapse in security where items could easily be passed to another person or placed in a bag. I have also had agents just pass me through the metal detector so they don't have to call a female agent.

Wanted to pass along the concern.

Thanks,

Each occurrence happened to me (b)(6)

Here are my flight details for the last 3 weeks. This email is an effort to inform you of potential flaws in protocol when I've opted out of the body scanner at the security line, but I know I'm not the expert in security or whether or not there is a flaw.

8/14: MSP(T2) to Ohare, Spirit Airlines Evening departure - left with access to baggage before being screened

8/15: Ohare to MSP T2, Spirit, Evening Departure - left with access to other passengers before being screened

8/19: MSP(T2) to Ohare, Spirit Airlines Evening departure - left with access to other passengers before being screened

8/21: Ohare to MSP T2, Spirit, Evening Departure - directed to metal detector when opted out of scanner

8/30: Midway to MSP T2, Suncountry, Evening Departure - agent said, "I wasn't going to have you go through the scanner anyway, went through metal detector.

Thanks,

Both requests were refused. Each time the agent told me "AIT is the primary method of screening." That is obvious. I suppose I should have used the phrase "alternative screening requested." According to your website that is my right and my right was denied. He led me to believe that only children 12 or under could avail themselves of screening other than AIT. I feel that it was obvious that I didn't want my son to use AIT screening. In my opinion the TSA agent was being deliberately obtuse.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening. :

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): AA flight 1954, LAX to SFO, departing 3:35 pm from Terminal 4. :

Comments: I am traveling with my 6-year-old son and husband. I was asked to go to the metal detector with my son, since children do not go through the other type of scanner. My son went through first, and then I went through. The metal detector did not beep. After I went through, a female agent was called over to pat me down, even though the metal detector did not go off. The agent said it was because my skirt was long. Had I known I would be subjected to a pat down, I would have asked my husband to walk through the metal detector with my son, and I would have gone through the other type of scanner. I am very frustrated that I was not given the choice. I found the pat-down intrusive and completely unnecessary.

I love the Long Beach Airport, but an event had me upset. I have been wearing 7 gold bangles since I was 12yrs old. It's custom to always keep them on in my culture. My bangles seem to set off alarms at airport security checks. When this happens, TSA would pull me aside & use a metal detector wand.

Every time they do this, the wand alerts them only at my wrist where my bangles are. I am then free to go to my gate. On August 13, 2013, the same thing occurred but this time they wanted to do a body search. I told TWO TSA members that I am able to take them off with lotion from my purse and walk through the scanner again, but they insisted that I do a body search instead.

1013 9:01:4 I had to stand where everyone who was going through the security line could see me.

I was then searched by a female TSA member. I asked her to bring out the wand but she said they didn't have one. She had to touch my breasts, buttocks, run her hand through the inside seam of my waistband, etc in front of everyone.

I was COMPLETELY embarrassed because I felt like a criminal and this was not done in a private room, but in front of everyone.

I HIGHLY suggest you invest in a wand so incidents like this doesn't happen.

1013 9:02:0 Comment : I am a pregnant woman who did not want to go through the full body scanner due to my condition. I was happy to go through the regular scanner. Tsa at Phoenix would not let me go through the regular scanner and told me that I had to go through a full body pat down, including sensitive areas. At any other airport I've been in while traveling Pregnant, I've been allowed to go through the regular metal detector. While I was getting a full-body pat down, tsa let a woman with a CAT go through the regular scanner instead of the full-body scanner. The explanation I was given is that the cat is a warm-blooded animal, so she could go through the regular metal detector, but that I could not choose. Even if that's the case, why would tsa select a PREGNANT woman for a more thorough check. I have no problem with security, but the less intrusive option should be available for a pregnant woman without the drastic alternative of a pat-down. This is one example of tsa not focusin it's resources on the proper threats.

1013 2:18:5 Comment : As a airline CREW member I wanted to get the facts in terms of going through security. With ID out of uniform we are allowed entrance to security screening but must follow normal liquid restrictions/shoes off etc. However, with CREW ID are we allowed to go through the normal/standard metal detector or are must we go through AIT? Also as a Crew memmber I have global entry, TSA pre check and Known crew member. Why is there no synergy between this programs? Why if I have my CREW ID do I need to take off my shoes, electronics..etc? As a crew member I have gone through the background check/finger printing process. Why is putting on a uniform clearance for going through KCM? There seems to be some loop holes in the way the process works for Crew members and TSA pre-check. Plus, I could avoid all of it by just putting on my uniform and going through KCM check point. But the point is as a crew member we dont always travel in uniform for certain instances (commuting, deadheading,etc.) I would like if you could shed some light on the current polices and what as a crew member we obligated to do in and out of uniform. I know my request is detailed however there is nothing listed on the TSA website and each station tends to do their "own thing". Thanks.

Dear TSA,

I am a male heterosexual, and I travel by airplane often. I do not want exposure to extra radiation from BackScatter Technology - no matter how miniscule. Since your website claims BackScatter technology gives off radiation equivalent to two minutes of air travel and given my understandable desire to minimize my radiation exposure, I always opt out of subjecting myself to backscatter technology. As a result TSA requires me to get a pat down performed by a male TSA agent.

A. I do not feel comfortable with a man giving me a pat down.
Hi.

I want to let you know about the very strange experience I had in Oakland and San Diego this past weekend.

I recently broke my leg and am using crutches. I am a 58 year old man.

Neither Oakland or San Diego had a clue how to handle this. I couldn't believe it. They must see people in crutches every day?

In both locations they just stood there and said 'you can't go through the checkpoint with crutches'...but couldn't give me alternatives. I can't believe they couldn't offer me a manual check?

10:13 8:02:1 In Oakland I finally persuaded them to let me go into the scanner with my crutches...then take them away...then scan me...and then give them back.

In San Diego they actually made me hop on one foot through the metal detector...very embarrassing and dangerous. I am still in shock that this is what they made me do.

Is there really no training done on providing options to people in this situation? It made my travel experience very stressful and left me doubting the ability of TSA to do this job.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

I can't put my shoes on and off myself. The TSA man took a long time and made me get up out of the chair take everything out of my pockets, belt off, shoes off. Wife came forward to help but he put his arm out and shouted "STAY BACK" so she said that I couldn't take my own shoes on and off. He took SO LONG and my wife told him we would be late for our flight. He didn't care. I am 72 and my wife is a senior. We travel a lot and we have never been treated in the manner we were that day.

Other wheelchair customers were going through at a fast pace, but this man was so fanatical to the point of being deliberately upsetting even cleaning over the whole wheelchair THAT BELONGED TO THE AIRPORT. It was not our personal wheelchair to put any stuff on!

Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Main passenger security screening area TSA Employee: (If Known) (b)(6) (Not sure if that is the correct spelling) Comment : On Saturday, August 31, 2013 I was traveling alone with my 20 month old son to Phoenix, AZ aboard Delta airlines. While going through security with my son I removed him from his stroller, and as I placed his stroller on the belt my son started to wander in another direction. I snapped my fingers at him to get his attention, and said "Come over to hear to Mama, and please put your listening ears on" (b)(6) was working at the walk-through metal detector. She abrasively said to me, "Stop treating your child like a dog, pick him up, and walk through here." I then quietly replied with, "I am not treating him like a dog..." She then responded with quite an attitude, "Yes you were treating him like a dog.. snapping your fingers at him. Let's go!" I then proceeded through the metal detector with my son in hand, and as I walked up to retrieve our stroller and my carry on items I began to tear up, embarrassed that this woman had found it necessary to publicly humiliate me in a busy airport in front of multiple people. I was simply trying to keep my child in line and focused in such a busy environment. Her comments were completely out of line, and uncalled for. I was utterly humiliated. Two other TSA employees at Atlanta that day noticed I was upset. I asked what (b)(6) name was and told them about the incident.. They immediately apologized profusely, and one of the gentleman guided me to an area in which I could fill out a comment card. I unfortunately did not have time to fill the card out at the airport, but the incident was obviously not forgotten. To those two gentlemen/TSA employees who consoled me- Thank you so much for making a young mother, in tears at the airport, feel like I was justified in being upset, and making me feel better after such a long day, and such a hateful attack on my parenting. I greatly appreciate it, and the world needs more people like you. To (b)(6) How dare you.. Your job is to make sure that airport patrons are safe in their travels, not to judge someone on their parenting, nor publicly make hateful nasty comments. I was snapping my fingers at my child to make sure he focused on the task at hand, and stayed close to me FOR HIS SAFETY in such a busy environment. Was I supposed to just let him run away from me? I was waiting for YOUR GUIDANCE as to how you wanted me to take him through security (holding him, letting him walk through himself, etc.) According to your judgmental comments maybe I should just let him run around like a wild banshee, or maybe instead of snapping I should scream at him. Perhaps those actions would make my behavior less like "treating him like a dog." Your job IS NOT to tell me how to parent my child. He happens to be a very bright and well behaved little boy. I will do AS I SEE FIT to parent my child without your rude hateful comments. Have you ever traveled with a toddler? Its not an easy task. We happen to live on a military base where it is A NECESSITY to maintain family order, so therefore I will snap my fingers to make my son listen and focus if that is what I deem necessary. I had plenty I wanted to say to you that day, but for fear of you "flexing your muscles and authority" I kept my mouth shut. I would suggest from here on out to keep your nasty comments to yourself. I do not think you have any business dealing directly with airport patrons, and you may think your comments were "cool" but I assure you that neither the people behind me in line (who also made a comment about your nasty behavior) nor myself found your comments appropriate. From now on I suggest trying to maintain a level of class, and keeping your mouth shut. I have worked in customer service for nearly six years, and if I had made any comment close to what you said to me I would no longer have a job. It may have been just a little incident to you, but to me it was a direct insult to my parenting, and left me in tears. Are you happy with yourself?

Dear TSA,

I traveled from San Diego, Ca to New Jersey last week. Going from CA to NJ was a breeze. I was quickly and professionally shuffled through a metal detector. Coming back to Ca from Nj was a completely different story.

I watched shocked and horrified, from a single line as elderly people in wheel chairs were plucked from their chairs to be shuffled through a Body scan machine. They were supposed to stretch out their arms, which looked challenging for them. I noticed some people were passing through the metal detector. When I got to the front of the line, I asked to go through the metal detector, having noticed two options. I was told I could not go through the metal detector, because only children and families were allowed. I was forced, based on my refusal to be subjected to the body scan: to a full body pat down. I was set aside before continuing, ignored for ten minutes, and forced to walk through the machine, even still.

I understand the importance of security, but even more importantly are our freedoms. How are mothers, fathers and children a lesser threat and are allowed a less invasive search? This is discrimination. I think you need to reconsider your tactics at the Newark, NJ airport.

Dear TSA Contact Center:

On August 21st at 4:34 pm I went through the security line at Seattle Tacoma Airport. I was making my way to Southwest Flight # 1433, heading to Oakland and then finally Los Angeles. As I usually do when flying with my son (2.5 years old, with a disability-downs), I requested a hand pat-down to the officer at the entry point instead of having to take him through the equipment that emits electromagnetic/gamma/x-rays and/or the metal detector. I have requested this every time I have flown in the United States with him and have never had a problem.

TSA Employee: (If Known) : Young Man Comment : 1st - With a knee replacement since 2007 I have ALWAYS considered TSA employees courteous and respectful.

This incident - arrived two hours early and there was ONLY ONE initial podium ticket/passport screener and one metal detector open for hundreds of eager and anxious passengers; pathetic.

Orange road cone in front of millimeter wave scanner, so I motioned to my knees (to indicate a replacement - I have two now) and the agent motioned me through the traditional metal detector setting it off, OF COURSE.

013 8:02:2 He immediately seemed perturbed and then began to CHASTISE me for walking through and not telling him. I told him that I signaled to him about my knees and what else was one to think with a road cone blocking the entrance and no sign of the wave scanner working, but to walk through the traditional metal detector? We made no eye contact and I stood there for several minutes until a "male assist," a lead, padded me and passed me on - he was courteous and apologized for his colleague's actions.

The initial contact was obviously stressed, and as a result, treated me as if I were just another stupid one of "the herd."

I am a very reasonable professional, independently wealthy educated individual who never "plays on his knee limitations" but this was unacceptable for anyone, both in that only one of three lines was open and the individual treatment.

Disability Description: Caller is going to be traveling for business with State Farm. Caller said that when she comes home from Blooming ton she is always subject to additional screening because she has metal implants.

Information Request: Caller wanted to know how she can avoid the additional screening.

Response Details: Advised caller when going through screening with metal implant it generally does cause a alarm when going through the WTMD.

If the airport that you are traveling from has the AIT you can go through that. However if there are alarms or anomalies a patdown is required.

Caller said that they Don t have that machine at that airport.

013 11:00:6 Told caller that a Patdown would be required in order to travel.

Caller said that she also has to undergo ETD sampling and she does not understand why this is done ever time.

Told caller that is standard screening procedures that she can request a PSS for assistance if needed.

Also advised caller that I can forward her complaint to the CSM at that location for review.

Caller said that she did t want to do that she would just try to talk them there the next time that she travels.
Emailed caller information.

The caller wants to file a complaint. They flew from DEN on 9-5-13 and his wife was held up without being told why. The caller states they missed their flight due to the screening process. The caller states they swabed her hands and took her to a room and patted her down. The caller states the process took about 15 minutes. They live in Colorado Springs which takes about 2 hours but it turned into a 9 hour day because they missed their flight. The caller wants to know if there is a clear program or something that they can join to avoid this happening again.

013 11:03:6 In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening.

I advised the caller there was an expedited screening program that they could join. I advised the caller that since this is the first time this has happened it could have been random selection but if it starts happening ever time she flies to call and we could assist her then.

To Whom It May Concern,

I would like to each out in hopes that this matter may be resolved rather quickly.

I am a frequent flyer between Tucson, AZ and Philadelphia, PA. My husband is active duty and while he's deployed I fly back and forth to take my kids home to visit with family. My most recent trip flying home to Tucson was 9/6/2013. I had a very early flight (6:25 am) meaning I was going through security by 4:30 am. The TSA employees that were working in the southwest terminal were beyond rude, let me explain.

I was appalled that an International Airport would employ such people to be so rude to their customers. I was waiting in line to go through the metal detector while I watched an employee stand against the wall slouched over and yell at a young Asian boy. He could but have been older than 14 and she continued to yell at him, telling him to "take his hoodie off" *note I did not say "asking". This child obviously had broken English and did not understand what she was saying. Instead of moving her lazy rear towards the customer and better explaining herself she just continued to yell and humiliate this young man until another employee came over and very rudely told him to "remove his jacket". Not once in this situation was this young man asked or spoken to like a human being rather disregarded and embarrassed. Once I went through the metal detector (I was carrying my yorkie) I was subject to a hand swab which is fine, again I fly a lot with my dog and young children (7 months & 3 years).

'013 2:26:3 The young lady who came to take my swab, wiped my hands and turned to another employee (who was directing other passengers to go through the X-ray machine) and said "run this through the machine". While she wasn't looking at him and he obviously was distracted by doing another job, she dropped the swab. She tells me "ma'am follow me I have to re-swab". So I did and everything was taken care of. When I go to collect my things as well as place my dog back in her carrier the young lady who had swabbed my hands walked to another employee and begins to rant and rave about the previous gentleman who had caused her to dropped my original swab. All of this taking place in front of me and every other customer standing there. Stating "he better not speak to me for the rest of the day" and "I done with him" and finally "he's an asshole".

I understand that it is early and some people are not the happiest at those hours but those people should not have that job. If my children had been present I would have confronted her as well as spoke to her manager. Her actions as well as the actions of other employees were beyond unacceptable.

There are thousands of people who go through the Philadelphia International Airport on a daily basis and I know for a fact I am not the first to have an experience like this. I hope that my effort to bring these things to your attentions helps resolves the issue. If I do not receive response that this matter is being addressed or handled by 09/10/2013 I will go higher up and reach out to other resources that I know will take my complaint seriously.

AIT to go through the WTMD and then received a limited patdown of their head area.

He asked what a thorough patdown was for a women.

The caller asked if they could have opted out of the AIT.

The caller mentioned that he would send his wife through the checkpoint dressed as a muslim women.

The caller's ultimate complaint was that the women did not receive a thorough pat down.

I explained that the screening process and procedure is the same for all passengers passing through the checkpoint regardless of their religious affiliations. I explained that AIT is voluntary and passengers can opt of the AIT to receive a thorough patdown.

I explained that patdowns should be conducted by TSOs of the same gender. TSO are trained to use the back of their hand when conducting a patdown of a sensitive are and the palm of their hand over a non sensitive area.

!013 2:57:4 A passenger can request a private screening. During a private screening another TSA employee would be present at the passenger can request for someone to be present with them as well.

i advised that a passenger can request the WTMD in lieu of the AIT or a patdown. I advised that the ladies may have been referred to the WTMD. TSA incorporates random and unpredictable screening at our airports to keep those who want to do us harm from circumventing the system.

I advised that patdowns are required to clear alarms and passengers can be chosen at random for a patdown screening. I advised that a limited patdown may be required to clear an alarm in a specific location.

I advised that I had decameter his concern.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints received so that we can track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

Passengers can wear whatever they like through the screening checkpoint.

Travelers are permitted to wear head coverings (religious or otherwise) through the security checkpoints; however, all persons wearing head coverings are subjected to the possibility of additional security screening, which may include a patdown and an explosives trace detection (ETD) test.

Individuals may be referred for additional screening if the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) cannot reasonably determine that the head area is free of a detectable threat item. If the issue cannot be resolved through ETD or a patdown search, the Caller has a complaint on a supervisor in San Antonio at Terminal B. Caller says she travels every week. She was in line to go through screening via the WTMD and was told it was for crew members and employees only. She spoke to supervisor and ask why they did not post a sign so passengers would know this. She was told she can walk through the AIT or get a patdown. She says the officers were rude and ugly to her. She felt it was their way or the highway. She says the supervisor told her she was fed up with the caller and walked off with no explanation at all. Caller said they had only been standing there for about 5 minutes.

Told caller

I explained to her that during screening passengers cant ask to be screened by the WTMD instead of the AIT. If they have the AIT she can use it or get a patdown which is what the officer told her. She wanted to know why there wasnt a sign posted saying the WTMD was for crew members and employees. I told her they may use the WTMD sometimes for screening of passengers as well but I did not know if they could or would post a sign. This is her complaint. why can they not post a sign. I am forwarding her complaint to the CSM so they could address her complaint for her.

!013 3:01:3 If the passenger cannot be separated from the device, he or she cannot be screened by the walk-through metal detector or Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) and will be screened using a patdown procedure. Caller dropped off a friend at the airport and she missed her flight, the reason was because she was being screened by the TSA for about 45 minutes. So she would like to know why we take so long.

013 10:11:2 Advised caller that TSO's are required to screen every single person thoroughly and their luggage as well. Explained that if a passenger goes through the WTMD or the AIT and alarms they are required to have a thorough patdown. When their luggage goes through the xray machine, if it alarms the TSO's are required to physically inspect the luggage entirely and completely to clear it in to the secure area. They will not allow something through unless it has been cleared, if not cleared they will spend time screening no matter what time the plane is scheduled for take off. TSA advises passengers to arrive atleast 2 hours in advance to allow ample to for screening and boarding.

We were in the front so there was no one in front of us and it was just a long empty path of no one. I decided to follow them since no one said anything to them. The moment I go under, I hear someone yell "Keep moving"; I turned around and noticed it was TSA. I understand what I did was wrong but I already under the line. As I line up to get my ID checked. The same woman you yelled at me decided to come straight over and say, "When someone tells you to do something, you listen!"; She had a very condescending tone towards me. As if a parent was being stern to their child. I said okay and she walked away. She decided to do this to me and looked only at me. My significant other was next to me and did he same thing, but she did not look at him. Not only did she decided to single me out, she did not say anything to the people who did it before me. She belittled me in front of the other passengers. I understand it's part of her job to tell us what not to do, but I believe she should've approached me in a different manner. I understand what I've done wrong, but I'm still a customer and I do not need to be talked down in that way.

Comments:

I travel 100+ flights per year; so frequently that several TSA personnel recognize me and make small talk during my frequent passes through their stations.

Caller stated that the last time she went through the checkpoint, she alarmed the AIT. She had to go through additional screening where she was patted down and wanded. they found nothing and then went to the ETD device where she was swabbed. She did not understand why she had to go through all this additional screening for nothing.

013 1:49:5

CCR informed her:

TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. This is required when someone alarms.

Caller stated that he just starting traveling recently and has a internal medical device and he stated that while he was at RST they made him lift up his shirt in front of everybody and this has never happened before and he wants to know why. Advised the caller that they may of wanted to see the exact location of the device and that may of required that he life up his shirt.

Gave the caller the following info:

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

Comments: My wife and I were flying from Phoenix to Monterey to celebrate our daughter's 1st birthday with family. We carefully packed our belongings, went to the TSA website, read the "Traveling with Children" document and printed the most recent version. We read the document several times and even highlighted the important parts for our family.

Upon reaching the TSA checkpoint, we placed our belongings on the conveyor belt and went through the metal detectors. Our baby-bag was taken and examined by hand, which we understand, but then the TSA employee (b)(6) badge# (b)(6) took baby food and gave us the ultimatum of either opening the sealed baby food or patting down my wife and baby.

We said absolutely not, and pulled out the "Traveling with Children" document that we printed from the TSA website. (b)(6) replied, "I don't care what that says, either we need to open and test this baby food or both your baby and your wife get a pat down". I said absolutely no to the pat-downs and referred to the document. Again (b)(6) said, "I don't care what that says".

This was frustrating and worrisome for a few reasons. My wife and I did the best that we could to come prepared to the TSA checkpoint and found that the online rules did not match the "rules in force" or what was actually happening. How can I trust the TSA? How can I best prepare my family for what will happen at TSA? How can we hold TSA accountable if the rules aren't being enforced?

I asked for her supervisor and (b)(6) (badge (b)(6)) came over. She was more respectful and professional, although she gave us the same nonsense that TSA doesn't have to follow what is printed online but that we as the passenger have to do whatever TSA tells us.

This is trouble!!! If TSA is going to expect American citizens to trust and respect TSA, then TSA must be held accountable, protect individual liberties, and treat Americans as innocent until proven guilty!

Very unhappy and very displeased with yet another poor TSA experience.

Heard of the program that is costing $85.00 and wanted to know if it kept her from having to go through screening such as x-ray and a patdown because she feels those procedures violate her civil rights. She stated a few years ago she had to go through a patdown procedure and she asked the officer if she would have to touch her private area and the officer told her yes. The caller stated she started screening at the top of her lugs that she was going to touch her in her private area. She stated she hasn't flown since because she was traumatized by the experience.

Response:

Apologized that she did have a bad experience however the $85.00 will be for precheck which is an expedited screening procedure. Going through shorter line, not having to remove shoes and things of that nature you are still required to go through the screening procedures such as WTMD or AIT and you could still be subject to a patdown.

Comment : I fly every week and just went through the checkpoint noted above. Despite the fact that there were at least 6 officers lined up at the window at the back of the checkpoint watching, only two screening lines and one metal detector were being used. There were only two officers checking IDs and the "priority line" ended in a crowd of passengers around one of the officers. No one was seen helping a single passenger, and there were several older and travel-naive people who could only get their guidance from fellow-passengers while TSA officers chit-chatted among themselves. After traveling through dozens and dozens of domestic airports and being screened hundreds of times, I can safely say the the A terminal checkpoint at STL is the most unhelpful and mismanaged checkpoint that I have ever been through. I am embarrassed that this is one of my 'home' airports.

The caller's sister in law flew from North Carolina today and she had her hands swapped with paper. He asked why this happened. He asked why they let her on the plane, because she kept testing positive. He asked how they can lodge a complaint. He asked what would happen if a passenger missed their flight. He asked if TSA would reimburse the cost of rescheduling a flight or make arrangements for the passengers.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) often uses Explosives Trace Detection (ETD) technology in airports as part of security screening. In addition to the screening of carry-on and checked baggage, passengers may undergo screening of their hands using an ETD swab at the security checkpoint, the checkpoint queue, the checkpoint, or at boarding areas.

ETD swabbing is completely harmless to passengers. The swabs are made of fabric or paper and do not contain any chemicals. To ensure the health of travelers, screening swabs are used only once. A Transportation Security Officer (TSO) first swabs a passenger's hands or accessible property and then places the swab inside an ETD unit. The ETD unit analyzes the swab for the presence of residue from explosives. Any alarm generated by the ETD screening process requires the passenger to undergo additional screening.

You also expressed concerns regarding the ETD swabs you received. Please note that any alarm generated by the ETD screening process requires the passenger to undergo additional screening. There are several items that contain the same chemicals that are associated with explosives, and collection of these types of particles will result in an ETD alarm. TSOs are trained to resolve these alarms using a variety of resolution techniques.

Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and 2013 7:44:11 courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers.

I advised the caller that they can contact the CSM at the airport by calling 8662899673, select option 5 when it is presented, provide the appropriate airport code for the airport, and the IVR will provide the contact information for the CSM at that location.

They can file a claim with TSA. However, generally we do not make flight arrangements or do anything if a person misses their flight.

Caller has a control number, regarding being stopped at airport and delayed boarding, would like to know the reason, they ask for ID and passport and selected for special screening. Delayed boarding, not denied, usually takes 45 minutes and has been that way for a long time.

Call dropped at 1:35 PM.

Caller stated once when in the US the boarding agent told him he was on a no fly list. One time when he was traveling with his 2.5 yr. old son he was pulled aside for screening away from the child.

States since he got his redress number in August 2012 he booked tickets and was told he had to wait. States he is always delayed boarding although not denied.

Asked what he can do to identify himself or resolve these issues.

Response:

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. Advised caller he should use his RCN number each time he is booking a flight and DHS cannot ensure that travel will be delay-free. Airline check-in procedures must still be followed and other security measures remain in place at the airport. For example, an individual may be selected for secondary screening to resolve a WTMD or an anomaly detected using AIT or because of random selection.

2013 1:31:0 If issues still persist in the manner in which the passenger experienced before applying to DHS TRIP they should email TRIP@dhs.gov for further assistance.

Caller went through JFK on August 28. Caller is 63 years old. He has a medical condition has a machine on his heart. As he was coming through screening, he went through the technology, he triggered an alarm and the officer rubbed very hard on his chest and caused him pain. He spoke with the screening supervisor and he put in a complaint with him there. Caller wants to file a complaint. He does not feel that this was discrimination based on his disability or failure to accomodate. He specifically said it was just poor customer service.

Advised,

Passengers who have medical devices attached to their bodies, such as bone growth stimulators, spinal stimulators, neurostimulators, ports, feeding tubes, TENS Unit or other types of devices should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) conducting the screening of the device and indicate where the device is located before the screening process begins. If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. I also advised that he is able to request a pat down before the screening process begins.

Newark Liberty International Airport

JetBlue Airways

22 Terminal A Mailbox 13

Newark, New Jersey 071 14

I am writing today to inform JetBlue about an incident I had at Newark Liberty International Airport on Sunday July 28, 2013. My family was traveling from Newark to Orlando for a family vacation to Disney World. There were four of us traveling that day; my wife, my 4 year old son, my mother in law and myself. My four year old son was born with fibular hemimelia, which is a condition where he was born without a fibula bone in his left leg, so at 9 months of age we had to amputate his left foot. He walks around with a prosthetic and gets around great and is able to do everything that any other child his age can do.

That leads me to the day of the July 28 at Newark Airport. When we arrived at the scanner and metal detectors, the security guard stops the line, pulls us off to the side, and tells us we have to wait for a supervisor. We held the line up so no one was able to go through and it made my son very anxious and scared. It was a very busy day at the airport and everyone was staring at us, which made him feel more uncomfortable. When the female supervisor came over to us, we had to wait another ten minutes for her to get a male guard. They did not explain our options or let us know what was going on. It took a few more minutes when they finally said to us that we could go through the metal detector, which his prosthetic set off. So a male guard came over to us and sat us down. Then they brought us to a private room to pat my 4 year old down like he was criminal which terrified him, he was screaming and crying hysterically, there was absolutely no calming him at this time. The guard turned to me and asked me why he was crying and acted very callous, we honestly couldn't believe what we were witnessing. I understand there are precautions that we must now take in order to fly but we are still in the United States of America. Our whole vacation was spoiled because all my son wanted to do was go home. Then on our way back through the Orlando Airport when we went through security he had so much anxiety from Newark he had a meltdown to the point where he was inconsolable. It is hard to travel with children to begin with but at this point I worry my son will never want to fly again. He has had nightmares about what happened, and I hope they will eventually fade.

2013 1:06: Comment : I am civilian law enforcement and also a military reservist traveling in uniform. I understand and can appreciate a higher level of security. I know TSA Officers have a job to do. My complaint is regarding the tactfulness and discretion of the female Officer who screened me. While entering through the metal detector, I notified the Officers that there may be items on my uniform that I could not remove that may activate an alarm. When the Officers told me to proceed anyway, the alarm activated. The female Officer then loudly announced "ASSIST, ALARM MALE!". Being a police officer myself, I find it poor judgement to announce something to alarm other passengers. I was highly embarrassed as I became the center of attention in the screening area. Further more being an individual in uniform treated as if I was some type of threat. I recommendation is TSA Officers be encouraged to use better discretion and tactfulness. I will say the male Officer that handled my private screening was very professional and thorough. Job well done on his part. Thank you.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): American Airlines / Newark Airport / Terminal A / 730pm / Sunday 15 2013

Comments: I am reporting an absurd behavior by the agents on duty at aprox 730pm 9/15/13. This event JUST Happened and is being reported by me on behalf of my wife who is 4 1.2 months pregnant.

2013 8:32: Our concern is obviously centered around the full body scanners that many experts have said to avoid when pregnant.

My wife who is traveling by her self asked for an alternative to a full body scan and instead for a metal detector wand.

She was told that wands were not available and that she would have to have a full body pat down. She was forced to be patted down in public, and THEN brought to a separate room in which she was patted down again, with INAPPROPRIATE and VIOLATING touching around and over her mid and lower stomach region.

Her travel wardrobe is LEGGINGS and a T SHIRT. There is NO WHERE that anything other than her female body could show through this outfit.

She has been crying hysterically in the terminal with eye witnesses to what happened, even offering her tissues for her to blow her nose.

Before I call my attorney and or the news outlets I DEMAND a call explaining this RIDICULOUS behavior and have proper action taken by superiors at TSA Caller said that she traveled recently and after alarming the AIT, she was subjected to a patdown screening. She was upset at the experience because the screener just told her to step out of the machine and began patting her down without explaining any thing to her about what was happening and conducted the screening in the public area. She is traveling again soon and did not want this to happen; she never mentioned wanting to submit a complaint nor provide the airport where the incident occurred. She thinks that the issue was caused due to having implants from her mastectomy.

2013 9:47: Explained to caller that a patdown is used to resolve various alarms of the WTMD or AIT. Advised her that I could not determine what may have alarmed the machine and required the patdown, but explained that officers are required to explain the procedure as they perform it and should offer a private screening area so that she does not have to be screened in public. Suggested if she encounters this situation again, she should ask for a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist to be present and ensure the process is conducted properly.

Caller states that his girlfriend flew in to SNA from DEN. He states that she had a metal button on her shorts that alarmed the WTMD, and her checked luggage got pulled up to the checkpoint and all of her luggage, both checked and carry-on, the TSO went through. Caller says that the TSO put a hand up her blouse and groped her and put a hand down her pants and groped her. He states that when the luggage was claimed, the locks were unlocked and the bags were open and the front 2 pouches of one bag were empty. He states that she had a ring in a little square baggie that was an heirloom in one of those pouches along with gold jewelry including 6 rings, a cross, and a bracelet; and some clothes and all of that is missing.

Advised caller:

We regret that you were unsatisfied with the manner in which your bags were handled.

What happened?

I was searched in violation of your own TSA policy. I was screened via your X-ray machine and found to not be in violation; then also patted down. In violation of your own published policy, I was succumbed to your excessive searches at the beginning of my trip and also at the interim point. My spousal unit was not allowed to be present at my excessive search. I was boarding AS255 at Puerto Vallarta flight returning home on 05Sept. At the PV gate I was pulled aside at the jetway, they physically searched my carry-ons, and physically searched me for explosives, all with negative results.

I then retrieved my luggage at LAX, successfully went through customs/immigration. Had to leave the AS terminal, walked outside and then entered the AA terminal at LAX and went through the security process again. I submitted my AS Boarding Pass for AA flight 2465 from LAX to SFO, my boarding pass flagged a "RED" signal. The TSA agent told me to step to the side. She then told her co-worker, "look at this red light"; she then told me to step aside. She then radio-ed someone to come. No one responded; she then radio-ed again. She told me to step aside again; told my spousal partner to move forward away from me. His name is (b)(6). He was forced to go through the scanning process and never allowed to be with me. I was then met by a TSA agent (male). He told me I was to go through the x-ray scanning process. I willingly complied. I was scanned and NO ISSUES OR EXCEPTIONS WERE FOUND. I WAS COMPLETELY CLEARED THROUGH THIS PROCESS.

2013 9:58:£ Instead, I was then taken aside to 3 TSA agents. The male TSA agent told me that I was now going to be physically patted down. EVEN THOUGH THERE WAS NOTHING TO WARRANT SUCH A SEARCH!!! He then brought over a black female TSA agent. She informed me that she was going to pat me down physically, including my groin areas. She was EXCESSIVELY SLOW AND EMBARRASSINGLY physical in patting me down. She patted me down very slowly on the front of my body, including my groin area, and then had me turn around and patted me down on the back of my body, and again in my groin area. I must tell you, I was employed by the State of CA, Dept. of Corrections, I was a Peace Officer, performed many searches of criminals in my career. YOUR TSA is a mockery of the search process. Exceedingly slow and humiliating!!!

After physically searching me and finding nothing, the black female TSA agent then swabbed me again (after I was swabbed in Puerto Vallarta for the same thing and nothing was found) for explosives.

She took the swabbing material and attempted to process it through the machine #1. GUESS WHAT??? THE MACHINE WAS BROKE!! She then took my swabbing material to another machine. She tried a "test" on that machine and guess what??? She stated out loud, "I tested this machine and it came out positive for explosives - however it was just a test, and it wasn't her results." She stated, this machine is also broken."

The male TSA agent then spoke to his supervisor. He said, "You know, we need to have these machines calibrated because they are not working." She replied, "IA/ell, I thought we just had these machines calibrated so I don't know what to do." He then told me and the TSA black woman to follow him over to a third machine. We moved over to the third machine where she inserted my "explosive results" paper into this third machine. This machine confirmed I was negative for explosives and they finally let me go. My significant other approached us at the third machine and asked the male TSA agent what was going on and why I was singled out. He said it was totally up to Alaska Airlines why they singled me out and it wasn't TSA at all. It was Alaska Airlines.

He denied any knowledge as to why I was put through this and said it was AS airlines who did this to me. There are two specific violations that TSA did against me:

FIRST, PLEASE SEE THE TSA POLICY ON THE TSA WEBSITE - I HAVE COPIED IT BELOW TO SHOW YOU YOUR OWN POLICY TO POINT OUT HOW YOU VIOLATED IT!

TSA POLICY PER YOUR OWN WEB_SITE RE: Pat-Downs

What to Know Before You Go

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by imaging technology or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by imaging technology. If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

Caller said she and her husband are flying in one week to Portland Oregon. She said that last time her husband, was in the screening, and was asked to put his hands over his head. Because he has numerous ruptured disk in his neck and back, he almost passed out. She asked what they need to do to go through the screening.

2013 12:51: Response: Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are instructed to listen and respond appropriately to any information a passenger offers concerning his or her physical limitations. TSOs should provide any help that a passenger requests to facilitate the screening process. Under no circumstances should passengers be forced to perform actions that cause pain or put them at risk of injury. For example, TSOs should offer a chair to passengers whose weakness or balance problems put them at risk of falling during screening. Passengers who have difficulty with balance, standing, or walking also may decline metal detector screening, and ask instead for a full patdown screening while they are seated.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer or Passenger Support Specialist at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures. We hope this information is helpful.

The caller is flying and he is subjected to additional screening. He stated that this happens everytime he flies. He stated that he wants to clear his name. He stated that he gets a patdown. He stated that he flies with his children and it gets out of hand. He stated that he gets a patdown everytime.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.
- Difficulty printing a boarding pass at home or at the kiosk.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries online by entering the RCN.

2013 2:04:0 Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification from occurring due to the similarity of a traveler's name and personal information to another person in systems that contain information from Federal, State, local, and foreign sources.

I explained that there is no guarantee that this will resolve the issue. I explained that I can email the forms within 24 hours of this response.
