11/4/2014 4:07:59 PM Comment : I would like to talk to someone about how people with disabilities are screened. It is totally unacceptable what the TSA puts handicap people through. I liken it to legalized groping. The rules need to be revamped immediately. I have GOES and pre-tsa and it does no good because I cannot walk through the metal detector.

Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Unsure- security nearest Frontier ticketing TSA Employee: (If Known) : Unknown Comment : My name is (b)(6) and I am 30 weeks pregnant. Today I was traveling with my husband and brother. We are from Iowa but were on vacation in L.A. I asked a kind TSA man if I could have a pat down rather than going through the body screening machine. I have a more risky pregnancy and this was recommended to me by my doctors. The man nodded kindly and asked me to step aside for a moment. I obliged and actually waited for quite some time (which I didn't mind!) for a female worker to escort me to the pat down area. In the meantime, my brother heard a female employee mutter sarcastically under her breath.

Caller says she flew November 1st from Ponce Puerto Rico to JFK and she was stopped and searched. They said they wanted to know if she was carrying drugs and they did a search and put a liquid on her hands and searched her body and bags. She didn't want them to do a patdown in the middle of the airport and the lady told her then that she would have to wait. A few minutes later they put her in a room and searched her body. She felt humiliated by the incident. Caller believes they were TSA and it was 3 ladies and a man at the checkpoint.

Comment : This morning at Security Checkpoint #6 before our flight a series of events occurred that warrant a review and change of procedures of how you screen handicap and debilitated passengers. My father was diagnosed with terminal cancer this week and is in a wheelchair. He is hardly coherent but I needed to fly him to his home in Ft. Myers today for end of life care. The situation alone is very stressful. Normally we both are TSA Pre check. I am a diamond member of Delta's SkyMile program so I am an experienced traveler and supportive of TSAs policies and procedures. My father was not given TSA precheck today for an unknown reason. I was but obviously could not go through precheck as I needed to escort him through security. We were both flying on paid first class tickets with the intention to make the situation as easy as possible. At the checkpoint, I was told to go through the screener and that my father would be pushed through by a TSA employee. I was unaware that this would require a full TSA pat down. While he was waiting to go through the screening, our backpack was flagged because I was carrying two bottles of Ensure (an approved medically needed drink for his condition). Because of the 11/5/2014 2:10:53 PM bottles. I was given a full pat down and security screening. During my patdown, I looked over and my father is being told to stand up in his wheelchair for a full pat down. I was not consulted and common sense would have informed anyone in that situation that it was not safe for him to stand up unassisted. None of this should have happened without my guidance and a discussion with me. When I informed the TSA employee to put him back in his wheelchair, he was rude and informed me that my father said it was okay. Again, common sense should have been applied as my father cannot look a screener in the eye and can hardly form a sentence. I asked for a supervisor to oversee the now ridiculous situation and she was very nice and told me he was just about done. She was apologetic which was appreciated but this situation should never have happened. She was kind enough to tell me what I should do next time but the unfortunate situation is that there will not be a next time as this will be his last flight. I am extremely upset by how the TSA staff handled an extremely sick traveler.

Just went through a checkpoint and is visually impaired. She was told another female would be conducting the patdown and the TSO that came to her, caller states was gay. She does not have a problem with gay people but that the officer did not seem like it was a woman.

TSA Employee: (If Known) :

Comment : My parents today are flying from Tampa back home to Maryland, and were caused to miss their flight because the TSA agents at security in Tampa refused to listen to my father regarding my mother's Alzheimer's disease, and did not allow my dad to assist either them or her through the security screenings.

My dad got a wheelchair for my mother as they got to the airport because it is much easier to transport her through the airport in a wheelchair and so that all of the agents and staff clearly understand that she has a disability. On the first leg of the trip, agents were able to pat her down while she was still in the chair, allowing my dad to assist my mom in leaning forward so they could check and pat down her back. I have since read that this is a right that all disabled passengers in a wheelchair have - to be able to be screened while sitting in the chair. My mother is is not able to understand or communicate anymore, although she can talk (which might be confusing). She cannot understand instructions or respond. My dad explained this as they got to the screening area. Although he requested that they allow her to stay in the wheelchair, they insisted on making her stand and walk through the walk through screener. He was not allowed to stay by her side through this, and so she obviously could not follow the agents' instructions. When the alarm went off, and the agents said that she needed to be pat down, they would not allow my dad to accompany her. In addition to this, when the alarm went off, agents surrounded my mom, no doubt frightening her and sparking her to become agitated. My dad was trying to explain to the agents through all of this that she has Alzheimer's and could not understand or communicate. She was lead off to the side for a pat down, alone, and predictably became agitated. Because my dad was not allowed to stay with her, I do not know what transpired during this pat down. Either way, it makes me extremely uncomfortable to know that my mother had to be on her own through this. She is unable to give consent herself for any part of the pat down procedure and they would not allow a companion to be present to give consent for her. She needs constant care, which is something that we give her as a family. The fact your agents refused to listen to my father through this, thinking that they know better how to interact with someone who has mid-late stage Alzheimer's is infuriating.

My dad was separated from my mom for quite a while during this pat down, watching the time pass by as their flight time got closer. When she was brought back from the pat down, it took a while to get her back into the wheelchair, as she was agitated and confused by all of this, and not ready to be cooperative. When he did manage to get her back into the wheelchair, he rushed as best he could to the gate (he himself has a serious heart condition, and my mother started dragging her feet under the wheelchair preventing him from pushing her smoothly. They missed their flight by a few minutes.

Their flight was at 1:30pm, and they now have to wait for the 4:30pm flight. As an added consequence, my mother will have to take more sedative medication to ensure that she doesn't become agitated during this long wait in the airport and on the plane. The sedative that she takes, Ativan, is a very strong medication and its use should be limited. It is dangerous for her to take it too often, but this will be necessary today so that she does not cause a scene in public that will be difficult for my dad to control in the public area of the gate.

My father is now completely discouraged from flying at all. I am outraged at the treatment that they received, although I am not surprised. I myself have received gate passes in the past to help get my mom through TSA security and have always been surprised at how completely unhelpful, even impolite, gate and TSA agents are towards my family and mom, when we are doing our best to navigate the system with her. It's just unacceptable and I would hope that you take my complaint seriously and escalate it to the appropriate authority and staff.

I will also be filing a complaint directly with the TSA authorities at the Tampa airport.

Dear TSA, I traveled Tuesday 11/4/14 @ 6pm from the Salt Lake City Utah airport going towards gate C. I informed the agents I had an insulin pump on, I have grown accustomed to the hand check thing that they all do, but this particular incident the agent, an older lady decided she needed to pat me down, because she "saw something" on my stomach. I tried to inform her this is where my insulin pump is attached & I even lifted my shirt to show her. She proceeded with her harassing pat down. This is so harassing to think each time I fly I could be faced with this ignorant harassment simply because I wear an insulin pump. This woman was harassing and nothing else. She wasn't protecting any plane flight, she was ignorantly harassing. Thank you for your time. (b)(6)

The caller indicated that she is flying tomorrow from MSP with Frontier to DEN at 2pm. She asked if there is someone who can assist her to the gate. She indicated that she recently had a cardiac event and would like transportation to navigate the airport that will include her nine year old son. She doesn't want him to have to walk behind the wheelchair. I mentioned that TSA Cares can provide assistance through screening for those with disabilities or medical conditions. She indicated that she does not require assistance through screening.

She asked if she should advise of her defibulator before screening begins and if snacks are permitted through screening.

I advised that she would need to contact the airline in regard to assistance in navigating the airport and getting from point A to B. I advised that they may be able to provide some type of transportation or cart.

She should advise of the defibulator before screening begins.

Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.

Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead.

Her son can walk through the WTMD on his own.

Solid food items are permitted in carry on. They should be securely wrapped or in a spill proof container and must undergo xray screening.

Disability Description: Caller has problems standing, removing her shoes, lifting her arm, and also has metal implants.

Response Details: Response:

Apologized to caller and explained.

(TSA) seeks to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are required to be considerate and thoughtful, and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

TSO of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search; however, passengers may need to wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available. As the screening is being conducted, the TSO will be describing the procedures he or she is using. The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

TSOs should also offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Support Manager at that location. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

If you have concerns about your screening experience during future travel, you may ask to speak with a supervisor while at the checkpoint.

Provided to caller if she needs assistance in the future:

Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 prior to traveling with questions about screening policies, procedures, and what to expect at the security checkpoint. TSA Cares serves as an additional, dedicated resource specifically for passengers with disabilities, medical conditions, or other circumstances, as well as their loved ones who want to prepare for the screening process prior to flying.

Advised to contact 72 hrs. prior to departure.

Incident Details: Caller flew on Tues., 11-4, Flight SW #1880 from MDW to PHL and had an incident with TSA screening. She is 79 yrs. old and handicapped, she was taken from the area where she checked her bag by a attendant in a wheelchair to security in Terminal B. She was unable to raise her right arm over her head to go through the screening process (AIT), needs a shoulder replacement and has 2 replacement knees. The person taking her through told her a female agent would be requested to perform a patdown and she had to wait approx. 20 minutes for a female agent to arrive. She had trouble standing and her breathing was labored at that point. When the agent came over she was told she had to remove her shoes and the agent yelled at her to take her shoes off. Caller told the agent it was her understanding she didn't have to remove her shoes because of her age and at that point the agent got very upset. The agent took her to an area where they have the machine where they check for gun powder residue and her shoes were checked. Caller said that's where the problem arose, when the agent checked the area around her waist and inside her panties she was appalled by it, but, thought it was a normal screening. Caller said the agent went around the inside waist of her jeans and then her panties. She was embarrassed at the invasiveness of the inspection.

The Agent was a heavy set African American and approx. 5'7 or 8, short dark hair. Late 30s or early 40s.

The male agent that was helping her to get to the screening area didn't think it would be an issue because she was unable to raise her arms and had the knee implants. Stated she never had a screening that was a concern to her in all the years of her traveling, until now.

Today, I went through security at Dulles International Airport. Since I am pregnant, I requested to opt out of the AIT screening and have a pat down instead. Officer (b)(6) was the TSO that I spoke with and he began arguing with me that AIT was perfectly safe and that I get more radiation from my cell phone. When I told him that I was pregnant and that my doctor advised me to not go through these types of scanners, he rolled his eyes at me and continued to lecture me on the subject. I had to request a pat down three times before he finally put out the message for a female assist for an opt-out screening. Even at that point, Officer (b)(6) made comments to me like, "Fine. If that's what you really want to do." In reading information on the TSA website, passengers have the right to opt out of this type of screening. We should not be harassed when we exercise this right.

AM

While I was waiting for the female TSO, another passenger with a broken arm was also waiting for an alternate screening (walking through a metal detector instead). Officer (b)(6) began calling out to this passenger instructing them to get back in the main line to go through the AIT. The passenger had told him that she had a broken arm, which was insufficient reason for Officer (b)(6). The passenger then explained that she could not lift her arm above her head, which would be required by the AIT scan. Other TSOs had already been involved with this passenger's screening process and had already made the decision for her to not go through the AIT scan. However, Officer (b)(6) seemed to take a personal offense to anyone who would not participate in the AIT scan.

I appreciate the service that TSA provides in keeping our transportation infrastructure safe. I wanted to report this incident because this type of experience reflects poorly on all of TSA. I travel frequently and often have to make this request when I am pregnant. Most of the time, I am treated with respect. Today was outside of the norm and not up to the standards that TSA holds. Thank you for your time and consideration to this incident.

Caller said it has been 18 months since he has come from Germany where he lives in Europe to the US. Nothing really went wrong but he said when you have to go through the scanners while your things are going through you cannot see your things and that upsets him. He said he has noticed how busy it is at JFK and someone could run off with your wallet. Caller asked why the AIT is not facing the other way. He said he does not like standing with his hands up for the AIT like a criminal and asked if he can have his wallet in his pocket or hand during that screening.

Caller would not admit that most of the time his belongings come off the conveyor just as he finishes the AIT. He quipped his things are at the other end about 30 seconds before he gets there.

Caller was nice at the end and said thanks for putting up with him.

RESPONSE:

11/6/2014 4:18:46 PM Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to reasonably ensure that carry-on items, including disability-related devices and aids, are kept within a passenger's line-of-sight when a passenger is required to undergo additional screening. When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening, TSOs have been trained to maintain control and sight of the passenger's items and to ensure that the passenger is reunited with his or her property once it clears x-ray screening.

I asked if most of the time his belongings come off the conveyor just as he comes through the other side of the AIT. Told him I want him to answer my question because unless you are taken aside for additional screening you are usually going to arrive at the end about the same time as your belongings.

I cannot tell you why the AIT faces the way the do.

You cannot walk through the AIT with your wallet in your hand.

Told he could ask for a private screening of his belongings and if the Supervisor on duty feels a manual screening is sufficient that may be allowed. You will receive a Patdown of course.

Caller just had a harassing experience at IAH during the screening at the checkpoint. He presented his AL temporary paper drivers license that has his photo on it. He has used this ID when flying for the last three weeks. He was told that he would not be permitted to access the screening checkpoint with this document and he ask the officer why this ID was not accepted at this airport since it was accepted at all of the other airports. He requested to speak with a supervisor and the other officer said that they dont need to get a supervisor he just wont be flying today. He stated that another officer went and got a supervisor and was told that he could use the license with another form of ID but the caller did not want to show his second form of ID. A second supervisor came and checked his license and stated that he would be able to access the screening checkpoint but he would have to go through a patdown screening if he does not want to present a second form of ID. He stated that the officers then conducted an inspection on his carry on bag and found another ID and was able to allow him through since they found his second form of ID at the checkpoint during the screening of his items and he was permitted through due to the second form of ID. The officer that was being rude at the checkpoint and went through his bag and found his other ID was Badge # (b)(6) 4:40pm STSO (b)(6) Terminal B.

11/6/2014 5:59:01 PM He is also needing to know if an officer is permitted to go through is bag and use an ID that he did not present to the officers as an ID at the checkpoint without the passenger confirming that it is his ID.

He stated that he flew out of the following airports and was able to use his paper ID without being ask to present a second form of ID Charlotte, Fayetteville, Wilmington, Huntsville, ORD and LAX. He is wanting his complaint sent to the CSM and he also wants the contact number for the CSM so he can speak with them directly.

Phone: (b)(6)

I advised him that he can use the temporary ID as an alternative ID at the screening checkpoint but will need to present another form of ID. If our officers have any questions about the ID that he presents they will ask him to complete a certification of identity form which will ask for his name current address and a few additional questions so we will be able to confirm his identity. Once this is complete he will be permitted to enter the screening checkpoint. However he may have to go through additional screening which would include a patdown so we do recommend arriving at the airport 2 hours early so he will have enough time to get through the screening and to board his flight.

Good afternoon.

This email is being forwarded to TCC-referrals for appropriate action. Thank you.

I advised the caller that I will send her the information and I could forward this to the appropriate office to the CSM at the airport.

Caller went through the checkpoint and was forced to either go through the AIT, or a patdown procedure. Caller stated that she is a disabled veteran who was sexually assaulted and has PTSD. Caller stated that going through the AIT, or patdown causes symptoms of the PTSD. Caller stated that she presented her card and explained the situation and was not permitted the option to go through the WTMD. Caller stated that she frequently has TSA PreCheck and goes through the WTMD with no problems. Caller stated that she was told by the STSO (b)(6) at the checkpoint that she must either go through the AIT, patdown procedure, or leave the checkpoint. Caller stated that at other airports she has went to the WTMD just fine and they have offered that to her. Caller stated that when she gave her disability information and showed her card she should have been presented with other options that did not cause her stress.

Caller is disabled and she has arthritis and a lot of other medical complications. She uses a walker. She cant walk long distances. She requested a wheelchair with the airline. She flew from FLL to AZ with US Air. She paid a gentleman to take her bag to the check in desk. He gave her her tickets and one had her name while the other had a different name. She was told to go to the airline ticket counter to have that changed. She did. They told her they couldn t give her a ticket but they gave her a paper so that she wouldn t have issues. TSA did a patdown at the security screening due to her disability. She mentioned her ability and they did a patdown. It took about 15 minutes. She could not see her bag during that time. The money was not in her bag when she tried to tip the girl assisting her. She does not know where her money is. When she arrived to her destination, her bag was missing. They brought her a similar bag, baggage claim did, but it was not hers. Her son said it was hers because it had her name on it. She found out her bag was in Reno and they were going to send it to her the next morning. All her medication was in it. She checked the medication because she wanted to avoid hassle with security. She went all night without her medication. It was noon when she was going to receive it. She ended in the ER. Now she has a hospital bill, she is missing money and her medication was missing. She wants to know if there is anything we can do to help her like check footage to see who might have taken the money or have someone compensate her. She had 6 bottles of medications.

Because your complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

Airport: FLL

Airline: US Air

11/7/2014 Flight Number: 627

2:09:11 Departure Time: 4:45 p.m.

PM Arrival Time: 7:00 p.m.

Individuals Contact Information (phone number-email): Jamaican TSO that had a bigger built complexion and was about 5 8. The girl with the airline was holding her purse before and after screening. She was about 5 2, African American and had medium complexion, curly hair and was pretty.

For the lost bag and in case the missing money had to do with something out of TSA, she may want to call the airline.

If the airline does not satisfy your inquiry, the U.S. Department of Transportation's Aviation Consumer Protection Division operates a complaint handling system for consumers who experience air travel service problems and provides a 24-hour Hotline at (202) 366-2220.

Passengers are allowed to bring medications in pill, powder or any other solid form through security screening checkpoints in unlimited amounts, as long as they are screened. Passengers should inform Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) of medications and separate them from other belongings before screening begins.

She can also call TSA Cares for assistance on a future flight to hopefully avoid problems at security.

She said she is about to board the plane now at Charlotte and at the checkpoint they said her things had explosive residue on them and she had extra screening and was in a rush and it caused her to drop her computer. She wants to know what can be done about her computer. She was put a really long screening and does not know what caused the ETD reading but after a partial screening in the public area they forced her to go to a private area and completed it and finally cleared her. She also asked how to avoid having that happen or what caused the ETD reading.

RESPONSE:

Told her I am sorry her computer is broken but nothing will be done about her computer because she dropped it herself and I cannot offer her any hope TSA would reimburse her on a claim or offer her a form.

Many things could have caused the ETD to pick up something on your things--perhaps dry cleaning chemicals or household chemicals but I really cannot really say what caused it. When that happens the TSO must do the Patdown to be sure you do not have anything concealed.

The caller's teenager is 17 and she was flying from Reno to LAS alone and the plane is departing during this call. At 1840 the daughter was stopped at a check point and the machine beeped so she passed through again and she beeped again and she was patted down. After she was patted down she wanted to call her mother and she was told that she would have to go into a private room and get undressed and she would not be allowed to call her mother. The caller states that the daughter was hysterical when she called her mother. The TSO was a white lady with brown hair medium build about 5 feet 4 and 5 feet 7. The main issue is that this child had anxiety issues and asked to call her mother during the screening process and she was not allowed to.

I advised the caller that it is common procedure for a passenger that sets off an alarm during screening to have to have a patdown to clear the alarm because the TSOs cannot allow a passenger into the sterile area of the airport without resolving the alarms. As for the reason that they would not allow her to make a phone call to her mom and the statement regarding she would have to go to a room and take her clothes off I cannot answer to these since I was not at the airport. I provided the caller with the CSM name and contact because she wants answers to these questions.

The last time I flew I was completely humiliated because I was told I had to receive a pat down after going through the imaging device. I felt completely violated and disgusted by the entire experience. I am a very private person and I do not like being touched like that. I was never given a reason for having to undergo both screenings. I was wondering is there anyway to just go through a metal detector? I am being forced to fly this December and I am dreading it. I had an appointment with T S A pre check but it wasn't 45 days before my flight. Will I be forced to through the imaging scanner? Some people didn't the last time I flew. Will I have to have a pat down? Will someone explain why I have to have both? I absolutely hate that because of the incidents of the past I must be treated like garbage. Please answer my questions. Thank you.

Comment : An incredibly racist TSA employee singled out my niece when she refused to have a male employee pat her down. She was led down a long hall into a small windowless room and told she would be arrested if she didn't consent. She was roughly groped, mocked and even robbed of the $200 she was carrying by the TSA employee. She was told if she tried to be an "uppity bitch" and complain about it she would find herself and her whole "raghead family" on the suspected terrorists list

At this point, if I ever get the opportunity I will murder every TSA agent I can.

Comment : When exercising my right to opt out of the full body scan the TSA officer who was directing people through the scanner rolled his eyes and shouted very loudly 'FEMALE OPT OUT HERE! WE GOT A FEMALE OPT OUT!'

I think the shouting and eye roll was unprofessional, embarrassing, intimidating and used as a way to take his frustrations out about my decision to opt out. People who choose to opt out should not be subjected to what in my eyes amounts to public shaming. Many people stared at me during my pat down as a result of the agent drawing attention to my choice.

11/8/2014 5:05:14 PM I will say that the woman performing my pat down was polite and professional. I have absolutely no complaint relating to her handling of the situation.

I thank you for continuing to hear people's complaints and trying to create a safe, comfortable environment for people traveling through airports. I just think that as many people who opt out do so due to privacy, shouting for everyone within a 20 foot radius to hear is offensive and unprofessional. All passengers should be treated with dignity and respect by employees just as I treat all employees with the respect that they are due.

11/8/2014 6:09:28 PM Comment : The security checkpoint at SJC was incredibly disorganized. There was no explanation as to what the PreCheck line was, or who could be in it. As a result, the line was very long, and most people in it were told they had to wait in the "regular line". Furthermore, after the ID/ticket verification, the Precheck line merged with a regular line, and the screeners seemed very unaware, or willing to adjust. Some people were taking belts and shoes (etc) off, while others were leaving them on, and the screeners seemed confused as to why people were doing one or the other. In reality, the travelers were generally doing what they thought they were supposed to...Precheck travelers left laptops in their bags, and others did not. The screeners did not seem to be able to explain what anyone in the line was supposed to do. They couldn't agree on which "protocol" to follow (precheck/regular). I have an insulin pump that I always declare, and expect to be checked for explosives (nearly 100% of the time). The screener seemed to have no idea what this was, nor did she care to test it.

Additionally, my wife was traveling with our 9 month old (not through precheck), and the screener wanted her to open every single sealed bottle/formula/food container in her carry-on. This would have negated any sterilization process the food had been through. After talking to the screener for several minutes, it was determined that an external explosives test (of each individual item), and a patdown would be sufficient.

All-in-all, there were no significant issues, but the environment seemed to be one of the most disorganized I have seen at a security checkpoint. The purpose of this is not to get anyone in trouble, but merely to suggest that some additional training is necessary.

Dear (b)(6)

I would like to share an experience that occurred while passing through security screening at John Wayne Airport (Orange County/Santa Ana) in California on Friday, November 7, 2014 at 12:15 pm. I was scheduled to depart John Wayne Airport at 1:45 pm on Southwest flight number 2591. I appreciate the work TSA does every day to maintain safety in air travel, and safety is of the utmost importance.

During my experience at John Wayne Airport, I was returning from vacation with my husband and young son. While having our boarding passes and IDs checked, the TSA agent informed me that I was "pre-screened" and that I did not need to remove my shoes at the next step in security screening. After placing my carry on items on the x-ray conveyer belt, I proceeded to walk towards the metal detector with my son. I encountered TSA agent (b)(6) who informed me that I needed to remove my sandals. I communicated that I was prescreened and informed by the prior agent that I did not need to remove my shoes. He insisted that without my boarding pass, I must remove my sandals. I was unaware that I needed to present my boarding pass. I asked him if he could reach my bag that contained my boarding pass before it went into the x-ray machine so that I could obtain my boarding pass. He stated that he would not. He informed me that my only option was to remove my sandals to proceed through security. I told (b)(6) that I did not want to expose my bare feet on the floor due to health risks of walking barefoot in public settings. I again asked to have my bag. He was adamant that this was against the rules and said that under no circumstance could he retrieve my bag, which was now on the other side of the x-ray machine. I asked a third time and he again said that he would not assist. At that point, I was very upset. I informed (b)(6) that passengers need to be told to hold onto their boarding passes when "pre-screened" and I wanted to communicate this feedback. (b)(6) response was condescending, rude and he simply smirked at me. Ultimately, (b)(6) stated that I had to walk through security barefoot or I would not be permitted through security. I felt bullied and humiliated.

11/10/2014 8:42:41 AM

After proceeding through security barefoot, I was so upset by this experience that I asked to speak with a TSA supervisor. I met with a supervisor who was calm, respectful and he apologized on behalf of TSA agent (b)(6) noting that my request was reasonable and should have been accommodated. I am sorry that I do not have this supervisor's name and would like to thank him for his professionalism, sense of reason and kindness.

I am a physician. I am very aware of the health dangers of walking barefoot in public settings. I take precautions to NEVER walk through security barefoot by carrying a pair of socks with me (which were also in my bag, along with my boarding pass). I am now at risk for developing infections (athlete's foot, common plantar warts, etc.) as a result of walking through security barefoot.

I have several concerns about this experience and how I was treated, which highlight systems failures:

The caller indicated that he flew yesterday and received expedited screening. The TSOs advised that he remove his jacket. The caller requested a bin to place his jacket in so that it wouldn't get dirty. The TSOs would not provide a bin for him to put his coat in. The TSO stated that if he wanted a bin he should go through the standard screening. This occurred at MSY yesterday at 4:30am. He was traveling on a Delta flight departing at 6am to ATL. He indicated that he was at the checkpoint to the far right. The TSO was female, African American. He indicated that she had 3 stripes on her collar which he took to mean the person in charge at the checkpoint. He indicated that the TSO was very rude.

He flew from ATL yesterday as well. He normally passes through screening with his wallet in his back pocket, however his wallet was in his hand prior to passing through AIT. He was advised that his wallet was too big and that he would have to go through x ray. The caller explained that he always passes through screening with his wallet in his pocket. The TSO asked if he did not speak English and took his wallet and placed on the belt to the opposite side (right) of where the passenger was. After exiting the AIT and undergoing a patdown, he cut in front of someone to get to his wallet so that he could return to the other belt and collect his other belongings. A group of TSOs advised that it was rude of him to cut in front of the passenger. This occurred at the checkpoint at 5:30pm. He indicated that he went through the Delta Sky Priority Lane. The Precheck lane was on the other side of him. The flight from ATL to MSY was on Delta departing at 7:19 PM. The TSO that took the wallet and made the comment is male, caucasian. The group of TSOs consisted of 2 African American male TSOs (one stripe), and a female. He indicated that a TSO with 3 stripes did come over but didn't say anything.

11/10/2014 9:18:53 AM

His complaint is that the TSOs were rude and has always been able to pass through screening with his wallet in his back pocket but was unable to this time.

TSOS are trained to treat each passenger with dignity respect and courtesy and apologized if that was not his experience. TSA screening procedures are the same at all airports, however interpretation of the procedure may vary from airport to airport and from situation to situation.

I advised that I would refer the information to CSM of the respective airports to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints received so that we can track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention.

The caller and his wife, who is pregnant, flew from LAS. His wife requested a patdown, as she did not feel comfortable undergoing screening by the AIT or WTMD. The TSO was very rude and argumentative, indicating that the service was not available due to federal budget cuts. The caller's wife asked again for a patdown, and the TSO rudely told her to stand over there and wait because there were no female TSOs present. The caller did not understand why she, as a female, could not conduct the patdown for his wife. The couple waited for over 15 minutes, and asked a supervisor if there were any female TSOs available, and were told that they still had to wait. During that time, over two dozen people were screened, and exited the checkpoint. Finally, the caller's wife gave up, and went through the electronic screening. He was given a slip of paper by a supervisor, and was told to contact the TCC to file a complaint. The caller indicated that the supervisor hinted to him that this was common behavior from the female TSO.

Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

Caller had an incident at JFK yesterday at about 12:30 pm. She was in the Precheck line. Her three friends were not. As she got up to the agent she handed her the South Carolina ID she had. The TSO did not like the way it looked. She called her supervisor and asked several questions. It is a floppy license. It is open at one end. Several supervisors were looking at it. Then they made her have a patdown. She was there 30 to 45 minutes. Her friends had no idea where she was. She is 70 and travels with this ID all the time. The TSO asked if she had other ID. She had her Hilton Head ID on her. After 30 minutes of being patted down she finally got through. There were 5 TSOs involved. They took her license apart. It is unexpired but now it is in three parts. Her boarding pass has all sorts of things written on it. It has NAD on it and a number on it 880 and 29 possibly. She was concerned about boarding but JetBlue allowed her to board. She said the TSO told her she was new on the job.

I apologized to the caller for her experience. I told her that a valid ID has to be State or Federal government issued and have a tamper proof feature. If the TSA questions your ID they can ask for a second ID and you and your belongings are subject to additional screening. This could include a patdown. You may ask for a private screening at any time.

I told the caller that I would forward her complaint to the CSM at JFK for review.

Dear Sens. Casey and Toomey and Rep. Gerlach:

My name is (b)(6) and I am an American citizen.

The caller indicated that his daughter (b)(6) traveled to DC with a school group on 11/5. The sponsoring teacher made the reservations. His daughter received additional screening (patdown) on both her departure on 11/5 and return on 11/9 which embarrassed her. The TSO conducting the patdown put their hands inside her pants at DCA. She traveled with United flight 1662 departing from Gate 12 at 7:40am. The female TSO was African American, average build, 5'3"-5'-5". Her hair was up. This occurred between 6:30am-7am. Her boarding passes included the "S" indication. He asked why and how to resolve this. An agent advised another girl in the group that it may have something to do with her name. He asked if the whole family is on some type of list and would like to know what action to take so that this doesn't happen again. He indicated that he felt that it was not random selection as random selection would be to be selected at the checkpoint for a patdown and not predetermined. He asked if he should apply to redress with his daughter's name and asked that the form be mailed. He asked if the information was included in regard to submitting the form.

I advised that I would refer the complaint in regard to the patdown to the CSM at DCA to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation. I advised that selection could be random.

10:51:31 AM We cannot say as to why the indication was on her boarding pass and cannot guarantee that it will not occur again. The avenue that he would have to address this and to minimize recurrence would be to apply for her Redress on his daughter's behalf. I adv

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing it. He requested that the form be emailed. I ordered the TIF to be mailed. I did not provide the address and indicated that the information will be included on the form.

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days.

Caller stated he applied for TSA PreCheck and his wife did also. Caller stated she got her letter 10 days ago and he has not received his. Caller asked the screening procedures for a hip metal implant. Caller asked about the notification card.

Resolution:

Known Traveler Number (KTN): (b)(6) Status as of 10/28/2014

ELIGIBILITY DETERMINED

TSA mailed you a letter with information regarding your eligibility determination. If you do not receive this letter within 10 days of receiving this status, please contact the UES Call Center at 1-855-DHS-UES1. I advised the caller that the number for UES is 855-347-8371.

11/10/2014 2:00:47 PM <https://universalenroll.dhs.gov/workflows?workflow=service-status>

PM If a passenger has metal implants, such as artificial knees or hips, he or she should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) before screening begins. TSA has created notification cards that travelers may use to inform a TSO about any disability, medical condition, or medical device that could affect security screening. Although these cards do not exempt anyone from security screening, their use may improve communication and help travelers discreetly notify TSOs of their conditions. I offered to give the caller the URL for the card.

Many passengers with metal implants that regularly alarm a walk-through metal detector prefer to be screened by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT). Passengers can be screened using AIT only if they can stand still with their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. An eligible passenger can request to be screened by AIT if it is available or can request to be screened using a patdown; however, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector in lieu of AIT or a thorough patdown.

Comment : I am TSA Precheck and travel every week. The TSA at Bozeman said they did not have the staff to run Precheck, and as I had not removed the liquids from my bag or the laptop from my computer bag they were screened. For some reason the screen test returned a positive hit on my suitcase, requiring further screening. Six TSA agents gathered around to watch the agent go through my bag, and watch another agent do a pat down and run everything through the x-ray again. If they have six people to engage in these activities they have enough people to operate a Precheck line. I made a comment about the number of agents involved and he said one of them was a supervisor who came over because I was showing signs of aggravation, but believe you me, if there hadn't been so many agents clustered around there wouldn't have been any aggravation. Why does the TSA have to blow everything out of proportion? It is not uncommon for the blue shirts to outnumber the passengers in smaller airports, and they still manage to make it inefficient.

I was in a wheelchair on 20 Oct 2014 at about 17:15 at the JFK security checkpoint. I was given a very rough pat down requiring me to lift out of the wheelchair several times. The wand was placed on everything two or three times. This whole security procedure lasted about 20 minutes. I thought the TSA person did not act professionally. He was much too rough and did not seem to consider that I was in the wheel chair for a reason having recently had surgery on several parts of my leg and foot. My wife asked him several times not to be so rough as I just had stitches removed on the body parts he was roughly handling. He reprimanded her harshly. His name was (b)(6) My wife asked for his name which he refused to give her. Instead, he called a supervisor with whom my wife talked. The supervisor said he would talk with (b)(6) I expect to be treated with respect. I am a retired Army LTC. I believe his behavior should not be tolerated.

I understand that the TSA has a vital job to do in view of terrorism. However, common sense and respect are also a right that are deserved by the individual traveler. After all of this unacceptable behavior and bullying, I had to wait a long time to get my crutches. All of this held up around 4 or 5 passengers. One worried that he was going to miss his plane. Serious education is needed with your TSA employees. They are using their uniform to intimidate the taxpayers who pay their wages. It is real disgrace to domestic travelers but especially foreign travelers who are exposed to this abuse (b)(6) tone and attitude was a disgrace to the TSA which already has a negative image.

I would appreciate a reply to this email.

Sincerely,

So if you want belts removed please change your signs to say so. The signs at ohare security checkpoint terminal 3 next to section C/D only says shoes, empty pockets, and laptops. After the scan, I was asked to remove my belt. An agent then reached into my pants (no joke) without asking permission or informing me he was doing a "pat down". After reaching into my pants, he then said "I just need to pat this area down."

This occurred approximately at 1442 today. I was horrified. It is my understanding I can request a more confidential pat down if that's required, but that can't happen if I'm not first informed by the agent. Also, do pat downs really require an agent to place his hands in my pants, not just a finger in a waistband but literally past the knuckles in the front of my pants? This seems inappropriate and unprofessional.

What happened? Describe your complaint. Give as much detail about your experience as possible, including the name of the air carrier, if this occurred at an airport.

I arrived at DTW, Delta Terminal Security Check point approximately 10:15 a.m. on Sunday, November 9th, 2014. I have an ileostomy. I had my Blue TSA approved medical card in my possession for security officers to see. Unfortunately, my pouch filled up on the way to the airport. I did not see any restrooms to use before going through Security. I had no choice but to get in line and pray that I made it through without an embarrassing accident. I was getting concerned about my pouch being full, and the very likely possibility it could leak under my wafer

Comment : I was at Ohare International Airport recently and was going through security for a domestic flight. My flight was to leave in 45 minutes. I put all my luggage through the x ray and took everything out of my pockets. Though when it came to the full body scanner I request to opt out. I waited about 10 minutes until a black male TSA agent, took me to the side to do the pat down. He asked which of the bags in the x ray is mine and I said "Those 3 right there" and I pointed to the three. He then conducted me for a patdown. The patdown was fine but then he said to me "Listen, brother, I'm going to tell you right now that because you said 4 words to me, you are being fined by TSA." I said "What?" He said that TSA has a new law that you cannot speak to security personnel otherwise it is a $50,000 fine per word. I said "That's ridiculous" He said "You're up to to $300,000" I said where is the supervisor?" He said "You owe a lot of money. Make your check out to the TSA. You also owe some fees, its being charged to your credit card. I'm not joking" I was too rushed to talk with anyone because I had to catch a flight, but he said that it has been charged to my account and I couldn't talk with anyone. He also said that because the patdown took more than 5 minutes, there would be a fine for that, a fine of what he said was about $1000 and that I had to pay it by the end of the year. I don't remember what his name was, but he was a male black man, salt and pepper hair, with glasses, stood about 5'8" or so. I also saw a TSA agent take a picture of me with their smartphone and record a video. My question is is there a fine for speaking with a TSA agent? If so, I would like to know the fine and if I need to write a check, who do I make it out to and for how much given the incident? Also, because there was a TSA agent who took a picture as well as recorded me in the security check point, do I need to pay a fine for that? I know that TSA needs to be paid if someone is required to take a picture and record it. Thank you, Categories : Professionalism/Customer Service; Screening Current Date/Time : 11/11/2014 11:00:09 PM Airport : JFK - John F. Kennedy International Date/Time of Travel : 11/06/2014 8:00 AM Airline & Flight Number : Delta Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Delta TSA Employee: (If Known) (b)(6) Comment : As a frequent traveler this was by far one of the worst experiences I have ever had with TSA. First off, as I entered the checkpoint line, when asked to show my identification I handed my active duty military ID to the individual, who handed it back and said "nice try, you are not in the military." I asked what that was supposed to mean and he responded that "the ID is expired and I should go to the back of the line." I was very concerned as to how my ID was expired and saw that it did not expire for another ten months and that the TSA employee did not know what year we were in. I had to prove to him with my cell phone and help from other passengers that it was in fact 2014! I was in shock of the lack of basic knowledge this individual had. Sadly I was not able to get his name before moving on in the process.

The next step involved placing my belongings into the conveyor to be scanned. After I did this I proceeded to the next line when a female TSA agent from behind the conveyor belt yelled out to me in a demeaning and aggressive and extremely rude and embarrassing manner for me to remove my shirt and hat. When I walked up to her, as I was removing these items I said "please?" as I could not understand her very rude and aggressive manner. From her tone and loud voice she used to belittle me, other passengers around were all staring at me and I was publicly embarrassed in front of everyone. Her response to me asking for a "please?" was, "ok, we will see what happens to you now!" I was not able to get her name either as she left quickly when I asked for her name. She was a heavy set black woman who has a serious attitude problem and has no idea of what respect for other people means. Finally on to the last and most severe incident.

I informed the TSA agent that was waving people through the body scanning machine that I can not pass through due to a medical condition and advice from my physician. When I explained that my physician recommended I do not go through this machine she rolled her eyes and made no acknowledgement of what I said to her. She stood there for roughly 4-5 minutes before she called for male assistance to bring me through for a "pat down." Why she had to wait all this time before calling for assistance I do not know.

8:27:24 AM

Anyways, on to the pat down with 'officer' (b)(6) I explained to (b)(6) that I was in a hurry to catch my flight as it was boarding now. He went through about 4 pairs of gloves before he found the perfect one. He would put a glove on, rip it a tiny bit and then take it off. He repeated this multiple times while staring at me in a very demeaning and disrespectful way. This seemed to be a pattern with the TSA workers at JFK this day.

A (b)(6) was caressing my legs for the pat down he would stop at my knees, and shoot his hands up very quickly into my groin. After the first leg I asked him not to grope my genitals in such a violent and sexual manner. His response to this was a very weird chuckle. It was as if he was enjoying this process and intentionally going out of his way to put me in physical and emotional pain. From his response I did not believe that he was going to refrain from this weird and sexual way for my other leg and I informed him that this was crossing the line from security to sexual assault and molestation. He did not like this response and responded with "I am allowed to sexually violate you any way I want, I am TSA." I was in complete shock! I could not believe I was being molested by this man under the cover of "security." As you can imagine when he reached my second leg, the process was repeated in a more violent and sexual manner. He would slowly caress the bottom half of my legs and stop at the knee, then shoot his hands up very quickly while squeezing together harder for the top part of the thighs. He managed to bash my testicles and penis into my pelvis causing extreme physical pain. The emotional state he brought me into is beyond description and I am seeking professional care to address the issues that have arisen from this sexual abuse.

The next step involved him going through and looking down my waist. This was a first for me. Remember I am a regular flyer and always opt out of the scanner and go through this pat down. Never have I ever had the TSA agent look down INTO my pants! This process is supposed to be checking the waistband not looking into my pants. While going through the waistband he came across my religious undershirt that contains strings. It is called tzisis and is worn by orthodox Jewish men. He reached into my pants and pulled them out into the open, also a first time a TSA agent has done that. His response to seeing these was "oh, you got these things on." It was said in a demeaning and unapproving way. His job is very simple, it is a security pat down, not for him to weigh judgement on my ethnic and religious background or for him to turn this into his weird sexual fantasies of smashing my genitals while groping me in a very strange way that is not the normal way TSA agents have screened me in the past. If it wasn't for my flight leaving right then, I would have refused to let him continue this process but I needed to catch this flight as I was with a group.

From the heavy set black TSA women telling me "ok, we will see what happens to you now!" to (b)(6) extremely violent and sexual pat down I am not sure if they are connected or a coincidence that these particular agents way of retribution for me asking her for a "please." Either way, not one TSA agent I came in contact with that day showed the least bit of professionalism, respect, basic knowledge or courtesy. I hope that this experience is one for the record books and I am never put through this terrible ordeal again. The lasting emotion effects are beyond explanation! These TSA agents call themselves "officers" but they were not acting in any way close to a professional and I have no confidence in the TSA. The caller indicated that he would file to file a claim due to TSA negligence. He flew on 92 from MCO to MIA to Hiati. He arrived to the airport three hours prior to travel. He was at the checkpoint at 4:30pm. He was advised that there was an alarm of his carry on. He received additional screening (ETD, patdown). This was conducted by a female TSO. She advised that she would have to contact her boss. He boss came to him and conducted the screening again. They bags was physically inspected. TSOs could not locate the alarm in his carry on. He was advised that he had to check his carry on baggage. He returned to the airlines and checked the carry on. He returned to TSA and was advised that he had to check the second carry on bag that he had. He returned to the airline and checked that carry on bag. He paid to $40 for each of the two bags that he checked. He was screened additionally when he went through the checkpoint the last time and missed his flight. He indicted that all of the supervisors were present during his screening. He believes that it was the bottle of medication that caused the alarm.

5:20pm but he did not leave the checkpoint between 6:30-7pm.

11/12/2014

He indicated that his baggage did not arrive to Hiati with him. He could not make his connecting flight in Hiati as he had to wait on his checked baggage. The handle was broken on his checked baggage when he received it and all of his electronic item was damaged in his checked baggage. The electronic items were power back ups and inverters. He indicated that it appears that screwdrivers were used to break open the item. NOI was present in all of his checked baggage with nothing indicated.

He couldn't go to his destination as he didn't have power.

MCO to MIA with American Airlines flight 1323 departing at 5:12am from Gate 1259.

Baggage Claim # He doesn't have them.

He had a large black duffel bag, A green and black carry on size suitcase. The other was a black and gray carry on suitcase.

He filed a claim with the airline in Hiati. The airline advised that they would replace his damaged bag and have already done so. They advised that they are not responsible for the contents of the bag if TSA opened the bag.

I apologized and advised that I would refer the information to the CSM at MCO to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this. I advised that he can file a claim for reimbursement by completing a claim form. He indicated that he already has a claim form.

Comment : Due to sequins on my blouse I was told the female attendant needed to "pat down my chest area" and then she immediately proceeded to run her hands across the top and undersides of my breasts. This happened so quickly I couldn't even think to answer or request use of a wand instead. While I understand the intent of the security check I still felt very personally violated and physically uncomfortable. I would request that agents ask whether a wand would be preferred before touching me in a private area of my body. Additionally, if at all possible this should be done in private and not where other patrons could see her touching my breasts.

Caller said he went through a TSA experience last week at JFK at the Southwest terminal on Nov. 6 and he said he sent us an email complaint and that he got a generic response and that we did not answer any of his questions. He said he wants to be reassured it will not happen again and he asked what actions will be taken against the TSA agents and that they should be reprimanded and retrained. He said he only has Officer (b)(6) name and the other Officer ran away when he asked for her name. He said it went into a sexual nature when he was patted down and he said it was Officer (b)(6) who did the patdown. He said he was told by a female Officer to take off his outer shirt and she said to him see what happens now. He said that Officer (b)(6) 4-5 times kept putting gloves on and taking them off and he told the Officer he was in a rush for his flight. He said the Officer did the patdown and the Officer would squeeze his thighs and shoot his hands up his thigh quick and he said he thinks it was intentional. He said it was a sexual orientation and he has a medical issue and he said the Officer chuckled and he was in shock. He said he told the Officer to stop and the Officer told him this was normal practice.

Response: I advised him that we sent this info to the CSM at JFK today. I advised him that I will transfer him to another dept. here in the office for further assistance.

Callers husband is on an Alaska flight. They fly back and forth to Cabo St Lucas. Tonight he was pulled aside and searched thoroughly in Mexico. Then in LAX he was pulled aside for the same thing. He asked why this was done and the airline. She called the airline and they told her no, this is done by TSA. She said that this was embarrassing for her husband. They searched him head to toe and his baggage. She wants to know why. She said he has metal implants so he does usually get ptdowns.

I told her that if he had set off an alarm or anomaly of AIT then he would have to be patted down to clear them.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe. TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI).

I told her that having this on his boarding pass does not mean that he has done anything wrong or that it will happen again. I told her that if he does see this again to allow extra time for screening. If it continues to happen you may consider looking at the Traveler Redress Inquiry Program at DHS.gov.

Disability Description: Caller is blind and has a service dog.

Response Details: If you believe you or someone else was discriminated against or received disparate treatment or were impacted based on disability or medical condition or allege that TSA failed to accommodate your disability or medical condition, Federal regulations require that your complaint be put in writing unless your disability prevents you from doing so.

TSA no longer uses hand-held metal detectors to resolve walk-through metal detector alarms. Instead, a TSO will conduct a standard patdown of the passenger, which allows the TSO to screen for metallic and non-metallic prohibited items.

I advised the caller that I would forward this information to the Customer Support Manager (CSM) at LGA for review.

Incident Details: Caller is blind and has a service animal that is a dog. Caller stated he flies frequently from LGA. Caller stated that Tuesday flying from there was a horrible time. Caller stated that they did not assist him with being blind, or having a service animal. Caller stated that there were no wands. Caller stated that he was separated from his service animal. Caller stated that they did not receive the proper security screening from LGA. Caller stated that his items went through the machine and him and his wife did not have line-of-sight of the items. Caller stated that the first lady taking ID s was upset because he did not have his ID out and his wife stated that he was blind. Caller stated that the woman rudely stated that she guesses that is a good excuse. Caller is very upset over the issue. Caller stated that it is not so much of a complaint as a resolution process. Caller stated that he must travel from there often and would like for the issue to be corrected. Caller stated that the agents were not aware that hand detectors were not being used anymore.

I recently returned from a trip from Turks & Caicos. While checking in at the airport leaving, I was randomly picked to have my checked luggage looked through. No issues were found.

Going through security, I was told that I would not be able to get my passport back unless I allowed security to go through my carryon bag. I am on a wheel chair and received a pat down as well.

After giving the airline ticket agent my boarding pass and heading towards the exit door, I was told that they needed to go through my carry on and was given another pat down. Both were already done going through security.

By this point, I was getting a little irritated.

After going through customs in Charlotte, NC. We went through security. This time I was given the thorough pat down. He even ran his fingers around the inside of my pants.

After getting home, I unpacked my luggage and found two different Notices of Baggage Inspection.

Is it normal to have that kind of inspection? This was all the same day, including two flights. Was it because I am in a wheelchair?

I was departing from Newark airport yesterday afternoon around 2pm at Terminal A and the signage for TSA Pre Chk was not shown or available. There were several agents clustered at the entranceway and only one agent available to inspect all passengers for their id's and boarding passes, but only one line for all passengers. I asked for the Pre Chk line or Preferred Traveler and was told "there is not one here"? I identified myself as Pre Chk and then was given a green card and upon asking what it was for, was told "I didn't have to take my shoes off" but had to remove all my metal and computer items like all other passengers. I waited in the line and followed instructions and showed by green card, but was pulled out of line after I went thru the scanner with no alarms going off and told I had to have a "pat down". The woman who told me to stand in a glassed in area, was abrupt and rude, when I simply asked why, she ignored me. I waited several minutes and tried to ask her again, and she ignored me. Finally I moved back towards her and asked her to please call an agent, which finally came. My belongings were on the belt unattended for several minutes and I then had to retrieve them to follow the other agent. The agent swabbed my hands and I stood there until I asked again if I could proceed, she didn't answer, I waited longer and asked again.

I asked for the Supervisor in charge and waited to speak to him. I met Agent (b)(6) and asked him about why there was no Pre Chk and following the approved system for known travelers (which other airports do) also about the rudeness and unprofessionalism of his co-workers, he shrugged his shoulders and walked away. I travel like many others, but don't think it takes an effort to be polite, especially when someone speaks in a correct tone and is just looking for safe passage. I suggest you might want to review your procedures on attitude and professional etiquette, the Newark TSA Team needs to understand to be courteous and polite, doesn't cost more!

Caller flew from Seattle to Alaska on Nov. 11 and the lady patted her down and she put something on the palms of her hand. The caller asked what was it. She asked if every passenger have that done. She said they took her toothpaste and she stood in the AIT and asked if that is an xray. She said she has had too many xrays and she asked why did they pick on her. She asked does each passenger have to go through screening and she said they did not tell her that she could refuse it and she said it was not necessary. She asked why dont they pick on the Arabs and she had nothing to do with 9-11. She said she is not going to fly anymore and she said she did not see the ait sign that said she could opt out of it. She said she may get cancer now because of this xray screening and she said she should not be harassed like this. She declined her phone # and her last name. She said she does not have the Officer s name and she did not talk to a Supervisor at the checkpoint. She said she was not given the choice to decline the xray screening. She asked how much radiation was it from the AIT. She asked does her 5 yr. old grandchild have to go through the ait machine. She asked why did she have to go through the ait, the patdown and the hand swabbing.

I advised her that I will refer this to the CSM at the airport.

Response:The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has expanded the use of ETD technology in airports. In addition to the screening of carry-on and checked baggage, passengers may undergo screening of their hands using an ETD swab at the security checkpoint, the checkpoint queue, or at boarding areas.

TSA has used this technology to screen passengers' hands since 2008. ETD swabbing is completely harmless to passengers. The swabs are made of fabric or paper and do not contain any chemicals. ETD screening does not require a new swab, unless it is torn, dirty, or unusable. If an individual would like to request a new sampling swab, they must notify the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) at the time of screening. A TSO first swabs a passenger's hands or accessible property and then places the swab inside an ETD unit. The ETD unit analyzes the swab for the presence of residue from explosives. Any alarm generated by the ETD screening process requires the passenger to undergo additional screening.

I advised her that the AIT is xray screening and before she goes into the security checkpoint she can tell the Officer if she does not want to have any xray screening. I advised her that if she does not want the wtrnd or ait machine she can opt out of it and have the patdown process instead. I advised her that there is a sign in front of the ait machine that she can opt out. I advisd her that if the alarms were triggered or an anomaly detected then she would have to go through additional screening.

Date: November 11, 2014

Dear Mr. Pistole,

I am writing to you regarding a recent trip to Europe. My husband and I departed LAX on October 13, 2014 at 3:45 PM on British Airways flight 282 bound for Prague, Czech Republic via London Heathrow.

We arrived at LAX at approximately 1:00 PM to ensure ample time to check our luggage and go through airport security. Upon checking our luggage, we were charged $45.00 per checked bag, a total of $90.00. As frequent travelers, we often pack our liquids in our checked bags instead of our carry-on bags and that was indeed the case for this trip. Said liquids are triple zip-locked to guard against leakage in transit. Our flight was uneventful and we arrived at our final destination on time. I, however, suffered the traveler's worst nightmare and found that my luggage had not arrived in Prague. It was tracked down at London Heathrow and I was promised it would be on the next flight and that I should have it later that evening. It did, indeed arrive at our hotel at 11:30 PM.

Upon opening my luggage, I discovered there is now a new worst nightmare for travelers and that would be the "random baggage inspection". What left my possession at LAX as neatly folded clothing arrived in Prague looking like a dirty laundry pile. My clothing had not only been returned to my suitcase haphazardly; it was also wet because the Ziploc bags that I had triple bagged had all been opened and the small travel bottles were scattered throughout my clothing. As expected, most had opened in transit and had leaked all over my clothing instead of inside the Ziploc bags.

Where did this happen? NEVADA - LAS - McCarran International

What happened? I was harassed and unreasonably searched for purportedly having my middle finger extended more than my other fingers while going through a body scan on a machine that should no longer be used by Tsa (these intrusive types of scans have been replaced by better machines). I was forced to do the body scan against my wishes instead of a pat down. During the scan the agent claimed I was giving the middle finger while holding my arms up for the scan. He was harassing and abusive. Even if I was using a middle finger it is protected under free speech by the Constitution. This has been determined in the courts many times. He then searched me despite my objection to have someone else search me. He continued talking to me in an argumentative and Caller is in a wheelchair and travels a lot. Caller got PreCheck through random selection. Caller always has a companion and the companion does not get the random PreCheck. Caller was annoyed that she was told by a TSO she had to go through the regular line with her companion and that she had a patdown. Caller wanted to know why she had to go through the regular line instead of going through the PreCheck line. Caller is interested in Trusted Traveler.

Response:

If TSA determines a passenger is eligible for expedited screening, information is embedded in the barcode or the TSA PreCheck logo may appear on his or her boarding pass. When TSA scans the barcode at the security checkpoint, the passenger may be referred to a TSA PreCheck lane.

Please keep in mind that TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and no individual will be guaranteed expedited screening.

Because the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location.

Where did this happen? KENTUCKY - SDF - Louisville

What happened?

My family and I (2 children and 2 parents) were traveling to Florida for vacation a couple weeks ago. We ve flown with baby food, formula, milk, etc tons of times and never had the TSA give us a hard time. Actually, they have always been pleasant and helpful when I ve traveled with my family. This time, they decided that I had more food than my baby needed and wanted to

The caller flew from DEN to GRR, and she had a terrible experience during the screening procedures. She asked to opt out of the AIT, and the TSO (a male officer in his late forties or fifties with grey hair) sent her belongings and duffel bag through the x-ray machine. After waiting for a lengthy period of time, she asked the TSO if there was a problem. He replied that if she was going to act like a criminal then she would be treated like a criminal. He also told her that she was not allowed to see her belongings. She informed him that the situation made her feel uncomfortable, as her items were out of her view. He told her that she was acting like a criminal, and that she had no rights. She persisted in asking him to ensure that her belongings were safe from theft, and he finally radioed another male TSO.

The second officer (a young, African American male) brought her luggage to her, and apologized regarding the behavior of the previous agent. However, the first TSO said that since the items were moved, they had to be rescreened. After receiving the padlock, she requested a supervisor. A male supervisory TSO (a male in his mid thirties) walked over to the area, and informed her that he would talk to the rude TSO. However, he said that it was pointless to file a complaint, and it may result in her being flagged by TSA during future travel. After speaking with her husband, she decided to contact the TCC to file the complaint. However, she was worried that the TSA would flag her for complaining. The caller wanted to reiterate that only the first TSO and the supervisor were rude or disrespectful, and the other officers involved were very polite and professional.

After arriving to her home, the caller found that her leather luggage strap had been cut in three different areas, and she wanted to file a claim form.

Date and Time of Flight: October 9, 2014; Around 10:30 AM.
Departure Airport: DEN
Airline: United Airlines

Terminal and Gate Number: Bridge A
Time of Incident: Between 8:30 and 9:30 AM.

Advised Caller:

TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

TSA regrets that you found items missing and/or damaged from your carry-on luggage. TSA is required by law to screen all property, including carry-on baggage, that is brought onboard commercial passenger aircraft. To ensure the security of the traveling public, it is sometimes necessary for TSOs to conduct hand inspections of carry-on bags. TSOs receive training in the procedures to properly inspect passenger bags and are required to exercise great care during the screening process so

She indicated that she had a negative of experience at a checkpoint at EWR in November. She was treated like a criminal due to a machine that malfunctioned. She would like to speak with someone to ensure that this doesn't happen again. She refused to provide her personal information as she is concerned about retaliation.

She opted for a patdown rather than to pass through AIT to avoid radiation. After the patdown, she was advised that a supervisor would have to conduct a patdown. The caller indicated that there was an anomaly. She had to wait for thirty minutes for the supervisor. She offered to go into a private room to remove her clothes to be screened. TSOs advised that they could not accommodate that. She offered to go through AIT but was advised by a TSO that she could not as she had already opted out of screening.

Her husband tried to approach her to speak with her while she was in a separate room. The TSO would not allow her husband to come near her as if he touched her if he would have to receive a patdown. She explained that her husband wears a hearing aid and is deaf and would need to move closer to her.

She indicated to a female TSO that she believes that the machine that TSOs use to test their gloves was broken and asked questions about the machine. The TSO stated rudely that she was asking too many questions.

The caller feels that she was treated rudely and like a common criminal. She stated that the TSOs were abusive although would not elaborate.

She asked if being a Global Entry would effect screening in the US. She asked what is the AIT screening.

She asked what type of follow up would occur, the name of the CSM, who was the head of TSA and for a contact number or address for them, if Mr. Pistole has a secretary under him that handles customer service complaints, and who to call with such complaints.

AIT screening is safe for all passengers and the technology meets national health and safety standards. The Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Standards and Technology, and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory independently evaluated the AIT machines and have all affirmed their safety. In fact, a passenger is exposed to less radiation from one AIT scan than from two minutes being onboard a commercial aircraft at flight altitude. The extremely low dose of radiation from the entire spectrum of TSA screening technology is inconsequential, even to frequent Flyers who undergo repeated screening.

I advised that once a passenger opts out of a screening technology to receive a patdown, they cannot opt to go through screening at a later time. That is a standard screening procedure.

I apologized in regard to the fact that she felt that she was treated disrespectfully and inappropriately.

I advised that I can refer the information to the CSM at EWR to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this, however without her contact information she would not be able to receive any type of follow up. The CSM acts as a liaison between passengers and TSA. I advised that she would not be retaliated against for making a complaint.

I advised that John Pistole is the administrator and provided his mailing address. I advised that the address is the only referral that we have. I advised that I'm sure that Mr. Pistole has secretaries and Administrative Assistants, however we don't have to whom it may concern,

I have traveled my entire life and never had issues with security checkpoints. I am 20 weeks pregnant and have chosen when I travel to opt out.

I have experience the pat down a least a dozen times since becoming pregnant and understand it is my legal and personal right to choose to do so. Never have I had an issue until today.

Traveling through Austin, TX airport CP2 the TSA agent (b)(6) was the rudest person I have ever encountered. I informed him as I stood in line that I was a female opt out, he said ok in a very sarcastic tone.

4 5:13:14
PM

I was not bothered until I had my items on the belt, he told me to stop aside and informed me of my rights and asked me if I still chose to opt out, I proceeded to answer yes, he in turn said to me, "ma'am that is your choice but if your doctor is telling you to stay away from that (signaling towards body scanner) then you should double think those precious ultra sounds of your baby you get." Told me to stand aside and wait in a very harsh and rude tone.

I know that pregnancy has made me hormonal but never have I had someone be so rude and make me feel so violated. I have read up and understand the body scanners are FDA approved but this is my first baby and I want to be extra cautious and it is my legal right to have an opt out, from my understanding your agents are not supposed to try and sway my opinion and certainly not in such a manner.

Maybe nothing will come of this email but I cried for 20 minutes after experiencing that, traveling while pregnant is hard enough physically and I did not need that emotional aspect to ruin my flight.

Thank you in advance for your time.

Caller said she was repeatedly screened and told she was on a watch list in Denver and that she had a terrible experience at Cancun, Mexico and Denver, CO. She asked why is she on a watch list and said she had a full patdown done. She asked if she can send them a copy of her ID instead of the original. She said it was awful and violating and she served in the Military and does not want to fly because of this. She said she will apply online and send an email to them to see if she can send a copy not an original ID.

Response: The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.
- Difficulty printing a boarding pass at home or at the kiosk.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov.

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification from occurring due to the similarity of a traveler's name and personal information to another person in systems that contain information from Federal, State, local, and foreign sources.

I advised her to send in supporting docs and I advised her that TSA does not have a watch list.

I just came through seatac airport, at the north security check on Sunday, November 16, 2014 at 10:00. I opted out of the automated screening. Shockingly, I was at the airport because I had a flight to catch, so I was a little annoyed that it took an excruciatingly long time to find a female to "assist".

The woman who eventually made her way over took me to the side to pat down. As she began going through the script, I asked that she speed up because I have heard it hundreds of times and I was in a hurry. She stopped and started over. I was amazed. Yes, I know could you please hurry up. She stopped and started telling me why she had to start over. Again. Three times. Four times. I was delighted when she called over a supervisor because I was growing increasingly concerned that our nation's safety was in the hands of people who apparently don't understand English.

The supervisor's quote to me: "When you say speed up, we slow down."

Is this your official policy? As though we are made safer by speaking more slowly when your tax paying American public is just trying to catch a flight?

I look forward to your response.

She was taken aside for additional screening and she thought the screening was complete so she she started to collect her things someone touched her which she felt was inappropriate without warning.

She was not given the choice of TSO Gender to pat her down and a male TSO performed her Patdown and she feels violated because she has breasts and was touched by a man.

Caller said she has breasts and the body of a female and was dressed as such but she did confirm her drivers license says male.

Incident Details: Caller went through checkpoint on November 14th from SFB to GSO and at SFB she told (b)(6) (TSO) at the screening checkpoint that she had metal implants and wanted to go through the metal detector but she was told by (b)(6) that she didn't get to choose and waited 15 minutes for a supervisor and then was told to go to the AIT and was subject to a patdown. Caller states (b)(6) has a very long last name. Caller would like to know how to avoid this happening again.

Disability Description: Caller is a cancer patient and has had a double mastectomy. She says that she has broken her foot in the past and is currently learning how to walk on it again, so she has to use a cane.

Response Details: I probed her asking her multiple questions to find out if there was something that caused the additional screening or if it truly was random selection. I did explain during this process that sometimes mastectomy scars can be detected with AIT; however, if she went through a WTMD this wouldn't have done it.

TSOs can choose passengers at random to receive additional screening, so it may just be unfortunate that she has been the one selected on these last few flights. I will forward this over to the CSM for their review since it has happened three times in a row and she has the other related complaints.

For her failure to accommodate complaint, I will forward that to our disability and multicultural department to let them know about this. Also, I will forward her some instructions on filing a formal written complaint regarding the failure to accommodate.

Incident Details: Caller has PreCheck and it is showing up consistently, but she is also getting chosen for random screening while in the PreCheck line. She says that today made the third time, but today it took much longer. She says that today they detained her for a half an hour. She says that she has never been put through so much screening. They kept telling her that she wasn't doing anything wrong. Each time this happens they tell her that she was just randomly selected. She had a patdown ETD and her shoes were swabbed. She says that they just continued to do it over and over, which is why it took so long. They didn't do any additional screening on her bags though. She says that she is a cancer patient and has had a double mastectomy. She says that she has no internal implants, does not wear any prosthesis, or bring any liquid medications or anything. She says there was no alarm with the machine or anything. She says that she broke her foot in the past and is currently learning how to walk on it again.

She says that she told them she needed her cane and they wouldn't let her have it. She had to stand the entire time on the previously broken foot that she is still trying to relearn to use. She says that this was a failure to accommodate. She says that they were also training someone on her, so that caused it to take longer. She says that she doesn't mind someone training on her; however, it caused her to almost miss her flight today because once finished, she still had to get to her gate. Since she uses a cane and has a bad foot she walks slowly.

Caller wanted to file a complaint about her screening in LAX. She went through the checkpoint on 11/16/2014 at 1:30 pm. She has a pacemaker. She was given a patdown. She said that it was not like other patdowns that she has received. She said that she was touched so much that people walking by stopped and covered their children's faces. She said that it was degrading. She said that her private areas were touched. She stated that a black woman gave her the patdown. She did not get the name of the TSO.

11/17/2014 4:12:56:48 PM I gave the following information: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are required to be considerate and thoughtful, and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience. A TSO of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search; however, passengers may need to wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available. As the screening is being conducted, the TSO will be describing the procedures he or she is using. The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand. At any time during the screening process, passengers may request a private screening. TSOs should also offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. Passengers who refuse screening in both the public and private areas will not be permitted to enter the secured area.

I advised her that I would forward her complaint to the CSM at LAX for review.

Subject: How better to help a disabled child through the TSA airport check point

November 17, 2014

To Whom It May Concern:

I am putting into writing a formal complaint about a TSA Agent I encountered when passing through the Seattle Tacoma Airport, ready for a flight back to Denver, CO. I am a disabled passenger, wheelchair bound, which means that they do not let me pass through the x-ray machine. Instead, I am afforded the lucky opportunity of a 'female pat down'. Unfortunately was so upset after this encounter that I failed to get the TSA Agent's name. But regardless, I am filing this complaint because your procedures are walking the thin line of discrimination against the disabled.

I questioned a comment made to me by the TSA Agent that I would need to lift my shirt in order for her to feel around the top of my pants. I indicated that I have never been asked to do this before and not in any other airport I have been in. I did however allow her to proceed with the process. When she started lifting my shirt, I indicated to her that I felt this was quite intrusive and very uncomfortable. She then asked a Supervisor to come over. I did not ask for a supervisor nor did I indicate to her that she should stop the process. I simply indicated that it was intrusive and uncomfortable. When the Supervisor came over, I was crying. She put one hand on her hip and the other on the desk nearby and said to me 'What is the problem?' I said the same thing to her, that this was extremely intrusive and uncomfortable and I wondered how she would feel if it were being done to her, each and every time. She then informed me that if I continued to be 'verbally abusive and aggressive, and that if I continued to escalate the situation, she would simply stop the screening and now allow me to board. Now I would like to know how making a statement that the process is intrusive and uncomfortable borders on aggressive and verbally abusive? I would also like to know if this particular TSA Agent knows the true meaning of those words. It does not appear so. It was threatening and uncalled for. NOTHING I said, nor any behavior that I displayed rise to that level of escalation AT ALL. I urge you to play back your airport video because nothing on that tape will show any crazy or escalated behavior. I did not raise my voice or making any urgings to escalate the situation. I did not ask the Supervisor to come over at all. The 'charge' words used by this Supervisor were completely uncalled for and completely inappropriate, given the circumstances. I believe she is used to dealing with thugs and thought it would be OK to put me in the same category, because I challenged her on an issue. I have a right to make a statement and have an emotion, regardless of the airport.

I asked the other TSA Agent to continue the process so that I could indeed get out of this airport and board the plane I needed to board. Before I left that area however, I asked to speak to another Supervisor (a male Supervisor). This Supervisor was very nice and very professional, very unlike the first one I dealt with. I explained the situation to him and he apologized.

Here is my point:

I understand the point of checking people before they board a plane. I don't need it explained to me as they commonly like to do – I get it.

I understand the importance of ensuring safety for everyone's sake. I don't need it explained to me as they commonly like to do – I get it.

I routinely travel and am aware of what the 'general' protocols around safety – I get it.

I KNOW the protocols for the physical pat down are not the same in every airport and with all TSA affiliates.

I DO NOT understand how in this day and age, we cannot come up with a better method for checking those who cannot go through the x-ray machine, other than placing one's hands on another's physical person.

I DO NOT understand why you all think you are treating everyone fairly. 99% of the people who walk through any given airport on any given day are not subjected to having a stranger physically touch them. This is done each and every time I fly.

That is not treating everyone the same way. The only consistency here is that it is done to me each and every time.

I DO NOT understand why you all think that as a disabled person, you are not violating my constitutional rights.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): LAX United terminal T7 checkpoint.

Comments: I am a commercial Flight Escort Nurse and I carry a multitude of medical equipment, medications, including one 250 ml bag of IV fluids Double wrapped at factory. I also have a letter from our medical director to TSA authorizing me to carry these items. I usually go thru TSA security at least 6-8 times weekly, and I possess a TSA pre check number. I must say the screeners pick up this bag about 1 out of 10 times, and each time it is found they swab it and allow me to continue.

Today 11/17/2014 at approximately 0730 AM at United terminal in LAX the screener was able to detect it, and what followed is what I am complaining about. After the screener removed it I explained what it was and offered my medical directors letter, But he said I needed to be searched. I objected and I asked for a supervisor. The supervisor STSO (b)(6) came into the picture I pleaded my case offered my letter, explained how it was managed in the past; however, he said I was carrying contraband and I needed a pat down or I would suffer the consequences. Needless to say I permitted a pat down, it was a humiliating experience having to take my belt and jacket off and undergo this pat down in front of other passengers. (I really don't appreciate anyone touching my buttocks and crotch, especially in public) Why the pat down? if this was a dangerous liquid what does it have to do with a pat down, and allow me to keep a dangerous liquid, why not search the rest of my luggage?

There is no consistency, in the past I have even went thru security with a portable oxygen concentrator with 5 lithium batteries and chargers, and the unit was not even swabbed. I believe (b)(6) was intimidating to me and went out of his way to make this as unpleasant as possible. I noticed there were many cameras and I ask you to review the video. I await your reply.

Caller would like to get in touch with TSA at SMF. Her step daughter is 15 and is traveling alone today. There was a discrepancy between the name on her boarding pass and the name on her ID. TSOs pulled her to the side for a patdown. The caller explained that only male TSOs were present. Her step daughter refused the patdown screening indicating that if she was going to receive a patdown it would have to be by a female TSO. The male TSOs began to harass her by asking if she thought that they were going to touch her inappropriately. A supervisor was called.

11/18/2014 8:34:45 AM

She was traveling on non rev ticket to PHX. Her mother is a flight attendant.

The caller believes that the situation could have been handled differently and that as she was traveling alone, TSA should have asked if there was a parent that they could call. She wants to ensure that her step daughter boards the flight with no more issue. The caller did not know for certain if her step daughter had cleared screening.

I advised that I could take the complaint and that she would need to contact the airline to ensure that she boarded the flight. The caller continued her request to ensure that there would be no more issue.

I provided the contact number for the CSM at SMF at 916-830-b1v6

Caller: Caller states he flew Delta last Friday out of LAX and was in precheck and was pulled out and screened. Caller states he wears an external insulin pump and has went through the process numerous times. This time he had a really bad experience. Caller states he also had something taken and not returned. Caller states normally, because he wears the pump, he goes through the screener they swab his hands but this time he noticed the guy did something he has never saw before. Caller states the officer put the swab in the machine first then swabbed his hands and it triggered an alarm. Caller states a guy came over to search him and his wife did not get an answer when she asked why were they searching him. Caller states they took him into a room and they explained what they were going to do. Caller states he did not receive an answer when he asked the officer why they were doing the search. Caller states they asked when was his flight and informed him that he would not miss his flight but took 30 minutes from being very slow and methodical and explaining every thing the officer was going to do. Caller states there was also another man in the room that was checking his belongings. Caller states he asked again why they were doing this and they did not respond. Caller states his wife was outside and they would not let her come in the room with him. Caller states he was informed to take off his shoes so he could patdown the bottom of his feet and had to screen the shoes. Caller asked him to remove his wallet to be screened and he went with the officer to watch this because he did not trust him. Caller states the only thing they did not put in his bag was his computer and they allowed him to place it back into the bag himself to prevent it from being damaged. Caller states he is now missing his bag with his insulin pump and insulin dispenser along with nasonex spray and metamucel inside. Caller states when he got to the motel he discovered it was missing. Caller states that when they first informed him he needed to be searched a supervisor came over to make sure their was no threat and informed his wife that their was no threat and then he took off. Caller states he was informed that his wife could have went into the room with him but they would not allow her to enter the room. Caller states he feels they did not do what they were supposed to do and did not give him back something that was very important to him and their attitudes were very condescending. Caller states he informed officers of the presence of the pump when he was going through the machine. Caller states he did not feel that this was because of his medical condition. Caller states he felt they were overzealous and intentionally took as much time as they possibly could. Caller feels that they did not place his medical items back into the baggage intentionally. Caller asked why can't officers look at a person and see that they are not a threat as he is a 60 year old man that can not do very much harm. Caller asked if their was anything he can do to prevent this from happening again. Caller states that every airport has its own methods of things and asking why.

Response: Informed caller that we can not assume that someone is a terrorist. Informed caller that terrorism does not have a face and we can not profile. Informed caller that I would email him a claim form and cover sheet and forward this information to the CSM at LAX. Informed caller the swab test is actually ETD sampling and if you test positive for this test you will have to go through secondary screening in order to resolve it. Informed caller that this test is so sensitive that its possible he could have touched a door knob or a faucet that had residue and caused him to test positive. Informed caller that all items are at the officers discretion and if they feel the item can endanger the flight they will not allow it to board the flight. Informed caller that TSA strives to obtain consistency with screening procedures at airports but their are so many variables that it is very difficult and officers have to modify procedures to accomodate. Informed caller to contact lost and found at LAX to ensure his items were not in lost and found and provided caller with the number:

Los Angeles International Airport

Description of baggage- Glucose dispensers and insulin pump in a clear gallon plastic bag along with some other medications

Caller was flying from NC to SAN recently and had to go through additional screening again. Caller is constantly needing to go through secondary screening and thinks he is on a government watch list. Caller is also seeing SSSS constantly on his boarding pass and is wanting to know if there is a way it can be fixed.

Response:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.
- Difficulty printing a boarding pass at home or at the kiosk.

11/19/2014 4:29:32 PM

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing.

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the RCN. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry, but do not have their RCN, may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification from occurring. Caller submitted a concern for her flight over the weekend from DEN. She said it was about traveling with ice packs for a breast feeding mother. She said her ice packs were not frozen and they made her throw them away at the checkpoint. She said she did declare them to the female TSO. She said the TSO told her that if they are not frozen they must be thrown away. She said she went through the screening and was cleared. She said she asked for the Supervisor and the Supervisor told her that she would have to have some additional screening and she would have to have a patdown but still would not be allowed to take the ice packs since they were not frozen. ALSO: She asked if she could get reimbursed for those items. She said she filed a complaint already but no one has contacted her. She requests that someone contact her. Caller gave her email as: (b)(6)

RESPONSE: TSA has developed standard screening practices for all of our Nation's airports, and passengers can expect essentially the same procedures. While the procedures are the same everywhere, the interpretation of those procedures results in some slight variations from airport to airport and situation to situation. Additionally, some element of uncertainty and randomness in security operations is necessary to disrupt terrorist planning and attempted attacks. TSA works hard to achieve consistency in the security training process. We inspect screening operations at airports and continue to monitor the number and nature of complaints we receive from the traveling public to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees are the subject of repeated complaints.

ALSO: Advised caller I will be sending your information as a complaint to the CSM at the Airport and request you be contacted. Thank you for calling to let us know about the incident. You can file a claim to seek reimbursement for the gel packs. You can find the claim form on our website at tsa.gov. Search Claims Process or Claim Form.

The caller stated she was former law enforcement. She stated she was pulled to the side for a patdown. She flew from MCO to PHL. Had a bag full of Disney stuff, that had zip ties on it. She said it had been tampered with, the bag was half full and she had missing items. She said she had picture frames, autographs, and non replaceable things missing. She wanted to know an exact reason as to why her bag was gone through. She didn't want to escalate nothing she wanted me to provide her with an answer then

I told her Isa is not the only people who handle her bag. The airlines have baggage handlers as well.

I told the caller I could collect her information and escalate it to the CSM at the airport or she could try to contact them herself. She was very upset, raising her voice. I couldn't get a word in at this point so I called a supervisor over.

Escalation Notes: (b)(6)

The caller flew from MCO to PHL and her bag was searched and a NOI was placed in the bag. The caller is upset because the luggage is half full and not locked. She is missing random items out of her bag. She states as an American citizen she has the right to know why her bag was searched and why items were missing. The Passenger wants the CSM to call her by phone. She says that someone is going to be held accountable three times during the call.

When did this happen? 11/20/2014

Where did this happen? CALIFORNIA - BUR - Burbank Bob Hope Airport

What happened? I travel often ALWAYS getting a pat down instead of going thru detectors. When I asked for a pat down in the pre check TSA line this TSA agent said You won t go thru a metal detector? in a patronizing tone. I said no, I would like a pat down. Another female TSA agent said I will take her (b)(6) said No, I will . She explained the pat down, as they all do, and asked if I had any sensitive areas. I told her me knee, the one in the brace. She said well I won t touch under the brace then I said just don t touch my knee. I declined the private screening

IS TSA TO ASSURE SECURITY OR CRIMINALIZE AND OR DISCRIMINATE INNOCENT PASSENGERS?

TSA was created to strengthen the security ... and ensure the freedom of movement for people and commerce. Its vision is to provide the most effective transportation security in the most efficient way as a high performing counterterrorism organization with core values to include Integrity, Innovation, and Team spirit.

Wow- how commendable are TSA's vision, mission and core values unless one realizes their actions on the ground. I fly fairly frequently and have no choice but to navigate the security steps overseen by TSA. It is hardly ever a pleasant experience to speak with these a TSA officer- they are generally rude and their demeanor is very authoritarian as if they running the country. Rarely do you come across a more civil TSA person who smiles, and treat you with respect and humility which every passenger deserves. My most recent experience tops everything; it was most humiliating and I was treated as if I am a criminal.

Who am I? I am a naturalized senior citizen of Indian descent with 35 years of residency in this great nation of FREEDOM lovers. I also acquired DHS approved Global Entry which offers TSA pre-check security clearance to minimize hassles with TSA. At one point I also served in the White House Office of Science and Technology requiring a high level of security clearance. All in all I firmly believe that I am a responsible citizen and adhere to lawful policies and practices in my daily activities. However, my skin color and my heritage are beyond my control and it appears that more often than not, TSA treats people of color like me as if I am a "criminal" and create undue harassment and greater scrutiny.

During my recent travel from Orlando to MSP on November 18 I had a very unfortunate experience as follows:

1. I realized at the Delta counter that my driver's license was not in my purse and the best I could think that I left it in the hotel. Delta allowed me to check in with my Social Security and Medicare cards which, according to Delta, were the next best option in lieu of the photo ID.
2. When I got to the TSA pre-check counter with my wife and explained the unfortunate situation I was disallowed to get through that line and sent to regular security check. The issue for me was not going to another security check but the attitude of the TSA officer was absolutely horrifying and the beginning of making a "criminal" out of me as if I have committed something which has never happened before- misplacing the ID. I am even more horrified when I read the following on TSA website:

"We understand passengers occasionally arrive at the airport without an ID, because of losing it or inadvertently leaving it at home. If this happens to you, it does not necessarily mean you won't be allowed to fly. If you are willing to provide additional information, we have other ways to confirm your identity, like using publicly available databases, so you can reach your flight."

In addition I had my DHS authorized Global Entry card but it was never mentioned as a proof of identification. TSA could use publicly available database; they could see that my wife is travelling with me with all the documents. They could do all that to mitigate the unfortunate situation but they did not. Why- just to discriminate and humiliate me.

3. I am handed over to someone with a phrase 1+1 with no clear explanation. I was told that I had no option but go through the body scanner which I generally don't care about. However, I went through it. Then I was patted down by SEGUI (perhaps his first name) who was extremely insensitive in conducting the pat down search and I felt awful when he touched my genital area. I asked him to have a supervisor meet with me. It has been my understanding that the TSA has begun using an Caller has a complaint regarding a TSO (male) employee at JFK. Caller states he went through the AIT and was waved out by the TSO on the secure side of the checkpoint. Then the TSO began a patdown without any verbal communication with the passenger. Caller states he was not asked if he would consent to a patdown or if he would like a private screening. He asked for the TSO name and ID Number but he says it was busy and the TSO just waved him off. The incident occurred: at JFK between 4:15 to 4:30 EST on 11-19-14 at Terminal 7. Passenger also stated that if a patdown is going to be conducted it should be by the same gender and since the TSO did not communicate with him the TSO just assumed he was a male (which he is but what if he was not?). Passenger thinks this should be reported.

Advised Caller:

Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) does not disclose the identity of Federal TSOs. However, a TSO's last name and position are printed on his or her nameplate. TSOs also wear a metal badge with a unique number assigned to each TSO. TSOs must display their badge and nameplate at all times when screening passengers.

Good Morning,

I have just had the experience of being patted down and had all of my belongings rifled through at the airport because your hand swabbing technology returned a false positive. I am writing to express how humiliating and infuriating that experience was. While your agent was very professional, it was an extremely awkward and uncomfortable experience and 100% uncalled for. I've read a little bit about false positives on this test this morning, and it looks like where I went wrong was to simply wash my hands and use hand lotion. I understand that you have a job to do, but if this technology is so imprecise that people who use common bath products set it off, I feel it's use should be reviewed. You are subjecting travelers to an unnecessary level of scrutiny and I can only imagine how many other folks have been subjected to this pat down simply for washing their hands prior to arriving at the airport.

The caller is a disabled Veteran and also a government employee with a CAC card. This morning she was screened at BOS and patted down several times by TSA officers for some type of liquid medication that she was carrying (The BLS machine was used on it). After the 1st initial pat down the caller was then subjected to another pat down by a different TSO who claimed that the 1st TSO did it improperly. At this stage the caller complained and asked why she was being subjected to further screening, including her carry on bags. The TSO responded with a threat of calling the police and have her removed from the airport if she didn't cooperate.

She was extremely upset after the ordeal, claiming that she was being harassed and asked me during the call to send this to the highest ranking official that I possibly could. I offered to forward this to the complaint to the CSM, however she refused and stated that as soon as she got back to Washington DC then she would visit the TSA building and make her complaint in person. I apologized for the way that she felt and was in the process of explaining that I would be happy to send this to the CSM when she hung up.

11:28:56 AM

Note:--When she explained the patdown process from the female TSO s, it did not appear that TSA did anything out of the ordinary, such as rudeness. She simply did not like the fact that she was wearing a skirt and that the officer patted her down in her crotch area inside the skirt and around her waist twice. She said that she felt harassed and that her clothes were dishveled after the experience. I will say that though the caller was upset, she did not yell or become unprofessional at any time during the conversation. She simply hung up when I did not give her the response that she wanted here. (Escalate to Sr TSA Management in Washington)

I was not able to gather her flight details but she said that it had just occurred. I recommend sending this to the CSM at BOS.

All seemed ok, this morning, when I hit the airport with 70 minutes to get to my gate, knowing that I was a precheck customer so that I could bypass the long lines, harrassing, groping, molesting, and the (always fun) bodyscanner security check and get to my flight. After spending a long time with my airline for my boarding pass I get to security. I happily walk past the long security line to precheck. The TSA agent at the Boise airport did not allow me to go through since he said the ticket was not a precheck ticket. He then directed me to go back to my airlines customer service in order to get my KTN added to my boarding pass so that I could bypass the huge security line. I do so. The airline, after waiting on them for some 20+ minutes, told me that it is a TSA thing to not allow precheck people to use the precheck service. She said TSA is allowed to do somehow and that there is nothing that they can do about it. I proceed back to the security checkpoint. The main security line somehow is even longer now than it was before. I go back up to the TSA precheck screener (since his line is vacant) and told him the airline couldn't help (they blamed you - TSA). I'm out of time and showed him my KTN. He said I had to wait in the regular line and there's nothing he can do. So I waited... And waited... By the time I got through the initial checkpoint where they autograph the boarding pass I was down to 5 minutes left, so I left the airport knowing that I was not going to get through your security and on to my flight.

I know that I am going to get a boiler plate response that tells me to be at the airport early by 2 hours domestic and 4 hours international; so basically deal with it and go away. I just want to let you know that I am disappointed in the service that TSA continues to provide at the airports. Now I know that you have an hugely important job in keeping the airways safe and I do not discount that at all. I do believe that there is dramatic room for improvement in your screening operations however and precheck was a good improvement. But the random push back through to the inefficient checks when people expect the precheck seems wrong to me. Especially, when there is no emphasis on the selling of the precheck service that it may not always apply. In fact, for me I'm still yet to go through precheck. I'm 100% (3 for 3) so far on being randomly denied to use the precheck service that I have paid for. Also, the human element of customer service would be nice for a change. You're not robots so no need to act like them.

Thanks,

h/r/fi

PS. This email is out of frustration. I know nothing can be done to resolve matters however voicing frustration let's the opinion be heard and gives opportunity for solutions. Thanks again for your time. Caller got his KTN but his wife, who applied at the same time, on Oct 8. UES said there was trouble with her fingerprints. They are flying on monday and she still doesn't have a KTN. Caller wants to know what she can do. She also has metal in her body, and he would like to know the easiest way to get through screening.

Advised,

I advised that he would want to speak with UES about the TPAP process. 855-347-8371

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

- Have metal implants that may alarm the walk-through metal detector;
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

Passengers with metal implants may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. Caller applied for PreCheck and this flight does not have PreCheck on his boarding pass for this next flight. Caller did contact Delta to see why he did not have PreCheck on this flight. Caller does not remember how he got PreCheck. Caller also has metal implants and they set off the alarms and cause his to get a patdown most of the time.

Although TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, this initiative is part of the Agency's efforts to implement risk-based concepts to enhance aviation security and allow expedited screening for low-risk passengers at the security checkpoint.

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

- Have metal implants that may alarm the walk-through metal detector

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening. :

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): San Jose (SJC) terminal A security checkpoint

Comments: SJC makes disproportionately high use of advanced screening devices, which I always opt out of in the many times I have flown through here. Today, the screener who "patted" me down, (b)(6) battered me. The amount of force he used was excessive: pulling my hair (I'm male with shoulder length hair), pressing on my legs hard enough to cause me to have trouble balancing, and while checking my thighs he hit my genitals forcefully enough that I exclaimed "ow!" and now, 20 minutes later, I'm still sore. I have served as a civilian consultant or employee in local, county, state, and federal law enforcement, so I do not take such action lightly. I sincerely hope that this screener will receive additional training in appropriate techniques and that SJC's security will operate at a more reasonable level relative to threat risks. Thank you.

I forgot to let you know that prior to LTSO (b)(6) walkie talked the police, one of the officers said @ she is calling tsa" meaning you (b)(6) number.

I did call the number; however. The person taking the complaint said that they were sending it to this airport. I believe that someone outside of the airport that has harassed and threatened a person should look into the complaint.

I am still very upset and my anxiety very high. I cant believe they asked did i have any pain spots and i told them that i was a disabled veteran with back, knee and foot disabilities and pain and they were not gentle at all. I was literally in tears when i called your number but hung up after being told that it was coming back to Boston as i feel threatened

I am a very upset disabled Veteran and federal employee who has been harassed and threatened by your agents.

I am filing this complaint, as I hope that others or myself is not harassed the same way in the future.

While I am supportive of the screening process, excessive screening and harassment should not be tolerated.

I was assaulted in the military and having your agents pat me down twice for no reason is not acceptable.

I brought with me my liquid iron which is clearly labeled; however, I never send my liquid medicine through the xray. I unscrewed the cap and allowed officer (b)(6) to wave the paper and test the vapor.

She said it was cleared as it should be. She then asked her supervisor LTSC (b)(6) if she needed to do a pat down. The officer said yes. She took me over and did a thorough pat down having me extend my leg forward so that she could do the in between legs pat down. While this is very uncomfortable for me due to my military assault, I cooperated.

She then asked the supervisor did she need to check my bags.

The supervisor told her to go through all my bags which they removed everything running the wain around my food all everything. Everything cleared.

Officer (b)(6) said " you should have put your cag card number on line and would have had a tsa precheck. He then went and talked to LTSC (b)(6) who came over to me and said, we need to pat you down again because it was not done right. My anxiety already high due to the first pat down brought the military assault back to the forefront. Now theyvare going to touch all over me again.

LTSC (b)(6) says to me " if you don't cooperate, i will call the police and you will not be not be flying.

Officer (b)(6) performed the pat down. She started telling me what she was going to do, i told her that i just got this perform and did not need to here this. At this point i am literally upset and feeling quite vulnerable.

I have three officer all over my personal property and a supervisor speaking to me in a nasty way. Why?

I asked for the names and LTSC (b)(6) says to me, just take mines you dont need theres. I wrote them down anyway.

She then tell Officer (b)(6) go write down how she talked to you and send to me so I can send it up the chain.

Because I got the names, she got on her walkie talkie And called the police.

While walking thru screening, the full body scanner generated an alarm around my belly area. I was asked for my consent to be Caller will be flying to Portland, OR with his wife to visit his son.. He will be bringing a portable oxygen tank as a carry on. He will Des-connect. He is wondering if this will cause problem because it is not clear from website.

Advised: The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) does not allow portable compressed oxygen tanks

Caller stated it would not be a metal tank.

Advised: The FAA does allow for certain portable oxygen concentrators to be used inflight for medical purposes. If a portable oxygen concentrator is not approved by the FAA for inflight use, it will not be permitted onboard the aircraft. To find a list of portable oxygen concentrators approved for inflight use by the FAA, please visit www.faa.gov about initiatives cabin safety portable oxygen

Offered to email this information.

Caller asked if he could just carry it on

Advised: A passenger may also check with their airline before purchasing a ticket to ask if their portable oxygen concentrator is approved for inflight use or if the airline will provide oxygen to the passenger during the flight.

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to tell the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

- Can safely disconnect from their oxygen (passengers should check with their doctor to determine whether they are able to safely disconnect during screening);
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

If a passenger can disconnect from a portable oxygen concentrator, we recommend that the passenger check the equipment with checked baggage, if possible. Passengers may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown.

Caller stated he can disconnect from it so he will check with airline.

Caller said they are about to leave for the airport. They are flying from SEA to Dallas and her boarding pass does not have PreCheck. They both have NEXXUS and GE and are both over 75. Her PASS ID is (b)(6) (she read it off of her card). She said she has been randomly selected for a patdown on a couple of recent flights but this is the first time she has not received PreCheck.

Advised caller that there is a random aspect to the PreCheck program and this is likely why she did not receive PreCheck. Advised if she has at least another consecutive flight without PreCheck to call back and we could do further troubleshooting. Advised caller to make sure her name and other personal information matches her NEXXUS GE profile. Gave caller the number for CBP GE customer support at (855) 873-4637. Caller flew from RSW on Wednesday Nov 19th and went through the screening process around 8:00am and has a non drivers license that was good till 2017 and also has an old card that expired in 2013. She accidentally took the expired card with her to the checkpoint and had to go through additional screening. She is needing to know the screening process for passengers who have an expired ID. She is very upset about having to go through a patdown screening since she was sexually abused when she was younger and her stomach is sensitive due to gall bladder surgery. The lady that was conducting the screening smarted off to her before the screening because she ask for a private screening. The officer hurt her stomach and also made her lift her top during the screening. She has been crying since the incident occurred and is wanting something to be done about this.

11/24/2014 8:29:41 AM
I advised her that when a passenger does not have a valid photo ID at the screening checkpoint they will be ask for additional ID documents. If our officers have any questions about the ID presented they will ask the passenger to complete a Certification of Identity form. This is a form that will ask for her name current address and a few additional questions so we will be able to confirm her identity and once this is complete she may have to go through additional screening which would include a patdown.

I apologized that she had this experience at the checkpoint and advised her that I will forward her complaint to the CSM at RSW so they will be aware of this issue. When she travels again if she has to go through a patdown screening she will need to inform our officers of her condition and that her stomach is sensitive to touch due to gallbladder surgery.

Location: Dane County, Wisconsin Airport TSA Security Screening Area
Date Time Flight Info: November 20, 2014 Approx. 10:00 am Delta Flight 4125

Complaint Information: Unnecessarily Intrusive Enhanced Body Pat-Down.

11/24/2014 8:35:07 AM
Due to back leg disabilities (I do not have metal implants), I had wheel chair assistance to airport security screening area where I walked thru the electronic whole body screening unit without incident or alarm from scan. Before the man with wheel chair reached me, I was approached by white female, uniformed TSA Agent, medium build, brunette hair. She said, I have to pat you down. I calmly responded, please tell me why. At which time she told me: to look at screen behind me because it showed spots; and look at material on front of my sweater. Then, in public view, she ran her hands, palms down, over my breasts and upper body. Following that, she ran a hand held device over my legs and body followed by device with small, white cloth to check my hands and clothing. (My husband, also a passenger, had not yet passed through the scanner-he told me latter device was to check for explosive elements). There was no reasonable security indicator or probable cause for the TSA Agent to consider me a security risk and conduct this intrusive, unconstitutional public search and physical pressing of my breasts (more than a pat-down) when I had no metal on my person or in my clothing. I felt and still feel violated, sickened, angry and humiliated by what I consider the TSA Agent s abuse of her authority. Is this the search protocol used by TSA in training its employees? My husband retired from US State Dept. Foreign Service and I have traveled with him domestically and internationally for many years. He is a professional counter-terrorism and security expert and we both feel a responsibility to be law abiding citizens. Nevertheless, we believe, even in the best light, this TSA employee needs retraining in policy and procedures including closer supervision. Please advise me of action taken on this matter. Thank you. Complaint Grievances against the TSA

There are so many beautiful modern and rich countries around the world but our country, the United States of America, is by far the most beautiful and peaceful country in the world. Along with that, we are one of the global super powers because we have a rule of law, which dictates equality and justice for all.

Caller states her tablet screen cracked through the security checkpoint. She filed a claim on the 14th of november and was given a paper with the TSA number for a follow up. Caller did not receive a claim number. Caller states she was stopped at every checkpoint for secondary screening from Jamaica back into the US including EWR and wants to know why. She was told it was just random by every TSO at every airport.

I advised caller:

If you have filed a claim and have not yet received a claim number, you may call (571) 227-1300.

11/24/2014 4

I advised caller:

10:51:46 AM

In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers.

Disability Description: The caller is diabetic, and must use an insulin pump. Additionally, she is on a liver transplant waiting list, and experiences extreme fatigue. Also, she has knee replacements.

Response Details: Advised Caller:

I apologized to (b)(6) and informed her that I would record her complaint over the phone.

Also, I informed her that the complaint for the TSOs at ABQ would also be forwarded to the appropriate office.

Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 no less than 72 hours ahead of travel in case it is determined that it is necessary to coordinate support at the airport. If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

We have forwarded a copy of your email to the Customer Service Manager at that airport.

Please accept our appreciation for you taking the time to share this information with us. Your help and support are important contributions to ensuring the safety and security of the Nation's aviation security.

Incident Details: The caller's disabilities prevent her from filing a formal written complaint. Instead, she requested that the process be completed over the phone.

The caller and her husband flew from TYS to ABQ for a CALEA (Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies) conference, and was advised by her physician that the insulin pump could not undergo any type of electronic screening. While at the checkpoint, (b)(6) disconnected from the pump, and asked the TSO to wear a clean pair of gloves when conducting the physical inspection of the device due to the potential risk of infection. He informed her that he was unable to do so, therefore, she requested a patdown while wearing the device. A second TSO started yelling at her, and said that they were not allowed to touch her insulin pump. He insisted that she walk into the AIT machine with the insulin pump, but (b)(6) informed him again that the device could not be screened in that manner. Once again, the TSO screamed at her, and said take off the device, put it in a container, and put it on the x-ray conveyor belt. He then made her go through the AIT while the device was screened by x-ray. She was afraid to argue with the second TSO, and thought he would deny her boarding over the incident.

Upon arriving to ABQ, the passenger contacted Medtronic, and was informed that the screening did not affect her readings. However, they informed her that the device should never be screened in that manner again. (b)(6) wanted to file a complaint, and felt that the TSOs failed to accommodate her disability. Also, she indicated that the second TSO was extremely rude, and should be reprimanded for his attitude and treatment of passengers with medical conditions. She plans on contacting her Congressman, John H. Duncan, regarding the incident.

Caller is calling because she had her jewelry box removed from her checked bag and she is very angry they did not place it back caller says she has already been degraded with the screening patdown she received and now she has had her jailer box removed. Caller said she has been violated and is a handicapped woman.

Told caller I apologized and what we could do is file a claim and I could send her the forms via email, postal, or fax.

Caller said she would like to recover her jailer box because there was a lot of sentimental meaning behind it but she would like the forms via postal.

Told caller since the item removed was a jailer box I would send the incident to the CSM at the airport but would need some information.

Comments: I was traveling alone with three of my children ages 13, 4 and 1. When we entered the security checkpoint a TSA employee moved all of us to the TSA-Pre line (I thought then that we might have an o.k. experience). Another TSA agent then swabbed my palms without explanation. There was some problem with my 4 year old son, he may have brushed the gate with his hand when he walked through (he was not given any instruction). The TSA personnel then pulled us aside and said we would have additional screening. I protested, I am travelling alone with 3 children. I was hoping to get something to eat before our flight. I was then separated from my children and led behind a screen for a full pat down and more palm screening. I travel enough to know that I never have trouble with TSA when traveling by myself, but add my kids to the mix and we can be in for a rough experience. Does this make sense? Anyway, the TSA employees there were not empathetic and were rude, one of them saying "You can be as mad as you want, but you still [have to be screened.]"
Hello,

I am writing to complain about the screening process at the Ronald Reagan airport in Washington, D.C.

Today, November 24th at 9:45 am, I prepared to go through the security screening. I was asked to go through the scanner but asked to have a pat down because I am pregnant with a history of miscarriage. I was told by the TSA agent that there was no one available to perform the pat down and that she had no idea how long it would be. I was not allowed to go through the metal detector either. While I made it to the airport early in order to make sure I had time to receive a pat down, I was denied this right, which your website says I am allowed.

I understand you believe this scanner to be safe for pregnant women. However, the studies you cite are sponsored by you. I have not found any 3rd party studies that have been large, or positive, enough for me to feel comfortable with what I was forced to do today (unless I wanted to forfeit my flight).

This type of behavior is unacceptable. You claim to have the safety of passengers as your priority, but yet we are not allowed to look out for our own, and our unborn children's safety.

If pat downs are an option, and are told they are, then they should truly be an option. Lies about this makes me further doubt what you say about the safety of the scanners.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Fresno to San Francisco October 29, 2014, about 12 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Comments: TSA does not have federal criminal jurisdiction because Public Law 80-772 is invalid and does not have enacting clauses that are mandatory by the U.S. Constitution. TSA Staff Male about Hispanic touched my Buttocks while Rubbing not Patting Down Searching after I said prior to the unpat search to my Body do not touch my private parts and a Police Officer was present with a Name Fresno on his Uniform who escorted me all day and the Manager was present also and allowed it in violation of the Tenth and Fourth Amendments.

To whom it may concern:

I just wanted to let you guys know of a horrible incident that happened today at 10:30am on November 24th 2014, in sea-tac international airport.

My wife and I frequently travel and we have a newborn baby. She apparently was wearing a lotion that triggered the machines (hand wipe machine). After this was conducted, she was required to get a pat down, which is perfectly fine. Then however, they demanded that she be separated from our baby, which is absolutely not okay. I told them that we travel all of the time and know that she does not need to be separated from our baby, and despite the fact that I was there and could handle the baby, my wife also travels alone with the baby. What if she was alone traveling, would she need to be separated from the baby? No. And the fact that the gentleman, named (b)(6) (short, Middle Aged man with glasses and longer hair), told me that I needed to "come back to reality and take the baby" is absolutely absurd!

11/24/2014 4:13:31 PM Worst experience I have had, and have nothing but negative to report. So I apologize for that, but I just needed to let someone know so this doesn't happen to someone else.

I ended up taking the baby to avoid confrontation, they closed the door where my wife was, and my baby is wondering where her mom went? This can be traumatizing to a child.

Super disappointed and upset.

Thanks,

The caller flew from SAT. She is a Global Entry member. She went through the Precheck line and received a random patdown per the TSO. The TSO called 8 times for a female TSO to conduct the patdown. She had to wait 20 minutes. The female TSO advised that she would have to swab her hands. The TSO ran the swab at least ten times. She overheard other TSOs stating that they didn't like the machines and that the machines didn't work half the time.

She asked the female TSO if she could use another machine. The female TSO did not respond. She ran the swab through the machine a few more times. The female TSO then indicated to the caller that they would move her items to another machine.

Her purse was swabbed and it alarmed for traces of explosives or chemicals. She asked what was found and what the TSOs were looking for and the TSO advised that she could not tell her. The caller indicated that the process took 45 minutes and she arrived to the gate just as the flight was boarding.

11/24/2014 4:32:30 PM The caller asked if certain hand creams may alarm ETD. She asked for a list of items that may potentially alarm ETD so that she can avoid these items to avoid delays. She expressed concern in regard to not knowing what chemicals may cause the alarm so that she won't be stopped again.

Please note that there are several items that contain the same chemicals that are associated with explosives, and collection of these types of particles will result in an ETD alarm. However, TSOs are trained to resolve these alarms using a variety of resolution techniques.

I advised that providing a listing of items that may cause ETD sampling to alarm may be considered SSI which is not made available to the public as it could compromise the threat of aviation security.

The caller did not seem pleased with this information and indicated that she would ask about this to Congress when she visited Washington DC.

The caller seemed most intent not in complaining about the situation but wanting to know the cause of the alarm and what items she can avoid so that it doesn't happen again. My intent was to collect additional information in regard to the situation, however the caller did not seem that she wanted to continue the conversation.

11/25/2014 8:28:20 AM On a recent trip to RSW airport my wife was asked to pull her top up my wife asked for a private pat-down @ that point another agent came over & said layettes dal you need a private screening @ that point they proceeded to feel around the bottom & top of her breasts. My was traumatized by this procedure & would like justice for these actions. Contact Name (b)(6)

Comments: Pat Down went to far. Touching my privates, hand went down my pants and up my boxer shorts. Attitude by supervisor was frustrating. Took over 30 minutes To screen my bag. I recently took a flight from Chicago's Ohare to Boston's Logan air field. I requested to opt out of the AIT machine. The TSA agent assured me it was safe. I again requested a pat down in very clear language. He told me to "go through the machine." I complied. When I told the agent on the other side of the machine that I felt my rights were being violated, he just narrowed his eyes and walked away.

Where did this happen? ALABAMA - HSV - Huntsville International

What happened? I was traveling with my wife and infant and a child under 12. My wife and kids went through the metal detector while I put the last of our bags onto the conveyor belt. Then I was held back and the agent told me that they were going through a shift change. I don't know why a shift change warrants me being separated from my children. I was then told to go through the imaging detection instead of through the metal detector as described on your website, traveling with children. I opted out of the imaging because I did not want to be separated from my family. I was never given the option to go through the metal detector. Instead, another agent that did the pat down search

Caller said his son was detained for a strip search at BTY yesterday and missed his flight. He was stripped down to his underwear and during the search he was told that he would make his flight but he didn't. He wanted to know if TSA could compensate him for the money lost when he had to rebook his flight. He wanted to know if this was protocol that TSA could cause someone to miss a flight.

I apologized for the inconvenience and advised him:

11/25/2014 11:29:56 AM

TSA's role is to ensure aviation security and no passenger will be permitted to pass through the checkpoint until they have been cleared. There is no policy for reimbursing someone the cost of their airline ticket.

However, the pat down procedures do not involve lifting, removing or displacing any clothing to reveal a sensitive area of his body so if his son would like to provide some more details on the incident I can forward the complaint to the CSM for review.

He said his son was present with him but they are fine with doing whatever it takes to ensure security for the traveling public so it's no big deal.

Comments: This is an add on to my complaint from yesterday. I felt that the unnecessary pat down where my privates were touched and left me uncomfortable. I asked to speak with a supervisor and was disappointed with how rude the supervisor was to me. You sent me an email telling me to see a supervisor on site, I did that and was treated like a criminal. I feel less safe to fly if TSA agents are going to act in that matter. This was a horrible experience.

We were scoffed at and held for 10 minutes to get a male assist. Employee was rude, no empathy regarding my concern for my valuables while waiting. Pat down conducted professionally, verbal interrogation and tone unnecessary. Made to feel that this was an inconvenience to the employee. Asked several times to ask for a private screening, after I refused.

My girlfriend had not advanced for a screening by time mine was complete and all 3 item bins sorted. 4 calls for service ignored, she was asked repeatedly to opt back into the body scanner, she felt pressured and I was unable to assist with her anxiety and distress. I caught a female employee tagged to conduct a screening swearing under her breath; incredibly unprofessional. Girlfriend received private screening, no complaints.

I understand that it is early before a holiday with a large volume of traffic. This does not explain nor excuse the conduct of the employees, the coercion to 'go along, get along' to get service or the wait time. This behavior would not fly with military or police staff. Why here?

She traveled from BHM on 11 19 departing at 6:20am on Southwest flight 3919. She was at the checkpoint at around 5:30am. She indicated that her Bluetooth headphones (LG Headphones that goes on the neck) became missing from the bin when she was taken aside for a patdown. TSA contacted her and advised that they would have her item at security at BHM, however when she went to security to obtain the items, a TSA agent advised that the headphones were not brought to her.

She indicated that she cannot drive to the airport to pick up the device as she doesn't drive and is disabled. She stated that she needs to get the item back.

I first advised that items found at the checkpoint are turned into the TSA Lost and Found. I advised that she contact them and they can assist her in obtaining the item. They may be able to send it to her.

The caller was displeased with the information. I advised that other than to advise that she contact the TSA Lost and Found, I will refer the information to the CSM at BHM to make them aware of the situation. They would have the means to look into and address this.

My bag needed to be checked. The attending agent was (b)(6). I am type 1 diabetic and have to travel with all my insulin apparatus. (b)(6) insisted on opening every item in the insulin bag including the box of Omnipod pods. She was annoyed because I tried to tell her what the items are. She then deliberately opened every item, telling me her gloves were sterile. Indeed, I watched her walk out of a pat down and start with my items.

Why are the security staff not better trained to recognize the needs of diabetics. There are millions of diabetics in this country. There is no excuse for the treatment I just received. I am reporting this incident to the American diabetic association. Please acknowledge this email and what you can do to prevent this happening to others with special medical needs. The security personnel need to be shown how to think out of the box w/o compromising safety.

Caller flew from PDX and is now missing her wallet that went through the checkpoint. Caller thought that when a TSO went through carry-on luggage, they had to have the passenger present. To ensure the security of the traveling public, it is sometimes necessary for Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to conduct hand inspections of carry-on bags. TSOs receive training in the procedures to properly inspect passenger bags and are required to exercise great care during the screening process so that when bags are opened a passenger's belongings are returned to the same condition they were found.

Transportation Security Administration (TSA) policy requires Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) to reasonably ensure that carry-on items, including disability-related devices and aids, are kept within a passenger's line-of-sight when a passenger is required to undergo additional screening. When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening,

This complaint is to both express my disbelief at the treatment of handicap and also to provide a suggestion that would bring dignity to at least a few handicap people.

My husband is newly disabled and so we are seeing the handicapped through very personal eyes! Before the Event that broke nearly every bone in my husband's body from the waist down we traveled through impersonal (or very personal) cattle lines called TSA screening lines as a easy necessary evil.

We have been through the following screenings in the short time that he has become handicapped:

John Wayne orange county – 5/2013

PDX - 11/10/2014

Kauai – Lihue – 11/18/2014

Those screenings although more in-depth than ladies in wheelchairs and especially more intrusive than what a non handicapped persons goes through went as smoothly as possible which made the following incident a glaring and very upsetting end to a long awaited vacation.

Traveling through Orlando is never pleasant. Today was particularly difficult. I was in line to pass through the scanner and I asked the TSA person (b)(6) or similar) if I could pass through the old x Ray machine. He said it doesn't work like that I decide whatever I want. Every single person behind me went through the x Ray machine. I had to wait for a female pat down which I don't think he even called for. It was at least 5 minutes. You really should employ more professionalism.

TUS does not have an imaging machine and caused me to have a very groping and invasive pat-down which was extremely uncomfortable and humiliating. I feel this was a severe safety check as I had worn light weight cotton slacks with no buttons or zippers. The agent searched reached under my waist band and touched my bare skin deeper then she needed to do. I feel she could have felt any dangerous item from the outside of my very thin cotton waist band. I also felt she was intrusive when running her hands up the inside of my legs and touching my private area. To Whom It May Concern,

I departed Bradley International Airport (Hartford/Springfield) today with my husband and 21-month old twins. I have read the TSA guidelines regarding food for infants. I brought 2 prepackaged containers of YoBaby yogurt to feed my babies on the plane and had separated that food out with their milk for screening.

When we got to security, we were told that we could not bring the yogurt with us because the containers exceeded 3.4 ounces. When I pointed out that the guidelines for infant foods are different, I was told that we could keep the yogurt with us if we agreed to a pat-down. This seemed totally unreasonable and not in accordance with the guidelines you have on your website that state: "When traveling with an infant or toddler, passengers are also allowed to bring into the screening checkpoint more than 3.4 ounces of pre-mixed baby formula (in a powder, liquid, or frozen state); milk products; juice; gel or liquid-filled teethers; bottled water; and canned, jarred, processed baby food and essential non-prescription liquid medications".

My babies have infant boarding passes and are still lap-children. They clearly fit your guidelines for "infants or young children". I need to provide them with food during the flight, and I have never had a problem bringing this same yogurt at any other time that we've traveled, and we've flown with them frequently, many times through this same airport.

I asked to speak with a TSA supervisor regarding this issue and was given the same answer, and then spoke with another TSA supervisor (b)(6) (I think that was his last name), who told me the same thing. In the end I told them to throw out the yogurt because I don't think that patting me down over a prepackaged container of baby yogurt makes anyone safer, and that policy seems absurd. It certainly left me in a bind regarding feeding my babies during a long day of travel.

I would like a response from TSA regarding this issue, as I do not want to run into this problem again during future travel. I can be reached by email or by phone at (b)(6)

Thank you,

(b)(6)

I travel several times a year from Chicago (MDW) to Tampa (TPA) and never ever had problems had problems with the TSA being rude. 11-29-14 about 7:15-8:00am I opt out of going through the machine AIT machine which I always do. From you website it states it is my RIGHT to opt out. "Q. Can I choose the way I would like to be screened?
A. Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Signs are posted in front of each AIT location advising passengers of this right."

Which the TSA makes me feel that it is an inconvenience to them-but that is why they have jobs. I have no problem with the pat downs but the rudeness of (b)(6) and her supervisor (b)(6) at Tampa Airport yesterday was uncalled for this was terminal C for Southwest airlines. There was another young lady who almost missed her plane because her baggage need to be check besides what happen to me. I saw the complaint cards but did not feel comfortable in leaving them with airport because I thought it would just come up missing. The supervisor (b)(6) made a comment it was the busiest day of the year but they should also be prepared to handed that. I was almost in tears yesterday after (b)(6) yelled at me and made a scene. When I started looking at her name tag she called over her supervisor in which he made the comment about being busy. I do appreciate all the security at the airports that is not my problem. I do not appreciate the rudeness of TSA officers that feels like I am an inconvenience to make them do their job.

Travel time was 845-SW flight 4128.

I also had my computer and money in my purse waiting for me in which (b)(6) was looking for the owner of them because I had a bag of coins in my purse that I forgot to take out.

(b)(6)

I hope this was video taped and I guess if I was in a wheelchair I would have no problem to opt out of the AIT machine (Just an observation from the yesterday).

Why is there no link on your website to file a formal complaint about rude employees?

What happened? I was molested by TSA during a pat down. A female touched my virgina, buttocks, and breast. I was violated in front of other passengers and officers. I was not allowed access to my property until I agreed to the molestation. I was told if I did not allow the officer to touch my buttox, I would not be allowed to fly. I was singled out among many other passengers. My Disability Description: The caller is calling regarding his wife. She had back surgery about a month ago.

Passengers Name: (b)(6)

Response Details: I explained that we do recommend that passengers inform the TSOs have of any difficulty raising their arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or if any areas of the body are painful when touched. This can help make screening easier for everyone.

I advised the caller that any passenger that is not able to or refuses to use the AIT or WTMD will be screened using a patdown. Passengers that are not able to raise their arms above their heads for 5-7 seconds for the AIT must under go a patdown for screening. We do not use wands for screening. All passengers have to be screened regardless of clothing, disability, or other circumstances. However, the TSOs are trained to be careful with areas that are injured or painful when touched.

I apologized to the caller several times. I explained that during a patdown the agents are required to patdown the entire body, and they go upward until the meet resistance.

I told her that I would send her information on how to fill out a complaint since she feels that she was not accommodated, and went over some of the information for the requirements for filing this complaint. I also told her that this would go to the CSM at DEN so that they would be aware of what took place.

Incident Details: She requested a wheelchair at DEN. She was put off the side, and she had a patdown for screening. She stated that she told her that she was not able to raise her arm. She stated that she told her that it was hurting her, and the damage was already done. She is now taking two pills a day, rather than the one that was necessary before. She stated that she is a retired federal agent. She was told by the agent that she did not need a wheelchair. She stated that she was wearing a top with no bra and jeggings, therefore everything could have been seen. She stated that it was not necessary to raise her arm or pat her down. She was flying on Frontier. She stated that she could have been wanded or have gone through the machine with only one arm up. She stated that this was not necessary. She asked if every person with a shoulder injury has to be battered.

Caller stated that she went through major shoulder surgery, and she and her husband are upset. She was in a wheelchair, and was told that she could t go through screening since she could t raise her arms. She stated that the TSO that did the screening was unnecessarily rough. She also said that she was told that she shouldn t have taken a wheelchair if she could t do this. She told the agent she needs to be careful with her shoulder, and offered to show her the prescription. She said she Caller is flying from SDF to FL and her husband was selected for PreCheck and she did not get selected. Caller has GE. Caller spoke to the airline and all the information was correct. Advised Caller:

While some airports may allow individuals who are traveling with a TSA Pre^u2713™ eligible passenger to access the TSA Pre^u2713™ lane, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and this procedure may not be available at all times or locations. Individuals traveling with a TSA Pre^u2713™-eligible passenger should not expect to be directed to the TSA Pre^u2713™ lane each time they fly. TSA PreCheck is random and not a 100% guarantee. To receive TSA Pre^u2713™ as a member of a CBP trusted traveler program, please include your 9-digit PASS ID, also known as a known traveler number (KTN), in the "Known Traveler Number" field of your reservation. In addition to your PASS ID, please ensure that the name, date of birth, and gender included in your reservation are an exact match to the information on file with CBP. Passengers with metal implants may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. AIT screening requires that passengers be able to stand still with their arms over their head for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device.

TSA Cares,

I am writing to provide feedback from our recent traveling experience. To start off, immediately below is what I submitted, as I always do, prior to my wife, (b)(6) flying anywhere.

TSA Cares,

11/30/2014
4:50:56 PM

I am writing this as a pre-flight notification for an upcoming flight from Norfolk, VA (ORF), to Orlando, FL (MCO). My wife, (b)(6) suffers from Reflex Sympathetic Dystrophy (RSD), a debilitating neurological disorder. I typically call the TSA Cares line and provide this information over the phone, but have found that for one reason or another TSA Cares Notifications of our itineraries or requests for a Passenger Support Specialist (PSS) have not always been established. I will follow this up with a phone call with the respective sites the day prior to each flight.

RSD is a condition where the skin is super sensitive to touch, even clothing, and the nerves cause the muscles to constantly contract without relaxing. My wife does not have the ability to raise her arms and hold them over her head and she has a metal device implanted which prevents walking through the metal detector. Due to these conditions, she requires the pat down. She will be in a wheel chair as she cannot walk distances. She can stand but is unable to stand on the designated footprints. The PSS' we have dealt with on each occasion have taken all of this into account and handled her accordingly. We have been very pleased with the service we have received from TSA Cares and the PSS program.

Itinerary

Southwest Airlines Flight 4346 Nov 22 7:05 AM Norfolk International Airport (ORF)

11/30/2014
4:04:48 PM

On 11/28 I flew from FLL to Newark on United flight 415. I am a type 1 diabetic and have to fly with needles, vials of insulin, and other vital supplies. I keep them together in one bag in my carry-on baggage. At the security checkpoint in FLL, my luggage was subject to a search. The TSA security officer was (b)(6). She was arrogant, insensitive, empowered, unreasonable. She deliberately went through all my sterile items. She claimed her gloves were sterile despite the fact that I saw her come from a pat-down right to my possessions without changing her gloves.

I am about to leave for Europe now. I sent a complaint right after the incident which left me very shaken and my blood glucose levels high.

I received a return no-reply email. I am not letting this matter stand. I am contacting the American Diabetes Association and will take this further. There are millions of diabetics in this country. Your TSA personnel need to be trained in dealing with diabetics and not cause them unnecessary stress before a flight which is stressful enough. Please let me know how this will be handled. Thank you, (b)(6)

My son was issued his new Alaska driver's license and it is a Temporary Paper card in a small ziplock bag. Several employees at the State of Alaska DMV told us that this form of ID is accepted and we would not have a problem using it for travel. On Monday 11/24 we were told by TSA agents at the Anchorage Airport that this form of ID is no longer accepted. After an embarrassing hold-up of the line, a thorough body pat-down and search of his belongings we were granted entry.

The caller flew from DFW on Saturday and went through the AIT, then they swabbed her hands and it came back positive. She stated she has received a pat-down the past few times she has flown. Her husband gets PreCheck, but she does not, and neither of them have applied through any of the programs.

Advised:
Some household items could cause the ETD to alarm. Any time there is an alarm when going through the AIT, they will need to resolve it by using a pat-down. Sometimes, passengers will be randomly selected for additional screening. You can always request a supervisor at the checkpoint. There is no way for me to tell you exactly what caused the alarm or if you were randomly selected.

Good day!

I frequently fly Jet Blue from terminal C at Boston's Logan Airport. I am not physically able to bend down to remove my shoes as required by TSA. I have been to other airports where a chair is provided at security checkpoints for passengers who need to sit down in order to remove their shoes. There has never been one at Logan. I find this incredibly frustrating, and this must be a common problem for many customers.

12/1/2014

AM

Please have a chair available at all security lines. Many passengers cannot bend over to remove shoes from a standing position. This would be very much appreciated by customers, and would free up your employees from performing pat downs on people who otherwise wouldn't need them.

Sincerely,

Comment : I was traveling from Madison to MSP with my 90 year old mother and several of the tsa staff were very disrespectful to my mothers mobility issues. She must use a walker or she will fall and on several occasions she was told to use a cane to go thru the metal detector (which would have resulted in a fall) and then when she was pat down she was told to stand with out using her walker, I intervened and was told to stand back. they then again told her to stand without aid, this went on 3 times. Finally they got it. then she was subjected to a 10 minute pat down by a new female tsa agent. Come on really a 10 minute pat down of a 90 year old woman in Madison WI. Hardly a terrorist threat. I am very disappointed in the care given to my mothers safety and fall prevention care.

We had a small bag with 3 ENSURE PLUS for his lunch and dinner today. The bag had a cold pack in it as well. The man who was at the end of the check point (large guy) said what was in the bag of bottles. I said ENSURE PLUS, he said he could see that but why were we taking it? I said it was medically necessary. He asked why it was medically necessary. I said it was 50% or more of his daily nutrition. He said we had several options: 1) open all the bottles; 2) have a full pat down and scan the bottles. My husband told him a previous TSA agent already patted him down. He could SCAN the bottles and cold pack, no problem for us at all. The TSA guy said you know you can buy these at the store (no kidding, where did he think we bought them to start with?). TSA would NOT agree to scan the bottles of ENSURE PLUS unless there was a full body pat down. My husband got angry and told him to throw the bottles away.

By the way he was smirking and very arrogant. The lady TSA with him looked very surprised at his behavior.

Now, the result of this TSA agents behavior and attitude, my husband had to go without lunch as there was nothing he could eat in the airport. Instead of 700 calories of ENSURE PLUS, he only got 150 calories of Sprite.

I find this TSA agent's behavior towards a senior citizen with ALS absolutely apaling to say the least. We were NOT treated like this in the Kansas City airport MCI.

It is my understanding that when a passenger tells TSA something is medically necessary, they should be allowed to take it on the plane. SCAN it all you wish, but let us take it on the plane. Actually (b)(6) would have drank 2 of them ENSURE PLUS before the plane left the gate.

Please call me and get back with me. I am going to report this to the President of the United States.... our TSA is NOT working to support people with special needs.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST TSA LOGAN BOSTON AIRPORT

I am filing this civil rights and civil liberties complaint about a dreadful experience that I had at Boston Logan Airport on the 22nd November 2014 at about 5:15 am EST. I'd left the hotel in the downtown area of Boston at exactly 5 am EST and it takes about 10 minutes to arrive at the Airport, so it could not have been more than 5:15 am EST by time that I arrived at the security area to clear security. I went through the security area and entered the screening area. I explained to the agent that I would not be going through the body scanning machine, and asked to speak to the supervisor. TSA Cares had been contacted prior to this trip because of past problems at Logan Airport clearing security, and had advised me to ask for the Supervisor of the security area and request a female assist. The agent said that she would get the supervisor. When the supervisor by name of (b)(6) came, I advised him that TSA Cares had told me to ask for a supervisor for the purposes of clearing security because I would not be going through the body scanner. He told me to put my things through the X Ray, and then he would call the Female Assist. I told him that I did not want to be separated from my two laptops, an iPad, and a bag with credit cards and cash after they had gone through the X Ray machine. He told me that that is what I would have to do. I asked him how long it would take before the Female Assist would arrive. He said that he did not know. I said again that I could not put them through due to risks of them being unsupervised. He told me that that is what I would have to do at that airport. By now others that I had entered the screening area with had already cleared the area because they had gone through the body scanner. The discussion took about 2 to 3 minutes. I had had to wait for him to arrive and so by now it was about 5:30 am EST. He then appeared to change his mind and told me to put my things through and the Female Assist would be waiting. I did put my things through and the TSA Agent called (b)(6) was waiting for me. She told me not to touch my personal items. She appeared to be about to pick up my personal items consisting of two laptops, an iPad, a purse, my coat, a laptop bag, a sports jacket, my boots, all spread out in about six bins. I told her that I did not want my laptops to be dropped. She then called for help. A female TSA agent came to assist her with carrying the items. By that time they were giving each other knowing looks and developing a bad attitude towards me. They placed the items still in the bins in a small area near the X Ray machine conveyor belt. She asked me if it was ok if she combined the bins. She indicated that she intended to place the bins on top of each other, including covering my laptops with the bins. I told her that I did not want anything placed on top of my laptops. I said "You will not take responsibility if you break them." She said in a loud nonchalant voice, "I won't take responsibility for breaking them, but the US government will." I responded, "Wouldn't it be better not to break them in the first place?" By now, other travelers were observing and listening to the discussion. In fact, one female business traveler was looking at (b)(6) quite bemused at her attitude. This should be evident on the tape recording from the area. I then told her that I wanted to see her change her gloves. She changed the gloves, making a snide comment as she did so, the gist of which was "Yes, I will change my gloves." She then asked me if she could place my heavy coat on top of my laptop. I again told her that I did not want anything on top of my laptops. By now, it must have been about 5:40 am EST. She had still not taken me to the private screening area although she was aware that I wanted a private pat down. She began to swab everything, testing them for explosives. All this was being done at a The caller asked how she can place a complaint. She stated that she was escorting her son at TPA from security. She stated that she thought it was unprofessional. She stated that she was wearing a wig, and they searched her head. She stated that her gloves were dirty and she was nasty about her asking her to change her gloves. She stated that her sons phone was cracked when it came out of the conveyor belt. She stated that she went back to the desk at the airport and reported the matter. She stated that they reviewed video footage, and indicated that she was not lying about the damage. She stated that she looked at the phone at the belt, and they walked to C35 and then decided to report the damage. She stated that the screen on the phone is shattered. She stated that the men at the counter, mentioned it is a federal offense, and she interrupted them. She stated that she wants this to be reported. She stated that she is a GS 13 step 2 federal employee. She stated that she feels that if it was a caucasian person complaining it would have been taken more serious. She stated that they were interrogating her and questioned her trying to catch her in a lie. She stated that she would be assuming that it was based on her race if she stated that they were discriminating against her. She stated that she is not sure why they questioned her.

I apologized to the caller for the manner in which her screening was conducted, and explained that passengers can request that the TSOs replace their gloves for screening with clean ones.

I explained that our standard process for any passenger wearing a wig or head covering of any kind, generally requires a patdown of the head area. They would offer private screening if the removal of the head covering is needed. However, a passenger can request private screening at any point in the screening process.

Subject: Complaint for Tampa TSA

Please send this to the complaint department. I was unable to find it on the mobile site. First off I am always am opt out and will continue to be an opt out. I was "randomly" selected to go through the scanner. Once again I am a opt out and have always been an opt out.

Your team should not have made me feel pressured to go through a scanner. I told the man at the who is a larger white Male who I believe has glasses (could be wrong) that he needed to get a female assist for the pat down because I was not going through the scanner. He told me if I do not follow the rules I could fly. I told him I was a opt out again and needed a female assist and I called him stupid. He then called a supervisor who got a sweet old lady to molest me. She actually touched my private parts multiple times, not just one sweep. She's old so I forgive her for her mistakes, but the guy who was before her should have a talking to.

I will never support the TSA but I will tolerate it. My passport was not signed and has never been signed and I have used it for flying multiple times and today I was told it was a mater of national security to have it signed. That is so retarded and part of the reason I will do my best to vote for congress men who will defund TSA.

Dear TSA:

I would like to bring up the issue of racial profiling. This is an issue that affects a myriad of people all over the world. Racial profiling is when race or ethnicity is targeted when looking for suspicious activity. Usually, this means that foreigners are singled out because of their appearance, something they have no control over. I am tired of going to an airport and watching minorities being given "random" searches. There numerous other factors security can look at, such as luggage size, strange body language, and questionable clothes, like thick coats in the summer. Suspicion should not be based on appearance alone. Ever since 9/11, Muslims especially have been looked as terrorists. In reality, they are just regular people like you and me. There have been so many incidents that I have seen at the airport when a Muslim person is given further checking than the regular person. There would be no alarm set off by any sensor; they would simply be further checked because they look different. I am Sikh, and so I am a minority. My father wears a turban, which causes security to always spend more time checking him than they would a white person, for example. This is not just for my father, but for all Sikhs around the world. Most people assume that only Hispanics, African American, and Muslims face racial profiling, but it is not just them. It is something that affects all minorities. I have witnessed it in my own life. I understand that it is for safety, but we can no longer call these "random searches."

In my research, I have encountered various racial profiling claims and their results. It is said that "where the profiling is said to have occurred... managers of similar programs nationwide must attend a four-hour class on why racial profiling is not acceptable and why it is not an effective way to spot terrorists" ((b)(6) Online). Your association is trying to change the way terrorists are found, but are these courses working if there are still so many racial profiling issues? The TSA uses many other measures to increase safety. You have travelers take their shoes off to prevent shoe bombs, and you do not allow liquids on the plane in order to prevent liquid explosives. There are body scanners to check through clothes to the skin, but there have still been cases where weapons are carried in body cavities. Even the highest quality machine cannot detect into the body just yet ((b)(6) online). Racial profiling is not the only issue that your organization is trying to address, but that does not mean that it is any less important than the others. Racism is something that this nation has been fighting for hundreds of years now, and racial profiling needs to be fought as well. It is cutting into privacy. On your website it says, "Pat-downs are used to resolve alarms at the checkpoint, including those triggered by metal detectors and AIT units. Pat-downs are also used when a person opts out of AIT screening in order to detect potentially dangerous and prohibited items," (TSA, Online). Often this is not the case. Comments: I found the pat down by (b)(6) excessive. I notified TSA officials that I have a knee brace and would need additional screening (as I do at many airports). (b)(6) then made me take off my shoes and my outer garments (disputed my TSA pre check) and proceeded to pat me down (hair to feet, in the crotch and under my breasts) and then did the wipe of my brace underneath my clothing. I waited complicity through the process, feeling quite exposed and appearing like a detained criminal in front of the other passengers. Again, this is NOT the same treatment I received at other airports by multiple other TSA officials. I feel that (b)(6) search of me was unreasonable and violated my rights against unreasonable search beyond the scope of my consent and applicable TSA security regulations. I fully expect and appreciate your time for a response. Thank you.

To Whom it May Concern,

I am writing to share about a recent experience I had, traveling over the holiday. I departed from Dallas Love Field, and arrived in Orlando, FL (and then returned through the same airports).

When I was in the security checkpoint, approaching my turn to enter the x ray scan, I discreetly informed the attendant near me that I am transgendered (born female, legally and physically presenting as male). I ask for them to just let the person running the x ray know of my situation, and that I had a medical wrap around my chest covering my breast area, so there was not any confusion, surprises, or embarrassing moments for either of us. Both instances, Dallas and Orlando, they said no problem.

The problem came, when I got out of the x ray booth, and had to be patted down. I've had this happen before, so was not surprised. What was surprising, was the fact that knowing the information I gave them, both airport attendants patted me down with the palm-side of their hand, all around, across, and even cupping my breast and nipple area.

12/3/2014 I flew before, about 2 years ago, out of Oakland, CA. I had explained this to the attendant and there was no problem. The male who had to do a pat-down, used a wand on me first, and then did a quick back-hand run across my chest area. During my 12:17:19 time this week, out of Orlando, I had even asked the man if he could use the backside of his hands. He asked if I wanted him to change his gloves. I said "no, I'm not concerned about germs, I just don't think it's very professional to be touching with the PM palms of your hands like that"... he replied, "well thats just the way I have to check".

All I can see is that one of two things is going on: The gentleman in Oakland instinctively knew to use his backhand, as to increase my comfort level (and probably his own) and there is absolutely no sensitivity education going on to other TSA members. or, the method the gentleman in Oakland used is the expected protocol, and the men in Dallas and Orlando were not taught it, or ignored it. Either way, I felt completely embarrassed, violated, and vulnerable. It honestly makes me never want to fly again.

I know I am certainly not the first, and only, transgendered person to go through security at the airport. With the increasing attention and legal changes going on in the media lately, you'd think there would be more sensitivity to the patrons going through the airports, who come in all shapes and sizes.

I look forward to your prompt attention to this matter.

Disability Description: Caller has a pacemaker

Response Details: Response: Informed caller that TSA does not have any evidence that the AIT will damage her pacemaker but she should not have went through the WTMD. Informed caller that she can request a patdown instead of the WTMD or AIT if she feels the screening will damage her pacemaker. Informed caller please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures. Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded this information to the appropriate Customer Service Manager. Informed caller to monitor her email over the next few days in case the CSM needs to contact her.

Incident Details: Caller: Caller states she went to the airport and when she went through security she was informed to take her shoes off. Caller states the TSA agent informed the caller that she had to take off her shoes and caller informed the TSO that she was over 75 and did not have to take off her shoes. Caller states she informed the TSO that she also had a pacemaker and can not go through the screening and the officer informed her that it wont hurt her and informed her that she is holding up the line. Caller states the TSO informed her to just go through the screening. Caller states that she reluctantly went through the WTMD as the officer would not give her any other option. Caller states that she regrets going through the WTMD now as she is concerned that it has damaged her pacemaker. Caller states she usually receives a pat down when she goes through screening due to her pacemaker. Caller states the lady that patted her down was very nice and stated she would report this incident to her supervisor also.

Comments: Dear Sirs,

12/4/2014 I would like to file a complaint with the TSA team at Miami, Florida airport (terminal D)

9:04:36
PM

On November 16, 2014 at 4:05 p.m. my husband and I were going through a security check point at the above mentioned airport, and I, as a woman who is about to start a family, decided not to go through the full body scanner and told the TSA officer, (b)(6) that I preferred a pat down.

I was waiting for a pat down for about 15-20 minutes, which is a totally unacceptable waiting time frame for an airport. During this time, nobody came up to me to explain what was going on and why it was taking so much time. Meanwhile, there were 3-4 women working on the floor plus some men. After waiting for 15 minutes, I asked the officer again to find somebody who could pat me down, and he responded very rudely, saying that I had to wait or to go through the full body scanner, which I eventually HAD to do.

After I went through the full body scanner, I decided to get the names of the supervisors who were in charge, in case I would have decided to take legal actions against the employees if there were any damage done to the fetus of a baby.

The supervisor who was working on the floor refused to give me her name, covering her name tag with a clip board that she was holding in her hand, and instead of apologizing she asked me if I was a USA citizen. Afterwards, she suggested that I should talk to her other supervisor in the office.

The supervisor who was sitting in the office, of an Asian look/origin, refused to give me their names as well. I explained the situation and again the only reaction I witnessed was indifference. In fact, she and her male assistant, who was in the office said that it was my voluntary decision to go through the full body scanner. I wanted to write down her name, but she leaned forward positioning her arm in such a way that I couldn't see the name on her name tag. I had to leave the office in utter frustration feeling hopeless.

Caller is just using her PreCheck for the first time. Caller has GE. Today was put in the PreCheck line, but still had to remove her shoes and do regular screening. She had to remove her coat and then when an alarm went off she had to remove her shoes. She felt embarrassed by the experience because she was holding up the line and other passengers were looking at her like she was in the wrong line. Caller would like to know if she should have shown her GE card at the checkpoint. Caller would like to know if there is a certain type of shoes that are recommended so that she does not have an alarm going through the checkpoint.

Advised caller:

Travelers who are directed to the TSA PreCheck lane may be allowed to keep on their footwear, light outerwear, and belt, and leave their laptop in its case and 3-1-1 compliant liquids gets bag in their carry-on luggage.

12/5/2014

It is important to remember that TSA PreCheck does not guarantee an individual expedited screening. TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport.

You can request a patdown if secondary screening is needed instead of going back and forth taking off items. Secondary screening can be required if alarms must be resolved.

Additionally, all passengers must have their identification verified by a TSO and will go through a metal detector or Advanced Imaging Technology scanner as part of security screening procedures. If you have metal in your shoes, it is likely that it would cause an alarm in the WTMD.

When making a reservation, passengers should enter their 9-digit PASS ID, also known as a known traveler number (KTN) into the "Known Traveler Number" field of their reservation. In addition, we recommend that you review your reservation to ensure that your name, date of birth, and gender are an exact match to the information you provided CBP at the time of enrollment or what is in your online GOES account.

If you have concerns about your screening at the checkpoint, feel free to ask for an STSO to address those. Call us at the TCC if you are consistently having issues with getting expedited screening benefits in the PreCheck lane.

Caller and her husband will be flying to tomorrow. He does not have a PreCheck notification and she does. She said that he is 82 years old and can not go through the checkpoint alone. She wanted to know if she can get PreCheck put back on his ticket or if he can go through the PreCheck line with her. She called United Airlines and was told that PreCheck is random. She said that they both enrolled in PreCheck.

I gave the following information: TSA PreCheck, identifies low-risk passengers to determine if they should be directed to the TSA PreCheck lane for expedited screening. If TSA determines a passenger is eligible for expedited screening, this information will be embedded in the barcode of his or her boarding pass.

While some airports may allow individuals who are traveling with a TSA PreCheck eligible passenger to access the TSA PreCheck lane, TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and this procedure may not be available at all times or locations. Individuals traveling with a TSA PreCheck-eligible passenger should not expect to be directed to the TSA PreCheck lane each time they fly. In addition, please remember that TSA PreCheck does not guarantee that an individual will receive expedited screening.

1:28:00
PM

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—though not completely eliminate—the need for a physical patdown on travelers 75 and older that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms. It's important to remember, that any individual may be required to remove their shoes or undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means.

TSA continues to incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport and no individual will be guaranteed expedited screening.

I gave information per: <http://blog.tsa.gov/2014/06/tsa-travel-tips-frequent-flyer-profile.html>

If you check-in online before your flight and don't see a TSA PreCheck indicator on your boarding pass, contact your air carrier. They can update your Secure Flight information right away. If everything matches, you will be able to re-print your boarding pass again, hopefully with TSA PreCheck this time!

Central Wisconsin Airport - Wausau, WI

Comments: I was made to have a pat down which is a very intrusive, insidious and un-necessary. I had a picture driver license, numerous credit cards, medicare, health insurance and blood donation cards all in my name. Because my drivers license was a paper copy of the exact NH driver's license including a clear picture of me which the TSA agent even admitted that. Because I have moved from NJ to NH and NH has 60 days to provide a plastic copy, I do not think a pat down was necessary for a 72 year man traveling with his wife. My luggage was also ransacked even though it went through the scanner as I did. Also, they did not have a body scanner which I do not mind but someone touching my private area is uncalled for.

Either you need to make a consistent policy across all states to require them to provide the hard plastic driver's licenses immediately as NJ does or accept the paper copy!!!! Another option is to make a body scanner mandatory at all airports. You also need the policy to be consistent because I went through the Boston Logan airport on my way to WI on 12/14 without an issue but the TSA agent did ask for another card which was very reasonable.

One of the TSA officers even threaten me that he would make me miss my flight because I was complaining that I had all the information needed. They would not even allow me to show them all the information that proved who I was.

I will never let your people touch my private areas ever again. I will place my hands over them rather than let your people touch them. It is totally uncalled for. Make a body scanner mandatory for an airport operate.

Comments: TSA agent asked me to unhook my belt and then wanted to put his hands inside my waistband. I said, "yes, you can put your hand in my pants" - because going IN my waistband is going IN my pants. After saying this they got hostile and asked if I wanted to do a strip search screening like it was some type of punishment. They need training in English, sentence and word meaning, and to accept compliance without getting all weird. With all the poor police training evidenced in Ferguson and NYC - you should better train what are hostile people.

Subject: TSA Examination Follow Up

Hello,

When flying from Denver to Detroit today, Fri. Dec. 4th, my husband and I was directed to the Pre-TSA approved checkpoint.

Upon getting my hands tested, a chemical was detected. I was then examined and brought to a private room for a pat down. While the TSA staff were handling and examining all of my belongings, including my jacket, a stain was left on my brand new jacket.

This jacket, was $200 and brand new for this business trip back to Michigan to meet with potential clients.

I truly appreciate the safety precautions that have been put into place to keep us travelers safe. However; the mishandling of a passenger's belongings is disappointing and frustrating, to say the least. Especially, when I was so cooperative with the staff.

The moment I was approved to be released, my belongings were left in disarray for me to put back together, as they quickly escorted me out so they could examine another passenger.

Attached is the photo of my brand new jacket, and unfortunately, I did not notice the stain until we were already beyond the safety check. There is no other way this stain would have been added.

If you need further information, please let me know, I would be more than happy to provide it.

I would appreciate a reimbursement for the new jacket, as I do not know if it is a stain that will be able to be removed by a dry cleaner.

Thank you so much.

Looking forward to your prompt response,

TSA Cares.

I am (b)(6) the person with CRPS/RSD. My disease involves all areas of my body and stress exacerbates all of my symptoms. Since the problems I encountered in December of 2012 and we were referred to TSA Cares, I have had no issues until this recent trip. My husband always informs TSA Cares and all of the airport TSA Offices which we will be flying through of my disease, at least a week prior to the flight and then the day before with each airport to make sure they have been contacted. There is also a long e-mail trail that TSA can follow.

During my dealings with PSS Officers in TSA Cares, I have met wonderful, caring individuals who have gone out of their way to ensure I was dealt with respectfully and with minimal discomfort. They sat down to talk with me to find out about my disease so they can understand and assist me in going through the screening. Since most of my PSS Officers have been males, I at first did not think twice when I was handed off to another officer for a pat down in Orlando on the 28th. But I should have had a warning when twice. Officer (b)(6) asked me to hold my arms out to my sides, and twice I said I could not. Finally my PSS Officer said that I could not and Officer (b)(6) started the pat down stating that if anything she did hurt to tell her so. The problem with CRPS/RSD is that the slightest wrong touch can cause a flare and at that time it doesn't matter if I tell her if it hurt or not because I am flared instantly at that point. That is why I need specially trained people to do the pat down. That is why we go through TSA Cares. That is why we e-mail TSA Cares before my travels. That is why we follow up with supervisors the day before we travel and are assigned a PSS. That is why we stop at our departing city and talk to the TSA supervisor at the desk when we land and let them know when we be departing. That is why we explain my disease. That is why we handed the CRPS/RSD handout to PSS Officer (b)(6) and PSS Officer (b)(6) at Norfolk (no problems at all there). WE do not just show up at the gate and expect to be handled with care. We prepare, and prepare, knowing how the slightest wrong touch can set me off.

We have waited a week hoping to hear from (b)(6) in Orlando or (b)(6) before going up the chain but have not heard anything back, so I am filing a complaint. A flare can set back my Physical Therapy 3 weeks or more and the pain is excruciating. If you look at the literature you will see that CRPS/RSD pain is the highest pain on the McGill Pain Scale even beating that of Cancer. Having to sit here and write this complaint to accommodate TSA's request has increased my stress, which as exasperated my symptoms (note second sentence in this note). Thank you very much, TSA.

On two consecutive occasions, I have been pulled aside at the Jackson-Evers International Airport in Jackson, Mississippi, for a pat-down. On the first occasion (November 17, 2014), I was traveling to New Hampshire on business via Atlanta and Boston. On the second occasion, I was traveling to Oklahoma City (December 1, 2014) on business via Dallas/Fort Worth. On both outbound occasions in Jackson MS, I "alarmed" in the lower body going through the detector and was subsequently patted down. However, upon going through security screening at Boston Logan International Airport and the airport at Oklahoma City, I had no problem. I did not "alarm" going through the detector.

I make it a point to inform the security agent of my two partial knee replacements prior to any security screening. When I told the agents in both Boston and Oklahoma City that I "alarmed" in Jackson MS, each person at the respective airports stated that the sensitivity is probably set too high.

Prior to approximately three weeks ago I did not have this problem at the Jackson-Evers International Airport in Jackson MS.

Since most of my PSS Officers have been males, I at first did not think twice when I was handed off to another officer for a pat down in Orlando on the 28th. But I should have known better. My boyfriend flew from MKE and had to get a patdown because his shirt set off an alarm. The TSO that was giving the patdown made a comment that the passenger's man boobs had set it off. The passenger is 6 foot 6 inches and about 280. Caller believes this is not good customer service.

Response:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Comment : Dear Sir/Madam:

I have heard that in addition to the Pre-Check Program, of which I am not in favor, at Los Angeles INTERNATIONAL Airport, there is now a policy in action of choosing, at random, certain passengers who may also be treated as official Pre-Check passengers. I understand that the Department of Homeland Security owns and instigated this policy in order to relieve pressure associated with too much traffic for their resources.

The military are also automatically exempted from absolutely any security check whatsoever. So a person completely unknown to anyone can literally just walk onto any plane flying anywhere at any time from one of the world's busiest international airports which is demonstrably the target of terrorists.

I demand that this policy be rescinded and so does everybody I have spoken to. You have a clear responsibility to protect the people and we the people feel very, very vulnerable.

Sincerely,

I am a very upset disabled Veteran and federal employee who has been harassed and threatened by your agents.

I am filing this complaint, as I hope that others or I is not harassed the same way in the future.

While I am supportive of the screening process, excessive screening and harassment should not be tolerated.

I was assaulted in the military and having your agents pat me down twice for no reason is not acceptable.

I brought with me my liquid iron which is clearly labeled; however, I never send my liquid medicine through the xray.

Caller flew from Nashville to Tampa. The screening by TSO (b)(6) was unprofessional. He was going through PreCheck line. Caller was wearing a pair of slacks and a light weight jacket. He had suspenders on and this, caller believes, set the TSO off. When he spoke with a supervisor, they gave him a card with the TCC number on it. He stated he finally gave in and endured a pat down. All the other people were very respectful. Caller flies a lot and this is his first complaint.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) regrets any unprofessional treatment you may have experienced. TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all passengers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Please be advised that a passenger can always request to speak with the Supervisory Transportation Security Officer at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures.

Callers daughter has flown recently and received an invasive patdown on both her departing and return trips. She has an anxiety disorder. She is trying to help her daughter avoid this type of screening again. The airports were Mesa and Pasco, WA. She was married in June and does not have a married ID on her license. She is taking a trip and does not want this to happen again. The ticket is placed in her married name. She provided the marriage certificate the last time she traveled. Her ID is in the single name. Is there anyway to avoid the patdown? Caller wanted the CSM contact information for Mesa?

Advised:

12/8/2014 7:09:43 PM I stated the marriage certificate is an acceptable alt ID. I instructed the caller from the template below about what ID's are acceptable as alternatives to a valid one, such as SS card, birth certificate, marriage license, credit cards, checkbook, work ID, student ID or any valid document that would have their name as it appears on their boarding pass and also you may be asked to complete the Certification of Identity form if needed. The TSO will ask for at least two forms of alternative ID at the security screening checkpoint. I advised them to get there at least 2 hrs before the flight departed. She could ask to speak with a supervisor or a PSS if they want to conduct another PatDown at the checkpoint.

To whom it may concern,

This morning, my mother arrived at the Lubbock International Airport to travel to Dallas to visit her grandchildren. She has traveled numerous times and is always cooperative. She also had her right knee replaced last year, the material in her artificial knee often makes the metal detector "go off" This morning the metal detector went off and she was asked to take off her boots. She communicated to the agents about her knee and suggested that she would rather just have the pat down. The agent that would need to do the pat down seemed irritated...either that my mother suggested how she do her job or the fact that she had to do a pat down....I don't know why, she seemed irritated and she started to do the pat down. As she did the pat down she ended up squeezing my mothers left knee 3 times, which needs replacement and is in poor condition. My mother let out a yelp and nearly lost her balance due to the pressure applied by the agent. No assistance was offered to my mother after she expressed obvious pain. This situation needs to be avoided.

12/8/2014 8:06:46 PM Why were the agents impatience or upset? Why did the agents not listen to the customer who is explaining the reasons surrounding the situation and just abide and go with a pat down? Why did this particular agent take issue with the situation, I doubt it is uncommon for elderly to have replacement joints and go through security? What other factors played a role? Was my 68 year old mother a risk to security? Was the line so large at Lubbock on a Monday morning before 8am that there was a lack of time to to the job correctly?

I demand answers to this neglect.

Caller is at an airport now, she was screened by a lady, and was made extremely uncomfortable. She wanted to know if it was against policy to give out the names of the agents? She had tried and had ask for the name of the agent and was denied, she said the agent turned her name tag around so she could not see it. She says she has been given a patdown before and has been fine with it but she has never been given one like this. She is very upset. She says she normally is giving TSA compliments. She says she went over to a desk and spoke to someone about this agent and that person called the agent over there and as the agent approached she ask the caller if this was a compliment or complaint as she turned her name badge around backwards. She again was put in another uncomfortable position. She said she was told by both women she can ask for a private screening. She traveled out of LAX.

Told caller

I explained to her that I thought it was fine to give out names, the agents wears name tags so she can ask for the names.
I was sorry this happened to her. I could take her complaint and forward it to the CSM for her. that is the person that has to handle complaints at each airport.
I ask her if she would like to call her herself or let me take her complaint and email it to her? She wanted to call her herself.

She had concerns calling and thinking she may have spoke to the CSM already, she wondered if it was the lady at the desk. I told her I did not think it was but at anytime on her call she felt it was she can call us back and let us know and we will take this a step farther for her.
I was sorry this happened.

The caller indicated that his wife has a knee replacement. He and his wife traveled from PHL to DEN and back. The both received expedited screening during their departure and return flight. At PHL, she passed through the WTMD. He stated that the TSO reprimanded her for not advising of the metal implant. She then underwent a patdown screening.

When departing from DEN, a very nice TSO asked his wife if she wanted to be screened via a patdown or AIT after his wife advised of the knee replacement. His wife opted for AIT and the TSO escorted her to an AIT machine a few lanes over. After she passed through AIT, the TSO reprimanded her having her shoes on. She received a limited patdown of her leg area.

He asked if she could not have went back through xray screening.

12/9/2014 3:01:11 PM
He asked how they received Precheck prior to completing the enrollment process.
He asked how they received Precheck prior to enrolling

I advised that passengers with metal implants should advise TSOs of the metal implants before screening begins. Regardless of whether a passenger receives expedited screening or standard screening. TSOs must resolve alarms and anomalies via additional screening.

In regard to the incident in DEN, she would not have been permitted to go back through xray. If the AIT was in a standard screening lane, passengers are to remove their shoes during standard screening.

You may still be able to experience TSA Pre?® screening on a flight by flight basis.*

1. TSA Risk Assessments uses Secure Flight Data already supplied to TSA, which allows passengers to access the TSA Pre?® screening lane on a random basis

To whom it may concern,

On December 1, 2014, at approximately 1100 hours, I was at the San Diego Airport, Terminal 2. I was there with my 9 year old daughter travelling home to Hawaii. While being processed through the TSA screening we encountered a very unprofessional and rude agent b

As we proceeded through the line, a TSA agent was using a wand to swab people's hands. As I approached he provided no instruction and just looked at me. Because I saw the passengers before me, I held my hands out palm up. He swabbed my hand and the machine provided an alert. I asked the agent "what does that mean?" He did not explain or respond to the question and instead asked if I was travelling alone even though my daughter was with me. I answered that I was with my daughter at which time he ordered me to take my daughter and "wait over there" (pointing to the side of the line). I started to move over with my daughter and asked "what does this mean" referring to the alert and the situation. He ignored my question and began looking through and over the crowd as if he was trying to find another agent. In the mean time my daughter asked me what was happening. I told her I wasn't sure but the machine must be getting a false reading for something. The agent was using his portable radio when I was talking to my daughter. I asked the agent about how long this would take as I was concerned about getting to my flight on time. Again no response was given. The agent again used his radio to request additional personnel. When he stopped talking I asked again about how long will this take. The agent still did not respond. My daughter asked if we would miss our flight. I replied to her that I wasn't sure because the agent was ignoring me and not answering my questions. Miraculously he heard that comment and snapped back that he is not ignoring me. In a rude tone he said "you are talking to me while I am busy." I tried to explain that every time I asked a question he wasn't doing anything. Now the agent told me "You are just trying to distract me and it will not work." At this point I became agitated and told the agent that it was ridiculous that he has ignored my questions and still has not explained why my daughter and I are being detained. I told the agent he was being rude and unprofessional. Again his reply was that my distractions would not work on him. About a minute passed in silence and without anything else occurring since the last words exchanged, the agent responded. The agent told me that if I had any questions that now I would be permitted to ask. I informed him that I would like to speak to a supervisor as he has already proven himself unprofessional and unwilling to help.

I was then escorted by another agent to yet another line. I asked if he was a supervisor and he related that he was not. I again asked for a supervisor and I was told that I would need to wait. We waited again for some time still without an explanation. Other agents asked me several questions about our property and we were then told I would need to be patted down in another room. Mind you we were still not informed of why we were being detained nor were we provided any details about what was happening or going to take place. As a father it was also disheartening to see my daughter scared and unsure of what was happening. The supervisor was now present and explained that we would need to relocate to another room where he could answer any questions I had while I was "patted down".

On a side note the pat down was very unsafe. The sliding of hands, only protected by latex gloves, up and down a persons clothing is unsafe for the agent and is not very effective for finding devices, objects, etc...

12/11/2014 2:09:42 PM I am contacting the TSA with a question. Quite a few years ago, my husband unknowingly had a knife in his carry on bag. Of course, it was detected. We went through all of the required procedures, without a question. We had to go through the process of hiring a lawyer and the cost of that and travel to our nearest large city only to have the situation dropped in court. This was a mistake on his part, for not checking his bag before traveling. The bag had been previously used months earlier on a road trip. We totally agree with TSA and Homeland Security procedures. My question is.....Will my husband always be subject for screening and pat downs? Or is there a time limit on this? We were wondering, as he is consistently pulled for screening. Mind you, we understand and have no problem with this, since we understand the importance of this protection. Thank you for a reply.

Regards,

Caller wants to know if there is a supervisor high in the complaint department. Caller has a huge issue at the with a TSO at SAT.

escalation notes: GAH

12/11/2014 6:22:31 PM The caller is very upset about the patdown she got at San Antonio on 12-10-14 between 1:00 and 2:00 pm. When she went through screening she had leggings with a tight top on with an oversized top on over it. She is a type 2 diabetic and was carrying her medications and a bottle of water for the medications in her purse. She was asked by one of the TSO s during the screening, if she wanted to keep her bottle of water or keep her arbon glasses. She went through the X-ray and the TSO sitting there says he see s a knife. Her stuff was went through several times. The passenger believes that the TSO that gave her the patdown was having a bad day and was excessive and rude during the screening.

What I can tell from the passengers description of events it appears that an anomaly was detected in her bag and this caused secondary screening. The passenger stated that the TSO officer (b)(6) describe to her what she was going to do during the patdown and asked her if she wanted a private screening. She affirmed that she would want the patdown in private and that she did not want officer (b)(6) touching her. Apparently the passenger feels that officer (b)(6) was having a bad day and taking it out on her. The passenger feels violated. Her flight was AA200 boarding at gate B4

Comments: This is the 4th time I've been criticized for using the TSA Pre-check line because I have an artificial knee so require a pat down. Each time I'm told the patdown is too much trouble and asked or required to use the scanner. I much prefer the precheck line so I don't have to remove my laptop and liquids and ABSOLUTELY don't mind the patdown.

Caller would like to know why every time his daughter flies she gets stopped and gets secondary screening. Caller states she's gotten stopped twice and missed her flight one of those 2 times.

I advised:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

12/12/2014 7:41:24 PM
TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers.

I advised caller:

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

-Secondary screening
-Delayed or denied airport boarding

Advised he could apply at trip.dhs.gov.

My family and I were traveling at Fort Lauderdale International airport on December 13, 2014. We went through the checkpoint at Terminal 4 Gate H at approximately 07:30 am. We went through the checkpoint and they had to check two year old daughters bag. They checked her bag which had yogurt and other kids items. All of a sudden they decided to patdown my girlfriend for no reason. The supervisor reprimanded them for parting down the wrong person. So of course the person that alerted walked away and who knows what reason they alerted. What kind of security is that.

Screening at SAT versus PHX, a humiliating experience.

Comments:

As an 82y/o disabled Vietnam vet, security screening at SAT consisted of presenting acceptable ID and walking through the metal detector arch, period. Security screening at PHX rejected all forms of ID, then the metal detector arch, body scanner, Caller went through screening and he put his laptop on his clothes in the bin, his laptop got pulled and he had to have a patdown, then he states tsa put the laptop back through screening and then she dropped it. He said I do not know if anything is wrong with it yet, but what can i do if it is torn up?

Caller is wanting to file a complaint. The caller stated she was appalled by the way she was treated at the screening area in Indianapolis. The caller stated she is on a round trip from El Paso to Indianapolis for a conference. The caller stated when she left El Paso, TX they let her go through the PreCheck line and keep her shoes on. The caller stated she had recently injured her knee and was wearing a knee brace. The screeners helped her go through the machine and treated her with respect. She can not say the same for the screeners in Indianapolis. When she was leaving Indianapolis today she was not allowed to go through the PreCheck line. She stated she was force to hobble through the machine. They swabbed her shoes and then told her that there was a problem with them and put her shoes through the x-ray. The caller stated she was swabbed from head to toe. She was then pulled aside for a pat down and escorted into a private room like a criminal with two TSA females. The caller stated she was shaking and felt bullied, threatened, and violated. She stated she had to remove her knee brace during the private screening and told if she did not go through with it then she would not be allowed to fly. The caller stated she does not like to be touched because she has post traumatic stress. The caller stated she asked to speak to a supervisor who was condescending towards her and did not want to cooperate when she asked for his name.. The caller stated she felt emotionally raped and that her privacy was violated. The caller stated she is not going to put up with this kind of behavior.

She stated she thought it was just poor customer service, not a failure to accomodate.

The caller stated one of the TSO females name was either (b)(6) or (b)(7). The caller described one of the females as being white and medium size with short hair in either her 30s or 40s. The caller described the second female as being black with nappy hair. The caller described the supervisor she spoke with as being tall and slender and white.

I advised the caller that I would sent her complaint to the Customer Support Manager in Indianapolis for review.

The caller mentioned that the phone number she provided only messages can be left at that number because she travels so much. And if contacted at that number to please leave a call back number.

I am a Global Entry member, KTN # (b)(6) TSA PreCheck was printed on my boarding pass for DL 1448 departing at 9.55pm on 12/12/14. I reached the checkpoint shortly after 9.00pm. TSA staff said that "because PreCheck closes at 9pm, I MUST receive a regular screening (shoes off, laptop out, belt off, liquids out, full pat down)." At all other US airports to date, my experience has been that PreCheck screening is available in the regular lanes (not only in the PreCheck lanes). As a paid Global Entry participant with PreCheck on my boarding pass, why was I denied PreCheck benefits in this case?? Response required.

My names is (b)(6) and I live in Sedona Arizona. I am a Certified Residential Real Estate appraiser who works for the largest private lender in the country on contract as a Loss Mitigation Appraisal Analyst.

Approximately 14 months ago, after 4 years of ongoing illness and trials and tribulation, I was diagnosed with Relapsing Remitting Multiple Sclerosis (RRMS) to go with my Chronic Daily Migraine Headaches that I have had fore over 14 years. My illness entails running random high fevers for weeks, extreme fatigue and weakness, tremors in my hands and arms, I am unable most of the time to lift my left arm and when I do it is extremely painful, spasticity, loss of balance, loss of coordination in both hands so at times I am unable to write, urinary incontinence, pins and needles and limited feeling in my left arm, hand and left foot, loss of hearing, among many other things. I spent over $1200 on my air ticket to make sure that if I was unable to fly due to being too sick last Tuesday, it would be refundable or changeable without a problem. Fortunately, my fever broke two days earlier and my boyfriend helped my get everything ready for my trip to Arizona last Tuesday.

Part of my illness is giving myself injections of a drug called Copaxone. It costs over $8,000 a month and what the insurance company does not pay, the manufacturer gives me some financial assistance for because I have slowly been working less and less. It comes in prepared glass syringes and cannot go through the security x-ray machines, so whenever I travel, I hold it up and politely request a hand check for it. I have been doing this now every time I travel, which is more than once a month since last March, 2014. Each time a TSA Agent takes the box around and waits for me to go through the scanning machine. My belongings go through the x-ray machine and then I gather up my belongings and follow them over to an area where they swab the inside and outside of the medication box and needles for explosives (I assume) and swab my hands also with the wand and test them and then I am free to go. Although I could use a wheelchair, I am not yet ready to do so. I can walk and am still strong enough most days to do so, so I refuse to not do so, even if it takes me a little longer.

On Tuesday, 12/10/2014 I was scheduled to take Southwest flight 2422 confirmation #FMCUQ7 at 6:15am changing planes in Atlanta and going on to Phoenix AZ. At 5:00am I was going through the security line and requested a hand check and held up the box. A short medium size black haired woman looked at me and rudely said, "If we hand check that we will have to search of all your things and a full pat down."

4 8:46:07
AM

I responded politely by saying, "That's not necessary and I came through here two weeks ago heading to New York and you did not do that and there were hundreds of people and now there is no one., Typically the box is scanned."

She literally seethed and barked back at me, "Don't tell me how to do my job! If you won't let us scan that box, that is what must happen."

So I said, "But I can't let you scan this box. It's my medicine and it will be destroyed. " I hand the box to her and went through the full body scanner and am cleared. All my belongings are x-rayed and cleared through the x-ray machine as well. As I come through to retrieve my things the woman barks something at a TSA male person and he literally jumps in front of me and PUSHES me out of the way shouting at me, "Don't touch those things!" He looks at me like I have done something terribly wrong and yells at me to back away and which are my things, so I point to my coat, handbag, boots and backpack. I actually left the computer there and they had to get it later.

Then another woman with lighter frizzy hair, heavier, pulls me harshly over (so yes, 4 people) to an area in the middle of security and tells me she is going to do a full pat down and I can do it there or in private. Never did she ask me if I had any medical conditions or if anything hurt or needed to be watched out for anything. I said no to the private room and she started slowly giving me a speech about the touching in the pat down. While she is doing this the same man and woman and are not swabbing my bags for explosives, they have their hands inside of my belongs and they are taking things out and looking at my private things and reading medicine bottles and opening zippers and dumping things and turning things over etc. I unfortunately have to use catheters and these were out there for all the world to see. The lady doing the pat down has me holding an arm out that is not physically able to, and when I try to tell her I cannot do it she tells me she may have to start over again if I cannot cooperate. And then, with all their violating of my civil rights and searching through my private things without cause, they open a medicine prescription bottle and find medical marijuana. So she looks up at me with her hands on the literally microscopic amount of medical marijuana that I have a prescription for and was in its prescription bottle and she should have NEVER had access to and then commits a felony and detains me as if she is a law enforcement officer, which she is not. At this point I can no longer stand just because I have been standing longer than I have in months, and I ask for a chair because she told me I could not take my things (not true) and could not go to the plane (not true but I didn't know.)

I am a Global Entry member, KTN # (b)(6) TSA PreCheck was printed on my boarding pass for DL 1448 departing FROM DETROIT, MICHIGAN (DTW) at 9:55pm on 12/12/14. I reached the checkpoint shortly after 9:00pm. TSA staff said that "because PreCheck closes at 9pm, I MUST receive a regular screening (shoes off, laptop out, belt off, liquids out, full pat down)." The caller would like to speak with someone in regard to how his wife was treated.

He stated his wife was made to take her clothes off and and was screened via a patdown screening. He indicated that she was so upset that was the only information that she was able to provide and he could barely understand her. This occurred at MLB in FL today.

He indicated that he tried to contact the CSM via option 5 on the IVR and was routed to me. He stated that he was not asked for an airport code.

She flew with Delta and departed around 2:30pm. She went through screening between 1pm and 1:30. She was traveling to Jackson MS with a layover in ATL.

He stated that he hopes that the CSM contacts him to explain what happened.

I advised that I have documented the information that he has shared and will refer the information to the CSM at MLB to make them aware. They would have the means to look into and address this. I advised that the CSM may contact him if they require additional information.

I attempted to ask probing questions of the caller to obtain additional information in regard to exactly what happened and why, but the above is the only information that the caller could provide.

Caller traveled to Mexico and on their return they went into a Duty Free store and bought a bottle of liquor that was packed in a Duty Free bag. They were told that if they didnt mess with the item and left it in their bag they could leave it in their baggage on their connecting flight from Chicago to Detroit. They went through the screening with the bottle and the TSOs said they would have to inspect the bottle. Caller said they then decided the bottle was an explosive device after attempting the bottled liquid scanner. They could not get the bottle to sit right and could not complete the bottle liquid scanning. They were told the bottle didnt pass inspection and they took his bottle of liquor and they gave him a patdown. Caller said they were very rude and wants to make a formal complaint about it. Caller stated that they did tell him he could take the bottle out and place it in checked baggage. Caller said they have spoken with their attorney. Caller says he thinks his rights were taken and he will go higher if he needs to. Caller continually stated they did nothing wrong and wants to know why they did additional screening. Caller states that someone should look at the sign because it doesnt say that their items might not be allowed through.

Advised caller : Liquids, aerosols, and gels in sealed STEBs will be screened at the TSA checkpoint with bottled liquid scanner technology used to inspect bottles and their contents for the possible presence of liquid, aerosol, or gel threat materials. As always, items that cannot be screened will not be allowed through the security checkpoint. TSA recommends that passengers continue to place duty-free liquids, aerosols, and gels in checked baggage if they are concerned the items will not be cleared through the checkpoint.

Advised caller : Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

12/15/2014 3:03:17 PM Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

Hi.

My name is (b)(6)

At 13/12/2014, when i was in Austin airport, to go to Munich via Houston, the security guards made me a pat-down.

I'm Turkish Navy Officer, was traveling with Nato Travel Order. I have no valid passports on my own.

NATO says: NATO Status of Forces Agreement (SOFA) orders are not required to show a passport or visa for entry into nor exit from United States under international law and domestic regulations. So NATO members shall be exempt from passport and visa regulations and immigration inspection on entering or leaving the territory of a receiving State.

I tried to explain this rule and shown them an explanation writing from (b)(6) but they didnt understand me, they said that because of no passport on me, they had to do pat-down.

was about to miss my plane, i unwillingly accepted pat-down.

i looked to your web site writes : "If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by imaging technology or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger will be screened using a thorough patdown procedure instead. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by imaging technology."

To whom it may concern,

I urge you to read the following narrative, a flight attendant's perspective of a diverted flight, very closely. It is an illustration of a blatant violation of FAR 108.201 and a potential violation of FAR 108.225. Please confirm receipt of this email and advise of any further instructions. I would like remain anonymous in my submission.

On Friday, March 14, 2014, United Airlines flight 1425 from Chicago O'Hare International Airport (ORD) to Ted Stevens International Airport (ANC) was diverted to Kenai Municipal Airport (ENA) in Kenai, Alaska. The reason for the diversion was severe, unexpected winter weather at Ted Stevens International Airport in Anchorage, Alaska. Upon arrival in Kenai, we were advised that we would be getting more fuel and taking off for Anchorage as soon as weather conditions permitted.

While we were on the ground in Kenai, several problems began happening. We began to run out of food and water. There were several heavy drinkers onboard, many of them upset that we wouldn't continue serving them alcohol throughout the tarmac delay. Our lavatory waste system became extremely full. The waste level indicator was fully in the red. On top of that, we were unable to let passengers off of the aircraft to use the lavatory because there was no Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to re-screen them before they come back onboard.

12:13:31 PM After several hours into our tarmac delay, the captain had Pizza Hut pizza and bottled water from a local Safeway grocery store delivered to the aircraft. None of the food or water was ever screened for dangerous articles. Everything was simply driven planeside and brought onboard.

Meanwhile, while weather conditions in Anchorage were not showing any signs of improvement, our captain was about to exceed his maximum duty limitation per Federal Airline Regulation (FAR) 117.

Once the fuelers in Kenai finally arrived, they improperly fueled the aircraft, eliminating any chance of us making it to Anchorage HYPERLINK "x-apple-data-detectors://2" on Friday evening. It was at this point that the passengers were directed to deplane the aircraft and wait inside the terminal building for further instructions.

After securing the aircraft, the pilot and flight attendant crews also deplaned and left the airport for our hotel.

On the morning of Saturday, March 15, 2014, at approximately HYPERLINK "x-apple-data-detectors://4" 8:45AM Alaska time, I called the ORD duty desk and spoke to supervisor (b)(6) about the situation. She told me that all of the passengers had been rebooked on Alaska Airlines and that the crew would be ferrying the plane to ANC. She then corrected herself and informed me that our flight would be a revenue flight. She assured me, however, that everyone would be re-screened before boarding the aircraft.

When we arrived at the airport, we quickly learned from airport operations employees that none of the passengers were going to be re-screened. No body scanners. No X-ray machines. No metal detectors. No wands. No pat downs. Nothing. As long as they provided a government-issued ID matching their name on the passenger manifest, they were authorized to board the aircraft.

Caller said he is calling to report an issue that occurred at Detroit Metro his home airport on 12-12-14.

He is Global Entry and had Precheck printed on his Delta boarding pass for Flight 11148 but he was denied Precheck and he was given a Patdown.

The excuse given to him was that PreCheck lane is not open after 9 PM but at other airports when the PreCheck is closed he gets it in the regular line.

He said the TSO directed him to the regular line before even scanning his boarding pass because the Precheck Line was not open.

RESPONSE:

12/16/2014 We do not guarantee ever that you will get the PreCheck.

4 1:12:25

PM After careful review, we have determined that this issue does not fall within the purview of TSA. We encourage travelers to contact the local airport authority, which is responsible for the operation and oversight of the airport.

All airports are not required to accommodate you and allow you to get PreCheck benefits in the regular line.

Normally we scan the boarding pass but if the PreCheck line was not open you would have been referred to the regular line anyway.

You can complain to your airline that the PreCheck lane was not opened.

Again we are not obligated to give you PreCheck and it is not a guarantee and I cannot tell you different.

THIS IS A CONTINUATION FROM THE PRIOR EMAIL BECAUSE I FLEW BACK FROM PHOENIX 12/15/2014. THE CORRECT DATE OF THE OCCURRENCE IN WPB WAS 12/11/2014. Here is some clarification and I have done research and my civil rights HAVE been violated regardless of the Florida Marijuana laws and the fact that the AZ Department of Health (AZDH) deems the medication I was carrying in my pill bottle medically necessary and I under-went extensive medical screen prior to being prescribed it.

The medication I asked to be handchecked is Copaxone and it is carried in its prescription box. It costs $8,000 per month and arrives in pre-filled glass syringes that are SEALED and in individual unopened 40mg packages, along with drug interactions materials and the manufacturer labeling, etc. Until it is ready for use each syringe is not unsealed out of its package and the estimated cost of each syringe is $720. The x-ray machine will destroy the medication and the medication slows the progression of my illness and extends not only my life but my ability to walk, see, hear, talk, feel, breathe and function at all. It stops or slows the damage the disease is doing to my brain. So when a TSA officer looks at me and rudely says, "If you

What happened?

On December 15th, at approximately 12:03am I proceeded through the TSA Precheck line on my way to Flight 108 Alaska Airlines leaving gate C4. I was traveling alone, wearing blue jeans and a heige Columbia fleece. For reference, I have a global entry pass (b)(6). Your video tapes should be time-stamped as to when my QR code for my flight was scanned. The TSA agent asked me to proceed through the metal detector as normal, no problems.

However, after I was 15-20ft away heading to grab my bags from the X-Ray machine, she stopped me saying I had been randomly selected for additional security. I asked why, and she said the Disability Description: Caller has a knee replacement and her son has Downs Syndrome.

Information Request: Caller is a United retiree and she usually has to fly on standby and she can't call the 72 hours prior to the flight to setup assistance. She was wondering if she could ask for a supervisor when she gets to the checkpoint to help her get through the screening. She would probably know about 24 hours before the flight what her itinerary will be.

Response Details: Asked the caller if she felt like the incident back in April was discrimination because her son is disabled and she said yes. Asked the caller if she would like me to give her information on how to file a complaint in writing and she said she would like the information sent to her but she doesn't want to file a complaint. She would like the information in case it happens again she will know what to do.

Advised the caller we recommend that she call 72 hours prior to the flight but that we can still send it if the lead time is less. Also informed her she could ask for a PSS at the checkpoint to help her through the screening. Caller says she was given the number to the manager at the Honolulu airport to call ahead when she gets there and she wanted to know if that was the same for Las Vegas. Gave her the number to the CSM at McCarran which is (b)(6)

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

- Have metal implants that may alarm the walk-through metal detector;
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

4 1:10:12
PM

Passengers with metal implants may be screened using Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT), a walk-through metal detector, or a thorough patdown. AIT screening requires that passengers be able to stand still with their arms over their head for 5-7 seconds without the support of a person or device. Passengers using the walk-through metal detector must be able to walk through on their own.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger must be screened using a patdown. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a walk-through metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT. If passengers are screened using a patdown, it is important to know the following:

- Patdowns will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.
- Passengers may ask for private screening at any time.
- Passengers should not be asked or required to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they or their traveling companions or family members:

- Have an intellectual or developmental disability;

Caller wants to speak to someone in customer service; she had some jewelry stolen. She was on Flt 1013 from JFK to Long Beach on Dec. 12th. She didn't open her bags until now because she has been sick. She reported it to JetBlue. The number they provided to pursue a claim was not a good number. When she called back, she was given the TSA number.

Was there an NOI?

The jewelry was stolen out of her carry-on bag. She was delayed due to a patdown. She had POC and batteries and was challenged to get her property through the airport.

I advised caller that I would send them a claim form, the filing of which causes an investigation to occur, and I would forward their information to the CSM for appropriate action.

Caller request the claim form be surface mailed to her. I confirmed her address.

Caller stated her experience at Chicago O hare was so severe she almost had to go to the hospital. The caller stated she was flying from Chicago O hare to Philadelphia last Monday. The caller stated she does not go through the scanners so she gets a pat down. She was held 15 minutes in a corner and could not see her baggage. When she tried to leave the corner to check on her belongings she was told to get back in the corner. She was yelled at by a TSA agent who stated you chose this. The caller stated that women TSA agents were doing nothing but standing around and laughing at her. She stated she saw woman TSA agents picking there fingernails with a pen and doing nothing. She stated when a female agent finally came over to her the TSA agent was yelling at her to find out if she had any pockets. So she pulled up her shirt to show she was wearing leggings. The lady then yelled at her asking why she pulled up her shirt. The caller stated the screener kept yelling at her to find out if she had any metal or sharp objects in her pockets. The caller stated she would have walked through the metal detector and gone through a pat down to show she did not have anything in her pockets. The caller stated she requested a supervisor and asked for a chair. She was going to collapse because she hadn t had her medication. She felt terrorized. She believes that the incident was racially motivated. She referenced Ferguson, MO. The caller stated the intimidation was horrifying. The caller stated there were 3 huge black woman standing over. The caller stated she saw the screener who was suppose to be watching the x-ray monitor was laughing so hard he wasn t even watching the monitor. The caller stated she would have had a heart attack if she had not received her medication. The caller stated she is 60 year old woman. When the supervisor got over there, she ran the other woman off. The names of the people who were treating her like this are - (b)(6) (b)(6) (b)(6) Ian was the scanner who was laughing. This happened last Monday, her flight was scheduled for 1:40. The caller stated the incident happened around 11:45. The caller stated the supervisor did not give her name. The caller stated she spoke to another supervisor who was a white male who was very nice to her. She stated he would not give her his name. Caller kept stating to look at the video to see what happened. She kept asking if this is how someone is treated when they ask for a pat down instead of going through the scanner. The caller stated that while she was waiting for her pat down an older lady with blond hair and brown roots approached her and stated she was harassed at O hare the night before. She stated she was given the name (b)(6) with TSA. The caller did not have an email address to provide me. The caller also stated she had taken some pictures of the TSA agents who were harassing her on her phone.

I provided the caller with the address for sending in a complaint via postal mail and provided her with all the instructions as to what she should include in her letter.

Caller went saturday to New York Kennedy airport and had a flight to israel. He wants to know if the way he was treated is normal procedure. He was asked to remove his shoes and jacket, He went through the AIT and was subject to patdown to clear anomalies. He advised he took his hand and ran it around the his waistline and belt. He wants to know if this is normal procedure.

Advised.
You are required to remove your shoes and jacket for screening, If the AIT machine which is the machine you were screened by see any anomalies on the body you will be subject to a patdown to clear the anomalies. The patdown procedure is what you experienced.
I went through airport security check at the Virgin Amerca terminal at Newark Liberty International Airport between the time of 10:00am to 10:30am on December 15. I don t remember the exact time I arrived at the security check point. I was made to go through a body scanner and when I was inside, I felt the TSA male agent made me stay there too long. He told me I wasn t posing right or holding my arms up right and he wasn t getting the image. So he made me stay and so he could re-image until he was satisfied.

Why was a male agent assigned to scan me? I m a slim young Chinese woman who was wearing no shoe, no belt, but just a thin body tight sweater and a pair of body hugging jeans with nothing inside the pocket. There was absolutely no space between my clothing and my slim body that I could hide anything without creating a visible bulge. Yet, I felt I was held inside the body scanner for two long by a male agent.

Besides, I saw that not everybody was made to go through the scanner. It seemed certain people were exempted from it. Throughout the entire history of aviation or even the entire existence of the USA as a country, was there ever a bomber who was a young Chinese woman? If not, why was that I was selected to go through the body scan while others weren t, and why was I being assigned to a male agent to scan my body???

12/18/2014 8:37:03 AM

I wasn t notified by any agent there that I could have a pat down option. I only found out until just now. Nobody offered me any option in lieu of a body scan. Nobody asked if I was pregnant. I totally didn t know I could refuse body scanning in order to avoid the radiation. The male agent there just authoritatively told me to go into the scanner, and I obeyed thinking it would take one snap. But I felt I was made to remain there because he had to re-do the imaging. I wasn t offered the option of having a female agent either. Is it because I have to right to request a female agent to scan me?

I am not happy with the traveling experience at the Newark Airport at all. I wasn I not made to go through a body scan when I left LAX, they gave me expedited screening. I don t understand why I wasn t given this option at Newark and I am not happy that I was assigned to a male agent to scan me.

Please investigate.

Caller flew on a travel junket for the casino and traveled from RDU to Tunica Mississippi and the Friday after Thanksgiving November 30th she was coming and went through the WTMD and the lady working it looked at her and called her the random female check and they gave her a patdown. This particular woman was in her face yelling at her and loudly and rudely explained to her what to do. She treated her like a criminal and was right in her face and told her to keep her eyes on her basket. She said do you want to go to some private screening are and the caller said she said she wanted everyone to see what she was doing. She was having a great day and weekend until this happened. She was 5 5, dark black, big chest, stocky build and 200 pounds. After it was over she started glaring at her. The caller is 5 6, 185, blondish short hair, white with freckles, golden cargo pants and a white pullover.

Caller has traveled twice and has to have additional screening. Caller wants to know why she has GE and PreCheck and has to go for this additional screening and how it can be fixed.

Response:

TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

12/19/2014 1:39:05 PM The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Traveler's belief that they are on a government watch list.
- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.
- Difficulty printing a boarding pass at home or at the kiosk.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online.

The caller started the conversation by asking if I was familiar with GOES and Global Entry. I advised that I was.

He is traveling from ELP to DC. The Precheck indication was on his boarding pass. He didn't have to remove his shoes, however received additional screening after passing through the screening technology. He stated that there was an alarm and he received a patdown. He stated that the additional screening had to be done because there were items on his person that didn't match his image. He had items (Kleenex and brush) in his pocket. The TSO advised that he asked in regard to metal items in his pocket.

He indicated that he spoke with a supervisor who indicated that he didn't know that there was a CBP enrollment center in EI Pass.

The caller stated that he presented his Global Entry card and it seemed that TSOs didn't know what it was.

12/19/2014 3:09:44 PM The caller stated that he hasn't had to go through such screening at other airports. He stated that he presents his military ID and is taken through a separate line where he walks through the WTMD and then clears screening.

PM The caller was primarily upset because he received the additional screening.

I explained that he is eligible for expedited screening (Precheck) as a Global Entry member which allows him to leave on his shoes and light outerwear as well as his laptop and 311 bag in his carry on. Even if the passenger receives expedited screening, TSOs are required to clear alarms via additional screening. Passengers have to be screened by TSA before they can fly.

TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport and no individual will be guaranteed expedited screening in order to retain a certain element of randomness.
<http://www.tsa.gov/tsa-precheck-participation-tsa-precheck%20%AE>

TSA recommends that passengers remove items from their pocket to reduce the chances of an alarm.

Caller's mother flew this morning from TLH-MIA and had wheelchair assistance and uses a walker due to mobility issues. Caller is upset because her 87-year-old mother received a pat-down.

Resolution:

4 3:31:19 PM Advised caller that no passengers are exempt from receiving a pat-down. Advised caller that in order to be screened using the WTMD passengers must be able to walk through on their own. Similarly screening by AIT requires a passenger to stand still with their arms above their head for 5-7 seconds. If your mother was unable to be screened via either method a pat-down must be conducted. Also advised caller that pat-downs are used to resolve alarms of the WTMD or anomalies identified by AIT. Apologized to caller for her being upset, but given the nature of the attacks during 9/11 all passengers have to be thoroughly screened before boarding a flight.

TSA Employee: (If Known) : (b)(6) and (b)(6) Comment : IS TSA TO ASSURE SECURITY OR CRIMINALIZE INNOCENT PASSENGERS?

TSA was created to strengthen the security ... and ensure the freedom of movement for people and commerce. Its vision is to provide the most effective transportation security in the most efficient way as a high performing counterterrorism organization with core values to include Integrity, Innovation, and Team spirit.

Wow- how commendable are TSA's vision, mission and core values unless one realizes their actions on the ground. I fly fairly frequently and have no choice but to navigate the security steps overseen by TSA. It is hardly ever a pleasant experience to speak with these a TSA officer- they are generally rude and their demeanor is very authoritarian as if they running the country. Rarely do you come across a more civil TSA person who smiles, and treat you with respect and humility which every passenger deserves. My most recent experience tops everything; it was most humiliating and I was treated as if I am a criminal.

Who am I? I am a naturalized senior citizen of Indian descent with 35 years of residency in this great nation of FREEDOM lovers. I also acquired DHS approved Global Entry which offers TSA pre-check security clearance to minimize hassles with TSA. At one point I also served in the White House Office of Science and Technology requiring a high level of security clearance. All in all I firmly believe that I am a responsible citizen and adhere to lawful policies and practices in my daily activities. However, my skin color and my heritage are beyond my control and it appears that more often than not, TSA treats people of color like me as if I am a "criminal" and create undue harassment and greater scrutiny.

During my recent travel from Orlando to MSP on November 18 I had a very unfortunate experience as follows:

1. I realized at the Delta counter that my driver's license was not in my purse and the best I could think that I left it in the hotel. Delta allowed me to check in with my Social Security and Medicare cards which, according to Delta, were the next best option in lieu of the photo ID.

2. When I got to the TSA pre-check counter with my wife and explained the unfortunate situation I was disallowed to get through that line and sent to regular security check. The issue for me was not going to another security check but the attitude of the TSA officer was absolutely horrifying and the beginning of making a "criminal" out of me as if I have committed something which has never happened before- misplacing the ID. I am even more horrified when I read the following on TSA website:

"We understand passengers occasionally arrive at the airport without an ID, because of losing it or inadvertently leaving it at home. If this happens to you, it does not necessarily mean you won't be allowed to fly. If you are willing to provide additional information, we have other ways to confirm your identity, like using publicly available databases, so you can reach your flight."

In addition I had my DHS authorized Global Entry card but it was never mentioned as a proof of identification. TSA could use publicly available database; they could see that my wife is travelling with me with all the documents. They could do all that to mitigate the unfortunate situation but they did not. Why- just to discriminate and humiliate me.

3. I am handed over to someone with a phrase 1+1 with no clear explanation. I was told that I had no option but go through the body scanner which I generally don't care about. However, I went through it. Then I was patted down by SEGUI (perhaps his first name) who was extremely insensitive in conducting the pat down search and I felt awful when he touched my genital area. I asked him to have a supervisor meet with me. It has been my understanding that the TSA has begun using an "enhanced" pat-down procedure for those who would rather not subject themselves to a full-body scan. Why both the body scan and pat down in my case except that TSA was determined to discriminate and dehumanize?

4. In the meantime my hand carrying baggage was fully searched in part because I had a vegetable curry container from my leftovers in a restaurant and I had no issues with it. However, they also removed a SOLID FROZEN butter container citing it to be a disallowed item and let me repeat it was SOLID FROZEN in a commercially marked container. All of this was happening step by step which was nothing but discriminatory, demoralizing, disrespectful and criminalization of an innocent senior citizen at the hands of TSA personnel who are supposed to make you feel safe, secure and protected.

5. I had to wait more than 10 minutes to finally meet the officer (b)(6) a Supervisory Officer. He essentially topped the list with his very authoritarian body language, total lack of respect for me, and simply telling me to write if I had any issues. It was not possible for me even to inform him of about the lack of sensitivity in the pat down search by (b)(6) I asked him about the removal of butter container and he refused to show me the policy which states that FROZEN items are not permissible. He made every effort to dehumanize another human being.

I totally understand that I misplaced my DL but by no means was I the first person doing so. TSA has access to my pre-clearance data; they saw two of my permissible IDs; I was accompanied by my wife; I am a senior citizen and yet all that did not matter. Does not TSA know how to treat other human beings with due respect, humility, and care? Is the letter "T" for "terrorizing" the innocent passengers- it truly felt like that the way I was treated. What a horrific experience when I was patted down. This pains me to send this message as I am a frequent traveller who has consistently complimented the TSA at various airports for their outstanding service.

I had a 6am flight on 18 Dec 2014 at the LAS airport.

I was at the airport before 5am and was expecting a smooth an easy transit through security as this was so early in the morning.

Ok so here we go I place my belonging in the belt explain to TSA officer I am opting out of scanner here is my description of the TSA officer that was going to screen me about 6 ft 3 bald and well over 200 lbs at D gate between 0500 -0530. Please review tape if possible.

I am a 20 year Veteran over 50 years old and 140 lbs.

This officer explains to me in a rough manner this is safe it's only a scanner I explained I understand not taking any chances as I have had some pretty serious ailments in my life and also explained I always opt out.

With that I go through completely ready for pat down.

The TSA officer seemed to be agitated by the request of this opt out.

He explains what the procedure is I explain to him I have been through this numerous times no problem.

He says any sensitive areas I say I have neck issues and a nearly 14 inch Titanium rod and screws in my lower back.

He precedes to search me then goes up one side of my leg into the crotch area I have no problem with him going into this region and not even thinking anything and his guy nails me right in the testicle and it really hurt then goes up the other side in a rough way and really felt like someone kicking me directly in my testicles and today is Saturday and it still hurts to say I am steamed and livid about this is an understatement.

I spoke with another TSA officer afterwards and he apologized he was also a bald Caucasian male believe his name badge was (b)(6)

Please review the tape at this time.

I am not accepting this and am far from happy about this incident knowing it is most likely an isolated incident by an overzealous angry employee.

If there is a form for a formal complaint please send it to me.

I'm not done plan to follow up and clearly not accepting a simple apology.

Sincerely,

I will add my name at a later time once I am in contact with a representative directly.

Once again I know most TSA officers and outstanding employees doing their jobs responsibly.

Comment : every time I come through Charlotte I am subjected to either a thorough pat down or a full bag search simply because I choose to opt out of the magnetic screening This time I was almost subjected to a second pat down until they cleared up that I was TSA pre-check I am TSA pre-check and I have hip implants I choose not to go through the machine since I am always patted down again anyway.

But Charlotte is extreme and this last experience took 30 minutes Why is this such an issue here in Charlotte?

Response:Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

Have medically necessary liquids or gels;

Need assistance;

Have difficulty raising their arms; or

Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

Passengers should also separate medically necessary liquids and gels from other belongings before screening begins. Whether passengers are traveling with these items for themselves or for others, medically necessary items are not subject to the limitations for other liquids, gels, and aerosols, and are allowed through a checkpoint in excess of 3.4 ounces once they have been screened and cleared. However, passengers are encouraged to bring through the checkpoint only the amount of medically necessary liquids or gels they will reasonably need for the duration of their itinerary, allowing for delays, and pack the rest in checked baggage.

Medically necessary liquids and other items permitted in carry-on bags include the following:

Gels or frozen liquids needed to cool disability or medically related items used by persons with disabilities or medical conditions. These items may be presented at the screening checkpoint in a frozen or partially frozen state.

Caller is wanting to file a complaint. Caller stated that he and other co-workers were given a jar of hot chocolate mix that is powder. Caller stated that he had this in his carry-on along with other co-workers and only he was subject to additional screening. Caller stated that they had to do a hand inspection to ensure that it was only the hot chocolate mix. Caller stated that he then received a pat down procedure in front of his co-workers. Caller stated that he was singled out because of the hot chocolate. Caller stated that it was embarrassing and way overdone. Caller is upset.

Resolution:

I advised the caller that the patdown procedure is a form of secondary screening for any alarms and there is always the random selection that can occur. I advised the caller that I would forward this information to the CSM at the airport for review.

Dear TSA:

Prior to PreCheck, I sent letters and emails to TSA and my airline (Delta) suggesting a policy of "reverse profiling" by passenger data (name, age, address, ticket data, frequent flyer miles, etc.) to determine which passengers are unknown and therefore should get full attention and which should not because they are known (by passenger data) to be non-threats.

The current PreCheck program essentially does exactly that, for which I am truly grateful. I usually no longer have to take every scrap of paper out of my pocket, etc., etc. and submit to a pat-down (I refuse scans because I have had too many X-rays in my life and don't believe that TSA scanners are totally harmless), which is what originally pushed me over the anger line.

When I learned of PreCheck, and Delta was slow to enroll me in it, I invested $100 and a lot of time to acquire Global Entry "Trusted Traveler" status, which (as you know) requires a full load of information on myself and a personal interview. So I am now a card-carrying, government certified non-threat, which usually gets me PreCheck status. thank God!

However, at the same time when TSA appears to be inviting virtually everyone into PreCheck, many even without any knowledge of it ("Really? I don't have to take my shoes off?"), I have been "randomly selected" several times in the last few months for the full TSA treatment, which has wasted my time and TSA's and has made me extremely angry.

Why is this happening? Probably because of the large numbers of lesser-known travelers now taking advantage of PreCheck (based on what level of passenger data, by the way?), at times at some airports making the PreCheck line longer and slower than the "unknown passenger" line.

Why does it make me angry? Because my status as a proven, card-carrying, government-certified "Trusted Traveler" non-threat has not changed. I remain a non-threat every day, every time, everywhere. Yet, despite that, I have at times been treated by TSA as a completely untrusted unknown flyer needing full TSA scrutiny.

This is not only extremely annoying, it is a complete waste of time – TSA's and mine – and makes no sense whatsoever. Even if TSA thinks it's a good idea to admit more and more people to what should be the hard-earned, well-deserved privilege of PreCheck (because their fees help your budget, or to eventually downsize TSA's agent force?), there is no reason whatsoever to treat those of us who have truly earned that privilege any differently one day than any other.

FYI, I am a 125,000-plus-mile/year Delta Skymiles customer traveling all over the country, usually out of DTW (Detroit), and have encountered this unfair, infuriating "random selection" at DTW several times and occasionally at LAX and other airports.

All that said, I want it to stop. Or (at the very least) I deserve a logical explanation of why it is being done.

Office: (b)(6)

This past week I had an encounter with TSA personnel that was very unpleasant. I understand things are done to ensure safety and security to all. However, there has to be other plans in place to take the needs of people into consideration. I travel with a small dog - she is recognized as an emotional support dog by the airlines. I have her with me almost all the time to help with symptoms of PTSD due to a sexual assault a couple of years ago. I have the proper paperwork identifying this. I have traveled with her and gone through security procedures several times over the last couple of years. I have always been impressed with TSA personnel until this last trip on December 18th leaving from Denver International Airport. I knew the procedures for going through security with the dog would include having my hands wiped. I was told they needed to look at my bags this time as something showed up on my hands. The TSA officer inspecting my bags was very polite and considerate.

After this procedure was complete I was told I needed to have a pat down. As the officer informed me of my rights I became very anxious and informed her that if someone touched me where she said they were going to I would have a panic attack. She and I informed the other officer who was going to do the pat down of this fact and they both told me they would talk to a supervisor to see what else could be done. I really appreciated their efforts and consideration as while we waited they respected my needs to not sit in an enclosed room as that would only increase the panic I was already feeling. The original officer who searched my bags stayed with me and talked with me while we waited. I talked with a female supervisor, explaining the same thing to her. The female supervisor, very rudely, asked, "can't you take medication for that?" (referring to the panic attack I would probably have when touched). I explained that I could not take medication for it, hence why I travel with the dog. I said I would go through the other type of machine, as I only passed through the metal detector, as to avoid the pat down. The supervisor left and after a little while a male supervisor came out. I explained the same thing to him. He told me, "either you do the pat down or you don't fly." His tone of voice and the words he said were very threatening. His name is the only name I remember, (b)(6) as he is now classified as a rapist in my mind. If I did not allow people to touch me in areas that should never be touched by anyone unless one consents I would miss my flight. TSA personnel are now considered rapists in my mind. There was no reason they needed to subject me to such a search in the first place and the pat down only proved I was safe - I was not a danger in any way. When some one has been sexually assaulted and is told they must allow people to touch them in private areas it triggers panic. Unless TSA is prepared to reimburse people for counseling then there needs to be different procedures for people who have diagnosable PTSD from a sexual assault. After being touched, I was lucky to be able to make it to my flight as I could barely walk I was shaking so bad. The personnel offered to help me to my flight but after that, the last thing I wanted was to allow people who "assaulted" me to help me.

Date: approximate time of the experience: Dec 15, 2014, 10am to 10:30am

Description of the experience:

I went through the airport security check at the Virgin America terminal at Newark Liberty International Airport between the time of 10:00am to 10:30am on December 15, 2014. I don't remember the exact time I arrived at the security check point. I was made to go through a body scanner and when I was inside, I felt the TSA male agent made me stay there too long. He told me I wasn't posing right or holding my arms up right and he wasn't getting the image. So he made me to re-image multiple times until he was satisfied.

I felt I was discriminated and singled out for the scanning because:

12/21/2014 9:29:17 AM Why was a male agent assigned to scan me? I'm a slim young Chinese woman who was wearing no shoe, no belt, but just a thin body tight sweater and a pair of body hugging jeans with nothing inside the pockets. There was absolutely no space between my clothing and my slim body that I could hide anything without creating a visible bulge. Yet, I felt I was held inside the body scanner for too long by a male agent.

Besides, I saw that not everybody was made to go through the scanner. It seemed certain people who wore looser clothing and who looked more fitting to the risky profiles were exempted from it. Throughout the entire history of aviation or even the entire existence of the USA as a country, was there ever a bomber who was a young and slim Chinese woman? If not, why was that I was selected to go through the body scan while others weren't, and why was I being assigned to a male agent to scan my body??? I feel that the appropriate security risk assessment was grossly neglected when I was sent into the scanner.

I felt my right was violated because:

I wasn't notified by any agent there that I could have a pat down option. I only found out after my husband told me when I complained about the incident to him. Nobody offered me any option in lieu of a body scan. Nobody asked if I was pregnant. I totally didn't know I could refuse body scanning in order to avoid the radiation. The male agent there just authoritatively told me to go into the scanner, and I obeyed thinking it would take one snap. But I felt I was made to remain there because he needed to re-do the imaging unnecessarily. I wasn't offered the option of having a female agent to scan me either. I honestly feel it was my right to be offered a female agent to scan me, and it was my right to be notified that I could refuse the body scan and opt for a pat down right there. It made me feel very disturbed to know that some male TSA agents could be scrutinizing my body scan.

I am not happy with the traveling experience at the Newark Airport at all. I wasn't made to go through a body scan when I left LAX, they gave me expedited screening. I don't understand why I wasn't given this option at Newark and I am not happy that I was assigned to a male agent to scan me.

I forgot to take note of the name of the male agent who selected me and scanned my body on that day because I felt so traumatized by the embarrassment that I wasn't thinking straight to ask for the name. I was never made to do a body scan at any airport before so I was too shocked but just obeyed the authority. But the more I think about it, the more I feel upset and my husband advised me to file a complaint after I returned home. Caller stated that she has oxygen and a pacemaker and is screened separately. Caller stated that the luggage goes through the conveyor and it sits there by itself while she is being screened and someone could steal it. Caller asked what we do in that situation.

Resolution:

12/21/2014 10:59:02 AM TSOs receive training in the procedures to properly inspect passenger bags and are required to exercise great care during the screening process so that when bags are opened a passenger's belongings are returned to the same condition they were found.

When passengers cannot maintain line-of-sight with their property during a patdown or private screening, TSOs have been trained to maintain control and sight of the passenger's items and to ensure that the passenger is reunited with his or her property once it clears x-ray screening.

Caller flew on 12-17-2014 from Palm Beach to LGA she said her name was placed on the boarding pass under her maiden name. She had a copy of her marriage license.

She was screamed at that she was not the person on the boarding pass. The officer took her marriage license and did not give it back. She had a patdown. She is ok with the patdown. She says her marriage license was marked with red ink. She was told by the Officer

The officer's name was (b)(6) She was the officer that was checking IDs. She says the officer was rude and screamed at her. She said everyone else at the check point was very nice.

Dear Sir/Madam:

I was traveling from PBI 12/21/14 on DL 1262 PBI/LGA 6PM/830PM. E-Ticket (b)(6)

When I went through security at PBI, I opted for a pat down. I realized that I had my I-phone headphones in my pocket and handed them to a TSA agent prior to the pat down. I watched the TSA agent place my headphones in a bowl. She then placed the bowl next to my other items going through the x-ray machines. When my pat down was complete and I was told it was okay to retrieve my items, I noticed the bowl was empty and my headphones were missing. I immediately advised TSA agents including supervisor, STSO (b)(6) @ Concourse C PBI - Lane 4. The TSA made several announcements throughout the airport, but nobody came forward with my property. I was offered the opportunity to file a report with police, but was fearful of missing my flight. I was very disappointed with the lack of training the TSA had in this situation. I was given a phone number to call but it was completely automated even though the "Contact TSA Information Page" I was given said representatives were available. I'm not sure if my property was accidentally taken or stolen, but I want to know what liability the TSA has in this very unfortunate situation as I want my item replaced.

Thank you for your kind attention.

Caller said on Saturday night he and his wife dropped off their son (b)(6) age 12. at DFW to fly as an unaccompanied minor to Fresno CA on American Airline. Callers wife went through screening with their son while caller waited outside for her. She was called over to the side of the checkpoint for secondary screening and they asked her to remove her jacket. They lifted up her sweater and exposed her buttocks. She was wearing leggings. The TSO also reached her hand into his wives pants in front of everyone at the checkpoint. After liquids were discovered for their son, a TSO (b)(6) then took his wife to a side room to complete the screening in private. In front of their son, the TSO pulled his wives sweater down and exposed her breasts. (He said he had badge number at home and call back if needed). He said the TSO did not explain what she was going to do or anything. He is sure their son will be affected at seeing his mothers bare breasts. They came back to talk with a supervisor and then the TSA Manager, (b)(6) or (b)(6) around 9:50 that night 12-20-14. TSO (b)(6) who searched his wife was coming up near them and laughing and talking with other TSO s and he felt she was making fun of his wife right in front of them and his other son. He did not feel the Officers resolved any of their concerns.

They must pick his son up on 01-05-14 and he wants to know what issues they will encounter on the next trip. His wife is a prior sexual assault victim and she was in tears after the incident. Caller demanded to know the outcome of their complaint. Caller said she has flown before and they know what a Patdown should be and and he does not want an email and it has nothing to do with with her being a sexual assault victim and has to do with someone taking her dignity and he plans to consult an attorney. He does not feel like she was discriminated against nor did TSA fail to accomodate her.

RESPONSE:

12/22/201 4 Told him it may be if she did not have proper ID she was subject to additional screening but I cannot say. To enter the secure area everyone must be screened.

4 I can take the information for a complaint and send to the CSM.

12:48:11 I cannot promise you will know the outcome of the complaint but the CSM will handle as felt appropriate.

PM I will note it is TSO (b)(6) and we do not have to have the badge # since you did not bring it with you because I need to finish the complaint now.

To pick your son up, if you are not available to do it on her behalf she can let the TSO know she is the victim of sexual assault or has a touch aversion.

We do want her to be comfortable and we have notification cards on the website she can prepare.

(Caller became upset and did not want info on it).

Told him I just offered and that is fine.

Offered email but caller declined.

If you have any concerns or need assistance at the checkpoint you may ask to speak with a Passenger Support Specialist.

(He said they are going to hire an attorney.)

Told him that he can contact whomever he feels is appropriate.

PM

On December 20, 2014 at or about 1335 (1:35PM), I was travelling on American Airlines Flight 0986, scheduled to depart at 1600 but was delayed for about 1.5 hours that day. As I was going through the security checkpoint located at Gate 2 or where Gate 2 used to be on St. Thomas, VI airport, adjacent Gate 3 where Sun Country airline and Spirit airline counter is located, my experience with the TSA staff there was horrible. Firstly, some of the TSA staff (not all) are very rude people and their behavior sheds a poor light on TSA. As I entered the checkpoint from the Travel Document Checker (TDC), there were no trays on the lane what was closest to the door where passengers entered the checkpoint and just barely a few left on the second lane. There was a female TSO who was apparently doing two functions, DO [REDACTED] Officer) and WTMD. I stated to the female TSO, "bin run". The slim/slender built female TSO who wore either braids or dread locks just stood there quietly and did nothing like call for a bin run because the one lane had no bins and the second lane was almost out as it was down to about probably 9 bins. I went over to the second lane to grab a bin of which the female TSO stated that I did not need a bin for my shoes. All I did was set my bags on the table that was closest to TDC of the x-ray 1 (I suppose) and headed to the other side (x-ray 2) for a bin and she was telling me that I did not need a bin for my shoes. Well, unless she is psychic as my flip flops were on my feet and although St. Thomas, VI does not have pre-check, they accommodate passengers with expedited screening, then how would she know why I needed the bin? I said, bin run and that should have been your focus. Even though you could not move and the two officers at the back that were doing bag checks, you could have said bin run so that when they were done, they could grab the bins and run them to the front for the passengers that are coming through the security checkpoint. It was a Saturday and it was busy and I suppose they shifted some of the passengers that were not checking their bags over to the Gate 2 security checkpoint and I say Gate 2 because that is where Gate 2 was now converted into a security checkpoint.

With that being said, I set the bin on the table, took my laptop out of my bag and I set them on the conveyor belt for x-ray screening.

I proceeded to the WTMD (walkthrough metal detector) where I showed the same female TSO my boarding pass that reflected a red stamped TSA precheck, waited for her to go from the DO position to the WTMD position to let me through.

As I went to collect my things, they had not come through the tunnel as yet. Finally, my carryon bag came out and then the female STSO stopped the belt and removed my purse from the x-ray and set it on the MDR. As she set my bag on the MDR, she

This is still the United States last I checked and we still have the document call the Constitution that governs this country. Furthermore I served my country and I'm was a Anti-Terrorism/Force Protection Officer in the Air Force and the security at the TSA checkpoints are a joke with no consistency. When traveling from Houston I had the same clothes on and walk through the Cancer Machines and I did not get felt up there. The only thing they looked at was my watch.

These O'Hare TSO gentlemen could clearly see my jeans where flat and I had nothing in my pockets. Moreover, your zapping us with those huge radiation machines to avoid being felt up by your agents. You need to tell Congress the machines obviously don't work and you still have to assault passengers trying to travel.

You throwing Congress into your statement to me doesn't make it any better. Sure you can see how they are acting these days so it a bit alarming that they are allowing TSA to assault people by putting theirs hands on them. Why not allow the passengers to open their own pockets while the agent observe. We are not criminals going to jail, we purchased tickets to travel.

Now I can see why people are making a big deal about these agents (people) putting their hands on other people. Then your trying justifying our civil liberties being violated by using the elected morons in Congress who can't pass bill because they are being childish.

> If you ever question what is happening during the screening process, feel free to ask to speak with a supervisor. They may be able to explain the necessity of the different steps taken during the process. Of course, TSA officers need to resolve any threats identified by technology employed at the checkpoint and there are some procedures put in place in an unpredictable manner to keep adversaries from gaming the system. Those additional steps can be confusing, but please ask if you have any. The caller stated that when she went through security screening at PHX today she had a very unprofessional experience. She stated that the agents were terrible and yelling during the screening. She explained that when she got to the checkpoint there was a lady sitting at a desk that looked at her boarding pass, and she informed her that she had TSA PreCheck. She stated that the agent responded by telling her that they do not have TSA PreCheck at that location. She then explained that she was going through the normal line, and requested a patdown rather than the x-ray. She was waiting for the patdown officer and noticed that there were persons being routed to a lane for PreCheck. She explained to the Supervisor that approached her to perform the patdown that she has TSA PreCheck and wants to go through that line. She stated that the agent asked her for her boarding pass as proof, and she explained that her boarding pass is on the conveyor belt as she was not able to use PreCheck at that location. She stated that the ladies name was (b)(6) and she told her that she was not able to find her boarding pass on the conveyor belt. The agent than proceeded to state that she was doing her a favor and asked her to change her attitude. She than threatened her by saying that she has to do this to let her through and on the plane. She stated that she was very rude. She stated that while she was waiting for her baggage to come through the other side she asked for the person over the checkpoint. She stated that she was pointed to a man named (b)(6) or something to that effect. She saw the (b)(6) woman walking away from the gentleman as she approached. She stated that she had given the man a heads up about the situation. She explained her experience to him and he simply handed her a card, telling her to have a good day. She stated that she was dismissed. She informed him that she is going to her state senators and AZ state senators regarding this issue. She stated that they should be more professional and have more knowledge. She stated that it all could have been handled different from the beginning. She asked if she will be contacted.

I offered to provide safety and research information about the AIT. Caller declined.

Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown.

He would have to undergo the screening the TSO directs him to.

Whenever a passenger alarms the walk-through metal detector, Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to locate and resolve the source of the alarm. As you know, TSA no longer uses hand-held metal detectors to resolve walk-through metal detector alarms. Instead, a TSO will conduct a standard patdown of the passenger, which allows the TSO to screen for metallic and non-metallic prohibited items.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Delta flight 5451 on 12/24 at 1:12pm. Departed from ROC.:

Comments: I am 7 months pregnant, so I can't go through the full body scanner. I requested to be screened through the metal detector and was told no, that I had to have a pat down. This has never happened before since I've been pregnant; I've always been permitted to walk through the metal detector, and frequently I am not required to remove my shoes, which is helpful as I have increasingly limited mobility. The female security agent who patted me down was rude and invasive. She used far too much force, insisted I lift my shirt above my maternity pants, which revealed the bottom of my bra, and then she squeezed my stomach around my uterus so hard it caused me discomfort and triggered a Braxton Hicks contraction. I felt this was unnecessarily invasive. The TSA needs a consistent and respectful policy with respect to screening pregnant women.

Caller flew from Cabo, Mexico to Kansas City on Sunday night. Caller said she had a patdown in Cabo and a patdown in Denver when she arrived in the United States. Caller said she was not taken into a different room and asked questions she just had a patdown at both locations. Caller asked customs why she had a patdown at both locations and they advised her to contact us for assistance. Caller said she was not held any additional time she was just given a patdown.

I advised:

DHS TRIP is for individuals who are held for multiple hours and asked multiple questions. I advised that what she is describing sounds like a coincidence of having a patdown at both locations.

Hello:

My name is (b)(6) I flew from Vegas to Texas Fort Worth on Monday morning shortly after 8 AM. My flight number was 1680, and I flew on American airlines. When I went through security, my bag was searched by TSA. While my bag was being searched, I was patted down.

During the pat down process, I lost sight of my bag. I had a bottle of liquor in my bag that I got as an xmas present, and I honestly did not think about the fact I couldn't bring it with me. I was told I had to check my bag. Not recalling anything about my searched bag, I hurriedly returned to the check in and checked my bag.

My bag made it to Kansas City, but when I unpacked the vet next morning my laptop was not there. It was in the large outside pocket. It was an Apple Mac book pro.

I have called lost and found at both mci and mccarren with nothing having been turned in. I know my laptop was in my bag when I left the hotel because I checked. I also know I had it in security. So either security at tsa pulled it out and didn't put it back in or someone stole it from my bag while it was checked.

12/25/2014 I want to see the video from the gate I was at. I'm an attorney and intend to see that a full investigation is completed. I would like an investigation opened by tsa.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Austin airport, TX

Comments: My wife and my daughter-in-law frequently travel out of Austin. They opt out of body scanner. Additionally my wife has medical condition. Invariably they are kept waiting while people are staring as if these ladies are some sort of criminal. They are kept waiting. While during the same trip TSA services at Baton Rouge, or Houston or Atlanta were quite respectful and professional. Apparently it gives us impression that either TSA does not want people to opt out or may be this treatment is due to the fact that being Muslim they wear headscarves and dress differently. Can this situation be remedied or being at receiving end we have to accept this unprofessional and discourteous attitude of TSA at Austin Airport?

Disability Description: Husband is 100 percent disabled Veteran.

Response Details: CCR informed her;

Any alarm generated by the ETD screening process requires the passenger to undergo additional screening. Please note that there are several items that contain the same chemicals that are associated with explosives, and collection of these types of particles will result in an ETD alarm. However, TSOs are trained to resolve these alarms using a variety of resolution techniques.

She can file if she would like (did not want to proceed) but for future flights, she can call into the TSA cares line and request assistance through the PSS directly at that airport. This will inform them that they are coming before the flight and assistance can possibly be made there at the checkpoint.

Incident Details: Caller stated that when they went through screening, her and her husband had the worst screening experience due to an ETD alarm.

Her husband is a disabled veteran with 100% and one of his main conditions is PTSD. Since he tends to go shooting alot, when they did additional screening on his leg brace, the ETD alarmed positive which required him to go through additional screening (full patdown).

She feels that this was not something that should have been done since he has a CCDW and a military ID showing that he is not someone that is a threat.

Caller scheduled awhile back to have a PSS today through screening at Newark. She stated this is the 3rd time she has been told by the officers that they do not know what a PSS is and this is only at Newark that it always occurs. She requested a Supervisor this time, and the Supervisor told her that he knew what a PSS was, he walked away and came back and said he had none available and said he would help a little. So the Supervisor walked to a female officer and had the female officer assist the caller and that female officer ended up doing the patdown. The guy from the airline that was helping her with a wheelchair, she told him not to put her belongings up on the conveyor until she goes for her patdown and he did that, while she was being patted down another passenger took her boots and put them on her feet. She said isnt that disgusting. The caller stated that every airport she goes to has the PSS and always assist her and are great, but Newark doesnt care and they are an entire different ballgame. None of the officers even know what a PSS even is. She says alot of the passengers dont even know about assistance and most of them confuse it with wheelchair assistance. She just cant believe this keeps happening and they are not fixing it.

Apologized to the caller that this keeps occurring with the same exact airport. Informed her that if there isnt a PSS available the Supervisors are to assist the passenger, our information states they can request a PSS or Supervisor for assistance. Apologized that the Supervisor did not really help her much. Told the caller this complaint would be sent again to the CSM of Newark and hopefully they will look in to this issue, resolve it and inform each TSA officer that they do have a PSS and what they are.

Caller flew from LAS to CA. Caller had SSSS on his boarding pass and got a secondary screening. Caller wanted to know what was wrong.

Response:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing it.

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the RCN. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry, but do not have their RCN, may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification from occurring

So, I got some short execution moving papers from my boss, I had to get from Japan to Virginia in seven days, get the house packed up, carry everything that I needed for at least a few months until my stuff arrived, and then travel half way around the world (counter-clockwise). Getting through the Japanese airports where no problems whatsoever.

12/27/2014 9:16:17 AM

Holy freakin' hell, San Francisco TSA, oh my freakin' god! First, we are tired, but hey, that is travel. I have a cane (partially metal) and they want me to walk through the x-ray thingy without it (I had to hop on one foot), then they want me to lift my arms up above my head (pending shoulder surgery, sure, lets aggravate that sucker, I can't lift it above my head). Wearing hearing aids which don't work quiet well in a nosy environment. I have one TSA woman make a snide remark about me taking too long to get my pass and ID ready (I apologize, bad left knee, means cane in right hand, and bad left shoulder, means left hand in pocket, takes a bit of juggling). Then the x-ray thingy (already mentioned, but worth a second word). Finally, since I am caring all of my small valuables, and a laptop and associated ptheriphials, they decide to check it, and check me with a pat down and a ransack. After the guy dumps everything out of my bag, meds, wires, hearing aid batteries, headphones, socks, shirts, laptops, the usual, the guy tells me that I should not pack so much stuff and should ship it next time and not take so much of his time.

At that moment, I pull out my military ID and apologize for the military moving my family across the world on short execution PCS orders (so short they denied my request for leave in transit) and that I was carrying everything I needed for the next two to three months for myself, my daughter and my wife.

He walks away without saying a thing. I finish packing my bag.

Thanks guys for providing a wonderful entry experience back into the United States.

Disability Description: Callers brother has Cerebral Palsy.

Response Details: We recommend arriving 2 hours in advance to the flight time.
If an man officer isnt available for a patdown, they would have to wait on one to become available.
They staff the checkpoints according to the airlines and the number of flights going out.

I can taker her complaint for her but to make it a formal complaint due to her brothers disability she would need to put it in writing. Did she want to do that? Yes

Passengers in a wheelchair can get a patdown if they cant walk through on their own, an officer of the same gender will have to give a patdown, you sometimes do have to wait on someone to become available to do a patdown as well as the ETD

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): LAX, approximately 820am, terminal 3. Employee was named (b)(6)
Comments: I was unimpressed with the TSA staff's knowledge of service dog policy. We had a wonderful experience at MSP but at LAX a very rude employee told me I had to remove my dog's equipment. When I informed her I could not be asked to do that and instead requested a pat down, she sarcastically informed another staff member (using "air quotes") that I wanted a pat down. The employee doing my pat down was very kind but she did not screen my dog or his equipment. This was concerning to me.
Caller is flying from MSY to ATL to West Palm tomorrow. Her husband has a pacemaker and cannot go through certain screenings. When they went through from West Palm, he was rushed into the AIT and she wants to know if someone did the wrong thing. She said that they were told that people who have a pacemaker can go through the AIT. She just wants to make sure that it is safe and will not harm him. She also wants to know if she will have to take her laptop from her bag when she gets to the checkpoint.

12/27/2014 4:11:18:33 PM Advised caller:
Passengers who have internal medical devices should not be screened by the walk-through metal detector because this may affect the calibration of the device. While TSA has no evidence that screening by Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) will affect such devices, passengers with concerns should contact their physicians. These passengers may request a thorough patdown rather than using screening technology.
Advised caller that she will have to take the laptop out of the carry-on bag. They may ask her to power it up as well. She should not place the laptop in checked baggage.

Disability Description: He traveled with a dislocated knee and broken ankle.

Response Details: Advised the caller this complaint and flight information would be sent to the CSM at Glendive. We track trends of complaints to address areas of concern, so hopefully this will help them to resolve the issues.

Incident Details: Caller was traveling yesterday, he has some issues with TSA. He wants to file a complaint, caller traveled through Glendive Montana and the TSA there are terrible. He traveled with a dislocated knee and broken ankle, TSA was a very bad experience for him. Everyone he has spoken with so far says it was terrible for them too. He stated he went through another screening at Billings Airport with a breeze and it was a much larger airport. Right before screening started, a lady TSA officer came out and she thought she was a Superior woman. She shouldnt have been telling passengers, that if women had to go through additional screening, a male had to do it. He said there should not be the opposite sex in the room when a passenger gets a patdown. The officer said that was all the employees that they had so woman had to be patted down by men, which meant they were understaffed. When he went through screening, they decided to do a full body search on him. He doesnt understand why that would happen to him. Out of 7 people 5 of them got randomly selected for additional screening. He said it doesnt seem very random, they tried searching a minor before the adult showed up and he believes that was really weird shouldnt have happened, because they could have been molested and nobody would have known. He stated that every single bag he had got searched and went through. The Lady officer was really rude to the other TSA officers. When they started swabbing his things, and it alarmed and the officer said the machine may be acting up. If the machine is acting up they should not use it or they should update it. That made him very uncomfortable. He stated never did TSA in Billings put the back of their hands on his privates but in Glendive they actually fully touched his genitals. They should never be touching his genitals at all, thats an invasion of privacy. They did a swab on his calves, which alarmed and they made him take the bandages off. They never made him take his bandages off at Billings, so he doesnt understand why they would at Glendive. He doesnt think he should have been required to remove his bandage to go through this screening. The officers could physically see there was nothing was under the bandage. He spoke to the airport Manager, she said that she has had several complaints about the security. He doesnt want to fly back in to Glendive anymore because of this.

Caller had a major screening concern in Minneapolis. She has allergies and needs eye drops. She asked if it was possible to screen it without going through the radiation. They took the eye drops and went she had gone through the body screening, AIT. Her purse went through the conveyor belt and was told that she would get a patdown. They took everything out of her purse. They did ETD testing. The eye drops were not tested. She asked what were the procedures when someone requested a visual inspection of medication. The TSO was rude. A supervisor had to tell her to stop.

Caller flew from CMH and had to undergo additional screening and present his passport. Caller is having to undergo additional screening when he goes through the checkpoint quite often and wants to know why.

Response:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

AM DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing it.

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the RCN. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry, but do not have their RCN, may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

After the complaint is resolved, DHS TRIP recommends that travelers provide this RCN when making reservations or updating their traveler profile with an airline. This info will assist security technologies to help prevent misidentification from occurring due to the similarity of a traveler's name and personal information to another person in systems that contain information from Federal, State, local, and foreign sources

Thank you for contacting me (b)(6) and sorry for my delayed response! Commuting from Jackson Hole to Denver once a week for the first three weeks of December, my daughter's two surgeries and the holidays have delayed me.

Once this report has been completed, I will forward it to TSA as per their email to me and likely you for a formal complaint. My original concern was who to contact regarding poor, abusive, unnecessary, and rude treatment. According to TSA guidelines, I DO NOT feel my minor daughter's and my experience was in violation of anyone's Civil Rights. TSA officials who are rude and have poor attitudes and neglect performing their duties fall under a category that doesn't currently exist within the TSA (hopefully that will be changed SOON)! My minor daughter just happened to have been handicapped, but that didn't qualify this experience as a Civil Rights issue.

On 12/6/14, my handicapped minor daughter and I were going through Security at DIA- both of us were TSA Pre.

- at first check point, ID checker told us we couldn't come through her check point w a wheel chair- we explained we had done it previously, not that day, no further instructions/directions were offered
- never did she volunteer the side of the airport WITH the Colorado flag (if not that end, the end w the American flag, I may have changed the locations, sorry) always has a wheel chair accessible lane
- she let us go though, someone came to help
- all of our belongings CRUTCHES included went through screening
- as did I
- agent (b)(6) entered in to the situation to take my daughter for a pat down, test her brace and airport wheelchair
- I authorized she could take my daughter and I would meet them (as we have done numerous times before at DIA and other airports) while I waited to collect our belongings

Now let me say this: My daughter is 15, looks 20+, and is 5'10" - not a small child! (b)(6) informed me they would wait for me and after my authorization, again, said that was procedure- really? Where have I been and what about all the agents who have accepted my authorization, violating procedure and (b)(6) is the only rule-follower? I think not!

My daughter had had knee surgery the day prior to traveling and we were came directly to DIA from University Hospital as we had done 8/31/14 and were scheduled to again 12/19/14. Needless to say, we are not novices traveling, going through Security, being handicapped, or unaccompanied minors (I also have 12+ year old twin boys, we're all savvy and informed travelers). What I think TSA would appreciate, maybe not.

- once through the Security gate, and I had single handedly collected our belongings (crutches included) (b)(6) took my daughter to search and swipe the airport wheelchair
- NEVER did she tell my daughter she could remain seated
- made her stand one-legged while she patted her, the wheelchair (see next bullet item), AND waited for the results
- I offered my daughter my forearm in the event she lost balance. (b)(6) REPRIMANDED me, told me I couldn't touch her (I knew that). I offered my daughter her crutches (which remember, had passed through screening) (b)(6) REPRIMANDED me a second time. Saying to us, something on the line of "if she needs to hold something for balance, she can hold onto me". REALLY? In order for my daughter to have done that, while (b)(6) was swabbing the wheelchair, she would have had to turn around and reached 3-4 feet away!!!! At this point (!), I care about my daughter's safety, the knee that was just operated on and not feeling comfortable w (b)(6) experience and qualifications!!!! I'm well aware of not being able to touch anything while it's being searched, but when the TSA agent leaves someone who is physically challenged in a precarious state, the mother-of-all-mothers comes out in me (especially because of the way we were being treated, knowing we weren't a security risk, although (b)(6) may have thought we were, but (b)(6) certainly wasn't taking the necessary safety requirements and was dismissing my attempts and requests)!!

Post passing inspection, Agent (b)(6) something or other heard me grousing and asked if he could help. I lit into him about the two agents #1 at first checkpoint for IDs and our less than ideal experience with (b)(6). I then went to the line where (b)(6) was working to get her name. Agent (b)(6).... took the time to explain about a handicap lane always being available at whichever end of the airport we weren't at, someone in a wheelchair DOES NOT have to vacate wheelchair To Whom It May Concern:

On Saturday, December 27, 2014, I went through a security check that started between 11:30-11:45 a.m. at the St. Paul/Minneapolis Airport. Because of allergies and concern for my eyes, I asked a TSA agent to visually inspect the eyedrops-Systane or test separately without sending it through an x-ray machine. He took the eyedrops, walked over to Agent (b)(6) (I pray the spelling is correct), and gave her the box that contained the eyedrops.

I was instructed to walk through the body scanner, and I placed my belongings on the security belt. Everything cleared without a sound of an alarm. However, I was instructed by Agent (b)(6) to identify my belongings without touching it; I complied. She lead me to a table, and stated she was going to search me! At this point, I asked why am I being searched? Agent (b)(6) responded, "That's what you get for asking." she proceeded to call her supervisor over to explain to me what happens when I make a special request. At this point, I realized the supervisor was going to support the agent, so I did not dare continue to question when she apologized for the agent's actions. Agent (b)(6) patted me down, pulled my pants where she could look inside of my clothes, and scattered items from my purse all over the table. Again, I asked why she was doing this. She stated, "I'm going to test everything that belongs to you!" So, she tested the following items for the second time:

1. My shoes
2. My wallet
3. My phone charger
4. My my comb
5. My cell phone
6. The lining of my purse

12/29/2014
4:23:22 AM

After all of those things cleared, Agent (b)(6) refused to let me go. Her supervisor, walked over, told her that I had been through security, pat down, items tested, and everything cleared. She further stated, "Let her go." Agent (b)(6) turned and walked away, leaving my things scattered all over the table.

Inasmuch as Agent (b)(6) never tested the eyedrops, or the other medicine or lotion in my purse. I was totally distraught that I was humiliated and spoken to in such a condescending way by Agent (b)(6) because of my concern about a medical condition. Please advise.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

To Whom It May Concern:

I am (b)(6) and I am filing a complaint about an incident occurring in DTW airport on Sunday, December 28, 2014. I will detail the incident, then pose two questions.

I did not have proof of government ID upon entering DTW airport for a flight, so I was instructed to wait for a TSA employee for further instruction. I provided the employee with my college ID, where he then asked if I possessed any government issued identification that showed proof of address. In my attempt to look, the employee caught glance of my insurance card, asked to look at it and asked various questions pertaining to the information on it. The employee returned my documents and assisted me to the pat down process.

In the moment of the incident, I was only concerned in providing the necessary information to board the flight. Once arriving to my destination I recounted the events. I now feel harassed and manipulated in the situation. I do not believe that the documents and questions asked of me were appropriate for the screening process. As procedure for travelers without government ID, what information suffices to verify identification and or what is the precedent to board flights? What documents and or questions are in the realm for such employees to ask?

Caller stated that she traveled out of Dulles to CVG and didnt realize that TSA can open luggage for screening. Her checked bag contents were not packed back the way that she had it first and wanted to see if gloves were worn during inspection and if they are changed everytime. There was a NOI inside and her lock was cut off, which she was upset about as well.

Also when she went through the checkpoint, the officer was wearing gloves and when she was doing the patdown, the screeners hand along with the glove went right into her mouth and she was disgusted and wanted to make a complaint about the careless experiance she went through.

She feels that the officers should change the gloves everytime they inspect a new persons baggage in carry on or checked.

FLIGHT INFORMATION:

AM Bag Description: Lime Green, heavy duty bag
NOI: Yes; no writing or stamp

CCR informed her:

Transportation Administration Security (TSA) security screeners are instructed to wear gloves when conducting physical inspections of property and patdown inspections of individuals. Screeners must only wear TSA-issued gloves when performing screening functions and will use a new pair of gloves whenever a passenger requests that they do so.

For the locks on the luggage, she can use Travel Sentry and Safe Skies which the screening officers have master keys for.

This information will be sent to the airport to make them aware of the situation.

AM Complaints: Inappropriate Screening Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight# Airline Terminal Airport Gate Etc): My complaint is for an inappropriate pat down at the Dallas Fort Worth Airport. The tsa agent (b)(6) who was patting down a teen ager or young adult next to me was being extremely aggressive and verbally abusive towards the passenger. The passenger was visibly uncomfortable and scared. (b)(6) raised his voice and told the passenger You must like pat downs because you re here so be quiet. He also said a few other things that made the passenger upset but I could not hear. His conduct was unprofessional and when I told him he was acting in an inappropriate manner he yelled at me to mind my business several times. When I told him Id be filing a complaint he said that it would never go anywhere and Id be wasting my time. He then put his name card in my face when I asked for his name.

Comments: My taxes contribute towards the tsa and though I think the agency is inefficient and unnessessary I, expect a high level of courtesy and professionalism of tsa employees. No one likes pat downs and the passenger was clearly uncomfortable (b)(6) acting the way he did made the experience worse for the passenger and me as well as an observer.

I traveled through the Denver airport on Friday, December 26th.

I have TSA Pre on my boarding pass.

I have a total knee replacement.

I have a card from my Orthopedic Surgeon stating that I have an implant in my knee.

The card was presented to the TSA agent at Security.

I was walking with the assistance of a wheeled walker.

I am an employee of the Federal Government, with a higher security clearance than the TSA gate agents performing checks.

12/29/2014 I have my Federal Employee ID visible at all times while going through security.

In spite of everything I just detailed, I was pulled aside and subjected to a thorough 10 minute pat down – and told "DON'T TOUCH ANYTHING" more than once.

Folks – is this really necessary? This is how you intend to prevent acts of terrorism.....by making a passenger as described above lift their shirt above their waist not once, but twice?

The agent at the gate was (b)(6) She was uniformly rude and discourteous throughout the process.

When patting me down he flattened his hand in a vertical orientation and forced between my buttocks. I said I don't think that's part of a professional pat down, to which he replied "you probably like it." To which I replied no I did not like it, or his lack of professionalism. He accused me of lying saying "you probably gay"; I said that I was not. Then he proceeded to palpate my genitals 4 times making the comment "You have a little dick." Furthermore he made many racially directed comments pointing out my European heritage multiple times. This I believe was discrimination on his part against my European ethnicity.

In the interest of helping you identify this discriminatory employee with an utter lack of professionalism here is a description, African American, approx. 5'10, black frame glasses, average build.

I am very disgusted by his utter contempt for me as a human being and feel that I was racially targeted. I want a report of the disciplinary action that is taken.

I am considering calling my attorney and/or a major media outlet if this appalling behavior is not addressed in an appropriate manner.

Incident Details: Caller and her son are flying from DFW. She states that they had a terrible experience in terminal E. She says that she had requested a PSS previously but never got one. Caller states that she was told that the TSO had to open every single one of her son's formula bottles. She says that she explained that they were medically necessary and had prescription labels and would go bad if opened, but the TSO did not get the concept. She states that the TSO did a ETD but then pulled her cleared bags back and retested them again, pulled out all of stuff, did a patdown on her after she had been previously cleared, and was combative. Caller says that the TSO said she was crazy and was acting ridiculous. She estimates that it took about 45 minutes to get through the checkpoint, and states that a STSO told her that a PSS would not have made any difference.

Caller stated that her checked luggage was searched and needed to know if she should wash her clothing again if the officer used dirty gloves. She feels that this process is disgusting and they shouldn't use the same gloves for all luggage.

Good Afternoon --

I am writing because I am disturbed and unhappy regarding a pat down I received at the New Orleans airport yesterday, December 28, 2014 at approximately 12 noon. I regularly decline to go through the new x-ray screening technology and have been "patted down" at airports across the country. I have NEVER been treated in the manner I was treated in New Orleans. As a precursor, I will say that the TSA agent -- Officer (b)(6) -- was rude from our first interaction. Rather than answer my simple question of "Are you ready for me? I don't want to put my stuff through (the belt) until you're ready," her response was to bark at me "Put Your Stuff On The Belt!" (What would be wrong with "Yes, I'm ready..."?). After we walked to the pat down area and she did her preliminary speech, she barked at me "WIDER" with my legs and then proceeded to absolutely MAUL me. I thought you guys had given up molesting people's crotches?! As I looked over at the benches for people who had already gone through security, a woman who I have never met before was gesturing wildly at me wondering what the hell was going on. She commented to me later -- repeatedly -- that she thought the pat down was completely inappropriate, hostile and overly intrusive. This was not a properly performed airport pat down. The closest I could describe it is that it was more akin to a pat down for a PRISON INTAKE than any pat down I have ever received at any airport I have ever been to. People who decline the x-ray screenings are not criminals. A pat down is one thing but this was just beyond reasonable. I reported the incident and my upset to the TSA supervisor on duty, (b)(6) who said that she would "look into it," but that whatever she determined and whatever she did about it was none of my business and that I would not be receiving any communication or information regarding the outcome. She advised that if I wished to leave a comment regarding the incident, I should do so through the information on the "contact TSA" business card. Hence, my email to you today. I am not happy -- at all -- about how I was treated yesterday, but my wider concern is that this is the way travelers are regularly screened at MSY and if that is the case there should definitely be some retraining of the TSA agents there.

The caller's mother flew from JFK to CLT on Jetblue today departing at 8 AM. She went through screening around 7 AM. She stated that she has a complaint about screening. She stated that she has locked hair and that is her natural state. She stated that she believes that this is a racial issue and that she was chosen for additional screening based on her race because nobody else during screening gets their hair patted down. She stated that it was her son, her mother, and herself. She stated that her mother was also complaining that her son's genital parts were being touched too much. She stated that she feels that this is all racial discrimination.. She stated that they have no reason to touch her hair when she flies. She stated that they should be able to wear their hair anyway that they would like and not be subjected to that. She stated that there were no hairpieces or hair pins involved.

I explained that if she goes through the screening process and her hair anomalies the AIT or we can not clearly see the hair, a patdown would be required to clear the alarm. Even, hairpins and hair pieces can alarm the screening process, which would result, the passenger's head area must be searched with a limited patdown.

In order to appropriately address your concerns, we also need to know the airport at which you were screened by TSA.

TSA accepts e-mails as being signed. TSA encourages passengers to file complaints on their own behalf. If you are filing a complaint on behalf of someone else, please include a statement regarding your authorization to file the complaint on his or her behalf.

If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

I offered to e-mail this information to the caller, and she accepted.

I provided the contact information for the CSM:

I provided the EID to the caller, so that she can reference this record when requesting assistance.

To Whom It May Concern:

During this holiday season, I took a roundtrip flight from DFW (Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport) to MEI (Meridian Municipal Airport) with American Airlines. On December 24th, I took AA Flight 2571 and on December 27th, AA Flight 2572. On both legs of the trip, the Transportation Security Administration inspected my checked bag. While the inspection on Christmas Eve was inconvenient (my wrapped gifts were unwrapped and the wrapping paper balled), it was understandable given that the inspection targeted the gifts containing electronics. However, the inspection of my bag at MEI gravely concerns me. I had an empty Zales box in my luggage. When I returned home and unpacked, I opened the box discovered to my extreme disappointment that it had been opened, clearly rifled through, as if the inspector was, at worst planning to steal my brand new diamond earrings, or at best, hoping to admire the thoughtful gift I received. Nothing else was out of place in my luggage.

I fly frequently, both domestically and internationally, and this is the first time I've felt violated by TSA regulations. Since 9/11, the world and my fellow Americans have accepted the byzantine TSA regulations, grudgingly if not placidly, as an acceptable part of our continuing safety. I have tolerated shoe removal, restrictions on liquids, pat downs, body screening, luggage inspections, questioning of my carry-on bag by TSA personnel, and much more. But I cannot and will not accept fear that my personal belongings could be potentially stolen by the people and the institution meant to protect me. Please look into this matter and please let me know if the person responsible will be held accountable. I look forward to your response.

Sincerely,

I just faced gender inequality and profiling at its highest height. I'm really infuriated! I had gone to the Sacramento airport yesterday night. At the Burbank airport, I had not encountered any issues, so I didn't foresee any problems. I went to load my luggage with my father and twin sister. (we are identical twins). When we got to the area where the TSA checks you and you are forced to walk through the metal detectors, my sister went though first. I went directly after her, showing them my passport, college ID, and a copy of my birth certificate. I had shown the men at the other airport in Burbank my ID and passport with no issues whatsoever. Now, mind you that I have an identical twin. I called my twin sister over, and they could see that we are identical. Everyone can see that we are identical! I was so angry, and rightfully so. She still didn't believe me. She then proceeded to boss me around by telling me that I should have my state ID. I am 19, but I had a college ID and don't drive yet. I plan to get it, but she was so condescending. She gave me such hard time. She and the other woman next to her laughed as she said, "And what did I tell you to do?" I was nervous and answered her, saying, Get my state ID?" She had the audacity to pull me aside and ask me to go into the line with the metal detectors, forewarning me that I would be patted down and checked for anything "suspicious." I don't even fit any profile of a mistrustful human being. I walked into the line, went through the metal detector without even a problem, and then came out and put on my shoes. She got ready to pat me down, but prior to doing so, asked, "Do you have any sharp objects in your purse that can poke her?" I said "no. Just earrings." She asked again as if, I, this sweet young woman, would be carrying a pocket knife or a bloody axe in my purse. Finally she patted me down after asking if I wanted to "do this in private, as some People are too embarrassed to be publicly patted down." I told her to just get it over with, because this was really out of hand. I mean, I had my twin with me and all of my info. What more did she need? If that wasn't enough, she groped me really hard and felt everything very roughly. I'm pretty sure she felt my vaginal area. I felt assaulted, prodded, abused, and taken advantage of. I am very disturbed by the way that I was treated by the TSA workers at the Sacramento airport, and feel you are obligated to do something about this! You can't ignore this, and for other women out there who have clearly had to deal with this, confront it now.

Caller said she went through security and that she is on oxygen 24-7 at Denver Airport last summer and she did not make it to her niece's house because her battery drained and she said she had to go get a backup. She departed from Fayetteville, NC to Charlotte to Philadelphia on Dec. 20 and it drained her battery again. She said she does not want to file a claim. She said that people on oxygen can't go through xray screening.

Response:To protect a passenger's rights under Federal law and to file a valid claim, travelers must send their claim in writing to TSA, stating the circumstances of the loss and the exact amount claimed (fair market value of lost or destroyed property, reasonable cost of repair for damaged property), within 2 years after the claim occurred. The claim must be signed by the claimant or an authorized representative (e.g., an attorney or other personal representative with appropriate proof of authority). TSA is responsible for reviewing all claims relating to the screening of passengers and their baggage.

To file a claim, you should fill out the Standard Form 95 (claim form) in accordance with the instructions and return it to the address in box number 1. While use of the form is not mandatory, it may help travelers ensure that they meet the legal requirements for filing a claim. If you decide to file a claim, it will be processed in accordance with the Federal Tort Claims Act.

I offered to email the claim form to her but she declined.

I advised her to tell the Officer at the checkpoint that she does not want xray screening and that she can have a patdown done instead.

Complaints: Discourteous/Rude Employee

Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): DELTA 1818, Dec. 23, Orlando to Allanta 11:02 a.m.

Comments: On Dec. 23, I was "randomly selected" from a TSA Precheck line to have my hands swabbed.

After my hands were swabbed I was, without explanation, told that I was going to be subjected a full-body pat-down by a TSA employee. I was offered the option of a "private screening" and declined because I could not be separated from my young children, a 4-year-old and toddler, while traveling.

I was visibly upset to be subjected to having my private parts and my entire body touched in public by a stranger and I started shaking and crying.

Instead of being sympathetic or trying to make the situation more tolerable, the TSA Agent (a woman whose last name included the word "weather," and who had a dark moustache), made a rude comment: "What, didn't you KNOW you were coming to the airport today?" as if people buying airline tickets should expect to forfeit all Fourth Amendment rights to unreasonable search, and be held in custody if they refuse.

This agent needs a refresher course in sensitivity training, or a new job.

Complaints: my Complaint is Not Listed Here

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): My husband, son, his girlfriend and I all missed our flight home to LAX from Omaha NE exclusively due to the slow, seemingly inept performance of the TSA reps. We were all booked on UA flights 3618 & 1274. We all checked in 24 hrs in advance, arrived at the airport more than 75 mins before our flight. In my experience, we never should have missed that plane. The 3 screening lines - 2 reg and 1 pre - were not serviced fairly or properly. The far left serviced 4 travelers to every 1 in our line. Adding insult to injury, multiple non pre passengers were pulled from the fast line and processed through pre instead. Finally, the singular agent servicing our line was taking every other pre passenger as well. Once I finally got into security, I was advised that due to my laptop needing to be screened, ALL of my cleared possessions had to be given back and every single item of mine was reexamined and my person subjected to pat down search. Unfortunately, they failed to have enough staff to start for 10 minutes. They could have given a rats ass about my flight. The screening

Comments: agent that checked my family and I wasted so much time chit chatting with every passenger it was astonishing. Please note that I was in line at 5:30, pulled at 6:08 am and my flight was at 6:30. I was not released until 6:38. My family should not have missed our flight in such a small airport - period. In addition to the agents actually working, I noticed another 6 literally just standing around socializing. Unacceptable. They work for the people - we collectively pay their salaries. If we have to be subjected to this, they should get their act together, be efficient, pay attention and stop socializing while a sea of people are struggling to get home.

Complaint:

I was traveling with my husband and two children on 12/21/14 to Honolulu, Hawaii via Salt Lake city, Utah. My total travel time that day was approximately 10-12 hours. I had packed four 8 oz. size organic milks for my daughter who just turned 3 on Nov. 30, 2014. I was told by the first officer I encountered that because my daughter could walk, she was not considered an infant or toddler anymore and I could not bring the 4 milks through security. I disagree with her reasoning for being allowed to bring through my milk (which by the way is not sold in any airports that I have traveled through in the recent past and milk is not offered as a drink on many flights either) and I stated that I had never had this issue before and when I asked for clarification or written policy, she shook her head at me and said I was not allowed to bring in the milk. I offered to be pat down and for my milk to be swiped with the wipes, which has always been an option for me to bring milk in for my children. She again shook her head at me and refused. I asked if she was a supervisor. She responded, "Close enough." Another officer came over and inspected and also shook her head at me. I then went through security and waited to find out if they would allow me to have my milk since I was offering to be pat down and for my milks to be tested with the wipes. While waiting, the second officer who had given my situation a once-over asked the first officer if she would be patting me down. She responded no and mouthed something about me, which I can only assume was rude and derogatory. I asked her what she said about me and she refused to repeat it. I then asked for her name. She turned her body so as to not allow me to see her name badge. She then told me that she could escort me out of the airport and asked if I really wanted to travel that day. A senior officer finally came and assisted me. She patted me down and allowed me to have the milks. I was deeply upset and insulted by the first officer and I explained the situation to her. She gave me a comment card and told me the name of the officer was (b)(6) That is the only reason I have a name on this complaint.

It is absolutely unacceptable for this officer to threaten to escort me from the airport, especially when she would not even give me her name or any other identifying information and especially not when the reason for the additional screening is milk for a child. I believe this officer (b)(6) should be reprimanded. I am sure it is not protocol for TSA officers to refuse to show their name badge to travelers and that action alone is completely unacceptable. The other things she said and did require her to have some additional training at the very least and generally she needs to be taught some manners and learn to be respectful of others. If TSA wants its position and its work to be valued and respected, it should have officers working for the organization who take pride and responsibility for their role and do not abuse their authority or their positions. I am deeply disappointed by this entire encounter and still upset by it over a week later. I have had issues with TSA employees before at various airports, especially because policies and protocol are not standardized at all airports for what is allowed to be brought through security for children, but this is the first time I have ever issued a complaint.

I would appreciate a response to my complaint. I have included my contact information below for follow up, but I request that my contact information not be shared with this officer (b)(6) Given her attitude toward me, I have concerns about what she might do with my personal information. Thank you for your prompt attention to my complaint.

Regards.

Disability Description: Caller doesnt need assistance, she says the PSS and supervisors forget about making the request. She says she fell. The supervisor came out and she told him she has a movement disorder, she startles and jerks then falls to the ground. She says they like her to go through the AIT for her screening but she says the movement of the AIT can startle her and make her fall. She has requested assistance for her travel and on 3 different times she has traveled, through Midway, Jacksonville and Reagan she has fallen, the last time was at Midway on Dec 28th. She requested assistance for her flights, she says at Midway the supervisor came to her for screening, the supervisor told the agent that they should not press the button for the AIT until they were told too, yet they did anyway, then the supervisor said to them I told you to wait . She fell because the movement of the AIT startled her and she has now fractured her tail bone.

Response Details: Response Details:

I spoke to floor support, [REDACTED] and then spoke back to the caller. I told her to she may need to opt out and ask for a patdown so she would not be startled by the movement of the AIT. She stated this too can startle her if they hit a point in her back. I said to her she can be face to face with the agent and give them the instructions on her needs as well as request the assistance so we can help her as well. She felt they did not want her to ask for patdown. I told her it was her choice and she can ask for a patdown anytime for her screening. I was so sorry they couldnt coordinate this for her.

I explained to her to make this a formal complaint she would need to put the complaint in writing and we have contact information to send it but she did not want it, she said she knew about it already and knew where to send it if she decided to send it.

She can file a claim.

12/31/2014 3:48:00 PM She could get a claim form from tsa.gov and download one for herself. I could mail, fax or email a claim form to them as well. She wanted one mailed to her.

PM If a passenger has concerns about his or her screening, he or she should ask to speak with a supervisor or Passenger Support Specialist while at the checkpoint.

I was so sorry this was happening to her.

I am forwarding her complaint to the CSM as well

Comments: I fly frequently and choose to opt out to avoid radiation. I have been patted down multiple times, and I am familiar with standard procedure. Yesterday, both me and my brother were sexually harassed by a TSA agent. First he pushed for a private screening even after I chose to remain in public view. Secondly he used the back of his hand to go all the way up to my genitals and squeezed on my genitals with the open side of his hand. Not only did he do that on both sides, but he also repeated this obscene maneuver. This was an invasion of my 3rd amendment rights against an unreasonable search. A standard pat down was necessary because I chose to opt out, but there was nothing that would lead the agent to believe a further search or groping my private areas was necessary. I demand that this agent is reprimanded or removed to prevent a future occurrence. My brother has a similar story, and my father, mother, and youngest brother are witnesses. Both my father and mother are aware that this is not standard procedure, and viewed the agent abusing his power. My phone number is [REDACTED] Contact me for more details.

Caller is in Charlotte Douglas NC and she had a poor experience with TSA today because of her drivers license. She recently relocated from CT to TX and in Texas they give you a paper temporary at first and keep your old license and Texas DMV told her it would be sufficient to use as ID. She had no issues when she flew 2 other times during the Holiday and did not have an issue with the same paper license and was not asked for any other forms of ID. The paper license had been fine as ID at DAL and BDL. This morning at CLT a female TSO at the checkpoint had an attitude and would not take the paper license. She said she told the TSO that paper license has the same information on it and other airports did not have a problem with it. She showed the TSO her Student ID but that was not sufficient either. A TSA Supervisor came to look at the paper license and she finally approved her to come into the screening checkpoint. The same Supervisor said to the TSO to be sure to check the red bin which belonged to the caller. The TSO winked at the Supervisor and said I got you and that made the caller uncomfortable. The TSO also put markers in between the bins to mark the callers particular bin. Caller wasn't sure what they were trying to do. Caller said she felt like a criminal when another TSA Agent patted her head and then had a Trainee TSO to give her a Patdown in which she felt up to her private area.

Caller became argumentative and demanded to file a complaint. I explained to the caller that CLT had the option of requesting additional ID or conducting additional screening due to lack of ID. Caller insists on filing a complaint against the two airports who permitted her to fly with the paper license. She claims it is their fault she was caught off guard today.

Airport: Dallas Love 12-23-14 on Southwest Flight #1692 at 9:15 AM (bound for Chicago).

Airport: CT- Bradley she flew 12-30-14 on Southwest Flight (does not have) departing at 6:05 AM.

RESPONSE:

Told her I am sorry she is upset but the paper license is only considered one form of alternative ID so we normally ask for other forms. That is why the TSO had a Supervisor to approve the ID. We also give extra screening to travelers with an ID issue. Advised I will send an email that outlines that and that may help. Told her I do not argue with my callers but Charlotte followed procedure and it could be heavy holiday travel was why the others were lenient but I cannot say. We try to be consistent with procedures but sometimes it can vary.

Comments: I was screened through the walk-through machine, and was re-checked, based on something the machine 'saw'. The female TSA employee spoke quickly, as she mentioned she was going to pat me down. She needed me to 'put your arms out like this' as she extended her arms to show me what I needed to do. I proceeded with the request. The female employee then, unexpectedly, used both hands (pressed her hands together) and attempted to spread my breasts. She used a up and down/side to side motion while she was inspecting between my breasts. She then groped underneath my breasts, and finally examined underneath my armpits. I was extremely uncomfortable, embarrassed, and upset. Meanwhile, there were several (male and female) employees and customers walking around the area, where I was being 'checked'. This, on top of the already uncomfortable check, was utterly embarrassing. I started into tears while she was finishing up her 'check'. She could clearly see how disturbed I was, and did not stop.

After she was finally finished with this 'pat down' she asked me to put my hands out in front, and swiped my hands with her wipe. She handed it a nearby male TSA employee, and he checked to make sure nothing was detected. Nothing was detected, and I was finally allowed to move, from the screening line, where I was allowed to take my screened bags.

I was so distraught about being physically abused, that I could barely put my shoes on, and as soon as I could- I needed to sit down and compose myself. I was uncontrollably crying- to my husband, who was luckily there by my side. I have been traveling for many years, through Newark International Airport, and many other airports. I have never been treated in such a disrespectful manner.

This is by far, the most upsetting and unsettling TSA search I have ever received.

I expect this inappropriate pat down will be investigated, and handled properly. Please contact me for further information or questions.

Caller is upset because she bought a TSA approved lock and when she arrived at her destination the lock was missing. She flew from McGhee Tyson Airport and when she came back from her trip on December 31st she went to talk to TSA about her missing lock. It was around 11:15 am and 4 TSA agents were standing there and one agent gave her a card and said call this number and they will send you a new lock. She is upset because of the way she was spoken to. She is 75 years old and felt she was being spoken to very dismissive. She bought a TSA lock so it would be easier but since her lock was missing all her items were left for someone to take. There was not a NOI in her bag but caller stated that at McGhee Tyson they open checked baggage there at the check point and normally she watches but this time she did not because she had the approved TSA Lock.

Advised Caller:

Please be advised that TSA is not liable for any damage to locks or bags that are required to be opened by force for security purposes.

In cooperation with private industry, TSA implemented a system under which TSOs are able to identify, unlock, and then relock certain locks using passkey sets available to TSA screeners. TSA-recognized locks can be opened and relocked by TSOs without force and with little delay. TSA cannot guarantee that such locks will never be damaged or lost while TSOs and airline employees handle checked baggage. Additionally, TSA has found that many locks break off in airport baggage conveyor systems, which may also cause damage to checked baggage.

Since your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager while enhancing technology and improving the passenger experience at security checkpoints. As part of this effort, TSA has implemented a program to revise screening procedures for passengers who appear to be age 75 and older.

Under this new screening procedure, passengers who appear to be 75 and older will be allowed to leave on shoes and light outerwear. These new procedures also include permitting an additional pass through advanced imaging technology (AIT) to clear an alarm, as well as greater use of explosives trace detection. Passengers who are 75 or older will be informed of the changes to the screening procedures by Transportation Security Officers during the screening process.

TSA anticipates these changes will further reduce—though not completely eliminate—the need for a physical patdown on travelers 75 and older that would otherwise have been conducted to resolve alarms. It's important to remember, that any individual may be required to remove their shoes or undergo a patdown if anomalies are detected during security screening that cannot be resolved through other means.

Caller did not want to file a claim for the missing lock she just wanted to let TSA know she did not like the way she was spoken to.

Hello, I have and 89 year old aunt Sister (b)(6) held up by TSA at DLH for an identification issue. Her identification was issued by the Winchester NY, County Clerk, ID No (b)(6) with a photo and is current. She missed her scheduled flight for a pat down and searches. Her luggage traveled WITHOUT her with ALL her medication. My aunt traveled last week from White Plains NY to DLH via Chicago, without issue with the same identification. Today they are saying her identification is invalid. She just traveled internationally in the last six months so there should be a record of her travel (unfortunately her passport is in NY at Maryknoll). Our concern is her extensive heart medication that she is now without. I need not going into all the TSA contradictions of having seniors travel with additional ease. The hypocrisy of this situation is beyond logic. Sister (b)(6) is a retired nun, traveling in a wheelchair. Please help, any assistance to right this would be greatly appreciated. (b)(6)

Description of Problem/Inquiry

I traveled through the Denver airport on Friday, December 26th. I have TSA Pre on my boarding pass. I have a total knee replacement. I have a card from my Orthopedic Surgeon stating that I have an implant in my knee. The card was presented to the TSA agent at Security. I was walking with the assistance of a wheeled walker. I am an employee of the Federal Government, with a higher security clearance than the TSA gate agents performing checks. I have my Federal Employee ID visible at all times while going through security. I am a 61 year old white female. In spite of everything I just detailed, I was pulled aside and subjected to a thorough 10 minute pat down – and told "DON'T TOUCH ANYTHING" more than once. Folks – is this really necessary? This is how you intend to prevent acts of terrorism....by making a passenger as described above lift their shirt above their waist not once, but twice? The agent at the gate was (b)(6). She was uniformly rude and discourteous throughout the process. This is an agency that has clearly lost its way. The actions listed above do absolutely nothing to prevent terrorism, and just utilize limited resources in the stupidest way possible.

Caller flew from CVG via Delta but when she reached her destination she realized her luggage was cut and she wants to know the issue with it. Caller also had a NOI. Caller also stated there was a female officer at the checkpoint that was very rude and told her she didn't have to undergo the patdown with diabetes equipment even though she had a doctors note stating she did.

Advised Caller:

Told caller we regret you are not satisfied with the way your luggage was handled so since you had a NOI I will forward your complaint to the CSM for further investigation. Also sent caller a claim form via email.

Subject: TSA Manual Patdown/CarryOn Luggage Complaint

Columbia, Mo January 2, 20215

Hello:

I am sending you an e/mail with an attached letter of complaint regarding the TSA manual patdown and security check that TSA agents conducted at approximately 1 p.m. at O'Hare International Airport. Specifically at issue is cursing that the TSA agent exclaimed against me after the entire patdown and manual security check was conducted.

The TSA security agent offered no explanation as to why he cursed at me after the manual security check.

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): 12/31/14 Left London Heathrow Delta, arrived Detroit Wayne 1:30-2:00. Flight #'s 0019 and 1371.

Comments: At arrival to TSA security loudly were told to not take off shoes and belts. Put my belongings in trays and walked through security device. It alarmed-removed watch, shoes, and belt. Alarm sounded 5 more times. Attendant stated "eventually you'll listen to me and you might get through". He asked "what's in your back pocket?" I responded a London tube map. He-"I don't know what that is? Maybe it's that thing around your neck?" I had forgotten to take ear buds from plane off my person. I was upset from surly attitude of tsa employees before him. I had to walk away after his behavior or I would have his badge # and name. He was about 60 with thin gray hair, morbidly obese, about 5'9-10" no glasses. He held onto a railing with his foot on a lower railing in profile as I continued to watch his behavior. As a family doctor with 40 years experience I determined this man was lazy, not very smart, and probably has chronic back pain. He may be on chronic narcotic analgesics for his back pain. I realize this is a minor complaint; I am hoping he is on probation or if he gets 1 more complaint in his file he will be terminated. While I'm at it. I observed my 92 yo blind mother in a wheelchair get patdown in St. Louis. She visibly jumped when the female attendant touched her breasts.

Comments: On 12-22-14 I flew on Southwest #578 out of Spokane WA. I have an artificial hip and inform the agents before going through the line. However, on this day I was directed through the Pre-check and then because I set off the alarm with my hip I had to go through a pat down instead of going through the scan. It has always been so simple to go through the scan and not to have to wait and go through the pat down which is uncomfortable for me. Why was this changed? In November when I flew it was so simple to use the pre-check line and then go through the scan. The change to a pat down was more time consuming and as mentioned uncomfortable. I hope that you will return to the use of the scan even with the pre-check line.

Secondly, I flew to Houston Hobby Airport in TX and on the return had my luggage searched which of course is not a problem except that one of the TSA locks that I have on my luggage was left open....fortunately it was not lost and no items were missing. The zipper on the main compartment was jammed as well. I understand that Christmas is a very hectic time but there still has to be some care when going through the luggage.

I hope things will change for the better. Locks not relocked are a real problem and this is not the first incident. Please see if this can be addressed.

Thank you.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide the highest level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with respect and courtesy. Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. All Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) are required to be considerate and thoughtful, and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process. TSA regrets if this was not your experience.

TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

Hello, I sent this last night from my phone, and in viewing it morning saw several typos, and am sending you the updated version. I look forward to your feedback.

Today, at around 6:40 pm at the Denver international airport south checkpoint, the lead officer was rude, threatening and abusive to my minor son and me. My son is 16. Due to directions from the person sorting into lines, he was sent to a different security checkline from me. I got through but he was stopped by the lead officer. I gave my parent accompany pass to the tsa security officer near me and they contacted the lead officer. He refused to release My son, who by this time was already scared.

Another tsa officer took over my pass, then told me I would have to go over and try, as he would not listen to them. The lead officer said I would have to move back and be quiet. I explained that this was my minor son. He said to be quiet. He continued to ask my son the same questions over and over. The other officers there had said he should let my son go. He refused. This was unnecessary frightening for both of us. The lead officer continued being unnecessarily rude. My son is a minor, I had a parent pass-. My son attempted to show the officer his name on his high school honor roll-the officer refused to listen. He asked questions and then refused to listen to the answers. He was very threatening to my child.

He then said he knew a way that might work and headed toward the scanning area, giving my son no time to pick up his bags. As we followed, the officer turned to me and said, "not You, You go to the end of the line." First is all, it was extremely inappropriate to separate me from my minor son (again), second I had already been screened and this was more bullying. By the time I arrived, they were giving my son a full pat down in public, of everything including his genitals. His luggage was thoroughly manually inspected too and the questions they asked were way beyond anything a minor should be asked. The officer doing the pat down did ask the lead officer if this was really necessary, and he was told yes.

PM

The lead officer also indicated that he wasn't interested in whether or not my son missed his flight. When I asked how to file a complaint, I was told I would have to go through security again to get to "the podium."

I cannot believe that scaring a minor is a part of tsa's job. Bullies should not be tolerated. Minors should not be separated from their parents. This is incredibly frightening and intimidating and serves no purpose. Minors do not have to have IDs and I had a pass to accompany my minor son. Please respond.

Thank you,

People aren't born hating their government, but they start on the journey after experiencing the many minor insults and indignities that the government – local, state or federal – can heap upon decent law abiding citizens who mind their business, pay their taxes and go about their life in an attempt to achieve life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

I consider 911 to be the biggest failure of government in the history of this nation. The Federal government failed to protect the people it supposedly serves, resulting in a massive loss of life. Government then compounded the insult by restricting liberties and instituting "Security Theater" in an attempt to fool the citizenry about the incompetence of the federal government.

I cite by way of example of the minor insults experienced almost daily, my most recent experience in flying from IAD to LAX. I packed a large cocktail-table book in my luggage that had a dust wrapper about that was provided by the bookstore. TSA entered my luggage after it was checked with VirginAmerica, destroyed the dust wrapper and then went on to wrap it up with government tape (literally!) such that it was impossible to subsequently open the package without damaging the book cover. See enclosed photo.

Naturally nobody at TSA will be held responsible for the lack of judgment or the destruction of property. Good citizens continue to be harassed by these low level functionaries and I have no respect for this agency. It angers me every time I fly, when I watch them harass families with little kids, grope grandmothers and otherwise insult the people who pay their salaries.

TSA has started me on my journey to hating my government.

Comments:

As an individual who has inquiries and seeking resolution regarding TSA travel screening at transportation airports and seek The Department of Homeland Security's Travel Redress Inquiry. Traveler treated unequally and with out dignity, respect, and Caller said he has a TSA complaint and that his carry on bag got swabbed 8 times with negative results. He said the last Officer he talked to was TSA Officer (b)(6) but he does not know the other Officer s name at Denver Airport today at the security checkpoint. He said they wasted 30 minutes of his time in a separate room due to a false reading by the machine. He was told they got a positive response by the machine and needed to do additional screening and he said they did not need to take him to a little room and give him a patdown. He said his laptop was not in his carry on bag when they swabbed it. He said he did not ask for a Supervisor and that the airport was busy today and that he will be at the terminal until 5:30 pm and he said he can talk to the CSM if they want to contact him.

Response:I advised him that I will refer this to the CSM at the airport.

I'd like to give a mild complaint about an incident at Tampa Airport security screening this morning, between 5:10 and 5:45 am. My daughters (ages 16 and 18) and I were catching united flight 1507 to Newark leaving at 5:57 am on January 3, 2014.

I asked the screening agents to allow my daughters to skip going through the AIT machine. The agents set my daughters aside for a pat down while I went through the AIT and waited for them on the other side. It was very busy, so I knew it would take extra time. But after 20 minutes, I started to suspect that the agents were actually extremely annoyed and were trying to teach me a lesson—show me that I'm an idiot, and that they have the power to make us miss our plane (though we arrived nearly an hour ahead of take-off). After my first daughter finally got a pat down, and I saw the hostility directed toward us. I gave up on the second daughter and sent her through the AIT machine. I had no choice really, as our plane was so close to take off.

After we ran for our plane, my daughters told me they were very upset. They said that when they were waiting, the agents were radioing loudly and complaining about "the mother" insisting on a pat down, and basically making a scene to embarrass them. They felt so humiliated. Honestly, I really thought it was our option, so I had been very polite and patient about it.

I do not blame the agents, but you do have the system set up so that it is impossible for a passenger to decline the AIT. I think you need to be honest about that. The security agents are human and "special orders" are going to annoy them when they are busy. Some agents will lose their professionalism and engage in petty power struggles, which they will obviously win at 5 minutes to take off.

Your web site says the following:

Q. Can I choose the way I would like to be screened?

A. Screenings using AIT are voluntary. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Signs are posted in front of each AIT location advising passengers of this right.

But please, be honest! Given my experience I would add a few lines to this:

Comments: I recently traveled from Denver to Tucson. TSA in Denver was EXCEEDINGLY RUDE! You say not to leave bags unattended. I had my bags on the belt to go into the screening machine. However, since TSA was taking their time sending actual passengers through the detectors, I held up sending my bags through x-ray. I was then ordered by TSA to send my bags through. I explained this would leave my bags unattended on the other side. They did not care. I was again ordered to send my bags through. I again said not until I was allowed to go through the screening x-ray. I was again ordered to send them through or take them off the belt. At this time one TSA agent motioned to the other three standing around him. I did not think much of that at first. I told this agent that I would send my bags through (At this point I just wanted to go home) but if ANYTHING was missing I WOULD hold TSA ACCOUNTABLE! Upon exiting the screening machine, I was then given a full pat down by TSA. I believe this was done due to my initial refusal to send my bags through until I went through. When finally allowed to collect my belongings, I had no less than THREE TSA agents standing around me in a half circle, hands clasped behind their backs as I went through my belongings as they had been sent through before me. This in turn upset TSA that I was going through my stuff to make sure I had it all and I was ordered to move. I reiterated not until I was sure I had EVERYTHING and that nothing was missing. This is the WORST experience I have ever had flying!

I apologized to the caller and told him our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Since your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the appropriate Customer Service Manager.

I also told him that any time he travels he may call TSA cares and we can request some assistance for him. I offered the number but he did not take it.

She is an African American women and experiences issues at PHL and other airports every time that she travels. She will be flying on Thursday and would like to alleviate the issue. She is an African American woman with her hair in microbraids that she wears long. Other women boarded with the same hairstyle only in a ball and they did not receive additional screening. Someone physically inspects or touches her hair. She doesn't like this as they have touched other things at the checkpoint. She sees nothing nowhere that indicates that this must be done.

She asked a TSA agent in regard to this and they advised that they do not know that her hair is human.

She asked another African American woman who indicated that they do not check her hair. She asked why is her hair being checked.

She doesn't use any type of hair pin or clip and there is not an alarm. She asked if this is part of their procedure as she was advised by a TSO that it was.

Her son is attorney and they intend to take steps. She feels that her civil rights have been violated.

She feels embarrassed by the additional screening.

4:48:56
PM

She doesn't want this to occur when she travels on Thursday.

Individuals may be referred for additional screening if the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) cannot reasonably determine that the head area is free of a detectable threat item. If the issue cannot be resolved through ETD or a patdown search, the individual will be offered the opportunity to have her hair down in a private screening area. She can request a private screening in a private room or area out of view of other passengers. TSOs have to conduct additional screening to clear alarms.

TSA Civil Rights can assist passengers who feel they have been discriminated against or profiled in the screening process. All civil rights complaints are required to be submitted in writing. I can email information on how to do so.

She asked for a supervisor.

(b)(6) took the call. The caller stated that she gets pulled aside at PHL every time she flies because she has microbraids. She stated that other African-American women did not get checked like she did. She stated that she was in tears last time she flew because she was so embarrassed. She stated that she is feeling very singled out because of her hair and because her husband is white and she is black.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

Since this is the first round trip with this additional screening, this would be in line with a random selection process. If this happens again on a future flight, then please call us back for additional service.

I am going to try to keep this short because TSA has taken enough of my time that I can not get back.

I travel for work all the time, with that being said I appreciate the security that goes into keeping us safe. I am however greatly disgusted with how you handle people with medical issues through security. I am 32 yrs old, without getting into too much detail I recently had a mastectomy and undergoing reconstruction and other medical surgeries.

When I arrived at the security check point I let the TSA agent (Unknown Male agent) know I needed to opt out and do the pat down due to medical reasons.

He immediately replied back with multiple reasons why I SHOULD be able to go through the scanner in a rude condescending tone. I may not look sick, but I am a human being and a little respect would be nice. He made it very clear all the steps that would be in place for the pat down and immediately I was being treated as if I was if I was a terrorist taking over the airport. I have never felt more uncomfortable. I was being treated as if I was asking for something completely ridiculous and now I was going to have to pay for it because I have medical ports and devices in me that set off the scanner. But I look healthy, so I guess it is completely OK to be treated this way according to TSA.

I then was sent over to the area to be pat down with TSA agent (b)(6) she was completely calm and nice. However everyone is trying so hard to stick to guidelines that don't fit everyone. I explained to her my situation and where she could not touch due to my most recent surgery. I then patiently waited while she explained again what she was going to do and again...I felt like I was being treated like a criminal. As much as I fly and as many times as I have had to do this I have never been made to feel this way. I do get patted down but to the extent that (b)(6) was required to go was excessive for my situation. We were almost complete with the serious invasion of privacy on display for the entire airport to see. By this point I was furious and having to keep my arms up for her was causing extreme pain so the situation was just getting better. I was then told

Hello and happy New Year,

I am writing this email in hopes that my travel experiences with TSA Precheck have been resolved and I do not continue to experience 100% denial over the past three months. I have contacted both TSA and American Airlines and they recently sent me back a message that my information being sent to TSA is 100% accurate and with 100 segments in 2015 and over 300 in the past 3 years I sit in the qualification of the top 5 most frequent travelers in all of America. I was surprised by the response below that stated I was determined that "I may not meet TSA's eligibility requirements...". Oddly enough I have received over 90% acceptance on my flights since I was selected in the very initial pilot stages of the program. What makes it even more frustrating is that I am a Type 1 Diabetic with an Insulin pump so I automatically receive a full pat down from the full body scanners not to mention the additional line times. American said they reached out to their liaison with the TSA to clarify this but have not received a response in several weeks. The agent I talked to thinks that my name may be mistaken for someone that is potentially on the watch list and suggested I contact the TSA to receive a Redress number and a known traveler # as a potential solution. I begin traveling again next week to (to the busy DFW and O'Hare Airports) and want to do anything in my power to get my status back. Please advise and thank you for your attention to this matter.

I know they call it out on the radio because I can hear the announcement, but no ones acknowledges it and actually do the screening. Today I brought two empty chairs that need to be screen. One that is the older one that just needs a simply "pat down" and the other one that new and need to be "swabbed check". The TSA Agent saw both but only did the old chair because it was quicker and then left. I waited for 10 mins, which is considered quick. sometimes I waited for 20 mins but that because it get busy, but I seen an opening to check the wheelchairs and still do other tasks. Caller states that when she became disabled she got PreCheck. She has been getting Precheck for a couple of years. She was not chosen for PreCheck for her upcoming flight. Caller would like to know why. Caller has a broken arm and will not be able to remove her shoes or lift her arm. Caller states that she has a replaced hip so she usually goes through AIT, but will not be able to do that this time. Caller is upset that she won't get PreCheck.

Advised caller:

TSA has begun to identify passengers who may be eligible for expedited screening through a risk-based analysis of passenger data using the same Secure Flight data that passengers have provided for years. TSA's new initiative will use this same information to also identify low-risk passengers to determine if they should be directed to the TSA Precheck lane for expedited screening. These passengers should not expect to be directed to the TSA Precheck lane each time they fly.

No status found.

Before the security screening begins, it is important for passengers to inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) if they:

9:39:30
PM

- Cannot remove their shoes;
- Need assistance;
- Have difficulty raising their arms; or
- Have difficulty walking or standing alone.

Passengers are not required to remove their shoes if they cannot remove them because of medical complications, discomfort, pain, balancing problems, or because the shoe is part of a prosthetic. However, passengers' shoes must undergo additional screening, which may require that passengers lift the bottom hem of their pants. Passengers can request to be seated during this portion of the screening. TSA also may use technology to test shoes for traces of explosive material. If explosive material is detected, passengers will have to undergo additional screening.

If a passenger cannot or chooses not to be screened by AIT or a walk-through metal detector, the passenger must be screened using a patdown. A patdown procedure also is used to resolve any alarms of a metal detector or anomalies identified by AIT.

If passengers are screened using a patdown, it is important to know the following:

- Patdowns will be conducted by a TSO of the same gender.
- Passengers may ask for private screening at any time.
- A private screening will be offered if the patdown involves sensitive areas.

When did this happen? 01 05 2015

Where did this happen? NEVADA - LAS - McCarran International

What happened?

The incident took place on January 5, 2015 around 7:15 pm. The checkpoint was the one leading to Gate C. I was traveling with my husband to Burbank, CA on Southwest Airlines flight 1968.

I was wearing a top that was flagged on x-Ray that prompted a pat-down procedure. While waiting in the TSA line, my husband and I were conversing about showering when we make it home and we decided not to. After I Learned about the pat-down, I turned to my husband and told him that I will need to take a shower when we get home.

Officer (b)(6) overheard the conversation and acted in a very unprofessional manner. She said that she is the one that will

Airport : CMH - Port Columbus International Date/Time of Travel : 01/06/2015 7:00 AM Airline & Flight Number : Delta Checkpoint/Area of Airport : Gate C TSA Employee: (If Known) : DL2419 Comment : My privacy was violated by a TSA agent. I went into the body scanner like I usually do. I did not wear any jewelry, I had on a sports bra and tight skinny jeans. Therefore, I had no metal on me and nothing in my pockets. I do not understand the pat-down, but allowed it because I have received them many times before. This time the agent told me she needed to pat me down. After a long pat down on my waist I was clearly uncomfortable and told the woman I would like a private room. She said okay and just stood there for awhile. The security line was very long and my flight was boarding. I asked her to do the pat down again in public as my husband was now through the scanner and standing next to me. She then proceeded to pat me down and then told me she was going inside my waist band and ran her fingers along it, putting her hands inside my pants. This is a clear violation of my 4th amendments rights as a United States of America citizen and I do not believe this was necessary, considering I did not wear a belt and my pants are not baggy at all. She also did not give me the option to not allow her to go into my pants. This is a clear violation of my privacy. My husband saw all of it happen and is a witness to this violation of my 4th Amendment rights.

Caller s son just went through TSA screening at DCA and wishes to file a complaint with someone directly at the airport. Caller indicates his son is handicapped and has one arm and a catheter. Caller states that during the course of his son s patdown a cap was knocked off his son s catheter. Caller also states the officer s replaced the cap and assured the passenger it was sterilized before it was replaced. Caller does not believe the cap was sterilized and states he highly doubts there is a sterilization area available at the checkpoints for such instances. Caller is extremely upset and wants someone to handle his complaint immediately.

Resolution:

Advised caller he may contact DCA CSM Daryush Mazhari at 703-603-(b)(6) to address his complaint with someone specifically at the airport.

The caller flew from EWR to PBI on 12-30. She asked what the rights are for the patdown. She stated that her 83 year old husband had to remove his shoes, belt, and undergo a patdown. She thought that it was very uncomfortable for him. She stated that she thought all of that stopped once a passenger turns 80. She stated that this has never happened before, and the persons in front of him got to go on through. She stated that the luggage did not alarm and it was fine. She explained that there was an officer available and they did the patdown.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed. We are not able to tell her exactly why he received a patdown, however his age does not exempt him from the process.

PM

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, and children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile. There is no way for a passenger to completely avoid a patdown for screening.

If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by a TSO of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the TSO must pat-down sensitive areas. During a private screening, another TSA employee will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

The passenger should inform TSOs of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked or required to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

Hello, I asked for the the yellow card after (what I felt) was over-the-top, unnecessary pat-downs (2) and detainment at ORD on Friday, Dec. 12, 2014.

I am a 72 year old healthy female, grandmother of 10, with a prosthetic metal and plastic left knee. I have also had RT rotator cuff surgery and have issues with LFT rotator cuff. I was in OHare and traveling to Ironwood, MI on AirChoiceOne. Of course, I told them my knee would trip the buzzer - which it did - and then was pulled aside and given the routine patdown. I told them I was headed to my step-daughter's wedding and a family visit with my other 3 children.

In Grand Rapids, MI and NY (I go every year) they have the revolving door full body scanners that show every bit of metal on your body - and my tickets are usually marked TSA approved so I go to the head of the line and zip into the scanner and am released WITHOUT A PAT DOWN EVER. Why does OHare not have this full-body scanner?

PM

I didn't mind ONE routine patdown - especially if it would generate a TSA approval for future flights. Instead the handler used what looked like a bandaid to touch my body and then put it into a machine which said I HAD BOMB MAKING CHEMICALS ON MY BODY. So she called a second handler - they took me to a private room and repeated the patdown. Failed again - this time she explained perhaps GLYCERINE (in many female lotions, body creams) triggered the FAIL. I had just put handcream (with glycerine) on - on the way to the airport. What they should have done is look carefully into my luggage and see that I had the usual femal clothing, lotions etc. in plastic bags. They did not - my body was not a threat.

Then, while I was extremely worried and ANGRY I would miss my plane - they called a supervisor. He arrived a HALF HOUR LATER -- and only gave their paperwork a cursory look and released me. He did not apologize for HIS cocky delay or give any explanation. I feel the women were using me as a test case for their patdown and tester - and generally were WAY OVER THE TOP in their judgment of the situation.

Meanwhile -- these women were detained with this unnecessary work - while perhaps more suspicious people were allowed a pass. I now do NOT HAVE A HIGH OPINION OF ORD and will avoid it except when necessary.

I plan to take Air Choice One from ORD in the future to see my children and grandchildren - how can I get TSA clearance or notice of my knee on my ticket profile -- and AVOID the fiasco I endured and will not forget. Thank you in advance for answering this letter. You may choose to call me at (b)(6) Or email.

Good morning.

I have just gone through TSA security at Chicago O Hare flying on United. I travel a lot and always opt out of the full body scanner. In the last 18 months that is approximately 30 opt outs with physical pat downs.

Today I had officer (b)(6) (female african american late 30 s) who was by far the most aggressive physical search I have ever had. She was clear and concise in telling me what about what she was about to do. My complaint is that she slammed her hand upwards in between my legs physically hitting me so hard in the vagina I jerked. I am not mistaken in my experience. This was not once accidentally -- but all 4 times on the back and front side. I have been told that the object of the search on the inside of the leg is to ensure that nothing is hidden in the inside of the leg. This officer did not feel the inside of my leg but jerk her hand straight up and hit me very hard.

I walked away feeling very violated and compelled to write this complaint immediately.

Caller wants to talk to someone in charge of implementing screening procedures in Frankfurt, Germany. He was told that they were just following what the TSA requires them to do. He felt harassed. They were blaming the US. He states he will take his complaint to congress. His BP and his families had 4 S s and they received an extensive patdown. They almost missed their flights. The screeners had 0 compassion. They said they were following TSA mandates. He wants to talk to someone in charge of TSA. He asked for my last name and where we are located. He will talk to his congressman and senator.

Response:

Advised caller that TSA continuously works with foreign governments to balance local and legal jurisdiction issues with international aviation security. TSA does not implement procedures at foreign airports. They are implemented by the person there at the airport.

When a traveler gets the 4S s usually they get them on the rest of the trip.

When a similar complaint occurs within the US we forward the complaint to the appropriate person or are able to provide contact information for such person.

If he wants to contact someone in charge we can provide their mailing address. We don't have a phone number.

Caller was at the checkpoint on Jan 5th. at MCO. She was in a wheelchair and had PreCheck on her boarding pass. A gentleman who was helping, (b)(6) helped her through the checkpoint. Prospect was on his card. She had to go through the regular screening. He did not take her through the proper channels. She had to go through the AIT. She had to take her shoes off. She was trusting this (b)(6) guy. He took her to the wrong spot at the checkpoint and to the wrong gate. TSA PreCheck was on the boarding pass and he took her to the wrong lane at the checkpoint.

They asked her to take the laptop out and place it on the Xray machine. Items on the Xray belt pushed her computer off onto the floor and it broke. They threw away her hand lotion. She was directed to the Supervisor. The supervisor told her that she wanted him to provide the information and not to use the video. She did not need to view the video. She was at the checkpoint between 4-600PM. He did not take her through the proper channels.

She had requested wheelchair assistance with the airline.

Advised:

1/7/2015 10:50:34 AM I stated I would forward this information to the CSM for review. I offered a claim form which would be sent within 24 hours to her email address for possible reimbursement.

I explained since she had not requested assistance with TSA the gentleman would have possibly worked with the airlines. She should contact the airline about the gentleman's assistance.

Call Travelers may call TSA Cares toll free at (855) 787-2227 prior to traveling to request assistance for the screening process. Try to call at least 72 hours in advance. She could request a patdown and remain in the wheelchair for future screenings. Form sent via email.

Caller advised that she had a flight at LAX on 12-24. Caller has an artificial knee and set off an alarm. Caller advised that the TSO had her step to the side and wait for another TSO to be available for a patdown. Caller advised while having the patdown the security officer took her pedometer and after taking it she took it and placed it in a bin. After the patdown was complete the TSO couldn't find where she had placed the pedometer. Caller was given a form by the security officer to complete so that she could be contacted if the item was found. Caller has contacted lost and found at LAX and hasn't received a response from them. Caller asked what she could do to get reimbursed or get her pedometer back.

Caller stated the officer torn his stitches and an ambulance had to come to the airport.

Caller flew from JFK on 12-20. He is concerned because he seen passengers going through screening wearing head coverings. She is concerned because this could cause an issue with misidentification.

Advised. Travelers are permitted to wear head coverings (religious or otherwise) through the security checkpoints; however, all persons wearing head coverings are subjected to the possibility of additional security screening, which may include a patdown and an explosives trace detection (ETD) test.

To Whom it May Concern:

My husband and I recently traveled abroad to Belgium for the winter holidays. On our way back, we received horrible treatment from the security guards at the boarding gate. I wouldn't normally contact you about this except that they told us that you (the TSA) had ordered this treatment. We had already been through security. We walked through the metal detector and had our bags screened and then hand checked. We thought that was normal but when we arrived at the gate, we were singled out, in front of everyone getting on the plane to be frisked. They made us strip off our shoes and socks and jackets and they opened up our carry on bags. They put their hands all over me, inside my pants, touched my breasts, went up my pants legs, etc. Whilst this was occurring, I asked of all of this was necessary to do in front of the other passengers. I mean, we were giving them a BIRD'S EYE view/show. The woman groping me shouted, "WHAT? If you don't allow us to do our job, you won't be allowed to get on the plane. YOUR government has required us to search you." They were like NAZI guards, seriously!

We have NEVER done anything wrong. We are employed, hard working citizens of the US. We don't steal, we don't harm anyone, we pay our taxes, we do everything we are supposed to be doing. Why are we being subjected to these harassment tactics?

I'd like to know what it is that we did to make it onto your hit list and how we can get off of it. Please either provide me with the information needed to avoid this kind of treatment again, or direct me to someone who can help us.

Caller flew from BWI to FLL. She says that TSA was great at BWI. They flew back on 12/17 from FLL. Her husband has a pacemaker. Caller states that he had a terrible patdown and that she had to get up to pull his pants up because the TSO pulled them down and that the patdown lasted at least 5 minutes. She says that having his pants down was embarrassing for him because he is 75 and wears Depends.

Caller said that her and her husband (b)(6) traveled from FLL on 12 17 2014 at 10:25 am. Caller said that her husband has a pacemaker and has to get a patdown when going through screening. Caller stated that the way the patdown was conducted was very poor. She stated that her husband is 75 and he was in a wheelchair due to the recent pacemaker surgery. She stated that she is in a wheelchair as well because she has bad knees. She said that they made him get out of the wheelchair and left him standing for about 5 minutes. Caller said that he wears Depends now and his pants had fallen down during the patdown. The officer continued doing the patdown and ignored the fact that his Depends were showing. At this point she said that she got out of her wheelchair and told the officer to wait and she assisted her husband in pulling up his pants. She stated that the whole ordeal was very embarrassing and she thinks that the officers need to be more considerate of these situations. She had no complaint toward the officers personally and she does not think he was discriminated or treated unfairly due to his medical condition. She does not want to file any type of formal complaint, and doesn't want to get anyone in trouble she just thinks the officers need to be made aware of these situations so they can be more considerate. She stated that there next flight was from BWI and was handled completely different and was a very smooth screening experience.

Dear TSA-

I am writing this letter to inform you of an incident that happened on Dec 29th at DFW airport. We have flown internationally and domestically before with my 11 year old son who has severe cerebral palsy. We are used to additional screening procedures that occur when taking medications and prescription formula through the security check-points and have found the TSA agents, in the past, to be very professional. This was not the case at DFW on Dec 29th.

I informed an agent (upon entering the check-point) that we had called TSA Cares, because we were carrying-on medications and prescription enteral formula. The officer asked if we had a prescription for the formula. I indicated that we did. She said it would be no problem going through security. We then x-rayed our belongings: 2 backpacks, stroller, bag of pill-based medication (transparent so one can see through), laptop, ½ case of enteral formula medication with script taped to the outside. My husband carried my son through the metal detector, and I walked through the x-ray machine. When TSA agent (b)(6) saw the prescription formula the following occurred:

The TSA agent insisted that she open ALL the cartons of enteral formula medication (there was approximately 7 small cartons). I explained to her it was a prescription formula medicine that was used to G-tube feed my son, and we had ordered it from a medical supply vendor (it could not just be picked up from a pharmacy). I stated that if she opened all of food cartons that we would have no way of feeding my son because once opened it begins to go bad. I showed her the script that was taped to the outside of the box. She insisted on opening them, so I said she could open one and screen the outside of the rest of the containers.

She said because we refused to open ALL of the containers that they would have to pull ALL of our carry-on items and do a more intensive search of each of them. They then took all of the items that had just been x-rayed (including our shoes) and very thoroughly tested them inside and out.

She also said because we refused to open ALL of the containers one person in our party would need to undergo a formal pat-down.

Here are the problems that I have with what happened:

I would like to file a formal complaint against the TSA agents at the Des Moines international airport. After proceeding through the AIT machine it said I had something between my breast, which I didn't. I felt that the agent inappropriately felt my breasts in front of everyone in line. I feel violated and disgusted that she didn't take me to a more private location to do such a pat down. The fact that she made the line wait and everyone was watching me get my breasts felt up made me feel uncomfortable and violated. I hope your team addresses this issue so that other women won't have to feel the awful way I did.

Regarding my recent experience at Austin airport on 1/9/2015 at approximately 9:45AM

TSA agent in line requested a pat down no less than 3 times – no response. I requested a supervisor, no response. Meanwhile my laptop, prescription glass and other assets are sitting unattended on the conveyer after scanning for about 15 minutes. Finally the original agent did the pat down – no supervisor ever appeared. They seemed disinterested in my complaint.

This is TOTALLY UNACCEPTABLE and definitely retribution for not going through your scanning machines. There were no less than 3 TSA agents standing around the supervisor desk while I was put on ice.

I would like a response on how this treatment will be addressed – training may be needed here as well as a reprimand.

Caller states that she and her son are trying to contact TSA in Long Beach. Caller needs to know if there is a secondary screening room to screen the cat because it cannot be removed from the carrier. The caller contacted the TCC previously and was told that there is no enclosed room for private screening. Caller needs to know if the private screening is a private enclosed room so that they know if it will work to screen the cat. Caller has tried to contact the CSM at the airport several times and they have heard nothing back. Caller is very upset that they have not been able to contact anyone about this issue because they will not book the flight until they find out that they can bring the cat through screening.

Advised caller:

If traveling with a pet in the aircraft cabin, present the pet to a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) at the checkpoint. The owner is requested to remove the pet from its carrier and carry it through the walk-through metal detector (WTMD) or walk it through on a leash. TSOs are required to resolve any alarms associated with the pet using visual observation and patdown inspections. All accessible property associated with the pet, such as cabin kennels, must be separately screened. If a passenger believes that the removal of their pet could result in escape, a Supervisory TSO can authorize an alternative screening measure. If the passenger is permitted to carry their pet through the WTMD in the carrier, the passenger, pet, and carrier must all undergo additional screening. Additional screening of the animal may still require its removal from the carrier. Passengers may request to go to a private screening area to help maintain better control of the pet.

I received a call from (b)(6) from Charlotte TSA this morning. He stated that he received guidance from TSA in Washington DC. He informed me that if I were to fly through Charlotte again with my service animal, that there would be NO accommodation for the excessive scarring on my hands in regards to the ETD. He insisted that I would have to have the explosive testings done on my hands and there was no accommodation available to have it done anywhere else.

Basically, as a disabled veteran with excessive scarring on my hands due to a service connected injury, I would not be allowed to pass through TSA security without this testing done specifically on my hands. This is a severe violation of the ADA. If I were to not have a service animal this would not be an issue.

As you can see in the email from TSA, ETDs can be done on the hands OR ACCESSIBLE PROPERTY.

Please advise how I'm supposed to fly with my disability that requires the use of a service animal and with excessive scarring on my hands. Other airports have been able to accommodate me since my injury.

I am more than willing to apply for TSA Pre-Check if you would waive the fee.

Thank you for contacting the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) with your questions and concerns about airport security checkpoint screening for travelers with disabilities and medical conditions.

Specifically, you would like to know what to expect for passengers traveling with service animals. TSA personnel should never separate passengers from their service animal. If a passenger has a service animal due to a disability or medical condition, Caller says that he is 73.

He travels often. He flies Colonel on Delta. He said he gets Precheck on his boarding pass. He says it doesn't help since he has an artificial hip. They tell him to go through a patdown. Is there any way around that.

Caller Advised:

TSA recognizes that certain travelers with disabilities or medical conditions may have difficulty standing or walking and that certain medical conditions may cause individuals to alarm when screened using a walk-through metal detector. If this occurs, TSA Pre individuals may be permitted to undergo alternate screening procedures such as Advance Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, explosives trace detection (ETD) swabbing, or a patdown screening.

He said to add this information to the website. I told him I would note this in my record.

How long does it take to get a response? My enquiry (see below) was sent some time ago.

Incident Details: Caller flew on Jan 7 from SAN to EWR at 12:30 PM with Delta. She was traveling with her mother. She travels in a wheelchair, and cannot get out of it. She knows the procedures, and usually gets a patdown. She had a wheelchair attendant push her through. Her mother can walk and had already went through screening. Officer (b)(6) conducted her patdown, she pushed her through the checkpoint, and asked who s is this where does this go , but never spoke directly to her. She was essentially treating her like cargo. She told the officer she was able to speak, and the officer got offended and just left her sitting. When her mother approached, the officer came back, she yelled at her mother and made her mother get a patdown because she touched the wheelchair. THEN Officer (b)(6) conducted her patdown. Then officer (b)(6) started sticking her tongue out at her, and mocking her, while patting down her mother. (b)(6) was the supervisor at the checkpoint.

REASON for the call: Caller received a patdown after an ETD scan. The TSOs explained the procedures that they were doing but did not explain why

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: Advised caller I will forward the information to the CSM at the airport provided. Advised caller the ETD swabbing is very sensitive and can pick up traces of items that could be found in perfume, soap, or even laundry detergent.

Special Notes: The airport was empty and quiet. The caller was on a business trip. She travels several times a year. On her flight home she was stopped and searched. No one explained to her why a search was conducted. Her luggage went through with no alarms, but she was still screened. She went through he WTMD and nothing went off. The caller states her hands were swabbed and after she got extensive screening.

Comments: After walking through the scan machine, Agent (b)(6) gave me a secondary screening. Without advising me what she would be doing, she stuck her fingers into the front waistband of my pants and started poking my bare abdomen with her fingertips. The lack of advising me as to what she was going to do and the repeated poking with her fingertips was extremely inappropriate, and I consider her behavior to be assault. She then asked repeatedly what was in my back pocket while patting around. When I explained that there was nothing in my back pocket, and that in fact was sewn shut, she asked repeatedly if it was flat, which is a useless and inappropriate question, particularly considering that she was talking about my buttocks.

She was extremely rude after the pat down, as well. She saw me looking at her name tag, complained loudly that I was getting her name, and claimed that she had a witness. Her comment indicates to me that she was well aware that her behavior was inappropriate.

Hello there, my name is (b)(6) and I would like to give you feedback of a recent screening:

Caller went through Security in Phoenix Airport it was a complete zoo. She was 2 and a half hours early for her flight, and with all of the confusion she left her bangles from India in the tray that was left to go through after her. She travels alot and she knows TSA gets alot of complaints. Every single time she goes through in checked luggage, it is ransacked. She has friends that travel and never get theirs inspected. She doesnt bother to lock her suitcase that always get cut off. She just was really upset about the way that TSA works sometimes, some of the people there are okay. TSA has no since of compassion for travelers, she had a bottle of vodka once and all she wanted was the bottle she did not care about the actual vodka, she just wanted the bottle. But they made her throw the entire thing away She has had breast cancer and used to request a patdown but she doesnt anymore, she is wondering how the TSOs screen people without a licensing to do. She thinks that all airports should have a lane set aside for first time fliers and passengers with families because Sky Harbor was a complete mess because of a family with small children that had not gone through screening before.

Explained to the caller that we do not actually send passengers through an Xray machine. Explained that we have the WTMD which is just a large walk through metal detector. We have the AIT which does not penetrate the body, it just looks for anomalies on the outside of the body. The only things that actually go through an xray machine are passengers belongings, that would probably be why TSOs do not have to have a license to do the screening and have passengers around the xray. As far as radiation, we have information about the AIT that 2 minutes on board an aircraft exposes passengers to more radiation than going through the AIT.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Denver International Airport DIA. 1/10/14 5am.

Comments: Pat-down screening was done with training TSA agents. The pat-down took over 10 minutes because the trainee couldn't remember his schpeel and he didn't know how our where to pat down. This is very unprofessional and not very safe practice. This caused me to lose my flight. Is this normal to train security agents and their practices on the general public?

Caller is frustrated that this is the 4th time liquids have been left open and spilled inside her checked bag when travelling from BWI. She previously had an incident at the checkpoint relating to her request to be screened with a patdown, and not by the screening technologies. This began after that incident. She is upset that she has called before, and no action appears to have been taken, since this continues to happen when she travels from BWI. It does not happen when she travels from other airports. She had taped the tops of the bottles closed to prevent leakage, but the tape seal has been broken and not replaced each time.

5:41:48 PM We regret that you were unsatisfied with the manner in which your checked baggage was handled.

Please note that TSA assumes a very limited role with respect to checked baggage handling. We are only responsible for checked baggage from the time it is presented for screening until the time it has been cleared of screening. Once checked baggage has been screened and cleared, airlines are responsible for transporting it to its final destination. As a result, the amount of time checked baggage is under TSA control is relatively short.

You may wish to file a claim for missing and or damaged items by completing a Standard Form 95 (claim form). A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. Claim forms are also available on our Web site at www.tsa.gov. If you decide to file a claim, it will be processed in accordance with the Federal Tort Claims Act.

Caller is questioning why she was flagged on a trip to the Dominican Republic and back. Caller stated that she was patted down and her hands were swabbed. Caller stated that she has a KTN and recieved TSA PreCheck for the departure and still encountered this. Caller stated that in the Dominican Republic she was only switching planes and never left the airport there and went through their additional screening. I advised the caller stated that when returning going through Dulles she was patted down and went through additional screening. Caller asked why she should have TSA PreCheck if it does not help her. Caller asked if she was flagged for it.

Resolution:

1/12/2015 11:59:06 AM TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

I advised the caller that I can't speak for the security screening she endured internationally, but only for TSA.

I advised the caller that it may just be the random selection and she may not encounter this again as it was only for this one trip. I advised the caller that with TSA PreCheck she will still receive the expedited screening, but TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures.

I advised the caller that I would not be able to confirm or deny if she is on a watch list. I advised the caller that I could give her information about what she could possibly do if she believes she is on a watch list, or if the additional screening is an on-going issue. I advised the caller that with the one trip it may be random selection for additional screening and she may not encounter it again.

REASON for the call: Caller had a bottle of water in his backpack. Caller said he went through screening right before he went through the x-ray machine. Caller said his hand was swabbed and was told he didn't have to take his shoes off. Caller said he put his suitcase, backpack, and belt in the bin to be x-rayed. Caller said he had no illegal substances. Caller said he is a teacher and has no criminal record. Caller said his backpack never came out of the conveyor belt. Caller said his backpack went down another conveyor belt that was behind a plastic shield. Caller said he went and got his backpack off the other conveyor belt. Caller said he then walked to his gate. Caller said a big man then yelled at him "Stop right there you are in big trouble!". Caller said he was then escorted back to the screening area. Caller said he then received a patdown while many other TSO agents watched. Caller said he had a packet with his passport and boarding pass and it was taken out of his hand. Caller said he was asked provoking questions such as, "Where do you work? Is this your real address?". Caller said an agent then went through his backpack and found the bottle of water. Caller said he was given the option to drink the water or throw it away. Caller said he told them to keep the water. Caller said the supervisor then told him it was a honest mistake for him to grab his bag. Caller said the agent that was asking provoking questions never apologized. Caller said he is traumatized now and he can not look at a bottle of water without getting excited and sweating. Caller said he is now going to see a therapist. Caller said the individual that yelled at him will be in big trouble and should of never yelled at him. Caller said he already contacted his lawyer and the newspaper. Caller said that the name of the TSO is (b)(6) that he feels he was mistreated by. Caller said the name of the supervisor is (b)(6) his title was Transportation Security Manager. Caller said he knows the TSO is very well trained and he knew that they can tell by his face that he would not be a problem. Caller said he was terrorized by (b)(6) because he screamed at him, took his passport from his hand, and asked him provoking questions. Caller said when all of it was over he felt that he was raped. Caller said he was violated on multiple levels. Caller said he wants to make sure (b)(6) does not do that to another passenger and he thinks he should be working in a jail with inmates and not passports. Caller thinks he was discriminated by the way he was treated because they wouldn't let him open his mouth and he is Latino.

Caller has been going to Orlando airport and is strip patted every time. She flies a lot and even to Mexico and this does not happen anywhere but at this airport. She said this last time she took off all her jewelry and put it in her purse. She was still pulled aside after AIT screening and patted down. Description of caller. She was wearing jeans and had taken off her shoes so she had on black socks. She had a hot pink three quarter length sleeves.

Resolution: I apologized to the caller and told her that the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to those who pass through our screening checkpoints. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers, regardless of their personal situations and needs, are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

Every person and item must be screened before entering the secured area of an airport, and the manner in which the screening is conducted is important. Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) must conduct additional screening to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or to resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening.

In addition, passengers may request a private screening if additional screening is required or at any time during the screening process. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. I told her that patdowns are conducted by same gender officers. TSA does not fingerprint people but we do use technology to test for traces of explosive materials. You may always ask for a supervisor at any time.

Because your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport we have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Customer Service Manager (CSM) at that location

Caller has had a very bad experience with TSA in Houston. He flew with Delta. Delta assured him he would have PreCheck. When he printed the boarding pass at the airport he did not have PreCheck. They told him to go talk to the TSA. Then TSA stated he could go back to the airline they could print the boarding pass. He spoke with the airline again. He went back and spoke to the TSA supervisor. He then received a very thorough Patdown which was more thorough than ever before. He did not pay $85 for Precheck to not receive it.

The TSO s did not want to accomodate him in any way. The older African American Supervisor was nice. The older African American TSO who conducted the patdown was not nice.

He was told that Kalispell, Montana did not participate in the PRecheck program. He would like for TSA or the airlines to decide who is going to control the computers. The TSO denied responsibility and the airline denied responsibility for the selection of PreCheck. Why would Denver, Atlanta, and Houston not have PreCheck?

A travel Agent booked his flight.

12:03:19

PM

Advised:

I explained that PreCheck is not guranteed with each flight or with any of the programs.

Approved travelers should remember to enter their KTN in the "known traveler field" of their reservation to receive TSA Preu2713© consideration. In addition, ensure that your name, date of birth, and gender as submitted on your reservation are an exact match to the information you provided TSA at the time of enrollment. If you have a frequent flyer profile, or you make your reservation through your employer's travel-booking system, a travel agent, or a travel website, please confirm that this information is up to date.

I apologized the TSO was rude.

I stated that some airports do not participate in the PreCheck program. I explained that Houston, Atlanat, and Denver do. He could go online to our website to find out what airports participate.

Hello,

I was told to contact TSA customer care by a rep that I spoke with on the phone at Houston Hobby Airport.

I had a pat down and had four trays of items that were pointed out to the TSA rep performing the procedure. This rep took all four trays and in particular took one tray which contained my laptop to another area.

After the procedure was completed, the rep gave me three trays. The laptop had not yet returned. At that moment, when I checked I cleaned out the three trays that were given back to me. I later realized the fourth tray was never placed in front of me until I got back into Nashville.

PM

I called TSA lost and found and they were able to recover it immediately. However, they were saying that I would be charged for the shipping since I left it. I disagreed saying the rep had taken it in his hand, thus the onus should now be on TSA. If I had left it on the conveyor belt and had forgotten about it, I would completely understand and the onus to pay should be on me.

It's not a huge amount for shipping, but it's the principle which I believe is incorrect. The rep was kind and told me to contact customer service which is why I am emailing now.

Thank you for reading,

I don't appreciate the lack of response and will give TSA agents a difficult time if I should ever come across them again since you all want to be rude. Dear TSA Contact Center,

I am writing to you about an incident that occurred at security check on Wednesday, January 7th at San Diego Airport. I was traveling from San Diego to Newark with my mother when we entered security check. I travel with a wheelchair and due to my medical condition (Muscular Dystrophy) I am unable to get up out of the wheelchair to pass through security monitors. I was told I would get patted down and I agreed, as I travel often and know that is standard procedure for disabled passengers.

I understand fully that the TSA is only protecting and monitoring our safety and need to fully ensure all passengers are cleared to board an aircraft. My complaint isn't in reference to an invasion of privacy, but to an officer's inhumane and intentional treatment of a person in a wheelchair.

At San Diego Airport, a female attendant (Officer (b)(6)) was called over to perform the pat down. Officer (b)(6) came over, grabbing my wheelchair and drove it around asking, "Whose is this? What, she can't out of a wheelchair?" She conversed with her colleagues and again referenced me as "this", to which I asked her to not do. I told her she could ask me any questions she had about my condition and speak to me rather than about me and I would be more than happy to answer her queries. Officer (b)(6) immediately stopped the wheelchair, looked at me and said, "Excuse me? What did you say?" Her attitude was appalling and I told her so. She pushed my wheelchair away and she, "Okay, someone else take this, I can't and walked away. She left my wheelchair in the middle of security check and my mother saw I was alone. She asked what happened and Officer (b)(6) immediately re-entered the scene, yelling at my mother that she had to back away from me. Now, Officer (b)(6) DID NOT isolate me in an area for screening, she left me in the middle of security check. Even though my mother and I didn't have any physical contact, Officer (b)(6) forced my mother to undergo another security check, despite her already being cleared through normal security check. Officer (b)(6) took over my pat down without any problems and I was cleared.

Officer (b)(6) was snickering at me while she patted down my mother in front of me, sticking her tongue out and basically making a mockery out of the whole situation. It was absolutely disgusting, not to mention grossly unprofessional. My mother and I cleared security.

Caller feels like she has been harassed at the airport today by TSO [REDACTED]. Caller stated that she opted out of the AIT as she always does. They advised her to stand on a mat at the checkpoint and the location of the mat prevented her from maintaining line of sight with her belongings. She took two steps off of the mat so she could see her belongings and the officer at the checkpoint threatened to contact law enforcement and have her arrested for doing so. He also threatened to manhandle her if she did not listen to his commands. Caller is very upset and wanting to know what can be done about this. Caller stated that she was not given the option of going through the WTMD which she feels like it a violation of TSA protocol. Caller stated that she has problems every time she flies from RDU and is wanting to know if there is anything that she can do to prevent this from happening as she does not want to pay $85 for TSA PreCheck.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. TSA regrets any unprofessional treatment you experienced. Because your complaint concerns an incident that occurred at a specific airport we have forwarded this to the appropriate Customer Service Manager. I am not sure where you go the information that you can go through the WTMD if you opt out of the AIT but that is not the policy. Individuals who do not wish to be screened by this technology will be required to undergo alternative screening, including a thorough patdown. Please note, passengers cannot request to be screened by the walk-through metal detector instead of an AIT or a patdown. Even if you apply for TSA PreCheck that is not going to exempt you from screening if you opt out of the AIT with TSA PreCheck you will still have to have a patdown. Please be advised that a passenger may always request to speak with the Supervisory TSO at the checkpoint to address any complaint regarding screening procedures. There is really nothing else you can do to prevent this from happening. I will include the information that you always have this problem at RDU. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive to track trends and identify areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security-screening policies need modification.

Special Notes:

Caller flew from LGA via WestJet but when she went through screening she did not like the way she was screened. Caller did not want to undergo the AIT or Patdown because she is OCD and a Germaphobic. Caller also stated she did not like the way they patted her down and searched her bag. Caller then stated the officers were very rude to her.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am writing to inform you of the experience I had with your officers at San Francisco International Airport on Monday, January 12th around 12pm PST. This occurred at Lane 4 at the "F2" screening checkpoint which is adjacent to gates 72 and 73.

I have walked with an above-the-knee prosthesis for over 20 years and have never been treated the way I was the other day. When I approached the officer checking IDs, I informed him that I had an artificial leg and requested to go to the scanning machine rather than the metal detector. He stated that I should continue to proceed to the metal detector and there would be no problem. After I went through the metal detector and set it off, the officer there told me that next time I should ask to go through the scanner. When I informed him that I did, he simply repeated himself again. I asked if I could go through the scanner at that time, and another officer stated that I could not.

I was then taken to the secondary screening area where I was patted-down by Officer (b)(6). This was the most aggressive pat-down I have ever received. During this, without asking, he put his hands down the front of my jeans, and was touching a part of my artificial leg that extended to my other hip. He put his hands on the inner part of this, against my underwear, and in the process, touched my genitals with his fingers. I was never offered a private screening. Afterwards, he did not know he was supposed to swab a portion of my leg; I had to tell him how to do it. When one of his fellow officers confirmed, he finally did this. The entire process took around 15 minutes.

I was so shocked initially, that I did not say anything. But after I went to lunch and had a horrible feeling from my experience, I went back and spoke with the supervisor, Officer (b)(6). He seemed annoyed that he had to go back to the tape and get a complaint form (which is a comment card to the contracting company that requires a stamp) and said "next time" I shouldn't wait.

The TSA officer had no right to touch my genitals the way he did which I believe qualifies as sexual assault under California penal code. I see no provisions in your organizations materials that either grant officers an exemption or give them the authority to do this. I wrote an email to Covenant Aviation Security, LLC, your contracting company describing the incident; I respectfully request a response from the TSA. I hope that you will take precautions so that no other traveler, disabled or otherwise, will have to experience the intrusiveness and humiliation that I did the other day.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Good morning,

I'm a regular business traveler who travels through Sacramento (SMF) just about every week. I opt out of the body scanner as often as possible, so most weeks I get a pat-down in Madison and Sacramento.

This morning I accidentally left some coffee in my travel thermos. I was in a bit of a rush, but I was told by (b)(6) about the requirement that if I wanted to keep it I'd have to get my pat-down, then go back through the security line and do the whole thing again.

1/15/2015

AM

I've had almost entirely positive interactions with the TSA staff at both SMF and MSN, but (b)(6) was an exception. Her words, her condescending tone of voice, everything about the way she treated me went beyond rude. Most of the time I'm treated the same as the people who don't opt out, but (b)(6) acted like I was a criminal for choosing to opt out.

I know you're a government agency, but the TSA is still a part of the service industry. I hope this can be communicated to (b)(6) superior at SMF, because nobody deserves to be treated like that - even when they elect to opt out.

Comments: Nature of complaint: Theft of personal property.

My uncle was traveling over the holidays. On the way to see us he was pulled out for a pat down while his personal affects sat attended only by TSA screeners. When he returned to pick up his personal property a solid silver belt buckle had been stolen. He tried, but in usual TSA manner the implied threat was that if he made a big fuss he would miss his flight or worse. The fact is either a TSA employee stole his personal property or allowed his personal property to be stolen. Since only the belt buckle was stolen obviously the person who took it picked only the item of value so it would be obvious to a trained observer that the person was a thief. TSA screeners are certainly trained observers.

He chose to let it go in favor of not missing his flight.

I have not touched on why he was pulled over for a pat down. Other than as a setup for theft I can't imagine why a 70 year old man with Parkinsons disease was pulled out of line, but I'll assume there was some legitimate reason. The thing is at best TSA employees through incompetence allowed somebody's property to be stolen, or at worst were involved directly in petty theft.

After hearing my Uncle's story I did some research and found that while this was not extremely common, this type of occurrence is not as uncommon as it should be. Here is the fact. While his property is in your possession and until it is returned to him it is your responsibility. Maybe legally (certainly for any other government enforcement employee it would be), but certainly ethically and morally.

I mention the cause of him being pulled out of line. Not because it was part of my complaint, but because of what happened on his return flight. My wife and I gave him a solid silver belt buckle for Christmas along with a cheap buckle to wear on his flight. We told him to pack his buckle in his suitcase so TSA screeners could not set him up to have it stolen again. When I called after he returned home to see how things went he said there was no issue with boarding, but he found a note indicating his bags had been searched. Its seems really odd that an American born Vietnam Veteran with a lifetime as a productive member of society was targeted not once, but twice.

I do not expect a response. I expect TSA mistakes to be fixed when they are pointed out. I already choose not to fly if it can at all be avoided because of the way Americans are treated like property without rights from the moment they pass thru those doors until they are released back into society at their destination.

TSA.

I am writing this on behalf of my cousin (b)(6) who had contacted you on Dec 20th, 2014. I am very disgusted that a passenger who had stated to several personnel that she had PTSD & travels with a support dog because of this, was treated in the manner that she was. We do realize that security is top priority & that these policies are in place for a reason. The problem I have is with how the situation was handled. You stated in a response email to her that your employees go through training to increase their sensitivity to victims of sexual violence & abuse. This is awesome, but apparently not working. You also stated that "All TSOs are required to be courteous and respectful and are trained to explain what they are doing and what will happen next in the process". Well I am pretty sure that being snotty and asking a passenger "isnt there a pill you can take for that" is not being courteous & respectful. And the lady who said that was suppose to be a supervisor. So even worse, since she should be setting an example to those under her supervision.

The main problem came in when the rude female supervisor left & sent out a male supervisor who also apparently forgot that they are required to be courteous & respectful. He also was rude & used a tone of voice & words that were very threatening. His name is (b)(6) & we know this because he traumatized (b)(6) so much that she cannot forget his name. A suggestion to you for future use would be to NOT send out a male to intimidate a female passenger who has PTSD from a sexual assault. Stick with the female & just simply state there is no other option rather than threatening "if you don't you dont fly". Patience & kindness go along way while working with everybody but especially those with PTSD. Please also have extra training sessions to teach & refresh your employees on how to handle these situations. I think some have forgotten.

(b)(6) suffered a full blown panic attack because of these actions & if it wasn't for the fact that she was going to her parents house for Christmas she would not have flown. She is still having nightmares from this ordeal & has gone backwards in her recovery. A recovery that she was finally doing very well with and getting back to living her life. The after affects of something like this last a long time which, if you communicate with organizations that represent victims of sexual assault & violence like you stated you do, you should already know this. Please be more courteous to all costumers, but especially those with disorders. After all if people don't fly, many airport employees would be without jobs.

This past week I had an encounter with TSA personnel that was very unpleasant. I understand things are done to ensure safety and security to all. However, there has to be other plans in place to take the needs of people into consideration. I travel with a small dog - she is recognized as an emotional support dog by the airlines. I have her with me almost all the time to help with symptoms of PTSD due to a sexual assault a couple of years ago. I have the proper paperwork identifying this. I have traveled with her and gone through security procedures several times over the last couple of years. I have always been impressed with TSA personnel until this last trip on December 18th leaving from Denver International Airport. I knew the procedures for going through security with the dog would include having my hands wiped. I was told they needed to look at my bags this time as something showed up on my hands. The TSA officer inspecting my bags was very polite and considerate. After this procedure was complete I was told I needed to have a pat down. As the officer informed me of my rights I became very anxious and informed her that if someone touched me where she said they were going to I would have a panic attack. She and I informed the other officer who was going to do the pat down of this fact and they both told me they would talk to a supervisor to see what else could be done. I really appreciated their efforts and consideration as while we waited they respected my needs to not sit in an enclosed room as that would only increase the panic I was already feeling. The original officer who searched my bags stayed with me and talked with me while we waited. I talked with a female supervisor, explaining the same thing to her. The female supervisor, very rudely, asked, "can't you take medication for that?" (referring to the panic attack I would probably have when touched). I explained that I could not take medication for it, hence why I travel with the dog. I said I would go through the other type of machine, as I only passed through the metal detector, as to avoid the pat down. The supervisor left and after a little while a male supervisor came out. I explained the same thing to him. He told me, "either you do the pat down or you don't fly." His tone of voice and the words he said were very threatening. His name is the only name I remember, (b)(6) as he is now classified as a rapist in my mind. If I did not allow people to touch me in areas that should CSM RF!

REASON for the call:

Caller was on flight 774 from RDU to Orlando. Caller went through security and was in line to board a plane. Caller said an agent approached her and asked if she can look in her purse. She was offended and the officer did not explain what they were doing. Caller did not understand why. The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is constantly exploring initiatives to expand and enhance our security and threat mitigation efforts. As part of this initiative, TSA has expanded security screening beyond the security checkpoint to other secured areas of the airport, including boarding gates. TSOs should explain the procedure and offer passengers a private screening before beginning any additional screening, including a patdown. Your complaint will be sent to the CSM.

Special Notes: Caller suggested signage about additional screening at gates.

TSA,

My family I traveled through Denver International Airport last Sunday evening (1/11/2015) on our way home. We were on Southwest Airline's Flight 1717 departing at 20:30. All three of us have TSA pre-check. We do a fair bit of traveling and I have to say that without a doubt the most difficulty my son encounters traveling with his insulin pump (Animas) is at DIA. We have been instructed by his Endocrinologist as well as by the manufacturer of his insulin pump to always alert the agent to his disability, not go through the scanner or X-ray machine, and instead have a pat-down and visual inspection of the device. Last night, after alerting the agent, he was met with comments such as "it's OK, go through the scanner" my personal favorite "well, maybe you shouldn't be flying". Now unless you are suddenly hiring biomedical engineering students who are moonlighting as TSA agents I do not believe the TSA agents are qualified to make these comments.

Caller said her check bag was opened and she got the noi. She said she traveled from Philadelphia and that she had her laptop, GPS and large shampoo in the bag. She said nothing is missing or damaged but she said the lock was broken. She said she also had to have a patdown and she had a money pouch and metal chain around her neck at the checkpoint. I advised her that it can also be a random selection for the patdown or if she triggered an alarm at the checkpoint she would have to have the patdown. Caller needs to fly from LAX to Seoul South Korean, but lost his passport. Can he fly with a Korean photo ID and a Korean license?

Advised caller:

I can never guarantee that someone without proper ID will be able to fly.

1/17/2015 6:07:55 PM If international travelers are willing to provide additional information, TSA has other means of substantiating a passenger's identity, such as using publicly available databases.

PM Under this process, TSA may ask the passenger to complete a Certification of Identity form, which requests the passenger's name and current address, and may ask additional questions of the passenger to confirm his or her identity. If TSA is able to confirm the passenger's identity, the passenger will be cleared to enter the screening checkpoint; however, the individual may be subject to additional screening to include a thorough patdown. We recommend that travelers arrive at least 3 hours in advance of their international flight time to allow ample time for security screening and boarding of aircraft.

Disability Description: Caller has diabetes.

Response Details: Response:

Diabetes-related supplies, medications and equipment such as insulin inhalers, glucagon emergency kits, lancets, blood glucose meters and strips, alcohol swabs, meter-testing solutions, urine ketone test strips, insulin pumps, pump supplies and used syringes (when transported in a Sharps disposal container or other similar hard-surface container) are allowed through the security checkpoint once they have been properly screened by x-ray or a hand inspection. Passengers with diabetes traveling with medically necessary items should inform a Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of these items and separate them from other belongings before screening begins.

Passengers are encouraged to bring through the checkpoint only the amount of medically necessary liquids or gels needed for the duration of their flight itinerary, allowing for delays, and to pack the rest in checked baggage.

Accessories required keeping medically necessary liquids, gels, and aerosols cool, such as freezer packs or frozen gel packs, are permitted through the screening checkpoint and may be subject to additional screening. These accessories are treated as liquids unless they are frozen solid at the checkpoint. If these accessories are partially frozen or slushy, they are subject to the same screening as other medically necessary liquids and gels.

1/18/2015 9:02:16 AM Medically necessary liquids, gels and aerosols in excess of 3.4 ounces will be screened by x-ray and also receive additional screening which could include bottled liquid screening technologies. Depending on the technology available at the checkpoint, a passenger could be asked to open the liquid or gel for screening. The TSO will not touch the liquid or gel during this process. If the passenger does not want a liquid, gel, or aerosol x-rayed or opened, he or she should inform the TSO before screening begins. Additional screening of the passenger and his or her property may be required, which may include a patdown. If a patdown is needed to complete screening:

The TSO conducting the patdown will be the same gender as the passenger.
The passenger can request a private screening at any time.

Incident Details: REASON for the call: Since the caller has diabetes, she needs water and snacks, and her syringes. Caller's bag was scanned and TSO (b)(6) started giving caller a hard time. Caller said she declared that she had diabetes, but felt no one was listening to her. Caller also had an issue with Supervisor (b)(6). Caller stated that they both yelled that caller did not declare her supplies, but she did. Caller stated that TSO (b)(6) was nasty and had embarrassed her. Caller was chastised by (b)(6). Caller has taken a nitro pill because caller is upset.

What happened?

1 17 2015

On January 10th 2015 I was traveling by plane from Denver Airport to MCO. I was going through the upper TSA security point when my bag was pulled because I had a container of salt in my carry-on.

The TSA worker named (b)(6) took my bag and began a search that would take almost 20 minutes completely going through my tote bag which also contained my purse which most of my personal items were laid all over a table along with most everything in my Disability Description: Caller states she wears an insulin pump.

Response Details: Informed caller that the rules we have in place in regards to insulin pumps states she should inform officers before screening begins of the presence of the insulin pump and request a patdown. Informed caller that the methods screeners use to screen passengers is at their discretion. Informed caller that she can call the TCC at least 72 hours before a flight to arrange assistance if she wished. Informed caller that I would email her a claim form and forward this information to the CSM at Buffalo for her.

Incident Details: Caller states she flew out of Buffalo New York and wears an insulin pump. Caller states she asked if she can go through a patdown when she arrived at the checkpoint and every time she said something someone would but in and interrupt her. Caller states she informed them that she can not experience radiation. Caller states they made her go through the walk through screening and informed her that they are only cameras. Caller states when she arrived in Florida her sugar was really high so she called the manufacturer and was informed that the machine does in fact have radiation and informed her to use the loaner pump she always carries. Caller states she thinks they are going to charge her for the loaner pump that she is using now. Caller states on her return trip she did not have any trouble at all and asking why the trip back was different. Caller asked what can she do to avoid this on future flights.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: Informed caller that I did not have any information on this incident but it is at the discretion of the officer on what methods they use to screen passengers. Informed caller that it is possible that our screening methods could not penetrate the sweater that she was wearing which would have resulted in a thorough patdown or her having to remove the sweater. Informed caller that I would forward this information to the CSM at LAS for her and she needs to monitor her email over the next few days in case the CSM needs some additional information.

Special Notes: Caller first stated she was flying out of DFW but then toward end of call changed airport to LAS.

I am currently an active duty soldier traveling to my uncle who has very little left to live. Upon arriving at the gate I go through the TSA prechecked area with photo identification. I realized that the dod number has to be put on the ticket, but on the sign for the TSA pre-check it said that the CAC card was still accepted. So I was turned to the normal line. I wasn't really upset at this, but when I had empire all my pockets for the normal line the official there told me to put my cash back into my pocket. I complied with this. Upon going through the scan I got out and then was patted down because of the money in the back pocket. I feel as if the official there had set me up for a pat down. I am extremely disappointed in the treatment towards me. I hope I will get a reply as to why this has happened, and hopefully it will justify this problem.

Disability Description: Caller is a diabetic and has a complaint regarding her screening experience.

Response Details: CSM RFI----Mishandling RFI

REASON for the call: Caller stated her blood sugar dropped during screening. She had asked the agent for some juice, either hers or any other kind because she needed it. They did not give her any juice at all, causing her blood sugar to drop. She is very upset that the could not help her with this and says she doesnt want this to happen to anyone else.

Date Time: 01-17-014, about 1:40 pm, it was scheduled at 1:55 pm but they changed it to 1:40 pm
Gate Terminal: Gate 10 (320) she did not what this was but it was on the ticket

Airport: MCO
Airline: JetBlue
Flight #: 506

RESOLUTION to the caller s issue: I had first told her I would forward the complaint to the CSM so they can address the complaint but after I had to call her back, due to a dropped call she stated this was a discrimination due to her diabetes. I then provided her the contact information and told her to make this a formal complaint she would need to put it in writing and send it to the ODPO office. She stated she wanted someone to call her back from MCO and if no one called her back she would then handle it as a formal complain.

Special Notes: This call did not come in on ODPO, but after I had to call her back she then stated this was a discrimination due to her disability so I handled as an ODPO complaint. She did not want to have to write in her complaint and said if someone would call her she would not but if no one does she has the contact information to do so.

Incident Details: Caller flew via JetBlue, she has her confirmation number from Sat. She is diabetic. She always carries 3 bottles of juice. She went through screening and the bottles went off, but she was able to take them through with her. She says during the process she needed her juice for low blood sugar, so she ask for juice her or any other kind of juice and they told her they had to give her another patdown before she can get a juice. So she wasnt provided any juice until her screening was done. She was upset that her juice dropped during screening and no one would help her.

Caller has a flight in a few days from MSY to SEA and just talked to United. They had no record of his PreCheck. He is not sure why. The last few times he has flown he's had issues due to his artificial knee. He does not have a KTN, but has recently obtained his TWIC card.

Advised caller:

Why you may be getting PreCheck Now...

You may be getting PreCheck now based on the secure flight data you are submitting to the airline. TSA is now identifying low-risk passengers for PreCheck based on that fact.

If you are wanting PreCheck on a more consistent basis...You can go through one of Customs and Borders trusted traveler programs such as GE, SENTRI or NEXUS or through the TPAP.

To apply, travelers may submit an application through TSA's Web site at www.tsa.gov or visit an enrollment center to submit an application in person. A non-refundable $85 fee is required to cover an in-depth background check and other operational costs. To complete the application process, individuals will be required to visit an enrollment center to provide identification, fingerprints, and proof of U.S. citizenship or immigration eligibility.

1:16:16
PM

Generally you receive a response 2-3 weeks after your visit at the enrollment center.

As far as the artificial knee...

All individuals must undergo security screening at the checkpoint before being permitted into the secure area of an airport, including those eligible for TSA Preu2713@.

TSA recognizes that certain travelers with disabilities or medical conditions may have difficulty standing or walking and that certain medical conditions may cause individuals to alarm when screened using a walk-through metal detector. If this occurs, TSA Preu2713@ individuals may be permitted to undergo alternate screening procedures such as Advance Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, explosives trace detection (ETD) swabbing, or a patdown screening.

Please keep in mind that TSA will always incorporate random and unpredictable security measures throughout the airport, and no individual will be guaranteed expedited screening.

Even if you have TWIC...

While some individuals may have completed a certain level of security vetting for employment or credentialing, typically, these security clearances are particular to an agency or job and have specific purposes.

So having a TWIC card, does not currently qualify you for PreCheck.

Comment : TSA got my trip off to miserable start with delay and full patdown in pre-check line--apparently because I had 2 containers of orange juice--needed for unexpected low blood sugar attacks. You did not earn my goodwill today. The patdown was much too thorough--given the circumstances. I think you were trying to make a point. Point received!

My name is (b)(6) and at 2:30 pm on Sunday January 18 2014. I was traveling to Minneapolis Minnesota via Midway Airport in Chicago.

When I approached the security lines I was directed toward the hand swabbing station. When after my hands were swabbed I was singled out for additional screening.

I was walked to the far left x ray machine and put my carry ons on the conveyor belt, including my laptop computer. After going through the line I was not allowed to touch my carry ons.

8:36:14

I was brought to the station at the end of the security lines to have my carry ons swabbed, and then taken to a private room to be pat down, after which I was free to go.

AM

At some point after my carry ons went through the x ray machine my laptop was separated from the rest of my belongings, and it never made it to the final room with the rest of my carry ons.

I need to know what happened to my laptop as soon as possible. I am a student at the University of Minnesota and my laptop is crucial to me, as I use it heavily for my day to day academic tasks.

Let me know what next steps need to be taken to resolve this problem as soon as possible.

My name is (b)(6) I am 62 year old woman and a law abiding tax paying citizen of the United States. I have 2 children and 5 grandchildren, and have been married almost 42 years. I was born and raised in Pennsylvania and now live in Texas. I am a retired teacher but for the last 18 years have run a church library at Westlake Hills Presbyterian Church. I love my country, and I live by the laws. My husband and I travel quite a bit, so we know airports and their procedures. We appreciate safety and the job you do. We use precheck a lot but with a bilateral knee replacement, I always request the Pro Vision body scanner, because I will beep. And I have been checked often in different ways, but never ever like the pat down I received yesterday. It was horrible.

On Sunday January 18th, we arrived back into Fort Lauderdale after a jazz cruise, and were flying a nonstop Southwest flight home to Austin, where we have lived for 23 years. I asked to use the body scanner, because of my knees, but it did not work....so I never went in a scanner....instead I was sent over to a woman who did the most disgusting body pat down I have ever had....starting with my hair and touching every part of my body including my breasts top and bottom, between my legs, and inside the top of my pants. I was sooo revolted by this. My friend who was along with me, could not believe what this woman did to me!!!! It was out of line and totally embarrassing....one quick check of my knees and she would have known why I would have beeped, but the other TSA man never explained that to her. She was sassy, invasive, and unfriendly to me. My shoes were off as well as my jacket and scarf. I only had on a tight pair of black pants and a little black top, so she could see that I was without anything and clean. I told her about my knees, but she did not even care to see them...I have big scars. My bags went through fine, but I am still very upset about how I was treated. I truly deserve an apology, and I want to know how I can avoid this happening again when I fly through that airport. It is unfair that I am punished because I had to have knee replacements. I know you need to do your job, but not like this!!!! I hope you will send this on to the authorities in Fort Lauderdale. And by the way...the unsanitary cattle car that lines people up for their pat downs, its also a shame! Something needs to be done, so that good people are treated with respect and kindness and not like animals.

I did not get the woman's name....wish I had.
Thank you for reading this.

Reason for the call - Caller had a PreCheck notification on her boarding pass. She said that she went through the regular screening. She told the TSO that she had two artificial hips. The alarm went off. She was told to take off her necklace walk through again. The alarm went off again. She said that a woman TSO told her to go to another area. She said that the TSO told her that she did not have a choice. She said that the TSO gave her a series of directions that she could not understand because she was taking so fast. She said that the agent then spoke in an extremely slow manner. She said that the agent was mocking her and trying to embarrass her. She was given a patdown. The passenger told her that a little courtesy would go a long way. The TSO ignored her and walked away. She said that the TSO's last name was (b)(6). She said that she spoke with a supervisor who acknowledged that this was an issue. He said that she should have been told that she could have gone through the AIT. He wrote the TSO's name on a card and asked her to submit it. She did not have the time to submit the card so she called to make a complaint.

Resolution to the caller's issue - I apologized to the caller and told her that I would forward her record to the CSM at DCA for review.

Once again met by woman TSA person who refused to be courteous or listen to what I was saying. Apparently, my bag set off alarm. Bag was cleared after but they I was told I had to be patted down because of the bag even though bag was cleared. The person began explained her pay down to me. She asked if I wanted private screening, I said yes but there is not time because of plane, so " go ahead and do it " she then (as usual got a male TSA agent to act as though I was not complying. They asked again and I repeated what I said, I then asked why if bag was cleared would I have to be patted down (TSA precheck already). They again accused me of not complying. I repeated I told her to go ahead, she argued, he argued. No one detailed why a bag setting alarm could be cleared but then I had to be patted down.

Finally she went ahead but while they threatened me with not flying.

And of course then passed me through because there was nothing wrong.

As always.

I am sick to death of being patted down. I am TSA cleared on most flights. TSA has lost my fathers WWII record during a pat down of me, have broke an air cast of mine, I have never ever down anything wrong on any flight and fly often. I have large breasts and have been called "bulky" as a result (in a loud TSA personnel voice" and all sorts o humiliating things.

12:28:50
PM

When will TSA treat civilians as valued people versus potential criminals? Innocent until proven is standard rule of thumb.

As a rape victim and domestic violence victim, pat downs (by females with authority complex) are also humiliating.

Why can't the agents listen to a person versus changing what is stated and getting other agents to also humiliate. Why do the male agents have to watch the pat down, also arguing with customer and making accusations that are not real? Why, when nothing has ever been wrong with a passenger, despite years and years of pay downs, the same thing happens over and over again.

TSA, I am not doing anything but flying. Normal things in my bag. Nothing on me. Ever.

If a bag is cleared and bag set off alarm, why fully pat the woman passenger? This makes no sense and is humiliating, exhausting, and unnecessary.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): LAX Terminal 8 TSA Precheck Line at approx 1420 for 1600 flight.

Comments: A female TSA employee monitoring passengers entering the TSA Precheck line forced me to put my purse in my carry-on bag prior to allowing me to enter the security line.

This action was inappropriate and not her job as a security officer.

Although she was attempting to enforce the airline rules for the number of carry-ons allowed on a flight, I told her I was waiting to combine my bags until just before boarding the flight. I told her I still needed access to my wallet and would need to remove my purse from the bag for the security scan anyway so there was no point in combining bags at that time. She insisted that I combine my bags right then and there...and of course I immediately had to unpack them in the security lane. I am now waiting at the gate and will properly store my purse just prior to boarding.

The packing/unpacking of my purse during the security process was an exercise in futility. Please have TSA agents practice some common sense when interacting with passengers.

(b)(6)

Caller has issues when traveling to and from the US. Caller is seeing SSSS on her boarding pass and is having to undergo additional screening when she goes through the checkpoint. Caller normally uses United Airlines and will be flying from HNL to the UK tomorrow.

Response:

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

The "S" notation or other marks may be placed on a passenger's boarding pass by the airlines based on Transportation Security Administration (TSA) security procedures. This procedure is just one layer of security that TSA employs to protect the Nation's air transportation system and to keep the traveling public safe.

TSA does not discuss or release specifics about security screening procedures. This information is developed exclusively for TSA personnel and is considered Sensitive Security Information (SSI). TSA cannot release SSI to the public because it is considered detrimental to the security of transportation. The U.S. Department of Homeland Security Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (DHS TRIP) is a single point of contact for individuals who have inquiries or seek resolution regarding difficulties they experience during their travel while screening at transportation hubs, such as airports and train stations, or while crossing U.S. borders. Examples of travel difficulties may include:

- Situations where travelers believe they have been unfairly or incorrectly delayed, denied boarding, or identified for additional screening at our nation's airports or ports of entry.

DHS TRIP is part of an effort by the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security to welcome legitimate travelers while securing our country from those who want to do us harm.

For those who encounter misidentification, the DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP) helps prevent watch list name confusion, or misidentification. Travelers may apply for DHS redress online at <https://trip.dhs.gov>. Travelers may also apply through e-mail or U.S. Mail by completing the attached Traveler Inquiry Form, signing the document, and returning the original with at least one unexpired, photograph-bearing, Government-issued travel document (e.g., driver's license or unexpired passport) to Trip@dhs.gov or mailing it to the following address:

DHS Traveler Redress Inquiry Program (TRIP)
801 South 12th Street, TSA-901
Arlington, VA 20598-6901

DHS components will review the request and share information with other agencies to address the issues identified in the TRIP application. TSA's Secure Flight uses the results of the redress process in its watch list matching process to help prevent future delays for misidentified passengers. However, because airline procedures for screening passengers against Federal watch lists vary, individuals may still be required to check in for flights at the airlines ticket counter.

When an individual applies for redress, DHS TRIP will assign a record identifier or Redress Control Number (RCN). DHS TRIP will inform redress applicants in writing when the DHS review of an inquiry is complete. Reviews of requests for redress take a minimum of 30 business days. Applicants may check the status of inquiries at <https://trip.dhs.gov/status.htm> by entering the RCN. Travelers who wish to check the status of an inquiry, but do not have their RCN, may contact DHS TRIP by e-mail or by mail.

Caller stated he has a complaint about the rules and regulations at the San Jose airport. The caller stated he was PreChecked the other day and informed the TSO that he had two metal knees and metal in his shoulder and wanted to go through the AIT machine instead of the walk through metal detector. The caller stated he was denied because he luggage has already been screened and the lane he was in did not have an AIT machine. The caller would like to know why he was just not allowed to go to the other line to go through the AIT machine instead of going through the walk through metal detector then having a pat down.

REASON for the call: Caller went through the San Jose airport the other day and had PreCheck but was not allowed to go through the AIT machine because they did not have it on the lane he went through. The caller stated he has metal in his shoulder and two metal knees and had to go through the walk through metal detector and then had to have a pat down.

I hope this email finds you well.

I wanted to bring to your attention about your severely unprofessional staff.

I have never felt so disrespected and so low as I have after being searched MULTIPLE times by your staff. After checking the photos from the original screening there were spots that they had to check more in depth, so I agreed for them to pat me down. Knowing I had nothing to hide, I didn't see this as being a strenuous process, initially. However, TSO (b)(6) made it her life mission to not only waste my time, humiliate me, but most importantly she caused defamation of character.

After calling upon numerous other employees to "help" her, she made sure every one in the airport knew that I needed to be taken back to be screened privately because "she couldn't find anything".

Excuse me, but as far as I'm concerned if you can't find anything after a few pat downs, wiping my hands to make sure there is no "bomb"debris (and that coming back that in fact, there was NONE) I'm not really understanding what else there is to do.

She belittled me, and made me feel like a helpless individual standing there and being judged and screened by many spectators as if this is the main event in a circus act!

4:06:37 PM They then brought me into a private room where STSO (b)(6) did the exact same thing.

Guess what the results were....NOTHING. This may be because nothing was wrong with me. There is a huge difference between doing your job and using your power of authority to humiliate someone.

I can't help but think this was racial profiling because I am an African American female. After standing there for minutes I have seen multiple girls, that had yellow spots on the screen, just breeze through security. Blond hair, blue eyes, top knots and all no pat downs, just a simple 'have a safe flight'.

This needs to be reprimanded and if this does not get settled by you, I will ensure it does by your superior.

Looking forward to your response.

Best,

Callers son (b)(6) flew on either Jan 13 or 14 and was in a wheelchair. He had a patdown at DCA in a private room. When the pat down was being performed the tip of his Hickman Central line and a valve fell on to the floor. (b)(6) saw the tip which was green but the valve was clear and no one saw this. (b)(6) stated that the tip had to be sterilized but TSA explained they could wipe with alcohol. But no one was aware the valve was missing. He also had an insulated bag of antibiotics of infusions. The bag of antibiotics were not an issue. The issue is they touched the central line that went into his body. The traveler had a note from his doctor with information on it. Caller stated that (b)(6) had called and spoke with her husband (b)(6) (b)(6) and from her they learned about the Passenger Support Specialist.

PM Offered Information on the Passenger Support Specialist and verified the number that (b)(6) had provided to (b)(6) The number is (b)(6) Told caller to be sure and call the TSA CC to set up and PSS 72 hours before their next flight.

Offered to send her the information regarding the screening process for travelers in Wheelchairs and got her email address. She will also get the information on Ports. Please forward email to her.

Told caller I would forward this to the CSM at DCA so they are aware of her concerns.

Caller frequently travels from Ft. Lauderdale Intl and says the security there is abysmal. Caller stated that on 1 17 he and his wife went through the security checkpoint and was rushed through without having a patdown, or going through any of the screening technologies. Caller states that this happens every time they return from a cruise. Caller also stated that noone else was screened that day nor their carryon bags. Caller was told by a security officer this happens every time that a cruise ship returns and they get busy. Caller is afraid to travel through Ft. Lauderdale because of the Lax security.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Flight 2235, Southwest Airlines. Phoenix Sky Harbor, traveling to MSP Airport on 01/20/15. Incident took place during prescreening.
Comments: While traveling with my wife and son (17 years old) from Phoenix to MSP Airport the TSA agent randomly swab my sons hand which alerted on their ION scan. The TSA agent asked my son if he had been in contact with any fertilizer. Both my wife and I were not exposed to the swab but were told to stand off to the side along with my son away from the general public line. The TSA agent alerted via radio for an additional supervisor/screener to where she had us stand. A male TSA agent then walked over to the three of us and requested that I grab my carry on bag and follow him. I asked for clarification if he wanted all of us to follow him and was told "no." I followed him over to a different prescreening table. He asked me to remove all items from my pockets, shoes, belt, etc and placed them in xray bin. He then escorted me back over to a manned TSA screening area where he assisted me placing all my items through xray machine. At this time I completed the full body xray. I then returned back to line and collected my property. At this time they searched my carry on bag. I was then escorted to a private area where I was subjected to a pat down search. During this time I repeatedly asked why all the focus is on me, when the ion scan alerted on my son and not me. I was never given an answer. When I was done with the final pat down search I was told that I could leave. My wife and son passed through security no differently then the general public. I cooperated during the entire incident knowing that it would speed up the process. I also advised the TSA agent that I have been a police officer for 20 years and understand how the swab/ion scan system works but was not sure why the focus was only on me. At this the second TSA agent seemed to try to distance himself from the process by telling me that he was only assisting and not sure what lead up to this point. If we are in the business of keeping the traveling public safe, I am not sure why all the focus was on me and not my son. If the swab tested positive for explosives as indicated by the TSA agent that person should be subjected to additional testing and probably to include the people they are traveling with. Also, during this time I began questioning whether or not someone had any amount of opportunity to tamper with my bags. I look forward to a response from TSA regarding this matter.

Thanks (b)(6)

Caller stated that she traveled through the security screening checkpoint at BHM today and has a complaint. Caller stated that she is disabled and has implanted medical devices. Caller stated that she alarmed the AIT and her hands were tested for residue and there was an issue. Caller stated that at the time she was not told what the issue was. Caller stated that her belongings were collected by a supervisor and boarding pass and passport were given to someone to scan. Caller stated that then her belongings were sent through the x-ray machine and then she went through the AIT and alarmed again. Caller stated that then a woman karate chopped her under her right breast and it was very painful. Caller stated that she believes the alarm was caused by the under wire of her bra. Caller stated that her belongings underwent the testing for residue and a supervisor came and told her that she tested positive for explosives on her hands. Caller stated that she told them it can't be. Caller stated that she was told they would have to take her to a private screening area. Caller stated that she did not want the screening in a private room and wanted it in the open. Caller stated that she was told she could not have it in the open because they would be checking in her groin area. Caller stated that she told them that she did not feel comfortable going to a private area. Caller stated that the supervisor said that if she did not go in the private room she could not go to the flight and she went into a room against her will and felt very uncomfortable. Caller stated that she should have the choice for a private screening or not. Caller stated that she had put on hand sanitizer and it was possible that is what tested positive. Caller stated that it was portrayed to her and only explosives. Caller stated that she told them she would probably alarm the AIT and she had cards from the manufacturer to avoid the machines and get a patdown. Caller stated that she still alarmed. Caller stated that what happened at BHM should not happen. Caller stated that she almost missed her flight due to this.

Caller stated that she believes that it had some disability discrimination involved to her, but the TSO's would not have known. Caller stated that she thinks it was poor customer service on their behalf only. Caller stated that they wouldn't think she is disabled.

My name is (b)(6) and when I flew back from Puerto Vallarta this time I was stopped at security in Dallas because my boarding pass had 4 s's (SSSS) printed on it. What does that mean? I had a full pat down and carry on bag check (1st time in all my years flying) The TSA agent told me to go to the web site but I can't find out what this means and why I had it on my boarding pass. Could you please let me know what triggers this and if I should plan on the extra delay for future flights. My last five trips I had TSA Recheck so I'm a little confused as to this new (SSSS) designation Thanks You can e-mail or call (b)(6) CELL

I have never been more embarrassed than after my TSA experience yesterday. I traveled almost 200,000 sky miles last year 2014 worldwide and had NEVER been body searched like yesterday. I'm filing this formal complaint as after getting through Pre-Check security yesterday I asked to speak to a TSA Supervisor. She told me that the only way to file a complaint is to contact TSA directly so she handed me a Contact TSA card.

1. Went through security as I usually do with about 20 other business colleagues. I went through the Pre-Check line and did remove my boots as I know that they beep
2. I sent through my roller bag with computer/iPAD and a small luggage bag (purse) brand new on the belt
3. My small luggage bag beeped so they sent it through another time
4. Then the small bag set off an "alarm" so they pulled me aside
5. Told me that I had to answer questions, take my business jacket off, shoes off and spread my arms
6. I then experienced a FULL body "pat down" but it was more like a FEEL DOWN. Hands tight along my entire body, including my breasts as well as hands up and down my full crotch.
7. There were 3 TSA agents addressing my situation. One agent told me to sit down in a chair. One other agent told the other agent to "watch her"!
8. To make matters worse, a gentleman approached me just outside the TSA security area after my experience and said, "Miss, pardon me for asking, but I couldn't help but notice you getting searched quite inappropriately over there. What was going on that they had to treat you like that?"
9. And yes, I was asked if I wanted the search to happen in a private room but I declined. I declined because #1 there's NO WAY I'm going into a back room with a stranger and #2 I'm not leaving my wallet, personal items and ID behind.
10. Throughout this entire time not ONCE did either of the 3 agents explain to me what was going on and WHY I had to go through this. It wasn't until I spoke with the TSA supervisor that I found out my small bag set off an alarm that detects some kind of chemical.
11. I still don't know what set the alarm off. My bag contained everything that I normally carry on in my purse i.e. mouthwash, toothpaste, makeup, eye solution, fruit, cell phone, etc.

Being a world traveler for business I sincerely appreciate the lengths TSA Security goes to ensure our safety. But this search clearly went over the line.

Comments: I flew into the Washington-Dulles Airport on Monday, January 19th, 2015 and was to depart on January 22nd, 2015. Prior to my trip I called TSA to ask if there would be a problem flying back on the day my temporary license expired. The clerk told me that there would not be a problem but to make sure I had an extra ID with my picture on it. I told them that I had a copy of my Birth Certificate, my EY employee ID and my Social Security card. They told me that there would be no problem. I got to Security, and they walked me down to the Pre-Check Security area. I showed them my ID and she called for help to look at the ID because she did not see a hologram. She then looked in a book and said that I needed to go through more screening. I was asked if I wanted to stay outside or go in a private room for the screening. I told her this is humiliating I am not staying out here. I was touched by more than one person. I am going to make sure more complaints because your guidelines are not clear to your personnel and something needs to be done. I also feel like they may have been some levels of bias as well. In my opinion opening travelers luggages should be illegal without the owner being present. There should be a law against it. As a matter of fact I am going to look into that when I get back. I have no problem with you guys searching my bags which is why I do not lock my luggage. I even let the occasional pat down slide. I would however prefer to be present. During this particular search through my belongings whoever did the search let a brand new bottle of hair dye spill over my brand new pair of shoes. They forgot to close the bottle. They did not re tie the bag it was in either. Luckily it did not spill over my other items. Something sharp was used during the search as well because a couple of my cereal bags were sliced open. This could not have happened during flight because it is a hard shell suitcase. If it did there would be slices on the outside of my luggage as well. I have enclosed photos of the damage and I expect these items to be replaced due to the carelessness of TSA. I could be reached at (b)(6) I understand it's for the safety of all travelers but you guys need to have the traveler present when searching so that stuff like this does not happen again.

Caller went through DEN yesterday. He said that they always has his locks cut off his bag. He said that the agents don't really seem to care about the passengers there. He went through Precheck because he is DoD. He has a knee replacement and had to have a patdown. He said that he witnessed treatment of an older couple at the checkpoint that was awful. He said that they were all yelled at. He said that it seems like there is a lot of stress at DEN that isn't at the other airports. They went through the screening machine, a woman TSO was irate that passengers who alarmed had to have a secondary screening. The older man didn't know what was going on, they pulled his pants up and had him lifting his leg. His wife was very shaken from the screening procedure. He couldn't believe the way that they were treated.

Special Notes: He went through the checkpoint at 8:45 p.m. The TSO had white hair, he was the oldest one there, around his 60s, bald on the top of his head, he had a white beard and he was American (later specified that he meant caucasian). He had an attitude and was pushing him around (not literally) but did consider the attitude abusive. He states he has never been treated that way. He was told to not take off his shoes, belt and jacket. He was told to go through the AIT twice because anomalies were detected all over his body. He states he was exposed to too much radiation and that upset him. He received a patdown due to that which he does not have a problem with. He feels he was forced to be screened that way.

Caller stated he went through the checkpoint and was advised not to go through any screening devices by his primary DR. He requested a patdown 24 JAN 2104 and the officer manning the screening area hassled him and made him take off everything (belts, shoes, etc) and put everything on the conveyor system along with his carry on luggage. It took several minutes for a male TSO to become available but during this waiting period, a female TSO kept hassling him about how the AIT is safe and that he had no reason to not want to go through the screening devices. He stated that she was very forceful like she was mad because they now actually had to work to conduct his screening.

When his luggage finally came through the scanner, it sat at the end of the conveyor system for a long time and he could barely see the bag from where he was standing. He mentioned this to another officer and finally a nice TSO that was standing near by offered to move his luggage to a conveyor system closer to him so he can have a line of sight. When the officer was moving this, he noticed that the front pocket of that bag was open. He completed his patdown and went straight to the carry on bag to find that 5 - 20$ bills were missing from that pocket and his cigar case (that contained a pen inside) was open and not closed back.

He did not leave the screening area until the STSO on duty went back and looked through the footage to see what might have happen. The STSO reviewed the film and had him come in the back to look as well but there were too many people walking past to see anything (if it was a TSO or Passenger). The STSO didn't offer any other assistance but to have him fill out a card with information about what occurred.

REASON for the call: Caller told the screener in ATL she didn't want to go through the AIT. When she flies out of MSP you go through and gather your things and they do the patdown on the other side. In Atlanta they would not do that. She had to wait somewhere else with her belongings unattended. She asked them if she could get her things and they told her no. She told them if her belongings are gone that they were responsible for them. They suddenly became rude to her and told her not to talk back to her. She was coming in from Mexico City through ATL and back to MSP and no one was keeping an eye on her things. One TSO was a man about 6'4", 300 pounds and the other a woman 5'1", 150 pounds with glasses and short, cropped, black hair with gray. The woman was the one who told her not to talk back. What they did was a very punitive thing to tell her to go stand over there and not to talk to her. She finally had to go through the AIT because she was waiting so long and she is reporting this because they are probably doing it to other people.

He said that yesterday LIH 12:40 PM in the first lane on the left. There is only one terminal there. He put his luggage on the belt to be checked in and a TSO at the check point was very rude to him. He was told that it was the wrong time to start trouble with him. He said that he yelled at him and got in his face and asked what he said over and over again. He said that he walked through the gate and got a patdown and the TSO continued to yell at him and then he spoke to the supervisor who told him that the TSO should not be working here. Comment : I am 6.5 months pregnant, and requested to be patted down instead of going through the machine (this was at the instruction of my doctor). I had 4 TSA agents separately SCOLD me for wanting a pat down, and telling me that I was "wrong" for thinking that the machines have radiation harmful to a fetus. They made me feel dumb and harassed, and this type of behavior is 100% unacceptable. The guidelines clearly state that I am able to choose a pat down - that choice shouldn't come with such belittling from TSA agents. I have never felt so disrespected in my life.

The caller stated that not even her grandchildren are allowed to address her as granny. The caller was upset and stated that she felt it was disrespectful. The caller then stated that she had to undergo a patdown. The woman who did the patdown was a tall lady and was quite rude. The caller stated that she had patdowns before but that this was rude. The flight details are as follows:

Caller said he has a complaint and that he has precheck with American Airlines and has global entry. He said he had his hip replaced last month and that at LAX they do not have a body scanner at the checkpoint and he has to go through the wimnd and then he has to have a patdown. He said that the TSA Officer will not walk him over to another line for the body scanner. He said the supervisor would not even help him and he said we are breaking the Disability Act. His complaint is not being able to use the body scanner at LAX at American Airlines for TSA precheck. He said he is traveling tomorrow on flight # 12 from LAX on American. He said he has already called the CSM today at the airport and she told him to call us. He said he is disabled and he said the ait machine is not available at the TSA precheck line and they wont walk him over. He said he does not want to file a disability related complaint and does not want to go over it. He declined the PSS and he said he does not want to confirm the CSM phone # and he ended the call.

I received my known person # (b)(6) on 1-15-15. I traveled from ABQ-LGA on 1-20 and had a very east time navigating the TSA-Pre security line. I told the agent I would set off the alarm because of my knee surgery, so she sent me through the x-ray machine and I was off. No problem.

Different story on the way home on 1-25 from LGA-ABQ. I was in the security line at Gate B at about 3PM. I again told the agent I would set off the alarm because of my knee surgery. This time a gruff agent told me I would have to take off my shoes because the ringing alarm preempted TSA-Pre. I asked her to send me to the x-ray machine while wearing my shoes. She refused and brought over two colleagues who informed me I would have to get patted down. I argued with them and again said I was a TSA-Pre member. I also said this treatment did not occur during the trip into NY. They were getting angrier and angrier and brought in another "supervisor, (b)(6) (who would not provide me with her badge number). She said I had to go through the pat down. The last name of the woman who conducted the pat-down was (b)(6) She said her badge number was (b)(6) She was loud voiced, rough and heavy-handed. I've had pat-downs before in other cities, but no one has ever touched my breasts or pubic area before. I think this woman was really going above and beyond her duty while patting me down. The approximate time was 3:15 PM.

PM

I would like these two people to be interviewed by supervisory management and be instructed in procedures involving TSA-Pre members of the public. I would also like a reprimand placed in each one of their files concerning this incident.

I didn't spend $85 to enroll in the TSA-Pre program, only to be harassed by TSA agents and subjected to a violative pat down..

I look forward to your reply.

1/30/2015 9:20:52 AM Caller advised that every time he flies he is selected for secondary screening. Caller advised he just went through security at New Orleans and walked through the technology and the alarm went off. A security officer began patting him down without telling him on the inside of his thigh. After the patdown the security officer grabbed his hand and swabbed it. His carry on was then searched without being told. Caller stated that TSA doesn t protect the public from anything. Caller doesn t think TSA has the right to search him or his property that this violates his rights.

I have been through security at FLL 50 or more times. This was my first unsettling experience with a TSA agent. I passed through the AIT unit, and, as always, since I have an ostomy, I was told I would have a pat down. TSO (b)(6) asked me to remove my belt, which I did. He then proceeded to pat down the ostomy area with the front of his hand, grabbing at it (this grabbing had never happened before). I pushed his hand away and asked for a private area pat down. He said he has to do it, proceeded again and I pushed his hand away again. I told him I was entitled to a private pat down. He then called someone over, STSO (b)(6) (b)(6) arranged for two TSA men to take me to a private room where the pat down was performed in an acceptable manner.

PM

I have never been treated roughly by any TSA agent before. I was alarmed that he was grabbing at an ostomy which I told him about. In the ostomy section of the TSA website, there is a statement that a passenger can have a self pat down of the ostomy. This was not offered. TSA (b)(6) should be a bit more sensitive to people with ostomies as embarrassing accidents can occur.

Thank you for reading this.

Caller flew Sunday from JFK and on Wednesday from RSW and in both cases she went through the AIT and was waived out of it someone patted her hair.

She said she filed a complaint in mid summer 2014 and TSA investigated and sent her some information that the agent was in the wrong and they are reviewing policy but that is all it said. She stated she is 36 and she feels she is being racial profiled by the extra screening of her hair and she wants to file another discrimination complaint as well.

Caller wants a packet so she can file a complaint again for racial profiling and she wants to file a screening complaint on both airports and the hair screening rule itself.

COMPLAINT # 1:

At JFK someone patted her hair with no warning after waiving her out of the AIT.

DETAILS:

01-25-15 JFK at 10:45 to 10:50 AM at JetBlue Terminal 5 (Flight 1129)

She exited the AIT and the TSO waived her thorough and then she without warning patted down her hair.

She was a tall african american with cinnamon colored complexion and her long dark brown hair with orange roots was pulled pulled back in a pony tail

12:15:30
PM

She was at the AIT to the immediate right of the Supervisors desk and she spoke to the Mgr. (b)(6)

Caller stated she wants to file a complaint because it was like being attacked by a stranger on the street to have someone pat her hair without warning.

COMPLAINT #2:

At RSW the agent did warn her that she needed to pat her hair down and initially she declined it and they refused to let her fly unless she allowed the patdown of her hair. She did have some bobby pins but could not remove them without messing up her hair but it was clear to see what the issue was. They called a supervisor and she just rolled her eyes around at her and they called a Manager who said they get into trouble if they do not do their jobs and the AIT showed as an anomaly. It was 5:30 AM and she ended up in tears before it was over.

DETAILS:

1-28-15 she flew from RSW on a 6 am flight from Terminal (did not know) on Jet Blue Flight 130 She was at the checkpoint around 5:10 AM to 5:20 AM.

Her complaint is that the Supervisor who came over to her was not empathetic to her situation at all. (Note: Initially she said the TSO rolled her eyes at her but when I repeated it back she would not agree to what she had said and changed to saying she was just not empathetic and was not a good representative to TSA).

The TSO was a white older lady with dark brown hair with a reddish hue.

Comments: I put all my belongings on the belt and went through the body scanner. On the other side I got the majority of my belongings but saw one of my bags on the other side of the divider where the bags go that need closer examination. I gathered all the rest of my belongings and waited for the tsa agent to examine my one bag. I was only told the bag had set off an alarm. I then was told I needed to surrender all my belongings as well as my shoes and belt and was going to be subjected to a pat down. Again I was never told why this was happening. All I was told was I had set off an alarm. I was never even told what the alarm was for. As I was watching the TSA agent swab all my belongings I heard her say she couldn't find what had set the alarm off. Then I was subjected to an extremely embarrassing pat down. The TSA agent had me face the entire security area when she patted down sensitive areas. I also had to spread my hands out like I was a common criminal. Had I known it would have been done like that I would have requested a private screening. It was extremely embarrassing. At the end of all that the TSA agent didn't find anything. None of my belongings included anything that needed to be thrown away or was out of what TSA allows through security. It was absolutely ridiculous what I was subjected to and at the end of all of that I was just told okay you can collect your belongings now. No apology no explanation as to why I was subjected to all of that.

Good Morning,

I traveled though the Hilo International Airport (ITO). My husband and I are TSA pre check members. We have a 6 year old son named (b)(6). We travel to Hawaii from Las Vegas NV every year to visit grandparents. There is no problem at the Vegas airport but at Hilo it is a different story. Our son (b)(6) only likes to drink chocolate milk. We have attempted to bring chocolate milk for him in the form of Pediasure on the plane. When we go through security scanning we advise them of the single bottle of Pediasure and leave it in the tray. This bottle is 8oz which I understand is over sized and needs to be checked for explosive material with the patch test. This bottle is in original packaging label on and not opened. Sealed from the manufacturer. I have no issue whatsoever with the patch test. What I do have issue within that my husband and or I must go through a full on body pat down in order to bring this item through security. I might be able to understand the pat down if we had no child but our son is always traveling with us. What is the point of the full on body pat down? As I mentioned before my husband and I are also Tsa pre-check members meaning we have had more security checks on us than your regular passenger. I just think this procedure is flawed. If the bottle was not in original packaging or was opened I could understand the pat down. It just seems like for our circumstance that the pat down is excessively violating and not needed. I would like to see this procedure changed to needing the patch test but not the full body pat down.

I think you as a whole do an excellent job at what you do to keep us as safe as you can in the air. I understand it is hard to write policy with all the extenuating circumstances that arise but I think that this is one policy that needs to be changed for all of the parents out there who are traveling with children. Especially on a 6 hour flight it makes it easier if you have something that is a treat for the child.

Caller stated that yesterday she flew from SNA to EWR and was humiliated because she was treated like a terrorist. Caller stated that she had her breast milk with her and told the officer that she did not want it to pass through x-ray screening and wanted an alternative screening measure. Caller stated that the woman took it out of her sight and used another machine. Caller stated that she did not know what the machine was and what it does. Caller stated that her items were all inspected and she went through a patdown. Caller is upset because she stated the officer was slow checking her items and giving her the patdown. Caller stated that this process took 30 minutes. Caller stated that this was not necessary and she was humiliated.

Please see the attached PDF account but form info is below.

Is your allegation based on: Civil rights liberties

Are you filling this form out for yourself? *: yes

Please use the following boxes to provide as much information as possible about the alleged incident.

When did this happen? *: 2-1-2015, 5:40 am

Where did this happen? *: Jackson, MS airport security line

What happened? *: See attached PDF

Who treated you unfairly?: See description of TSA person in question

List anyone else who may have seen or heard what happened?: The area was filled with other TSA personnel but doubt anyone would see as there was obvious averting of eyes as I left not a reaction as if business as usual.

Is there any other information you want us to know about or consider?: The nature of her pokes and pushes were of a very sexual nature whether it is by a female or male. I doubt that such a search reveals anything about what is present on a person's body and Jackson should get a machine if they don't want to risk personnel of perverted sexual orientations making advances on passengers.

How would you like for your concern(s) to be addressed? *: Observe Jackson airport's search methods anonymously and question the TSA personnel in question about her judgment and the inconsistent application of her own shared search rule and confirm if these full cavity searches are TSA new policy as I have had pat downs not feel ups by TSA. This was very unprofessionally applied and not like any previously performed.

Please read the following and check the corresponding box to signify your consent and authorization. You must check the box prior to submitting the form. *

() Yes, I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the civil rights and or civil liberties complaint that I have filed with TSA is true and correct and I have read and agree with and to the terms outlined in this Form.

I CONCUR WITH THE STATEMENT ABOVE AS I CANNOT PHYSICALLY CHECK THE BOX.

Hello,
upon arriving at gate c security most of the security agents were pleasant and professional except for the one lady. She was extremely rude. She asked me to stand where the footprints were which was normal but did not move to let me stand there. She was very hostile and I did not want to get too close to her. When I didn't stand exactly on the footprints she became very frustrated with me and pretty much yelled at me to stand there. She then scolded me for not removing my cash from my pocket and demanded to know what was in my back pocket. (I did not have anything in there) There must be an inconsistency between airports because when I left phx I was told that I did not have to remove my cash. She then proceeded to give me a terrible pat down and told me to be on my way. (She barely checked my right pockets and didn't even check my left side at all) I am a very seasoned traveler as I used to be a flight attendant and have traveled the world in many different airports. It is my opinion that this lady was on a power trip because of her lack of thoroughness and professionalism. I do not wish to be contacted but wanted to let you know as she will be making contact with many passengers going through las. I hope that you resolve her attitude asap!

To whom it may concern:

I am writing to file a complaint with reference to an enhanced pat down I received recently.

2/2/2015 12:04:27 PM I utilized the KCM screening checkpoint when reporting for duty in CVG recently. After the I.D. verification, the agent informed me that I had been selected for hand swab explosives detection screening. The screening returned a false positive, so I was immediately subjected to an invasive intrusive full body pat down – as well as an extensive search of my personal belongings. The pat down included touching of my buttocks and groin area, which I found severely intrusive. The agent asked if this had ever happened to me before – and I answered no. He then replied that “it happens all the time.” This implies to me that this equipment is generating a large number of false positives, and thus a large number of unnecessary intrusive full body searches. (The agent also implied that the cold weather was causing the equipment to generate a larger than normal number of false positives, as well as saying numerous lotions, creams, and various other hygienic products would generate false positives.)

I understand the need for secondary screening in general, and random screening for KCM participants. I don't believe, however, that escalating to an invasive intrusive full body pat down on a flight crewmember is appropriate without substantial suspicion of wrong doing – particularly if the rationale for conducting the search is based on the outcome of a test that seems to generate a high number of false positives. It would seem to me that there are better ways to resolve a likely false positive without subjecting a crew member to invasive screening methods.

Thank you for your time.

Caller has a valid TX drivers license.
He wanted to know what month and year the TSA required a security feature on the back of the license. He traveled from Charlotte, NC . He stated he was treated like a terrorist.
The features on the front of the license were accepted. They were not faded. A security feature was not on the back according to the TSO. A security symbol did not glow green and he was pulled aside for screening.
He had the concealed hand gun weapons license which he presented.
The FBI authorized TX to issue him a weapons license. They asked him if he had a credit card and he did.

He had to go through the additional screening.

He stated he was groped and touched inappropriately by two TSOs. He had 15 minutes of additional screening.
He complied with everything they wanted him to do

He stated all of this humiliation occurred in front of the public. His job includes testing the accuracy of E-911 calls. He stated he is appalled the way this screening was conducted.

Caller states that she was leaving LAS to go to Dallas Love. Caller was requested to put her bluetooth, coat, belt, and purse in a bin to be screened. An alarm went off, and she was given a chance to go through for a second pass. She had to get a patdown. Caller is upset because she was afraid that another passenger would take her belongings from the conveyor belt. She tried to grab her belongings before her screening was completed. The TSO got her items for her and placed them on a table for her during the patdown. Caller did not get her bluetooth back and did not realize it because she was in a hurry to get to the boarding gate area. When she went back to the checkpoint to ask if it had been found, she asked for the TSO who had done her patdown. She also spoke to the STSO and did not feel like he cared very much even though she was in a big hurry to get to the plane. She finally did get to speak to the TSO who did the patdown, but she did not remember her. Caller feels that her belongings were sitting there too long out of her reach and that someone probably took her bluetooth and that someone should have gotten her belongings immediately when she was taken aside for screening. Caller would like someone to review the security cameras to see who took her bluetooth. Caller states that she asked several TSOs to look for it in lost and found and they did not find it. Caller does not want the bluetooth back because she feels that it has probably been damaged and contaminated. Caller would like to contact the CSM directly and requested that she be given the CSMs number because she could not get it from the self service menu. She would also like the information to be sent to the CSM from the TCC. Caller states that on her return flight from DFW with Spirit, a TSO asked her if some carry on items were hers that were left on the conveyor belt and apparently belonged to someone who was taken aside for additional screening. Caller would like security surveillance cameras to be reviewed to verify the incident. Caller feels that TSOs are not following policy at all the airports and that TSOs are not keeping a close watch on passengers belongings.

Comments: I flew to Florida last week to see my new grandson and spend a week. I booked a flight on JetBlue. Also, because my birthday was near, I got a renewed driver's license. I had to produce a birth certificate, social security card and two forms of proof of legal residence to do so. They then issued me a temporary driver's license in paper form and told me the plastic card would arrive in two weeks. This was not in time for my trip so I specifically asked if this was legal as an ID and they said yes.

Fast forward, I depart the airport in SLC and was fortunate that my boarding pass showed TSA Precheck. No problem as they passed me right through. When it came time to return to Salt Lake City, I again was pleased that I had been selected for TSA Precheck again. However, when I presented myself to the TSA Precheck line for my flight, I was informed that this paper which had my picture on it was not valid ID for flying. The TSA agent was very kind, but informed me that each airport made their own rules and that their rule in Orlando was not to accept what I had. We waited nearly 30 minutes for a supervisor to evaluate my other IDs along with the paper and was told they would accept it, but not for precheck. They moved me to the regular line (which I would have been through 40 minutes ago had I not presented myself for TSA Precheck. She then informed the agents at the new station that I was to have additional screening. Apparently this meant, a detailed pat down, emptying everything from my carryon bag, wiping everything down for explosive residue and costing me still an additional 1/2 hour. When asked why they had to go to that extent, he said they had apparently seen something in the full body scan although he did not know what.

My comments are these:

How can he check the validity of the scan's discovery if they don't even know what or where the anomaly was?

Why was there no problem accepting my ID in SLC, or at Jet Blue in both SLC and Orlando, at Alamo Car Rental, at two of the stores in the airport??

Why was I pointed out as needing additional security when there was no anomalous information about my scan conveyed to subsequent agents?

I had two other picture IDs. Red cross donor card, 4 major credit cards, social security card, plus family pictures, etc. All ignored.

This does not make sense - I realize a need for security, but with the evidence I had, why was there such a problem at MCO and not SLC?

PM Comments: This is the second time I have been quote "randomly" selected for additional TSA screening. I find it unacceptable to be subjected to searching by seven TSA employees when a brief re-check of my license would reveal I am 65, never had a ticket, lived in the same residence for 40 years, never traveled out of the country, and worked my entire medical career at the federal VAMC. I am petite, blonde and travel with a hot pink tiny purse and hot pink small 16 inch carry on. The individual who pulled me out of line mumbled. He did not even clearly say what I was to do. He swabed my hands. He then left his post and led me to other screeners. I have suffered a broken shoulder so I was unable to completely lift my left arm while in the scanner. That disturbed the routine for the screeners so after rechecking my items, the three TSA men carried my tray with pink items and my shoes across the screening area to the same small room I was placed in the previous time. Then two women began another much more invasive pat down which, due to my injury that I identified for them, actually hurt when she went under the arm. Both times, this unnecessary screening took more than one half hour. The previous time, I had to wait for a male wearing a black T-shirt that I believe said "Explosives Specialist". Ridiculous if a TSA employee would use common sense this stressful situation would not happen. It begins my trips with a great deal of stress that is totally unnecessary. I am certainly not willing to pay the fee to have the "Pre-Screening" so the TSA employees do their jobs correctly. The procedure used to quote "randomly" select travelers needs to be addressed. I feel I am profiled needlessly. During the entire process, I never say anything for fear I will be detained even longer. The TSA employees do not speak either. That is intimidation. Again, a simple check of the license ID would give them more than enough information, then the X-ray and quick look in the bags would certainly be more than enough to clear a 65 year old woman.
Am I permitted to ask for a supervisor?
Please identify for me a way for this never to happen again. Twice is enough.

Caller states she is traveling from Cancun to Cleveland with a stop in DFW on American airlines. Caller states her flight leaves at 6:45 tonight and she had precheck. Caller states she went through the checkpoint and had purchased alcohol from the duty free shop that triggered an alarm and was informed she can not take this. Caller states she asked to speak with the person in charge as they went through many airports before that without any problem. Caller states the supervisors name was (b)(6) and she requested a patdown for the passengers after she arrived. Caller states she was informed she could leave the bottle at the checkpoint and place it into checked baggage which would have charged her a fee. Caller states the bottle was 750 ml.

Complaints: Inconsistent Screening (Different Practices between Airports)

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Flight #544 US Terminal 4 Gate A13

Comments: Screening procedures are illogical and completely devoid of actual security regarding the allowance of documented employees to use the metal detectors vs the back scatter scanning machines. I am an American Airline employee with a badge that allows me access behind security even if I am not traveling, yet that same badge somehow becomes randomly irrelevant according to some TSA agents at the metal detector. I repeatedly get the response that since I'm not in uniform, I cannot enter. I don't have a uniform since I work at corporate headquarters, and it's almost always because an agent looks me up and down deciding on the spot if I'm not dressed well enough. If that excuse doesn't work, TSA claims because I'm not working that day. Today and nearly twice a month for the last year have I been traveling for work. If both of those responses don't work they say it's because I don't have a SIDA badge - which I don't have. Well today and more often than not I am dressed professionally, I am working, traveling on business, and am refused a quick scan through the metal detector, clumsily wait for another agent to pat me down which I'm sure neither of us enjoy. While waiting for a male assist pat down, other travelers are congested in the screening area and to my surprise are simply let through the metal detector right in front of me. No badges, no kids, not elderly. Just randomly let through because the line was getting too long. How in the wide world of security does this make sense? Still I am refused to enter because I already "opted out". Why do some agents think they can proudly command and order passengers around as if they have almighty authority? There are specific lines for employees for specific reasons and yet agents with very little experience are picking and choosing randomly which employees to hold back and who to expedite. Some agents see I have a badge, am dressed appropriately, ask if I am working and use common sense to let me through without hassle. I'm all for proper security and common sense when protecting our country and our people from dangerous threats; however these specific "policies" are not effective. They're not stopping criminals, but slowing down badged employees, clogging the process and only frustrating everyday passengers.

Hello,

I wanted to tell you about the appalling experience I had traveling from the Richmond, VA airport yesterday. The TSA agent who handled my pat-down was both disrespectful and inappropriate, and I'd like something to be done about it.

I opted out of the full-body scanner check, as I always do. In all other airports I've traveled with, the person who conducts the pat-down asks if I'm traveling with anyone, (if so) asks that person, usually my husband, to get my bags off the conveyor belt. The woman assigned to conduct my pat-down in Virginia berated my husband for trying to do so. When I explained the reason he did this is because it's what we do at every other airport, she berated me, telling me that "every other airport is wrong."

When she began explaining to me how every airport "should" conduct this process, I admit I grew impatient, both with her power-trip attitude and with the fact that none of this mattered: Should I correct the TSA agents at every other airport, because Richmond told me they're wrong? I told her I understood the procedures and would like to get it over with - this was around 5:15 a.m. She again berated me, adding "Don't rush me. I'm security."

PM

As I've said, I always opt-out of the full-body scanners. I think they're unnecessary, and quite frankly unlawful, but this is besides the point. I have never had a TSA agent pat me down in the manner she did. She was rough - pushing and prodding hard into and all over my body, sometimes more than once, taking extra care to prod especially roughly into my genital area.

I felt violated. I honestly believe she conducted her "search" in such a manner because I was short with her, and this was her way of retaliating, as if to say "serves you right, I'm security". It was incredibly inappropriate.

I don't believe someone who has this all-power "God-complex" mentality should be put into a position where they can do this to citizens - especially ones who have exercised their right to voluntarily opt out into this.

Unfortunately, I didn't get her name - the thin stencil on gold nameplates that glares in the lights don't make it easy to read (conveniently). If there's a way to figure out who she is, I'd like to see her redistributed - she should not be in this position. I doubt this will happen, so at very least I'd like this group to be observed, to make sure this doesn't happen again.

Thank you,

Comments: For the 1st time ever, one parent was not allowed to go through the metal detectors with our children. We fly very frequently and have never had this issue. Female TSA personnel was rude and ignored the request at first to go through metal detector instead of the provision machine. We knew a pat down would be included with denying provision machine. Female tsa employee indicated she would get a male assist only to walk away, move to another station and completely ignore us. She left us with zero help, a line mounting and people late for flights. Unprofessional and rude behavior is never needed. Especially when this was a pretty insignificant issue that we inquired on and came to a solution on, but she did not like the outcome apparently and left. Holding up a line due to unprofessional behavior in not doing your job is unacceptable.

Caller flew yesterday and she says that yesterday the staff seemed professional and she was travelling with her 12 month old son and she said that she had to go through screening and her hand was swabbed for ETD and it was positive. She had several bags and the TSO went through everything that she had and she felt that it took a long time. She says that it took about 15 minutes and she had a patdown after that. She says that she feels that it took too long especially since she is not a threat in any way. She asked if there was anything she could do to prevent it in the future. She asked about TSA PreCheck. The caller is a professional photographer, and requested that his film and camera be screened by hand. However, the TSO called over a supervisor, who indicated that this decision would result in a patdown inspection of the passenger. He believes that this is retaliation due to asking for a different type of screening which may slow down the line. Therefore, he wanted to file a complaint against the supervisor.

Caller is currently at Newark International Airport, and had requested a thorough patdown, since she is 5 months pregnant. TSO (b)(6) would not do the patdown as requested, and forced her to go through metal detect while yelling at her. She continued to make disparaging comments about her even after completing the screening. She felt as though this was exceptionally rude and unprofessional behavior, and inappropriate.

Caller said she is at DFW airport and she asked why does she have to go through the extensive screening process. She said she lives in Istanbul and is traveling there and she already went through the TSA screening and she said the Supervisor checked her passport and she had a full patdown after she went through the ait machine. She said her lga s were screened as well. She said when the Officer looked at her passport before she was screened she called the Supervisor over and she asked does she have to go through this each time. She said she feels like she is being treated a differently because of her nationality and the fact that she had a one way ticket. She said she has a one way ticket to Istanbul and is this why this happened and she said after the screening they called the Supervisor back over. She said she does not want to go any further and she declined the CSM phone # and she declined giving me her flight info for the CSM. She did however, want hte email regarding the civil rights complaint.She said the Officer told her there was a reason why she went through this and to call TSA for that reason. She asked if this can be a random selection.

Comments:After I passed through the detector I was asked by a female TSA agent what was in the pocket of my jacket. I pulled out my previous boarding pass that was folded up in that pocket.

I removed the pass and handed it to her. Without saying anything she grabbed my jacket on the inside and outside of the pocket. It was empty then.

Again without saying anything or giving me any kind of warning, she placed her hand onto my wrist, raised my arm, placed her other hand into my armpit then felt down my right breast. I was not given any advance notice my breast would be felt. I was not asked if I wanted to be directed out side the line of vision of the other passengers. I found this invasive action inappropriate and unnecessary.

For those of us who were "inappropriately touched" in our childhoods this is demeaning, dehumanizing and invasive.

What is your policy for this kind of treatment?

Comments:Metal detector went off due to my corset with stainless boring. Attendant moved my long hair aside to pat and needed to comment on how luxurious my hair was that I obviously spent a fortune on (inappropriate). She then felt between my breasts and commented about what a great bra I was wearing (inappropriate). I am deeply offended but not even slightly surprised at your inability to train your employees to behave professionally.

Hello.

On Thursday, Feb. 5 I was returning from a business trip to Japan. When I passed through security at Chicago O'Hare airport, the scanner picked up some chips I have implanted in me. I told the TSA agent they were markers and that I have had cancer 2 times and these are implanted in women to indicate where a biopsy was conducted. I asked her to please be careful around my left breast area due to the cancer, she wanted to pat me down. When she did, she pressed on my breast so hard that it was painful and I jumped and gasped. She said she was sorry but I questioned why the pat down was so forceful and really necessary. I have been through enough pain with the cancer and now, every time I go through security at the airport, I must go through the pain again. Additionally, I should have privacy and should not need to tell my personal medical history.

2/8/2015 9:14:43 AM Please train the TSA agents how to spot cancer markers in patients. We are not criminals, just folks fighting cancer. All other countries that I enter see the markers on a scanner and do not force me to be patted down. Only the USA does this. Again, this was embarrassing and physically painful. Please look into this matter. I do not want to get the agent in trouble since she is not the only agent that has done this to me but feel it is lack of training on TSA behalf.

Thank you,

Flying out of Logan this morning was a humiliating experience, and I think it is time to seriously consider how the TSA agents are trained. Giving simple directions, such as where to stand, seems to be an opportunity to speak with a sarcastic and disrespectful tone

After I forgot to put my wallet on the x-ray belt, I was pulled aside for additional screening. I found the way I was patted down completely intrusive, having my entire buttocks and genitals groped to some extent. In shock I repeatedly said, wow, and in response the agent spoke to me like a child, telling me to screen my wallet next time.

I understand the importance of our safety, but the way TSA agents treat Americans shows no concern for our personal wellbeing, and this should be cause for concern.

11:02:17 AM I would very much appreciate a response, and I would like to suggest how this could have been handled better. The agent who took me aside should have verbally prepared me for how intimate he was going to get with his hands, and there needs to be a tone of concern for safety - because right now we are being treated like cattle.

Comments: This is my response to the email you sent me. As a sexual assault victim I took great precautions to prevent what happened to me. I wore a non wired bra, my jacket had a plastic zipper and for the record, I did not set off any alarms.

Even without setting off the alarms, I was 'patted down' on my right breast.

So according to your regulations the rules that were broken were: No explanation of what she was doing, no explanation what was going to happen next, physically having my arm raised instead of being requested to do so, using the front of her hand and failure to offer a private screening.

Sexual assault victims struggle with the loss of control. First it was my high school coach and now it is my government. Considering the number of women, one in six, who have been victims of sexual assault, this needs to be addressed better. I need to know this specific incident has been addressed and not just added to 'the number of complaints' given to a specific airport.

Thank you

Caller uses the same carry bags all the time but it was checked because it triggered an alarm. He says the TSOs were unorganized. His bag had to undergo additional screening. HE says the bag had a laptop and other electronics and a salt sand scrub for his wife. His bag had a knife in his bag and a wrench one time and they gave him the option to ship but he had it thrown it away. He says that this time they went through the bag and he got a patdown. He says that it was embarrassing. The jar of scrub was lost and he can't replace it because it is at key west. He is calling mostly to complain about the TSA employees between 10 AM and 11:30 Am this morning. He asked about the 3-1-1 rule. He said he was interested in getting the item back. He understands why TSA screens all passengers but is unhappy with the process that he went through today.

Caller said he traveled on 12 30 14 out of JFK to Charlotte since he have a hip replacement the metal detector sounded off and he was directed for a patdown. While waiting for a patdown he saw that somebody was leaving with his carry on he tried to get the assistance from the tso near him and she told him that she could not help him. The tso admitted that there is a lot of theft at the checkpoint. He is concerned on what is tsa going to do to stop the problem and why the tso did not helped him. Passenger traveled on Jetblue but do not remember the gate.

REASON for the call: Caller was in Missoula International and she opted out of the AIT and got a patdown. She opted out of it again at the same airport on the same day and she had to remove her sweater. The first TSO that screened her did not ask her to remove the sweater and she wants to know why the second one made her take it off. She asked what her rights are during a patdown. I was travelling from Newark Liberty International airport on 16th of Jan via Jet airways for India. I am working in USA on H1B visa which is Valid till Sep-2016.

I felt, I was harassed for more than hour for getting boarding pass. As per Airline authority, They could not get my boarding pass on 1st go as they did not get clearance from TSA on this. I still dnt know the reason for that.

Finally i had to wait for more than hour to have the clearance and had to answer multiple questions which i personally treat as harassment and Mental load.

Please let me know if you need any more details to investigate the issue. Request your attention on this.

Caller wants to file a complaint for security at the airport. She was at Denver airport. She is in the military and had traveled this morning at 6 am. She was told by the first agent she would have to have a patdown and that something showed up on her hands. She had just fired a weapon and had been to the firing range but she had told them before screening started. The agent told all her stuff had to be taken off the conveyor belt and screened again and she could not touch anything. She says they did not offer her a private screening. She says the agent checked on the inside of her pants the waist line. She got a patdown from her head to her toes, on her breast area and private area. She says she just got off orders. She had ask the agent what they were looking for, no one offered her a private screening or why they did this to her. One of the agents that kept patting her down was white, she was in her mid 30 to 40 years old had a short hair, blondish in color. She says the agent was very ruff with her during the patdown. She ended up with a total of 5 patdowns. The first patdown was by a different lady, she swabbed her hands then the other agent did the other 4 patdowns. She was just coming off military orders and had just got promotion to fist lieutenant. She says it was a scary and she felt humiliating. She says she told them she was in the military and had her orders.

I am a 68 year old professional woman who is a frequent traveler and I would like to register a complaint about your TSA workers at Omaha's Eppley Field. I am leaving for a conference in Las Vegas and was sent to Pre-check, although I have a replacement knee. Of course the alarms went off in the x-ray and I was subject to a pat-down by a "trainee". She was being overseen by another TSA woman. The pat-down was the most personally invasive I have ever had- she touched every, and I mean every square inch of my body more than once. I am absolutely mortified at this unreasonable and personally insulting exam. The girl also told me that this was her first pat-down. Do you not TRAIN these people prior to letting them loose on passengers? I fully understand the need for security and TSA procedures, however, this was bordering on personal assault. I also realize there is little you can do, however, I want to register a formal complaint.

I'm the female in the wheelchair who was humiliated.

My porter (who also remarked how I was treated, and apologized that I had to go through that) brought me through from the car to security. The gentleman (who I will name at a later time) became annoyed when he said I had to walk through the x ray machine and I said I can't. I'm in a wheelchair. He became more annoyed and said well you have to get searched, a pat down, and I said fine. I don't know why but in a gruff tone he said you can use a cane. I told him I don't have a cane to use but if he had one I would use it. I said I can't stand alone because I just had surgery on both feet. He called for a cane and I had to wait. Now the embarrassing part. I can't walk all that great because I just had surgery on both feet. It's embarrassing and I'm unable to stand straight on my own. So my porter rolls me up and helps me into the machine. I'm holding on to the cane and the machine. The TSA guy angrily has the chair moved through to the side I should exit. The woman says I can't do the x ray unless I can hold the stance. I told her what I told the gentleman and the gentleman told me to go through. So she's telling him I can't go through, I'm so embarrassed, I need my chair to sit and now it's on the other side. I have to now wait for the chair to be brought back. I'm holding everyone up. This is when the porter became upset too. After finally getting the chair, holding up lines, being embarrassed I look at the TSA guy and ask his name. His reply was "why, is that a good or a bad thing." I said no bueno. I then sat down in my chair. The TSA guy yells to get a female to do a pat down. We waited. The porter said to the TSA gentleman, she's going to miss her flight. He said it is not my fault that we are understaffed with females who can do pat downs, it is not my fault if she misses her flight. So we wait and I'm looking at him smiling because I am so mad and embarrassed that if I don't smile I will cry. (It's embarrassing enough having to be helped and not being able to walk properly because I just had surgery this past Friday, but to have a person be rude to someone who is temporarily disabled is uncalled for, is uncalled for during any circumstance!) We keep waiting. So I smile at him and look at my watch, he then says really loud "Well if you would have come 2 hours early like you were supposed to you wouldn't have to worry about missing your flight. It's not my fault." The porter said "what does that matter, she still would have to wait and be treated like this." (I had no bags to check and I was told to come an hour before the flight so I would not have to sit in pain). We still waited and finally a female came to pat me down. She was very nice and professional. We made it just as the plane was opening the doors to be boarded.

My question is this, does TSA treat all disabled women like this, routinely?
Do disabled women in wheelchairs all get humiliated, degraded, and have to wait in embarrassment?
Is there not training regarding women who are disabled?
Please check your video tape. I'm sure you will see who the person is that I am talking about.
I do plan to call the ADA and explain how a woman with a disability was treated.
You can thank that gentleman for publicly humiliating me.
Oh, please send me a copy of the tape. When you respond I will give you my address.

Disability Description: Caller needs injectable medications.

2/9/2015 Incident Details: Caller said he has injectable medication that is required to be screened by hand. Caller said he has been having the medication screened that way for months and has not had a issue. Caller said when he was at the Detroit airport
4:35:30 when he advised the TSO his injectable medication had to be hand screened he was then given a patdown and all of his items were searched at the checkpoint. Caller said he feels he was discriminated against because of his disability. Caller
PM requested to speak to a supervisor.

Caller wants to know why he has to file his complaint in writing? He requested the information be e-mailed to him.

Caller and his wife have KTNs and she has a hip replacement. She tried to present her card about her implants. They do not even look at the card. This has become a harder situation for them because they always move her over to another line where there is an AIT. Sometimes they take her to the front and sometimes she has to wait in line and it defeats the purpose of paying a fee and getting a KTN. He has no issues when he travels by himself.

2/10/2015 Callers wife got on the phone. She does not mind the AIT or the wand but does not like to have peoples hands on her.
1:59:00 He asked if they should acknowledge the card. They have flown from FLL. He asked if the AIT is at FLL but his wife said the AIT is there but not at the precheck checkpoint.
PM

He asked if AIT is similar to MRI. He tries to get as little radiation as possible and will sometimes ask for a patdown.

Disability Description: Caller has a blood disorder and needs medications.

2/10/2015 Incident Details: Caller said she was departing Maui and she had medication. Caller said she has a blood disorder and her medication can not be screened by x-ray. Caller said she advised them she had medication that she would like to be hand
5:30:51 inspected. Caller said she went through the WTMD and there were no alarms. Caller then said the TSO advised her she was going to receive a full body patdown and all of her luggage needed to be hand inspected. Caller said the TSO advised her
PM she would be subject to a full body patdown because she has medication that needs to be hand inspected. Caller said she should not be subject to a patdown just because she has medication that needs to be hand inspected. Caller said she feels discriminated because of her medical condition. Caller said she should not be subject to a patdown after her and her luggage clear screening just because she has medication that needs to be inspected by hand.

Caller just got back from MCO. All of her items fell out of her bag at the checkpoint when the officer grabbed her bag. She had an expensive e-cigarette in her bag and it was shattered. It's worth $75.00. The officer was frustrated. She had a shopping bag and her purse. There's an outside pocket on the purse. She had to wait 20 minutes for her to do the patdown. The officer grabbed the bag briskly. She walked over and explained how she couldn't be blamed for all of the items falling out of the bag. The caller said that she felt bad for her because she was clearly overwhelmed. She thinks the airport was very understaffed.

What happened? At about 6:00pm PST, I requested a pat down at security on my way to Gate 10 at San Diego International Airport. I had to wait about 10 minutes for someone to arrive. when he did, he asked twice if i wanted a private room for screening. which i twice declined, he proceeded to do the usual screening (i get pat downs EVERY time i fly). when it came to checking my inner thigh outer hip, he karate chopped my testicle after saying, now i m running up your thigh to your torso. OW. i said, you hit my testicles. he didn t say anything. he got to the other side, said the same thing, and chopped my other

While taking time from our vacation in Maui this past weekend, my father-in-law, Reverend (b)(6) and I flew from Maui to Honolulu to help a young pastor. We departed Maui @ 4:35 pm on flight 295 Hawaiian Airlines and had return tickets on the 9:50 pm flight back. We encountered some traffic on our way to the Honolulu airport and arrived at 9:30pm. with no baggage, this should not have been an issue with our boarding passes in hand. We proceeded directly to the TSA check-in and I was through in less than 2 minutes, I turned around and did not see my father-in-law and determined he had been directed down to the "Non-Pre-Check" line. There were about 6 to 8 TSA employees at the "Pre Check" station and about the same at the other, I was the only passenger where I was checked in and my father-in-law was the only passenger where he was as well. I walked down to wait for my father-in-law and after a few minutes I heard over the speaker system (b)(6) the door will close in 1 minute" I immediately proceeded to the gate to explain that we had been there but TSA was continuing to Frisk, pat down etc. my 79 year old father-in-law, the gate attendant said sorry I can't help you and after a couple of minutes the plane was pushed away from the gate. I then proceeded back to the TSA checkpoint and did not see my father-in-law anywhere, after a few minutes he emerged out from behind a partition and I told him the plane was gone. (b)(6) said to the TSA employees holding him "I told all of you right up front, I have had 2 Knee and 1 shoulder replacements and never make it through a metal detector and our flight is about to leave". I understand that the TSA has an important job to do but spending 15 to 20 minutes patting, frisking, wandering a 79 year old man is GROSS INCOMPETENCE ! I was upset that we had missed our flight, the last one out I might add, that now required us to get a hotel and spend the night in Honolulu and get up at 3am to catch a 5am flight back to Maui. but when my father-in-law told me that while he was being "frnsked", that 3 times he had his "private parts" genitals to be specific "bounced" I became furious. I went back to the TSA station and demanded to be given the name of the TSA employee so I could make a formal complaint. The supervisor (b)(6) came back and said the TSA employee was in training and he could not give me his name and said I could write down his name instead, I asked if he witnessed the event he said no and I said then I want the name of the supervisor that would have been with this employee in training, he would not give me that name either. I explained that was not going to work and that I demanded either the name of the employee or his supervisor observing him, again (b)(6) refused and asked if I wanted to speak to his supervisor, I said yes. A few minutes later the supervisor (I did not get his name) Came over and gave me the same "song and dance" he said "I will review the tapes and determine if procedure was not followed", now just as I expected after turning in the "TSA Customer Comment Card" with my phone number and email address I have heard nothing!

My father-in-law is a 3 million mile+ flyer and explained to the TSA folks that put him through hell "I have never been treated this way in all my traveling experience". I understand employees need to be trained but I would ask you , whoever is reading this email and deciding what action needs to be taken, if this were your father or your grandfather is this appropriate action?

SFO to HKG flight # UA869. :

Comments: Employee took a Swiss Army utility tool out of my bag, flipped open the only knife, and thrust it directly at me before telling me that I can either check my bag or surrender the item. The thrusting was completely unnecessary and unsettling/ frightening.

Dear sir or madam:

When I left from AUS to BWI earlier this week, I did not have to take off my coat or shoes, take my laptop out of my bag, or enter a microwave naked scanner at the security checkpoint.

When flying back from BWI a few days later, I had to empty all my pockets, take off my coat and my shoes, take the laptop out of the bag, and either enjoy a naked scan or have a manual pat down.

Why do AUS and BWI have different procedures?

Is one or the other less secure?

Why can't BWI have the same simple and smooth procedures?

Why can't BWI TSA people treat me with the same friendliness as those in AUS?

I recently was on another trip to Denver and experienced a problem I wanted to make you aware of. I travel to that airport frequently but I was so surprised to find both my husband and I were both TSA approved for the first time. I have had a knee replacement and after putting all the items on the belt and getting in line I found there was no AIT machine for precheck. All of the other lines had one. I assumed the pre-approval was a reward for being a frequent flyer but here I found it was a punishment. I had to leave my husband (he then had the responsibility of all of our belongings) and go down to another lane to go thru the AIT machine. Otherwise I would have had to wait for an attendant and then go thru the "pat down" (which is not a quick procedure, and not pleasant to say the least).

I always look to see if there is a machine before I get in line and never imagined there would not be one in a pre approval line. I am hoping this makes you aware of the problem and are able to correct it. With the amount of flyers now I would think the money would be available.

Thank you,

(b)(6)

To whom it may concern,

I need to make a complaint about the service at Gunnison Colorado airport.

I am a TSAPrecheck subscriber and was told that TSAPre was observed in the Gunnison, Colorado.

Upon entering security check I was handed an Orange TSAPre card to show the agents. The first one at the first conveyor belt told me to remove my liquids, jacket and pockets. I questioned this, but she insisted and would not make eye contact with me. Going through, the X-ray the operator asked for a bag check on my bag due to a laptop which was actually a Microsoft surface, even though TSAPre is supposed to allow laptops to stay in their case. A woman checked my surface with a swab and an explosives alarm went off. I was then told to remove more of my clothes, shoes, belt, and that a full patdown of my person would be done. It comes to no surprise that I was found with no problem items or further explosives alarms when checked more thoroughly.

I was not supposed to be checked like this in the first place due to a service that I had spent money and time acquiring. The ignorance of the 5 agents who took part in my security check were ALL completely and utterly ignorant of what TSAPre means and clearly do not know how to operate their equipment/tools.

Agents such as these wasted my time and added embarrassment to me (all of this was done out in the public). Whoever holds these agents accountable for their training and management needs to use this opportunity for further educating.

As a "customer" of TSA I should not know the rules of TSAPRECHECK better than agents who make money entirely on their knowledge of these rules. All of the information I have is found on the TSA website :

Caller said he is flying from Tampa and just went through the checkpoint and said he feels violated with the patdown. He said he talked to the supervisor (b)(6) at the checkpoint and he filled out a comment card that said it expires April 2014. He said the Supervisor told him he would review the tape. He said he does not have the name of the Officer who did the patdown but he said that the Officer explained it to him. He said he wants the CSM to call him back. He said he was brushed off by the Supervisor at the checkpoint and that he wants a call back.

Good Afternoon

I will rarely gather the nerve to complain about services. I seldom do. But this TSA at San Jose International brought me to do so.

I've flown through 4 different airports in the past month. I've had nothing but courteous professionalism from TSA officials. But my experience today at San Jose was bar none, the worst I've seen in years.

I was pre-checked due to my active duty service in the United States Navy. The pre-check line was closed off. No problem, I waited in the line with everyone else. I asked the first gentleman if pre-check standards were still in place and if I could keep my shoes and light jacket on. He quickly shooed me away and completely disregarded my question.

A woman behind me in line for the body scan made a comment that she needed to use the restroom. This older woman who was a TSA official then made an incredibly rude and uncalled for comment. She said "you can go to the bathroom right there," as she pointed to the carpet floor in front of the metal detector. I did not catch her name. I was and still am appalled at the behavior of your "professionals."

2/15/2015 9:10:42 AM I then noticed that some people were keeping their shoes and jackets on. Obviously they were pre-checked as well. I then told an officer (b)(6) that the man at the desk had ignored me when I asked if pre-check was still relevant. He apologized but seemed overwhelmed by the mass of people who were waiting to be screened.

Once I was done with getting pat down, I asked another woman if it was unusually busy. She also disregarded me completely.

I do not expect royal treatment nor do I want the people who are keeping us safe at airports to lose professionalism. But this, I'm sorry, is inexcusable.

I went through the TSA at SJC on February 14, 2015 at 15:45 local time.

Thank you for your time.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening .

Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Flight # 2129 on US Airways in Terminal C at the Washington Reagan Airport Gate #43 .

Comments: I fly two times every week from January till May and this is the first time it was necessary for me to get patted down AFTER going through a full body scanner. The TSA agent proceeded to grab BOTH of my inner upper thighs and slid his hands down to my knees. I find this action unacceptable, inappropriate and completely unnecessary. I also wear the same pants every time I do travel and never was an issue before. When I questioned why he needed to do this he simply told me to move along. That whole experience just was not acceptable.

RE: TSA overreach

Dear Congressional Representative McCally,

Today (2/15/2015) I was subjected to irregular TSA screening procedures that concern me, and I am concerned that as a consequence I will be unduly subjected to additional screening in the future. I would appreciate it if you would investigate further, for I was unable to obtain any information other than an email address at DHS to contact.

I am a frequent traveler, and have TSA prechk. I was outbound on US5442 to PHX from SLC. I went through the PreChk lane with a laptop bag, a jacket on, and my wallet in my pocket. My laptop passed through the tunnel, and I was directed through the metal detector. I alarmed; I was instructed to remove the contents from my pocket (wallet) and pass them through the xray tunnel, but not instructed to remove my jacket. I complied, and attempted to pass through the metal detector again. After passing through I was instructed to go back out and go through the millimeter wave scanner. I agreed but insisted that an agent retrieve my wallet from the small round bowl and keep it my sight. A agent was found and retrieved the wallet and kept it visible. I passed through the millimeter wave scanner. I passed through and was stopped for a patdown. I was shown a computer display that showed multiple ATR outlines on my upper torso from my jacket, which had several zippered pockets.

At this time a male TSA agent approached and instructed me that he was going to pat me down, including my groin. As no ATR signal was present that I could see, I objected. At this point the supervisor said I needed to be patted down.

2/16/2015 10:16:35 AM I offered to remove my jacket and pass it through XRay independently, as my understanding of TSA policy is that Millimeter Wave Technology is offered as an alternative to a patdown, and that I would pass through the body scanner again. That was again refused by the supervisor in uniform.

I asked to be told by someone that my choices were a) an intrusive patdown or b) miss my flight. A uniformed police officer then presented himself and confirmed those were my choices. By this time (b)(6) Security Manager was present, a discussion followed, with the result being that my jacket - but not my groin area - was patted down. I asked that the police officer remain and observe the patdown, and he complied.

Before being allowed to proceed, a form was filled out by the uniformed supervisor. He asked for my driver's license. I asked why he wanted my driver's license, as I was prepared to give him my Armed Forces ID, a green one showing me to be an IRR D5 in the naval medical corps. He said something to the effect of "give me the ID that was checked on the way in" so I gave him my Drivers License.

Why? Because the police had to be called. Why? because I requested their presence.

Something went wrong here but the entire story being told by TSA is that you don't need a patdown if you agree to the body scanner. I would like a clarification of their policies, an explanation as to why there is no one in the TSA that is authorized to say "your choices are to be patted down or not to fly" (apparently by the actions today, only the police can convey that message), and if I am now on some form of continued surveillance.

Thank you.

Complaints: Inconsistent Screening (Different Practices between Airports)

2/16/2015 12:02:58 PM Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): El Paso (ELP) February 14.

Comments: Disabled passenger (b)(6) has been in a wheel chair for less than a year. (b)(6) is weak on one side and has some cognitive impairment as the result of a stroke. He was carrying coats and a wooden cane but no carryon items. (b)(6) and (b)(6) travelled from PDX to ELP with no delay and had a great first air travel experience. (b)(6) no longer drives and used an expired license as a form of ID. He was treated well in Portland, Oregon. Returning from El Paso, Texas, after checking baggage and wheel chair, TSA staff separated the travelers to perform an in-depth pat down search of (b)(6). (b)(6) went through her own screening. When completed (b)(6) could not see (b)(6) and assumed that airport staff had already moved him to the departure Gate. When (b)(6) got to the Gate, an unheardable announcement went over the intercom for her to return to security. (b)(6) travelled back to Security (a long distance); (b)(6) needed more ID, and was setting off an alarm. He did not know there was a cell phone in one of the coats. On arriving at security, (b)(6) gave more ID of prescriptions, employee ID, etc. by emptying her bag. Security okayed his ID. Again, (b)(6) travelled back to the Gate rushing now with the assumption that staff would get (b)(6) to the gate on time. For some reason, security radioed the Gate that it would be another 10 minutes. Southwest Airlines said they would wait for him. The gate staff requested that he be brought to the plane as quickly as possible. (b)(6) boarded the plane and took a seat. A few moments later, she was told that the plane had been ordered to push off. There was a question of whether she wanted to leave without (b)(6). (b)(6) departed the plane to find that (b)(6) was at the end of the ramp. Neither were allowed to board the last departing plane that would connect to Portland on the same day. Southwest paid for lodging for a disabled person as well as meals. It is not fair that it cost Southwest for the TSA-caused issues. We understand that traveling with a disability requires more time, believe me. The process time and incompetence of separating a disabled person from their escort caused difficulties for TSA staff, Southwest staff and irreparable bitterness against El Paso airport security. The next day PTSD set in. (b)(6) knows that the work that TSA does is important but could not help but be shaken by the prior day's experience. She could not be even slightly courteous to staff that does thankless work. Do not separate disabled people from their escorts. (b)(6) was put in danger by TSA.

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to file a complaint regarding discrimination due to a disability or medical condition.

I have used your passenger support program several times now and it is very helpful. The passenger support specialists and supervisors with whom I have interacted are willing to listen and make an accommodation for my disability. However, the employees actually implementing the screening procedures do not make these accommodations, even when instructed by the supervisors passenger support specialists. I recently sustained a fracture due to this. However, I have fallen multiple times going through TSA due to employees not making the requested accommodation.

I have a rare movement disorder, hyperekplexia, which causes me to startle easily and to stiffen and fall to the ground when startled. The imaging scanner you use for screening makes a noise and has a movement (as the mechanism swings around in a circle). This startles me if I am not warned. However, if I am given a warning (e.g. I m pressing the button now or I m going to press on the count of 3. 1, 2, 3, etc.), I have no problem with this. This appears to me to be a very simple, reasonable accommodation that requires only a few extra seconds of time. I call ahead and request this accommodation. I explain what will happen if the accommodation is made and what will happen if it is not. I provide any information requested. I explain it to the supervisor or passenger support specialist when I arrive at the screening location. I explain that if the accommodation is not made I will fall to the ground. In my home airport, Jacksonville International Airport, I have not had a problem with the scanner. However, on three different occasions in three separate airports, I have had a problem.

PM

In the Minneapolis St. Paul airport (not sure of date) I fell to the ground landing in a sitting position when the passenger support specialist called to the person operating the machine what accommodation I needed and the person operating the machine did not give me a warning and pressed the button immediately upon my entering the machine.

In the Washington Reagan airport (9 1 14 at approximately 10 a.m.) I fell to the ground again when the supervisor stood directly next to the person operating the machine, told her in my presence that she should press the button only after the count of 3, told me to enter the machine and raise my hands, and the operator pressed the button without warning. The supervisor even turned to the employee and said Didn t you listen to what I just said?

In the Chicago Midway airport (12 28 14 at approximately 1:30 p.m.) I fell to the ground the 3rd time when the supervisor stood directly next to the person operating the machine, said in my presence that they were going to do something different to provide an accommodation to me, that I needed a warning before pressing the button, and that he (the supervisor) was going to operate the machine, told me to step into the machine and put my hands above my head, and as soon as I put my hands up the operator pressed the button. I felt sore but I did not at first think anything was wrong since it always feels sore when I have fallen onto my bottom onto the hard floor when going through screening. However, when the pain continued I went to my PCP, had x-rays, and was diagnosed with a fractured coccyx.

I understand that the machine operators are trained to be efficient and to press the button as soon as a passenger s hands go up. I am sure they do this so many times that they are on automatic pilot especially in busier airports. However, this does not help me as I have now fallen to the ground three times. I sustained minor injuries (bruising) the first two times. I sustained a fracture the third time. I could have sustained a much more serious fracture, such as a broken hip, that might have required surgery, a prolonged recovery, and might have left me even more permanently disabled.

While your program to train designated staff and supervisors is a good one and they do appear to listen and understand the accommodation that is needed, if they are not actually the ones who operate the machines or implement the procedures, it does not matter how well trained they are. This appears to be a weak link in your system. It was suggested to me when I called after learning of my fracture that I ask for a pat down from now on. However, I can fall even from a seated position in a El Paso International Airport

2/17/2015 9:07:56 AM Comment : When I was traveling through MCO on 2/9/15 I hit the security checkpoint at approximately 7:30 AM. After going through the screening machine I was told I was being pulled for additional screening. I was taken off to the side and my purse and backpack were placed on a counter in front of me where I was told to make sure I could always keep my eyes on them. There were three female TSA agents in total present. One of them gave me a thorough pat down. She was very professional and explained everything that she was going to do prior to doing it. After I was cleared through her pat down, I was told to step up to the counter to have my bags inspected. As the two remaining agents began going through my belongings, they began asking me many questions about my trip. It seemed a little intrusive, but I answered them. But then, my prescription medications were removed from my purse. The TSA agents asked me to name every medication I had in there and state why I am taking them. I would like to note that my name was on every prescription. They then followed up asking if I had taken my prescriptions yet that morning, when I stated I had not, they asked me if I was supposed to. I don't travel very often, and almost never by air, so I had never been subjected to any additional screening by the TSA. I felt very flustered by being asked to disclose my personal medical information in a screening process and did not know if this was the norm. I understand that security is of great importance with air travel, and I have no issue with being pulled for a pat down and a bag inspection and sacrificing some personal comfort if it means keeping our airplanes secure. But I cannot understand the need to explain my personal medical history to the TSA. Can you please clarify if this is standard protocol? I appreciate your reply.

(b)(6) Belvidere, NJ, 07823.

To whom it may concern.

This letter is in response to paper work that was sent to me, in regards to a complaint I filed with TSA. Since your office and Homeland security say I need to follow all their procedures, so here are the facts and dates of everything that accord.

I had a trip planned to West Palm Beach with my wife for my best friends son's wedding. I called a few days in advance to find out the procedures for I am in heart failure and wear a life vest, plus I have steel rods in my back and replaced knee, also I have heart stents.

2/17/2015 11:57:22 AM I was informed of the procedure's I had to follow and was asked if I wanted help at the air ports, I said yes please. A letter was sent to Newark and West Palm Beach from your TSA office. I received documentation on what to do and tried to follow it. I arrived at Newark airport and started to follow the instructions and no one could either other stand what needed to be done or did not want to see the paper work from TSA. So needless to say it started I got to check point and was delayed for about 45 minutes.

I explained everything to them, I tried showing all my medical paper work, and they said it was useless I was separated from my wife for this amount of time. Then the real embarrassment comes. I went thru the scanner and of course it sets off the alarm, then my bags had to be searched in which I had documentation on the medical devices, while this was going on I was escorted to a private room which I was not to be done without a supervisor and my consent. I asked for a supervisor and it was ignored.

I had a pat down in private. this was No Good. a supervisor was not present, and if one was he did not notify me of this. They did a bomb residue test it came back positive so they did a different type of test which was negative. The one security officer said that the first test does this quite often. Now remind you you're doing this to a person in heart failure.

Now we go back 45 minutes only to witness a couple with two young children going thru a search as well. They had to break down their strollers' cloth to metal while tending to their children. Don't you think this is a TSA job if they suspect something? There was the embarrassment for the couple as well as a long delay on the lines. (PS this couple who got this treatment happened to be at the same wedding as my wife and I.)

I was treated like a criminal. This is said for I do more for the public for free verses your employees. I paid for a good flight out of some good airports and was treated like the bad guy from the minute I entered the building.

The first time was in Allentown Airport, where I showed all my medical papers which were totally ignored. I was screened patted down and sent into a private room for a strip search. (In which I was informed they performed the strip search illegally) all because no one paid attention to my documentation. This is no way to treat a person who is one hundred percent disabled. It is a disgrace.

Where did this happen? FLORIDA - TPA - Tampa International

What happened?

It is my right to opt out of the millimeter wave imaging based screening and since I am pregnant I have been exercising that right. Generally, I am met with rude attitudes and have to wait sometimes up to 20 minutes for a female officer to perform the pat down. I have most recently been made to miss my flight at the C gate for Southwest Airlines flight 4070 at Tampa international airport because of there not being a female officer available... This is especially unacceptable since I was informed of this unavailability by a female officer. I asked if it was possible for her to switch with Another officer and she

Comments: To whom it may concern,

Yesterday Feb 16, 2015 @ 10:00 am I was going through security at Ontario airport. I have a medical condition that requires me to wear a mechanical knee brace. As I proceeded through the metal detector it obviously went off I explained to TSA officer (b)(6) I didn't catch his last name. As I explained what I had his reaction was " UGHHHHH! I need a male assisted pat down!" I've flown with my brace many times. I don't pack it in my suitcase cause it takes up to much room. I've never encountered any kind of reaction the way that I did in Ontario. I felt a complaint should be made cause this guy was very unprofessional.

So I was forced to remove shoes, etc. and undergo a manual pat down screening. Why, then, should I bother with TSA precheck?? What can I do to avoid this hassle in the future? Attached please find a complaint regarding my recent treatment at the Detroit Airport which completely deviated from past treatment I have received when I asked to have my multiple sclerosis medication hand-screened so it did not go through the x-ray, as per my doctor's orders.

Please confirm that you have received the complaint and that I have filed it properly, per the note below.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Austin Bergstrom airport pre-check line. .

Comments: Every time I utilize this airport, I am singled out for a pat down. This does NOT occur in other airports that I travel from. One TSA employee told me that the situation is occurring because he declared, "you are in the Pre-check line". In other words, don't utilize pre-check! Why did I take the time and money to have my pre-check authorization?!

Greetings:

Whoever just screened me for United Airlines Concourse D needs a rest, a suspension or to be fired. She was too angry or passive aggressive to tell me to be still for the X-ray and scolded me in a very angry tone the whole time, from the x-ray through the pat down. After the pat down she was satisfied and quit scolding. I'm sure good minimum wage help isn't that hard to find that you can't eliminate hostile screeners. I'll never forget the New Orleans airport.

I am very concerned about, what appears to be, a serious problem with the Pre-Check program. The first two times that my wife and I used the program it took us 30 minutes the first time and 20 minutes the second time to get through security checkpoints.

The reason? You have no plan for people who have joint replacements, pacemakers, or implanted defibrillators. Both my wife and I triggered the metal detector when trying to go through security. She has had a hip replacement and I have had a knee replacement.

You refer to this as a "trusted traveler" program but you don't trust us. The whole point of the program is to speed up the security checks but, what you have done, just slows the process down severely.

AM

Both times we used the program we had to be "patted down" since you have, apparently, done away with the hand-held wands. In the first case, at DFW, there was no one available who was qualified to do the "pat down" and we had to wait a half hour for someone to arrive. The second time, at SDF, we had to wait because the only person qualified to do the "pat down" was busy.

This is ridiculous. The program does not work. It's worse than not having the program.

Why don't you "trust" the "trusted travelers" and keep a record of people who have implants that might trigger alarms so that the program works? All you would need to do is use a wand to check that the implant location matched the data on file for the particular passenger. This is so simple that it is almost inconceivable that you are not already doing it.

I would appreciate your letting me know what is being done to correct this deficiency.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): San Juan Puerto Rico

Delta flight 0506 Feb 11, 2015 Checkpoint 2

Comments: Let me tell you about a recent experience I had with TSA in San Juan Puerto Rico. I was in Puerto Rico on business and was traveling back to Atlanta on Delta. I was selected for TSA Pre check and then selected for random extra screening. I stood where asked for 5-7 minutes and when no Man came over to do the extra screening, I asked the female agent if I could sit down about 5 feet away because my legs were bothering me. She told me to just stay where I was. After about 8 or 9 minutes I asked if they could please find someone to help me. The agent said something and a male agent came over and he was very abrupt. He asked me the usual questions about luggage, anything in my pockets (multiple times), told me to remove my belt and my shoes and then asked me if I had any sensitive areas from surgery etc. I told him I had recently had prostate cancer surgery, Radiation treatments and a quadruple bypass and pointed to the areas that were tender (BIG Mistake). He told me what to expect with the body search including that he would be searching "between my buttocks" and in my groin area. I told him that I wanted it done in private and asked to see a supervisor. A female supervisor came over and asked what I wanted. I told her that I am a frequent flyer and a pilot and had never been treated so rudely by TSA. He then repeated what he would be doing to me. I again asked for it to be done in private and looked to at the supervisor for some assurance. He told me that I was to look at him and was I ready for him to start his speech over again. He would not continue until I made eye contact with him. After restating the body search process again I said I would like their badge numbers or names. The supervisor told me I would be given the requested information. They took me to a room where we were joined by another man, and the original man told me to put my feet on the marks on the floor. I did but they told me to face the other way and I did. He went over my entire arms, back, legs, between my buttocks and then told me to face him. I turned and put my feet on the marks. He patted down my arms sides and when he got to the center of my chest (where I had told him I was tender) he pushed harder than anywhere else and I flinched. I started to unbutton my shirt to show him the incision, but he said he didn't want to see it. I put my feet back on the marks and he continued. When he got to my groin he told me to spread my legs farther so I placed them outside of the marks. I am 6 feet tall and 192 lbs so my legs are not fat and he clearly did this so that he could Grope me to show me he was boss. I have been patted down before but always with the back of the hands, he was using front of the hands and fingers. They told me I could put my belt and shoes back on and the agent that groped and violated me left. The second man and the supervisor escorted me out of the room and I asked for the names of the supervisor and the agent that left (groped). They then asked me what airline I worked for and said that I needed to show them my identification. I gave the man my drivers license and pilots license and he copied down my information. He asked me what flight I was on so I told him the airline and flight number. The supervisor said that she wanted to see my ticket to verify my information and I laid it on the counter and told her I didn't appreciate her insinuation that I was lying. She said I never said that you were lying. They would not give me the groper's information and when I reminded her that she said that she would provide it she denied it (a clear lie). The man wrote down his name and her name. When I looked at the names he had given me it didn't look like what I could see on her badge. I asked her to show me her whole badge, part of it was cover by her uniform, and she said so you are saying that we are lying. I told her that the name on the paper they gave me didn't match what I could see on her badge and again asked to see her name on the badge. She finally showed me the badge and it was clear that the male agent had written down a completely different last name. I have the paper and I would be happy to scan it and send it to you. So to recap, I was treated rudely, groped and violated, told I wasn't entitled to the identity of the groper and given a false name for the supervisor involved. I already know what the people involved will say. They will say that they all back each other up and all acted appropriately, that I was the only person that was wrong and that the name being wrong was an honest mistake. I hope that you will prove me wrong or at least put a note in their personnel files because if only 1 person in 100 that is mistreated complains, other people have probably already complained. People that act this way don't often change. By the way, the groper was a clean cut man in his twenties or early thirties. Also, when addressing the agents I never said groper I only stated it in

Good Afternoon,

This claim involves a passenger, (b)(6) whom I believe did file a Claim Form. The incident occurred at Nevada LAS McCarran International Airport on 12/18/2014 at approximately 5:00 am (b)(6) was proceeding through security and explained to the TSA employee that he could go through the scanner; thus, a screener was assigned to pat-down our client, whereupon the screener hit (b)(6) first in the left testicle and then, with even greater force, in the right testicle, which caused him extreme pain and required him to seek medical attention.

Please let me know if you need anything further in order to set up this claim.

Sincerely,

REASON for the call: Caller was asking how to file a complaint or sexual assault against a TSA person. Caller states during the patdown the officer went up her leg and hit her hoo haw area pretty hard and then repeated on the other side. Caller states they do not have to go that hard and this was not acceptable. Caller asked if the CSM had methods to view the incident.

The TSO, an African American male, was informed by (b)(6) of her disability prior to the screening. He allowed her to be screened by the AIT with her shoes on, but indicated that additional screening was required. He asked a female TSO to conduct the patdown, but she refused. Then, he was required to ask a second female TSO to conduct the additional screening. She agreed, but told (b)(6) that her shoes had to be removed. (b)(6) informed her of the inability to remove her shoes without assistance, and then offered medical documentation from the Social Security Administration. The TSO refused to read the paperwork, and told (b)(6) that the documentation would have to clearly state that she could not remove her shoes. Again, (b)(6) was asked to sit in a chair, and complete the screening. However, she asked the TSO if her son, who was standing near the checkpoint, could assist. The TSO refused, and said that she could remove her shoes, as she had to have put them on herself that morning. (b)(6) explained, again, that her son had been responsible for putting the shoes on her feet. Finally, they allowed her son to come back into the checkpoint, and assist her in removing her shoes. She feels that she was discriminated against, as the TSOs neither acknowledged her disability nor her request for assistance.

Please see attached -

As noted, I was on official business travel, in uniform, clearance for TSA precheck and am NOT appreciative of the unprofessional behavior exhibited by 2 male TSA screening agents at the Kona Airport on the afternoon of Friday, February 20, 2015.

Clearly these two male individuals on the TSA staff need some sensitivity training and as well as some direction regarding "crucial conversations" and better guidance in the execution of their professional duties.

I am requesting a written response to my notification - and note that the original form with attachment went to the Kona Airport address as specified - I am following up with a copy to your offices.

Caller is a current government employee who is also a disabled veteran with an artificial hip. She wants to know why they took out the AIT machine at RIC? She is a disabled veteran with a metal hip implant so each time she goes through the WTMD it sets it off and she has to have a full patdown. They also made remove her shoes which is very difficult for her. Caller was upset because she was separated from a government issued laptop for a short time during the process and it is not supposed to be out of her view. She said the regular screening line is too long and she does not want to have to go through it just so she can be screened via the AIT. The incidents occurred on 02 08 2015 and 02 22 2015

She requested the phone number for the CSM at RIC so she could personally ask her why the AIT was removed.

Caller is wanting to make a formal complaint about screening at BWI. Caller asked if it was illegal to take lunch meat on a plane. Caller stated that his bag went through the x-ray machine and alarmed as it normally does. Caller stated that he told the lady that it was lunch meat and she opened the bag to check it out and was using a wand device, but the wand device did not work. Caller stated that after it was cleared he was given all his items back such as belt, wallet, shoes, etc. Caller stated that then the agent came over to him after the screening was done and told him he had to get a full patdown. Caller stated that this has happened about 12 times and 11 times he did not get a patdown.

To whom it may concern:

Hello. I am writing to inform you of concerns over a recent security checkpoint experience at Denver International Airport (DIA). On February 13, 2015, at approximately 8:00 AM, my wife, our infant child, and I entered Security Checkpoint at Gate A for a flight scheduled to depart Denver at 8:34 AM. It was not very busy, and TSA had multiple security lines open. As we went through the line and placed our items on the belt to be run through the scanner, we declared that we had breast milk. A TSA employee gathered the milk, which was 3 bottles of approximately 2 ounces each in a small cooler, and took them over to the bottled liquids scanner screening system. We were instructed that one of us parents was to be present during the scan. Each bottle set off the scanner with a "red" indicator. We were instructed that the milk must be dumped or we would need to wait at least 15 to 20 minutes for a special inspector to come and further inspect the milk. Also as part of the scanner showing red, we were instructed that a pat-down of the traveler and screening of the remainder of the traveler's accessible property was going to be necessary. This came after a discussion among multiple TSA employees whom eventually received instructions from a manager what to do.

There are multiple issues here that need brought to your attention: One concern is general knowledge of TSA staff of breast milk inspection. Another is giving the travelers the option of choosing who to pat down. But the main concern of ours is that of a medically required liquid being dumped.

As soon as the red indicator was shown on the scanner, the employee scanning the milk inquired with another about what to do. After lengthy discussion among many employees it was determined that they would try another scanner. There should be standard protocol for what to do in this scenario. It was apparent that there was a deficiency in staff knowledge this day.

The second issue is something that just seemed awfully strange. When we were notified that we were to receive a pat-down and screening of our carry-on luggage, due to the scanner showing red, TSA let us choose which one of us was to receive this inspection. This seems like a poor process to allow us to choose. What if the other person would have been in possession of any security threats?

Lastly, it is absolutely unacceptable that we were told to wait for a special inspector and that it could take another 20 minutes, or else dump the milk. While we understand that we need to allow for plenty of time to get through security, much time had already passed getting a pat-down and baggage examined. We were cutting it close to missing our flight, and chose to dump the milk. It is understandable that for the safety for all passengers, TSA must perform strict measures to determine if there are security threats. Since breast milk is classified as a "Medically required liquid" we feel that any examination that needed to take place should have had the proper means to do so, in a timely matter, during appropriate business hours. There is no reason we should have been forced to wait for an extended period of time beyond a few minutes. Luckily, my wife was able to breast feed our infant on the plane, but if not, our child would have been left without food until many hours later. This is unsafe and cruel to a child. It is a concern of ours for other mothers who cannot so easily provide milk to their babies. The only other option for us would have been to miss our flight while waiting for the milk to be inspected. This could of course lead to many other unnecessary, avoidable problems. When following-back up on information provided on TSA's and DIA's websites for information regarding the security screening process and how long it could take, I found nothing on what happens if the red indicator is received. It would be helpful to know what further testing may need to take place, and how long we should expect to be delayed. If this information is available, I would appreciate you letting me know where I can find it. It was also disappointing to find that there was no designated breast feeding areas, considering DIA is an international airport and a major hub. It is recommended to use restrooms, which is disgusting.

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to share an experience I had with a TSA official recently.

A number of weeks ago, arrangements were made for my father who is 100 years old to fly to Portland, OR to visit family in that area. Because of his age, his driver's license had expired. I checked the TSA website to see what alternatives I had for identification for him. I also called TSA and spoke to a representative who told me that if he had his expired license in addition to another form of ID (social security card, for example), he would have no problem clearing security at the airport.

He departed Minneapolis on December 12 accompanied by my brother-in-law and had no issues whatsoever clearing security.

For his return from Portland February 9 (Delta Flight 2164), I accompanied him on his flight. When we arrived at the airport a wheelchair was waiting because of his age and inability to walk distances in the airport. He also travels with oxygen which he does not need continually but has in case he needs it. When we reached security, I gave the TSA officer his driver's license which of course she said was expired. I said I was aware of that and gave her his social security card as well. She said she would need to call someone else to clear him.

AM

The female TSA officer who came at that point looked at his ID and said, "This expired three years ago." I said I was aware of that and had contacted TSA about it and followed their instructions about alternative forms of ID. She said that I should have made sure his ID was updated and because of my oversight we would probably miss our plane and now he would have to remove shoes, jackets, and be patted down by a TSA officer. After repeatedly trying to humiliate me for what she assumed was my irresponsibility, she got him into a position to pat down and told him, "I'm sorry, sir, that I have to do this to you, but you should make sure your family keeps your driver's license current." My father was then wheeled to an area where his shoes were removed, he had to stand to get his jacket off, and then he was patted down by a male TSA officer while the female TSA officer emptied his bags and pockets of their entire contents.

Once the pat down was over, without a word she walked away and left the entire contents of his bag strewn over the table. My father has been incontinent for 25 years after prostate cancer surgery. He is self-conscious about this, but the contents of his bag (incontinency protection) were left to be seen by other personnel and anyone else walking by the security area adding to the humiliation of the ordeal.

I would appreciate an explanation as to why, when I called TSA, I was told what ID to bring even if his license was expired if that information was incorrect. I would also like an explanation as to why a TSA official would find it necessary to humiliate and confuse a 100-year old man.

I have always tried to be supportive of TSA because I know that with the heightened need for security, TSA officials have a difficult job to keep our air travel safe. As I watched the female TSA officer go through my father's personal belongings and watched a male TSA officer pat him down, I began to actually feel sorry for both of them. It is difficult to respect a TSA officer who would so humiliate a man who was obviously unable to be a threat to anyone.

I was so disappointed by the lack of professionalism I witnessed in this particular TSA official. I would expect more from someone charged with keeping our air travel safe. I only wish I had written down the name of the female TSA officer involved. If a similar instance happens, I will be better prepared to provide better documentation.

My daughter was traveling by herself on Sunday 2/22/2015 from Albany airport to Atlanta. She was dropped off at the Albany airport at about 4:50 pm. The flight left Albany at about 5:50 pm. She was treated disrespectfully by airport screeners and was subjected to an airport screener "putting a hand down inside her pants" for no apparent reason. This was not a basic pat down and was not like any routine security procedures that I have heard about before. I expect a full investigation into the TSA procedures at the Albany airport and would like to see the TSA employee disciplined. My daughter did not see a name badge on the TSA employee that was involved, and states that only one screening lane was open at that time of the day. The reason for this intrusive search was not explained or discussed. She was given no warning that a search of this type was to be conducted. She was not given an option to choose another method of screening. She is an excellent student, she cooperated fully with the screening staff, and has never been in any trouble with authorities.

I do not expect my daughter to be molested by airport TSA personnel. My daughter was quite upset, nearly in tears, and called me immediately afterwards to report the incident. She was afraid to complain to airport staff at the time due to the hostile demeanor of the airport security personnel.

I will encourage her to contact federal elected officials if anything like this happens again. She has never had such a disturbing experience with airport security on any of her (many) previous domestic or international trips. Please review all security cameras at Albany airport TSA screening lanes between 4:50 and 5:50 pm on Sunday 2/22/2015 in order to determine if any TSA employees violated existing screening policies, and if any policy changes are needed to protect the passengers from the feeling that they have been molested by corrupted, irresponsible or inadequately trained TSA screeners.

In no way does this address my original complaint of discrimination. Your response is also incorrect since families traveling with children never go through enhanced screen, and children and older adults leave their shoes on. Clearly you do not screen all equally.

But more specifically, it does not address how your algorithm for the millimeter detector was not trained on a sufficient number of body types leaving some of us more likely to be patted down than others. At this point (5+ years after it being introduced), this is unacceptable. If you have not plans to address it, those of us who are targeted for pat downs EVERY TIME we have to go through that scanner, which clearly fails to work properly, should be given another alternative. Therefore, please address my original complaint that your screening is discriminatory. Either we should be given the option of a metal detector OR we should be given the option of free TSA Pre-check (or whatever it is called), until you have addressed the problem.

Subject: In Response to your inquiry.

Thank you for your e-mail in which you inquire about the reasons for secondary screening.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all travelers who pass through our screening checkpoints. Every passenger and their property must be screened before entering the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on baggage, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the Walk-Through Metal Detector (WTMD) or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property could also be performed.

Caller was on Southwest flight 4817 on 2/18/15 at 1:30 pm from PHL and she had wheelchair assistance due to arthritis. Caller said that she is very use to the screening because she has artificial hips. She got out of her wheelchair and was x-rayed then she was told to sit back down while they examined her bags. Caller said that there was one black screener and one white one. While one was checking her luggage the other officer gave her pat down while she remained in the wheelchair.

2/23/2015 9:13:01 AM
Caller said the officer pulled her waist band out and felt around them. Caller said that she was embarrassed for her self and she thinks that she was harassed. Caller said she thinks that she was harassed because the officer felt her body. She stated that the officer was looking for something and must have thought she had a bomb in her bra. .

Caller said that she does not think she got despair treatment based on her medical condition. Her main complaint is the way the patdown was conducted and that the officers don't know how to spot out terrorist. Caller thinks that she was discriminated against. She does not know what basis she was discriminated on she is just upset about the patdown itself.

Caller said he flew from MSP to NY LaGuardia LA yesterday and was at the checkpoint at MSP around 11:40 AM to fly from Gate D on Delta Flight #2319.

He went through the AIT and it picked up something in his groin area and showed yellow and he was told he would have further screening.

He confirmed the TSO offered a private room and he refused it for the Patdown.

The TSO touched him in his groin area and he wants to know if the machine is torn up or if TSA hires perverted people who have a conspiracy to do Patdowns.

He felt the Patdown itself is inappropriate and that either the 2 million dollar machine is wrong or the TSO is a pervert.

He asked how soon someone will get back to him..

I have a question. Every time, and I do mean EVERY time, I go through my screening via the body scanner machines, it "lights" up BOTH of my thighs, hips, groin and buttocks. This is true for EVERY airport I go through regardless of the time of day or any other factor. After going through the scanner, before the image appears, I tell the screen EXACTLY what he/she will see. And I am right every single time. I get patted down and guess what they find..... ABSOLUTELY NOTHING. I doesn't matter what I am wearing (Jeans, shorts, dress pants). All I have on is underwear, paints, a belt and a shirt. My pockets are completely empty. And yes, I have tried taking my belt off - same exact result.

This has been going on for a while. So, what I would like to know is, why do your machines have a 100% false positive? And if you can have such a perfect false positive rate - how many false negatives are these machines letting through?? I understand the need for security, but quite frankly, I am getting tired of being groped. Yes, some of your screeners feel the need to actually press up against and rub my testicles as part of the screening procedure - and not always in a gentle fashion. Is there anything I or you can do to figure out why this happens to me and what possible steps can be taking to mitigate it in the future. I am flying a lot now and really don't want to feel like I am constantly being sexually molested by your agents (granted, some of them know exactly how to do the procedure without getting overly personal - others should have to buy me a drink).

REASON for the call:

Caller is disabled and has a pace maker. Caller states he has never had an issue with TSA until recently at the MCO airport on Wednesday. Caller advised them he had a pacemaker and went through the machine and cleared through and was brought into a room with another agent and was being patted down. Caller asked why he was being patted down and the TSO told him that the pace maker had nitro glycerin and that s why he was getting a pat down. Caller explained that it wasn t nitro glycern and even if there was a chance that the pace maker had nitro glycerin then he wouldn t have a way to remove it since it is implanted inside him. Caller felt humiliated stating that he is 60 years old and he felt like crying. Callers wife was also given grief for standing up to her husband. Caller states the door was left open so everyone could see what was going on. Caller states he doesn t mind being patted down and always thanks the TSO s for their service and is always nice but these TSO agents were really rude. Caller would like the manager to tell the TSO that there is no nitro glycerin in a pacemaker. Caller states he loves TSA and would like the CSM to know that.

Caller flies often and has a service dog. She got poor service at MKE last night. She went through the checkpoint there. As usual, her dog sat and stayed at her command, she then called the dog through. The agent told her that he would not pat down her dog because it was a pit bull, and he was afraid that it would bite him. He could have asked another screener to screen the dog rather than making that comment.

What time did it occur?

PM

Yesterday, at about 1800 hrs. Her flight number was Southwest Flight 458. There is only one checkpoint there. Another agent screened the dog. Caller advised that the agent who refused to screen the dog shouldn't be able to talk to her that way. She was traveling because she was supposed to give a talk on service dogs. At Love Field, the agents are extraordinarily professional.

Caller didn't get the agent's name, but he was younger, a white gentleman, maybe in his thirties. He should be visible on the video tape. He approached her. He said that her dog would bite him. He backed away. That should be apparent on the video.

She felt that he was discriminating against the dog. Caller wants the screener to receive additional training in how to better handle her dog.

Thank you for your scripted response to my e-mail below. I was hoping someone would have actually read my complaint and have enough courage to check into the incident. I would like you to understand this is exact reason I could not speak out at the time these made up rules & policy creation took place, as I would have not been allowed to proceed. The stunned look on my face alone, if you took the time to review the video would tell you something is vastly wrong. Your statements below are in direct conflict with my inquiry, yet I am to accept your answer and forget it ever happened? I do not accept your answer and have no doubt that the majority of tax paying US Citizens would agree with me. Your own statement taken from your reply "For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the walk-through metal detector or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property may also be performed." , are exactly why I questioned the behavior. I went through the AIT screening and was given the OK to proceed (there was no alarm), picked up my property and put it all back on or in my possession, my bag was pulled out for secondary screening (I fully understand why). I question how you improved the security of the passengers by checking my body as a result of my bag found to have 5 pounds of lunch meat. The same lunch meat I told the only screener who followed policy, that the meat was the item picked up during the initial screening. Then I was told to take my property back off and out of my pockets for additional screening. Additional screening methods performed on people who fail all other respectful means of screening, which I clearly did not. I have been pulled to the side for additional screening when something shows up on the AIT and I understand that completely, but that is not what happened here. I have also never been searched in such a manner when I have been sent to secondary screening. I am not asking you to validate that I am right, I know I am but what I am telling you is people who fly regularly as I do are going to have a problem at this airport & with these agents. We know we actually do have rights. At best there is a total lack of training or at worse a total disregard for your policies and procedures. I would sincerely appreciate someone checking into this matter in an actual investigative manner because this incident could have been avoided by your employees following your policies.

Thank you for contacting the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) Contact Center regarding the reasons

I just went through a pat down in the Columbia SC airport. I understand that the machine flagged to check between my thighs & my butt. My concern is that the agent didn't offer me a private screening until after she had checked between my thighs. By then it didn't seem to matter if she patted my butt down in front of people. I would like to see a more concerted effort to ensure that people are given that opportunity from the beginning of their screening. Thank you.

Comments: Your TSA procedures need to be improved for those individuals who are TSA pre-cleared, have a Global Entry card, yet have an artificial replacement. I understand I have to enter the machine but what happened after I exited the machine was unacceptable. The female agent demanded that she pat down my arms, backs and legs in front of long lines of people when I was wearing a form fitting tee shirt and jeans. There was zero reason for that procedure. Your process and procedures must be improved! Agents must be courteous.

The "random check" and pat down occurred today making this every single occasion I fly out from Austin, Tx. Please insure the machines are properly calibrated as the hand check picks up erroneously. I apply natural rose oil be Ren cosmetics which are labeled as 100% natural rose oil. This is frustrating as I am patted down every time I enter TSA precheck. Should I simply go to the regular security lines. I have omitted use of the rose oil on several occasions and still the hand sample alarms. Every piece of my purse, my backpack and jacket are sent back through the scanner and nothing shows up on the scanner. Please insure these machines are functioning properly.

To Whom It May Concern,

I am sending this email to follow-up on my experience through my Transportation Security Administration (TSA) experience at the security checkpoint.

My experience was not expedient nor customer-friendly.

Time: 2:00pm EST
Airport: Jackson, Mississippi
Airline: American Airline
Employee of concern: African American female last name (b)(6)

Background: I was traveling with my infant son and the employees through this terminal. I am a nursing mom with bottles. The employees went through my sons diaper bag and took out his jarred food and tested all jars; tested his teething cookie bars, and put my nursing milk, infant water, and juice through a machine to test it. I have traveled through 4 airports since he has been born - I have not had such an experience. There was an issue by TSA staff for me to see what was being done

2/25/2015 10:02:45 PM (b)(6) with my son's liquids. Furthermore to this experience, once I put my belongings on and packed my diaper bag back up after the staff took everything out my diaper bag - another TSA staff member who had spoke with TSA employee Last Name (b)(6) came to me and said they need to do me a random pat down on me. The TSA employee by the last name (b)(6) snickered and rolled her eyes at me. Through this experience I missed by flight. Jackson, MS American Airlines supervisor (b)(6) was apologetic to the experience. Jackson Airport Security was highly apologetic as well because they saw what had happened. Shortly after this experience, IRONICALLY, the local news came in and spoke with me because flights were continuously being canceled in this area. I did not share my substandard experience on the local media outlet. However, the TSA supervisor went to the American Airline supervisor (b)(6) (shortly after my media interview) to find out if she had heard what I shared with the media. The fact the male supervisor had to follow up to see what I said - speak volumes on the experience they know that I experience at the TSA Jackson, Mississippi terminal. It is important to note that NOT ONCE did I get loud, irate, or rude during this experience. The young lady was highly rude.

I spoke with the TSA male supervisor (older African American) to my a complaint but he appeared uncaring. In fact, at the very least, he did NOT apologize for the experience. I felt it was best not to leave the complaint card with him. I complained about the young lady who was rude to me the entire process and the only information he provided was the following about the TSA employee: LTSC (b)(6) I asked him for her badge number but stated he could not give that out. Due to the fact I was trying to make it to my flight, tend to my sick infant (who had/has a fever), and the TSA employee left: I could not capture her badge number.

I am rescheduled for a flight that leaves on Thursday 2/26/15. I really hope my experience will not be the same. In fact, I hope to hear from someone within your organization regarding this manner because my experience today was highly unacceptable..

Comments: Can you PLEASE tell all the agents NOT to put WEIGHT ON MY LAPTOP when carrying my multiple bins off the rollers for a pat down. Twice this has happened where I have been given a patdown. No problem! BUT, as part of the process my bins are carried by the agent over to the table. Fine. But the agents seem to think it is ok to put one bin full of my heavy stuff inside (overlapping) my other bin containing my laptop. I can see clearly that there is weight on my laptop on both occasions. When I asked the agent not to put the top bin on my laptop, both times I was told "it's fine" Well I can tell you with certainty it is NOT "fine" to put weight onto my laptop screen. I have no issue with most of the behavior of the agents in such an intense job. They just think they are mini gods and don't have to be respectful of my belongings when i request they not mishandle my laptop. Can you PLEASE talk to them all about that? I would very much appreciate it. Thanks.

REASON for the call: The caller and her daughter go to Grand Cayman with a stop in CLT to DTW every year in February. She had an NOI in her baggage and her hand cream was not placed back in her zip lock bag. She found the broken shells in the baggage, and the top was broken of her tanning cream that was $95.00. The cream is all in her baggage. She is not at all opposed to the security and she is grateful for everything, even patdown inspections. She was just concerned because it looks as if the top was sawed off the lotion, and her baggage was a mess. To whom it may concern:

I am writing to file a complaint against the TSA group at the Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport. I traveled through the Southwest Terminal C Security check point on 2/18 around 3:00pm. I believe the officer's name was (b)(6)

I sent my breast milk through the x-ray machine in its cooler bag. There was 1 ounce of breast milk divided in 2 containers (2 ounces total). The small cooler bag contained the standard blue freezer pack that is fully closed and contained.

2/26/2015 The TSA officer told me I would have to dispose of the freezer pack since it had partially melted during the day in Phoenix. I explained that it was breast milk and was medically necessary. He continued to persist that I had to throw the ice pack out and commented that I really didn't need the ice pack since there was so little material in the container. I told him to bring a supervisor over. The supervisor told him I could bring it through but he had to screen the ice pack further.

PM The original TSA officer then subjected me to a full and thorough pat down. Every single item in my bag (which had already gone through the x-ray machine) was removed and swabbed, not just the freezer pack and cooler bag with milk. The TSA policy clearly says that I am allowed to bring through 3 oz containers of breast milk with an ice pack. My rights were violated and this is not in accordance to your documented policy.

I travel twice a month to various airports on the west coast. This is the third child I have breastfed and carried breast milk for. I continue to be shocked at the lack of training of some of these officers. In Denver I had a TSA officer ask me why I am carrying milk with me when the baby is at home. The officer in Phoenix obviously had no training on this if he is going to ask me to dispose of a freezer pack that is required to keep the milk from spoiling. He seemed to have no idea what breast milk is or that it is allowed through the screening process at these levels.

Please provide a response to my complaint.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Description of Problem Inquiry

I have had bi-lateral knee replacement, and my husband had his hip replaced. When flying I carry a card from my doctor for my knee replacement, my husband also carries a card for his hip replacement. When we were in Ft. Lauderdale we had TSA Pre - the airport didn't have this available and we had to be in the regular line, which is a bother. I know that due to our replacements we always set off the alarms and get pulled to the side. This time that was no different but our treatment was and it was deplorable! My husband was pulled aside by a male agent who had him remove his shoes, swabbed his finger tips and he was done. Me on the other hand they pulled me to the side, gave me a full body pat down which I thought excessive but the worst part was they requested I lift my shirt so that they could make sure there was nothing around my waist. THIS WAS TOTALLY UNCALLED FOR AND EMBARRASSING AS THIS WAS IN FRONT OF ALL THE PEOPLE THERE. When I complained the agents comment you could have requested a private screening- no one told me that it would be this TOTALLY INVASIVE!! Why if I am travelling with my husband did his agent solely swab his fingers and the agent I dealt with examine every inch and I do mean every inch of my body? Breasts, groin, crotch all examined by the agent running her hands over my entire body! I felt like I was enduring a sexual assault!

Disability Description: Caller just got out of the hospital after having knee surgery and went straight to HNL for her flight to Maui on Feb 15th.

Incident Details: Caller is wanting to file a complaint about the way she was treated at the screening checkpoint at HNL on Feb 15th. She went through the screening checkpoint at 12:30 pm for a 2:00pm flight. The officers were trying to get her to go through the AIT screener but she was in a wheelchair and was not able to stand and walk due to just having knee surgery. The agents were very rude trying to get her to bend her knee but she was not able to. She was crying and trying to tell the agents that she was in pain and could not stand or walk due to just having knee surgery and they were telling her to shut up or they would get her out of the airport. She stated that the only screening that she went through was an ETD swabbing of her hands. she did not go through the screening technology or a patdown screening.

She stated that she feels discriminated against due to her condition and also feels that she received poor customer service.

2/27/2015 2:50:57 PM Callers fiancé flew from COS and while she was in the AIT machine it set off an alarm and she had to undergo a patdown. Caller is not upset over the patdown but he stated they told her it was because of the body lotion she was wearing and he stated that was a lie.

To whom it may concern,

Based on my recent travel experience I have decided to contact you. The behavior of the TSA agents has become quite unacceptable. There is a lot of eye rolling, lack of accommodation and inappropriate comments directed at travelers. I suspect that your agents have become quite complacent in their governmental jobs and believe themselves to be entitled to behavior otherwise unacceptable in any other profession.

To give you specific examples:

1. On 2/26, Seattle/Tacoma TSA significantly delayed my pregnant co-traveller after she requested a pat down instead of the X-ray. This was because their only female employee was operating another machine. At the same time, they sent a few other travelers through metal detector but did not offer this to her and denied it when she asked if she could go through this process instead as she realized that she was being delayed.
2. On 2/27, Boston Logan TSA employees at Air Canada gates B1-B3, who had no one else in the line were rolling their eyes and shaking their heads when I was about to enter the metal detector but went back to put my keys on the belt as the keys escaped my attention in the midst of placing a bunch of other items on the belt. Right after that, one of the agents could not keep himself from complaining about the fact that I forgot to dispose of a small bottle of water in my carry-on since "this has been the rule since 2006". With all due respect, people travel a lot and I've gone from Seattle through Boston within the last 12 hours and am continuing on to Europe. A small bottle of water simply occasionally gets missed despite the fact that this knowledge is widely available.

If your agents don't understand these simple things or cannot behave, please, retrain them or consider replacing them.

Regards,

(b)(6)

Caller said she did TSA precheck and that she is at the Long Beach Airport and she has boots on and when she went through the wtmnd it alarmed and she got the full patdown in front of everyone because she set the alarm off and she said she is frustrated. She asked why didn't she get the option of going through the ait machine instead of the patdown. She said she is still at the airport and that she is going to Phoenix and that she does not have the name of the TSA agent. She asked does she have to remove her shoes at the checkpoint. She said the Officer asked if she wanted a private screening and told her that she could have gone through the ait machine but she was already over there for the patdown. She said she is trying to understand the precheck process.

Comments:I was wearing jeans and a loose tunic-type shirt and was told by the female TSA agent that she would have to pat me down around the torso. She proceeded to round her hands touching the bottoms of my breasts. It made me flinch. I moved. I was uncomfortable because I did not know she would literally be touching my breasts.

To which she responded, "Don't move." Her tone was insensitive, rude, and unprofessional.

I said, "I'm sorry but I didn't know I was going to basically get felt up this morning."

She answered, "Well, you think I want to be doing this anyway?"

To which another TSA agent chimed in shaking her head, "Happens every day."

I stood there feeling absolutely violated. I did not get her name because she scared me. I felt intimidated by both employees.

She tested my hands and then told me to leave.

I then sat down on a bench in the security area and called the Louis Armstrong Airport emergency security to ask what to do as I felt I had no options, but was sexually violated.

I am seriously considering getting an attorney due to this experience. I can't stop crying. I was violated.

I request that the video of this interaction be pulled.

I was in the TSA security area between 6:45-6:58 approximately.

Hello,

This is the third time I have contacted TSA about screening at SMX. I have bilateral knee prostheses and travel several times per year between SMX and ORD. (Chicago O'Hare) SMX has no body scanner available (did previously but TSA personnel at SMX told me that TSA sent it to Fresno). You told me it is the airport's decision and the airport district told me it is TSA's decision. I feel it is discriminatory to not provide a body scanner for persons with joint replacements. Your sign at the entrance to security at SMX states that persons over 75 years of age do not have to remove shoes (I am 77) but when my knees set off the alarm on the magnetometer I am forced to remove my shoes which are then difficult to put on (my wife helps me at home) Then I get patted down which I feel is unfair, at ORD and other airports with body scanners. I am screened like everyone else, not subjected to pat down, etc merely because I have the disability of having knee prostheses. I am not sure that this isn't a violation of the ADA law which states that disabled persons cannot be discriminated against!

Would you PLEASE use your influence to get a body scanner for SMX. Thank you very much

TSA Employee: (If Known) : Refused to give name but it was like crystal ball something Comment : I had an unwarned, disrespectful and rude experience. I was getting a pat down from a female TSA agent. Prior to the pat down she asked me if I had and sensitive or painful areas. I informed her that I have a c-section scar that is painful to touch. She looked at me with disgust and replied with "why did you think I needed to know that"; I was taken aback and replied that I was answering the question she just asked me. She snapped at me that no I wasn't and she didn't want to know that. She continued to be aggressive and hostile in the way she spoke to me. During the pat down she did not avoid sweeping over the area I had just told her was painful. I asked her for her name and informed her that I would like to speak to a supervisor. She said she would not give me her name. After the pat down I did go speak to a supervisor but he seemed more annoyed that I was bothering him then taking down my complaint. I didn't see him type it or write it in any way. It was a mortifying and degrading experience.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Alaska Airlines Flight 225R, Mexico City to LAX, Gate 6, 3/1/2015 9-10am

Comments: I came from Mexico City and TSA thought I was a mule. I was put into a line after some guy asked me what I did for work, and then where I was born. I understand to say that I was pissed off is not a legitimate complaint. I let them know that it's ridiculous that my passport is basically littered with stamps and a UK visa; and never have I had to go through an additional screening before. I might have been put on a TSA watch list, but this was not all.

The guy basically usurped a power position and said "now I'm going to take up your time." He decidedly used my bad attitude to lecture me about not knowing me and ask me questions after questions. After looking through my dirty clothes, laptop, pockets and not finding anything in my bag, he then decided to do a thorough patdown in another room next to the bags. I have flown to over ten different countries and never had a patdown to the extent that I was taken to a private room, told to hold my arms far upward and out against a wall, told to spread my legs wide enough that they were at 45 degree angles and have the perimeter of my anal wall cuffed with gloved hands. I am unsure if instead of not finding drugs but retribution for a bad attitude means they have agency to poke anus in a prone position. But that search wasn't good enough; he then had me take off my shoes, he looked between the credit cards in my wallet, searched my jacket and came up with nothing. Nobody else but me had to be taken to the other room.

What a joke. My wife and I signed up for and went through the screening process for the TSA Pre Check. We both passed and paid our money. Recently we flew from Seattle to Las Vegas and back. We are both disabled and use wheelchairs. I have my own and my wife uses one pushed by an airport attendant. We went through the pre check line and I was given the cursory check that you would get with the pre check. My wife, however, was given the full pat down, made to remove her shoes and take her ipad out of the bag. All the things that the pre check is supposed to avoid. When the gentleman taking care of me finished, he tried to tell the lady working on my wife she didn't need to do all that but was told to butt out. That because she was in a wheelchair and didn't go through the detector it was necessary(I didn't go through it either). In Las Vegas for the return flight we weren't even allowed to use the pre check line. Yes, our boarding passes both had the pre check designation. Their reason was that we could use it but the airport employee pushing my wife couldn't because their employee badge scanner was at the other end of the security area. Since my wife couldn't push herself we had to use the regular line. Obviously a very poor set up. Again the gentleman taking care of me knew the rules and gave me the cursory check. Once again the female handling my wife didn't. She again got the full 9 yards, although this time the gentleman guard got to the female before she made my wife remove her shoes. But it seems to me some more training in handling ADA people is needed. When signing up and paying our money we were never told this did not apply to people with disabilities.

We have NEVER had a good experience at the Orlando airport We are at... the point that we really don't ever want to return. Listen up TSA officers, YOU are NOT the authority on whether or not an insulin pump can go through the body scanner. If the manufacturer of the medical device says no, then it's no. Just because it takes more time for you to do a pat down on someone doesn't give you the right to try and tell them it's ok to go through the machine. I am SO SICK of their ignorance!!!!!! Unless those lazy and ignorant officers plan to pay for a new insulin pump for my son if the scanner runs it and the company refuses to replace it because we were told for our son to NOT go through the scanner, but we had listened to the all knowing TSA officer, then those officers need to get it straight!!! I am beyond fed up with this particular airport and the issues we have every time flying there.

Thank you,

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc):Austin (Texas Airport) Pre Screen

Comments:I'm a retired Federal Agent, and currently an Investigator for the State of Texas. I also paid for a passed a criminal background check to be assigned my KTN. On 2/22/2015, I had gone through the Pre-Screening. I was not armed. I had two pieces of luggage with me. My briefcase and a computer bag that contained my laptop and portable printer. I have traveled multiple times prior and after and retiring as a Federal Agent with these items. I also carry my Federal Retired Credentials and State Investigator's Identification. I have never been detained and treated as I was on this day. The TSA employees were unprofessional and refused to examine my credentials or entertain what I had to say. My briefcase and I cleared the xray and metal detector. They retained my computer case. They opened my computer case and examined my printer. They alleged it tested for explosives. They opened it up and could see that it was not an explosive device. They then had me remove my shoes, and belt and patted me down and re-searched my carry ons. They could have at least listen to me, and examined my credentials versus taking them and setting them aside. I have never been treated so bad. I will be notifying my U.S. Representative and Homeland IG about this. My printer or any other carry on has never come into question.

To Whom It May concern:

My husband and I recently flew out of Sky Harbor, Phoenix airport and cannot understand why a busy airport such as this would not have more updated equipment such as body x-ray to easily identify someone who has knee replacements or other such conditions without making them feel so uncomfortable by being patted down. Our small airport in Dayton, Ohio allows passengers to swiftly walk through the x-ray and be on their way without the disturbing pat down.

We are grateful for security checks but there must be a more decent way to treat travelers.

We also had a note that our baggage was inspected. After unpacking I realized that a ceramic souvenir was broken into three pieces. I felt that I had packed it securely in between clothing to protect it from breakage. Is there any way to resolve this issue?

Thank you for your attention to this message.

REASON for the call:

The caller and her son, (b)(6), were flying from MCO on March 2, 2015, and the latter was chosen for additional screening. (b)(6) asked the female TSO why her son had been chosen, and the officer responded that her son had been chosen at random by the computer. The TSO was extremely rude throughout the entire process, and acted as if the callers son was transporting prohibited items. She asked him what was in the luggage, and was told that he had only packed clothing. She asked him if she could check the bag, and a male TSO indicated that they had to have a yes or no answer to the question. Her son gave his approval, and the female TSOs demeanor changed following the inspection when no prohibited items were found. A third male TSO conducted the patdown for (b)(6) but he was very kind and made an attempt to deescalate the situation. (b)(6) is a 6 foot tall African American male with dreadlocks, and his mother believes that his race was the reason for the incident. (b)(6) wanted to file a complaint due to the incident, and feels that her son was discriminated against. She also believes that the TSOs should have better explanations for the questions related to screening procedures. When asked why a passenger is receiving secondary screening, the answer should not be that a computer chose them.

Comments: My family flew back from Orlando to DFW on Saturday February 28th. We have 3 children one of whom is 10 years of age and in a wheelchair. While we were trying to get our one year old and three year old through the screening process our 10 year old was separated from us by a female TSA agent before we could even protest. I saw her legs and chair being wiped. I am not sure if she was patted down. The agent that took our daughter was very nice, but it was inappropriate to separate us. In addition, every other TSA agent we encountered in Orlando was either rude or even hostile. One male agent even threw the milk and juice for our 1 year old in the trash. Other agents were yelling at passengers about which line to be in and other trivial things. We have traveled several times through Orlando International Airport and we always have a bad experience with the TSA there. Something is systemically wrong with the TSA at that airport.

Caller said he went through the scanner and when he came out (b)(6) insulted him and ask him if he had anything in his back pocket and he told him no, again (b)(6) ask him if he had anything in his back pocket and he told him no again. (b)(6) then ask him to turn around and told him that he would have to do a patdown on him and do an explosive trace detection on his hands. Caller said that after that was completed (b)(6) looked at him and told him next time he could brush his teeth. Caller feels like (b)(6) is a mean person and feels like he could have been racially profiled. Caller is really upset about this experience, caller said that the Supervisor (b)(6) gave him (b)(6) name to file a complaint on him.

To Whom It May Concern,

I received a pat down from TSA agent (b)(6)

This is standard for me, as I fly 4-6 times a month, and always opt out.

I was concerned to see (b)(6) leave all my items on the belt. I had three trays, including a $1500 laptop computer, several other items that are expensive very important to me.

When I asked (b)(6) why she was not grabbing my trays to bring them to the screening area, she said because I was not cleared and I can not touch them. I explained to her every time I fly, the agent always brings my trays, and she brushed me off and said I could see them so it was fine.

This made me very un-easy, and I could not in fact see my items several times during the process when she was moving in front of me.

This is very frustrating and concerning when it comes to matters of security and customer service.

I urge you to address these issues with (b)(6)

Thank you.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Spokane International Airport TSA Gate C terminal

Comments: I was falsely accused of having explosives, and falsely accused of basically being a terrorist by Spokane TSA agents. Before going to my gate, I had to go through security. Well, the agent took my laptop and had it screened. The agent said it was laced with explosives. I was then taken aside and given a full body search where the elderly agent felt every part of my body including my "private" area. He then took off his latex gloves, and had that screened. With a yell, he then said my clothes and hands were laced with explosives. All my items were then confiscated, including my cellphone and crunched up receipts. All of it was examined. They took my carry-on suitcase and emptied the contents onto a table in front of everyone, including my underwear. They found that it was too laced with explosives, including my backpack. I declined the whole search in the beginning, but was then told that I would not be allowed to fly. Another agent excitedly came over and told them that "The room is ready". After the whole search, they took my to a secluded, private room, and crotch searched me three times. I had a total of 5 full body searches.

I was falsely accused, an innocent civilian. What you did was wrong, and unjust. I know for a fact that they do the same actions to women, and young children which I find unacceptable. You need to stop targeting innocent civilians, like myself. It took 30 minutes of my time, and was embarrassing. The actions they did on me would be considered illegal outside in public, and would have been sent to jail for inappropriate, pedophile actions. I was also informed that it is not my right to know why my body and items were traced with explosives. I was not allowed to know anything.

Hello,

I have some concerns about protocol at Flagstaff Pulliam Airport. First my mom told them she had a pacemaker and can't go through the X-ray machine. The TSA agent said she would get a pat down instead. When she approached the machine the lady told her to walk through. She was caught off guard and did walk through.

Next, when we boarded the plane I noticed she had her water bottle that she brought from home in her purse. This was all very disturbing. Please let me know what steps are taken to fix these problems.

When I was traveling from Detroit Metro airport leaving for Atlanta, GA. I was put through a very rigorous screening including the X-ray machine and an intense pat down including my breasts, crotch, buttocks including between my butt cheeks. I had to lift my sweater so she could feel underneath each breast and my armpits. She did this in front of everyone. Then she reached into my pants and felt all the way around the waistband of my underwear. I had already done the X-ray screening with my arms up. She continued feeling up and down both legs and arms.

I think this was overdoing it and was quite embarrassed and humiliated in front of other passengers.

To top it off, on the way back from ATL I accidentally took my checked luggage through TSA screening and they took my bag aside and said they had to look inside but would not tell me why. Before they cut off my lock I was allowed to use my key to unlock it. I was so frazzled I didn't think about the fact that this was not my carry on bag. She started tearing apart my bag and then told me it was because I had too many liquids. I then realized this was the piece of luggage I was supposed to drop at the spirit drop-bag for checked luggage. Before I had a chance to explain, they pulled out my ziplock with all my shampoos, lotions perfumes etc.. and had them strewn all over the place. I asked to see a Supervisor and so she got one and this woman was so mean to me. She said I had to throw out more than half of my toiletries. I asked if I could just repack the bag and go back out and she said no I had to do what she said! I tried again to explain my mistake but she wouldn't listen and said she would just take whatever she wanted and throw it out unless I made up my mind, she didn't have all day. I begged her to let me repack and go back out but she started yelling at me to do what I was told. I finally said no, I want her Supervisor, and then she said fine and threw my stuff at me and said repack it as fast as you can and get out of here she had more important things to do than to spend all day arguing with me. My stuff was leaking and falling all over the floor, my clothes were a mess.

AM

I couldn't get it repacked fast enough for her so she smashed my stuff and made me zip it up. I am handicapped and have an injury to my wrist where I cut it right through to the bone. My hand hurt so bad by this time.

I have mental illness, Manic depression, bi-polar disorder and anxiety. By the time she got through with me I was terrified and a complete basket case. I had to go back to the Spirit Airlines counter and repack my bags and check in my luggage with the "liquids" and repack my carry-on.

I burst into tears right there in front of everyone to see. My makeup was a mess and I had "raccoon eyes" from my mascara. I had to get on the flight looking like this. Then because she had such a mess of my carry-on, when I got on the plane it wouldn't fit in the overhead bin and I was forced once again to open my luggage and they gave me a garbage bag and told me to take some clothes out and put them in the bag until I could squish it down and fit it in the bin. I was at the end of my rope.

That TSA agent was a large black woman, I did not get her name but she is a Supervisor at ATL in charge of controlling how much liquids you are allowed to take onboard.

I wish I had gotten her name. She then started telling other passengers and co-workers about all the toiletries I had in my bag and was laughing at me for wanting to take home some of the complimentary hotel shampoos and lotions and how much perfume and skincare products I had in my bag and telling people very loudly about my personal items and necessities that I had in my bag! I was appalled and asked her "what the hell was wrong with her?" She then became irate with me and said "Did you just swear at me?" "Oh, no you didn't" and started threatening me. I was scared of her at this point and apologized profusely and begged her just to let me leave. She looked as though she might physically assault me.

She finally threw my luggage down on the ground and said "Fine, that your crap and get out of here, I am through with you!" "I have more important passengers I could be helping."

Comments: supervisor in back of her said .Is there anything wrong?" I said, "it's ok." I could picture myself being carted off to a room for complaining. I should not feel that way. The TSA agent's voice, facial expression, and body language appeared to me that she was having a terrible day or is an angry person.

I know because I taught learning disabled students for 31 years. I was a school counselor for six years.

Twice I was pulled to the side and checked with a wand and once with wand and pat down. The second time the agent found a button at the bottom of a pocket.

Both times the agents put a black powder substance on my finger tips.

I don't want to excuses on the part of TSA. One of my bags was searched and 3 of my hats stolen each given to me by my wife for special occasions. They cannot be replaced because they are no longer made. Why would an agent do that? I don't reasons or excuses. I hear that too much in America now, everywhere. Very few want to take responsibility for their actions. One of my church members has a PHD in Math statistics. He teaches at Oregon State University. As soon as he completes a project he involved in he is going to figure the odds of me being searched two times.

Good afternoon.

I want to lodge a complaint about how I am treated every time I go through security lines in the United States. I have a spinal cord injury that requires the use of a walker. Fortunately, I am ambulatory enough to be able to walk through the x-ray machines while my walker is inspected. For the last two years, every time I have flown in the U.S. I have been given the thorough inspection, including a pat down. I am not exaggerating when I state that this happens every single time I fly and nobody will give me a reasonable explanation as to why I am targeted like this. The last time, which was two weeks ago I was admittedly angry and I asked the agent why I had to go through this every time and he merely stated that it was "procedure". As I stated, I can walk through the x-ray machine, but that process, plus the extensive pat down is not only annoying, but it is painful. Standing without a cane or walker requires great effort on my part and after five minutes or so I am in enough pain that it impacts my flight experience.

I am a 57 year old executive who is almost always dressed in a suit. Why am I treated this way? Two weeks ago I flew to Mexico City and on the way back their security personnel were very kind and thoughtful and they made my security clearance experience short and with obvious empathy. I can understand the occasional full blown inspection, but not every time. Is this the actual required of a handicapped person? If it is, then you need to address this issue because I am being adversely selected based upon my handicap and it is not just embarrassing, but painful. I think I am going to have my wife start videoing these pat downs and if you don't want to fix it then I will address it publicly because I am not being treated fairly.

REFERENCE: SECURITY CHECKS AT ORLANDO AIRPORT

I wish to bring to your attention the way I was treated by your staff on my return through Orland Airport to Manchester recently. We were directed to a line that was using the X-Ray Body Scanner equipment. Because I use an Insulin Infusion Pump which should not go through an x-ray machine under any circumstances we contacted a Senior Security Officer attending the queue. She was not helpful and just stated that using the machine was not a problem. Further down the queue was another officer who we explained again the situation to. He directed us to the walk-through metal scanner. This officer in charge of this scanner indicated that I HAD TO USE THE X-RAY SCANNER. Unfortunately this caused me a very embarrassing scene with hundreds of other passengers watching what was happening. At this point a more mature lady officer approached me who said she would perform a 'pat down' and would I prefer that was done privately or in a close by area. As I had nothing to hide happily accepted the latter option. This officer was very thorough and did what was necessary during the search and was very professional and understanding. At the end of the pat-down I thanked her for her courtesy and professionalism and eventually was able to join my husband.

I do understand Homeland Security is extremely important in this day and age, as it is in the United Kingdom also. I feel there was a lack of understanding of staff to people with medical equipment which requires a different approach by Officers and also understanding of the sensitivity of the situation in which I was placed. I trust you will accept the criticism above and accept that I am not trying to short cut the security system. I hope that next time I travel to America things will have improved for people travelling with an Insulin Infusion Pump.

Caller and her sister flew back from RSW and were chosen for PreCheck. They did not have a PreCheck lane at the checkpoint because they said they were understaffed. They were asked to remove laptops and 3-1-1. The bins jammed up and her computer fell on the floor. Caller is very angry because TSA was understaffed and there were people standing around talking. Caller says her computer is fine. Caller was given a card, but no one gave their name and a manager did not come to help either and just said move it on. She ended up getting a patdown, but she feels that it was a diversion so that she wouldn't pay attention to them picking up the computer. Caller feels that the TSOs were blaming her for the bins jamming up and the TSO told her that the computer fell on her jacket. Caller says it clearly did not and everyone saw it. Caller says that it is peak season for snow birds in FL and feels that the screening at the checkpoint was handled very poorly. She says there are a lot of older people who go through screening there and the process should be handled better.

Caller just printed her boarding passes but they do not have PreCheck on their boarding passes. She and her husband got it the last time they flew and only he has it this time. Neither of them have applied for a KTN. Caller would like to know if she was not chosen because of her age or because she had an anomaly detected and got a patdown the last time she flew.

Caller stated she had an horrible experience at SFO. She told them she would like to opt out of the AIT. She stated they sat her on a chair that was on an incline and left her there for half an hour because they did not have a woman available for a patdown. She could not sit in the seat that they provided and she needed to get up so she told them she would be happy to go through the metal detector like the other people. She said they told her that once she opted for the patdown that she could not go through the metal detector. She is 75 years old.
It was the men that treated her badly. The men were very rude to her. There was a man that grabbed her arm and tried to drag her into the other room. she stated she felt like she was going to be disappeared. She wanted to know how she could prevent this in the future.

Comments: Traveling through winter area, I was wearing an undershirt and a vest. They called me for a pat down because I declined to take off my vest and be only in my undershirt. I waited 10 minutes for a female pat down, who then made me take off my vest in the midst of a public area for the pat down. Several other passengers went through with large, bulky sweaters in the span of time I was standing there. I felt very harassed and abused by the TSA agents at this airport.

I prefer to opt out of the TSA body scan when I fly but often I've noticed that the procedure in which it is done is flawed. When I tell a TSA agent I want to opt out, they ask me to step aside. The problem is that my luggage with many expensive items go through the rolling scanner and are sitting at the end of the roller waiting for me to pick them up. This is troubling because since I have to remove all valuables, they could easily be stolen while they are sitting there and I am waiting for my security pat down. This just happened today which is why I am contacting you now. Other times when I request that I not send my personal items through the rolling security scanner I have been told that I must put them through immediately. This is a big problem for me. The TSA needs to protect the personal items of air travelers. To do this the TSA needs to establish a procedure whereby they collect the personal items of someone that opts out immediately after they choose to opt out. I look forward to your response.

Thanks

Dear TSA, I just had my first pat down ever largely due to loose clothing which led to yellow squares appearing on the scanner.

All fine. However the pat down was done on areas other than those highlighted on the scanner.

The scanner revealed yellow squares below the breasts down to waist. The pat down extended above the breasts and to shoulders.

No one should touch my breasts unless I give them permission to do so. Had I known the pat down would go beyond the highlighted areas I would have requested a private room.

Is there a way TBA agents can advise people prior to the pat down if it's going to go beyond the specified area?

It left me feeling very uncomfortable

Thank you.

Today March 8, 2015 TSA Security did a full pat down (b)(6) while I had my 4 year old (b)(6) and 2 year old (b)(6)

During the full inspection they went through my Black luggage (Carryone), and my Silver Bag which had my wallet in the bag. The wallet is black leather with fabric. Designer name of the wallet is Coach.

During the inspection of my two bags, I wasn't able to see them go through it and put my items back. So that is why I didn't realize they forgot to put my wallet back into my silver carryon.

We were the last 3 individuals to board the Flight with US Airway Flight from Yuma to Phoenix. There was one man who they rushed to and gave him a bowl that had items in it. This man could possibly have My wallet if you don't have it. I am currently on Flight 604 and will land in Portland, OR at 4:49 pm to 4:51pm. The flight that I was on from YUMA to Phoenix. Flight number US 2772, and our ticket was stamped in Blue saying TSA NYL, they said we were randomly chosen. The Man was on the same flight as me heading to Phoenix, I am not sure where he was headed but he was the last person to board the plane before us and again we were the last people to board Flight US 2772.

I didn't realize my wallet was gone until we were at gate A19, heading onto our flight US 604.

The caller stated that there was a security issue at PDX and he wanted to make a suggestion. He was going through security with his wife and has TSA PreCheck. His wife underwent a patdown and they left her carry-on bag sitting on the conveyor belt. He stated that her bag was out of her site even when she was still 20-30 feet on the other side of the metal detector. He stated the bag was out of her site for several minutes. He walked up to the bag and picked it up while she was still undergoing screening and he could have been another passenger looking to steal the bag. It took a couple of minutes before security officers came up to him and asked if that was his wife's bag.

Date and time: 3-7 around 12:00 or 1:00 p.m.
Airport: PDX

Caller said she understands that TSA has challenges but she had a bad experience at Bradley with a TSA agent. She said that she always opts out of the machines and requests a patdown. She had to wait about 10 minutes for a female agent but said she was ok with that. She said after her patdown, a male agent walked by her and said out loudly and rudely. Did you get your s ? She said she did not get a name and did not want to pursue it but would like to voice her opinion about this. She did not want to give any information about herself other than she is a caller named Gail. She stated that she felt this was uncalled for. Another time when she flew from Bradley on Southwest, she had a TSA approved lock on it and TSA broke off her lock.

She asked if she every gets rude back to a TSO, can they prevent her from boarding. She does not want it to affect her PreCheck. She asked if the agents take your bags off the belt, do they keep a check on them.

REASON for the call: Caller would like to report a TSO stealing his iPad. Caller said he went to Midway airport and advised the officer he lost his drivers license. Caller said the officer asked him for 3 other forms of ID. Caller said he presented the 3 items the TSO requested. Caller said he was then told he would have to undergo a patdown. Caller said he had two carry-on bags. Caller said the iPad was in his business bag. Caller said he was then told to sit down after the patdown and not move. Caller said the officer held up his iPad and asked the caller if it was a iPad. Caller said the officer continued to look through his bags. Caller said then the TSO handed him his belongings back. Caller said when he got on the plane he noticed his iPad is missing. Caller said he was flying with Southwest. Caller said the TSO was a Hispanic male with dark hair. Caller said he had stocky build and probably 5ft. 7in. tall.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: You may wish to file a claim for missing and/or damaged items by completing a Standard Form 95 (claim form). A claim form will be sent to you within 24 hours of this response. Since the complaint concerns security screening at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy of this e-mail to the Customer Service Manager at that location. I also advised the caller to contact lost and found at 773-498-1308.

My last e-mail wasn't responded to by a real human - I received an auto response that was a generalized answer that didn't pertain to my question at all. Below is my question - could I please get a response from a human?

Disability Description: Callers mother has a pacemaker.

Incident Details: Callers mother (b)(6), flew today she went through the checkpoint, Terminal B at EWR around 10:10 pm on 3/09/2015. She was in a wheelchair provided by the airline, she has a pacemaker and had documentation showing that. She said that her mother can not stand for long periods of time and has difficulty walking, she informed the officer of this information and requested to be screened using a patdown. The TSO forced her to stand up and go through the AIT and she almost fell. After being screened by the AIT they did a full patdown as well. She said that she is concerned about her mothers health because the physicians informed her not to go through any type of xrays.

Comment : I felt that I was very disrespected by two TSA employees while checking in. I am pregnant and opted out of the wave scanner. I notified the first agent that I was pregnant and was opting out. The female agent then asked me to stand in several different places while waiting for another female to perform the pat down. This agent proceeded to get nasty with me each time I did not stand exactly where her finger was pointing. I felt very uncomfortable as I was being asked to stand what I felt was too close to the scanner. A male agent then chastised my decision letting me know that I should just go through the scanner as it is only "radio waves" and that my cell phone is probably harming my child more than the scanner would. Agents should not be giving incorrect medical information or unsolicited advice, especially when the safety of these machines has not been sufficiently studied.

Caller is currently at LAX. She keeps calling the number for their TSA department and is not getting an answer. She wants to talk to someone today before she leaves the airport. She is calling (b)(6). She says that she is flying via Southwest flight 4812 from LAX at 1:55 p.m. She says that she is currently at gate 7. The incident occurred between 1130 a.m. and 12 p.m. Caller is traveling in a group of 50 individuals. They have 43 students and 7 chaperons. Caller says they were traveling from IAH to LAX and back for a school trip. One of their students has turned 18, but has no driver's license or state ID. All she has is a student ID. They made it through security alright in IAH. However, in LAX the mail document checker said that she was 18, so she had to go to another line since she didn't have a state ID. She says that the officer just pointed in a general direction and didn't give any guidance as to where exactly she needed to go. The caller is not upset that she had to go through a different procedure based on her age. What she is upset about is that the officer was rude to the child and also the adults that tried to help her. The adults began asking him if someone could go with her because they were on a school trip and she had to keep a chaperon. He ignored them. Finally another officer came over and told them that someone could accompany her and showed them where to go. After this, they began splitting the line, sending some through PreCheck and some through normal screening. They sent a big group of the kids through one way and all of the chaperons were being sent another way. One of the chaperons followed the group of kids and an officer said, "What are you doing?" in what the caller describes as a rude tone. She says that the chaperon explained that this was a school trip and the kids had to have a chaperon. She says that at this point one officer looked at the caller and started saying to keep everything on that she was going through expedited screening, not to take anything off. The caller describes this officer as rude as well. She says that she went through the WTMD and it alarmed. She says that she told her that she had metal implants throughout her body. The officer ignored the comment and told her to take off her watch, bracelets, and engagement ring. The caller took all of this off except for her engagement ring. She was sent through a couple of other times. Another passenger told her that she still had her sunglasses on her head. She says that the officer didn't tell her to remove this, but tried to get her to take off her engagement ring. She says that she told her 5 or 6 times that even if she takes all of this stuff off, she will still have an alarm because she has implants in her back, collar bone, left leg, and a screw in her right knee. She was referred for a patdown. She tried to get them to let her use AIT instead and the request was denied. She says that the patdown was done and although she wasn't very satisfied with the fact of having it done, her main complaint was that the officer was once again rude. She says she wasn't rude until the end when she just said "Have a good day!" and walked off. She never apologized or anything. She says that all of that could have been avoided if she would have listened to her from the beginning, instead of sending her through and then take a few things off and then repeat. Also, she says that AIT would have helped avoid this as well. She says that she asked for a supervisor and the officer just pointed off in a general direction and said, "They are over there somewhere." She says that she finally found a supervisor, (b)(6) from terminal 1, who kept interpreting it that the caller was complaining about the rules. She says that the supervisor couldn't understand the concept that it was not because of the rules, but just because of the rudeness and ignoring the fact that she had told them she had the metal implants. She says that she wants to speak with the CSM before her flight departs: whether this be in person or via phone.

4:05:50
PM

On Sunday February 15, 2014 I was departing the Philadelphia International Airport (PHL) on US Airways flight 1826 heading to Phoenix Sky Harbor (PHX). I apparently had an issue with something I touched that made it mandatory for me to have a full body pat down and for the TSA officers to have to fully search my carry-on items. I understood the need for the process and complied with their request. In the process of going through my one carry on, one of the officers broke my handicapped hangtag from the State of New Jersey. While for someone else this might not be a big deal for me it was somewhat significant because I have a fused hip and it is at times difficult to walk long distances, and I was going to be in the Phoenix area for approximately 3 weeks making it more necessary than if it was a short time. While I do understand these things happen, what annoyed me the most was I was not told by the TSA officer who broke it. I know that it is possible that the officer did not even recognize that she did it, but I might have been able to temporarily fix it for the trip if I had been notified. To be honest this is a minor complaint as to the one I have from my return flight from PHX to PHL.

I was, again, flying US Airways (now American Airlines) flight 1803 from Phoenix to Philadelphia. As far as I knew I had packed everything appropriately for both my checked bag and my carry-on items. When I got home on Saturday night, I did not think to check my luggage as I did not need anything out of my checked bag. I honestly did not look into my checked bag until last night, Monday 9, 2015. When I looked closely at my luggage I noticed one of my locks had been broken and replaced by a zip strip. I understand that TSA has the right to look into the bags and break locks if they are not unlocking correctly, even though they were TSA compliant locks. As I could be annoyed at this I realize this can be part and parcel of flying. The only reason I am mentioning it is because I immediately knew TSA had searched my checked bag.

When I opened my bag the first thing I saw was that my medication bottles were touched and had been simply thrown back into my bag without placing them back into the clear zip lock bag they had been in. At this point I was flabbergasted. I checked those medications on my way back home because I had been told by a TSA officer that it was better to check medications that were non controlled substances because you took less of a chance of someone stealing them while you were in the airport. So, using the officer's advice, I checked all of my medications that were not controlled substances. As I previously stated, I placed the six medications in a clear zip lock bag so TSA could clearly see the labels and see the medications were prescribed to me. To find them out of the bag and just thrown into my suitcase made me furious. How am I to know at this point that nothing was taken out of the bottles or that something nefarious was added to the bottles? I do not have the money or ability to even get everything refilled to make sure it was fresh because my insurance will only allow them to be filled right before the refill date, and some of them are fairly expensive without insurance. To think that someone would be that

Checkpoint/Area of Airport : T50 - Terminal B TSA Employee: (If Known) : (b)(6) Comment : I am concerned about the screening process at MCO. At MSP and SFO (where I am more accustomed to flying), agents both change to new gloves and test the new gloves before conducting a patdown. This is an important safeguard to the passenger being searched, since without it we must assume that:

- a.) The gloves were freshly changed
- b.) The gloves are not contaminated simply by virtue of them being in an unattended box of gloves.

However, at MCO, agents do not test their gloves before conducting a patdown. My sister and I both received patdowns at MCO yesterday. Fortunately, mine went fine, but the agent who did my sister's patdown apparently did so with contaminated gloves, resulting in a false positive and an extremely intrusive, unnecessary search that of course yielded nothing. It also delayed us at least 30 minutes in getting to our gate.

The search was conducted by Office (b)(6) However, the lack of glove testing seems to be common practice at MCO, as the officer who did my patdown did not test his gloves prior to the search, either.

When the TSO named Spry did the patdown he was way too aggressive and should not have touched his genital area so much. He would have rather been given the option of a strip search instead of being groped in from of everyone. He felt awkward and very uncomfortable. He walked away and the more he thought about it the more upset he was an went to talk to a TSA Supervisor and found (b)(6) but was not given his last name. Dear Sirs:

I visited Punta Cana 3/6-3/11. On 3/11 @ 11:00 a.m., I returned to the Punta Cana Airport for a United Airlines flight to Chicago ((UA 1664). I went through the metal detector and was assaulted by a female security guard. She grabbed my breasts and my crotch without any warning whatsoever. I objected and advised that she should have warned me that she was going to touch me in that manner. She then selected me for "random screening" in retaliation for advising that her behavior was not ok. However, no one was able to explain that to me because they did not speak English. I requested that they get someone who spoke English so that I could understand what they were asking me to do. I was taken to a private room where I was forced to remove my dress. I was groped even more. Of course, no one spoke English. A supervisor came in the room and requested that I sign a paper which stated that I had been treated fairly and with dignity. I altered the document to state that I was not treated its dignity and that I was subjected to an unnecessary search in retaliation for rightfully complaining about being groped (in public) with no offer to be taken to a private room by their agents without warning. They also took down my checked bag number, so I am confident that they will do something to my checked bag.

3/11/2015 8:02:04 PM This behavior is outrageous and should not be tolerated. No American citizen should ever be treated in that manner. I respectfully request your assistance with this matter.

Thank you,

Caller's daughter has an ostomy. She is 17 years old. They patdown her ostomy and she always has issues when she is traveling by herself. She went through screening today about an hour ago, and one of the officers at the beginning told her to leave her ostomy supplies inside of her bag. When she got to the other side, the male officer chewed her out because she didn't have the items out of her bag. He wanted her to explain what every item was when she went through screening. It is intimidating for her and it's a high level of frustration.

Caller and her husband were flying out of Orlando International with their 9 year old daughter. The wife went through screening first then the daughter and then the father. The daughter had an aerosol can of sun screen which was thrown away. Then they all went through the AIT screening. Next thing the parents know is a TSO agent wanted to take the child to a private room for screening. The parents stated the daughter did not have any alarm in the AIT so why does she need to go to a private room for screening. The TSO did not explain any reason for the additional screening. The father would not let the TSO take the child out of their sight and the TSO did not offer for one of the parents to accompany her during the patdown in a private room. The parents are very uncomfortable about this. And would like an explanation of why the extra screening for a nine year old.

Comments: at approx. 6:05 March 12, 2015 my 14 year old nephew was screened after going through xray then was frisked. I protested that we had just went through xray, and that he was 14 without a parent present and he was rude creepy to the point I tried to take a picture of his badge and he turned and yelled at me (im 51 years old) I have his picture and kept my mouth shut at that point to not further anger him. (he frightened me) as we walked to the gate he surprised me, away from his station to tell me that the picture I took damaged his vision and impeded his job. (which I took as him threatening me if I complained)

REASON for the call: Caller's daughter (b)(6) flew from ORD to FLL and she had a cake with icing and she was patted down for it and the TSO refused to give her an option of a private screening. This happened at security point 7. The caller walked through the AIT and got her stuff and the a female TSO asked if the cake was hers and they pulled out the cake and got a test strip and put it in the machine. She came back and said she needed to test it again but another TSO told her she needed to pat her down because it tested positive for explosives. Is that a standard procedure have to do a patdown? The person doing the patdown was (b)(6) and the other one was (b)(6). Caller feels like she was treated like a criminal. She did not ask for a private screening because she didn't know but they should have given her that option.

Hello.

In the fall of 2014, my wife and I applied and received GOES status and TSA pre check. On our first trip to Miami and back we had no issues. We both received our pre checks.

However, on our recent trip to St. Marin, there were issues. Going to St. Martin, we had no problems. We both received our pre check. When checking in for our return, I received no pre check on either leg. I also received an extra security check.

The ticket agents at the airport in St. Martin said there was nothing they could do. Other agents tried to add in my 98..... number, and failed.

I know there is no pre check line at SXM, but I should have had pre check printed on my boarding passes.

I was told by the USAirways agent in SXM that I could show my GOES card at the check point in CLT, and I could go through the pre check line. But I wasn't allowed. I had to go through the regular lines with the body pat down as well.

The Global Entry in CLT worked. Grateful for that. Saved time. But not the pre check.

1:18:04
PM

My wife and I paid $100 each to avoid long security lines and pat downs. The ticket agents in SXM blamed USAirways. The telephone rep for USAirways blamed TSA. TSA blames USAirways.

Prior to leaving for SXM, I checked with USAirways to make certain my 98..... number was included on all my reservations. She said it was. It is in my USAirways profile.

I do not use a third party to book my flights. We do it ourselves on the airways website or by the airlines phone rep.

There was another couple on our flight who had the same issue. Extra security and no pre check.

Why did this happen? Will it happen again? Can we blame the agents in SXM? Who is to blame?

Thank you for investigating this issue. I can provide reservation and flight numbers if you require them.

Frustrated and upset.

Attached is a letter regarding the security check that I experienced on January 24, 2015 at the Minneapolis/St. Paul International Airport. (b)(6)

To Whom It May Concern,

My name is (b)(6). On January 24, 2015, I was flying out of the Minneapolis, Minnesota airport on flight number DL1559 en route to Honolulu, Hawaii (my first flying experience). I was a little worried about going through security because I wear bilateral AFO's (leg braces) and I can't take my shoes off because the braces are plastic on the bottom and I would slip and fall plus I need both my braces and my shoes in order to walk without the aid of a walker or personal assistance. Furthermore, I had a letter from my doctor stating that I could not take off my shoes.

When I got to security, the first thing I did was let one of the TSA officers know I had a doctor's letter and I was told I had to go through the body scanner (NO ONE looked at my doctor's letter). After I was scanned, my hands were wiped with some sort of strip. Shortly thereafter, I was pulled aside away from the person I was traveling with and was informed to take a seat. Outside of being directed to take a seat, no one told me what was going on.

The TSA officers then began going through my carry-on and personal item and my fanny-pack. Still I was not told a thing – I had no clue WHAT was going on. Finally, I asked one officer what this was all about and he briefly told me that two alarms went off on you so we have to search you and your belongings. I'm not sure how many officers searched through my personal belongings but I think it was close to four or five people. They literally dumped all my belongings on a counter, digging through them. They wiped all my electronics, then grabbed my bags and re-scanned them. At one point, all the officers were walking away to re-scan my luggage. However, I actually called one officer back because I saw they left one item in the gray bin and I informed him of the missed item. The officers then again wiped my hands, my shoes and my braces.

After all of this, which took approx 20 minutes, two new officers informed me that I was going to be taken to a private room where I was going to be searched once again. I was escorted to a private room and the two new officers who were women informed me they were going to pat me down. This pat down would include under my breasts, buttocks and groin. The entire search, from the time I was first pulled out of line to when I was privately searched, involved approximately 6-8 different people. All but one officer was either rude or very brisk towards me and I felt very violated going through this process. I also started to feel very anxious - worried that I would miss my plane even though I arrived at the airport earlier than what was recommended.

After the very invasive and humiliating search and after my carry-on, personal item, and fanny-pack was returned to me and after I was finally released by the TSA officers, I started to go through my bags to see if there was anything missing. I had $200 in cash in my personal item bag. Because of how my bags were just dumped out and pawed through, I was afraid the money would be gone. When I searched my personal item bag (where I had originally packed my money), the envelope holding my money was missing, so I looked in my fanny-pack and it was not in there either. I panicked – to be missing all my cash was very alarming to me! I didn't know what to do! Considering how my bags were just dumped out on a table, one REASON for the call; Callers husband flew by himself on March 14th from terminal 4. He realized that his wallet was missing when he boarded the flight. She said he has MSA and does not talk well and they could see this. He was pulled to the side for a patdown and made to place his wallet in a bin behind a bunch of other peoples bins. His personal property was in a separate bin and because he had forgot to take it out of his pocket it was placed in a separate bin. She wants to see film footage and will fly down if she has to. She has called the CSM and lost and found multiple times.

It is with deep regret that I feel I must contact you with regards to the customer service I was subjected to at both Washington Dulles Int airport and Las Vegas/McCarran airport. I am currently 15 weeks pregnant and at both airports I raised concerns with staff members about the use of the current x-ray body scanners and the potential and unknown health risk this could have on my unborn child. Both when travelling into America at Washington and out of America at Las Vegas/McCarran I asked active members of security staff to confirm if there was any potential health risk to the unborn child and whether there was a safe and secure alternative to progressing through the scanners as with normal air traffic passengers, in both instances I was not given an alternative by said members of staff and was simply told to proceed through the scanner with it being my choice to do so, however no alternative option was given to me, such as metal detector and pat down option that your website states.

On returning home I was distressed to find that there is an alternative option to the scanner and I am now deeply worried that although the chance may be slim there could be a resultant impact on the health of my unborn child and I will be visiting my

4:12:44 General Practitioner to assess as such. The key concern that I have is that other pregnant women will suffer the same treatment and at some point these scanners that as far as I am aware have not been medically proven to be safe for unborn babies,

Caller stated she would like to give a complaint concerning two TSA agents during a patdown. The TSA agents are Agent (b)(6) and Supervisor (b)(6). Caller is a flight attendant. She was recently visiting her brother who is terminally ill. She was dressed in plain clothes and she did not see the known crew member Jane available. She did not want to go through the AIT and opted for the pat down instead. She asked TSO (b)(6) if she would wear clean gloves. (b)(6) complained about having to do so and proclaimed. This is the third time today with attitude (b)(6) asked the caller if she would like a private screening. If caller had known how the patdown would go then she would have requested a private screening but she did not. When the patdown began (b)(6) raised her shirt up in the back. Caller stated she went down one of her legs and when she came back up she touched her vagina. (b)(6) came around the front of her shirt and caller felt her hand on her stomach around her navel. She made the comment aloud at the checkpoint that she felt she was being touched inappropriately and (b)(6) called the supervisor over. Supervisor (b)(6) came out and said. Ma'am, you are refusing a patdown. She said she felt intimidated by the TSO and Supervisor, so she called for a Denver police officer. Supervisor (b)(6) came back and took her ID.

When the police officer arrived, she asked the police officer how long it would take, and he said. A bit. Caller was embarrassed in front of all those people. Caller requested a screener other than (b)(6) to conduct her patdown but this request was denied by Supervisor (b)(6). According to the caller, the Supervisor forced her to go through a second patdown with (b)(6). She felt the TSOs were smirking, she felt as though she was held unlawfully, she felt like a common criminal. She said there were several members of management and no one spoke to her, she said they spoke at her.

Caller was given this number by the airport to file a complaint about the way she was treated at BUR TSA checkpoint. As she was going through security, she got to the agent that checks ID, and she only had a temporary ID card, and she was asked to go through additional screening. She went through AIT, and then she was told she was going to have a patdown. The TSA agent approached her and advised that she would be doing the patdown, and offered a private patdown. She accepted. When she went to the private screening, she felt like a criminal because she was being escorted, an agent in front of and behind her, and she wasn't even allowed to put her shoes back on. Once in the private room, the officer explained again the patdown procedures. Caller asked if there was any other way, because she didn't want the officers to touch her. The TSO went to get the Supervisor to see if there was anything else that could be done. The supervisor came, was kind, but there was no other way, because she did not have a valid government issued photo ID. Caller asked if she didn't get a patdown, if she is not going to be able to fly. This was her return flight. When flying through DEN, this was also all the documentation she had when coming through, and she did not get additional screening.

Caller has filed a complaint with the airline for personal injury that occurred at the TSA checkpoint. He stated that the officer's name was (b)(6). The incident occurred at LAX.

Reason for the Call: The caller had just gotten out of lung surgery and his husband was escorting him through the checkpoint. He was in a wheelchair and going through a private screening. He told the TSO that he was being rough with him and the TSO told him to shut up. He reached up to hand his luggage to his husband and the TSO slammed his hand down onto the wheelchair with enough force to cause bruising. He has photos of the bruising. He stated that he sent the photos previously in an email to TSA.

He stated that the patdown left bruises underneath the stitch wounds to the point that they were black and blue.

He stated the TSO made a very bigoted comment. He wanted to know who the gentleman was with the caller during the private screening. The caller informed him that he was his husband. The TSO said, "Oh, your husband," with emphasis on husband and he had an attitude. The caller said the TSO told his husband to just stand in the corner and be quiet. The caller said the other TSA employee that was present during the screening said, "Oh my God, I can't believe this is happening."

The caller felt that the TSO went out of his way to make him feel uncomfortable.

When he complained that the TSO was hurting him he was told to shut up.

He stated that when he boarded the plane, the airline attendant noticed that he was distraught and stated she understood that he had had an incident at the checkpoint. He showed her the bruising and she filed a complaint for him for personal injury.

Comment : When going through security, the Pre?™ line was closed. I went through the regular line, but they sent me down a shortened path. Once I got to the scanners, they were sending people who had a paper slips through the old metal detector. Everyone else went through the full body scanner. I told the agent that I was Pre?™, but they didn't care because I didn't have the slip of paper. I prefer not to go through the full body scanner, so I opted out. I spoke to the agent doing the pat down and he was very dismissive and rude. When I was done with the pat down, I showed him my boarding pass and asked if he would help other people who should be getting their Pre?™ pass, and he swatted my phone away, didn't even want to see what I was showing him.

I would like a consistent process that works. Barring that, a little professionalism would go a long way. I'm a million miler, Global Entry member and travel frequently. There's no reason that security can't include customer service.

When did this happen? 02/27/2014

Where did this happen? ILLINOIS - MDW - Chicago Midway

What happened?

As a pregnant passenger who has to travel up to 6 times a month, my doctor advised me to not go through the machine and receive manual checks. At Midway, the agent spoke very harsh to me telling me the machine would not harm my baby. I insisted on being pat down and I had to wait almost 17 minutes to be checked. Meanwhile, my luggage was completely out of my sight at the end of the security belt. I did not appreciate the lack of concern or being punished for requesting a pat down.

Thank you.

Who treated you unfairly? the agent

Security checkpoint to gates c TSA Employee: (If Known) : (b)(6) Comment : To begin, there was one attendant on one check through side, and 5 on the other. I was in the line with one attendant. It was very slow because the bags were not getting pushed through and the boxes were not getting collected on the outgoing side, creating a buildup. When I mentioned the discrepancy in numbers and bottleneck of luggage to an attendant, he directed me to his supervisor, (b)(6) It seemed (b)(6) was busy complicating the situation more, though. Let me explain. He was directing attendants to take their breaks or relieve other people. He was training an attendant on how to pat down a woman, which brings me to my third and final complaint. My friend, who is orthodox jewish and very modest was told she needed to be patted down. She was told by (b)(6) to stand in front of the X-ray machine and (b)(6) then instructed an attendant on how to pat her down, top to bottom, as he, and everyone who was in the screening area, were allowed to watch. She was not offered a private room and was disgusted that she has to go through this in front of the general public. It violated her religious beliefs. All of this and the entire security section seemed to be in complete chaos.

The caller had an experience at a checkpoint where he was pulled aside for extra screening. He took exception to the screening because he had to go through additional screening. The caller states that an incident report was filled out but no one has told him what happens to his information. The caller is concerned that this will affect his precheck status. The caller was randomly stopped and his hands were swabbed and his carry-on was also swabbed. They told him he would have to have a patdown and the patdown would have to be done in private with additional elements to a patdown. The caller was upset at the fact that they would not tell him what the elements were. The caller objected to the way the screening was handled and the fact that they would not tell him what the elements were. The caller states the only element was the fact that the officers were screening his groin area. The caller went through the patdown and asked for a supervisor and the officers took his personal information and refused to tell him what the incident report was for and where his information was filed. The only thing the officer would tell the caller that the report was for his protection and the callers protection. The caller wants to know what happens to his personal information. The caller wants to know if there is a protocol that TSA follows when they gather peoples personal information. The caller does not want to give any of his personal information until he finds out what happens to the information the officer gathered.

The callers parents are at Fort Lauderdale FL and states his 80 year old father named (b)(6) was in a wheelchair provided by JetBlue. He went through screening and an alarm was set off. He was told to stand and walk and take off his jacket. During this process the wallet went missing at the screening check point. The travelers son is upset that his father was not given a patdown instead of having to get out of the wheelchair. His father should have been allowed to be screened in the wheelchair.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): DL409, JFK terminal 4, TSA screening. .

Comments: After going through the xray, there were 4 TSA agents, two women and two men. One man told me to wait until the xray said I was cleared. Then, from behind one woman tapped the top of my head without asking my permission. When I ducked and turned toward her to find out what was going on, as it frightened me and freaked me out, the other woman patted my head as well. I told them to ask before touching me and the first woman apologized. They did thus as it turned out because I was wearing a clip in my hair. It is a common thing to be wearing and should not have provoked either woman to touch me without asking. Not only does this violate my civil rights, but it is extremely unhygienic as they have been using those same gloves to pat down innumerable other passengers and travel items. Also, as I had just passed through the xray with no issues, I fail to see the urgency with which these two women attacked me because that is what it felt like. They should have asked me to remove the clip on my own and I gladly would have done so. The TSA people claim all the power in these situations and it is not right. I am even uncomfortable submitting this complaint for fear of some type of backlash but I would like to know how you are going to handle this situation. It may seem minor to you, but in my view my rights and my person were violated and I am extremely uncomfortable with this situation.

Comments: It started when I went through body scanner at the JFK Terminal. I had no problem doing the body scan more than 5 times. I don't know the exact reason. One of the female agents said to the another male TSA agent that he must be patted down. The TSA agent said that he did not know how to do a patdown and he was not going to do it because he's not gay. "I don't get down with that shit" At that point Supervisor (b)(6) walked over and I told him that his TSA officers needed to get it together. My frustration became to accumulate for the lack of professionalism. If I was a malicious person flying he was not going to pat me down because he's not gay?

At that point I expressed to (b)(6) that I am late for a flight and I have no problem complying with TSA regulations. But your officer is not doing professional and disgusting comments he made was not appropriate. (b)(6) Took offense to what I said and decided to put me aside and do further screening because I expressed my concern. At that point he took all my belongings out searched it which I had no problem. He took out my passport and wrote down my information and said the next time I come through the terminal that he was going to give me a hard time. He also expressed to me if he was at his other job that I would not be standing. Then I asked to speak to his superior which witness the whole event. He flat out defended his TSA agents, their comments and actions. At that point I realized me speaking about how I was treated and the discriminatory language that was used was pointless. I am also afraid of supervisor (b)(6) because he took down my information in his note pad. I do not know what he is going to do with it because he stated that earlier he has another job that I would not be stand at that point. I was happy to travel and never had any negative experiences before until this experience has changed my mind.

Caller's wife (b)(6) has an ostomy and flew from Ft. Myers to Atlanta this morning. Caller is upset because the TSO's there had her raise her shirt in front of people embarrassing her in front of everyone. She went through AIT raised her arms and was given a patdown. Tested her hands then took her to a private screening where there was 4 security officers. Caller advised that she felt violated because of the patdown. The secondary screening nearly caused her to miss her flight. She has no problems at other airports only Ft. Myers.
Airport: Ft. Myers RSW
Airline: Delta
Flight number: Unknown
Date and time: 3-19-15@ approx. 7am.

I was involved in a nightmare day of flying home from Fort Lauderdale, to Kansas City, on February 26. Unfortunately, neither Southwest Airlines, nor the airport personnel explained to the crowds of people the reason for long, long lines, and missed flights, misplaced baggage, etc. The TSA personnel were no help either. This was my experience, having waited in line more than one hour to get to screening:

Waited for security, and then was held aside, waiting "female assist" while a female TSA person was checking others through. Woman behind me told above TSA person that I might not be feeling well (I was sweating profusely), but got no acknowledgement. After about 5 minutes the above TSA was "relieved" to become the female assist. Her "pat down" of me (80 years old, with silver hair) included flat of hand down the abdomen, across my pubis and through my legs.

I fly quite a bit, and usually to the coasts, including several times a year to LAX. The TSA people I have encountered at LAX are friendly, accommodating, and "a pleasure to be around." (even sing Christmas carols!)

Whether the Fort Lauderdale TSA people were paranoid because of the issues that morning I do NOT know. I have written both to SW and to the airport management to voice my displeasure at their lack of communication regarding the situation. Seems that you should also know that I (and maybe others?) was treated with utter disrespect by the TSA female. Never before have I been so roughly and invasively handled. Shame on the Fort Lauderdale TSA people for their lack of empathy and courtesy.

Disability Description: The caller has trouble walking and standing for periods of time due to severe arthritis and osteoporosis, her airline has issued her a wheelchair to use at the airport. She also has to bring liquid foods due to a GI disease.

Incident Details: The TSO at EWR told her that they did not participate in the PSS program.

Caller is 74 and in a wheelchair requested who requested a PSS for a flight to PHX flying out of EWR on 03 08 2015. She brought yogurt with her and other food items with her which needed to be kept cold.

She said that she has never received a PSS at EWR although she had requested one several times.

She weighs 80 pounds and 4 foot 11. She is on a total liquid diet.

Caller said she had to wait in line, in the sun for 30 minutes at EWR waiting for screening.

Caller also has a metal plate in her arm.

11:47:55
AM

They did not make her take her boots off at first.

Caller said the blue ice began to melt while she was waiting in line and the TSO screened it they told her that the blue ice tested positive for explosives.

They did a partial patdown in the beginning and after the blue ice tested positive for explosives they did a full patdown and made her take her shoes off.

She asked them to throw the blue ice away and let her on her plane but they would not do it and told her that she had to wait on the TSO supervisor.

She said they kept swabbing her and her items until the TSO supervisor came.

She has at this point been in line for screening for over 1 hour and a half.

She said a TSA agent walked up to her while she was waiting to get on her plane after she finally cleared screening and told her that she should have gotten to the airport on time.

It took her a total well over an hour for her to get to the plane once she entered screening and she nearly missed her plane.

She said no one was mean to her at the screening checkpoint.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (if applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Sarasota Bradenton Airport (SRQ); Jet Blue flight 164 departing at 11:32 AM from Sarasota to New York City (JFK); terminal B . .

Comments: I was travelling with my 3 month old infant and breast milk. I declined to send my breast milk through the x-ray machine, instead opting for the TSA agent to test the milk. A man, who seemed to be in charge (he has or had a dark goatee), had a side discussion with the TSA agent working the x-ray machine and I overheard him say something to the effect of "not letting people avoid x-raying" and roll his eyes. He then directed the woman testing the milk to give me an enhanced pat down. Having reviewed TSA guidelines, I asked him why I was getting a pat down when I let my milk be opened and tested. He cut me off and, annoyed, said that because I (in an accusing tone "YOU") chose not to x-ray the milk I had to submit to the pat down. As you know, the pat-down is only required if a person rejects x-raying AND opening the liquid containers. He was dismissive, brusque, and I submitted to the pat down because, frankly, I got the impression that a civil conversation would not be had. As I am guessing is standard for the "enhanced" pat down, the TSA Agent touched my breasts and labia. Because I let my milk be tested, the pat down was not warranted. The agents at the Sarasota airport need better training. I had no trouble on my flight out of LaGuardia to Tampa.

REASON for the call: Caller is calling to lodge a formal complaint against 2 TSA officers at IAH. Her daughter (b)(6) looked up the regulations and procedures about traveling with breast milk and she was traveling with her infant son. She declined having to put it through the x-ray and the TSA made her do it anyhow. One of the TSOs was short in stature, male, pure gray white hair in his 60s. There was another TSO, a woman with cropped hair in her early 50s with dirty blond hair. They were extremely rude to her and the male TSO rolled his eyes when her daughter said she would prefer a patdown instead of going through the x-ray with the child. The female TSO said she should not decline because it would take too long. Her daughter is 27 year old she had on a black t-shirt and jeans, dark hair pulled up carrying a stroller with her infant son with her.

Just went thru your checkpoint at Norfolk intl and was subject to a full pat down search because they could not read the expiration date on my nc drivers license. When the evening before the agent had no problem reading it and allowing me through. My flight last night was canceled so we had to return this morning to go through the process again at the same airport checkpoint and this is when I was fully searched because they could not read expiration date. The agents are equipped with a magnifying glass but it was not used. During last nights TSA check they alerted on my bag for two candles and pulled me aside tested them checked my bag and candles with a tool. This morning they did not even check my candles that were in the same bag. Where is your consistency?

AM

As a midwest natural born US citizen of 50 years and former military service member of 10 years I have never felt more violated in my life than this morning. I feel ashamed to say this is the competence level of a government agency that protects us and that a portion of my taxes goes to support.

Regards

TSA,

I am emailing about a less-than-satisfying experience my family had with TSA staff members at the Denver International Airport on Thursday, March 19, 2015.

My wife, our four young sons (ages 8, 6, 5, and 1), and I arrived at the TSA security checkpoint around 3 p.m. (mountain). My airline ticket had a TSA pre-check tag on it; my wife's ticket did not. The TSA official standing in front of the security area told us that I could take our four sons with me through TSA pre-check, but that my wife had to go through regular security. We followed those instructions.

PM

I went through the TSA pre-check without incident. I had a bottle of water for our 1-year-old in my carry-on bag. The TSA representative at pre-check asked me to remove the water bottle from my bag. TSA swabbed the outside of the bottle and performed a test. TSA returned the water bottle to me. My sons and I finished the screening. That was the good part.

My wife was not so lucky. She stayed in security for approximately 25 minutes. She emerged from security crying. She explained to me that TSA made her go through the security metal detector twice and then performed a full body pat down on her – and made her put her bag through the x-ray machine twice. A female TSA official then began using very stern, disrespectful, and condescending language with my wife about two small milk boxes and 2 small containers of baby food that she brought for our 1-year-old son. The female TSA official told my wife she would need to puncture the milk boxes and baby food to test them. My wife explained that if they opened these items, then they would be contaminated and we could not use them with the baby – the only way to open the milk boxes would be to puncture the sides (the boxes could not be closed after they were opened) and the same was true with the containers of baby food). The female TSA official continued to use a loud, intimidating voice that was wholly inappropriate under the circumstances. She turned to another another female TSA official and said, with a derogatory and tone: "I guess I need your help because she [my wife] wants a private screen." My wife responded that she didn't need to leave to be screened – she just wanted the security check to be over with. The rude female TSA official replied by barking to my wife: "You said you wanted a private screening." My wife responded that she didn't want a private screening means but she simply wanted to do whatever she has to do to leave security and rejoin her family – without contaminating our baby's milk or food. The other female TSA official then asked the rude female TSA official if she wanted her to take over. The rude female TSA official, again using an inappropriately loud and disrespectful tone, responded in a particularly dismissive way by saying "Yes, I think that's best. I AM DONE WITH HER," and then she stormed off. My wife started to cry, and this other female TSA official (the non rude one) tried to calm her down and finished the security process. None of the milk or baby food was tested.

When I saw my crying wife and she told me what happened, I walked with her and our sons to the TSA manager station. One man (who I presume to be the head manager) was wearing a blue TSA shirt and sitting atop a stand, and another man (I assume another TSA official) was wearing street clothes and standing beside him. My wife and I explained to them what happened. The man in the street clothes said that what happened to my wife should not have occurred. The man in the blue TSA Caller stated that there was 2 issues and she ran into with the TSO at the checkpoint. The caller stated that the TSO stated she was trying to pick pocket another passenger and was back talking him when she said she wasn't and the TSO stated he would make the caller miss there flight. The caller stated that he went through the WTMD and stated that there was a problem with her genital area on the scan. The caller stated she has to step aside for a pat down every time he flies and ask questions. The caller stated she wanted to know the policy for transsexual screening. The caller then stated that she was being discriminated against because she is a transgender.

REASON for the call:
3/21/2015 Date Time: 3.21.15 1:30pm
1:55:54 Gate Terminal: The caller C3
PM Airport: EWR
Airline: United
Flight #: UA1466

She said that all the TSA staff was professional except the one who said it looked like she was trying to pickpocket someone. Caller does not have issue with the way that she is generally treated, just the fact that she always has to go through additional screening and has to explain that she is transgender.

3/21/2015 Passenger flew out of John Wayne airport in Orange Co. They got to the checkpoint a little late because her husband had issues with parking the car. When she went through the terminal for security they tested her hands and it came back positive and
6:53:33 she had to get a patdown. When she got to her gate she had missed her flight and no additional flight leaving for Southwest. They waited for 4 hours on standby and then was told she would be better off buying a new ticket. She was told that since TSA
PM caused her to miss her flight that they would reimburse her for the funds it took to schedule another flight.

My date of travel was 3/18/15, I went through screening around 8:45pm, terminal 8 JFK, Flight Lan Ecuador #539

It started when I went through body scanner at the JFK Terminal. I had no problem doing the body scan more than 5 times. I don't know the exact reason. One of the female agents said to the another male TSA agent that he must be patted down (Mid 20 s to late 20 s black male with short hair). The male TSA agent said that he did not know how to do a patdown and he was not going to do it because he is not gay. He stated, I don't get down with that shit. At that point Supervisor (b)(6) (b)(6) walked over and I told him that his TSA officers needed to get it together. My frustration became to accumulate for the lack of professionalism that was displayed. If I was a malicious person flying he was not going to pat me down because he is not gay? How does my sexual orientation have anything with going through airport screening.

At that point I expressed to (b)(6) that I am late for a flight and I have no problem complying with TSA regulations. But your officer is not being professional and his disgusting comments he made was not appropriate. (b)(6) took offense to what I had to say and decided to put me aside and do further screening because I expressed my concern. He became boisterous and wanted to display his authority in front of his other officers. At that point he took all my belongings out searched it in which I had no problem. He took out my passport and wrote down my personal information and said the next time I come through the terminal that he was going to give me a hard time. I am fearful of (b)(6) or what he is capable of. He stated earlier that if he was at his other job, I would not be standing he has caused me mental anguish for the fear of physical and fear of traveling through JFK.

AM

Then I asked to speak to his superior which witness the whole event. The person I spoke to was a black male, wearing a black suit with a small pin on the collar, about late 30 s to 40 s year old with no identifiable name tag or badge visible. But did state he was (b)(6) supervisor. He flat out defended his TSA agents, their comments and actions. He blatantly disregarded my concerns that his officers made lewd comments about my sexual orientation and did want to pat me down because he is not gay or I don't get down with that shit. When I tried to explain this to the supervisor he stated, you're not listening to me so take your stuff and keep it moving. At that point I realized me speaking about how I was treated and the discriminatory comments that was said was pointless.

I believe that I was discriminated against because of my sexual orientation and put through further distress because of it. No one should have to go through what I went through at the airport.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

I went thru security on Saturday Mar. 21 at Newark Airport. I had a Jet Blue flight to West Palm Beach out of Terminal A. The agent I encountered did the patdown but as part of it he grabbed each of my legs and rested it on his knee to do the patdown. I have traveled many times and this is the first time I was subjected to this type of screening. I realize they must pat you down but the grabbing of the leg and holding it straight out seemed strange. Luckily I do not get spasms however because of disability my legs are not very limber and this certainly concerned me especially since the agent is not a physical therapist and could have done some damage to my leg.

I would like to know when this type of procedure was enacted. As I stated this was a first and I was not very comfortable with it. I also shy away from making a big deal because I don't want it to be viewed as aggressive behavior on my part. Your help with this is greatly appreciated.

Complaints: My Complaint is Not Listed Here

Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): American Airlines Flight 1 WAS 155.

Comments: I am a frequent traveler and was going through security. I am 7 1/2 months pregnant and was waiting patiently. The TSA agent at security was little people through the non x-ray machine, and I was in line to be one of those people. Others cut in the line, which the agent saw. And, then she would not let me through. She gave me the option of a "pat down" (her words) or the x-ray screening. She was incredibly rude when I said that I commented that I had been waiting and she let others cut the line in front of me. She essentially said that it wasn't her problem. I complained to the manager on duty and shared her name. I was shocked by the horrible treatment of a pregnant woman.

Comment : I am in the process of getting a New York state drivers license so I currently have a temporary one. I flew from laguardia to orlando on March 12th. I had a birth certificate, social security card, photo ID, and temporary drivers license. No problem at all thru security in laguardia. They checked my documents and cleared me. On my return flight out of daytona beach, a supervisor was called at the security checkpoint. She checked my documents and then called addtl person to handle my carry on and go thru it. She then proceeded to do a hand pat down that was extremely inappropriate! I do not understand this kind of screening when I have appropriate documents and did not have this issue on my outbound from laguardia?

REASON for the call: Caller stated that the screeners at the checkpoint were extremely rude and were idiots. He feels like they did not have any courtesy and they did not know any proper protocols about the screening procedures. After being treated extremely rudely at the checkpoint he found his checked bag in shambles everything thrown back in the bag and items that had been damaged. He is wanting to know what can be done about this. He was also upset because there was several agents texting at the checkpoint and not working and he took a picture to prove it.

He stated that he feels like he was discriminated against because of his race at the checkpoint. He said that he pulled out his ID showing he was a known crew member. He said that known crew members do not have to go through the AIT. The screener said well you are today in a very unprofessional manner. He refused to go through the AIT and had to have a patdown and they thoroughly checked his carry on as well. The TSO refused to let him go through the lane without the AIT because he was not in uniform. He said that they treated his wife poorly and there was another white guy behind him and they gave him a hard time as well. He said then two Puerto Rican ladies who had an unbelievably large amount of items were sent through the lane without the AIT and was not give any hassle in fact the TSO was joking and cutting up with them.

Caller is 100 percent disabled and has applied for Precheck. He had surgery and is in bandages. He had a patdown and now he is in pain. Charlotte was okay and in Jackson. He did not get Precheck at West Palm Beach and feels that this is why he had to go through this. It did not work and he is upset. He is at the airport now.

Disability Description: Passenger is a wounded warrior.

3/24/2015 12:31:48 PM Incident Details: Passenger is very upset because he called in last month to set up assistance for getting through screening at PBI and Jackson. He received a phone call from the CSM at Jackson confirming the information and letting him know they got the request and will provide assistance but did not get anything from PBI. He just went through screening there and did not get any assistance. He recently had a liver transplant and when doing the patdown the TSO were very rough and now he is hurting and bleeding. He is very upset that he was treated this way and wants to know what the purpose is for requesting assistance and not getting it. He let them TSA know he had done this when he got there and they told him they didn't have any information that he would be flying or any request for assistance and that he was lied to by whoever told him it was being sent.

He was at the airport during the call and put another gentlemen on the phone who claimed to be the manager, and the call was then disconnected.

3/24/2015 1:00:43 PM Caller: She traveled from Honolulu airport. She have to go through some extra screening because her artificial knee and dint like the way the TSO conducted a pat down. The officer conducting the pat down touched her improperly and wanted to place a complain.

Disability Description: Caller needs medications.

Incident Details: The caller travels quite a bit and has to take liquid medication that can't be open. She states she always gets a patdown at Oakland International and they always hand inspects all of her bags. At other airports they don't do this and she wanted to know why they do this at Oakland. She has read on the website that she may have to go through a patdown but it doesn't say must. She stated they always treat her disrespectfully because she takes medication and it makes her feel horrible. She also complained because she asked for someone to keep an eye out on her bags during her patdown and they were rude about it. She advised that she would file a complaint and TSO. (b)(7)(F) stated that it wouldn't matter that complaints go into a file and no one looks at them. She also spoke to a supervisor at the checkpoint.

There was no reason to make me take off my shoes socks and make me to role up my pants legs. 3/24/2015 2:50:37 PM Caller said he just called and was talking to an agent and got disconnected. He said he was at Hilo airport today and in a wheelchair and that he gets profiled and goes through the patdown. He said he is a large man and dark skinned and he said they patted him down hard. He said that they called a Police Officer over and he said he is concerned about the Police Officer and he put a woman on the phone and then the line went dead.

3/24/2015 4:30:44 PM On Mar 6, 15, I went through the TSA screening system at the ELP airport about 6:30 am. Now, I am very careful to keep up on the "TSA requirements", and I comply with all. My goal is the walk through your screening system without any problems etc. In spite of that, I keep getting pulled aside for one reason or another.? That morning my boarding pass was the TSA Pre-screened type, so I went through that special line. After I went through the "metal detector" I was told that I had to undergo a physical "pat down." And it was the most thorough pat down I've ever experienced. The TSA employee(male, white, tall & large) actually touched my genitals twice: once from the front and once from the back. He did other things too--i.e. checked my shoes for bomb residue or something.? Naturally, as many times before, he found nothing. Now let me tell you about myself: I am a slightly overweight white male 64 years old grey hair. I am now retired from the military(I served 33 years-that not a typo=33 years). Since I in no way fit the profile of a terrorist, I ask you why I am singled out so often? I believe I know the answer: I help out evening out your search statistics. If you only searched persons that fit the terrorist profile, you'd get accused of profiling, so you pick me knowing you would not find anything but I'm good for the statistics because I'm a white male. Question: Am I right???? Please reply.

Where did this happen? FLORIDA - SRQ - Sarasota-Bradenton

What happened?

The experience was very transphobic in nature. When I went through the system and they were about to pat me down they used she/her pronouns and I said that I was a guy. She looked at my chest and looked back up at my face. The agent then became confused and stumbled through asking me if I wanted a male tsa agent to pat me down. I said it was fine either way and she asked her supervisor what to do and he also was confused but had me go through the machine as male and it still was confusing for them and they called me it and were overall transphobic. I was then rushed through with a quick pat down by the female agent and sent on my way even though I could tell the agents were still very

Dear Sirs/Madame,

I recently traveled to Florida from Pennsylvania for a long weekend with family and friends. I was "randomly" selected for a hand swipe in Philadelphia. Ok, I get it. It was embarrassing to be pulled out of line, but...

On my way back, in Orlando, my husband and I were sent to a separate line of folks getting hand swipes, ok.. Then as I walked thru the security system, it beeped and I was told that I was "randomly" selected for a pat down. Really? I was not taken to a private area. Very embarrassing, mortified!

And in each instance, the TSA agents would not let me get my valuable belongings off the belt system/nor were they moved to a secure area. My purse, iPhone, etc, sat on the belt with other folks grabbing their things! In Orlando, my husband actually picked up my things and walked away-NO One questioned or stopped him.

Then at home I find a tag in my luggage, that it had been searched!

Why was I targeted? I want to know. I find it hard to believe that this was all "random".

Please ask your superiors to pass my experience along and improve/revise this process.

Thank you,

Hi - I just had a horrible experience with (b)(6) at security checkpoint. She is the rudest most offensive security person I have encountered. March 25 around 1:00 pm in Houston Hobby outside southwest terminals.

I work for DFPS and was with a child and they treated us like criminals.

We went through security and got our bags and left. They then hunted us down at our gate and demanded we come back to security. There were 3 of them and all so rude and would not explain why. They then said we had liquids. They would not respond when I told them I did not, but had an empty Nalgene. They were very accusatory and rude. We get there and they realized it was the kids bag that had spray in it and it mine. They still proceeded to do a full pat down and treated us like criminals. One of the ladies kept apologizing for (b)(6) rudeness and attitude. I have never had such a horrible and demoralizing experience. She also would not explain why she took our boarding passes and made a copy of my ID.

Disability Description: Passenger has Type-1 Diabetes and has recently had surgery

Incident Details: Caller is at ORD and they are flying back to Wisconsin. They had surgery two weeks ago and they are a type 1 diabetic. They had an issue yesterday with the agents at EAU and how they screened her insulin pump and herself.

Caller normally does a self patdown of the pump and they swab her hands with an ETD. When she went through EAU yesterday she submitted her pump and walked through the WTMD and no alarms were set off. When she got through the WTMD the screener told her that since she did not bring the pump with her through the WTMD she would require a full body pat down. The screener offered a private screening and the passenger chose the private screening. During the patdown, which the passenger stated was too invasive, the caller informed the screener that she had recently had surgery. The officer replied and said she would be gentle on the area and still touched the area. Afterwards the caller asked the screener why she wasn't informed that going through the WTMD without her pump would result in a patdown. The officer replied that she was correct and apologized for not doing so. Caller did not have the name of the screener.

PM

When the caller spoke with screeners at ORD they informed her that they didn't believe that she was screened appropriately. Caller wants to report this so it doesn't happen to others.

REASON for the call:

Caller and her mother went through the normal screening line, even though her mother had PreCheck. Caller's bag was sent for additional screening because it set off an alarm (though the caller feels the bag was not properly checked). Caller does not feel safe with TSA because she was treated as if she was 12, instead of 20. Caller set off the screening technology because she has a metal belly ring and because of her metal studs on her jeans. Caller tried to explain why the alarms had sounded, but the TSA agent told her she did not know what she was talking about. Caller's age was questioned again, and the caller was told she needed to stay by her mother. The caller's mother did not sound off an alarm, but was also told she needed to undergo a patdown as well. The caller was worried about a wand that had been bought at Disney. Caller was afraid it was going to break because other luggage was piled on the bag it was in. When the caller and her mother tried to fix the issue, they got yelled at and told they were not allowed to touch their belongings. Caller asked the TSO if they would fix it, and they did not. That is when a STSO stepped in. The TSO that had been screening the caller stated that the caller and her mother needed a patdown, but that she would not administer the procedure. That TSO was yanked off the line by the STSO. The TSO was saying that the caller was not complying. The TSO's name is (b)(6) and the STSO's name was (b)(6). The STSO had other TSOs give the patdowns.

He was told that he had to take off his shoes. He told the TSO that he has a mobility problem and that taking off his shoes is difficult. He was told he has to take them off anyway. He asked for his cane and his items back. He told them that he would go back to the first line and get a patdown. He had to ask the agent for his cane 4 times before he got it back. He went back to the PreCheck line carrying all of his stuff. The same agent that sent him to the second line told him that he can go through the scanner with his shoes on. The TSO went back to the scanner with him and talked to the two agents at the scanner. He said that the first TSO was really nice. The two agents at the scanner that were not nice. They finally let him go through the scanner and then they swabbed his hands and shoes. When he went to get his belonging someone else had their items in with his. They did not take any of his stuff, however, he was disturbed that their items were in with his. He said that one of the agents took his laptop out of his bag. He got his belongings and asked to speak with a supervisor. The supervisor was apologetic. He told him that they do not have all of the training they need. The second agent who had told him to remove his shoes followed him when he went to speak with the supervisor. She told the supervisor that all he told her was that he did not want to remove his shoes. He does not recall the names of the agents he is making a complaint against. He stated that he was really angry and shaking. He thought that

REASON for the call:

Caller says that she wants to register a complaint.

On March 15th in Sky Harbor, she flew as a crewmember. She was redirected as a random search.

She was carrying breast milk and asked for it to be hand checked.

The agent came over, frustrated, insisting she put it through x ray.

She says this is the first time any officer has been difficult about this. Her name was TSO (b)(6), Badge (b)(6)

She put the milk into a dirty Tupperware bin, upset about this. The officer at the checkpoint even had her remove a vest and go through a patdown. She had to remove a jacket in the past, but never a vest.

She went through a metal detector, and the officer began to pat her down. She was very aggressive, rude, and she was putting a lot of pressure on her. She was told to pull her shirt up.

She says her hands went far up her skirt.

She felt the knuckle of her finger go in between her genitals.

She requested a different screener and a supervisor. The supervisor was very nice, he pulled the tape, looks at all angles of the footage. She says it was a violation of privacy.

The next agent was not rude, and courteous about the process. She complimented the supervisor and next agent who performed a patdown.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue:

Special Notes: The name of the agent giving her a difficult time was TSO (b)(6) Badge (b)(6)

Caller flew from LAS via Alaska Airlines on March 23rd with two jars of peanut butter in her carry on. She says that she has taken peanut butter through LAS on many occasions. She says that yesterday she and her partner were returning from SEA. She says that her partner is in a wheelchair and he stood and walked through screening. He also underwent ETD. Her issue is with her screening. She says that her bag had to be searched and she was told that the peanut butter was not allowed. She admits her partner became argumentative with the female agent. He kept telling her to enjoy eating that at home later. A supervisor was called over, but she just came over and then left. She says that then she had to get a patdown and she complained that she had to lift her shirt up above her bra. She says it exposed her entire midsection in front of everyone. She says that this was done in retaliation to her partner's comments. After the pat-down the officer began searching her purse. She says that she kept putting the valuable items towards the back to where the caller couldn't see them and was putting the lower value items to the front closest to the caller. She says that the officer kept turning the bag during the inspection, but never removed all of the items out of the bottom of the bag. She says that the officer ripped open her envelope that was already partially opened. She did not do this outside the bag where the caller could see, but done it with her hands down in the bag. Then she took the phones off to be tested. She says that she asked her to give her the envelope and she did. The caller counted her money on the plane and is missing $200. She has been trying to call a manager at 206-214-(b)(6). She asked me what the CSM's name was.

3/26/2015 7:43:43 PM The caller's family does not desire to use the AIT and prefers to have a patdown or to go through the WTMD. She has experienced some resistance from TSOs in the past concerning her family's request for patdowns, and there arose a situation in which a TSO caused an ruckus over her 3-1-1 bags that were in compliance. She is anxious about flying again and wanted assurance that the previous experiences should not have happened, and that the future experiences should be better. She asked about special screening procedures for passengers 75 years or older, and for children 12 years or younger.

To whom it may concern,

My name is (b)(6) and I would like to discuss an incident that I encountered during my last airport experience. Every person I have spoken to informs me that the pat-down was necessary because explosive material was detected. However, no alarms went off and I never got a clear confirmation from any agent that my item was positive for explosive material. Therefore, it is not clear whether or not explosive material was detected. I find it unsettling that my situation, as well as what the TSA agents involved did as standard protocol, was found justified. I have concerns about my situation and the TSA agents at O'Hare International Airport. I still fail to understand why a pat-down was needed when there was no confirmation on explosive material being detected on my bag of food, and I was cleared by the other TSA agents when I went through the X-ray machine.

I called the contact center once before, but I would like to take the time to explain my situation once again, this time in writing, since things can get lost in translation when said over the phone. I was traveling with my husband and a friend, leaving Chicago at O'Hare International Airport, arriving to Miami. We went through Security Point 7 for Gate 11A for American Airlines flight #1687, which was scheduled to depart at 4:50 PM Central time. We were going through the security check around 4:00 PM Central time. The following is the sequence of events:

- 3/27/2015 8:28:17 AM
1. I put my stuff down on conveyor belt of X-ray machine. My belongings included the following: a coat, scarf, sweater, pair of boots, purse, carry-on suitcase, and a bag of food. Inside the bag of food were two packages of popcorn, and a cake roll
 2. Next, I proceeded to go to the imaging technology x-ray machine
 3. I did not set off any alarms, and was cleared by the TSA agents to continue on.
 4. I waited by the x-ray machine to get my belongings.
 5. I started to pick up stuff until TSA Agent (b)(6) approached me and asked me if the bag of food belonged to me, a bag of food that was handled by everyone in my travel party, but I went ahead and told the agent that the bag of food belonged to me. At this point, no alarms had gone off.
 6. (b)(6) starts to inspect bag, with no explanation as to why and what she was looking for.
 7. She inspects the two popcorn bags, then takes out cake.
 8. As she was looking at it, TSA Agent (b)(6) comes over and assists (b)(6) with cake.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening
Flight Info (if applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc):
Comments: I am writing from Denver International Airport following a pat down from a TSA agent approximately 30 minutes ago that can only be described as sexual assault. The agent put his hands on the inside of my underwear, patted me down on the buttocks multiple times with the front side of his hands, as well as other sensitive parts of my body. I am so angry and upset that I can hardly speak. I expect that you will treat this with the seriousness it deserves and respond to my complaint immediately.

Caller is retired military and has medical disabilities. Every time she screened she goes through the AIT and has to have a patdown. This is very embarrassing. She feels she is being singled out.
- 3/27/2015 4:43:53 PM
Caller applied for the TSA precheck 2 and a half weeks ago and the UES is telling her it is with the TSA and it might take another 6-8 weeks because they had trouble taking her fingerprints. Is there any way she can get this expedited? She has metal, screws and plates in her body. The last time she flew she was wearing a leg brace and she had to remove it and she got a full body patdown after she went through the AIT and her bag went through twice. She wants to avoid having to get patdowns. She used to have a card from her doctor. Would that help? Charlotte Douglas has full body scanners in some areas and others have the older technology. Is there any advantage to going through one or the other?

What happened?

Yesterday at approximately 1505 (3:05pm) to 1600 (4:00pm) at TSA Checkpoint area TB-CHK-C-2 at Laguardia Airport prior to boarding my UA689 flight to Chicago O Hare, I was innapropriately touched on my vaginal lips by TSO (b)(6) arrived to the airport with yoga pants and top on, which had no underwire or pockets, or metal or bells or any other material that would be a source of security concern. Despite me lifting up my dress and Caller said she was at Orlando airport today and she and her husband both had precheck on their boarding passes, She said at Concourse A and ECP there is no sign that Orlando has a precheck line and she said the male agent just gave hand signals to them. She said the female TSA Officer, (b)(6) was rude to her 74 year old husband and she said they were just following what the male Officer had instructed. She said they were not put in the precheck line and the female Officer told her to go to the precheck line. She said they had to take their jackets and shoes off and her husband had a patdown. She said she went to the female Supervisor with the last name of (b)(6) and she told her to call us and she said the Supervisor was very nice. She said the first Officer should have directed them better to the precheck line or we should have a PreCheck sign up.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue:I advised her that I will refer this to the CSM at the airport

Hello,

Yesterday I flew out of ITO. I am pregnant and asked not to go through the ATl. Instead of allowing me to go through the metal detector, which I was told was only for pre-check passengers, I was made to wait for several minutes and then had a pat down. While I understand that the pat down is one of the screening methods, I do not understand why it would be used in place of a metal detector that is already functioning but not in high demand. ITO is not a busy airport and it is not clear to me why TSA would choose to take a female from her post for a pat down instead of allowing me to simply walk through the metal detector. The pat down, and where it was located, made me feel like a criminal. I don't think it's a very kind way to treat pregnant women and would like to suggest that you reconsider your pat down policy in places where there are working metal detectors. Not only would it save TSA time, but it would also make pregnant women feel less ashamed about their condition.

To Whom This Concerns:

3/28/2015 5:07:44 PM I have a Global Entry Pass; consequently, I have TSA pre-check on every airline ticket. Wouldn't go without it, because of the TSA agent abuses in the non-pre-check queue. I have an artificial right hip: titanium implant. When the pre-check queue TSA agents ask about that, I am directed to the body-scanner, which upon my exiting the confinement, sets off the alarm. I am consequently patted down at unusual places on my body having nothing whatever to do with my hip implant (the most popular being left shoulder and chest - but, this last time (a few days ago) was patted down upon my left buttock). I find it curious, annoying and harassing that [Global Entry Pass] + [TSA agent knowledge of my R hip arthroplasty] = patdown! What's the point of my having passed the GOES background check if I receive the same treatment as though I didn't have the Pass? If you don't intend to honor my probity/integrity, then why issue the Pass and/or enquire about implants? Something's wrong with the agents you hire . . . they gleefully abuse their discretion. I would that TSA funding had not been recently renewed; did fine without it for 63 yrs. (pre-2011/DHS), don't need it now! /creveling/

When did this happen? 03/25/2015

Where did this happen? FLORIDA - MCO - Orlando International

What happened? I went through security around 3pm. I was with my partner who is in a wheelchair. When we got to the front of the cue, I was trying to get someones attention to let them know I

Thank you for your prompt response - which wonderfully skirted my question without answering it.

You responded in pertinent part: " TSA recognizes that certain travelers with disabilities or medical conditions may have difficulty standing or walking and that certain medical conditions may cause individuals to alarm when screened using a walk-through metal detector. If this occurs, TSA Pre?® individuals may be permitted to undergo alternate screening procedures such as Advance Imaging Technology (AIT) screening, explosives trace detection (ETD) swabbing, or a patdown screening." . . .

3/29/2015 9:27:42 AM Lovely bit of bureaucratic caviling to my enquiry, "What's the point of GOES background check (I have a Global Entry Pass) and telling the TSA agent that I have an implant if not to ease my passage through airport security?" Please respond directly to that question; succinctly, "What's the point of GOES . . . check . . . and telling agent that I have an implant . . . ? If you're going to ignore the meaning of the GOES Pass AND ignore my information re implants, why do you even have a separate queue for the Pass AND why do you enquire concerning bodily implants? When you know what sets off the alarm by a Trusted Traveler . . . patting him down rather reduces the federal background check to the absurd, wouldn't you say? TSA is clearly abusive of its authority. /creveling/

Caller has been flying with assistance and TSA has been good to her in the past. She says that her last flight and she spoke with Josh. She says she is calling as a follow up to the last call. She said that when she got into her safe her jewelry had been searched and she did find her piece of jewelry that she was missing. She flew yesterday She called TSA in San Diego and she left a message saying that she called and left a message She got a patdown even though she did not trigger an alarm and she wants to know why. She had no pockets and was not wearing anything heavy.

3/29/2015 12:40:12 PM She is in a wheelchair. She says she walked through the WTMD. She says that TSA did not put things back in her bag the way that they were after they searched her bag. They were inspecting 8 cans of Prune juice and they swabbed them. She says that they took apart he Medical machine and inspected it. She says that they cut the labels and she is missing a receipt for medical expenses. It is in a sealed white envelope with her name in black marker on it. She also said they did not look at her medical items and they only looked at her prune juice. She appreciates TSA and will be flying again with Delta to CO springs to see her grand children. She then said she was flying form Philadelphia to DEN She has several forms of medications. She talked a lot about her accident that happened 7 years ago and the surgeon who reconstructed her face.

Dear Sir:

On March 17, 2015, my husband and I landed in MIA around 5 AM EDT on AA #900 after an overnight flight from Buenos Aires, Argentina. We proceeded through Immigration and then collected our luggage for Customs, which we cleared without any problem. As soon as we went to retrieve our bags, we were forced to leave Security even though we were only going to recheck the bags for other flights to ORD and STL. Since we are both pre-screened, we proceeded to TSA-PRE. I was able to go right through without a hitch. My husband, however, who has two artificial knees, was not allowed to use the full body scanner because it was not working at that time. He set off the alarm on the usual scanner and was told to step aside for a pat down.

At that point, he waited and waited for someone to come over to do their job. When someone finally showed up ten or fifteen minutes later, my husband was getting slightly exasperated. He then had to take off his belt and shoes, which he did, although he did toss the belt on the floor. The next thing I knew the man's TSA supervisor was over hollering in my husband's face that he had a real attitude and that he might not be able to fly that day. If anyone had an attitude it was the TSA supervisor and not my husband, but the pat down proceeded and my husband was cleared to go. As a further annoyance, while my husband was waiting for the pat down, someone opened the full body scanner for use so others were able to go through it without waiting.

PM

Here are my questions to you. What good does having TSA-PRE do when my husband has to go through the same routine as before? Why was he not allowed to go through the full body scanner once it was opened for use? Why must an international traveler go through security a second time in this country? Before we left Buenos Aires, our checked bags were x-rayed, our carry-on bags hand checked, we were photographed and our right thumb print taken. It would seem that would be sufficient.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

TSA Employee: (If Known) (b)(6) Comment : On the date mentioned above I was going through the screening when I opted out of the machine. (b)(6) took my bins and put my clothes (hat, shoes, hoodie, etc) bin on top of my computers I told him that to make sure there was no weight on my equipment. He looked displeased with my comment. He then took me to the area for screening and decided to slowly go over with long pauses the common statement made by TSA agents before the pat down occurs. I told him I knew it and recited it from memory this upset him and he continued to recite it. Everything seemed to be going fine until the part where the TSA person is supposed to take both hands and go up the leg to the groin area till they meet resistance (b)(6) did not do that he moved his hands up until he got to my groin area then made a sudden and forceful thrust into my testicles causing a sharp pain which I immediately mentioned to him! He ignored me and did it AGAIN on the other leg! After doing twice I told him he didn't have to hit me in my privates! His reply was to condescendingly say "I told you I was going to your torso!" sneering at me he walked away. I then looked back and saw him laughing and talking to a female coworker sharing the fun of being able to assault passengers with seemingly impunity! I was quite shaken up by the experience first of being assaulted and second being powerless to react to it! I told the supervisor I wanted his name and what occurred. He strolled over looked at me and said his name then casually walked away! By his demeanor during the assault and the practiced way he hid the fact he was hurting me by using unnecessary force. I could tell he has done this before and probably would do so again! So not being a defenseless tourist from another country or a harried passenger rushing to my next plane I did the responsible thing and contacted the Atlanta Police department to report the assault. The TSA has the duty to search and secure the airport but not to inflict harm on passengers they don't like!! Officer (b)(6) of the APD took my complaint case # (b)(6) I will be following up on this and I hope you will too! Please note I will not sue for money or seek compensation. I want (b)(6) to be relieved of duty or transferred where he can't harm others or serving jail time for this assault. If this would have occurred outside of your airport I would have been allowed to defend myself but knowing I was powerless to fight back (b)(6) abused his authority and willingly attacked me under the guise of doing his job. I will not let this fade away and I will not quietly let him get away with this.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening. :

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Sky Harbor Airport, 3/30/2015, evening, gate D. Had escort passes to pick up some minor relatives. Not EVEN flying.

Comments: I went to the Sky Harbor airport in the evening of March 30, 2015, to pick up some relatives that were minors, and I had my daughters with me. We all had escort passes, and when we went through security at Gate D, the agent decided that my youngest daughter had to be patted down because of the machine, she had on a dress with sequins to the side that had obviously set the machine off. My daughter is only 13, and I asked that they not pat her down unless it was medically necessary. One TSA worker, a short, white lady in her 60s with cropped hair became very rude, and started talking to me in an unnecessarily rude manner. I told them we could leave. They said I couldn't. I told them I could let my daughters just leave, and they wouldn't let me do that either. They then got a supervisor, who went and got a black woman to speak to me. When I finally agreed to let them pat my daughter down provided it was a mother and someone who was married, and that I would pray with them beforehand, they decided to do a full pat down on my child, even though it was apparent that it was the upper part of her pretty, sequined dress that had set off the machine. I could hardly hold back my tears as I watched that short woman, with her hands and speech, pretty much violate my child, who has never been touched that way in her life, or had anyone speak to her that way about her body. I am not convinced that that worker was not an insensitive lesbian or pedophile. I want to know for sure that the TSA is not hiring people who have perverted tendencies towards children, because what we experienced (and they told us we weren't allowed to film the pat down, understandably, it was worse than any medical exam my daughter or even myself have had, especially the way the woman had to go over certain sensitive areas twice, unnecessarily, and the language she was using). A doctor will never speak to you that way when you are being examined, even if you are having a child. Unfortunately, I do not have her name, although I cannot forget her face, a face devoid of maternal feeling or consideration of children. I was trying so hard not to cry, I have always tried to protect my children, and I feel like I have failed my child, I have not been able to keep her safe from someone who would hurt her, and hurt her innocence. I feel so terrible as a mother, that someone did this to my child in my presence, it seems like a perverted woman has had access to my child. I want an explanation, a justification of what has happened, and I want answers and justice for what this woman has done to my daughter, a studious homeschooled 13 year old who has won many competitions in violin, has played with several orchestras, plays the piano, won at the science fair, and has been raised in a christian home. I have a few questions:

-What can a parent reasonably expect, and what kind of behavior does the TSA qualify as "crossing the line" from doing your job to criminal behavior against a child?

-Surely the TSA has clear guidelines of how far an agent can go before it can be ascertained that the agent is actually violating a child: what are those guidelines, if any?

-What is the line between pat down and inappropriate, perverted behavior? How much physical pressure is an agent allowed to use on a child?

-Is the agent allowed to go over the child's sensitive areas more than once on the basis that "they didn't get it over here, or I need to go over this again" type of comment?

-What kind of language is the agent expected to use with a child?

-What are TSA guidelines for hiring people with questionable behavior towards children?

-What are TSA guidelines for dealing with agents that have been inappropriate with a child?

-What does the TSA define as inappropriate or criminal behavior towards a child? -Are there specific, respectful words that an agent is supposed to use to describe a child's body, and do they need to name every body part with their own choice of words while touching the child?

AM

Good Evening,

It brings me with much displeasure to report to you my family's eventful day with TSA agents at the Orlando International Airport. My family and I have frequented the Orlando and Tampa areas for many years now and have put up with the rude hospitality that TSA displays at the Orlando International Airport. I am here to inform you that today was the last straw.

As always, the clearing at security was a cluster at Orlando International Airport. We started out normally by approaching the agent at the counter checking IDs and Boarding Passes prior to entering the lovely maze to the screening and X-ray machines. I was traveling today with my wife and three children. I politely handed all IDs and boarding passes to the TSA agent. He rudely responded to me that I needed to pass them out to each member of the family along with their IDs. I complied with the agent's request.

We were then herded like cattle into the security checkpoint where we were directed to a special line where we were told that we were not required to take our shoes off or anything else. All we were instructed to do was empty our pockets and send our baggage through the x-ray machine. In disbelief, we asked the TSA agent again and they repeated the same instructions back and assured us we would have no problems. My wife even informed the TSA agent that my three year old son's sippy cup had water in it and asked if we should dump it out. The TSA agent assured us the cup would not be an issue. We complied with all requests and put our baggage through the x-ray machine and walked through the metal detector.

AM

I went through the metal detector first, followed by my daughter, oldest son and my wife with our three year old son. My daughter set off the metal detector and my wife and I were then separated from our children for additional screening. I protested, but I was assured it would not take long. My wife and I went through the machine that scans you with your hands raised above your head. We passed this screening process with no issues. Then much to our surprise we found that there was an issue with my wife's bag which had the sippy cup in it. The TSA agent asked our party to see whose bag it was. My wife complied and the TSA agent took her to the side with her bag. My wife asked the TSA agent what the issue was. The TSA agent explained that they had to test the sippy cup. My wife once again declared it contained water, that it was for my three year old son and that a previous TSA agent claimed that this would not be an issue. The current TSA agent denied my wife's request and scanned it any way. The TSA agent then patted down my wife from head to toe and swiped her hands to test for explosives. Before she was patted down from head to toe, I asked the TSA agent what the issue was. They reluctantly told me what the issues were while standing 10 feet away from me. I informed the TSA agent that I was having trouble understanding her and that she needed to come closer for me to hear. Her supervisor then came over and claimed my wife tested positive for explosive residue and told her to proceed with her for a private pat down. My wife complied reluctantly because she did not understand why another pat down was warranted when nothing was found from the previous one 2 minutes before. We finally made it through the screening process but were highly disappointed with the lack of respect and ill treatment.

I am an Aircraft Loadmaster for the United States Air Force. Screening and handling of passengers and their baggage is my bread and butter as well. I also know professionalism does not always have to be cheery, friendly, and welcoming but the effort must be there. I understand each and every TSA agent has a job to do. However, today's episode was uncalled for and unwarranted. My family and I complied with all instructions and directions from TSA agents. My wife was wearing yoga pants, flip flops, and a T-shirt. She was also traveling with her husband who proudly serves our military and understands fully the need for these security measures. I can tell you from my experiences the image my family portrayed today did not warrant a threat. We fully declared all items to the TSA agents multiple times that were in question and they continued to belittle us and demand two full head to toe pat downs. It is insulting and dehumanizing.

I am here to inform that the treatment of my family by the TSA agents at Orlando International will not go quietly. I will make sure everyone who needs to be is aware of this incident will know. TSA agents at Orlando International ruined a great vacation for us today. Other people will not put up with this and I am here to tell you until this dehumanizing screening process is fixed; neither I nor any member of my family will transit the Orlando International Airport. In light of recent aviation events families should not be scrutinized. Flight crews should be screened more thoroughly.

For the record I will be sending this letter to Orlando International Airport as well, the Better Business Bureau and whoever else I feel needs to be aware. If the hospitality of passengers for air travel is no longer a factor then I will no longer spend my Reason for the call - Caller wanted to make a complaint about TSA in general. She went through the Humphrey Terminal at MSP. She was wearing an insulin pump and taking a spare pump with her. She had a surgical boot on her foot. She asked for a female agent to give her a patdown because her pump can not go through the screening technology. Medtronic told her that walking through the door is fine, however, a magnetic check can damage the pump. The TSO basically told her that he did not care and that he did not want to see her paperwork. She did not get his name. The female TSO who performed her patdown told her that other people with insulin pumps go through the screening technology all the time. She did not get her name either. She said that it makes it hard for people with medical conditions to travel because they don't know how they are going to be treated.

Had to get a pat down because of the millimeter wave machine.
I guess my socks were too bunched up at the ankles for your sensibilities.
Definitely a flawed technology.
The caller is a nursing mother. She wanted to know if she could go through security with icepacks to keep her breast milk cool. She wanted to know what types were permitted through.

The caller wanted to file a complaint against TSO Supervisor (b)(6) at the Syracuse International Airport. She stated that she presented her icepacks along with her breast milk and was told she couldn't transport the items through the security checkpoint. She stated that the officer stated it didn't matter if she was allowed through with the items in Atlanta they would not be permitted through his airport. She said he also stated that she had plenty of time to get back to Atlanta and her milk would be fine. He would not listen to her when she tried to explain she had connecting flights and the breast milk would spoil. She said the matter was handled in an unprofessional and unfriendly manner. She was also told she would have to go through a patdown and then told she wouldn't.

We lost contact and I tried the home # and it is not in service but reached her on her Cell.
She confirmed home again as correct.

Email: Does not Use computer. She was born in 1934 and is 80 years old.

Airport: Detroit Metro (Was flying to FLL on Delta).

Date and approximate time of the experience: 1-26-15 (The flight was departing at 7:20 AM) She was at the checkpoint between around 6 AM (She first tried to tell me after 8 AM)

A description of the experience:

She went through the metal detector and a second TSO went over her body again and by then her carry on bag had gone through the conveyor.
Caller said she was in a wheelchair except for the time she got out to walk through the metal detectors. She sat down in the wheelchair and 2 more people came up and searched her carry on bag and the TSO scanned her shoes and had her to remove them had her to stand up and get a Patdown. She insisted that nothing alarmed.
She commented that she thought when you are over 75 you do not have to take shoes off but they made her take them off.

She felt she was being discriminated against because her name is (b)(6) and they treated her like a terrorist.

On March 31, 2015, I received a TSA precheck boarding pass for American Airlines Flight 943 from St. Thomas, USVI to Miami. I was told to go to the speedy line where I need not take off my shoes. Then a TSA agent loudly asked my if I had any medical implants. I said that I had a metal plate in my ankle. Forget privacy.

She then told me to go to the longer line where I would have to take off my shoes. I then had to go through the AIT screening. The TSA agents were barking orders which I did not understand, about which poses they needed. When I emerged from the screening device, a female TSA agent told me to stand & she would wave a wand over my hands. She then told me to stand in front of her and spread my legs. I did. Then she yelled, "WIDER!" I complied, still barefoot, trying to make sure that my carry-on possessions were not carried away. Forget about any shreds of dignity.

I am a 67-year-old grandmother of 4, a retired school teacher. I believe that your policies need improvement. Or the TSA agents in St. Thomas need sensitivity training.

No TSA agent has ever asked if I had a medical implant. I told the truth. My reward for cooperating with honesty was to be treated with hostility and humiliation. Why exactly did I have to go through the AIT screening AND the public patdown? If I had requested a private patdown, would I have been able to bring my valuables with me? Would I have missed my flight?

Please explain why the TSA agent needed to pat me down intimately in public when I had already completed the AIT screening.
Are TSA agents discriminating on the basis of disabilities????

Caller was transferred her she went through San Antonio TX yesterday. She was in a wheelchair and wearing a brace. She was traveling alone. She cant stand for screening so she got a patdown. She was told she would have to go into a separate room so she can undress by the lady agent. She ask the lady if this was because of her brace? Then the lady said never mind they would just do the patdown at the checkpoint. She says when the agent got to her private parts the agents hand came all the way up into her privates, splitting it. She has had a patdown about 3 or 4 times and it has never been like this.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening. :

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Sante Fe, March 28, 2015. Flight 5944 at 12:56pm departure

Comments: My ticket was TSA pre-approved. Two rude young TSA agents who spoke badly to every passenger designated me for extra checks after I passed through security.

I complained that it was unjustified and if they wanted to search me, then get on with it and don't keep me waiting.

An older, polite TSA agent told me later that I could 'go'.

This is unacceptable behavior from the two young TSA agents who I PAY with my taxes and they don't even know the limits of their petty authority.

I am a small blonde woman, and the I do not accept the imposition of being singled out to prove a point that there is no 'racial profiling'.

Do not impede my lawful passage through airports again, otherwise I will most certainly make it the business of my Senators to tell you this, again.

It is ridiculous that Denver Airport TSA agents who deal with much higher traffic are very polite and kind to travellers, yet two silly little girly TSA agents at Sante Fe are an intolerable nuisance to law abiding citizens.

I am not looking for an automated email. I am looking for a human answer. If you can't answer me then I'll have to get the media to seek answers on my behalf. I am very disgusted.

Thank you for contacting the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) Contact Center regarding the reasons for secondary screening.

TSA seeks to provide a high level of security and customer service to all who pass through our screening checkpoints. TSA must screen all passengers and their property before they are permitted to enter the secured area, and the way the screening is conducted is important. Our policies and procedures focus on ensuring that Transportation Security Officers (TSOs) treat all passengers with dignity, respect, and courtesy.

TSA applies a variety of security measures in screening passengers and their property prior to boarding a flight. In some instances, this includes enhanced screening of passengers and their carry-on bags, which may be triggered by a number of factors to include watch list processing, random selection, or alarm resolution. For example, TSA may apply additional screening methods, such as a patdown on a passenger, to resolve an alarm of the walk-through metal detector or resolve an anomaly discovered during Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) screening. Additionally, a physical search of a passenger's property may also be performed.

TSA also selects passengers and their property at random for enhanced security screening. This random element prevents terrorists from attempting to defeat the security system by learning how it operates. Leaving out any one group, such as senior citizens, persons with disabilities, or children, would remove the random element from the system and undermine security. We simply cannot assume that all terrorists will fit a particular profile.

We understand the inconvenience passengers may have experienced. Nevertheless, we believe these security measures are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the security and confidence of all air travelers. TSA continues to develop and deploy new technologies to address the explosives threat. In the meantime, the use of additional screening enhances our ability to detect explosives at our Nation's airport checkpoints, provides an additional layer of security at the checkpoint, and keeps the traveling public safe.

The primary purpose of passenger screening is to prevent the introduction of deadly or dangerous items into an airport secured area or onboard an aircraft. TSA's policies and procedures focus on ensuring that all passengers are treated with dignity, respect, and courtesy. Each Transportation Security Officer (TSO) receives training on professional and courteous conduct to make the process run smoothly and to reduce inconvenience to the traveling public.

Passengers are permitted to wear any type of clothing they wish through the security checkpoint, however, if the TSO cannot reasonably determine that the clothing is free of a prohibited item, the passenger will be referred for additional screening. This policy extends to all clothing items and is not directed to any particular item or group.

TSOs will use their professional discretion to determine if a particular item could hide a threatening object. Passengers may be asked to remove their outerwear, as TSA requires all passengers to remove outerwear such as suit jackets and blazers,

The caller went through screening today at 1:30PM. She was at FLL airport with her son who is 15. Her and her son went through screening, she was going with him to make sure he gets on the plane. It wasn't a busy day and the lane wasn't busy. She had a necklace on and a officer at the checkpoint told her to turn her necklace to the back or they will have to check her breasts. She started to walk forward, she was going to place her necklace in one of the bins on the conveyer belt. Another TSO told her to just put the necklace in her hand, because she has zippers on her pants and she will have to get frisked anyways. The caller walked through with her hands up and before the TSO gave her a patdown the TSO pushed her arm into the callers stomach. Her and her son was very startled. She stated that her son will be flying in to the airport on his return flight and she is unsure if she will have issues when he flies back.

REASON for the call:

Caller has a hernia in his groin, and it shows up on the AIT. When his happened at BOS, the TSO was upset that there was an anomaly in BOS. The TSO yelled out that there was an issue. At CLT, the caller did not want to go through any of the screening technology to avoid the embarrassment of the issue being yelled through the checkpoint. The TSO that administered the patdown was unsatisfied with it due to that hernia. The caller was taken to a private screening area where the manager was also unsatisfied with just a patdown. Caller was told he had to expose himself to be cleared for screening. Caller does not want to fly if he is going to have to go through this humiliation every time he goes through screening. Caller was told that he could call this number to notify TSA about him coming to help alleviate the tension of screening.

A TSO of the same gender as the passenger will conduct the patdown search; however, passengers may need to wait for a TSO of the same gender to become available. The TSO will describe the procedures they are using as they conduct the screening. The passenger should inform TSOs if they have difficulty raising their arms, remaining in the position required for a patdown, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched. TSOs are required to use the back of the hand to patdown a passenger's sensitive areas. For non-sensitive areas, TSOs are required to use the front of the hand.

At any time during the screening process, passengers may request a private screening.

TSOs should also offer a private screening before beginning a patdown inspection that will require displacing or lifting clothing. A companion may accompany a passenger who needs assistance to the private screening after the companion clears screening. Passengers who refuse screening will not be permitted to enter the secured area.

Since your complaint concerns the conduct of TSOs at a specific airport, we have forwarded a copy to the Customer Support Manager at that location. TSA monitors the number and nature of complaints we receive in order to track trends and spot areas of concern that may require special attention. This ongoing process enables us to ensure prompt, corrective action whenever we determine that security screening policies need modification or specific employees or screener teams are the subjects of repeated complaints.

CSMs may be contacted by calling (866) 289-9673 and choosing option 5 from the self-service menu. By entering the three-letter airport code of your departing airport, you will be provided a phone number to reach the CSM at that airport.

I am a lifelong air traveler, have traveled all over the US and to Mexico, Bermuda and Jamaica. I have rarely had a piece of luggage lost or had a bad flying experience. I enjoy flying. I live in Oregon, am 66 years old, a retired paralegal. My recent trip to Fort Worth, Texas was to see my dying father in a nursing home. This was a stressful, sad trip, not a happy one.

I have flown out of DFW since the day it opened and have seen all the changes to this airport over the past 40 years. Not all the changes have been good for me as a traveler.

On April 4, 2015, I entered DFW Terminal C at about 3:00 p.m. to go through the security screening and check in at American Airlines flight 1698, bound for Portland, Oregon. I presented my boarding pass and driver's license to the first TSA agent and was then directed to the only conveyor belt in use. As it was a Saturday and the airport was not crowded, there was no waiting line. I thought I would breeze right through, as always. I was wrong.

Please note that I was dressed in nice stacks, tapestry jacket and turtleneck top. I wore two silver rings and no other jewelry. I had no belt, no pockets, no metal on me except for the zipper on my jacket. I have no metal plates or pins in my body.

I was ordered to remove my shoes and I asked about that because I did not have to that for my previous flights (all domestic US flights). I was asked my age and told I was too young at 66 to be allowed to keep my shoes on. I placed my purse, orthopedic shoes and carry-on bag on the conveyor and turned to proceed through the screening gate. To my surprise, I was told to stand inside the clear tube called a body scanner. The female TSA agent before me had quite an "attitude" which also surprised me.

8:37:18
AM

I commented as she scanned me that this was a first for me. She snapped, "Not for me!" She proceeded to frisk me twice and scanned me twice but could find nothing except my jacket zipper on the scanner. She finally let me proceed through the check point. It took a tremendous force of will to say nothing further to her. Believe me, I wanted to! I felt invaded, humiliated, helpless, and and at her mercy. She clearly enjoyed making me feel that way.

You may try to brush me off by responding that she was just doing her job. Well, she was doing more than that and I know the difference between a security agent doing a competent, businesslike job and someone who gets a kick out of tormenting people. This agent fell into the latter category. I was unable to learn her name or I would include it here.

My sense of shock remained throughout my flight home to Oregon. I did not see how treating ordinary travelers badly helped keep airports and airplanes safer. In fact, I felt less safe and frightened. I felt like I needed to have my US passport to prove I was a natural born US citizen and not a danger to anyone, not even potentially, not even in their imagination.

I would like you to evaluate the current procedures, body scanning, pat-down protocols, and other security measures used at DFW, and the TSA employees, and I would like you to do a better job of keeping travelers from suffering needless humiliation and distress, particularly when they are carefully following TSA's ever-changing rules and regulations (as I did when I packed my purse and carry-on).

I object to being treated as I was on April 4 at DFW Airport. I gave no cause for it. As an older woman, traveling alone, struggling to walk long distances from rental car shuttle to the correct airline gate (I am arthritic and have chronic back pain from a fractured vertebrae), I expect courtesy, assistance and a minimum of cranky, rude people to cope with. It is hard enough just to navigate the airports.

Generally TSA employees are courteous and businesslike and that is what I expect. This incident was the exception and it was a big one. If I had complained or refused to be frisked, I guessed I would then be whisked into the private strip search room

On April 4, 2015 at approximately 9am my husband and I went through security at Burbank Airport. I am not a frequent traveler but as the daughter of a woman who died of breast cancer I am very concerned about excessive radiation when going through airport security. As a result I always ask for a "pat down" and have always received one. On this morning, I noticed their weren't the usual walk through security check points and out of concern I asked what the apparatus was and for a "pat down", I was told by a TSA agent, not to worry that this was not an x-ray machine and that Burbank stopped using those. With no reason to doubt the TSA officer's insistence I walked into the apparatus there was a wand, and I then felt a hesitation and was about to get out and insist that I have a "pat down" before I could react it was too late. On the way to our terminal I had increased doubt as to whether or not I was told the truth and I went on to board my Las Vegas flight.

The very next day, at the airport in Las Vegas I saw the exact same apparatus being used I told the TSA agent there that I did not want to go inside of it, he quickly stated that if I did not mind waiting he would have a female TSA agent assist me with a "pat down". I am not at all certain why the TSA agent at the Burbank Airport would go out of his way to misinform me about the scanner and have me go through it when I was very clear that I DID NOT WANT to go through a radioactive scanner. This kind of negligence makes me very uncomfortable albeit now I understand I cannot/should not take a TSA's word as truth. Perhaps it is not a big deal to some people/TSA staffers, but to others, like myself there are concerns and those concerns should not be dismissed. ALL TSA agents should be informed, and when in doubt give the person the option of a "pat down". My right to decline was taken away when that TSA agent told me NOT TO WORRY that they, Burbank Airport do not use those kinds of machines anymore. When the fact is that THEY DO millimeter waves ARE radioactive (I googled it) HYPERLINK \(b\)\(6\)

2.2. Radiation safety

Although millimeter-wave scanners are becoming the primary full-body scanners used at airport security checks, there is still an alarmingly small amount of information about its potential health effects. The millimeter-wave safety standards are dose rate (power density) standards expressed in mW/m². The power density for a millimeter-wave scan is between 0.00001 and 0.0006 mW/cm² (HYPERLINK \(b\)\(6\)). These scanners are believed to be less harmful to passengers because they emit nonionizing radiation and presumably do not have the potential for cancer causing DNA damage. The established health effects associated with non-ionizing radiation are limited to thermal effects. The long term effects of this type of radiation are still uncertain but it was reported that these scanners operate at outputs well below those required to produce tissue heating

Pat-down was extremely offensive, she was in a dress and heels. She indicated that she was a professional and felt that she was singled out for some reason.

I am writing this letter to voice my incredible disappointment and anger in the behavior of two TSA security agents at Baltimore Washington Airport on Saturday, April 4, 2015 around 1pm as I was entering the JetBlue terminal with my husband and two year old daughter. I am seven months pregnant, and as I care greatly about the health of my fetus, I asked to avoid any scanners in security and instead have a pat down. I researched this prior to my flights, and while traveling earlier in the week to Boston, I was given immediate assistance and positive attention. Not only is this allowed, but it is suggested for pregnant women to not go through security machines.

I am distraught in the way I was treated. My husband and daughter were sent through security with all of our luggage, and I was asked to step aside and wait. About ten minutes later, while still waiting and growing impatient as dozens of passengers passed through my line, I asked how much longer it would take for my screening to occur. I had a flight to catch and an impatient toddler who was already on the other side. I was told "it was my choice to do this, and I will wait as long as it takes for someone to become available." At that point, I told them it was unfair and the agent told me that I needed to calm down and wait. After about 15 minutes of waiting, I told them I was being treated unfairly and felt discriminated against for being pregnant. The agent then told me that they were understaffed with female workers and again, because this was my choice, I would need to wait until someone was available. At that point, I got extremely angry. I am not choosing to avoid the scan to be annoying or disruptive, but rather for the health of my unborn child.

AM

I finally got through and the woman who was getting ready to scan me told me to put my arms in a T position. I lifted them over my head and very rudely she asked if I knew the difference between a T and above my head. I started yelling. I told her she was unprofessional and discriminating and I needed to get on my flight. At this point, she went and got her director, (b)(6) who tried to diffuse the situation by telling her to finish my scan and asked me to collect my belongings and go toward my gate. I was furious. When my scan was complete, I went over and asked for information on filing a complaint and (b)(6) sent me your information. When I asked him for the first and last name of the officers who were rude and discriminating towards me, he said he is not obligated to give their names out, and I should go ask them myself. When I walked up to the woman, she covered her name tag and refused to show me her name. I asked if it was allowed for a TSA guard to hide their identity, but because my flight was about to board, I didn't have time to argue it. So, the police officer who was nearby told me that with all the information provided (time, location, airline, etc) the agent's identity could be figured out.

I write this letter in disgust. I am pregnant, yet I am equally as capable of traveling as any other passenger. I feel that I was treated as a lesser person given being pregnant, and I feel horrified that I was treated differently. I bring this to your attention for a few reasons, but most importantly, I want to make sure that no one else is EVER treated the way I was treated today. People, with any need or disability, should NEVER feel as though they will be treated differently or worse given their situation. I would like to find out how this situation is being dealt with, and would like to know how we can work together to make sure this never happens again.

Thank you so much for taking the time to read this email, and I look forward to your response. Please be in touch.

Best,

When did this happen? 04/06/2015

Where did this happen? TEXAS - DAL - Dallas Love Field

What happened? I am a TSA Pre-check XXXXXJ1NY enrollee. A small bracelet on my right arm set the alarm and by design the bracelet needs a small tool to be removed ...I thought it might not get through TSA so I packed it. Because of that I was subjected to a FULL pat-down. The female agent checked my breasts and genital area. I am a professional women and I was wearing a dress. She told me to spread my legs and she touched EVERY PART of me. The only thing she did not do was to put her hand up inside me. I came to the airport happy and full of life and left in tears and extremely shaken up by this incident and I am still very shaken up. Tell my why this happened to me! I obviously was singled out and I want to know why and what she was looking for up my skirt

Dear Sir or Madam:

I was travelling from Greenville, SC to London Heathrow on Wednesday, April 01 with flights DL 1341 (GSP-ATL 13:45) and VS 104 (ATL-LHR 17:45).

Upon arrival in London I found a TSA Notice of Baggage Inspection in my suitcase. This is not uncommon to me - in fact the same was the case on my inbound flight on March 28 via Detroit - and despite the disconcerting notion of a stranger groping through my belongings, I do recognize the need to inspect baggage to protect all travellers.

This time, however, I was completely shocked by the carelessness and disrespect that my suitcase has been handled apparently. In particular, I was thoroughly disturbed by the following obvious mishandling which is also illustrated in the attached pictures:

- Shoes were removed from the bag which I use to protect other items in the suitcase; one shoe was not returned properly to the bag but instead was jammed carelessly onto other items.

- Washbag was not returned to its original place in the suitcase, thus exposing the toiletries to external shock, putting them at risk of breaking and soiling other items.

- Handkerchief was removed from separate mesh pocket where it was protected. It was not returned to the mesh pocket but dumped carelessly between other items.

- Luggage strap to hold clothes in place has been opened during inspection and not closed properly afterwards, so items were not prevented from shifting any longer. Consequently a rather expensive bespoke suit needs a proper dry cleaning and ironing now. I can not even imagine if this had happened on my inbound flight when I had to give a professional presentation the next day. The dishevelled suit would have been a disaster.

You will agree with me that such careless and disrespectful handling is completely unacceptable. As a law-abiding citizen I expect better from the government agencies whose responsibility it is to protect me and my property from harm. That being said, I am sure that you have protocols in place to review the inspection procedure, identify the disorderly employee, and take disciplinary action. I imagine there are many qualified applicants that can replace them. For your convenience, I attach a photocopy of the baggage tag which may help you to trace this case down.

I would further request that you send me a contact address where I can claim a reimbursement of the necessary cleaning costs for the suite. This can be easily compensated by a reduction of the paycheck of the employee in question.

I appreciate your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

The caller is a member of the TSA Precheck program, but she has metal knee replacements. She always have to have a full patdown, and she wanted to know why. Also, the TSOs make her remove her shoes, as well as removing her laptop. However, she wants to note that all of the TSOs are friendly, but she thinks the process should be followed. She is a FF with American Airlines, and wanted to know if she would continue receiving TSA Precheck in 2015.

Information Request: Caller got an email form American airlines. He has TSA PreCheck and DOD clearance. He has metal implants. He says that he had to have a private screening before. He says PreCheck does him no good anyway because he has metal implants and he always gets a patdown because some of the PreCheck lanes do not have ATIs. He wants to know why this happens.

Caller has called three times today because she is having a difficult time with the way she was treated at the airport. She is TSA PreCheck and she wants to know how they can do this, someone from the federal government put their hands between her legs and on her breasts. She was wearing a dress during the patdown. She said she felt violated. She was very upset and was crying during the phone call. She said she was terrified that this would happen again. she said that she didn't know that she could get past this. She said she thought she may need therapy. She said she didn't do anything wrong, she stated she had a gold bracelet on that caused this.

To whom it may concern:

I am a long time Trusted Traveller with Nexus issued by the USA.

I recently had both total hip replacements and now I set off the metal detector at the air ports. In particular at DCA on March 29, 2015. I was subjected to a full body pat down which was embarrassing. I should have asked for the private room but did not realize what was going to occur.

As I have gone through extra screening, iris scanned, finger printing why am I treated so harshly when I set off the metal detector.

A wonderful thing has happened my wife is pregnant and our family is very happy. However due to this she doesn't desire to use the body scanner at airports. She opted out of only the body scanner for the first time two weeks ago for a flight out and back to CA. This was our first experience in opting out of the body scanner and it should be noted that several metal detectors where available. The first time the opt out "pat" search was conducted we did not realize how intrusive it was and a female TSA agent conducted the pat down in front of the entire airport. This pat down consisted of the lady physical groping every part of my wife's body to include running the back of her hand over the vaginal area multiple times with enough force that it could be felt in an uncomfortable way against her private area. It then include the agent sticking her fingers between my wife's underwear and waist line with a swiping motion around her entire waist front to back. The agent also pulled her blouse out and downward exposing her breasts to the airport. On the trip back we asked for a private screening rather than in front of everyone traveling. When we asked for this screening my wife was pulled out of line to the side. As she waited the line got busy and the metal detector line was opened to speed things up. My wife asked to use the metal detector and was yelled at that she had opted out of the body scanner and would be physically checked. After some more time we were led to a private storage closet were the search similar to the one I described above took place only this time the TSA lady ran the back of her hand over and around her vaginal area four times with so much pressure that I could see the pain in my wifes face. Now my wife and I travel a lot and fly a lot and for the next nine months she our 7 year old son and I will be opting out of this body scanner to protect our future child and to support her choice to opt out. I am an honorably discharged American Soilder of 5 years who served in Bosnia and I am in my 16th year of law enforcement. I have never searched anyone the way these people searched my wife and I have searched EPW's (Enemy Pnsoners of War) and currently still search persons under legal arrest. My father is a 3 year honorably discharged American soilder who served in Vietnam and a 40 year retired police office. In my immediate family, father, uncles and cousins we have over 170 years of law enforcement for the state of New York alone. Our familys military service to America is even more extensive. We have to fly back to New York next week from Florida and it pains me to think that my wife, our 7 year old son and I will have to be sexually assaulted by the TSA in order to travel as free Americans. I realize safety is of the utmost importance but these are not pat down searches. If I put my hands on anyone the way these workers do I have no doubt I would be arrested. Enough is enough please do something about this issue for everyone, this treatment is unacceptable and down right wrong.Thank you for your time.

Caller said for the last 20 years he s had problems every time he flies by TSA, immigration, CBP and DHS. He has been denied boarding returning to the US, delayed getting his boarding pass, removed from the plane, etc. Last year he applied for Redress, received an RCN but when he shows the RCN when he flies he s still having problems. He didn t enter the RCN into the actual reservation because there was no spot for it. He actually had worse screening since getting the RCN. Most recently the TSO conducting the pat down on him patted down sensitive areas of his body multiple times. He believes something is seriously wrong.

The caller and her husband are both very old and he is in a wheelchair. When they went through security in PHX, she was directed to go through the AIT twice. The female TSO informed the caller that she would have to go through a patdown and offered a private screening, which the passenger declined. The callers states that when the TSO began to pat down her body, she did it in a very rough manner. The TSO applied a lot pressure on the passenger s left breast, which caused a lot of pain for the passenger who jumped in alarm. The passenger informed the TSO of the pain and requested a private screening, but the TSO refused the screening and patted down her left breast a second time with force cause the pain again. The caller states that the TSO acted like an animal during the patdown. The passenger spoke with the Supervisor at the checkpoint who was very kind and polite and he said that he would take care of the incident. The caller declined my offer to asstt in filing a Disability-related Civil Rights complaint because she was satisfied as long as the CSM is made aware and they deal with the TSO accordingly, reprimanding her and retraining her in the way to screen passengers.

She claims that she was stopped several times by the TSOs at the screening checkpoint and was hassled even though it was clear that she was in bad shape due to her condition. She went through the screening technology twice and was submitted to a patdown afterwards. After her bag went through the screening technology, they made her empty its contents out. Her wheelchair was being screened and her cane had went through the x-ray machine and the TSOs were trying to make her walk through the checkpoint without either of her mobility aids. She accepted my offer to email her the information concerning the Disability complaint.

This morning he discovered his 3 medications in pill form are missing. He confirmed none of the medications were narcotics.
He said he thinks change set off the alarm.
Caller also told me he is a Doctor but not an MD but he takes a boat load of medication.
He is visiting his mother for a month and wants the Form sent to her address.

Special Notes:

4/8/2015 10:18:06 AM Caller wanted to file a complaint against a TSA agent. She is a flight attendant with US Airways. She went through KCM checkpoint at LAS on 4/08/2015. Her screening was completed at 7:03 am. She showed her passport and her Id badge. She scanned the KCM badge what was provided to her. The TSO swiped her hands and told her that it alerted. He did not swipe the hands of the Southwest Airline attendant behind her. He told her that she had to wait for someone to come and check her bag. A senior citizen agent told her that she was going to take her and check her bag. She took her to another location and called another agent. The checked all of her bags. She had three bags. She was then told to go to another room for a patdown. Both agents went in the room with her. The senior citizen looking agent performed the patdown on her. She started with her hair. The caller told her that she was pulling her hair with her gloves. She went down her back and felt her buttocks. She touched her vagina. She felt extremely violated. She said that her vagina was touched on both sides. She asked if that was necessary. The agent did not say anything. The other agent gave her a dirty look. The name of the agent doing the patdown is (b)(6) She asked where a comment card was located. (b)(6) could not tell her were to get a comment card. The process took about 20 minutes. She was told by a TSA agent after the screening not to file a comment card because it would be thrown in the trash. He told her to call TSA. She said that she felt totally humiliated. She said that if her vagina is going to be probed every time she is screened she will be filing a lot of complaints. She wants to be contacted by the CSM.

Comment : I have two complaints. The first of which is that I asked to opt out of the xray and instead get a pat down due to the fact that I am 32 weeks pregnant. One of the TSA agents directed me to stand to the side and wait for a female agent. I patiently waited exactly where he had told me to stand for at least three minutes. At that point another agent told me to move away from where I was standing immediately due to the fact that I was right next to a different piece of xray equipment. In his words "we're not even supposed to stand that close to it" because that level of exposure to xray is very harmful. I chose to opt out of the xray due to my pregnancy and the safety of my unborn child. Instead I was placed next to a machine that was significantly more risk for my unborn baby. This was absolutely unacceptable and put myself and my baby in a dangerous and unhealthy situation. My second complaint is that my clearly labeled Voodoo donuts were confiscated without my notice. It says on the TSA website that baked goods are acceptable to bring through security. Was my chocolate, peanut butter, Oreo donut a true security threat? At eight months pregnant the fact that my donut was taken brought me to tears. I was sobbing in my terminal waiting for my flight. I felt as though I was abused, harmed and taken advantage of. This was by far the most appalling experience I have ever encountered. My physical and emotional health were compromised and I am disgusted that these events were even allowed to occur. Shame on you for not only endangering the safety and well being of my baby but taking donuts from a (very) pregnant woman.

Hello,

I was flying to Phoenix, AZ from Seattle, WA last Thursday afternoon. I went through security in Seattle without any problems. Once I was through the body scanner, one of the TSA agents said she needed to pat down my left ankle. But instead of patting it down, she squeezed it incredibly hard, leaving an instant dark blue bruise. Her thumb left a bruise on my ankle that later drained into the bottom of my foot (picture attached). I travel about 2-3 times a year to visit family and have always had a pleasant experience going through TSA. I'm writing you today to let you know what happened last week so hopefully it will not happen again to someone else. I do not have the agent's name and other than the unnecessary roughness, she was very nice. But, the agents should not be this rough with anyone.

I was escorting my wife and two daughters (ages 3 and 1) through a TSA checkpoint. Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Delta Flight Number: 1103, Sunday, April 5

Comments: 2nd time to complete this complaint...rudeness, contradictory instructions, I have TSA pre check and a KTN...felt abused and violated after the process.

As a business traveler I am getting really tired of the incompetence of the TSA, especially at 5:30 in the morning! While going through the TSA PreCheck metal detector, I was "randomly" selected to have to go through the scanner. This is the third time I have flown out of Reno in the past 6 months and each time I get selected for "random" extra screening. Then I proceed to the scanner which I have to wait in line behind individuals that were behind me in line to be patted down. Then once I get in the scanner I still have on my jacket, because since I am PreCheck I can leave on my jacket, well then the agent calls female assist. I said what is going on? And the agent says your zipper probably set off the machine. Excuse me what is the purpose of Pre Check and not removing your items (which you are repeatedly lectured on by the agents) if you are then having to go through additional screening and pat down because you didn't remove them? This is ludicrous! While I wait to be patted down, my carryon luggage is just sitting unsupervised at the end of the screening belt and an airport employee that is doing a wheelchair assist starts to take my bag! I yelled out at her and fortunately she heard me that she was taking the wrong bag. I told the TSA agent that was holding me hostage that people were taking my shit and he said oh that's not good in a ho hum voice, not at all concerned that he should take responsibility! Then I get my left side and abdomen padded down all because of a zipper on the outside of a jacket. I mean seriously get your act together, if I hadn't caught the airport employee starting to take my luggage how would I have had any recourse locating my item? So much for expedited security privileges!

What happened?

On Monday, April 6, 2015 I arrived at the George Bush Houston Intercontinental between the hours of 5:30-5:45 am (approximately) to catch a 7:10 am Delta Airlines flight #0810-en route to Hartsfield-Jackson Intercontinental, with a final destination of Washington, DC. To Whom it may concern,

I have completed the process for global entry and have TSA pre check. I fly 4 times a week normally. I am disappointed with the TSA process at Denver International Airport because they do not have a body scanner available for people like me who have an artificial joint. I am told they have one but it is not open routinely. I have flown out of the Denver airport the last two weeks and it has not been available. The only two options they offer are fore go my TSA pre-check and wait in the long traditional lines or have a pat down. At most every other airport they will allow you to go through TSA and have an agent walk you over to a body scanner or they already have a scanner available.

I fail to understand why such a large international airport, which clearly has a lot of travelers would not be better prepared to address the need for people with TSA pre check to go through a scanner due to an artificial joint.

I went through security screening at gate a at 6:15 am on 4/11/15. I requested a pat down because my Dr told me not to go through the scanner. The tsa agent argued that I had to go through the scanner. I reluctantly did and felt dizzy and my heart started racing. Why was I forced through the scanner?

Due to medical reasons I must opt out of going thru the electronic scanner and have a manual pat down- search instead-

At all times it has been a long wait to get an attendant to perform the search- this has been a great inconvenience at all times and so I would like to see some improvement with this service.

Disability Description: Caller has diabetes, PTSD because she is a crime victim, and has fibromyalgia. She travels with needles, insulin, glucose meter, lancets, and food in the event her sugar drops. She traveled with her 91 year old father who also has diabetes.

Incident Details: Caller flew from LGA to PBI on Thursday and had set up assistance for her Delta flight number on 4 9 2015 at 2:30 PM- DL1512 which was originally flight number 1902 when she set up the RFA in October. She is a diabetic who was traveling with insulin, water bottles, sealed yogurt, sealed ginger ale, and has Precheck. Caller said she has PTSD because she is a crime victim.

She said she was given an inappropriate pat down by a female STSO with glasses. She stated that she told her she has fibromyalgia and she was pressing too hard during the patdown and she didn't change anything. She said she was treated as though she is a criminal and was told she would be arrested because of it and she was not rude or refusing the patdown. She was traveling with her father who is a 91 years old and a decorated disabled veteran. She said she had Insulin, needles, and glucose meter along with the food and since it was obvious she is a diabetic then she shouldn't have to undergo a patdown that was so invasive she was pushing on her privates just to bring food that she and her father both need for their blood sugar.

She stated it may be prejudice because she is from NY but she feels like she was discriminated against for her disability, singled out for things she had to have on her flight, and humiliated in front of the public. She wanted to have her father record it and the STSO said she would be arrested if she touched her belongings that had already been screened. She told them she cannot stand due to pain from fibromyalgia and they did not inform her that she could sit during the process even though she told the STSO she could not stand that it was painful. She said due to the stress she started feeling bad and she was denied access to her insulin and glucose meter and her doctor told her to always check her sugar immediately.

She said she told them she was supposed to have help at the checkpoint but they acted like they didn't know what she was talking about. She said that LGA was great and she would never be treated that way there but PBR is different.

She said she cannot fill out a complaint in writing or e-mail one due to her disability. Her father that was traveling with her is named (b)(6) She said it is ok to contact her.

Good Afternoon,

My name is (b)(6) a current student at Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School located in Rochester, New York. I am from Charlotte, North Carolina and graduated from North Carolina Central University in Durham, North Carolina, but currently reside in Rochester. I was in Charlotte and Durham this past week visiting family, and had a scheduled flight on Delta Airlines for 7:15 am first to Atlanta, Georgia, and then on to Rochester, NY. The flight number for the flight from Charlotte to Atlanta was DL944. I checked one bag at the check in and then proceeded to take with me two carry on bags. The contents of these two bags were mostly books, light clothes and small grooming products, as well a laptop.

When I went through the initial TSA (Transportation Security Administration) checkpoints, there was nothing out of the ordinary. Upon my completion of the body scanner and pat down, I was able to gather all of my belongings (shoes, laptop, etc.) except one of my checked bags. I was also very happy to discover that my hair would not be checked. I had objected to this when I have flown in the past because I viewed it as a discriminatory practice. I'm an African-American man with Locs (or dreadlocks as some would call them) and I observed how other styles of hair that were not Locs or Afros on Black people, were not checked. Nevertheless, I didn't see it come through, but I still put back everything else where it belonged. One of the TSA agents asked me was this my bag (referring to one of my carry on bags), and I confirmed that it was. Then she proceeded to this table, as I followed her, where she told me I would have to throw out this container of vaseline because of its size. I didn't have much protest, although I questioned why it had to be thrown out, which is how I discovered it was too large. None of this was odd.

I was waiting for her to hand me my bag when she said that now my bag was flagged. I was completely confused as to what she was talking about. She did not say that I was about to be a part of a random routine search. She asked me did I have any sharp or dangerous objects in the bag. I was then told by one of her colleagues that I would need to empty everything out of my pockets and bring my other bag to be searched. I asked why this was necessary and did not receive an adequate explanation, which caused me to enter into a very angry state of mind that was also very visible. The male TSA colleague asked me could I see my belongings and then began unpacking and checking my other items. He was, however, not checking the belongings that were in the flagged bag. Two other TSA agents came over and one of them asked me about sharp objects again. They began unpacking the contents of my flagged bag.

While this was happening, the man told me that I would have to be patted down with buttocks and groin included. I chose the option to have this done in the private room off to the side because I believed it was totally uncalled for to be searched, like I had committed a crime, in front of the many people in the area. That would have been even more humiliating than what was already taking place.

They took my belongings that they threw, without much care, with the exception of one of the three agents involved in this process, and ran them through the scanner again. This happened after they wiped my belongings down as well to test them for something that I was again not told. After they came back to be "clean," I was directed to the room. I was asked again, this time by the male TSA agent, whether or not I had any sharp or dangerous objects, along with a series of other questions pertaining to health. He called another male agent into the room, for what I assume would be a witness. I was then searched, and again nothing was found on me.

When it was over I was able to repack all of my belongings, put my shoes back on, and gather myself before my flight that had begun to board. I was incensed. It was a humiliating experience that caused me undue duress. I was never given an adequate explanation that I deserved. It did not end there though. Upon my arrival in Rochester, I discovered that the checked bag I had checked well before going through the TSA checkpoints had been broken into and searched as well. A note with my broken lock duct taped to it was inside. It was then that I was furthered assured of the fact that I had indeed been targeted and harassed. I have no idea why this would be the case. This was not a routine random check, or even a question of a specific bag that was flagged. I was violated by this harassment obviously physically, but mentally as well. The latter is the more damaging aspect of this entire ordeal.

This has been traumatic in a way I have only experienced a few times before in different contexts. This was an injustice on the level of racial profiling by police officers and altercations that I have been involved with in my brief 22 years of existence. Never have I felt quite this powerless though. I certainly not only feel this way but know that my rights were violated. What transpired today was excessive and wrong. Wrong is wrong no matter what uniform or power someone exercises or abuses.

Comments: My name is (b)(6) On March 21, 2015 I purchased two bottles of alcohol from the duty free store in Grand Cayman; a bottle of Appleton Estate Jamaican Rum and a bottle of Smirnoff Red Vodka. I was promised there would not be a problem bringing it home as long as I purchased the special bag used for passengers who do not have checked luggage or who prefer to carry it on the plane. Upon reaching the Newark, NJ-NY airport I was stopped in security to check my luggage as well as the bottles of alcohol. They opened the security bag and proceeded to put it into a machine said the rum was ok. However, the vodka did not pass the "test". It alarmed four different times. So it did not pass the security screening. I had to leave it there with them or check it with baggage, which would have cost me twice as much as the alcohol did in the first place. It also would have cost me our flight to Maine because by then there was not enough time to go back and check a bag. To top it all off, because it didn't pass security I had to be subjected to a thorough pat down as if I had done something wrong and my suitcase was searched a second time. This was not a pleasant experience. I stopped by the duty free shop in that airport and they had never heard of that happening before. One question keeps coming to mind. If the alcohol was not safe to put on the plane with me, what makes it safe to put under the plane and why is it put into a sealed bag in the duty free shop and then opened up by TSA so now it has been tampered with. What could possibly have set off the alarm when it came straight from the store onto the plane, not tampered with and then into the airport from the plane? I hope to hear back from someone on this matter. I was told the only proof alcohol not allowed because of its flammability is the 151 proof. Mine was only 40%. Thank you for your time and response.

TSA,

I recently traveled for the first time following total Hip Replacement Surgery. I departed BOI without incident. I went through the only line open in BOI and they passed me on without question. My Doctor had provided me with a card showing the joint replacement and that I would only have to show this at airport security; not so.

When I departed SEA the following day, the process was quite the opposite.

As a 2 million miler after a 31 year career, I've been through my share of airports; pre and post 9/11. As I entered the priority line, there were no signs or indications that joint replacement passengers would have to go through a specific line. It wasn't until my personal bags had gone through x-ray and that I had gone through the scanner, that I was told I would need a full body pat down.

I was traveling with my daughter and two children; 18 mo and 5 yr. I voiced my opinion of the pat down (to the supervisor doing the pat down) and that passengers should be informed that they would need to go through a specific line if a pat down were to be avoided. This process is offensive and unfair to joint replacement passengers. When I voiced my displeasure of the process, I was told, "If you don't calm down sir, I will have to call the police", only inflaming me as a passenger even more (we cannot even voice an opinion?) We are not cattle! If there are protocols, then we should be advised. I certainly could not have gone back to the appropriate line with my things already having gone through the x-ray.

Simple signage would help to alleviate the confusion the the need for some TSA agent to pat down joint replacement passengers which (depending on the agent) is about as offensive as I can take. I believe some get rough just to antagonize the passenger; my opinion on this is based on a range of examples of going through the process. It is discriminatory for joint replacement passengers to have to go through this process only because we are not informed prior to a point we cannot turn back.

I would appreciate a response to this email, and explanation of the policy in SEA and other airports and if there will be changes to this practice or not?

Thank you,

Comments: I was selected for further screening through the TSA-pre line. I opt'd out from going through the x-ray since I've had cancer. I had a female assist pat down. Her glove tested positive so all my luggage was searched and wiped down. Everything was ok so she told me to re-pack and take my bags (6:20pm). I'm ok with the need to double check. I went to the UA lounge and left the lounge at 7pm. Boarding started at 6:55 and was going to close at 7:20 (7:35pm flt to London). As I was walking down to my gate, an asian male TSA employee told me that I wasn't suppose to leave and that I need to come back and they would have to re do the whole search and pat down. I told him that I was cleared and I need to board. He told me I had to go back to security and re do everything. So he escorted me back to security and EVERYTHING in my bag was taken out including my tooth brush and my whole make up bag. I kept asking them to hold the plane but the asian man that had brought me back said not to worry that I won't miss my flight. This made me very upset since he didn't even know which flight I was on so how would he even know whether I was ok or not. by 7:10 they had taken out everything and started the pat down. Everything was ok and I was cleared to repack my bags. It was 7:15 now and at this point I was so stressed and had to run to my gate. I was the last to board my flight to London.

My complaints are:

1. Procedural break down at TSA
2. I am penalized for the error of the TSA agent
3. Being lied to that I would not miss my flight
4. overall incompetency. I was told that even though the bags had already been searched, they have to do it again since it left the security line for 40 minutes. During that time I was in the boarding area so were they implying that security is so bad in the boarding area that I could have acquired materials for a bomb in the boarding area?? This is crazy!

I just have a question about the consistency and dealing with the whole TSA check in process in Spokane. Not sure exactly where to start because this has been an ongoing question of mine for several of our flights in the last few years and especially an event that just happened today.

Many times my boarding pass with say TSA Precheck and when following the arrows at Spokane it will lead me into the regular line. Today, the same thing happen and was handed a blue ticket that then I didn't need to take off shoes or take out liquids.

Let me back up one step and say that in Nov. of 2013 I had a hip replacement and carry with me card dealing my replacement. In the past I have presented my card they acknowledged it at the original point of security and then say I can put it away.

Fast forward to today..... Being they never really acknowledged the card before and the machine had never alerted them, I really forgot to even to mention the card and proceeded through checkout, until I went through the machine and it beeped. They asked me if I had a belt, change, phone, etc... Told them no, but that I did have a hip replacement. That put a whole new spin on things. I had to then remove my shoes, my vest, my scarf....mind you while my purse, laptop etc....had already gone through the X-ray machine and was at the end of the belt. I tried to tell them that my card for my hip was in my purse. But that didn't matter.

4/13/2015 8:48:13 AM Went through the machine again, and then had to go to another area near the X-ray for back packs and go through a major pat down. Then they rub their gloves down with some type of wipe and put that through a machine.

Please don't get me wrong, I am all for security and making sure passengers are safe. What I am not understanding in the inconsistency with the screening process for TSA Pre check and the issue with my hip. Why this particular day the machine went off, and other previous times, no one paid attention to the fact when I told them I had a card and a hip replacement.

Just felt that the people at Spokane today were a little abrupt as I was trying to understand and ask questions, so that I would be more proactive for future flights.

My husband and I had actually talked about going through the actually TSA Pre-Screening process that they have been offering to get a permanent status with that. But after today, not sure that it would really benefit us with traveling.

Thanks for your clarification with this.

I have a son with the United States Marines. He came home on leave in April and leaves today. While checking in the personnel at Grand Junction Regional Airport in Grand Junction Colorado almost didn't allow his 18 year old sister come with us to see him off. A 20 minute ordeal ensued of photo ID's and verifications for her. If you were to pay attention to current society and trends you would see a distinct drop in young people who are choosing NOT to receive a drivers license and are using other modes of transportation. This leaves many of these individuals with only a school ID for verification. To refuse to let the siblings see their military sibling off is RIDICULOUS! I am furious! And on top of the 20 minute ordeal we were informed my daughter would be subject to a pat down at the second security check point. She isn't even getting on the plane and she is an 18 year old kid what do you think she is planning to do!?! Then on top of this my sons bags were searched! He is a Marine serving our country! What a way to treat our military personnel! They get shot at, they are away from their family for months at a time, just so they can come back and be subjected to searches and suspicion. I am furious that my kids were treated this way! All we wanted was to say good bye and get his luggage checked in. It's hard enough to say good bye to your child not knowing if you will see them again! Congratulations for making a difficult day even worse for our family! Mission accomplished!

From: [b)(6)]

Subject: Humiliating and unnecessary treatment by TSA

On April 12th 2015, I took Jet Blue Flight 466 from Fort Myers FL. To Boston

I checked in on line the night before and it had a TSA precheck on my boarding pass.

I have prosthetic right leg that extends from my hip down. I fly this route approximately 4 times a year. I understand the procedure for amputees. this is the TSA procedure from your website

"The passenger should inform the Transportation Security Officer (TSO) of the existence of a prosthetic, his or her ability, and of any need for assistance before screening begins. Passengers can use TSA's Notification Card to communicate discreetly with security officers. However, showing this card or other medical documentation will not exempt a passenger from additional screening when necessary. Passengers with prostheses can be screened using imaging technology, metal detector, or a thorough patdown.

PM
Regardless of whether a passenger is screened by a metal detector, imaging technology, or a thorough patdown, a prosthetic is subject to additional screening. An officer will need to see the prosthetic, which may require the lifting of clothing without exposing any sensitive areas or removing a belt that holds the prosthetic to the passenger's body. TSA also will use technology to test the prosthetic for traces of explosive material.
I informed the TSA agent that I had prosthesis; he was very nice and directed me to the imaging machine so I wouldn't set off the metal detector. This is what happens every time I fly whether it is Boston or Fort Myers.
Unfortunately the Male assist officer I was handed off to either didn't understand the procedure or just decided he was making his own procedure. After I went through the imaging he proceeded to give me a complete pat down, tested my shoes, hands and the bottom of my prosthesis for explosives. At this point I am starting to feel a little uneasy with the search as usually after checking the bottom of the prosthesis and my hands I am sent on my way.
This guy tells me he needs to perform a further evaluation of my leg; I asked him if there was a problem? His response was no not yet. He took me into another room with another guy had me remove my pants to he could swab the entire prosthesis. THIS IS NOT IN your procedure!!!
I am now getting pretty aggravated. I asked him why, he said it is procedure. I tried to tell him nicely that was a frequent flyer and that it was not and that does not happen to me and never has. His response was a non-caring shrug.
Told me to take it up with his supervisor!
After I was cleared for the second time, I told him how BS he was I took my bag that he was holding and not willing to give to me and went to my flight that I just barely made it on. Thank god I did, cause had I missed it. I would have had an ugly conversation with him and his supervisor.
I am not a person to give anybody a hard time and I understand the need for safety but I should be humiliated and belittled by somebody just because he can.
Unfortunately I was so upset and short of time I didn't get his name.
He was a tall white bald (shaved head) man with a really lousy attitude. Hopefully this doesn't happen to me or any other person like me again going through RSW and that it was an isolated incident, I however suspect it wasn't. Just because people with artificial limbs are different doesn't mean that TSA person should be able to humiliate an discriminate and demean anybody things are hard enough

What happened? At the screening checkpoint around 6:20 pm. I asked for an opt out from the body scanners due to my transgender status (I am FTM - female to male transgender person - post top surgery and post bottom surgery). I asked for a male assist. A male officer (b)(6) came over, but refused to pat me down because I presented as female. I explained that I do not present as female (I was wearing jeans and a t-shirt) and re-iterated my request and requested a supervisor. The MOD (b)(6) came by and also stated that I needed to have a female pat-down due to my name. My name is not part of my presentation - I explained that I have had both bottom and top surgery and that I identified as

Callers husband has been depressed because he was subject to additional screening. His kids kept saying he had high clearance and one child was afraid to get on the plane. Its only been two days. They have been traveling for a while and he has never been physically searched. She is recommending a TSA psychological counselor. She wants to know if we track statistics on passengers who experience depression after a patdown. She said he was not given a option of the screening technology, she thinks. She was not sure because he was behind her. She will need her husbands permission to send a complaint to the CSM. She asked about Pre - Screening.

Disability Description: Caller was in a wheelchair. She is disabled and had a torn rotator cuff. She is also a dwarf.

Information Request: She wants the name of the person she is reporting.

Incident Details: She is a dwarf or a little person. The TSO at DAL treated her differently because of this. She has never been treated like this before by a TSO.

Caller would like to speak to (b)(6) LTSO. She came over to the caller after the incident and calmed the caller down. She stated it would never happen to her as a passenger again. She asked the caller if she was ok? She was very nice and helpful and comforting. The LTSO's male boss was also helpful. She really came to her rescue.

Caller was humiliated.

The treatment from the agent was horrible and horrific. She was crying when she left. She was in a wheelchair. Everyone was staring at her. She grabbed every part of her very hard. She had a torn rotator cuff and told the TSO. She took her fist and shoved it up her groin. It was like an assault. She yelled at her. She got mad at her over the computer and other items. She had yogurt and declared it medically necessary as a diet item but she was forced to throw it away. She has had a patdown before and has no objection with it. This was not a patdown. It was an assault and the caller believes it was because she is a little person.

The female TSO was in her 40 s white with dark hair. She may have been Mexican. Bad complexion. She thinks the name was (b)(6)

Caller is a member of PreCheck. She and her friend just returned from an international flight to Amsterdam. On her flight from DEN to Dulles before leaving for Amsterdam she informed the TSO in DEN that she has a metal hip implant. She said the TSO pulled her from the PreCheck line and made her go through the regular screening line. She was upset that they made her take off her shoes and jacket and also made her have a patdown. She said that all the while her carry on was left in the PreCheck lane. She informed me that she is 74 years old. She said her friend was offered TSA precheck but when her boarding pass was scanned she was pulled and gave a patdown as well. She will be flying domestically this weekend and she wants to know how to prevent this kind of event from occurring in the future. She flew back from Zurich through Dulles. They are both former law enforcement and fly frequently.

Caller was at LAS yesterday for a Southwest flight and has an implanted device in his heart. He opts out of the screening technology and requests a patdown. His traveling companion went through the screening and was waiting for him. When he got to the checkpoint he requested a patdown and was ignored by the agents. He waited a few minutes and then ask again. A large black agent named (b)(6) was staring at him and making faces at him during this time. He ask the agent what his name was and the agent yelled at him saying yea come on over here and you can get my name acting like he was trying to intimidate him across the checkpoint or trying to start a fight. After about 20 minutes the passenger was starting to get upset because the agent was just sitting there staring at him instead of helping him with getting assistance for a patdown. He ask the agent if he was planning on helping him and the agent told him that he wanted special treatment so he will just have to wait. The caller picked up the sign that was there at the checkpoint and showed it to the agent and stated that the sign says that he has the option to request a patdown screening. He then requested a supervisor and got to speak with Agent (b)(6) about the issue.

4/14/2015 1:38:30 PM
He is very upset at the treatment he received by this agent at the checkpoint. He does not think this was due to his medical condition he thinks it was just due to screener rudeness. The caller is flying out of DEN and wanted to know if he would be groped when going through the screening. He was concerned because of an incident at DEN and wanted to know why the individuals didn t face criminal charges. The caller also wanted to know if he went through a patdown if he would know if the TSO groped him.

To whom it may concern,

I have a grievance and would like to file an official complaint. Please direct me on how to do so.

My complaint is as follows:

At 2:10pm on Saturday, April 11, 2015, I arrived at Chicago Midway airport and proceeded to security checkpoint for my daughter and I to go through security screening. As I approached the security screening, I alerted the security (TSA) agent behind the xray machine AND the security (TSA) agent next to the metal detector/xray screening that I was in possession of medically necessary blood product that I had a Dr. letter for, and that the blood product could not go through xray screening. The man by the xray machine called for a "hand check" and handed the bag off to another TSA agent.

4/14/2015 4:09:03 PM
I went through security and looked for the bag (the medication/blood product was in a box inside a SuperMan lunch box). When I saw the agent who had my bag (African American woman with blonde hair with the name tag "Carter" on it), I said, "please wait until I am present before going through the bag, it contains blood product AND it belongs to a minor child". She rolled her eyes at me, opened my bag (which I KNOW she is not suppose to do, she is suppose to ask ME or my child if she were traveling alone to remove the items or it she may open it) and CONTINUED swiping the SANITIZED box which contains my daughters PLASMA based product. She raised her voice and said to me (as two other TSA agent women surrounded me), "I DIDN'T OPEN YOUR BOX I OPENED THE BAG-IM CHECKIN' IT N YOU CAN SEE ME". To which I replied, "I know my rights and you are not allowed to open the bag of BLOOD PRODUCT without my permission, or without asking me to do so". She pushed my bag aside dropping it on the counter and said, "I'm done anyway" and walked away.

I cannot tell you the fury that fills me. I cannot tell you the insecurity that filled my daughter as she watched this occur. She travels often and has been THOROUGHLY briefed by TSA at McCarren Airport as to her rights when carrying her blood product through security. She travels often and as a member of the Bleeding/Hemophilia community, it is medically necessary to carry her blood supplies with her. For that reason, she was briefed two summers ago by TSA on her rights and how to approach carrying her product. To watch these rights be violated right in front of her was infuriating to say the least. Atop that, the TSA's mishandling of almost $4000 of blood product rather than asking ME to pull it out of the container, TSA Agent (b)(6) should've changed her gloves before contaminating our product, is unbelievable. I am now in to position to where I was not in contact with the blood product and it was handled by someone else, with unclean hands/gloves and now it is unusable to me for risk of infection from contamination. Thank you for wasting almost $4000 of medication, and for violating the rights of my daughter and I. We have lobbied long and hard to make certain my daughter gets her allotment of medication. The amount she gets is regulated and now your agents' violation and possible contamination of her blood product leaves her short of the appropriate supply.

I want an immediate response and resolution to this email. Should I not receive a response in a timely manner, I will escalate my formal complaint.

I have included in this email a link to your TSA rules and regulations.

Hello,

I read two of your agents were fired for groping passengers at a Denver airport. Will these two people also be facing criminal charges as well as having to register as sex offenders?

Thank you

(b)(6)

Our 8 year old son has a prosthetic leg and travels a lot - he goes through airport security 8-10 times a year. We live in Denver, and 90% of the time, the TSA agents are great. I tell an agent ahead of time, they send him through, he sets off the alarm, and they check his hands (and sometimes prosthetic) for residue. He passes, and we go on our way. On 4/12, however, we discovered the lack of training that some agents have regarding children with prosthetic limbs. I was so upset, that I failed to get the names of any of the agents, but the worst offender was a Caucasian female agent (#1). I informed her as soon as possible that my son has a prosthetic leg, and she let me put my bags through the conveyer belt. Then she said she needed to speak to her supervisor, and disappeared for at least 5 minutes. Since I was concerned about my purse sitting on the other side of the scanner, I approached another agent (#2) who sent my son through. At that point, a third agent got visibly upset at #2, because my son was under 12, so they could not pat him down after he set off the alarm. Agent #1 returned and scolded me for allowing #2 to put my son through security. I explained that my purse, containing my money, credit card and ID was sitting unattended, and I had no idea when she was going to return. She told me to hand carry my cash, credit cards, and id the next time we traveled. I told her that was not going to happen, but that maybe she should have people wait to put their stuff through security if she wasn't sure she could get them on the other side quickly.

My son felt horrible - #3 acted like it was a major security breach to allow a child through, since he couldn't be patted down. My son was going to set off an alarm. I'm not sure if #3 thought that we should just wait there until my son turned 12 or if there would suddenly be a new protocol handed down that would allow him to pat down an 8 year old. As an aside, agents in Miami and Kansas City have patted my son down before, under my supervision and using the backs of their hands. Miami had my son stand with me after going through security, and then informed me that since he had touched me, that I needed to be patted down, as well. One time in KC, I was told that three sets of supervisors would have to be spoken to before determining if my son would be allowed on the plane. Note the "allowed".

Obviously, agents 1 & 3 were not trained on how to handle people with disabilities, especially children. Our main concern is that if there is a set protocol for children with prosthetic legs, it is not conveyed to the agents and supervisors. It seems like each airport is allowed to come up with it's own protocol, and even then, agents are unaware of it. Kids with disabilities are not criminals. We don't expect special privileges, we just want some consistency. We are happy to comply with whatever protocol TSA has determined is appropriate - we are just asking that the agents be better trained to know that protocol. It is estimated that every year, over 5,000 children become undergo major amputation in the US, many of whom are fit with prosthetics. Multiply that by 12, and you have an estimated 65,000 children under 13 who wear prosthetics. Many of those children will attempt to travel via the airways. While it is a small percentage of the total number of annual passengers in the US, it is substantial enough that TSA agents should all be thoroughly trained on a consistent protocol. Parents - and children - should know what to expect at the airport, just as able-bodied passengers do.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Sirs:

While going through airport security in San Antonio, TX with my family, we had a very unpleasant and unexpected encounter with the above named TSA officer. My wife is a cancer survivor and chooses to opt out of exposure to gamma radiation whenever possible. We also do not want to expose our teenage daughters to x-rays if at all possible. (b)(6) attempted to educate my wife, a registered nurse, about the effects of ionizing radiation and the relative effects of airport scanners versus cellular devices. Regardless, she had simply expressed her desire. But because he persisted in trying to explain his opinions about radiation instead of just waving her on, she began to explain her reasoning. Not only was his reply not patient, it was unacceptably and unbelievably rude. He told her, "Shut up and stop talking!" in a raise voice. She did so, and went ahead with the pat down screening, which is enough of an indignity, treating paying travelers like criminals.

I feel that this is unacceptable behavior. If (b)(6) was not in a position to delay our travel neither of us would have just stood by. Please be sure (b)(6) supervisors and someone higher up than a TSA employee receive a copy of this letter.

As a person he has failed. As a public servant he has failed. As a man, he fails. And in light of all the successful terrorist attacks on American soil are concerned, you are all complete and utter failures who think you can stop terrorism by making me and my family remove our shoes and scan us with radiation before getting on a plane. Ridiculous people!

As I approached the security area placing my items in the bins as well as removing my small traveler size clear bag with any liquids in it. With my ID in hand (PA Driving License). I proceeded through the Airport detector and no lights, bells or any other indicators went off, like the other people ahead of me didn't go off, and they continued on their way. But I was singled out by some TSA worker (a woman) who said "please step to the side", then she said "I must pat you down because of you oversize clothing". In my mind I thought, is she calling me fat or is she calling me out because of my religious covering. She began by patting the front of my left leg then the back of my left leg and same for the right leg, then she said I have to pat down your head as well. She found nothing. I stood as quiet as possible, while others watched as though I had done something wrong.

I was never offered the opportunity to be searched in private.

I Feel TSA should have a better way of handling passengers of different religious beliefs as well as the correct verbiage when addressing a passenger that needs to be searched.

I feel I was profiled because of my religious beliefs to be searched.

Do you search all Muslim women that come through check points? I ask myself this question!

I plan on seeking legal advice on this matter.

I was at the Airport yesterday and I was humiliated. I hurt my arm Mon evening and I could not raise my left arm, so the tsa rep said go stand over there and someone will manually scan you. Well I stood there and no one scanned me but said an alarm went off. And I was pulled to the side and the one person must have been in training and used me as a guinea pig. She took my personal bag and went through that and then she proceeded to put me in a closed room and another tsa groped me down. I am almost 70 years old and I was put through hell. I am so scared of flying and I had to go through that. I was talking with a friend who is an Atty. And he said how could an alarm go off when you were never scanned, and your luggage went through fine. he heard on the news that some of your tsa were groping people just for fun. I think since I didn't have the right protocol, they picked on me. I was shaking and almost had a heart attack over this situation. This will be investigated more.

Good morning –

I saw the news blurb regarding the dismissal of two security agents for inappropriate fondling of male passengers this morning. I believe I was one of the impacted individuals and wish to formally lodge a complaint.

On March 25th, I went through security at DIA. My flight was at 5:55 so it was probably around 4 pm. I am TSA Precheck due to my Global Entry (which was noted on my ticket as well) but was selected and pulled out for a pat-down after being sent through the scanner (and not the metal detector). The agent told me he needed to pat me down thoroughly and proceeded to run his hands up and down my legs including touching my genitals and across my backside. I travel a LOT and I've been patted down before, but never like this. I was upset afterwards and told my girlfriend who was with me but in another line that I felt like I needed a cigarette after the pat-down (making an obvious reference to a joke).

4/15/2015 10:20:45 AM You should pull the video tapes and investigate this. I am willing to provide a verbal statement if required. I do live in Denver and fly in/out of DIA several times a month.

Thanks. You guys do a good job overall and you don't need a pervert giving you bad press.

Regards,

4/15/2015 11:17:35 AM Caller saw the CVS-4 investigation on TSA employees that were recently fired. He flew on Southwest on Feb 26th @ 10:00 am out of DEN and he went through the Precheck line and has an artificial knee. He had to go through a patdown screening. The patdown was very intensive and all of his luggage went through additional screening. The officers conducting the patdown screening also patted down his groin area and lingered in this area. He has went through several patdowns before and this particular one made him feel very uncomfortable. The agent was a male and looked to be in his 50 s. Caller believes he may have also experienced these employees.

Hello,

I am inquiring about the timeline in which the two TSA employees that were released after it was revealed that they had been groping men's genitals. I was traveling with my family from DIA on April 4th via American Airlines and while I was going through the security screening I had a groin area pat down. I did have a military challenge coin in my pocket that I realized before going through the scanner, but I was told by the TSA employee to go ahead and put it back in my pocket. As would be expected, the detector registered the metal and I was told that I would need to be patted down. I didn't feel as though I was being accosted, but it did seem odd to me that the TSA employee would tell me to put the coin back in my pocket knowing fully well that it would flag a pat down. I don't know if this information is of any help to you, but after hearing the story I was curious if it was possible that the employees that were released could have been working while I was passing through DIA. Feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Have a nice day,

On April 11 I had the unfortunate opportunity to meet the most rude TSA member in my years of travel in the international terminal of the Seattle -Tacoma airport. I had just arrived on Delta Flight 166 from Narita at about 9:29 Saturday morning and headed to a connection flight at terminal C. After clearing Customs, we were shuffled to the TSA area, where an officer was barking to form three lines from what was originally two. The length was so long that one could not determine what type of scanner was at the end. That matters as I am a dual knee joint replacement recipient and choose the scanner as to accelerate the process for all and to eliminate the pat down. By the time I could see the metal detector, I elected not to change lines as the lost time would have been significant--- things were not moving fast. As expected, the scanner announced the presence of metal and i informed the TSA officer of the metal joints. He politely asked me to step to the side, which i did and he shouted for assistance (pat down).

The assistance did not arrive after approximately a minute and the officer elected to continue screening while waiting--- not a bad idea as passengers were stacking up. He requested once again for a pat down and continued screening. I waited, while other passengers' scanned items piled up on mine. Not a real good thing for delicate laptops. After yet another couple minute delay without assistance for the pat down, the officer once again announced the need for a pat down. And the stuff continued to pile up on mine. After the officer's fourth plea for help, an officer seemingly put out that he would have to perform a pat down (the same one that was barking to form three lines) showed up. He asked if the stuff being dumped on at the end of the scanner was mine, to which I replied with a "Yes" and made a move towards it. He quickly snapped that I was not to touch it and to move over to carpet that had the foot locations marked on it. I suggested to this officer that they needed to have some means of letting passengers know which line to get into for the scanner. He proceeded to inform me it was MY RESPONSIBILITY TO SELECT THE PROPER LINE, not theirs to tell me. I proceeded to tell him that the entry point of the line did not allow one to see the scanners. I once again suggested that maybe signs, he once again told me it was my responsibility. What a rude interface with the public. Not in the best of moods myself after being up for almost 24 hours, I asked for his name. He informed me he would not give me his name, but would provide a card and his supervisor. Little did I know things were about to really go to HELL.

As I gathered all my stuff, over wandered this blob of a person with a title of TSA Supervisor. Apparently he got this job to fill an EEO requirement as it sure wasn't for his ability to interface with the public. He proceeded to tell me he did not have time to put up with piddly assed minuscule things like me and my fake knees. He would stand up for his officers no matter what. They had been there all morning and not even had lunch. Personally, he could go without many lunches as fat as he is! He proceeded to tell me once again he did not have time for my little problem I could take my problem " all the way to the President of these United States" and turned away. WHAT A FAT, RUDE, in-his-position-only-to-fulfill-EEO-quotas. I sure hope I never, ever have to incur this fat excuse of a TSA officer again. In all my travels around this great nation, I have never seen a TSA representative act half as unprofessional as this worm. Maybe he is related to the sleeping baggage handler for Alaska Air.

In reaction to the present TSA groping news, I went through DIA/TSA on April 4, 2015. As always since I have a knee replacement, I was patted down. I have been patted down every time I go through DIA since I had the knee replaced in 2011. I have flown to New Orleans, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Paris, Nairobi, Laguna Beach, etc. since the knee replacement. On April 4, 2015, I was held up for the pat down until the TSA agents found someone to pat me down. As the the man who patted me down finally approached me, he blew air out of his mouth like he was preparing for doing something he was worried about doing, I'm not sure. Anyway, he did pat me down. For the first time since TSA came into existence and since I have been patted down, this TSA agent grabbed my genitals. However brief it was, it surprised me and I jumped. He apologized to me without making eye contact. Since the story has broken about the TSA agent groping a man, or men, I would like you to publish the photo of this man so that I can see if it was the man who groped me. It would give me great relief to know that the man has been apprehended.

I was right, first you steal from my husband who is a 9/11/01 first responder, you cut his suitcase open while he was in a wheelchair, you stole his pump for his back brace and his NYC police hat and then you say you are doing your job. Where were you idiots on that day. HIDING, now men groping men, women who are not really women groping other women. WE THE PEOPLE WANT MILITARY IN THE TSA, YOU let terrorists through and yet steal from the American little people, YOU ARE ALL A DISGRACE TO THIS COUNTRY. How much more is going to come out. THIEVES, to steal from a ill 9/11/01 first responder is disgusting, the people on the computer agree with me just like several other millions. again, where were you on that fateful horrific day. If you can steal from a hero and from military, you should all go to hell. There are no excuses for what you did to my husband. If you ever touched me, JUST DO NOT TRY.

He was taken out of the line and designated to go to another spot (AIT). He was stopped by the male attendant who asked what was in his pocket. He was told to stop, and an agent patted down his behind. And then the agent said to him Sir, exit the booth. The lady who was 8 ft behind the AIT suppressed her chuckle. When he was done, he said ok you can go.

He feels as though this was done for entertainment purposes. He was concerned that someone could have been patted down that actually needed it. And at the very least the agents need to be retrained.

The catalyst for the call was hearing about the recent pat down incident in DEN; although he thought it was PHX.

He also wanted to speak with a CSM directly at DCA.

Caller said he and his family are traveling on Southwest to W Palm Beach and his wife did not get TSA PreCheck. He said she is degraded by the patdown search they did. He asked for her KTN # for the airline and he said Southwest told him they did not have her #. He said she does not want to make a complaint on the patdown search and he said we are doing our job. He said he just wants her KTN # and asked if UES is open right now.

To Whom It May Concern:

After hearing today (on CNN) about the alleged groping of passengers at the Denver airport, I was reminded of what happened to me at the Orange County airport in the early 2000s (post 9/11).

I reported the incident to TSA and the airport police after it happened, but I don't think anything came of it. I'm letting you know again, because I think it speaks to a pattern of abuse that has gone on for at least a decade at TSA.

I was returning to Arizona from a pharmaceutical sales meeting in California, with my boss and several colleagues. I was singled out at the gate for a pat-down search. Most people would say I am above average in attractiveness, if that was a factor, I don't know.

The male TSA screener used a wand. however, he ran that wand repeatedly on/over my breasts and between my legs up to the groin. He might as well have been using his hands, because I don't think it would have felt differently.

I started shaking and was on the verge of tears as the incident went on. I felt utterly powerless. I knew this guy had the power to detain me and I just wanted to get home.

By the time I got on the plane. I was crying and shaking. I felt so violated. My male supervisor asked what was wrong and then I had to explain to him what just happened, which made it even worse. I felt embarrassed and humiliated. My boss and colleagues and I were all sitting together, so everyone knew what had happened to me. It was just awful.

It takes someone with real cunning to figure out how to assault a female passenger with a wand. I'm sure he had done it before, but since he didn't use his hands, it made it much more difficult to prove his intention. Believe me, I felt this guy's intention, I could see it in his eyes, and it was absolutely an assault.

I can't believe that just thinking about this incident so many years later still brings me to tears.

Later, there was a TSA policy change so females are only pat-down searched by females, and that is a good thing.

In closing, I would say that TSA needs to do more to combat passenger abuse by its agents. The first step is to ensure each TSA employee has--at a minimum--their last name clearly and prominently displayed on the uniform. Just like they are on military uniforms. Having the name on a removable badge is not good enough. Passengers must be able to identify screeners in the event that an issue takes place.

Beyond that, it will take a culture shift to stop these types of incidents.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Bethel AK to Anchorage AK on Alaska Airlines, Monday, April 13, 2015 boarding 8:30 p.m. for 9:10 p.m. flight 46L.

Comments: My wife (b)(6) and I had TSA pre-checked boarding passes and were told we did not need to remove our coat or shoes. The older agent (late 50s?) told me to take my jacket off and said he was going to search me. He asked if I wanted to go behind the screen and I told him that was not necessary. He proceeded to run his hand up one leg and very hard into my testicle and then did the exact thing on my other leg and smashed into my other testicle! My testicles were (and continue to be) so sore and throbbing that on Tuesday morning, after I got home, I made an appointment with my physician who told me that both of my testicles were bruised! I understand these people are doing their job but I would like to make sure that this type of roughness when patting down a man's genitals does not happen to another passenger.

Disability Description: Caller has brain cancer.

Incident Details: Caller had a horrible experience for screening. She has a medical condition and could not go through the machines for her screening. She asked for a patdown instead for her screening. They would not allow her to use the WTMD. She says she understands the job TSA does and knows it is very difficult.

She never gets upset at her screening. But this time was so bad it has made her cry. She has never filed a complaint before. She says the agent that gave her the patdown was so mean to her. She said if she spoke the agent told her to not speak then when she did speak, the agent responded to her by saying for her not to get upset at her. She was only going to ask if she could put on her shoes.

4/15/2015 7:27:55 PM She has brain cancer and says this isn't the way screening should be for someone going through something so bad. She wants to file a disability complaint. She says the manager's name may have been Baccllet and he was kind. She says the entire staff was terrible.

Gate Terminal: Terminal C and she was there about 4 pm
Airport: McCarran
Airline: Southwest
Flight #: 564

Caller was at Reno airport trying to get through security. She told me that while she was in line for screening a TSA worker came down and warmly greeted everyone. She asked the TSO who she could talk to let them know that she could not go through the scanner. He told her that she could opt out of the AIT if she wanted to. She gave the TSO a letter from the doctor saying her and her items could not be scanned due to medical issues. She said some of the workers are ignorant and needed to be retrained because they did not know how to screen a passenger with special needs. She said that the TSO on duty, that she spoke to first, had blond hair with pony tail told her that her items would have to go through the scanner. She said she did not get the blond TSOs name. She said the TSO did not even open the letter saying that everyone had to be screened and that all her items had to be put on the belt. She said the TSO was rigid and did not care about the passengers needs.

4/16/2015 10:39:11 AM She said after she opted out of screening and after the bad experience with the blond TSO, a TSO came up to her and screened her the way she needed to be screened. She the TSOs name was (b)(6). She said she was a gem and was very helpful. She went on to say that she gave her triple 10 service. She said it was about 5:30 in the morning and not very busy at the screening area. TSO (b)(6) told (b)(6) to put all of her items in the tray. She took the tray around the door she just opened. She said she gave her a private patdown carefully and gently. She tested her medicine and food like she had hoped she would. She said TSO (b)(6) was competent and concerned. Caller said she told her that since she was in a uniform she did not guess that she could hug her but TSO (b)(6) told her that of course she could hug her. The passenger was crying on the phone at this point. It seemed to be a very traumatic experience for her.

She asked if there was a way that she could acknowledge TSO (b)(6) was so good to her and TSO (b)(6) have her a card with our phone number on it.

She said she would be flying again in December and would definitely call for a PSS.

Caller has been having a bad experience at one airport she uses and the TSA staff at another location suggested she call the TCC. She lives in ATL and flies from there often and sometimes uses the PreCheck line there and she grew up in Ohio so she goes at least once a month to visit her sick parents and flies into Columbus CMH. On 100% of her return trips from CMH she has been receiving a Patdown and her bags are searched.

On a recent trip she asked why she is pulled out the Female TSO said she cannot say why she always gets pulled aside but today it is because you have a laptop computer. (Caller confirmed she was not in the PreCheck line that day and did not remove her computer so she understands now).

She said that does not explain the other times she has flown from CMH and nothing alarmed but she got a patdown and they go through all her things.

4/16/2015 12:18:44 PM She also said she flew from Rhode Island recently and a metal bracket on her jacket set off the alarm but she only got a quick patdown compared to CMH where you feel they should buy you dinner afterward. She also feels that the TSOs at CMH are rude in general and after visiting her sick parents she dreads coming. When she is getting the patdown nobody watches her purse and that makes her anxious and once a TSO said we have cameras. She has noticed also that if she has anyone in line chatting with her they pull them out of the line as well. Caller said it is not funny anymore and she felt a need to report it since it is confined to CMH. She last flew from CMH on 3-15-15 flying Delta and was at the checkpoint sometime after noon for a 2 PM Flight.

4/16/2015 1:48:57 PM Caller keeps having problems with TSA and other passengers have spoken up that she is being mistreated. She had a radiation accident when she was a teenager. She has cancer and many surgeries. She is 80 years old. She has trouble walking. She tells them that she cannot use the screening technology. She was going to a meeting she could not miss in DC. She was searched and almost missed her flight. She had to finally ask for a supervisor and asked him if she has to get on her knees to be able to finally go. She tells them she can use the metal detector and they tell her no although they point others to the WTMD. The supervisor who came over apologized for the way she was treated. She knows that there is a program that she can get prescreened and use lanes that you go right on through. She does not mind the patdown but she does not want to have to wait in line. She has had items taken from her and stolen. She does not even bring carry ons with her any more. She liked the idea of getting assistance at the checkpoint and asked how far ahead she should call us.

Disability Description: The caller wants to know if she should call 1-855-787-2227 to get help through the checkpoint. She also wants to report that she was harassed going through the checkpoint at EWR

Incident Details: The caller says that her medications cant be X-rayed. She also doesn't want to go through the AIT but requested a Pat down. She presented her ID and told the agent that she couldn't go through the AIT. She said she had documentation about her medical condition but they didn't want to read it. The screeners took so long that she missed her flight. She had to argue with them about how she should be screened. One of the screeners told her she had to go through the AIT regardless. The passenger never stated to me if she was given a pat down. Just the unwillingness of the TSA staff to not X-ray her medications and missing her flight. Apparently the staff also was rude to her. The caller is 73 years old. She went on to say that she would sue if this was to happen to her again.

PM She flew on United flight 1736 on 8 April 2015 7:30am. Boarding at gate 74
Her original flight path was EWR to DEN to Reno. She missed her flight and her new flight path was EWR to SFO to Reno.

The caller had a better experience out of Reno. She got help from (b)(6) at Reno. The way the caller describe her (b)(6) is probably a PSS.

Caller needs to find out where she could file a complaint against the TSA screeners at PIE. (b)(6) had called TSA cares and requested a PSS but she was not provided one. She said the TSOs treated her horrible, She said travels with a service animal and they did not have anyplace for her animal to relieve itself. She was also upset that the TSO would not go with her to take her dog to the bathroom. She said TSOs had helped her with this at other airport screening checkpoints.

She said she has an implant in her spine connected to electrodes and a battery and had to have a patdown. She said the TSO was very inconsiderate and did not even look at her medical ID. The TSO informed (b)(6) that she knew what she needed to do as a TSO and did not need to look at her documentation. She said the TSO performing the patdown patted down the battery area in her spine which caused her to have shock waves go through her back. She said they kept passing her from one TSO to another before they found someone to do her patdown. She also complained that the TSO was feeling up on her during the patdown. She said there were 10 people working the screening checkpoint and no one would help her get her items through screening. She also advised me that they did not offer her a private patdown.

7:29:01
PM

She said that the TSOs at PIE need to be advised that persons with disabilities who have a service animal need to be treated with dignity.

She said she requested to speak to a supervisor but he was not helpful. She asked him if he had an area where the service dog could relieve itself. He just turned and told her that they did not provide that service at PIE.

The caller wanted to know if one of the DEN employees that was let go due to inappropriate behavior was an African American.

The caller stated his son did not want to go through the AIT and was taken through a patdown. The caller stated that he had been waiting for his son. After 10 minutes he approached where his son was going through the patdown. He approached the TSO that was performing the patdown to find out what was going on. When he asked what was going on the officer stated he was not being able to finish his sentence about the patdown procedure.

9:59:02
PM

The officer stated the caller's 21 year old son was not fully complying with the patdown. The question became if the TSO was going to touch a sensitive area of the body. The officer stated he may have to. Two Airport LOE's were called and they stated that the passenger's would have to comply with the TSO in order to clear screening. The caller asked for a supervisor and the officer stated he was the supervisor.

The caller stated the TSO was not professional and did not explain things to where they understood that was going on. He read about the incident at DEN in the news and wanted to know if touching a sensitive area was protocol when going through a patdown.

The caller did indicate that his son stated he was not touched in a sensitive area once the patdown was completed.

AM

Caller was in West Palm Beach and she is 81, she went through the screening and came out and the TSO placed her back in. Once she came out again and she was told by the TSO that she would have to be patted down. Caller wants to know what the TSO was seeing to do a patdown on her, she is upset that she is 81 years old. Caller said that she does not have any metal in her body and there was not reason for her to have a patdown. Caller is wanting to speak to someone to know what was seen.

My email comes to you today as a result of the recent TSA groping incident at DIA. In September, 2014 I was the victim of a sexual assault/groping by DIA TSA agent (b)(6). I immediately sought the assistance of a TSA supervisor (b)(6) who insisted that I could only file a complaint against (b)(6) online and that there was no police jurisdiction at DIA. It took several inquiries - and 4 months - with (b)(6) the DIA TSA investigator about the status of the investigation to my complaint. (b)(6) emailed me that my complaint didn't exist and that passenger security videos aren't kept after 30 days (I have this in writing). Basically he implied there was nothing he could do. When I found the names of the agents I had written down from September, I contacted (b)(6) again. Then my complaint suddenly appeared. He then told me that there is a police department at DIA. I went to AOB at DIA and was stonewalled by the dispatcher, sergeant and officer (b)(6) who stated that they were unable to file a complaint about the incident. Then I contacted the OIM and (b)(6) assisted by suggesting I contact Commander (b)(6) to file a report. Commander (b)(6) asked me to call him and speak with Detective (b)(6) to file the report, and I did. I have since filed a FOIA request for the files and tapes of this incident and await the response.

As a seasoned traveler I can attest to a very different TSA screening process and interaction from the DIA agents than any other airport checkpoint across the country (I've lived in 7 states coast to coast). For years I've been subjected to constant pat downs at DIA that make zero sense. The full body scanner always shows an X on my left buttocks. When I ask the agents why this happens, I'm told "...it's an anomaly...". Yet it never happens at another airport! First, I wear nearly the same outfit each time I go through security - no buckles, zippers, metal, pockets - nothing - black form-fitting leggings tank top or sleeveless long shirt. Second, most of my travels have been independent. Third, I've used the main gate at DIA for years. Except for April 10, 2015 when I went through security at Gate A for a Frontier flight. I went through the full body scanner as I have for years, and nothing showed on the screen and I went through without a pat down. This never happened at the main gate. There is never an incident at any other airport - no anomalies ever. Then a few days later I see the report about the groping incident against the male passenger.

12:14:18
PM

There is no doubt in my mind that what I have experienced on September 30, 2014 at DIA from TSA at the main security gate is an egregious attempt to harass me. Additionally, I've noticed both male and female TSA agents speaking about passengers in code. I've been referred to as a yellow and double yellow by several male agents. I've had female agents refuse to allow my husband or friend in the private screening room during a pat down. Both male female agents comment on my physical stature when going through the scanner. On my first trip through DIA security I was profiled by an agent who asked me "...how was the Cinco de Mayo Festival..." and then asked to see my boarding pass. I'm Italian, not Hispanic.

The last incident I experienced was so disturbing that I filed for a TSA security traveler number to avoid the body scanners as much as possible when traveling, and, I've avoided traveling 6 times already this year unless it was absolutely necessary. I trust that my account of the DIA TSA security screenings will provide additional validity to the fact that passengers are being harassed to many degrees. Please, (b)(6) put a stop to this behavior and restore the integrity of a security process to the national level of protection that it should be used. And, discipline those TSA agents to the highest degree that take advantage of vulnerable passengers.

Thank you for your time, and, please feel free to contact me if you require additional information (b)(6)

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Ms. Kimberly Walton:

Below is an email trail I am forwarding to you for further investigation of a complaint I filed in September, 2014 about a sexual harassment incident against a DIA TSA agent and a complaint against a supervisor for failure to provide accurate information Hello,

I would like to request pictures of the TSA agents involved in the groping scandal at DIA. I feel I was a victim. I flew home in January to attend to my father's memorial service. To my horror, I was singled out by a female TSA agent for 'additional screening', and was then turned over to male agents.

The agent who took me into a private room and groped my private areas was slightly chubby, slightly curly hair, bad skin (acne), and eyes set wide apart. He was rude, aggressive, and very excited to feel me up in one of your private rooms. He was so awful, I went to the desk afterwards to complain to the woman there. She agreed that I was treated rudely.

please provide me pictures of the agents, so I can move forward accordingly.

thank you.

She has traveled four times since she became eligible for Precheck and has only received the benefit once. She asked why and would like to verify her number.

4/17/2015 2:10:47 PM She indicated that she was traveling with liquid medication and the TSO advised that voided Precheck. She received additional screening including a patdown and a physical inspection of her bag. She indicated that she had questions about international travel as well.

Reason for the call:

Caller wants to tell us about his experience going through security. He has had great experiences before. He spoke to us (at the airport before) and was told to call us when he had a compliment. Recently, he had a negative experience for the first time. He believes that perhaps we don't care. He opted out of the screening technology as he always does. The TSO, Thomas, at PHX, Gate A6 was a middle aged male. He had shiny shoes. He tried to be friendly to the TSO and said he had nice shoes. He states that the patdown is never pleasant. He gave him his BP and DL. He didn't know where he was supposed to go but was told to go to the very end. He walked ahead of him which was uncomfortable. When they got to the end he was given vague instructions. The TSO had an edgy attitude. He was told to put his DL and ticket -in there-. The TSO had his shoes in a bin and his 2 bags. He was taken to a cubicle area. He didn't know what he was talking about, what he was being instructed to do. The TSO seemed surprised that he didn't understand. The TSO asked what he does for a living. He asked why. He explained that he was a designer. He felt insulted by look on the TSOs face and mannerism. After screening-patdown-ETD testing ended, he told the TSO he didn't understand what he was told because he can't read his thoughts. what he was trying to communicate. He explained that he felt insulted and the TSO said he needed to work on the way he interpreted things. He said he didn't. That the TSO did because he works with the public. He states that being friendly can go a long way. This was the first time he had a complaint. He asked a STSO to give him the TSOs name to speak to someone to get his name. The STSO was not friendly either. The STSO was -walking away from him while listening to what he had to say instead of documenting it-. One TSO gave him a card. He was the friendliest of everyone. The STSO was heavy set, white, male and bald with slight hair. He had 3 stripes on shirts. Even his wife was amazed by the way it was handled.

4/17/2015 3:58:54 PM His wife wanted to say something too. She travels a lot and she hates TSA. She states that maybe there should be a box where travelers can submit a survey.

I just wanted to thank the wonderful TSA agents at the Denver airport who did an extra security check on my checked bag on April 16th. There is nothing like getting to your destination after a long day of traveling and opening your neatly packed suitcase to find it in complete disarray! Wow! And my favorite part was opening up the large cosmetics case I carry all of my makeup in to find that it also was in a state of disorder. Nothing was where it was supposed to go. I suppose they just wanted to be consistent :). However, nothing brought a smile to my face like seeing three different powder and foundations without their lids properly replaced. Having all of my things covered in makeup was just the highlight of my day. I mean, I had planned on eventually replacing the 500 dollars worth of professional makeup they ruined, so I just wanted to say thank you for the head start! I had so much fun on my vacation running around trying to replace everything that was ruined. It was like a miniature

4/17/2015 4:01:59 PM scavenger hunt! Once again, just wanted to say thank you for the excellent services provided by your thorough and caring TSA agents. Maybe next time I will be one of the lucky passengers pulled aside for one of their special "hot passenger pat downs" I hear they are so fond of giving. I'm rather offended that it hasn't happened yet. Am I not pretty enough for your agents?! Oh well, maybe next time. Looking forward to the many more trips I will have to take through you'd wonderful establishment!

Toodles!

To whom it may concern,

I believe that I was unfairly pointed to secondary screening (pat down, full examination of my personal items, etc) at Denver Intl Airport TSA on 8 April 2015. I also believe that TSA agents behaved unprofessionally in handling my screening. I have attached a signed document describing the incident. I've also attached a picture of my boarding pass and my wife's boarding pass. You'll notice that my pass has no S row, although it has been punched 4 times by the gate agents.

In regards to the information request, please note that I am a 30 year old white male, and my wife is a 29 year old white female.

4/17/2015 Please respond at your earliest convenience.

Good afternoon,

I was watching CNN today and they are talking about repeated incidents of groping at the Denver airport by TSA agents. I was coming through the airport on March 27th, 2015 and found the experience odd and uncomfortable to say the least. I was originally cast to the lower security line with "no shoes or belt off", right, or so I was told? Wrong? I was told to remove my belt after I walked through screening. Then I was pulled aside for a personal screening which ended up being a groping as I was patted down like I was carrying something. Why? I don't know. I did forget to take a bottled water out of my backpack and that was ok to give that up but the rest of the experience was very, well, disturbing! I don't know why I was sent through a line where they say no belt or shoes or taking computers out and then having to go through a head to toe pat down. What is that line for? I went through the same process in Houston on the way to Denver with no issues. Please let me know your protocol for this complaint.

To whom it may concern,

I am very disgusted with your Las Vegas tsa agent (b)(6) lane 8, 4/15/15 at around 3pm. He was discourteous, and, more so than anything, he rammed his hand SO HARD up my leg during a routine pat down (of which I have had very many) my left testicle was bruised and I had to remove my underwear out of MY RECTUM. If I were not a gentleman, I would have decked him. I have never been treated so bad in my 40 years of travel. He has no Bussiness dealing with the public. This is my formal complaint. I have many friend that twitter in the multi millions...

When in Minnesota on my flight to LAX travelling with the same cream i didn't have a single issue. My daughter needs her cream at least every two hours and now has to travel without getting cream for a total of eight hours due to flight delays. My daughter had a dirty diaper that spilled out to her clothes that i was trying to change this whole time in the span of about 20-30 minutes. TSA would not allow me or my wife to grab a diaper to change my baby. When they were done they told us that we had to back downstairs and check the cream in our baby bag that we planned on taking on the plane with us and that we would have to go through security a second time. As we went through security a second time my wife felt violated as she had to get touched by a TSA officer for a pat down after being told she had tested positive for explosives. This turned out to not be the case. While there were some pleasant officers most were rude and seemed angry with their jobs. One of the officers even stated in front of customers that she was actively looking for another job due to her unhappiness with TSA.

On February 2, 2015 I took a evening flight out of LAX. While being processed through the security screening area I was pulled out of line for a pat down . The TSA (GUY) conducted a pat down on me. All seemed normal until he got to my crotch area. The guy actually took hold of my penis (through my pants)and begin to palpate it with his hands and fingers . I immediately stated hey what are you doing? He looked at me and said what is that? I told him my penis, he response oh ok you can go. After it was over I noticed a female TSA agent working the computer area laughing. My wife witnessed the whole thing. My full name is (b)(6) please check your records on the above-mentioned date February 2nd 2015 and you'll see that I did take a flight out of there. if you have video footage of that day and the gate that I went through please review to confirm what I am Telling You.

Comments:Went through the electronic body scanner and was asked to step aside. The TSA agent then asked me to undue my belt and proceeded to place his hands inside my pant area, front and back. Hands were down a few inches. Pat down of buttocks and area from groin to lower leg.

Today, while departing ORD, I was groped by two different TSA employees. The first rubbed my privates through my trousers. Due to a disability, I wear a brace on my leg. I m 64 and walk with a cane. After the initial groping, and having my shoes swabbed and cleared. I was told I needed to have my brace checked, and directed to a private room. When I said I wanted to have whatever was needed done in public, I was told I had to enter the private room or not fly. Faced with this, I was escorted into the room by a single TSA employee and told to drop my pants. While swabbing my brace, I was again groped. Afterwards, I insisted on having a direct answer to my question of whether I was within my rights for the screening to be completed in public, and the TSA employee refused to give me a yes or no answer. Attached is a photo of the employees badge.

I had a distressing experience on April 7, 2015 in Eugene, Oregon.

First of all you need to know that I am a 65-year old white woman who is in a wheelchair as an incomplete paraplegic, level T1 from a spinal cord tumor. My biggest problem is pain. The right half of my body feels like broken glass is pressing into my flesh, with any prolonged pressure. The left side feels like hot needles pricking me with any contact, especially with any brushing/rubbing motion. My legs need to be handled gently. Any abrupt movement causes painful spinal cord spasms.

So, I booked a 2-hour nonstop flight to Los Angeles (American 2885), figuring I could tolerate that. My worst case scenario happened. Our plane returned to Eugene, causing me to have to accept flights to Portland and then Los Angeles. My 2-hour trip turned into 11-hours of torture. Needless to say I was in excruciating pain, unrelieved by extra medication, by the end of the day. I knew this might happen when I heard the news of our plane turning around.

Therefore, when I found out I had to go through TSA again and have a complete pat down by the same person who had just done it previously, I was on the brink of tears. I had to submit to that additional pain and embarrassment again. I was in view of TSA, escorted by airport staff the whole time. It just seems ridiculous, to me. I am in tears again as I think about it. Can there be no sense of judgement with your employees? How many terrorists have presented themselves in my condition? I had presented the TSA blue card and explained my condition, too. While being respectful, she was relentless.

4/19/2015 5:05:48 PM Then, on my return flight, April 14, 2015 (American 2885), the TSA examiner was too busy chatting to be gentle with me, brushing my left side painfully and jerked my right leg up without warning, causing pain and spasms. A teaching word: any time someone moves another person's body part they need to inform them and wait for acknowledgement/permission. This happened too fast for me to respond. I didn't expect it.

I thought I was prepared to travel this time. I hadn't seen my 86-year old mother in 9 years, due to hers and my handicaps. I was not prepared for the tortuous trip I ended up with, though. I just wish there was some humanity in your system.

Sincerely,

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening.:

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Yuma Airport, April 19th at about 8:00 A.M. U.S. Airways.:

Comments: On April 19th I caught an 8:45 flight from Yuma to Honolulu via Phoenix. There was only one female TSA agent on duty. This female TSA agent opted to do a "pat down" of me after I passed through the metal detector. No alarm has sounded but she said she had to do a pat down since I was wearing a dress. She had me stand in full view of everyone in front of the metal detector and she put her hands on either side of my leg reaching as far as my genitals which she touched quickly but hard. It was moderately painful, and also disquieting.

I've been an American my entire life, I'm a woman in my fifties and do not fit any common sense profile of a "terrorist". I found the so-called pat down to be a violation of my personal liberties and a disgusting display of ignorance. There is no need to debase citizens arbitrarily for the sake of a false sense of safety. There was no excuse for what would be seen as a sexual assault in any other circumstance.

The TSA continues to be a disgrace by rendering innocent Americans suspected criminals based on nothing more than their style of dress. If the TSA can't tell the difference between normal, innocent citizens and potential "terrorists" or criminals and is allowed to randomly touch people's genitals we are not a safer country, but a more dangerous place to live as the government gives others the right to sexually molest its citizens in the name of safety even when there is no danger.

I frequently fly out of Jackson, MS and have received a TSA precheck known traveler number. With my knee implant, I'm required to receive a pat-down search and although expedited, it still takes a few minutes of my time and of your screener's time. Isn't there a better way?

4/20/2015 10:09:20 AM For my work, I am screened by the FBI to maintain unescorted access to several commercial US nuclear facilities. The screening is more comprehensive and occurs at least on a 3-year frequency. I understand that TSA and the FBI are different agencies with different purposes and methods. Isn't there some way to take advantage of these other types of screening to minimize the impact on travelers?

Thanks for you time,

I am writing regarding a preflight screening experience I had in Denver on Wednesday April 15th at about 5:05 pm. I entered on the north side in the main terminal through the TSA Pre Check lane. I placed my bags, one carryon suitcase and one handbag, on the screening conveyor and walked through the metal detector. An alarm sounded. The TSA screener told me I had been selected for "random". He did a swab of the outside of my suitcase and inserted it into the instrument and another alarm sounded. He told me they would have to do further screening. Another TSA person came, moved my belongings to the search area and began by swabbing outside my bags and then proceeded to swab every pair of shoes and then my hair iron. I was unfamiliar with this degree of scrutiny having never been subjected to nor observed it while going through security at airports. I asked what the alarm was and was told, "E1". That meant nothing to me. I was getting annoyed by then and sarcastically asked her if she was going to swab my toothbrush with the same swab after swabbing my shoes. The situation escalated quickly from that point.

I am a very experienced frequent traveler. I fly almost weekly for work. I have also completed the TSA Known Traveler screening including an interview and fingerprints. In my 15 years of frequent travel, I have had one very objectionable TSA screening experience and many small annoyances that were not memorable. I have been selected for random additional screening that amounted to a swab of hands and perhaps baggage that added no more than a minute or two to screening time. The experience I had at DIA on April 15th was an outrageous experience and took over an hour and caused me to miss my boarding position.

After becoming annoyed at the swabbing of every personal item in my suitcase and a visual check of everything in my possession, I asked for a supervisor. The supervisor arrived in a very aggressive manner toward me. She was outright militant and authoritarian. Having not committed a crime, I was not about to put up with this approach and treatment. She took everything I said and tried to twist it to elicit an inappropriate response from me. I was very indignant and angry by this time. She accused me of interfering or rather she used the term, "obstructing". I think I told her to do what she had to do. She alerted armed security and three uniformed and armed police officers moved in toward me along with a shady character who seemed to be a commander or some such thing. He looked like he was the leader of a swat team. He began whispering to other TSA screeners in the area. I counted and I was surrounded by 12 TSA/ security/military persons. This scene was so ridiculous to me. It irritated me further and I actually found the absurdity laughable. The rest of the processed took place and I was finally cleared. Once cleared, the supervisor's provocation and ridiculing continued when she twice wished me "have a good rest of your day".

There are many things about this incident that trouble me deeply.

First is that screening is voluntary, and when an alarm sounded I seemed to become "Public Enemy Number One" in the blink of an eye and when I did not roll over and act contrite like a person might who was caught doing wrong, I was subjected to very harsh treatment. I was told in so many words by the supervisor that I had no choices or options and I was subject to her complete authority. In hindsight, given the mood of the situation, intensity of scrutiny and the manner in which I was being held in suspicion, I think I should have been read some rights. At least, I think, I should have been afforded the courtesy of an explanation and given notice of the procedure required to clear me for flight from the alarm.

I have done some looking into false alarms during TSA screening science my incident and understand better now that they occur with some frequency. This is all the more reason to expect the TSA screeners to do some explaining before launching into the assertion that I am a criminal carrying explosives with intent to do harm. I have to question, are all of the expertly trained TSA people that hungry to spring into action that they practice their skills in facing a potential threat on a fifty- seven year old grandmother from Broomfield, CO traveling for work? The same person who is afforded the trust to drive a car - which can be turned into a lethal weapon and the same person who participates in the civic process to elect our law makers and serve on a jury. What happened to me is JUST PLAIN WRONG.

Secondly, it disturbs me that I participated and paid for Know Traveler when none of the information was taken into account in how I was treated. I question what is the purpose of obtaining an Known Traveler Number and submitting to fingerprinting and an interview if it is not taken into consideration in a situation like this? I can only speculate it is a money-making enterprise for a government contractor and possibly a PR facade for frequent travelers.

Hello.

Traveling over the weekend I had the usual unpleasant experiences with TSA agents at Denver's airport (e.g. the scanner showed something "suspicious" on my abdomen, I pulled up my shirt to show the agent that there was nothing there, and despite that, or possibly because of it, received a very public, prolonged, sarcastic and I believe deliberately intrusive pat down that involved 2 agents, one of each sex, the female patting and the male leering and both visibly enjoying their power to do this); I travel through this airport often, expect this sort of petty abuse of power, and have learned to tolerate it without comment, so no surprises there. The surprise came in Baltimore yesterday at BWI, when I lost a sweater during the screening process, and one of your agents, Officer (b)(6) took the time to look for it, and did it--here's the weird thing--cheerfully.

I wanted to take the time to recognize Officer (b)(6) as both a wonderful ambassador of TSA to the public and as a kind and helpful individual. It is my hope that this compliment will reflect well on her, although I do have a concern that identifying her as a nice person may negatively impact her career. It is not always necessary to harshly bark orders at the public, and her approach was both appropriate and much appreciated, so please don't punish her for it. No doubt she's as good as anyone else at intimidating people, but she seems to also have a sense that it's not always necessary to be mean. I wish that you had many more agents like her.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

To Whom it may concern,

I have been talking to TSA Customer Service, Supervisors, Police Detectives for the last 3 weeks. I am hoping you can help me? I am writing this letter to communicate what I have experienced as a violation at the Mpls./St. Paul Airport, CP4 on Sunday 3/29/15, apx. 1:10pm.

Below is the account of what happened to me, which I have told Police Detective (b)(6) (b)(6) TSA Customer Service Representative Claudia Aldermen, (612) 201 (b)(6) and Supervisor (b)(6) at the check point after the violation.

I was traveling with my Husband Sunday March 29th, 2015 on Delta Flight #914 Departing Mpls/St. Paul Airport at 3pm to LaGuardia. At apx. 1:10 pm we went through Check point 4 and I requested to hand check my therapeutic grade essential oils to avoid X-ray damaging their potency. Officer (b)(6) (did not get her 1st name on the complaint form only LTSO), explained I would need a pat down and a Male Officer(did not get his name), I was told would go through my personal effects I was traveling with.

They each asked me a question: He, if there was anything sharp or pointed in my purse, She, if I wanted to go into a private room for the pat down. I said no to both questions. I had just traveled through the Airport 2 weeks prior visiting my sick Mother and numerous times in the past with my Family living there and was quite familiar with the pat downs at MSP.

Officer (b)(6) asked me to step on the feet diagram, arms extended outward. Behind me she starts the exam. I knew she should be telling me when she touches the buttocks she was using the back of her hand. As she came in front of me, eye to eye, I mention this to her, and she says she did tell me and I didn't hear her, as she's touching the front of her hand moving upward on the inside of my leg. I say to her like this, referring to the front of her hand on me. " You are supposed to turn to the back of the hand on my private parts and you are not", she ignores me and hits me square in the opening of my vagina and external genitalia with her fingers on a vertical with enough force to feel it in my entire body! I am nauseous and stunned!

Again I reiterate, using the back of the hand on private parts, as she starts up the leg again using the front of her hand and is near my crotch, again hitting me square in the opening of my vagina, violating me! She said she needed to touch all the way up to my torso until she meets resistance...and I said but that is my crotch and you've touched me there twice! She said I kept stopping her doing her search and needed to do it again! But you've done it twice already, I said. At this point I look at the face of the male officer, shocked, hoping he'll stop this and he looks at me like a deer caught in head lights saying nothing to stop her! I tell her I am going to file a complaint!

She starts again up the leg, what I feel, was to purely humiliate and belittle me in a punitive nature with malicious intent. There was no need to do it a third time! I felt abused!

Sexual Assault charges against fired employees statement of status / policy

Comments:

Hello,

I was just reading an article about TSA pat downs that the palm of the hand is not used. Well, you need to tell the TSA screeners that in Miami. I was stopped and I was patted down several times, groin and buttocks included. I had a brace around my waist which is no more than a gold gyms brace. I offered to take it off and they would not allow me to do that. I had traveled for the last 10 years of my business career. I retired two years ago and this travel experience was the worse! I ask several time if I could take it off and they kept saying no, I have no idea why not. It ended up that they took me to a room patted me down again and that is when I told them I was taking it off and I did. You could feel that there was nothing under the brace, so I proved it! Simple as that. I was not pleased with the way I was treated or the ladies attitude. Let's hope that does not happen again because it makes it makes for an unpleasant trip. I went through that same airport on the way to my destination and had no issues and with the same brace. The regulations do not seem to follow from airport to airport.

Respectfully submitted,

What happened?

A alarm went off re carry on luggage TSA swabbed bag. I explained it was my Jewish prayer boxes in silver boxes. They show as 2 Black boxes as I have travelled the world for 25 years.

There was nothing from swab however the agent proceeded to empty my bag, order a full pat down I believe because the agents name was (b)(6) and I was Jewish. I have never been put through that kind of treatment and didn t deserve the indignity.

I am. Global Entry ID. security pre approved.

REASON for the call:

Caller said there was a situation at SLC when she tried to return home on Saturday morning on United. She was supposed to fly at 8:30 AM back to Albany. When she got to the Checkpoint at SLC the TSO pulled out some items that had been allowed on prior flights and was going to throw those out. (Caller said something about a gift for her sister and when asked for clarity she did not seem to recall saying that.) She said she is nervous and she is on a disability and they only had one Gate to fly out of and she complained to United about that before getting in line. She said all she asked TSO was why the cream that said 7 ounces on the outside and was clearly more than have empty not allowed. She said the TSO did not answer her and that made her (Quote) riled up (Unquote) so she told the TSO she wanted her to answer. Caller said the TSO brought over someone higher up and she was in her face so that upset her and the tears started. She said the TSO yelled at her so she began to cry loudly at that point. She told the TSO that she was Bi-Polar and that being yelled at was unacceptable and she was going to write their names down. She knows the one TSO was named (b)(6) but she thinks she stole the paper with her name on it. After that the TSO said she can go in a private area for additional screening because they needed her to lift her shirt. (Caller would not answer my questions about lifting her clothing or the Patdown and she was not making sense and her thoughts were random) Caller did say that she had already gone through XRay and a Patdown already at the end of the machine.

AM

Caller said she (Quote) flipped out (Unquote) at some point because of her Bi-Polar disorder she ran over to a wall and started screaming and banging her head. She said she was screaming I will not hurt anyone but myself but she missed the flight because TSA called the police on her.

Caller said if she has to fly again she is going to bring a doctors note about her Bipolar disorder because if she asks a question the TSO needs to answer.

She said later her checked baggage had been inspected as well which was alright. When asked she stated what she is looking for today is to report (b)(6) so something goes in her file about being rude.

Date Time: 4-18-15 She was at the checkpoint approximately 7:45 AM (She was due to fly out at 8:30 AM but missed the flight after the Police came and flew out later but not sure of the time)
Gate Terminal: Does not know
Airport: SLC
Airline: United
Flight #: Does not recall. She came back later and left on another flight.

REASON for the call; Caller wants to complain about how her bag was searched. Her two suits that were on top were crumpled up. She had an ipad and she asked if they turn it on. She flew from BOS to PHL and back. The issue happened out of PHL.

Date and Time: April 10th at about 10:10 am but she checked in the bags about 7:30 am
Gate and Terminal: NA
Airport: PHL
Airline: JetBlue
Flight Number: 160
Bag tag # (b)(6)
Bag Description: It is a royal blue bag American Tourister brand and medium in size with wheels.
Missing Damaged item description: two suits that are crumpled up
NOI present (writing on it): Yes with nothing written on it.

10:54:00
AM

She asked if she can carry on the ipad.
She asked which screening device affects insulin pumps, AIT or WTMD. She said that she was bothered by the patdown because she was in a suit. She has been hassled over juice so she started to bring raisins. She received Precheck. She had to walk around in her stockings on the dirty floor.

Dear TSA:

I am a member of TSA Pre. I paid the fee and spent the time to have myself approved for this knowing that I had to use the full-body scanner whenever I flew. Up until this month that had never been a problem. If the TSA Pre did not have a scanner or it was not manned, I was escorted to the operating scanner and allowed to proceed through with out the removal of all the necessary items usually required.

On April 9 at DIA and again on April 16 at DIA both times on the West side I was required to remove my shoes, my plastic bag of goodies, my jacket and wait in the usual line because the TAs Pre scanners were not operating and no one would escort me through the other side (I asked two different agents- one on the TSA Pre Side and one on the regular side).

I realize that there are times when the scanners are not working BUT accommodations need to be made when this occurs. Pat-downs for female flyers is not the option since it is always a wait for a female assist thereby defeating the purpose of enrolling in TSA Pre.

I am at Tampa International Airport concourse "C" and ask if this makes sense.

I go through security and the metal detector alarms go off with the surgical titanium plate, cage, and screws in my neck so I get a pat down to see what concealed nonsense I might have. We all know I can't bring anything metal through security or in our bags. Now that I am past security I want a bite to eat so I find someplace that serves not fast food and the waiter puts these in front of me...

Caller emailed a complaint. He also wanted to make a verbal complaint. His compliant number is (b)(6). He went through the checkpoint at JFK on 4/19/2015 at approximately 3 pm. He was flying on JetBlue. Upon entering the line he proceeded through the screening process. He was instructed by a TSA agent at the front to read the instructions prior to entering the screening location. The instructions indicated that there was no need to remove shoes or belts and that cell phones should be in carry-on bags. He followed the instructions and went to the metal detector. He entered and exited the metal detector. He did not hear it beep until the person behind him entered. The caller had on a metal belt that he had not removed per the instructions. After it beeped he was sent through the AIT. After he exited the AIT he was told that there was an anomaly in his groin area. He was told that by a black female agent. He did not get an explanation as to what the anomaly was. He was told to go back through the AIT. After he came out the black agent showed him a picture with a yellow flashing square in the groin area. The TSO asked for a supervisor. The supervisor asked if he had anything. He told him he did not. The supervisor performed a patdown. He started at his ankles and he worked his way up into the groin area on both legs. He did not find anything when he got to the groin area. He said that the AIT was not accurate and if it gives a false on him why can't it give someone who has something a pass. He was not given an explanation.

Disability Description: Caller is in a wheelchair and uses a cane and has a metal knee.

Incident Details: REASON for the call: Caller had a really bad experience at the Denver airport. She is a senior citizen and she was flying out of Denver and she has been taking these trips for several years from Denver to Virginia and this trip was the worst experience she had ever had. She was in a wheelchair severe and has severe problems with her legs and the TSO made her stand and go through the AIT. The TSO told her there was something wrong with her skin and that she had something dangerous on her skin. She had just taken a bubble bath and she had moisturizer on her hands. The TSO took her over the side and harassed her for 30 minutes. The caller told her she was going to miss her flight. The TSO said it was too bad if she missed your flight. The TSO swabbed her fingers, purse and her carry on and told her her hands were toxic. The TSO took her to a private room for a checkup while some big black guard was watching and smiling through the whole thing. She waits for this amazon to show up to fondle her and grope her bottom and she almost missed her flight. She is appalled that an old woman gets pulled out of a wheelchair and the TSO had an attitude. She also has a metal knee and they made her stand there without her cane. There were hundreds of people there watching her and the TSO was nasty and treating her like she was a felon. The TSO was a short black lady and she wouldn't talk to her like a human being. The caller was wearing jeans and pink print top and short white hair and purple and black sketcher tennis shoes.

4/21/2015 Caller lives in Denver, and was travelling from Austin on April 8. She was subjected to a patdown of her groin area by a woman TSO, and after she announced she was not wearing underwear, the TSO ended the patdown and rushed her along. She suggests that it was a false photo with a black patch over her crotch area. The TSO that brought the photo and took her aside was male officer. She is a prosecuting attorney, and accustomed to security screening. The incident was unusual in the way that it was carried out. The TSO involved had Long, brownish hair in a modified bun, was 5 10 to 5 11 and about 160-165. United flight UA3701 departed just after 8pm. She arrived around 6:30pm at the checkpoint. She specifically mentioned that she is not traumatized. She stated that when travelling from DIA she is accustomed to a more thorough screening experience, but AUS tends to be more lax.

4/22/2015 Caller would like to report a TSO at EWR because of discrimination. Caller was traveling with two friends from PR. She has two hip replacements and medication for her illnesses. Caller does not feel that they have sufficient machinery to do appropriate screening for passengers that have metal implants. Caller had to have a patdown and she felt like she was treated like a criminal. She requested to have a private screening and the TSO screamed at her. Caller is young and felt that the TSO was treating her badly because she had hip replacements and she is not older. Caller felt humiliated because started to give her a patdown in front of others. Caller feels that she was treated badly because she is a latina and the TSO was a black woman. Caller feels that many black people hate latinos. Caller feels that the TSO discriminates against everyone who appears to be foreign because she felt she was also treating some Indian people badly as well. Caller felt horrible because she had to yell to the TSO what her medical condition is and feels that it was a violation of HIPPA laws. Caller is crying on the phone because she is so upset. She does not have a lot of time because she has to go back to work and could not provide further information. Caller states that the incident was not during a customs inspection. Caller will call back with more information.

On 21 April 2015, on or about 8:15 A.M. I was patted down at San Diego Airport by a man not wearing TSA uniform. There were two men not in TSA uniform and two men wearing the TSA officers uniform watching the pat down. I was riding my electric power wheelchair. I informed the man that was not wearing the TSA uniform that I am 85 years old and I am paralyzed from my shoulders down to my feet. He patted me down, squeezing my whole body to include, my arms and my thighs from my crouch down to my legs and feet several times with his open hands; the TSA officer man wearing the uniform told him what to do. Then he kept telling me to bend forward, move my body to right and to the left, and lift my arms several times. I can only lift my right arm by holding it up with my left hand. Then he swabbed my shoes.

Is this the new procedure for patting down an 85 years old quadriplegic riding an electric power wheelchair?

I have been flying since 1994 riding my electric power wheelchair. This is the procedure that the TSA officers do. The TSA officers in uniform pats me with the back of their hands. Swabs my hands, wheel chair and shoes.

10:00:48 PM Then when the patting of 75 years old and above was implemented, the TSA officers swabs my hands, shoes and wheelchair.

I will appreciate your response.

Thank you very much.

Caller had two complaints:

She went through security at TPA and the customer service there was bad. She did not get a name or badge but the TSO was very rude. She said they spoke to her in a rude tone. She stated that she has an aversion to the AIT machine and who wants the patdown. Her concern is that even though they say they don't have the naked machine anymore, how can that be true. She thinks the software did not get changed out and someone in a room somewhere is looking at your naked body. She would like to be contacted with information how they changed out that software. She stated that she believes TSA and the public have been lied to. ADD: Caller stated that she had no email.

He asked what happened to his TSA status. He hasn't received PreCheck for the last two flights. He didn't receive it once in January. Delta advised that his information matches in their system and referred him to TSA. He is eligible via the Application Program.

He doesn't believe that this is random.

REASON for the call:

Caller flew from CLE to ATL to SFO.

She flew to SFO on Sunday and didn't want to go through radiation.

She opted for a patdown.

She says that the officer didn't even do a patdown on her body, she used explosive trace detection. She said the officer went through her luggage extensively.

The officer said this was the routine. She never performed a patdown, only performed explosive trace detection.

She says when she got to SFO, all of her supplements are missing from her checked bag. She originally carried it on at CLE, had to check it in at ATL. There was no NOI in the bag, so I assume the medications went missing at CLE during secondary screening on the carry on. She lost this whole container of supplements.

To whom it may concern;

On April 14, 2015, I had a flight booked with United Airline Flight number 1152 departing Las Vegas, NV at 10:36am arriving at Chicago-O Hare airport at 4:20pm. When I arrived at the Las Vegas airport around 9am, I greeted by a super sweet gentleman who checked my bag for me at the curbside assistant desk for United Airlines. After my bags were checked, I walked to the TSA checkpoint line which was roughly halfway filled with other travelers (about 3 rows of people). As I was standing in line, I kept to myself and thought about my upcoming meeting in Chicago. This trip was a very important business trip for me. I work as a Federal employee for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) as one of their national experts on radiation and nuclear terrorism. The meeting that I had less than 24 hours away was to meet with various national experts to discuss EPA's plans, preparedness, and resources to respond to national incidents involving radiation and nuclear material. As I was thinking about my meeting, I noticed the line behind me was getting very long. It was roughly now 6 lines of people. The line was so long that it went past the designated ropes and began to wrap around the wall. A few minutes later, I noticed a TSA Agent staring at me. I was almost to the front and had maybe 7 people ahead of me to get our IDs and plane tickets checked. The TSA Agent that had been staring at me began to walk towards me. He went through the line of people. The TSA Agent was a very large, African American male and many people had to move to the right side of the rope to let him pass by. His name was (b)(6). I followed the people and moved my belongings to the right side of the ropes (still staying in Disability Description: Caller has been traveling a lot over the last month and she always has her medical items which she is allowed to have. Caller said that she just went through TSA in SEA and the TSA agent made her go through her entire bag and made her throw away some of medically necessary items. Caller said that she gave her a very aggressive patdown as well. Caller said that she made her prove to her that it was for medical purposes and then made the decisions to not let her take it regardless. Caller ask for a supervisor several times and she told her that she was the supervisor so she was out of luck. Caller said she told her that her items did not look medical and she had to prove that to her. Caller said that she feels like she was being discriminated against and she would not allow her access to a supervisor, she would also like for someone to call her and she also wants the video to be reviewed. Caller said she was also told by the TSA agent that she was only allowed to have one quart bag with all her liquids and medical items in it.

Caller wants this information also sent to the CSM at SEA.

Caller just now completed his Checkpoint screening at San Juan Puerto Rico.
He never goes through the AIT and always gets secondary screening.
He said they gave him a Patdown as usual and then gave him the ETD Swabbing as usual and nothing beeped on the machine.
At that point one TSO said to the other, that machine is not working right today.
They took him to a private room saying he needed to have a second Patdown in private and 2 TSO s were there and they did not inform him that he had a right to have a companion present.

4/24/2015

8:30:26 AM The TSO did tell him before he began that he needed to perform the patdown with the front Side of his hands in his groin area.
When the TSO got to his private parts he was rubbing his hand acrossed his genitalia and continued to rub him through his pants.

He wanted to know if that is considered proper procedure for TSA.

He said he does not want to lodge a complaint with the CSM because he flys from there every week and does not want to start having issues over it.
He thanked me for my time and would not give any additional information.

Comments: I don't know if this is where I can get information but I would like to know something based on an experience I encountered while going into the USA from Canada on April 7, 2015.

When I arrived at the security check I accidently had 3 lighters on me and hadn't realized I had that many in my carry on bag. They then gave me the option of pat down or through x-ray machine. I chose the machine. I arrived at the TSA booth and the first thing the man asked me was if I was carrying $200,000.00 cash on me, I did not. He then asked me how much money I had in my bank account and I said about $800.00. I do have rrsp's but he didn't ask me about that. He then said he wanted to make sure that I was coming back to Canada. With all the other questions (which I can't remember), I almost missed my plane and was crying so hard by the time I boarded the plane. I've been to the USA before and never experienced this before. This was a very stressful situation as I am on disability due to failed back surgery and this situation shot my pain level up so high that along with the long trip, I was in so much pain, I could barely walk when I arrived in Las Vegas, Nevada.

10:05:44 AM I am asking if there is another woman with the same name as mine that could be the reason why I felt I was being treated like a criminal. If that's the case, I would like to know as could she have taken my identity or why? This is very concerning to me.

Please let me know if this is the correct place to get this info and also would like to report my experience on April 7, 2014.

If not, please forward the above to the appropriate people.

Thank you for your time.

To whom it may concern:

I have a complaint regarding the behavior of (b)(6) STSO, during my recent security check at O'Hare Airport, Terminal 2, Checkpoint 5.

The incident occurred just before 1PM on Tuesday, 21 April. I was scheduled to depart on Delta flight 5946 to LGA at 1:30PM.

I usually try to leave extra time for security check because I always opt out of the body scan. I have received a pat-down many times now, and the female agents performing the pat-down have always been polite, respectful, and communicate clearly before, during and after the pat-down what they are doing & how I can comply with procedure. In this case, the swab test after my pat-down set off an alert. The three female agents on the scene explained they had to swab my luggage as a result. While they were doing this & waiting for results of the swab strip tests, they began to look upset & kept going over to a neighboring area where other passengers were clearing security, picking up baggage, putting on shoes, etc. I was kept waiting, but I figured there was simply more to do. I did notify the agents that my flight would begin boarding in a few minutes.

The agents then told me that I was being kept waiting because they had completed the luggage swabs, the tests were clear, but that procedure required I now be patted down a 2nd time by a female supervisor. They said their supervisor was refusing to do it. They asked me if I wanted to file a complaint. I was more worried then about making my flight. I asked if a male could pat me down; they said no. It was a stand still. The three female agents said it would help them immensely if I complained about being made to wait.

2:13:06
PM

Suddenly a woman rushed past me, grabbed my luggage, and walked away. I was surprised, and asked what was happening. The three women said that was the supervisor. I had to follow her. She disappeared in fact around a corner, and I could not see her. I said I was very upset by this behavior & asked, should I make a fuss. The agents said yes.

I yelled as loud as I could while rushing to catch up to (b)(6). I did not know her name, because she hadn't identified herself. I ran around a corner shouting as loud as I could, where are you going with my luggage. She did not respond. I followed her to a cubicle. I demanded that she identify herself, that she tell me what was happening, and that she tell me how to comply. She did not answer my questions, and would not look me in the eye. Another agent followed me and said this would be the 2nd pat down. The cubicle was for privacy. I had not asked for privacy, and (b)(6) had not asked me whether I wanted it. I told (b)(6) I would be happy to comply, but that she had not told me what to do. I told her I was extremely angry that in an airport, where I as a traveller am required to keep an eye on my luggage at all times, she would simply take it and walk away. At no time did she acknowledge my complaint, apologize for her rudeness or explain pat-down procedure (as agents always do). I complied as best I could, and was quickly cleared (b)(6) then left without a word.

The three female agents who had helped me before then strongly urged me to fill out this complaint and supplied me with (b)(6) name and title. Clearly she is not a good supervisor and makes their jobs difficult. I would like to make this complaint on their behalf as well as my own. Without them I would have no idea what was going on, or what to do in order to pass security.

I am disappointed and concerned that (b)(6) holds such a responsible position. In an airport, you don't take someone's luggage and just run off. In airport security, you have to communicate with customers in order to carry out security procedure. If (b)(6) can't even handle the basics, she should not be working for TSA, much less supervising anyone.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

4/24/2015 Description of Problem/Inquiry

4:16:44

PM

I noticed in the DoT's quarterly report that surprisingly few complaints had been received by DoT about security screening practices and just thought I would pass one along, just in case there is a pattern of problems. I was held up for an unusually long time (about 20-30 min) at EWR Terminal B in the area preceding gates B60-68, in what was either a legitimate series of mix-ups (understaffed check-in and false positive on a screening system), "or" was a punitive attempt by staff to discourage people from opting out of whole-body screeners. I can't tell the situations apart, so On 24 April 2015 at about 1:00pm, I opted out of the advanced screening at the TSA security line. It took about 5-10 minutes for a male screener to come to pat me down, which was a bit confusing as I thought I saw screeners standing at an X-ray machine line that was not in use. I received a public full-body patdown, which is a process I'm familiar with. Unusually, the screener's little cotton pad threw an angry red 'alert' when passed into the explosive detection system at the end of the scan. ("Oh man it alerted, it's my gloves" - he appeared to be unhappy). I was traveling with my wife, who had collected my things in the meantime and was waiting for me. The screener retrieved my suitcase and backpack from where my wife had collected them, then ran little cotton pads inside the backpack, inside my laptop, and inside the suitcase, in each case putting the little pad into the explosive detection system (which in each case beeped 'green' / no explosives). The screener then grabbed a supervisor and took me to a little private room, where the supervisor explained that because of the prior apparent false positive explosive detection system result, he would do another pat down, this time using the front of his hand. I then burned about 2-3 min chatting with the supervisor about the fact that it "appeared" that the long wait for a supervisor and false-positive explosive detection result (from an agent's used gloves) might "possibly" be punitive behavior designed to discourage opt-outs. I am sure that the TSA's behavior was by-the-book correct but I would question (1) the amount of time it took to get a male screener and (2) how the screener's gloves came to trigger an explosive-detection alarm. It would "appear" that both (1) and (2) might have been arranged punitively. I obviously can't tell whether that is the case, but will pass along my experience in case there is a visible pattern that should be acted on.

DEPARTMENT OF TSA:

I am 74 years old and I have a hip implant. I plan to have knee implants surgery this year. My implants cause a lot of trouble when I go through TSA scrutiny. I am subjected to the rudest, most insensitive people I have ever met in my life. They take ALL of the pleasure out of traveling by airplane. I fly first class but it makes no difference, I am always perceived as a threat and I am always targeted for extra pat-downs and abuse.

At least twice a year, I travel round-trip to Orange County, California from Bellingham, Washington. On March 16th of this year, I went through Bellingham check-in and was surprised to receive a laminated VIP slip and told I didn't need to remove my shoes. I was so relieved to think my nightmares were over. I walked toward the scanner and was startled to see a TSA employee rushing toward me with her hands out yelling NO, NO. I fell back onto the conveyor but was able to prevent myself from literally falling onto the ground. I shudder to think what could have happened had I fallen onto my hip and no way can I get onto my feet due to my arthritic knees. I was put through a sweep around scanner and patted down for weapons and bombs. I was extremely upset and remained so for the rest of my flight.

4:16:48
PM

On my return trip to Bellingham from Orange County airport, again I was again put through the scanner, after that I was pulled to the side and thoroughly patted down and tested for bombs. When I asked why I was causing so much alarm, I was told I had a wrinkle in my jeans. I said that surely a wrinkle can't be the reason for such an embarrassingly thorough search. The TSA agent glared at me and said, Are you threatening me?

This happens EVERY time I fly. I used to enjoying flying/traveling with my husband but your terrible behavior has insulted my 83 year old husband so much that he refuses to get on an airplane any more.

I do not know why I am subjected to such cruel, mean, rude behavior. I do not have an attitude, I strive to be kind and nice to other people. I obey the law. I have never even had a traffic ticket. My husband is afraid for me to write this letter because he believes I will be put on a list and it will be much worse. However, I am getting ready to fly to Alaska next month with my daughter and I am already scared and having nightmares. This isn't right and TSA shouldn't be entitled to do this to me.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening..

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Alaska 2251 on 4-24-15 Portland.

Comments: For years my elderly mother was hassled every time she went through security even being strip searched once. This was dealt with at the time. She recently passed away. I carried her ashes from Las Vegas where TSA employees were very respectful. In Portland, even though I showed the permit, they took my mother's ashes to do tests on the box. This was totally insensitive and disrespectful. Again, TSA employees in Portland need to understand what is not right with their actions. Even in death my mother was hassled again by them!

Calling in because she wants to know how to go about filing a complaint. The TSOs were trying to not allow her to bring her medically necessary liquids. She has several food allergies and had to take her own food. She called TSA Cares before her flight who told her that she would not need medical documentation. She sent her cooler through the Xray and they went through it and they told her she could not have the items inside. She spoke with their supervisor who told her the same thing then she spoke with that person's supervisor who also told her it was not allowed. At this point, she was upset. The supervisor told her to stop yelling. He threatened to call the Chicago police and to have her undergo a patdown. He asked for documentation stating that she needed the items, and luckily she had something. After about 15 minutes of arguing with them the supervisor told the TSOs the just let her go and get her out of here.

In the cooler she had a half bottle of water, maple syrup, and mustard.

4/25/2015 She does have a disability recognized by the ADA. She is very upset that this happened to her. It happened between 6 and 6:30pm at MDW. She does not have any names.

TSA in Charlotte needs some MAJOR training.

We were returning from a company earned trip to Cancun, Mexico with Team Beachbody. We stayed at the Moon Palace Resort, 5 star all inclusive resort and it was AMAZING.

We flew into Charlotte from Cancun and I will NEVER do that again. Customs was organized and efficient. Security was not.

The line for security was long and things were moving slow. Once in security, we pulled out all items we needed to for proper scanning. This is not our first time traveling for pleasure or business. After all our items were on the belt, one TSA agent (at the belt) directed my husband, myself and our daughter to move toward 1 scanner because we had a child.

Then 2 different TSA Agents had different instructions for us. ONE wanted us to STOP and a THIRD was waiving us through. Needless to say, it was VERY confusing on who we were to listen to and ALL demanded we listen to them....ummmm how is that possible?

So we stood still now knowing WHO was in charge. We all went through one scanner and then I was directed to a second scanner.

I was through 2 different scanners and nothing found. My bag was through the scanner and no alarm. TSA did not take my bag aside.

After security cleared my bag, contents, shoes, etc. One TSA agent directed another to stop the belt so we could gather our things bc too much was coming through. We could not repack fast enough. We repacked our belongings and walked away from the belt at security. There was no red flags and I was permitted to walk away by security. Only to be told after all that, my bag alarmed....so why was it never pulled aside and why was I permitted to be repack it and get dressed?

So why would security clear a bag, contents and the person and then pull them back in? The only thing they would say is bc i had a battery? UMMM, all laptops have a battery...and I could not have been the ONLY one in security with one. This particular laptop has gone on MANY business trips with me before and NEVER was an issue. Why now? Shady.

I have no idea what they did with my laptop, bag or contents because they took it out of my site. I was then instructed to take off my Old Navy flip flops, again and my light jacket, again to be scanned...again. I let the TSA agent know I just put that all back on...he said i had to do it again and give him my bag. This felt really wrong...but i a bilged bc we had already been 2 hours in lines since our flight landed, went through customs and now trying to get through security to make our flight and we were cutting it close. HE also instructed me to take everything out of my pockets...umm i didn't have any. So WHO really alarmed...the person behind me? I think this is all shady or these TSA agents need someone to train them properly.

As they took my belongings somewhere, out of my site, a female TSA agent informed me i needed to have a pat down...for what? I was wearing yoga pant capris a workout tank, underwear, bra and old navy flip flops. I was in form fitting yoga capri

TSA management.

I'm writing this e-mail in regard to a recent trip I had this last week. I don't expect a specific response to my experience nor do I want one stating I'm sorry your experience wasn't more positive because let's be honest when are any of our experiences pleasant when it comes to the TSA and traveling.

What I would like from my e-mail are changes in the TSA system and how it's run but I know this won't happen either since it is a government run program and let's be honest the amount of time it take to purchase new technology or change a procedure when anything is government or state run, the changes are already outdated. It is disappointing that although we live in the United States of America, the greatest nation on earth, we are still light years behind other countries on technology and procedures with that said here is my story.

My first experience in where the TSA is lacking in technology is the AIT machines. I find it ridiculous that with all the money spent on these machines and the invasion of privacy they require that they are not sufficient for screening. By the way, your statistic that states 4 out of 5 people prefer them is completely inaccurate but when are surveys ever accurate?

On my flight out of John Wayne airport on 4/19 at 7:45 am to New Orleans I was screened at approximately 6:15 am. After proceeding through the AIT machine I still had to have a pat down because of my zipper on my sweater. I was told that the next time I should zip it in order to avoid the pat down. Really, with this highly advanced technology, which clearly it is not, I still have to endure a pat down.... In all my trips to Europe I have never, not once had a pat down. Clearly the technology the TSA purchased was made in haste. What type of research and which experts looked into to choosing the technology needed in order to make traveling safe?

My second pat down, in which I was taken to a private room, no explanation on why I was taken to a private room was on 4/25 at the Denver airport. I went through security at approximately 2:30-2:40 pm traveling from Denver to John Wayne airport. Now we had missed our connection the day before, not our fault of course, but because airlines are allowed to provide 45 minutes in between flights which is only enough time to make the next flight when they are on time and let's be honest when are flights ever on time anymore? I was traveling home with my family, which included my husband and 2 young children along with my parents. Clearly my traveling experience wasn't enjoyable to this point and I was upset at all we had to endure so far. I was carrying my one year old son through the metal detector and as usual The TSA needed to test my hands with their state of the art technology which detects chemicals... Well low and behold it tested positive for something and I was told I would need further screening.

So the TSA agent took my items and as she was standing there another female agent came and tested my purse and shoes. Even though these were passed whatever test you do with your state of the art technology I was told I would need a pat down in a private room. Excuse me, a private room? Well at this point I broke into tears. They told me I could bring in a family member including my 6 year old daughter. Well wouldn't that have been pleasant my 6 year old watching me cry as I was getting patted down and asking if they were hurting me. When I was brought into the "private room" I was reaching for a kleenex, located in view at the top of my purse, in order to dry my tears which were streaming down my face at this point, I was rudely asked what I was doing and I wasn't able to have anything in my hands. Once the TSA agent realized I was reaching for a kleenex she told me I could have it. Well, at this point why not let the tears flow. I'm traveling with my family, subjected to a needless pat down in a private room, and told nothing along the way. After the several minute more extensive pat down I was handed my items and told I was clear to go.

Not once was I given an explanation of what chemical was found, and why this ultra sophisticated machine decided to let me go after I was further tested. When my family and I asked for a further explanation on what chemical was detected we were told it was classified and they were only doing their job. Well maybe your TSA agents could do a better job if they were equipped with better technology. The only thing I had put on that day, since we had no baggage, was lotion and my dirty clothes. I'm curious how many false positives you get with your highly advanced chemical detection machines but this is probably classified as well because if the public knew what outdated testing was being done and what a waste of time it was we would all be furious.

REASON for the call:

Caller would like to know how he can make a complaint on two TSOs at FLL. Caller has metal implants in both of his hips and his shoulder and he uses a cane. Caller was there at 7:15, and his flight was at 7:45. Caller got a patdown 8 times, and was asked what was in his pants. Caller informed the TSO just his underwear.. Caller had a medical belt on for his lower back, and the caller was required to take of his back brace for the patdown. Caller ended up missing his flight. He was given a card by the STSO, and her name was (b)(6). She had a shaved head. The TSO that screened the caller was named (b)(6) had no consideration for the caller's medical condition and treated the caller like he was a criminal.

Caller went through the screening checkpoint at BWI on April 9th around 5:00 am and was totally embarrassed. She was told to stand to the side and the officer just started patting her down and did not say she was conducting a patdown. The officer that conducted the patdown was a small female with a dark complexion. Caller is upset that the officer got in her personal space without asking. Caller stated that it took her a couple days for her to get over this issue and is wanting to be compensated for what happened to her. She is wanting the CSM at BWI to contact her as soon as possible so she can let them know how much she wants compensated for.

I am just writing in an effort to make my travels through security more effortless. I am stopped every time I go through security for a pat down. When I asked if there was something I was wearing that was the problem I was told they were just responding to alarms but didn't offer any specifics. I have no metal in my body and don't even wear jewelry or metal buckles to avoid any potential problems. I would love to make things easier for everyone. It happens 100% of the time and despite trying to wear different clothing each time I've had no luck. They also always swab my hands and tell me to pull my pants higher but not sure how that is effecting the machine. Can you please offer any information as to what I could be doing that is causing this problem?

Caller flew yesterday out of ATL through the South Terminal @ 9:42 am and was denied his right to get a private screening and was kicked out of the TSA line for asking for a private screening. The Agent refused to give his badge number and name. He refused to allow his friend to take a picture at the screening checkpoint. The officer that refused the private screening was (b)(6). The caller usually goes through the Precheck line but was not selected on this flight. When he got to the checkpoint he realized that he did not get Precheck and ask to go through a patdown screening. The officer that was conducting the patdown was an angry man. The caller was in a good mood that day and was laughing and giggling during the patdown and told his friend to take a picture during the screening because he thought that it would be cute to put on facebook. The officer conducting the patdown refused to pat the caller down due to him laughing and giggling. The officer then called (b)(6) over to conduct the patdown and was told by this officer that if he did not cooperate he would have to leave the checkpoint. Another agent came over and ask if the caller would like a private screening and he said yes. At that point (b)(6) said okay that s it you are just playing games so you are out and he kicked him out of the screening area.
AM He then went to another screening checkpoint and went through the WTMD and spoke with supervisor (b)(6) badge # (b)(6) who was extremely nice and told the caller that he was permitted to take photos at the checkpoint and that the other agent was not allowed to escort him from the screening checkpoint a police officer should have been told to do this. The officer told him to go back to the first screening checkpoint and confront the officer and get his name and badge number. He told officer (b)(6) that he now knows that he did not have the right to escort him from the screening checkpoint and ask for officer (b)(6) badge number. The officer turned away and advised him that he did not have to give this information and said that he would have him arrested. He then ask to speak with a supervisor.
He is wanting the CSM at ATL to contact him back.
I recently enrolled in GOES and (thus)TSA Pre-check. As it happens I have previously been through the TSA Pre-check system a few times prior to my enrollment. I have noticed that each airport seems to handle us differently and would like some clarification.

At ORD in Chicago, everything went smoothly and as I had anticipated. At PHX in Phoenix, people were told to carry their boarding passes with them and then were passed through the system without taking off shoes, etc.. again as expected. At DEN in Denver, however, it fell short of expectations. When I told the personnel there that I had an artificial hip and would automatically set off the metal detector, I was told that I had two choices: to go through the metal detector and then have a full pat down, or to carry my boarding pass and carry-ons along to one of the regular lines (directly). And so I did the latter. In spite of the Pre-check status and a lengthy and unsatisfying conversation with TSA staff, I was then required to go through the complete procedure of removing shoes, taking out laptop, etc.
Thus I have a couple of questions and a comment: Why the discrepancies in approach among the different airports? What can be done to make the DEN experience less difficult/less onerous? My comment is that this is all being done through a US-wide management system, and it seems that a directive from the national headquarters is needed to get this all to be a helpful and consistent process in all the US airports. It would certainly help the traveler know what to expect at various airports and would enhance the image of TSA.

I look forward to your reply.....

Today I was at the Charlotte Douglas International Airport traveling from Charlotte, North Carolina to New York, New York. While waiting to go through the security checkpoint, I watched a woman wearing yoga pants and a tank top endure an invasive pat down from a female employee. I was uncomfortable seeing the employee press firmly, circling the passenger's breasts and repeatedly coming into contact with her groin as she felt up the woman's legs front, then back and again.

I felt sorry for her. I hated watching the TSA agent manhandle her. It seemed highly inappropriate.

I had no idea that I would be selected for the same intrusive treatment. I have been lightly pat down before. This was no "light" pat down.

Although I went through the body scanner, I was selected for this "enhanced" pat down. They asked me if I wanted to endure it in a private room. But I was traveling alone and had no one to come with me. As an abuse survivor I was afraid to be alone with people I do not know or trust.

So I had no choice but to submit to this fondling. The employee pressed hard, encircling the entire frame of my bra underwire. The only person who touches me like that is my doctor for a breast exam!

She touched my pubic bone four times as she felt up each leg from the front and again from the back. I was wearing skinny jeans and a thin, long-sleeve t-shirt—rather close fitting clothes. So it was even more humiliating to feel her so acutely on my body, since there were no thick layers or bulky clothes to blunt her touch. I squeezed my eyes shut to keep from crying. Although the TSA employee was female, I did not know her sexual orientation. I didn't know if her touch was standard protocol or if she was being inappropriate with female passengers.

Then I watched as a male employee sorted through my undergarments in my carry on bag. I don't know what felt more violating, having a woman feel me up like a man does, or having this male employee squeeze my bras.

When I asked why I was being singled out for this horrible treatment, they said I set off an alarm for explosives.

The only thing I can think of is that I pumped gas for the rental car to return it at the airport. But I've done that many times before while traveling and never was singled out for this horrible treatment at the TSA checkpoint.

Will joining TSA Pre-Check mean that I will never again have to submit to such intrusive treatment? Every sexual abuse survivor should be told of ways that they can opt out of being felt up.

Please advise.

Thank you,

REASON for the call: He flew from Belize to Birmingham AL via ATL on Saturday. TSA inspected his bag at ATL. 2 bottles of hot sauce were broken inside of his bag and created a mess. The caps of his three bottles of medication were not on the bottle. The medication was mixed together and crushed. He will have to purchase the medication.

The caps should have to be replaced. He is at risk for a blood clot as he doesn't have his medication.

Last August at ATL, he opted out of AIT screening to receive a patdown as he read that such screening often caused cancer. The TSO took fifteen minutes to conduct the patdown and the caller felt that this was punishment for opting out of AIT. He indicated that the patdown should have taken 30 seconds.

Caller would like to make a complaint.

Her daughter, 14 has a diabetic pump. They had negative screening experiences at Salt Lake and San Diego airports.

She cannot go through the WTMD. They separated her from them for the patdown.

She had to wait 10-15 minutes for the TSO. They were friendly but not helpful. When her bag of medical supplies needed to be xrayed. The TSO in charge of the Xray stated he was going to lunch. They had just take the Diabetic medication, supplies which could not be screened by Xray out of the bag. They had to wait for someone to come and supervise the Xray machine.

At San Diego. They separated her daughter from her again. No one came to help after her for at least 15 minutes. When the TSO arrived for the pat down she stated, "You took my off my lunch break for this?"

These experiences scared her child. They look like police officers when they really are not. She is not trying to get anyone in trouble.

She would like more training or education provided about Diabetes to the TSOs. The screenings could have been much smoother.

She does not want follow up.

On 4/26/2015, I was scheduled to depart Bellingham International Airport (BLI) at 06:40 on Alaska Airlines Flight 544 with service to Seattle (SEA) and continuing on to Missoula (MSO).

At approximately 05:45 I entered the TSA screening checkpoint in the airport. There is only one such checkpoint. As is my policy, I "opted" out of the scanner and requested a private screening.

The private screening went according to SOP until the TSA officer did the glove test, which triggered an alert. This is the first such alarm activated in over 50 such situations.

According to the TSA personnel, the alarm requires a 2nd pat down. The 2nd pat down was similar to the first, and what I am used to, except that the officer ran the back of his hands directly over my crotch area, making direct contact with genitals through clothes.

Regardless of if the officer was working under a TSA policy or not, this is considered sexual assault (groping) in nearly every jurisdiction of the United States.

First and foremost, I would like to know if it is TSA policy, during 2nd pat down after explosives test, is to run the back of hands over crotch area of passenger. If so, we have a serious institutional problems that need to be changed, immediately and without delay. I will be the agent of that change.

Regardless of your policy, the TSA agent is guilty of sexual assault and I will be pressing formal charges. Please advise me, and connect me to if necessary, the relevant Federal Law Enforcement that would take such a complaint. If this is under the purview of my local jurisdiction, then please advise and I will file formal charge as soon as I am able to identify the officer. I want an in-person interview with someone in authority who has powers of arrest and/or prosecution, not just a phone conversation.

This is not a joke, or an exaggeration, or a time for you to roll your eyes and write this off. I will not allow my fellow American Citizens to be groped by those representing the federal government, and it ends with me.

To assist you in identifying the officer, please see attached letter that has been sent via first class mail to TSA Headquarters, regarding the incompetence of the officers at this particular airport. I am not looking for a response to my concerns in this email from whomever reads this, as that is a separate issue. The screening process was fumbled from beginning to end by your officers, ranging from gross incompetence to outright illegal activity.

Thanks you for your time and assistance in this matter, and please feel free to ask any questions which will help further your investigation and/or assist you in connecting me with appropriate law enforcement authority.

Comments: I was traveling alone with my 5mo daughter and attempting to bring a 4oz bottle of breastmilk through the screener. I requested a hand check of my breastmilk as I did not want it to tip over and spill on the conveyer belt. The agent took my milk from me and took it away to screen it out of my view. She did not ask permission to open it, nor did she verify that she was using fresh gloves. When she returned it to me, she had spilled over half of the milk.

It is my understanding that agents are to ask the passenger to open the milk, at the very least ask permission. In her failure to follow protocol, she had wasted breastmilk that is very difficult for me to collect. I have notified the supervisor on duty.

To Whom It May Concern:

Yesterday, April 28th, 2015, I flew from Cancun, MX to Chicago Midway. At Chicago Midway, I was required to go through the screening process again after clearing customs, along with all others who were transferring to another flight. During the screening process, I asked to not go through the full body scanner as I'm pregnant and I am very careful to avoid any harmful substances that can be avoided. I was willing to go through the metal detector, but was told it was not an option although there were three women that were allowed to avoid the scanner right before me and go through the metal detector. So my choice was either the full body scanner or be patted down. The pat down was embarrassing and quite frankly unnecessary since I was willing to go through a metal detector. I was clearly pregnant as I'm 25 weeks. I understand the need for security, but where is the common sense? Since passengers are able to be randomly selected to go through a metal detector and that's acceptable, why wouldn't it be acceptable for a pregnant woman to walk through a metal detector? I flew two times when I was last pregnant in 2012, and I was checked with a hand scanner and not physically patted down.

I understand the need for security procedures, and maybe these procedures are more effective than I give them credit for. However, I flew on a plane into the U.S. with a screening process that was very easy for everybody and not intrusive at all, into a U.S. City to only be screened yet again but intrusively. It seems ridiculous to me and that there can be a better process put in place that is reasonable and effective.

Sincerely,

Dear TSA:

This is just to let you know about two travel problems I had today, both apparently TSA-related.

I was just down in Louisiana on a contract job working as a trainer for the U.S. Army at Fort Polk. Coming home today after a three-week assignment, I checked in two bags for a Delta flight in Alexandria, Louisiana. Small planes, small town, military bases all around. I was early - 2 bags checked in shortly after 9:00 am for a 10:50 am departure, AEX thru Atlanta to Washington DCA. I am also registered with Global Entry/Pre-Check, but getting me thru security today was easy. The folks doing the physical checks were friendly - although I was the only person I saw to get selected for a pat down - it was my bags that had the problems.

1. One of my two bags (the one with most of my clothes) did not arrive at DCA. Delta advised that TSA had held up the bag and it had missed the flight - in fact, it was still at AEX when I made the report to Delta in DCA about 4:00 pm. There are not that many flights out of AEX per day, and although Delta found the bag I may not get it until tomorrow. TSA in that tiny airport had over 90 minutes to check my two bags - and there was nothing strange in that suitcase at all - just clothes and toiletries...an excess of zeal? If they were short-staffed down there this morning, wouldn't an X-Ray have been the prudent thing to do? My other bag, containing some medical equipment and a musical instrument, was also opened, but it made the flight. Was it necessary to physically open every bag - and then miss getting one (or was there more than one?) on the flight?

8:48:12
AM

2. Then, when I got home with the other bag - I discovered that my TSA-approved padlock was missing. I bought TSA-approved pad locks especially so that I could lock my bags and still have them available for TSA inspections. I have used those locks for years. Did the TSA guys in AEX lose their master keys? or did they just lose my padlock?

I am not requesting any damages or compensation - I just want to let you know about this. I should get my other suitcase eventually, and I can buy more padlocks - but this was probably not really necessary either. This wasn't JFK on a Friday night - it was mid-day at a sleepy little airport with fewer than a dozen short-haul flights per day - and I got there early.

I am a retired federal employee with over 30 years service - and proud of it. Whatever happened at AEX this morning doesn't reflect well on all of us in the USG; and I just wanted to let you know so that you might do better next time. Thanks for hearing me out.

TSA Employee: (If Known) : White Male, in his 50's or 60's Comment : I'm sure there are many reasons for why people would rather not go through the x-ray full-body scanner at the airport. For me, I'm 12 weeks pregnant with my second pregnancy. I was first pregnant last year but miscarried in my 11th week. So I am a bit concerned about the health of my future child. I told the TSA employee that I was pregnant and that I didn't want to go through the x-ray scanner and would rather have "the other screening option." He immediately said "Ma'am, the scanner is standard airport security procedure and everyone goes through it" He said "I can assure you that these are completely safe even for pregnant women." I said, still, I'd rather not go through it and take the other option. But he tried to change my mind. He said again raising his voice and annoyed that "the scanner is your best option, I'm telling you its safe for pregnant women." I told him I wasn't so sure and really would rather not go through it. He said well if that's the case "you'll have to sit down and wait here a long time and get a pat down" and that's why it was "better to go through the scanner and I can assure you it's fine for pregnant women." He was adamant and actually pointed me towards the scanner, to the point that I almost walked through it and then my husband reminded me that if I really didn't want to go through the x-ray scanner, then that really was my choice. At which time, the TSA guy seemed very annoyed and told me to "sit down".

Last year when I was first pregnant, I requested "an alternative to x-ray fullbody scanners" at two different airports. They didn't act annoyed, didn't make me feel guilty for not wanting to go through the scanner, didn't argue or try to persuade me to change my mind, just said "okay" and explained to me that a female TSA employee would be here to assist me shortly with a pat-down and then immediately requested a co-worker for assistance, who explained to me the procedure. Instead, this guy basically argued with me, made me feel guilty, kept pushing me to go through an x-ray scanner I didn't want to go through, and made me feel like I'd lose out if I didn't go through the body scanner. Now that I've read TSA's website which states that anyone can request an alternative to the x-ray full-body scanner, not just disabled or pregnant women, I feel even more annoyed and wished I could have gotten his name. If he's going to be like this to a pregnant person, then how much more pushy will he be to someone who's not pregnant at all. It seems to go against TSA policy. It was very unprofessional and a humiliating experience for me. If someone is willing to get a pat down, then they should be allowed to get it without questioning, harassment, or intimidation beforehand.

Comments: On April 5 we were returning from Ghana to Rochester via JFK. The security line in JFK was extremely long. The gentleman behind us in line asked several employees if he could move to the front of the line since his plane left in 20 minutes, and the security line was clearly much longer than that. None of them would let him do so even though he was very polite. He posed the same question to the man at the podium checking boarding passes when he finally got to that point. The man kept staring straight ahead and totally ignored him. I know he heard him because when the gentleman asked, "Does that mean no?" the employee answered his question without him having to repeat it. When I asked on his behalf why he couldn't go to the front, I was told, "Because then I'd have to let everybody go to the front." This is of course, completely ridiculous. Only those with imminent flights would need to be let to the front - this is common practice. Ignoring someone is totally unacceptable. I've traveled extensively throughout the world, and airport employees in other countries are almost always more pleasant and polite than the ones in the US. Upon returning to the US, one is commonly greeted with barked orders and surly attitudes. The man was finally let to the front of the line by another employee near the x-ray machine. Of course, at this point, it was far too late, and he ended up missing his flight. A little courteous service could have avoided inconvenience, frustration, and expense.

Also, the length of the security line would be more reasonable if international passengers did not have to go through security again upon arriving in the US. The security check in Ghana was more extensive - involving multiple x-rays, pat-downs, and physical bag searches - than the one in the US. The US should work with other countries to arrive at mutually acceptable security protocols.

He completed a form via Talk to TSA, early today. He would like to get in touch with supervisory management with TSA at LAX to address this.

Caller said she flew from New Orleans to Dallas on Southwest and she asked why did the agents have to feel her stomach and squeeze it and why did she have to have the patdown done. She asked why was a male agent laughing at her and that she felt humiliated. She said she was not told that she would get the patdown done. She said she does not know why she was picked and she does not have any of the Officer's names and she did not ask to speak to a Supervisor. She said she had a belt on and they told her it was okay and she said she would have taken it off if she knew it was going to make it an alarm. She said they should tell her she is going to have a patdown and they should not laugh at people and it is humiliating to take off her shoes and belt. She said we should be more professional at the checkpoint.

RESOLUTION to the caller's issue: I advised her that I will refer this to the CSM at the airport

I was at the San Diego airport SWA checkin this afternoon. There is a body scanner on the Pre?? side but not the standard lane. I have a pacemaker. When I notified TSA officer, I got pulled for body pat down rather than be taken a few feet to body scan. I was told procedure didn't allow it. This seemed ridiculous given it would, or have taken any more staff or time. I don't want body pat downs. The solution is simple. Pls change your procedure so that we folks with medical devices don't have to be subjected to a personally intrusive pat down.

(b)(6)

Today I had the displeasure of being selected for a random extended pat down. I was TSA Precheck and singled out for additional screening. I have never been so humiliated in my life. First they wanted to touch my breasts, buttocks and groin area in the middle of the airport. I refused and asked for privacy. Well, shame on me. This resulted in having a hand forcefully split my breasts followed by a full cupping of each breast and NOT with the back of the hands as I was told would happen. I was then asked to spread my legs at which point she slid her hands all the way up to my vagina applying unnecessary pressure and then tight pressure all the way down my legs.

This type of pat down conducted anywhere else would be unwanted sexual advancement. I am appalled and do not understand how this type of search is in the interest of public safety.

I flew out of terminal C and entered the pre-check lane at approximately 10:35 am today.

What are the actual expectations of an extended search? This is way over the line!

Caller stated that she feels as though she was discriminated against for Race at the Sacramento Airport today during screening. She was pulled aside and tested for ETD and tested positive so they tested the other woman who also tested positive. She stated that after that she went and adjusted the machine and came back and swabbed the other passengers hands again and she then tested negative but they did not retest her hands. She said she had to undergo a very invasive pat down in which they touched her genitals while the other passenger was given an additional test because it was obviously a false positive and when she asked about it they laughed about it and made a comment about her using lotion that set it off. She said that all of her things were removed for hand inspections. She stated that it was a very terrifying experience and that the officers have lost sensitivity and the only difference between her and the other passenger whom they tested again was her race. She said she was very upset and due to that she did not think to catch their names and only had a time and their descriptions. She said she went through screening at about 1:25PM today at Terminal B.

Good Evening,

I wanted to bring to your attention an issue I experienced this morning at the IAH Terminal E security checkpoint traveling as a pregnant passenger. I was a TSA pre-screen passenger transiting the checkpoint at approximately 0730 hours. When I walked through the metal detector I was randomly selected to receive additional screening through the backscatter machine, however, I am currently six months pregnant and my doctor advised me against walking through this machine. I informed the TSA representatives of this issue and requested a patdown in lieu of walking through the backscatter machine. I was informed that they needed to find an agent, but was instead left waiting indefinitely. After five minutes I requested an update on an agent and was pressured to walk through the machine. When I refused, I was again left waiting. I also asked that my belongings be removed from the conveyor belt so that they could not be accessed by other passengers, but was initially told to just stand and watch them from the other side of the security screening. After discussing my belongings again, they were moved to the side so that others could not access them. After having waited for almost 15 minutes and after having been pressured again to use the backscatter machine, I requested to speak with a supervisor. When he arrived, he resolved the issue, however, when I tried to discuss with him the treatment I had just received he did not verbally respond and instead ignored my feedback entirely and walked away.

I understand that the airport is busy and that the agents are dealing with many situations at once, however, this situation seemed borderline discriminatory and does not appear to be in line with TSA guidelines. I appreciate your looking into and resolving this matter so that future passengers do not encounter the same type of inappropriate behavior from your agents.

I received precheck for my flight in Seattle today, May 3. I went through the tsa security at 5:30 PM and was informed that I was randomly selected for a pat down. (I cannot raise my arms above my head due to a severe illness). I cannot think that this is necessary.

I was very upset as I enrolled in the Trusted Traveler program to avoid drawing attention to my disability.

TSA:

5/4/2015 8:32:53 AM I am writing to inform you that upon passing through security screening at Jacksonville International Airport this afternoon (5/3/2015) between 1 and 2 PM, I was inappropriately subjected to a pat down of my natural hair. I requested the separate but not private pat down, and as a part of that screening, the TSA agent informed me that she would start with my hair, something to which I do not recall ever being subjected before (and I always request the public but separate screening). My travelling companion, who entered the gate area through the TSA Precheck, observed this screening and pat down of my natural hair. She was horrified, and informed me that TSA had recently agreed to cease this inappropriate and unfair search of the natural hair of women of African descent (I am of Asian and African heritage). I expect that your organization is committed to keeping its agreement to stop such searches, and will educate its Jacksonville International Airport agents to be in compliance with such decisions.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Comment : Very bad customer service - I have tsa precheck as does my wife but we were treated very poorly by the staff. I was told to leave my shoes on and laptop in my bag. My bag was flagged to check and then sat for several minutes while the tsa agents ignored it. When I finally asked about my bag an agent begrudgingly checked it and told me I should have removed my laptop.

5/4/2015 8:33:25 AM My wife was subjected to a full pat down search as well as an overly thorough bag check despite having a known traveller number. They unwrapped a delicate piece of artwork that was in our carry on baggage But had no resources (tape bubble wrap) to rewrap it. We nearly missed our connecting flight.

5/4/2015 2:48:09 PM The caller flew last Saturday from DFW to JFK. She found a NOI in her luggage around her nightgown. She received a patdown and was also upset with that, she didn't understand why she received it. She is in a wheelchair. She is a senior citizen and said the way she was treated was appalling. The patdown was at DFW, she said she was treated much nicer at JFK.

5/4/2015 5:10:16 PM Caller has a concern that needs to be addressed. She booked on Southwest airlines for a vacation package from Punta Cana, the Dominican Republic. She came home last night into the US to Chicago, Midway then Pittsburgh. She understood she can travel internationally with liquids in a 3-1-1 bag. She had concerns for screening for the alcohol. She had SSSS on their boarding pass. In Midway they were given another boarding pass and she did not know why. Her husband has several disabilities as well as a pacemaker. They were taken to a private screening where the agent gave them a patdown. Then the lady took out the 3-1-1 bag and found the seal was torn. The agent then started swabbing her camera and personal items for explosives. A TSA man told her she would have to check in the bag with the alcohol or throw it away. The agent told her she would need to go check in the bag and that her husband would have to stay there. She says her husband has short-term memory loss and she stated her husband needed to come with her. She then spoke to a lady at Southwest who told her she would have to check it in and she was told this on the plane. She and her husband had to be screened again and a second patdown. She is upset the agent that was doing the swabbing test did not explain this to her but the second time the lady told her about it.

Why did they have to have a second patdown for their screening?

Comments: The TSA agent said she had to pat down my breast. She put her hand between my breast then patted an outline underneath them. I explained that I am a breastfeeding Mom who had not pumped all day. Then she said she had to test my hands. I told her I was uncomfortable and she was pressing hard enough that it hurt. She told me to lean forward so it could go quicker.

On April 15th caller and her husband flew from Victoria Canada to SEA on the way to JFK and her husband was selected for additional screening and she stated that they checked everything he had from him to his bags. She said it was very thorough inspection and they spent a very long time checking every single thing even the gloves they were wearing during the inspection. She said she wasn't disputing the need for the inspection but while he was in the room he had to remove everything and due to all of the screening his wedding ring was left in the room. She said she located it and spoke to Alma in Lost and Found and she had it sent to them via Fed Ex. In order to have it sent she had to pay $30 and that is what she is disputing because it was not their fault that it was left behind. She described one of the employees as a tall African American male that was possibly about 6 foot 3 inches and bald and the other was Caucasian with brown hair and average weight. She said his boarding pass did not contain SSSS on it and it has never happened on their multiple trips from Canada but he sometimes does have to have a Pat Down due to 2 hip replacements but never anything like this.

Hi

5/5/2015 12:14:31 PM I recently flew through Denver airport and I was pre-check and flying on United airlines out of terminal B on Thursday, April 30, 2015. However, the pre-check area for the United Terminal B does not have a "raise your hands" scanner, and I have a hip-replacement which usually is detected. As I typically do, I asked the agent to go through the "raise your hands" scanner, so that I would not have to go through a pat down. I was escorted by a TSA Agent and I also asked the person if I needed to remove my laptop and personal hygiene liquids. I was told no. However, I was approached by several agents and was reproached for not following rules, when indeed I have.

Please address the inconsistency at this airport. It is very frustrating to me and I almost missed my flight due to the number of questions.

Dear Mr. Pistole:

I am an 88 year old WWII veteran who is partially deaf resulting from my military service and, my wife is 83 years old, who has an artificial knee, a plate in her skull and a stoma. We have each qualified for PRE as shown on our boarding passes.

We have recently traveled from Burlington, Vermont to San Diego and returned to Vermont.

At each security check my wife has been pulled from the inspection line and subject to the scanner, a body pat down search, and hand scan. This has now happened at each airport even though it has been brought to the attention of the inspectors of her medical conditions.

It is inconceivable that a person of her age with such disabilities to be a security risk. It has caused my wife anxiety and is demeaning to both her and me and requires us to be separately screened. Because of my impaired hearing my wife must relay to me whatever the inspectors ask of me. I cannot tell you how embarrassing this is to us.

I am aware that it is the policy of the TSA to be respectful of those who are disabled and they should be treated with consideration. I do not think that has happened to us, and it should be corrected.

I would appreciate your response and advice as to how this can be avoided in the future.

Very truly yours,

Caller wants to know when congress threatened the government shutdown. She believes it was around the end of February. She says that since then she has been receiving additional screening at BWI only. She says that she believes the officers are doing this to passengers because they are upset with the government. She first told me that no alarms sound. Then she tells me that they do. She says that she will get PreCheck on her ticket, but the line is rarely open, so she has to go to through normal screening. She says that last Saturday there was an alarm with the WTMD and they tried to get her to go through AIT. She opted to receive the patdown instead of going through the AIT. Therefore, the equipment does alarm and she opts for the patdown. She says that the officer told her it was a random alarm. She believes the officers are manipulating the WTMD to alarm just like the officers done in DEN. She says that it is a waste of TSA's time to do additional screening on a Medicare aged woman. The caller is very insistent on a response. She says they are targeting her. She says that this past Saturday made the 7th time this has happened. The only time it didn't is because she let a man go in front of her and he got the alarm instead of her. That is how she knows they are targeting her because she was supposed to be the one to go through that particular machine at that particular time. The flight was Saturday, May 2, 2015 and she went through security around 3 p.m. She says she was flying United, so it was at the United terminal B. She says she has another flight from there this Saturday and wants to know what to do if it happens again. She will be at the 703 area code phone number on Friday and then on Saturday will be back at the 408 area code number. She does not have an email address.

Good day,

I (b)(6) a traveling passager leaving through Las Vegas International airport today May 6th, will like to file a formal complaint against TSA agents and supervisor (b)(6)

I decided to opt-out the screening for process for a physical pat down. As my personal items and valuables went through the x-ray I was told to stand aside for a male assist.

Any other day this is a normal occurence but absurdly today I was separated from ALL my belongings for over 20minutes. Highly uncalled for and grossly out of protocol.

Please look into this matter for my items, id, money and valuables were at risk of being easily stolen.

After alerting the superviosr (b)(6) who was Very Rude, Nasty, Unremorseful, and very Sarcastic to this concern; regrettably I am writing this to notify her higher ups and TSA Corporate to look in to giving her and staff additional training and performance consequences.

This complaint is regarding my experience with an agent and supervisor at Washington Reagan airport on Wednesday May 6th at about 3:30 pm. I was flying Delta flight 1275 scheduled to depart at 4:55.

Nature of complaint: unnecessarily rough pat-down. I was treated roughly and unpleasantly by an agent to the point of loosing my balance while she conducted a full body pat down.

I asked the agent's name she told me it was (b)(6) I then asked to speak to the supervisor. The supervisor ignored me initially until I followed her to the office area where I asked for a complaint form. I do not recall the supervisor's name, but indicated to her there was no reason for the agent to be rough during a pat down.

Situation: I was coded for TSA precheck but accompanied my travel companion in the line for normal check. My shoes set off an alarm, so they pulled me out of line and told me I needed to have a full pat down. I requested to run my shoes through since I has already PreCheck and they told me I could not do so.

They also indicated that since my shoes alarmed that they needed to inspect all of my bags.

I have traveled alot and usually find the TSA agents to be professional--friendly, but serious about their job. I felt a sense of being violated by the way in which the agent treated me. There is no reason for a 57 year old woman, or any honest, tax paying US citizen to be treated the way I was.

Today my wife, who is pregnant, flew out of Milwaukee. Our doctor recommended that she request a pat-down instead of using the imaging machine. I understand that the TSA tells us that the imaging is safe for pregnant women, but we prefer to follow our doctor's recommendation. The agent who was assigned to check her was rude, condescending and made comments like, "You'll get a lot more radiation on the plane than through that machine" and "Your doctor doesn't know what he is talking about." If imaging is optional, why all the drama when a pat-down is requested?

With all the bad press that the TSA gets, I wanted to pass along that the agents in Milwaukee may need additional training on tact. My wife didn't get the agents name, nor did she want to call out someone in particular. Just hoping that someone with the power to correct these behaviors is informed.

Thank you for your time,

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Flight # 841 on Southwest Airlines , gate A, leaving Charlotte Douglas International Airport on Sunday May 3, 2015

5/6/2015 9:03:34 PM Comments: I have never in my life have been so violated by a person as I was when we went through security check point to catch our flight From Charlotte to Baltimore around 6:30 pm . I went through the the full body scan after I was asked to step out the female who was a young black security woman rudely told me to come over to the side . She asked me what I had in the pockets of my hoodie I had on. I pulled out my boarding pass and license and showed her then the black security gentleman turned to the female security woman and asked check her pockets I turned to him and showed him it was my license and boarding pass. the female security woman again rudely says I said come here . Next thing I know she squats down pats my pockets of my hoodie then goes further down and is tapping on my stomach asks me well what is this. I could not see because of my hoodie and asked the female security what was what , she then again pats my stomach area so I pull up my hoodie to look and I tell the female security that is my fat, she smirks at me grabs my hoodie and rudely says well dont show it. Now I must tell you I had gastric bypass surgery in May of 2010 . I was nearly 300 lbs. now I am @ 140 lbs and have a huge flap of belly skin that hangs down over my legs . So as if that was not bad enough the female security woman puts her hands together goes between my legs runs her hands up to my private area goes down a little ways then back up. Then runs her hands on the outside down my legs . Checks my hair touches up top near my breast area then tells me you can go. As I go to walk away I feel her grab the hood of my hoodie nearly choking me and starts to check the hood and down the back of my hoodie. Now I have had neck surgery and have a metal plate in my neck. I have lots of problems with my neck and I told the female security this even before I went into the full body scanner. The black security officer never told me what she was going to do to me , was inappropriately touching me with out my consent , then grabs my hoodie after she said I could go, causing my neck to hurt severley for days after wards . To me I feel that I was assaulted . Is this the new practice of security ?? At least on the return flight back back from Pittsburgh Airport to Baltimore when I went through security the female white security advised me she had to pat down me in my pocket area and asked if that was ok. She patted it down in the same area that the female security woman did when leaving out of Charlotte, N.C. Airport and said I was fine and could go. I understand that security has to be strict but there was no cause for what I was put through and humiliated , disrespected, choked, and violated and assaulted me like I was . I do not feel I was treated fairly and am considering calling a lawyer there was no reason for how I was treated by the female black security checker. I hope she will be talked to and retaught how she needs to do her job the correct way. Thank your for you time .

The caller recently flew from Chicago Mid-Way, had 8 ounce sealed bottles of baby formula that the TSO made her throw away in the trash without an explanation. The caller knew that baby formula was allowed thru the checkpoint. She was very upset because her baby was without food on the flight.

12:45:30 PM On the returning flight back to Mid-way the TSO at Tampa said that her diaper bag had tested positive for explosive residue, The TSO also stated that it could be equipment failure. The caller was confused to why they would tell someone it was equipment error then give a person a thorough pat down. They didn't offer a private screening, and this made her feel very embarrassed that she got screened in front of her children, and everyone else at the checkpoint. (b)(6) also stated that the TSO stated she was the only female officer there, and that if she didn't like that, that she didn't have to fly. The caller stated that she didn't want to cause a problem and she was embarrassed enough already, and that the only option she knew she had, was to call the TSA TCC.

To whom it may concern,

I'm writing to complain about a male TSA screener at the JFK airport regarding a pat down of my husband. The screening occurred the afternoon of May 6, 2015 after we had already cleared Customs and were proceeding to a Delta Airlines flight connection to Denver. Our connecting airline ticket was marked TSA Prescreen however, because my husband has had a full knee replacement and a shoulder replacement the TSA Prescreen was in fact even more inconvenient and caused us further delay in getting to our connecting flight.

My husband was scanned by the rapid, rotating machine scan a total of THREE times because of internal metal replacement body parts, small change in his front pocket, and his hat. Please note that because I processed through the screening before my husband I was able to observe the body imaging monitor from the scanner. Predictably, the imaging was yellow at both the replaced knee and shoulder areas. Additionally, my husband was frisked multiple times by this TSA Officer, and in my opinion, much more than what was absolutely necessary. His arms and legs were patted down, he was patted down with both his arms extended to the side, and more specifically his replaced knee area and shoulder were patted down. THEN THIS TSA OFFICER PATTED DOWN MY HUSBAND'S GROIN/CROTCH AREA AND WAS TOLD IT WAS BECAUSE HIS ...PANTS WERE HANGING DOWN TO LOW.

The pat down of my husband's groin area offended him and he stated to the TSA Officer during this pat down I know I have no metal there.

4:09:10
PM

My husband and I are frequent enough flyers and have been processed through enough previous TSA screenings to complain that the groin pat down was inappropriate and offensive! Particularly in this circumstance where my husband had already been through the rotating scanner THREE times and there was no yellow imaging from the scanner's monitor in his groin area.

It would be our opinion that TSA screening procedures should be modified and improved for such factors as body replacement parts that is sufficient for public safety and still maintains the body integrity of the passenger. Please contact us if you require further information.

To whom it may concern,

The article in the news that appeared on April 14th regarding TSA employees groping male passengers at Denver International airport happened to me on April 1st at the West Palm Beach airport at ~3:30pm going through security prior to boarding SouthWest flight 4814 for Baltimore.

I filed a complaint through your web site approximately a week after the article appeared in the news and asked to have someone contact me. This offense is obviously not isolated to the November 2014 time frame in Denver to which the article refers. To date, no one from TSA has contacted me regarding my inquiry. Please contact me as soon as possible to discuss this matter.

Caller has PreCheck and she has a knee replacement that causes an alarm. She gets a patdown and wants to know if there is anything she can do to bypass this. She also has a pacemaker and wanted to know if she would have to have a patdown because the doctor suggests that she doesn't go through the WTMD.

She said she would like to make a complaint regarding the screeners at LAX. She said they were extremely rude when giving directions, often barking orders at the passengers.

To whom it may concern,

I have to report an extremely disturbing incident that just occurred at Ronald Reagan National Airport in Washington, D.C. I would first like to note that I'm a frequent traveler and respect the jobs and duties of TSA agents. However, what occurred today was unacceptable and should not be permitted to continue.

I walked through the machine and I needed a pat down afterwards, which happens to me almost every time I fly. I don't mind the pat down and I'm not sensitive about being touched but today was different and it went too far. The agent, Agent (b)(6) told me she had to touch my hip area then as she did that she told me to spread my legs and she rubbed my vagina twice for each leg. I said "whoa that was inappropriate" and she snapped back that she told me beforehand that I had a problem with my groin area - which I never heard. Even if she did say this, after I expressed my discomfort she then made fun of me with travelers behind me in line. The next woman in line needed her arm patted down and she said in a sarcastic tone "ma'am IS THIS OK?"

I asked to speak to a supervisor and Officer (b)(6) yelled across the security area "Sorry for doing my job."

3:08:45
PM

The principal issue with this interaction was that she groped my vagina with no warning. If in fact she was not making fun of me with the next traveler (which she was) she gave more respect to that following traveler's arm than my private groin area. The second issue is mocking travelers who express concerns over their privacy and making light of a serious situation.

TSA has a hard job and I appreciate everything they do to keep our nation secure but the behavior I experienced today was appalling and is not the proper way to treat travelers or to keep our community safe.

Your attention to this matter is very much appreciated.

Sincerely,

Caller also wanted to know what she could do about wait times for a female assistant when she voluntarily opts out for a patdown. Caller is about to get on her plane and wanted a contact number for someone at ballimore

5/10/2015 Caller said he traveled today 05 10 15 at 11:00 am with Alaska Air he went through the only check point at the airport at Anchorage he was subjected to secondary screening before the pat down he asked for witness to be present. The TSO called a

3:13:27 supervisor named (b)(6) caller said the supervisor was not paying attention to the screening so he asked him to watch the screening since he was the witness and he treated him rudely.

PM

He then asked for a comment card and was told to call TSA. Do they have complaint cards at the check points?

I flew today from DEN to CLT, then on to ILM. I am a TSA Precheck person. I did this b/c I have an implanted defibrillator and am weary of pat-downs, etc.

I don't know why so often you have the old fashioned metal detectors as the only choice in the precheck line – we can't go through those – we need to go through the new ones.

In most airports, the TSA precheck person checks me through then calls over another TSA agent who shepherds me to the new scanner and it's fine.

BUT in DEN, noooo. The precheck person checked me in and just waved me over to the other lines (the only detector for precheck was the old type).

I got there and was told that precheck or not – I had to pull out my laptop, put it in a separate bin, etc. etc.

5/10/2015 And when I tried to explain I was already checked through and tried to show the boarding pass – I was snapped at. AS IF I DID SOMETHING WRONG.

5:20:02

PM

Please get the new scanners available for precheck people – or at minimum, have your staff at least be polite.

Dear TSA representative,

I accidentally left a bottle of water in my bag during X-ray. I was taken aside, with the bag, and subjected to a pat-down.

This is an abuse of TSA authority.

Why wasn't the bottle removed and the bag re-x-rayed? There were very few people at the terminal, and only one person behind me in line, so it would have been very easy to simply scan the bag again.

I believe your agent gave me a pat down to punish me when I stated that taking me aside, rather than re-scanning the bag was a waste of time. I complied with the agent, but I am not required to be happy about needless procedures, and I am not required to be silent about my displeasure. Requiring a full body pat-down, with minimal investigation of the bag, was very clearly an act of retribution and abuse of power, rather than a necessary safety check.

Please explain why having a bottle of water in my bag requires a pat-down.

Please send me a written apology, as well as details specifying how you plan to train your San Diego agents so that this does not happen again.

Caller enrolled in October 2014 for Precheck. He has only got Precheck once or twice and flies about twice a week. He has his KTN: (b)(6) His wife also has precheck. Her name is (b)(6) They fly on Southwest. He is trying to find out what is wrong.

5/11/2015 9:38:50 AM He filed a police report at Boston. He had just had surgery and had liquid protein in his bag because this is all he could eat. He had some issues with the AIT because he had trouble raising his arms. They found his protein drink and wanted to open it and he told them no. He was told he had to be searched. He was taken back in the back and thoroughly searched and was hit in his crotch. They could not tell him why this was being done. The police were called and when the TSO explained that they only go to the point of resistance in the private areas of the body and described what we do to the police they told the TSO this is not how patdowns are conducted. He was very upset by this incident and does not want this to happen again. The flight was April 12th at about 6 pm on Southwest He was wearing a blue or gray suit and tie. He had on a black coat and black cap. He does not have a name and description of the TSO but he was training someone new.

Caller wants to complain about his experience at LAX at 1800 hrs. on Friday. He is very upset and wants to make certain that his issue will be addressed before he provides any contact information.

5/11/2015 12:31:14 PM Caller travels quite often. He went through security like everyone else. He got the pat down because he opted out. The guy did the pat-down. He was then told that a sensor went off, and he was advised that it was picking up a substance. He searched the callers bag and then screened him again. He was asked to follow the screener to a small room. Caller disagreed. The screener told him that this is where it had to occur. Caller objected. Caller wanted the screener to contact his supervisor, and they came to the screening location. He advised that he wanted to have the screening done in public. He told them that he wanted to leave. The agents told him that he couldn't leave...he was refused. Caller said that, if this is a detainment, he wanted his rights read to him and he demanded his attorney. He was refused. He advised that he wanted a video camera turned on because he refused his rights and attorney. He was refused that. What were his options? Another TSA rep came down. Caller advised that this was the last flight that day and didn't want to miss it. He was already searched twice and did not consent to a search in a closed room. He reiterated the above information. The screeners left again and consulted with one another. He was advised that he was allowed to bring a witness. He got a stranger from the checkpoint. The stranger came in with him. The TSA agent, (b)(6) told him as he was searching that he would use the front of his hand on his groin. When the agent touched his penis, caller disputed the issue because there is a difference between the penis and groin. Caller screamed that they touched his penis. LAX PD was called. They refused to do the search for the screeners. The police asked if TSA was done. How many more times must they touch his penis? They searched the bottom of his shoes. The police told him to go on to his flight.

Caller wants to know why we would ask for his name, phone number, and e-mail address. What will we do with it?

Caller will provide an assumed name until he is assured that he will not suffer repercussions for calling in and complaining.

Comments: I opted for a patdown at the Dulles International Airport. Several things went wrong including:

- * the officer didn't put on new gloves, he already had his gloves when he came to the gate to get me and used those gloves for the patdown
- * my belongings were removed from the X-ray conveyor belt without me being present, which caused my laptop to go missing
- * I wasn't provided the verbiage about the patdown, including the verbiage about "sensitive areas or medical devices"

When I questioned the officer about not using new gloves, he yelled at me. Literally yelled at me.

Not putting on new gloves caused me to fail the patdown so I had to have additional screening. Everyone else throughout this process was very nice, my complaint is about the original officer -- not following protocol, yelling, incompetent, very rude, his attitude made it worse than it had to be.

Because my belongings were moved from the conveyor belt without me knowing or being present, my laptop went missing. I didn't notice right away, it was only during the additional screening that I noticed. They had to review security footage to see what happened to it. Apparently someone else in line stuck another tray on top of it and it got put back into the mix with the other trays. Luckily once this was discovered I got my laptop back.

I passed the additional screening. But none of this would have happened if the original officer followed procedure.

Caller flew this morning through the St. Louise airport. She is a frequent flyer and is very familiar with the TSA security process. She stated while she was in the AIT the machine the machine never scanned her. Then the TSO said she was clear and they never did a pat down. She stated she had items in her pocket and still had her shoes on. She also stated she has a metal knee and always gets a pat down, but did not this time. She stated that she tried to tell the TSO that they missed her but they acted like they didn't care. She said they acted distracted.

She flew from PHL to SEA yesterday at 6 p.m.

She stated she was randomly selected to go through the AIT and she did not want to do this, so she got a patdown. She was in a wheelchair and could not stand very well. She stated that the TSO did not treat her well and was rough with the patdown. She stated she was very rude. The caller could not raise her arms up due to pain and the TSO pushed her to the side. She has a lot of pain when she is touched and the TSO was very rough with her, even though she requested her not to.

Description of officer: Very large woman but she does not remember other details.

I flew from SFO to SDJ yesterday. Went through security around 9:30 am. I refused the AIT because of radiation concerns. I asked to go through the metal detector instead and they said no despite the fact that others were allowed to use it. My two traveling companions also refused the AIT and were allowed through the metal detector.

Instead, I had to wait 10 minutes for a female screener. She pat me down in public - the most thorough pat down I've ever had which included contact with my vagina 3 times. Then I was brought into a private room where I was pat down again by another agent.

When asking questions, I was told that "I must not fly very much," "that I don't know procedure" and that this is standard operating procedure. I would like to mention again that my friends did not have to go through this and neither did the couple behind me who also opted out of the AIT.

Reading your regulations regarding opting out as posted on your website, I should have been offered the option of the metal detector and was blankety refused. Instead I had a strange woman in contact with my vagina 3 times. This is a violation of my rights as a passenger and a human being.

I would like to know your response and the action that will be taken to ensure that this NEVER happens again to traveler.

I am sure that this is all on camera somewhere, and I would be more than happy to sort through footage so that these two women can be identified and you can see how I was violated.

UNACCEPTABLE!

On May 3, 2015, at 23:15 at SLC airport I was going through the screening process as I have done MANY times before. I have both hip and knee replacements and so I always let them know I will set off the alarm and then submit to a pat down. On this night, I was waiting to enter the x-Ray booth, and a TSA worker named (b)(6) at checkpoint 1 waved me over to her to go through a "swinging door" type thing and I started to tell (b)(6) that I knew I would be setting off the alarm as I walked through, but before the words came out the alarm went off, and (b)(6) began scolding me in front of everybody that I was supposed to tell her BEFORE entering that I would set off the alarm and would therefore be subjected to a patdown. She continued to scold me for at least 3 minutes, holding up the line behind me to my embarrassment. I told her I was trying to tell her that I knew I would be setting off the alarm but that she didn't give me a chance. She was so rude it was like she was on some kind of power trip and the lady behind me was embarrassed for me. Her face was red! Another TSA worker tried to have me go through the x-Ray machine and (b)(6) told me "no, you're going to have to wait now" which caused a further backup behind me. As she continued to scold me, I told her I am 63 years old, have flown for many years, have gone through checkpoints many times and have NEVER encountered anyone that treated me the way she was treating me. I told her I thought she was power hungry. After 4-5 minutes another TSA worker took me aside to pat me down and she apologized to me for the way (b)(6) treated me and she told me there have been others who have had problems with her and I was asked if I wanted to speak to a supervisor, to which I said yes. After explaining to the supervisor what had happened, he asked if I wanted to file a formal complaint and I said yes so I started to fill out the TSA Customer Comment card right there, but due to time restraints I told him I'd finish it later and send it in. I got the impression he was begging me to get it in because he told me that they've had problems with that particular worker in the past, and he said it's one thing for him to complain, and quite another when a passenger makes the complaint. I assured him I would send it in, so this is my formal complaint. That night I was flying on US Airways, flight #448. I would really appreciate a response to my complaint. My name is (b)(6) (b)(6) Address: (b)(6) Layton, Utah 84084. Cell (b)(6) Email address: (b)(6) Thank you.

Before the pat-down I was given the standard spiel: using the back of my hands, asking about sore/sensitive areas, internal devices. While she was patting my torso, she exclaimed, "Oh! Are you pregnant?" I am not. Nor am I obese. I am medically considered "marginally overweight." 10 lbs overweight. Not nearly overweight enough to merit a pregnancy inquiry, but just overweight enough to hurt my feelings. Badly. I have suffered eating disorders in the past and came close to dying; my weight is a very sensitive topic for me, as it is with many women. If it is necessary to know why I am opting out (is this information I am required to share? I would think the pat down shouldn't be so aggressive as to be dangerous to pregnant women...), the pregnancy question should be included when asking about sensitivity or implants, not while touching my torso. Outrageous. Is sensitivity training not provided for people who are touching others?

What happened?

I am an African-American corporate attorney and I travel frequently. I wear my hair in locks that fall to my shoulder blades. Often my hair is tied together by a rubber band at the back of my head. Every time I travel I am subjected to unnecessary, unreasonable, and discriminatory putdowns of my hair by TSA employees after passing through the full body scanner screening. This has happened to me several times most recently I traveled to and from Saint Louis and Philly and on each trip the following occurred:

My flight UA 1272 from Newark to West Palm Beach departing at 9:15am - seat 2A

Precheck

Comments: I spent close to 20 minutes in the pre check line waiting for a pat down while my open hand bag was left unattended on the belt all this time. The wait had nothing to do with a crowded line, but instead a complete lack of organization of the TSA checkpoint. I was "randomly selected" to go through the larger screening machine which I refused because I am pregnant. A female assist was not able to show up to pat me down - guess it was too early at 8:15am in the morning. The supervisor of the checkpoint clearly has no clue about managing people not to mention that he was not particularly helpful at allowing me to file this complaint.

To Whom it May Concern:

I'd like to report an incident yesterday at Denver International Airport. I was going through pre-check, pulled aside for random pat-down, and was touched in a way I feel was very inappropriate. I would like this to be investigated.

I went through the security sensor, and nothing beeped. The woman at post asked me to go through again, advising that she was distracted. This time it beeped and I was told I was randomly selected for a pat-down. A male officer on post, said "I will pat you down from hip to thigh, your groin and the back of your legs." And before I could object, his hands were already on me.

He ran both hands top to bottom with knuckles on my groin and fingers on my private area, and then the inside of my legs, with his fingers again touching my private area and moving down. These are the only two areas that he patted me down.

I travel frequently, and have never had this happen before. Pat-downs are usually arms, and lower leg. Maybe back or chest. Should a TSA agent have to pat-down an area closer to a potential sensitive area, I would not expect the agent's hands to actually touch private areas, and I would assume that the agent would give the traveler time to object the pat-down.

I typically do not file complaints, but feel this is completely unacceptable, and would like this incident to be investigated.

I was flying out on United 1483. I would have passed through the pre-check security area between 4:00 and 4:30PM MST. The man was african american and the woman attending was caucasian. Perhaps cameras would have caught this?

Please respond to confirm you have received this email and are investigating. You may also reach me at HYPERLINK tel:(b)(6) to discuss further.

Caller traveled on May 2nd and after she went through the WTMD, she thinks she heard an alarm go off but she is not sure. A female TSO, pulled her aside and did the patdown, she thinks in a private room but it may have been in the open. She felt very insulted by the way she was treated as she stated she is older and has Parkinson's disease. The TSO did not explain what was happening, why she needed the patdown and did not explain the patdown while she was doing it. Caller stated that she was standing there and got her breast checked with men standing all around. This has happened before at other Airports. She went to the TSA office once in DCA and they only wanted to write down her name which she did not give them. She conveyed to them her concerns and just left the TSA office. This is her first call to TSA to report this, but it has happened 3 different times in the past 2 years. The treatment she received was not professional. She asked if her name can be taken off the list so she would not get a patdown again. Caller said they should put the patdown information on a board so it will be clear to all the passengers about that procedure.

Good afternoon

I'm writing to inquire about screening procedures.

I have a Known-Traveler-Number and always receive the TSA pre-check with whichever airline I fly with.

I also have a prosthetic left leg from my military service.

Having served 22 years in the US Army and now serving with the Dept of Justice, I am a big advocate for security. I never give the TSA screeners any issues when travelling and appreciate their job and mission.

5/13/2015 6:31:12 PM My question is regarding the inconsistency I experience every time I fly. Sometimes I'm scanned in the device where I stand with my hands up and the device circles me, and sometimes I'm scanned by walking thru the metal detector. But every time I also receive a thorough pat down.

Your web-site says "Passengers with prostheses can be screened using imaging technology, metal detector, or a thorough patdown."

Why do I always receive a thorough pat down even though I show that I have a prostheses and I go through the imaging technology or metal detector? Usually, even though I'm TSA Pre-checked, I have to remove my belt too.

Just curious.

Thank you

Caller complained that the last agent he spoke with just a few minutes ago and someone promised to call him back but has not.

Caller said every time he flies from JAX he has issues at that airport.

Last time he flew from JAX to ATL to New Orleans he had a Patdown once again.

Also when they got to their destination the bike box was held together with TSA tape.

He kept saying the bike box was destroyed and the only thing holding it together was TSA Tape. He confirmed nothing was damaged but his Son would have a fit if his bike were to get damaged.

Caller said he taped the box well because he knew TSA might need to open it but he was first of all not satisfied with the way it was taped because it looked like someone just took a roll of tape and started rolling it around the box.

They flew from JAX that day 4-17-15 and was at the checkpoint around 1 PM for a 2: PM Flight.

Nothing alarmed but he was taken aside for a Patdown. by a TSO he described as a skinny young black male about 5 10 inches with facial hair.

The prior month (March) the same thing happened at JAX but he has flown from Daytona and other locations without issues.

Every time he goes out of JAX he is patted down every time although no alarms of the equipment.

He said he is a Retired Police Officer from Charleston and he asked the TSO why he was getting the patdown, the TSO just said you are getting a patdown.

He said it is not like he told them he is retired Police.

He wanted to talk to someone but Delta and TSA were very busy when they got to New Orleans.

He filed a complaint online OMB # (b)(6) that night but nobody called him about the issue.

Caller said he has many friends who work for TSA and he is not just trying to get someone in trouble.

REASON for the call:

Their checked bike box was held together with TSA tape when it arrived in New Orleans.

He kept saying the bike box was destroyed and the only thing holding it together was TSA Tape. He confirmed nothing was damaged but his Son would have a fit if his bike were to get damaged.

Caller said he taped the box well because he knew TSA might need to open it but he was first of all not satisfied with the way it was taped because it looked like someone just took a roll of tape and started rolling it around the box. He also complained that he put a role of his tape inside the box but TSA did not use it.

5/14/2015 Caller flew to DEN on May 3rd and she has scoliosis and is needing to know if she will be able to get a waiver to avoid going through a patdown screening.

AM

REASON for the call: There were no available bins at the checkpoint and they were not being replaced. TSOs were ignoring the request for bins and advising px to keep the lines moving. Px were placing items in their carry on.

A female TSO advised that he remove his vest. The caller stated that he would not do so as there was not a bin to place it in. He then stated that he was opting and was thus directed to a patdown screening.

stood with his back to the TSO (male, African American, heavy set, overweight, black curly hair, 5 9). It was very loud at the checkpoint and he thought that the TSO said to turn around. He did so, and the TSO shoved him in the shoulder. He attempted to turn around to say that he couldn't hear him and the TSO continued to hold him down with the with his shoulder shoved backward so that he couldn't move. The TSO stated that he had told him to put his hands down.

The caller stated that the TSO mumbled, his English was broken, and he could barely hear due to the noise level.

He requested a supervisor. The supervisor asked if he wanted to fly. She indicated that they would follow up and walked away. She did not take his information. She was middle aged with short frosted hair and glasses.

5/14/2015 He asked if he should make a case with Law enforcement or how to file a complaint with TSA to have this investigated. He asked if he would receive a follow up phone call in regard to this to know what has been done to address this.

His bags received additional screening as well. He was unable to check in for that flight at home and his boarding pass that he got at the airport had SSSS on it. Caller has been trying to get ahold of the CSM at LaGuardia but can not get an answer. She advised she has not left a message because she is afraid of retaliation. She advised that she has submitted an email complaint and she really wants to talk to someone about what happened to her today at the checkpoint. She advised she was wearing a fit bit and was waved to the side for a pat down. She advised that she gave the TSO the Fit bit and the TSO continued to pat down her bra continually asking what it was. When she advised it was her bra the TSO became very angry. She advised that the TSO asked her to pull down her shirt in front of everyone so she could see her bra with out offering a private screening. She advised that the agent was very unprofessional. She asked the agent going through her bag and other 2 agents what the agents name was and they advised they didn't know. So she requested a supervisor. She advised that no one every got her a supervisor and when she went to the desk and advised she wanted to file a complaint. They advised that they needed her information first, But she did not provided again because she feared retaliation when going back through LaGuardia. She advised that this is unacceptable and wants someone to contact her back by phone an let her know what the recourse for this is. Caller kept asking if sending the complaint to the CSM was all I could do.

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening.
Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): American Airlines Flight #1716, arriving in Charlotte, SC at 16:24 on 5/14/15 from Dominican Republic. Gate D1. Connection to Orlando US Airways #1733
Comments: My elderly parents returned from a family reunion at the DR on flights/date above. While at DR, my mother who is 75 suffered an accident dislocating her shoulder. She was seen in the ER in DR and given a shoulder immobilizer to wear. Upon arriving at Charlotte, she was screened since she could not go through the x-ray machine (unable to lift her right arm). After the initial screening, pat down by two rude female agents, she was taken to a room. The agent proceeded to remove her immobilizer, this was very painful for my mother. Not only that, they opened up all her luggage, took everything out. My dad who is 78 was frantic worrying about missing the connecting flight. He asked the agents if they could please notify the airline about their delay. This request was ignored. My mother with only the use of one arm, with the help of my father had to repack their bags. They both rushed through the airport for quite a long distance only to arrive at their gate and miss the flight! They had to wait until 9pm for their next flight that was delayed. We completely understand the need for security especially during these scary times. However, my elderly parents did not have to be submitted to this ordeal once the initial screening showed no reason for further examination and delay by your two very rude and uncaring agents. I expect that my parents receive a letter of apology for what your TSA agents put them through. I am a nurse and I can't begin to express how angry I am with the horrible treatment my parents received in Charlotte by your unprofessional TSA agents.

I am a 66 year old Disabled American Veteran. I also suffered the loss of mobility for almost 8 years because of the negligence of a federal employee during my career as a civil servant with the Department of Defense, which eventually resulted in the replacement of my right knee. As a current DoD employee, I am also on the TSA Trusted Travelers list.

On October 15 of last year, I traveled to Ireland on the first overseas vacation I've taken in over a decade. We departed through Newark Airport. My wife went through the standard departure gate while I went to the pre-checked line, where I was required to remove my shoes, belt, coat, and physically assaulted (being groped in public is my definition of being assaulted) because my employer (the U.S. Government) issued joint replacement identification care was deemed as being insufficient identification of what set off the metal detector.

The individual that was REQUIRED to pat me down apologized and indicated that the person in charge of the trusted traveler line considered it to be maximum security instead of trusted travelers, and that the line was taking 4 times as long as the standard checkpoint where a dog was screening everyone.

5/15/2015 2:25:33 PM Believe me when I say I understand security, but I also understand abuse of power and whoever was in charge of the Newark Airport screening process when I departed for Ireland had no idea what their job was.

Beyond the Trusted Traveler list, is there any way to expedite passage through security?

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Woodbridge, VA 22193

5/15/2015 6:04:38 PM As I went through the TSA checkpoint today at about noon at LAX, I was a victim of a pat-down scam similar to those reported in the media as occurring in Denver. The first two African American female TSA employees that I encountered checked my boarding pass and after I proceeded to the line for screening, I turned to find one of the two TSA agents blowing air kisses in my direction. Given what I was subjected to afterwards, it is clear this was a signal to her fellow TSA agents. After I proceeded through the body scanner without incident, I was told that my laptop failed the test and I would need to be patted down. This is the same laptop that went through the same screening in JFK without any issues. Also if the laptop has an issue and I already passed through the body scanner without issue, why would I need to be pat down again. The only reason was clear when a short Hispanic male who appeared to be gay showed up as the person to pat me down. Then they run my laptop again and say its fine. This whole incident can be viewed by reviewing video of the security line leading to Jetblue gate 33B around noon on 5/15/15. I can be reached at (b)(6). This kind of harassment needs to stop and if it has already been reported at Denver, then the TSA should be on the lookout for this. I will be sending a letter to the head of the TSA to follow up and will file the claim forms online as needed. However in the essence of time, I wanted to point this out right away.

Greetings:

On May 15th traveling from St. Louis Lambert Airport to Chicago on United Flight 3412 at approximately 4:15am, I was again subjected to a unnecessary, unreasonable, and discriminatory pat down search. I was traveling alone, wearing a brown long sleeve t-shirt, gray pants, and boots. My hair - which is shoulder length - was down. After I passed through the body scanner I was told by a female TSA agent that she needed to pat down by right leg. After she patted down my leg she asked me to turn around and said she needed to pat down behind my hair. She then grabbed a handful of my loose hanging hair and moved it to the side to reveal the back of my neck and t-shirt. She then padded down my neck and upper back.

This is 5 out of the 5 times that I have traveled within the past few months where I have been subjected to these discriminatory searches. I am going to continue to document every incidence of these searches until this issue is resolved.

The caller flew from MSP to MSY on April 15, 2015, and she was in a wheelchair. The TSO allowed her to remain in the wheelchair during the initial screening; however, after being screened a male passenger ran past her. Immediately, the TSO informed her that her luggage alarmed the system. Therefore, they asked for her purse and carry-on bag and opened both. They did not return her eye drops, and did not repack her paperwork properly. She was then taken into another room, and subjected to a patdown. She wanted to file a complaint, as she felt that the TSOs are not even screening all of the passengers. She flies from MSP often, and has never received such treatment.

He then asked if he could swab my hands... I agreed.

He however did not change his gloves and I've watched him pat down numerous other people prior to swabbing my hands.

I asked him about this and he didn't answer my question.

For some reason my hands sent a signal to your machine. The screener refused to test me again with new gloves or test me again for old gloves or tell me what the problem was.

I asked for a manager and (b)(6) also refused my questions.

I had to wait 15 minutes to be privately screened by two individuals whom also found nothing and then they screened me with again FRESH gloves.... They found nothing.

Please find out why the manager and screener refused to put on fresh gloves when I asked.

What is your procedure for this?

I am contacting you regarding my pat down at the Buffalo airport this morning. I want it on record that the supervisor after the pat down took my ID and boarding passing and photocopied it. To what end was this done? And when I asked for her name and badge number she refused to provide that information as directed on card attached here. I also asked the police officers to request that information and she refused to provide that to the officers as well. I was polite and courtesy and did not object to the Pat Down and I have done numerous times while flying.

Please provide me with what my ID and information are now going to be used for. I now fear every time I travel through the Buffalo airport I will be subjected to harassment.

Comment : Generally I have only accolades to give to the TSA agents at SDF airport. Yesterday I observed two incidents of civil rights/liberties mistreatment.

My son and I were passengers. I prefer to fly with him because he has a Traumatic Brain Injury. While placing his wallet, shoes, and phone on the belt he was abruptly told by the TSA agent "Stop holding up the line!" There were a few passengers standing behind my son waiting patiently.

Instead of offering to assist passengers with common words of instruction, the agent chose raise his voice speaking directly to my son. I was still placing my items on the belt near the scanner when I observed him go to my son. I explained to the TSA agent that my son has a traumatic brain injury and needs extra time.

The agent came back to me a few minutes later. He showed some visual signs of remorse and asked if he could get the electric cart to assist us. He did not apologize for his inappropriate behavior.

A second incident occurred with another TSA agent while I was getting my son to a safe place to put his shoes back on.

I saw a woman carrying a US passport with a head covering in a wheel chair. She was crying loudly with tears streaming down her face. She was afraid because she had to go through a pat down screening. The TSA agent was not able to console her. I stepped over to the passenger and greeted in her Muslim greeting, "Sahal-a-malee-kum". She looked at me in desperation and responded. I was able to calm her some by letting her know in English it would be ok. She responded back in English and the TSA agent was then able to begin the pat down.

The female TSA agent asked if I was a relative. I told her I was not but understood the culture of this woman. The passenger gave me her first name and told me where she was from. I continued my conversation with her in English to help her remain calm.

I quietly asked the agent if there was a screening area for such pat-downs because this woman was embarrassed by this type of "pat down" touching in public. The TSA agent affirmed that there was a screening area. She told me that she would have to get another female agent to assist as she continued her pat-down.

She continued to place (b)(6) the woman in the poses required to complete the screening. (b)(6) cried again and I stood by to assure her this was ok and that she was not in trouble. The Airport wheel chair assistant was with the passenger's personal effects.

In my opinion there were two distinct violations from TSA agents. It is our right as citizens with disabilities and cultural religious preferences to have privacy respected appropriately during TSA screenings.

On May 12, 2015 at 12 : 45 PM I was going through check point on a walker and as I ve always done told the TSA agent that I can t go through the x Ray machine because I can t be without my walker or a wheelchair. So I always ask for a pat down . This time I was treated very roughly by the agents. I have cerebral palsy, epilepsy, weakness all over my body severe middle to upper neck pain that could paralyze if not very careful. I also have a balance and can t stand in one place at all with out falling down. I also have a medical device implant and chronic pain from head to toe! I take over 25 medications pain killers, muscle relaxers, hypertension, anxiety, bipolar, depression, and ptsd, and epilepsy meds. Like I said the pat down was very after explaining my problems and disabilities he continued to take his hands place such hard pressure that it felt like he squeezing my legs and arms and the rest of my body he was so rough that he didn t realize he groped me not once but twice! I fly to and from Dallas Love Field on a two week or monthly trips for treatment for pain, cerebral palsy, spasticity, and seizures. On all my trips go by myself with no family because I don t have any that can help or escorts that can go with me. Since the trip I have very traumatized and violated personally and I have to go again this Friday for another appointment same time. I ve always had problems in Dallas love field! I have from Midland International airport to Dallas Love Field.

Good morning,,

I have the highest respect for TSA as the agents have a horrific job dealing with the unpredictable public. The TSA team at LAX (international) and Buffalo, NY are my favorites by far. Regularly I receive your emails noting rule changes and alerts which I enjoy reading.

A few days ago we had a short business trip to Atlanta and upon our return I was surprised by one of your agents in the Pre-TSA line. I had a "clean scanner walk through" as all pockets were empty. The agent guiding me through the scanner told me; "Sir You Have Been Randomly Selected for a Pat-Down". I had the pat-down and was free to go. First of all I do not believe the Randomly Selected comment. I was angry as I am 74 years old, bald, clean cut and without any suspicious clothing or bags. This was a first.....

I was the only individual in a large group to get this pat-down. I will admit the TSA agents (Atlanta) do not seem to enjoy their job compared to the agents at LAX and Buffalo.

I have never located any document stating this procedure was standard or allowed.

Thank you,

Yesterday we flew from San Jose, Costa Rica to Los Angeles, with a change of planes in San Salvador. After we had cleared security in San Jose we bought a small bottle of salsa that we had really liked while there. The bottle was only 8 to 10 ounces so it wasn't a large investment, but when we got to San Salvador we found we were screened again, including having everything taken out of our hand baggage and a physical pat down. And, of course, we lost our salsa. As I read the regulations I think we should have been entitled to keep it, but there was no arguing with them about it. Since there was no opportunity for contact with anyone between the time we got on the plane in SJ and got in line for the plane in San Salvador, there seemed to us to be no reason for an additional screening. If, somehow, it is necessary, then the duty free shops in San Jose should make customers aware that connecting flights will no accept anything over 3.4 ounces. I would appreciate your comments.

Hi, I have a huge complaint & would like to get an explanation for the policy concerning having to get a pat down just because a traveler carries homeopathic medicines. I recently acquired my tsa pre-check approval & it seems it's been a waste of my time & money, which makes me furious about this policy. Having pre-check saves me nothing, only because I'm careful about my health...I'm still treated with the maximum screening possible? People who use homeopathics are super conscientious about health & it feels like tsa is subjecting those to unreasonable policy for no legitimate reason as there is no potential for danger once the medicines themselves have been hand-checked.

I am a frequent traveler for work & have had physical issues for almost 20 years. I see a nutritionist & alternative medicine physician for most of my health care. I've opted out of the scanner for this reason & have had to endure the pat down hence my reason for finally investing in going through the pre-check process to speed up the security check. I've been caught in situations with clients where I needed to change flights/terminals quickly with the amazing amount of cancellations & changes happening with travel.

The policy of a pat down/bag check after going through screening just because of a traveler carrying homeopathics has no logic & makes no sense. If a person was trying to get something by security, they certainly wouldn't bring attention to themselves by asking for their medicine to be hand-checked. Can someone please explain to me the reason behind this policy? Why would someone have an illegal substance they trying to pass through security because they carry homeopathics? I believe someone who doesn't understand homeopathy created this policy. I was using homeopathics before the regulations changed after 9/11 & realized immediately that tsa doesn't understand it. Was a homeopathic doctor consulted in the making of the policy? If one was, tsa would understand the potency & strength of the medicines is greatly decreased each pass by X-ray/radiation. The methods of hand-checking homeopathics should be sufficient to not have to subject a traveler to a pat down/bag check after it's already been screened & most importantly, after one has been cleared with a background check for pre-check status. To my knowledge, not one terrorist or person meaning harm has ever been discovered because they use homeopathic medicine.

I would like a response with a legitimate explanation for this policy that has logic please. I would like to see this policy changed as there is no further potential of danger after homeopathics have been hand-checked themselves, everything has gone through screening & I've been cleared & approved for tsa pre-check. I am happy to help in the process. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dear Colleagues:

By way of this letter, the Sikh Coalition is filing a formal civil rights complaint on behalf of (b)(6) a U.S. citizen whose civil rights were violated by the Transportation Security Administration (?TSA?) on Tuesday May 12, 2015 at Newark Liberty International Airport in New Jersey. (b)(6) is enrolled in the TSA Precheck program, as well as the CBP Global Entry program, and is a frequent business class traveler. In addition, he is visibly identifiable as a Sikh by his articles of faith, including his turban and unshorn beard.

Incident Description

On May 12, 2015 (b)(6)—a resident of Alexandria, Virginia—returned to the United States from a business trip in India. He traveled from New Delhi to Newark on United Airlines Flight 82 and arrived around 4:50 a.m. After clearing customs, (b)(6) rechecked his baggage for a flight to Reagan National Airport on United Airlines Flight 5833, which departed from Gate A26.

Caller went through the screening checkpoint yesterday at 2:00 pm at El Paso and is wanting to file a complaint since he was touched repeatedly during the patdown screening. His hands were swabbed and they tested positive for explosives so he had to go through a patdown screening. The officer proceeded to patdown his back and buttocks and then was told to go to a private screening room where the officer proceeded to patdown his back and buttocks again and then patted down his chest and touched his penis. He has already spoken with the CSM at El Paso (b)(6) and was told to contact the TSA Contact Center to file a complaint. He also filed a report with the El Paso police department. The officer that conducted the patdown was a black gentleman with a visible tattoo. The officer left the area immediately after he completed the patdown. Supervisor (b)(6) was called over to take the complaint and said that officer that conducted the screening (b)(6) (b)(6)

Disability Description: Caller had a knee replacement. She gets a patdown every time she flies. She finds that insulting and unfair. She has a card from the surgeon. She thinks that there should be another method of screening for a person like her with a metal implant and a card from the surgeon. She said that they could be pre screened or have some kind of paperwork that would allow them to bypass the patdown. She stated that the patdown is not really necessary in terms of safety. She is being singled out because she is a person with a disability. TSA is wasting time with unnecessary patdowns. It is unjustified and she feels that she is being punished for having a metal implant. She asked if Trusted Traveler would help her avoid getting a patdown.

Information Request: Caller was not seeking any information in order to prepare for the screening. She did not want any information emailed to her.

The caller wants the CSM number for Colorado Springs. She was just there and went through the security checkpoint. The caller had on a beaded shirt and it showed anomalies on the AIT. She was very displeased with the way the woman was touching her during the pat down. She looked on the monitor herself and seen where the anomalies on her shirt were. She said the screener was in her pants, in between her legs, and close to her genitals. She did not provide a terminal, description of the screener, flight or airline. She just wanted the CSM contact information. She did not provide any information other than the way she felt about the patdown.

To whom it may concern:

For your review and action as deemed appropriate, (b)(6) applied to the Redress program on 05/11/2015. The traveler's concerns are outside the scope of this program. Please refer to the traveler's comments listed below. The traveler's redress case has been administratively closed.

Thank You for your time and assistance.

5/19/2015 Callers wife and he are registered with TSA PreCheck. He said his wife has a knee replacement and he said the last time they went through screening that she had to have a patdown and it took almost 15 minutes due to the fact that they had to wait on
2:52:14 a female TSO to become available. He wanted to know if there was a way to speed up the screening process since they were PreCheck members. He wanted to know if we no longer had the Notification Cards. He said every time he clicked on the

This email is to suggest you teach a little sensitivity training to your screeners. I was flying out of Charlotte Douglas airport in Charlotte which has the big round x-Ray machines that you stand in. When I came out I was told I needed a pat down and the screener began to pat my breasts. I was completely and totally humiliated. I have never been touched there for a pat down and was shocked and not expecting this. I was diagnosed with breast, have had a double mastectomy and have expanders with metal in them which is what showed up. It's bad enough I've had to go through that but to be groped is unacceptable. As soon as I told the screener I had implants and had a card she let go. However this whole thing could have been avoided had I known what was coming. I did not ask for any of this and what happened to me today just prolongs those feelings of feeling like a piece of meat instead of a human being.

To the policy makers within the TSA.

I question the necessity of pat-down searches and hair searches of the elderly who have had joint replacement surgery. Recently my wife (70 years old) who carries a Known Traveler (Pre-Check) identification had a Reverse Shoulder Replacement. On her first trip since the surgery (5/19/2015) felt she was abused and embarrassed by the search she was subjected to.

While pat down searches in some cases may be necessary, I feel there should be a way that elderly Americans who have gone thru the Pre-Check process could be treated with respect and dignity.

I hope you will take this letter to heart and review you policy's for Americans who by necessity have had joint replacement surgery.

Today i thought its going to be a another smooth check in at sjc as it has been for the last 15 months of my weekly business trip . Yesterday when i checked in using american airlines mobile app , it was asking me to print the boarding pass at the airport instead of mobile boarding pass..i was thinking its a tech glitch.i printed the boarding pass at the airport.. i arrived at the check in counter where i showed my boarding pass and id. This tsa officer was not in uniform instead in white shirt. The moment i showed my boarding pass he called someone over wireless..i was made to wait for 2 to 3 mins with no information on whats happening..i asked the officer , is there a prob with my boarding pass.. he said nothing..its internal..then came the supervisor who rushed me in to the line jumping ahead of people who checked in earlier..so far no one informed me on whats happening..i am bewildered and clueless on whats happening..i placed my items on the belt and was waiting for the screening...i realised that the supervisor was passing some information about my screening to happen in the millimeter wave detection, to the officer in that area..that officer was asking who is this person, they were pointing towards me..still no one told me whats happening..MWD scan was done..i was waitin near the other side of the belt to collect my items..when i was abt to take my bag from the belt..the other officer who was screening the items in front of the monitor is yelling at me not to touch.. with the loud voice"HEY HEY DONT TOUCH anything". I thought this country treats people like humans and not like treating an animal..with disrespect and humiliation..i am not a criminal or an undertrial for that matter...now the supervisor takes all my items from the belt..n he was frisking me towards the place where normally complete pat down happens..still no one has informed on what they are doing..i realised that this is getting over the board ..i stopped and asked the supervisor whats happening here. he said i was selected for special screening..i asked him why i wasnt informed about this..i showed my displeasure and asked him dont i hav the right to be informed on whats happening..the supervisor was very arrogant in sayin that he forgot to inform me ..he apologised but not really apologetic and not even courteous to a wee bit.his treatment was like , how an officer would warn criminal.i asked again why i was not informed...he now says that i am repeating the complaint and i CANT do that..really ?? what the heck is this ?? ..again he warns me for raising my concern and he keeps count of it saying that i am repeating my complaint the third time and fourth time..ill repeat this any number of times cos i am the one who suffered...humiliated in front of other passengers..not him..finally he says the more i talk the more its gonna get delayed..ok i said and do whatever you hav to do..cos i had only 5 mins for my boarding to start..

PM

They did complete pat down..checkin each and every item in my bag..thats fine...it was taking about 8 - 10 mins....i could see that the supervisor training the lady supervisor on how to do special checks..to login or not login in to the laptop ..when they were doing the checks ..i realised how much of humiliation and disrespect i have been put through in the last 15 minutes from the time i showed my boarding pass..two things came to my mind. Supervisors arrogant n unreceptive behaviour and the gentleman chking the monitor who yelled at me ..finally the supervisor comes back to me and says sorry for not informin and again it was like a warning to me..i said this experience is completely ridiculous..i want the feedback to be given..he gave me the feedback card..and then i asked for the gentlemen's name at the monitor ..supervisor refuse to divulge the name..instead he gave his name and he says he is the supervisor ..its only 45 mins since this happened and the time i hav taken to compose this mail so far.. m not able to recollect the supervisors name..he said kevin or edwin.i m not sure about it..pls cross chk. This is the reason i would request this to be taken at a higher level than a supervisor.

The caller was leaving Spokane airport this morning in Washington. They did a hand test on her, she had a patdown in another room. Her bag was opened by an officer at the checkpoint and he broke her zipper. She can't get into her bag. The zipper and the bag is separated, the zipper is partially torn off. She didn't give any information about the screener who tore her bag.

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): CAK airport on 5/19/2015 at approximately 4:45pm. .
Comments: The TSA screening process at CAK is like watching the Three Stooges. There were two lines open but one was exclusively Precheck. There were over forty people at one point slowly being screened and I don't recall seeing any person successfully pass through the body scanner without needing some sort of pat down. I've flown through CAK twice now and both times the screeners appear to have nothing better to do than pat down every single senior citizen that is going on an airplane.

I am very disappointed that whom ever was the acting supervisor didn't take appropriate action to investigate and correct what was going on. I counted six (6) TSA employees standing around the Precheck lane doing nothing while the non Precheck lane continued to muddle along.

I'm disappointed with the incompetence and ineptitude I've experienced with the TSA at the CAK airport.

Caller stated that on May 6, 2015 at approximately 4:45PM, he had reported that he was clearly groped by a TSA screener in lane number 8 at LAS. He went on to state that (b)(6) was the supervisor and he was called in and alerted of the alleged situation. He said (b)(6) handled himself and the entire situation in a professional manner. (b)(6) went on to state that he had arrived approximately 2 1 2 hours prior to his flight time. During the TSA screening process he was asked to step aside for a pat down. He then went on to state that the pat down was in one place and one place only: the groin area. He said he went to the police about the matter at first and they indicated that he should go to the TSA Headquarters Office there at LAS. (b)(6) then went on to say that this process (going to the TSA HQ office at LAS) took a lot of time and there was a young supervisor there who treated him like a cow because he had a temporary license. He was also upset because he felt that the supervisor defended the guy who patted him down. He said they took pictures. He also says that at approximately 5:20PM he witnessed at least another patdown of a female that was also done in the groin area. Caller states that after her screening, he spoke to the other passenger who received a groin patdown and she told him that she was indeed groped as well. He went on to state that our TSA officer on scene lifted the lady s dress. He stated that (b)(6) told him they would check the surveillance video and get back in contact with him after having taken his cell number. He says he still has not heard from anyone on this. He thinks its a case of discrimination. Caller then stated he is transgender. He said he was wearing platform flip flops in bright pink. He is 62 and he thinks he is fairly attractive. He again says he thinks he was discriminated against. He stated the video of both incidents should be seen by TSA Superiors. He went on to state he did not want to get an attorney involved in this. He went on to state he wants to be proactive and he had expected to be contacted by now.

Comments: This employee of yours after groping me says he's not like that and to catch the bus if I don't like it. Then tells other passengers he doesn't want to deal with people like me. Stop hiring these thugs. I've done enough for this country to not have people like that tell other Americans. Things like that about me. If he's that interested in my penis he should have put me in a private screening room to take a look. This is why people don't like TSA. The employees are extremely unprofessional.

REASON for the call:

Caller says she just went through the checkpoint in St Thomas.

She felt like a criminal in front of her 5 year old daughter. She had her bag checked because the laptop was still in her bag.

She says she forgot to take it out. They told her they had to do a hand check. When he checked the laptop with explosive trace detection.

Then he checked inside and he said there was an alarm.

They told her to go through a patdown. She says she doesn't want any one to have to go through a patdown in front of her child.

She was given a paper form to complain and she turned it in to.

Comment : The Pat down was done well, and I appreciate that we (passengers) still have this option. However, I would like to see signs with directions on how to request it, and rather or not the passenger should wait until someone comes before send personal items through the scanner. As it is right now, there is a lot of confusion about it and some TSA employees standing in security are not very friendly or kind when a passenger expresses concern about personal items being on the other side of security without supervision.

What happened?

My connection was missed due to AA mechanical problem. AA gave me a meal voucher, and a pass to go back through security to purchase food for my husband and I. Only I was given a pass, not my husband, so I went through security alone. I believe this was some time around 10:00 pm but I am not sure. This was in concourse D at the security checkpoint near American Airlines. I had arrived from flight AA1032. The airport was nearly empty.

Good morning.

The email is being forwarded to TCC-referrals for appropriate action. (b)(6) who is a Delta flight attendant, requests a letter from TSA explaining why during the required pat down she was also given a vaginal search which she believes was inappropriate.

REASON for the call: He traveled this morning from XNA to Chicago to Washington DC. He received a patdown screening because of an alarm on the front of his body. The TSO sent him back through the WTMD a second time where there was an alarm on the back of his body. He received two patdown screenings in which he was touched in the groin. The TSO used his fingers to conduct a patdown of his groin area. He was screened with ETD of himself and his belongings. He indicated that the alarms were associated to his tie and groin but ETD was not conducted in the area. He believes that the alarm was a false positive and that screening was extreme. He believes that the ETD sampling should not have been conducted if he received a patdown screening.

He believes that he would have received a private screening if he was not African American.

He spoke with a supervisor (b)(6) who referred him to the CSM at XNA who advised that he should have been taken to a private patdown and referred him to the TCC and that TSOs should use the back of their hand when conducting a patdown.

Caller has a family member who traveled today from Atlantic City to FLL. She was extensively searched in a room by herself. She said that the patdown was a horrible experience. She does not speak English so she wants to know why she was selected for a patdown and asked if it can be random.

She was traveling with Spirit Air flight 259 through gate 8.
Her name is (b)(6)
She is very short less than 5 feet. She has hip dysplasia and rocks from side to side when she walks and is Hispanic with curly hair with jeans and dark gray jacket.

To whom this may concern,

On Thursday May 22, I went to the Ft. Lauderdale International Airport to drop my mother and six year old daughter off for a flight to New York. My mother is disabled so I got a pass to make sure she and my daughter arrive safely to the gate. I was at check point F, terminal 3, lane 3 for passing. I forgot I had a bottle water (which was unopened) in my purse so I was pulled to the side. This is where things went horribly wrong.

The person who came to inspect my bag (her name tag said (b)(6)) did more than check my bag. She said she had to do a pat down so I said okay. She began to pat me down and I felt it was more than a pat down, my feeling were confirmed when she touch my vagina. I was wearing workout attire (tight fitting), so it was very obvious that I had nothing between my thighs.

I have travelled the world and I have never had someone feel my breast and touch my vagina not once but she touched my vagina twice. I am very upset and felt violated. The thought of someone freely 'feeling' my body up for whatever reasons is disturbing and very upsetting to me.

Once I dropped my mother and daughter off, I asked to speak with a supervisor and spoke with (b)(6). He was apologetic and gave me a card and told me to write or call to file a formal complaint. That is what I would like to do. I have a feeling this is not the first time this person has done something like this. No one in a position like that should use their position to act inappropriately with passengers or guests.

Fortunately, I live in Florida so I was able to take the time to make a complaint. I'm sure there are a lot of other people who haven't been so lucky.

I am asking for video to be reviewed and an investigation performed.

Please contact me with any questions.

Hello,

I have a rather large varicose vein in my left thigh. Every time I go through a TSA checkpoint I'm asked if I have something in my pocket. I explain its a vein, and the officer usually asks if he/she can do a pat down. I have no problem with a pat down. However, yesterday, while traveling from Fresno, CA to Portland, OR, the officer, who had already done a pat down, said she needed to have visual confirmation and would be willing to show it. I said I'd have to pull down my pants. She then said she would take me to a private screening room. So, we waited for another female officer and went to the screening room where I pulled my pants down and she was able to visually confirm a large vein sticking out. Now, I understand the need for safety, but seriously, Am I going to have to do this every time I fly now? Please tell me what you suggest....

Caller wanted to file a major complaint against (b)(6) who works at OKC. She has flown every week for almost five years. She works for a company that makes the software for the TSA scanners. She is a cancer patient. She always opts out of the AIT. She was flying standby today at 12:06 pm on American Airlines. She went through the checkpoint at approximately 11 am. She opted out of the AIT. The guy standing next to the scanner asked her to stand next to the scanner. She refused to stand next to the scanner. He made a smart comment to her. He told her that if she has been there for five weeks she should know to stand over there. He told her that if she works around the equipment he does not understand why she did not want to stand next to the scanner. The TSO came to do her patdown. She patted down her private area twice and then she called another agent to give her another patdown. She was taken into a room for a private screening. She had to pull her sanitary napkin out in front of them. It was thrown in the garbage. She stated that both TSO s rammed their hands up her crotch. They told her that she still did not pass and there was still something there. A supervisor was called. The supervisor was very nice. The supervisor did a patdown and told the TSO that she did not feel anything. (b)(6) told the supervisor that there was something there. The supervisor rammed her hands into her crotch and told them that there was nothing there. She said that they were so mean and rude to her. (b)(6) asked her if she does not want her things. She told her no. She said that she walked over and got her items. The TSO then swabbed her hands. They were clear. (b)(6) saw her looking at her name tag. She put her name tag in the callers face and told her that her name was (b)(6) if she wants to file a complaint. She said that the rammed their hands into her crotch a total of 8 times. Caller was very upset.

CSM RFI---Mishandling RFI

REASON for the call: The caller always opts out of the AIT screening, but has two negative experiences recently with the TSOs. She feels that the TSOs punish her when she opts out by making her wait a long time for a patdown. Additionally, her items have already went through the screening, and were on the other side of the screening area. She indicated that no one was watching these items, and anyone could have taken them. After waiting for a long time at OAK, she started to ask a male TSO if he could make sure her personal property was safe. He cut her off before she could finish the question, and told her that this was her fault for opting out. He then started asking her why she opted out, as it does not use x-ray technology. She did not want to argue with him, so she just said that it was her decision. She was told again that the lengthy wait time was her fault for opting out, and she feels that the TSOs at these two airports punish someone who opts out. She also believes that there should be a better system for watching a passengers personal property.

Comment : I just had surgery to place a pacemaker and was told not to go through airport security for six weeks after getting the pacemaker. I have had the pacemaker for one week and was selected for TSA precheck. The TSA agent at precheck sent me over to the regular line for a patdown but when I showed the people at the scanner my medical card they sent me through the full body scanner anyways and did not offer a patdown.

Caller stated he had a less than pleasant experience, getting a full work over screening yesterday. He stated that he did not appreciate his crotch getting touched and his butt getting touched. He does not know why he was chosen for a patdown. He said it was in front of everyone and he was not offered a private screening. He said that as soon as he presented his ID, the female TSA Officer who was checking him looked at his ID and boarding pass and told him to wait one moment but she was going to have to have her manager come over and they chose him for extra screening. He said something on his boarding pass may have triggered this. He went on to state he was at the Bozeman Montana Airport. He said the TSA agents weren't necessarily rude, however he is an Optometrist, and he feels he is a public figure and he cannot understand why he was subjected to this in public. He says if they had to do this extra screening on him, they should have taken him to a back room. He went on to state that his twin brother came through about an hour later and had the same thing happen to him, except for the patdown. He says he flew on Alaska and his brother flew on United. He said his brother told him that the female agent said to him, when he came through, didn't you just come through here? Then she told him they were going to have to give him extra screening too.

Complaint about Delta Security in Paris on flight DL0083 on 23 May @08:30.

I was randomly selected for a search as I was boarding the flight from Paris to Atlanta.
I noticed as we were lined up like cattle to go through the shoot at the boarding line, that the security team was selecting only Americans whom were white. They only selected Americans whom did not look foreign.

The Security team was very anti-American with their verbal commands and actions.

I asked why I was selected and they told me it was random. I mentioned that the 8-10 other people that was being screened were random as well and they said yes.

I mentioned that their random search only selected white Americans. I complained that I did not want to be patted down by security and if they could use a wand. They told me I could not board the plane without the pat down and that this procedure was required by My American Government and they were only following directions from the TSA in America.

I of course had to submit to the pat down to leave.

The security manager said he knew that threatening me with not being able to board would resolve my complaint.

I told him they should select not only typical American looking folks but Arabs, Muslims etc. like the ones whom attacked America on September 11. He said those people had American passports as if it was Americas fault the hijackers got into our Country. They said they did not want to offend them? Yet they revel in offending American Citizens?

I do not care about politically correct or offending anyone in the Security Team in Paris, as they have no problem offending me and going overboard with their prejudice to offend me.
A typical white American.

Thank you.

Good Evening,

I am writing to file a complaint against VMD-MT Security and the two agents who improperly and unprofessionally handled me on Friday, May 15, 2015 .

After passing through the scanner the airport in Rochester, NY TSO (b)(6), asked to pat down my head. I asked, I thought TSA Agents were no longer allowed to pat African American womens head? She rudely and abruptly said, We re not TSA. If you don t want to cooperate. I will have to take you to another area and pat you down.

Because I was traveling with colleagues - white, male colleagues - and didn t want to cause a scene. I conceded and allowed her to pat my head.

Immediately after, I noticed the concern/shock on their faces. I felt violated and portrayed as a criminal. I stopped and asked to speak with a supervisor.

A gentleman approached (STSO (b)(6)) and offered to assist. I gave the same explanation, he replied, well, anybody can read anything on the internet. Again, more rude, abrupt, insulting behavior. He continued assert his knowledge by mentioning that he is a supervisor and trainer and knows all of the laws and regulations.

5/24/2015 9:16:49 AM When I referenced a lawsuit from the ACLU (b)(6) told him that I was in town visiting my employer s corporate office (also one of the largest employers in the city); and, cited my education and background - he then began to soften his tone and promise to do research on the matter.

I asked for a comment form, which he provided and included his name and the name of the female agent who patted my head.

Policies and procedures should be consistent across all agencies responsible for airport security. Every passenger should be treated with the utmost dignity and respect. And, agents who fail to do so should be reprimanded and removed from their posts immediately.

This is a very serious and sensitive matter at should be handled with urgency. I will forward this to the ACLU and to the attorney (b)(6) who brought forth this complaint. If you would like to discuss further, I can be reached at: (b)(6)

Sir/Ma'am,

I write to alert you of a frustrating situation today at Logan Airport at 0530. While undergoing standard security precautions, my wife requested to opt-out of the millimeter scanner. She is pregnant with our first child, and we prefer to avoid the scanner.

We are both physicians, and are familiar with the ACR concerns with the technology. More saliently, my wife is an Obstetrician, and a literal expert in prenatal care and precautions. Finally, even if all of the above were not true, she chose to exercise her choice to avoid the millimeter scanner.

It was a decision she was forced to regret. She was immediately mocked and derided by the TSO on duty, Officer (b)(6). TSO (b)(6) began to childishly mimic my wife in a high pitched tone "ohhh, I'm a doctor, I know better." She tried repeatedly to force my wife through the millimeter scanner, stating "you're wasting our time," and sneering at my wife's polite insistence on the alternate pat-down procedure.

AM

We alerted the STSO on duty, Officer (b)(6) who at first indicated that "there was nothing [he could] do." I asked for identifying information of the TSO in question, and was originally refused. When I asked to speak with the TSM on duty, STSO (b)(6) told me "there isn't one, I'm in charge here," and told me I could wait (until after my flight departed) to speak with the TSM. After a few minutes of persistence, I was able to obtain TSO (b)(6) name from the STSO.

I am extremely disappointed with my wife's treatment by the TSA this morning at Logan Airport. As a veteran naval officer, a medical director and advisor for many local and regional law enforcement agencies, and an active local politician, I have always supported and defended the TSA and its mission. It is inexcusable that my wife—a celebrated obstetric physician in her own right—was belittled and embarrassed for exercising her rights and expertise in defense of our unborn child.

I eagerly await a response and plan of action for Officer (b)(6) remediation.

I flew back from San Francisco to St Louis on the 2:35 flight through United on 6/23/2015. My experience with anything but pleasant. The first agent that I encountered and everyone there after, that was a agent, I informed them that I had a knee replacement. If at all possible I would like to go through the walk-through that will show that I've had a knee replacement and avoid the pat down. All agents were very busy socializing with each other and pretty much told me to tell the agent at the screening. In total I ask four agents to be able to walk through the Aircraft Embraer 175 (twin-jet) (b)(6) screening device that would avoid the pat down. When I approached the walk-through, I informed the agent I did have a knee replacement. she said just come on through and stand over there. For the next 10 minutes she would intermittently announce "female assist". It appeared that there were three of the x-ray machines there but they were not open so because of that I got to be patted down by a very unpleasant woman.

I told her didn't he'll I should be treated as a criminal because I had my knee replaced. she then said, in a very condescending tone if you didn't want to be patted down, you should've told somebody before you got up here. I told her that I had told several of the agents before I got to that point and nothing was done. I did talk a little sternly because I was upset. These agents were very unprofessional and rude. Is there anything in the future I should try to avoid the pat down. I did everything I could think of and it did nothing to help. please look into this and respond to this email I would like to know if this is protocol for the agents to be more interested in conversing with each other, than dealing with the passengers and if the female women that pat you down are allowed to treat you like you have no rights. Why did this happen why was I not able to go through the other device?

Dear TSA,

I am requesting an immediate explanation of why my 16 year old daughter was detained and forced to undergo a very disturbing "pat down" and deep challenge while going through security at MidWay airport in Chicago today. My daughter (b)(6) was flying from Chicago to Boston alone on:

Mon May 25

Depart Chicago (Midway) (MDW) on Southwest Airlines at 07:20 AM
Arrive in Boston Logan (BOS) at 10:30 AM

5/26/2015

AM

We had checked with the airline and they had confirmed due to her age (16) she would only need her birth certificate and a picture I.D. to pass through security. However, when she arrived there your agent pulled her aside and brought her to bowels of the airport for questioning and physical pat down. Only after one of your agents realized her age did they stop and let her go. In fact, my daughter commented that your agent stated that "we are not even allowed to do this to a 16" year old. They didn't even have the courtesy to direct her back to the gate!

I would like to know why she was put through this ordeal, what action will be taken on the agent and the manager on duty. I am very concerned that none of your agents checked the age on her birth certificate and don't even seem to know the rules and law. I question what other mistakes are they making?

I request a clear response and written apology to this inquiry by the end of this week. I will follow up with a phone call if I do not hear back as requested and take whatever action I am allowed within the law.

The actions of the agents on duty were inappropriate and very concerning.

Regards, (b)(6)

To whom it may concern I am offices illy filing a complaint against the TSA agents and supervisors that handled my case at approximately 4:00pm in the terminal wing that goes to Southwest Airlines gates 1-40. I have documented the supervisors name that let all this harassment and lack of common sense transpire during a medical condition of a patient being transported from the mayo clinic to San Antonio texas for surgery. I am the individual who was harassed and fondled by at new TSA agent in training. I am going to make this brief because I am still in the hospital; it was so upsetting it took my blood pressure to 215\111; the Phoenix airport ems was begging the TSA agents to let me go because I was a stroke risk. Here are the facts:

1. I was in a wheel chair just been released for medical transport to San Antonio
2. Informed greeting officer of medical condition provided all medical documentation
3. Had notified Phoenix airport ems of my stroke like conditions and they had already set up triage area at edge of TSA to screen me
4. Was called over to get pat down from screener in training that was practicing on me and taking directions from supervisor
5. Trainee proceeded to stick her hands down my pants telling me my pants were too tight. I had a bowel blockage and she attempted to punch my stomach and lift up my clothes. She tried to get her hands under my bra and when she did it incorrectly her supervisor would say let s do it again!
6. I began to cry, shake and turn red. The ems told the TSA agents she is going down and the proceeded to fondle my body over and over because the trainee could not get it right.
7. I was having to sit back down to weakness and being threatened by the supervisor if I did not stand and cooperate I would be detained.

5/26/2015 8:42:54 AM 8. After a chemical check and letting this trainee stick her hands all over my body inappropriately I was released into ems triage area that showed I had an irregular heart beat by an EKG and 215\111 blood pressure. The Phoenix ems was very upset with the lack of common sense and putting someone s health at such risk with all the signs of danger; medical transport paperwork etc..

AM I have heard of cases like this but never dreamed that a ignorant trainee, trainee supervisor and the head of the TSA area would jeopardize someone s health. I would kindly request a confirmation of my complaint and I do have the name the supervisor. I am repulsed on how I was treated and want to make sure this never happens again.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Caller flew from Tunica MS yesterday and she had a pacemaker and could not go through the WTMD. She said that she was taken to the side and received a patdown. She said that she was told to wait that they needed to check her hands. She said that she waited for some time and then a TSO yelled at her get over there. She said that she told her you don t have to talk to me in that manor and said that the TSO then yelled I said get over there two more times. She said that the officer was one of the most rudest individuals she has every encountered in all of her years of flying. She said that they also took picture of her ID and board pass and she wants to know why. She is also requesting a call from the CSM letting her know what steps are taken to reprimand the TSO. She said that the TSO wrote her name down but it is hard to read she thinks it says (b)(6)

Flight Info (If applicable, Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): J6 677, JFK Terminal 5, screening line 5, saturday 23 may 2015 around 7am.

Comments: I opted out of imaging screening and the employee (a short african-american man) directing people though the machine, didn't call for anybody to do pat-down for a long time. He was rude, mocking and at times threatening.

Later asking the (supposed) supervisor (b)(6) for a feedback/complaints form, she refused to hand one out without seeing IDs and boarding passes. She was also incredible rude.

You claim that opting out is our valid choice, so please stop this underhanded punishment of people who makes that choice, it's very dishonest.

Caller was at Phoenix airport at Southwest terminal 4 gate d security. Her son walks with four arms crutches and has leg braces as well and has to have a patdown. A TSA agent took his tray of belongings with her son that was 2 lanes over to have a patdown. He had all of his stuff in the tray and she told him to gather his stuff up after the screening was completed. Caller said her son was picking up her stuff and was meeting her and found at their flight was late. Caller said that they were eating at a restaurant in the airport when her son realized he did not have his watch. Caller said that she went back to the screening lane he was in and ask for some help find his watch. Caller said that one of the TSA agent was not helpful at all and the other male TSA agent searched for the watch. Caller said that the watch was not found and she finds it hard to believe that someone did not see this watch in the bin. Caller said that it is an expensive watch and she was told that there are cameras that can tell her what happened.

Special Notes - Caller flew from AEX to ATL. She lives in Springfield, VA. She is 83 years old. The checkpoint was moving very slowly. She had to take her shoes off at the checkpoint. She did not have to take her 3-1-1 bag out of the carry-on. She has an artificial knee and a plate and screws in her ankle. She set off an alarm and had to have a patdown. She set off an alarm in DCA on her previous flight. She said that they just used a wand on her knee. The TSO told her that she did not like doing the patdown any more than she liked getting the patdown and that she would prefer to patdown a good looking man. The TSO asked if she wanted to get a private patdown. The caller told her that she would prefer to do that. The TSO told her that she would have to get another female to assist her. The TSO told her that she may get a patdown and she may not. She was told that if she can not find anyone to assist she may miss her plane. The TSO told her that she did not arrive early enough. She said that she did arrive early enough. She agreed to allow the TSO to do the patdown in the public area. She wanted to make a complaint because she got a patdown in public view because they did not have anyone to assist the TSO. She stated that the TSO asked two men to leave and there was no one else at the gate. She was very upset. She did not get the name of the TSO. She said that she did not see a name tag on any of the agents.

Disability Description: Callers father, (b)(6), 92 is legally blind and was in a wheelchair.

Caller felt her father was treated very poorly by the TSO at the checkpoint.

A TSA male agent who was average build with white-grayish hair conducted the screening and was rude. He used a firm or rude tone with her elderly father.

He is 92 and legally blind. She had requested wheelchair assistance.

She went through security fine with the gate pass.

He was provided a wheelchair. Her dad was made to get out of the wheelchair. He was asked to get up and go through the AIT. The alarm was triggered by the contents in his pocket.

He was not told to empty his pockets. He was fussed at by the TSO for not emptying his pockets.

He then had a pat down. He was then fussed at again by the TSO for putting his money back into the pocket. He was permitted to into the secured area after the pat down and after his hands were checked for gun powder residue.

IF he is over the age of 75, will she need to notify anyone?

Caller is a flight attendant for American airlines. She was going through DFW today and when she went through the screening process her hands tested positive for ETD. She was pulled aside for additional screening by a black male TSA agent. She told the TSO that she did not want to go through the AIT machine and opted for a pat down. The TSO pulled her aside and told her to wait for a female agent. She had to wait a very long time for the female agent to give her a pat down. She said that both female agents were very pleasant and respectful. While getting the pat down she said that the black male TSO yelled at her that you get a hundred thousand more radiation from flying on the plane then by going through the AIT machine. After her pat down she asked for the name of the black male TSO and found out that he was a supervisor and she believes his name is (b)(6). The supervisor over heard her asking for his name and became very aggressive towards her. He yelled as she was walking away asking for her name. He also made threats that he was going to file a report against her since she was going to file a complaint against him. She felt harassed and threatened by this TSA supervisor. She would like some assurance that the TSA supervisor will not be able to put her name on a list to where she would be pulled aside for additional screening every time she flies.

Caller said the TSA agent starting yelling at her in front of every one and told her that she was able to keep them in for the screening. Caller said that once she went through the metal detector she ended up having to have a patdown and she was touching her in places that was uncomfortable for her and she was rude while doing that as well. Caller said that once she was screening and she place her hearing aids back in the TSA agent told her to never take them out again for the screening.

Date and Time of Flight: 05/13/15 @ 6:05 PM

Departure Airport: TPA

Airline: Southwest

Flight #: 506

Gate Terminal: 31

REASON for the call: She flew from LAX and missed her flight because of additional screening that she received at the TSA checkpoint. Her baggage was physically inspected and she received a patdown. screening. She feels that TSOs were not mindful of the time frame and took longer than necessary to complete the additional screening. She arrived to the airport two hours prior to travel.

The female TSO (5 2, shorter hair, Caucasian) that conducted the patdown was very rude to her. She snapped at her to not touch her belongings on the conveyor belt.

She felt that she was put at risk as other px saw the electronics and other items that she was traveling with. She missed three days of work in regard to the incident (two days of travel and one day of recovery once she arrived to her destination). She indicated that she had to spend 14 hours at the airport and had to spend money to feed herself.

5/27/2015 She indicated that she will call back with additional itinerary information.

12:04:18 PM Date Time: 5 6 15 She doesn't recall the time that she was at the checkpoint. Her flight was scheduled to depart at approximately 1pm. She doesn't have the exact time.

Caller is at an airport and she feels she was mistreated by an agent during screening. She is traveling with an infant and had her infant in a sling. She wanted to wear the sling with the infant in it for screening. She knew she would have a patdown due to the infant sling. Her complaint is on Supervisor (b)(6). He told her she would get a patdown and would have to remove the child from the sling. She was made to take the child out of the sling and he was rude and loud about it. She ask why she had to remove the child from the sling and he was very loud as he told her this was the policy. She ask why because she was allowed to leave the infant in the sling for her departing flight. She then started asking another agent about who to report the supervisor too. The supervisor told her she did not need to speak to anyone else. Once screening was done he followed her and kept answering for anyone else she spoke too. She says she felt he was harassing her. He was a larger man.

I ask her if she wanted me to provide her general information for screening of a baby sling? Yes

Special Notes: TSO conducting the screening was about 25, possibly Puerto Rican, 5 8 and he had a thin beard at the jaw. The supervisor was a short woman and she had just returned from vacation and that was the reason she could not provide her name. The team leader was black. He covered his badge and was covering for the TSO. He said he had just came in. He was about 60. He took pictures and will email those to us.

Reason for the call: Caller wanted to make a complaint on a TSO in DAL. She states the TSO was atrocious. She travels every week and has never gone through anything like that. She asked the TSO if she could step in to the AIT. The TSO called an STSO and asked her if she could give her a patdown. She explained to the STSO that she has blisters. The STSO told her to call in the complaint. The TSO said that she needed to wait since the AIT was stinky and needed to be cleaned.

Date and Time (departure time and arrival time): The original departure time was 7:35 p.m. but it was delayed to 8:25 p.m. She went through security at 6:05 p.m.

To Whom It May Concern:

On Monday, May 25, 2015 at approximately 5:00 a.m. EDT at the Richmond International Airport, I experienced an uncomfortable and inappropriate pat-down. After going through the metal detector, there was an alarm on private areas of my body. I had on a loose fitting dress. The female attendant told me to lift my arm and spread my legs in front of about 10 men. She proceeded to pat my leg up to my groin area, then she cuffed my private body part there in front of the group of male employees. I was so startled that I slightly jumped. She then went up the back of my leg and cuffed the backside of my behind. This process was truly uncalled for because the metal detector only showed an alarm on my front side.

5/30/2015 9:22:35 AM The female attendee never informed me of my right to go to a private area for the pat-down. It was truly a humiliating experience, and I would like TSA to rectify this problem.

Please feel free to contact me at (b)(6) or return my email message.

Thank you,

(b)(6)

5/30/2015 5:08:00 PM My family and I were flying out of SMF on May 30th 2015 and we went through a few hours early just to avoid issues. We were all listed as TSA Pre except my daughter. So we went through TSA Pre my daughter, who is a minor age 15, was told she could not go through with the rest of the family because she was not a minor, over the age of 14. Is this procedure true? When does TSA get to flex the age and divide the child from their parent. Thankfully my wife went with her but then my wife was pulled aside and had a pat down inspection because she helped educate our daughter on what was going to happen. It wasn't a horrible experience but it was my daughters second time flying and a bad one for her. We spent the night before educating our children on how TSA works so they would understand and this happened. My only question is if the law says 18 and younger is a minor, and that's on the TSA website where I got this email. Why was it changed? Why separate a minor from their parents? It just did not seem professional in any manner. Any ways thanks for reading this. Hopefully either an employee will get trained better or the public will get information about TSA's own age laws.

5/31/2015 9:12:02 AM I was leaving Waco this afternoon 5/30 and had a very negative experience and also witnessed a poor 80+ woman left standing waiting for a pat down simply because she has artificial hips. She stood over 5 minutes just waiting. My personal experience was due to something reportedly showing up on my hands, quite ridiculous in itself. All my baggage checked and I was subjected to a very rude and invasive pat down. None of this is helping airline security.

Hello -

I've just passed through the TSA Pre-check and SFO Terminal 3 at approximately 7:20 AM PDT. For some reason, I set off an alarm, and my hands tested positive for explosives on the hand swipe. I had gone about my daily routine this morning, and had not knowingly been in contact with anything explosive. After a thorough check of my hand carry articles and a private full body pat down. I was deemed cleared to fly. I'm writing because the female agent doing the pat down was simply cold, offering no apology for my inconvenience, and I think that should be part of the "all clear" procedure.

6/1/2015 12:14:42 PM

Sincerely,

(b)(6)
(b)(6)
Kailua-Kona, HI 96740

I was being pat down at rdu today by a tsa officer. His last name starts with an f -- (b)(6) or something like that. He had square frame black glasses.

During his screen of my front belt loop, he reached his hand down my pants much further than was appropriate, and much further than in any of the dozens of other tsa screens. His hand was against my public hair and very near to my penis. I felt extremely violated, and that this incident was borderline sexual assault.

6/1/2015 12:15:15 PM
I raised the issue with his supervisor and manager. They said that they would watch him but said there was nothing else they could do. The manager also admitted that the office in question was new. Why the was he not being supervised during his searches? The supervisor was on the other side of security out of sight and I had Togo look for her.

I find it frightening that if a tsa officer goes beyond there limits and gropes someone, that there is nothing a supervisor can do about it. They didn t every record my complaint beyond a verbal acknowledgement.

There should be someone overseeing all pay downs so this doesn t continue. There should be proper training so this doesn t happen at all. My complaint should have been taken more seriously and recorded in writing by the tsa officer in charge.

6/1/2015 12:16:45 PM Caller said on 05 20 15 she had an issue at the St Thomas airport she received a patdown and her bag was searched .She felt like a criminal in front of her 5 year old daughter. She had her bag checked because the laptop was still in her bag. She says she forgot to take it out. They told her they had to do a hand check. When he checked the laptop with explosive trace detection. Then he checked inside and he said there was an alarm. They told her to go through a patdown. She don't think all the search was needed.
She was told that she received the secondary screening because she left her laptop inside the bag and needs to know why she received a secondary screening.

Disability Description: Caller wants to file a complaint regarding his CPAP.

Incident Details: The caller traveled last Friday from Phoenix to Dallas. His CPAP machine was confiscated at the PHX airport. They told him there is a dark area that could not be resolved on the x ray. They were going to permit him to check the CPAP but he did not have time to go back and do this. Caller felt that this was a failure to accommodate his disability because he needed the CPAP in carry on. He did not have time to check it. Caller feels the TSO who did the pat down did not follow proper procedure because he didn t change his gloves after the first pat down. He told him when he done the patdown that he had to bring someone else to inspect the machine. Caller wants to retrieve his CPAP and file a complaint.

To Whom It May Concern:

I frequently fly from LAX to SFO and back. I usually get "pre" at LAX but often don't when flying out of SFO. I always opt for the pat down rather than go through the machine. However, at the Southwest Terminal at SFO the wait is almost always at least 20 minutes or so for a female assist. I don't care if it's a male assist but they say that is not allowed.

I believe they should have more females available for the pat downs since the males never seem to have trouble getting through. (By the way, the times I've opted for a pat down at LAX the wait time was not excessive – just at SFO.)

Seems to us that your machines may require adjustment since post pat downs nothing was found. Seems like a waste of your valuable resources to be patting down a retired federal law enforcement agent and his spouse. We appreciate all that you do and providing feedback to assist in your continuous improvement program.

I have flown twice with my one-year-old daughter since her operation to implant her with a pacemaker. Each time, my daughter passes through without incident and I (her mother) am subjected to an intense pat-down while both my children watch and while all of our earthly belongings sit unattended at the end of a conveyor belt.

After being humiliated the first time in the Las Vegas airport and being late for our flight while waiting for a female officer and a conference between several officers that didn't seem to know how to handle our situation, I took my mother along for the second flight. We requested that my mother be screened, and then take possession of the infant so that I could go through the scanner. This request was denied without further explanation. I find the whole process of being personally screened in this manner degrading, humiliating, upsetting and just down-right discriminatory. My daughter has a medical device. We have a card proving it. Why should other members of her family be subject to this extra screening? There has to be a better way to handle this and I hope that you can help me to determine what that is before our next flight.

Thank you,

Folks,
My god daughter (b)(6) had two bottles of Victoria Secret perfume confiscated in her checked bags by an agent Wood at the Orlando airport tonight. Southwest Flight 1800. Agent (b)(6) brought (b)(6) bag past security, treated her in an unprofessional manner, even physically patting her down physically after she had already cleared security. (b)(6) then took the bottles worth $50 USD with her.

OK I am a frequent flyer and I have never heard of such a thing. I just went to Jamaica last week with a bottle of cologne in my checked bag and no one on either side questioned or confiscated my goods. The additional pat down and the confiscation of woman's perfume by a female agent seems highly inappropriate, and I would like evidence of the perfume's destruction if it is deemed to pose a security risk.

My family has served law enforcement in the Philadelphia Police, the FBI and the IRS and I have never heard of such a thing. All of my uncle's have served in the military, my father in special forces. I have a call into my cousin who still serves this country to find out if checked on perfume has been added on to our country's list of banned goods. Walk in my shoes and tell me if this seems right to you. I honor what you do, I depend on you for my security. . But this incident crossed the line. If Agent (b)(6) is sporting Victoria Secret perfume, I will be very upset. It is definitely news worthy since (b)(6) is a disabled Latina. Please respond as soon as you are able.

Respectfully,

Caller told the TSO she did and the TSO asked that she remove it. When she refused to remove it the TSO said she was not comfortable to let her through and she called a male supervisor over and then he called a Male Manager over. One was about 5 ft. 4 inches older man with salt and pepper hair about 60 and one the second male was about 5ft 5 and wearing a suit with closely shaven hair -mid 50 s~~

~~Next a female Supervisor was called over (did not know name but she was a light skinned black female) and that TSO took her to a private area and she had her to conduct a self pat down of the area and she swabbed her hands.~~

Comments: I was subjected to a hair pat down that was uncomfortable and felt very much like a violation of my person. My hair is not a storage compartment. The TSA guard was touching and patting my hair and I felt very embarrassed and uncomfortable. This occurred at Newark Liberty International. This is very rude. My hair is not a hazard nor disruptive. I'm fairly certain this is an illegal action.

Comments: I have 2 new artificial hips plus an unstable SI joint. The screener that did the pat down had a RAMBO attitude. He is the first TSA agent that forced me to remove the fabric belt that stabilizes my SI-joint and helps keep my back from going out. I have had a lot of pat downs, but this agent is the first agent that squeezed my skin so hard that it hurt. When I asked that he take it easy, he just said "this is my job". If it is this person's job to remove my bones through my skin then the TSA needs to find him a different job. I did not get a name but he was 35-40 with a completely shaven head, and a RAMBO attitude. The screening occurred at 8:00AM May 20, 2015.

you people mentally retarded. I went through the paperwork for pre screen. I took 3 birth certificates, 2 expired passports my driver's license and my concealed carry permit as well as a half dozen credit cards. Drove all the way to Fort Washington and you turds have a problem that my birth certificate has a middle initial and all of my other information does not have the middle initial. Now you understand why we have no trust in our government. Now you know why we call you Too Stupid for America. I always arrive early so your pat downs don't bother me. Every time they touch my leg I start moaning. I can't wait for the next time I go through and some retard pulls me aside. I have plenty of time. I'm going to pretend I only speak spanish and pretend I'm illegal. I will probably get better treatment.

This is the 2nd time filing this complaint. I have yet to receive a response from the first complaint.

Flying back from Las Vegas on April 28, 2015 I asked to have a pat down instead of going through the body scanner. I have a long history of cancer in my family and I am not going to take any chances with it. A blonde woman in her 50's in TSA uniform got visibly upset when I asked for a pat down instead and moved me to the side out of line. She told me "this might take a while" with a really nasty tone in her voice. She then proceeded to yell at other travelers going through the line. After about 20 minutes of waiting she turned around to another TSA agent who had been sitting there the whole time and said "body check". He then came over and we did the body check and I proceeded to my flight.

The fact that she kept me waiting intentionally for 20 minutes in retribution over me slightly inconveniencing her routine is unacceptable. The TSA agent who was doing the pat downs was sitting there the whole time. It was obvious that she has a problem with people with disabilities. I am a veteran, and I didn't serve my country to have someone disrespect me for asking a simple and legal request.

I expect a response this time to this complaint.

Sincerely,

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening. :

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): Alaska Flight 2251k, Sunday May 31, 2015

Comments: On Sunday we checked in, received our boarding passes, and went through security as instructed for our Alaska Airlines flight from Portland, Oregon to Reno, Nevada. Following that, we ate lunch in the airport, and then began to board our flight. It was at this point that (b)(6) was pulled out of line and told that the TSA had made a mistake, and that he required additional screening. Eventually (b)(6) was also forced to get off of the plane to facilitate this. The lengthy, secondary screening process caused us to miss our flight, which was the only direct flight of the day. We arrived to the airport with plenty of time for this screening. Had TSA not made an error. Due to this error, we had to connect through another city, making our hour and fifteen minute flight into a 9 hour ordeal. The TSA had no reason to search us, and if additional screening was necessary, it was the responsibility of your agents to do so prior to allowing us to pass through security. We were incredibly inconvenienced by having to miss our flight, humiliated by the way we were treated, and suffered a significant cost as a result of this. Furthermore, the TSA officers we dealt with were rude, refused to offer us any explanations, and made threatening comments when we asked for an explanation as to why we were being forced to miss our flight. We were threatened with arrest for asking for an explanation. This entire situation is unacceptable, and we would like to be contacted by TSA regarding this practice.

Comments: just absolutely worthless and nothing but harassment, we migrate through this disgusting long line, only to get to the 'breakdown' point and find that they change the ropes so that people that never had to do 'migrate' for 20 minutes are put ahead of people that did. we 'tray up' taking off belts/shoes, but tsa that is supposed to be there monitoring line, is over having 'rap' session with another, so nobody pushes their trays through, there are at least ten trays there stopped, this black tsa woman comes over and shouts you have to push tray through, but of course where had she been and where was help, so go thru the pat down check point, they harass and then we wait another 18 minutes for junk to come through trays in another worthless line. who wasnt working the black person came over and didnt push anything, the black person sitting at the tray machine, the idiot that went off for rap session with another non-working idiot?? 4 people there doing nothing and it takes over 30 minutes just to get through this garbage??!! fire everyone, start over and hire people that speak english and made it thru highschool, maybe!!!! i believe we should cooperate with law enforcement for safety and crime prevention but this is pure dysfunctional harassment!!!!

Complaints: Inappropriate Screening/Pat Down Screening. :

Flight Info (If applicable. Enter Flight#/Airline/Terminal/Airport/Gate/Etc): flight UA525/united/ San Francisco/ Gate 65/

Comments: I am very disappointed and troubled by the treatment I received from two TSA agents from my flight back from San Francisco to Los Angeles on May 25th around 5:15pm. My crutches were placed through the metal detector so I opted to go through the pat down again as to avoid further injury to my ankle. The female agent that did my pat down at the San Francisco airport was rude and unprofessional. First she rushed my friend and the staff member assisting me with the wheelchair I requested, because she said she could not start the pat down without my things being brought over. I told the TSA agent that it was ok with me if she started but she complained that people tend to be too worried about their things, which I found the revelation and her demeanor uncalled for. Also this was a protocol inconsistency in comparison with my experience at LAX airport a few days prior, where the agent did the pat down/screening first and allowed my friend time to gather our things. After my things were brought over, the TSA agent went ahead and explained the pat down procedure, I also informed her about my injured ankle before she started. The female agent proceeded to swiftly graze her fingers over my head and squeeze my hair bun, which took me off guard because she did not tell me she was going to do that so I was not expecting it. I simply asked her about it, but the TSA agent became agitated and responded with "Yes we do this, do you want to speak to a supervisor." I told her there was no need that is was ok for her to continue with the screening. The professional thing for the agent to have done was to keep her composure and provide me with some clarity but instead she very rudely said to me "well for my safety I need to call a supervisor over." I started to feel uncomfortable with the situation. Then right behind me the agent flagged a supervisor (b)(6) down and told her "they are asking questions about procedures and I do not feel comfortable any more can you observe the screening." I felt confused as to how a simple question was escalating to such a degree. Supervisor (b)(6) came over and did not introduce herself, I just went ahead and explained my question to which she responded in a condescending tone "Well in San Francisco we do check everyone's hair." I just shared that I noticed a difference in protocols between the two airports and ask for the pat down/screening to proceed. I was really uncomfortable having another TSA agent just standing right next to me watching. The first female agent continued with the pat down screening, but did so roughly between my breasts and up my thighs twice. She used the palm of her hand when she said she would use the back of her hand up my legs and thighs, her hands were mere inches away from my crotch area too. She put a lot of pressure on my legs as she inspected them. The female agent also grabbed the ankle I had told her was injured and she caused me to wince in pain. She did not apologize, she simply got up and brought over what looked like paper squares to test my shoes (another protocol inconsistency: at LAX the agent explained everything professionally and in detail, which made me feel safe and comfortable. The agent at LAX did not touch my injured ankle, simply used those paper squares and she did not go as high up my thigh or put so much pressure on my body) While the San Francisco TSA agent went to check the results from my shoe test, I asked my friend who was traveling with me to please grab my sun glasses for me so that I would not forget them. Supervisor (b)(6) then yelled at my friend "she is not cleared she can't touch them." At no point was it explained to me that I could not grab my sunglasses, the agent at the start simply said she was putting them on the side for me. I did not ask for my glasses to be given to me, but simply kept for me. After I reiterated this to Supervisor (b)(6) she allowed my friend to grab my sunglasses. The female agent then came back and asked me to lift up my shirt high so that she can check my waistband, another thing she did not tell me before hand. I said no because I felt uncomfortable exposing my stomach in a public place, to which the female agent condescendingly replied with "That's why I asked you if you wanted a private room" then supervisor (b)(6) told me I could just left up my shirt a bit, to which I did. The female agent seemed bothered as she tugged roughly around my waistband. The agent then asked me to move around in the wheel chair left, right, forward and back because she needed to inspect the wheel chair. This was another protocol inconsistency because she did not initially inform me that she was going to check the wheel chair. I honestly do not understand why she would need to if the wheelchair belonged to the airport and an airport staff member was assisting me. If TSA agents distrust airport staff, then there's a whole other security issue that needs to be dealt with internally. I did not experience a wheelchair check at LAX either besides the moving from left to right in the chair. I decided to then just stand without my crutches, tolerating pain and further injury so that the Caller is very upset about the screening at the Columbus airport this morning.

He would like to speak with manager. He has 4 S's on the boarding pass.

He was pulled out of line after he had gone through the AIT and had a patdown. The TSO stated he was randomly selected.

His genitals were rubbed.

Why is the policy a procedure? Does he have the option to opt out of it if he did not want to be subjected to it?

He has flown 100 times in the past 3 years and this has never occurred before.

The physical patdown and rubdown was very unwanted and he was very unhappy with the experience.

The hand was rubbed down his leg and on the genitals and it was very uncomfortable.

Caller states that she just LAS and when she arrived to the TSA checkpoint her purse was dumped out and so too was her make up bag. Caller states that the officer, a short, black woman that wore glasses with the disposition of a venomous snake was extremely rude to her and the caller feels that she was treated very poorly. Caller, after having explained to her, understand that her LGA s needed to be in a quart sized bag. Caller states that she left Hobby she had the exact same belongings packed the exact same way and there was no issues when she left Hobby. Caller is completely appalled at the way she was treated in LAS. Caller states that contained in her makeup bag was MAC makeup including powders and brushes. Caller states that she had to undergo a pat down which she feels was not needed.

Comments:

Lines were long and only one agent checking passenger I'd. A lady about 90 (at least) in a wheel chair was in front of me. She had a prescreened card in her hand. Rather than wand her down they made her get out of her chair and walk through the scanner this woman was very unsteady on her feet yet they still asked her to put her arms up over her head! (She still had her prescreened card in her hand!) they took forever to get her wheel chair to her on the other side. Because she was taking so long and the lines were backing up they started letting the younger more physically fit passengers behind me just walk through the metal detector! These agents are in real need of some serious training! I felt they jeopardized this woman's health and were lax in screening those behind me! Even the younger woman with a dog just lifted the ropes and moved over and walked through the metal detector and no one questioned her or seem to notice! I have flown often and I will say this is probably the first time I have felt uncomfortable about safety issues.

Comments: I do not use the scanner, always request a pat down. Always had highly professional TSA agents. Until today. I had the displeasure of being received by (b)(6). He began by saying that it was time for my free massage. Then yelled at me when I walked too far ahead of him. Asked me to get my stuff, then told me to put it down because he hadn't given me permission to touch it. I asked for his supervisor. He said he WAS the supervisor. I asked for his superior, he said that he "was in charge of this." He had a different agent do the actual pat down. When that was over I asked for his name. THEN he said that he could call a manager. I waited 5 minutes. No action on his part. I asked someone else. The manager's name is (b)(6). Never showed up. (b)(6) returned and said he was "just having fun" and that he didn't call (b)(6) because I didn't specifically ask for a "manager." I expressed dissatisfaction and the agent who was with him asked if he wanted DPS to be called. When TSA has egg on its face in the national media, this is the time for seriousness and courtesy at security check points, not humor and rudeness.

Hello. I recently received my TSA Pre number (b)(6) which would be great IF body scanners were placed in areas where TSA Pre entered security. I travel frequently between Denver and Kansas City and neither airport has a body scanner in the TSA pre line. This is very frustrating and also time consuming. Paying the money to become TSA pre should come with some benefits; however, I have a replaced knee and do not want to go through the pat down process (I am sure you can understand why). However, even though I have TSA pre, I end up having to go through the regular and often long line in order to go through a body scanner.

Given that more and more people are going through the TSA pre process, I am hopeful you will start putting body scanners in TSA pre lines.

Thank you,

I am sitting at gate E5 waiting for a flight to MSP at 7pm. I just went through your check point to get to this point. I opted out of the scan machine. I dont like the options of a pat down and understand the existing procedures dictate a pat down. I accepted this unpleasant experience. I waited for a male assist. A tsa man greeted me and asked me to follow him. I got a feeling in my stomach that the man who was the chosen one to do the pat down was a homosexual man. I am aware of my surroundings. I listened to his voice and herd the hints of what I became very uncomfortable about and decided then and there if I felt the man was a homosexual I didn't want him touching me so I asked for another tsa agent to do the pat down. The man I didn't feel comfortable with did his job at that moment perfect and gave me an option I did feel more comfortable with. I waited for instruction to proceed to where ever I needed to go to complete the pat down and herd the same tsa man I didn't want patting me down say something to the effect of "sir I would have enjoyed it as much as you". That statement at that moment was so unprofessional words don't do justice to the levels of upset I am as I sit here writing this complaint. I asked to speak with a supervisor and one appeared within a minute. The tsa agent (b)(6) at Echo check point handled the situation after I requested it. He was professional and dealt with my complaint with dignity. I am a heterosexual male who is not here to make a big deal about a man being gay or not. I could care less what someone does in the privacy of their own home. I do care about someone who I feel may be a homosexual touching me in ways I feel would NEVER allow in ANY other situation. I was violated by opting out of the procedure in place. I am anxious enough about having to allow a male touch me in areas any other place on the planet besides a Dr office would be a sexual assault. I feel very violated and concerned that the dog and pony show the tsa became a complete waste of tax payers money on the facade of 19 men from the middle east hijacked 4 airplanes and took down 3 buildings. 2 out of the 4 planes hitting only 2 buildings..what hit building 7? The tsa is a joke. The state department already admitted that the underwear bomber was placed on the plane by another agency..(cia) and the experience I just had is a prime example of the complete invasion of privacy your organization is completely OK with all while not understanding your oath to protect and serve the constitution of the united states from all enemies foreign and domestic. Ill spell it out for anyone who reads this. You are all oath breakers by asking anyone to be subject to the appalling procedure you call enhanced security screening. The leader who run this country are sold out and wipe their ass with the United States Constitution on a daily occurrence and you take your orders from them...so choose to keep the paycheck coming in and violate the next chump who speaks up against the dog and pony show we have the very unpleasant requirement to go through to travel. If I were in ANY of your shoes I would have long ago been fired because as soon as my supervisor came into the meeting and said I would have to place my hands on other mens private parts to see if they are a terrorist is a outside of my willingness to make a paycheck or decent retirement. I would refuse until i was fired and then i would sue for changing the rules after I was hired because I sure as heck would never apply for a job where I have to violate another man i would never want touching me the way I was required to touch him. Absolutely PATHETIC!

REASON for the call: Caller had an incident at Newark and she had on a money belt and one of the agents blurted out she had on a money belt several times and she needed a female to pat her down. The TSO announced it in front of the whole world with a hundred people around her. She doesn't mind the patdown but that wasn't necessary to be saying that in front of everyone and it was extremely unprofessional. Announcing she was wearing a money belt is not the brightest thing to do. There was a TSA agent named (b)(6) and she called over her friend and she was a thin black woman who told her some spots had showed up on the x-ray and that she had glitter on but she didn't have any glitter on her skirt. The TSO said they needed to check it and at that point the caller told her she was wearing a money belt. At that point she blurted out in front of everyone she was wearing a money belt and they took it off and they counted her money. It was very disrespectful the way she was treated. They did a private screening but the way she blurted out about the money belt there was no decorum involved. The caller is short, gray hair, 72 years old and wearing a black top and black skirt crocheted with flowers and leaves. She was carrying under 200 dollars. These people need to use more discretion because the incident was out of context to be making a public announcement.

Comment : I was pat down while going through security by a TSA employee.my shirt was tucked in, and he claimed I had something hidden by my back. I untucked my shirt to show nothing was there, and the employee claimed that I had removed whatever I had hidden (in front of everyone, without anyone noticing) and that I had to be thoroughly checked in a private room.

In the private room, this man began to extremely thoroughly pat my ENTIRE body down multiple times over the course of several minutes while another coworker watched. The entire time I kept saying there was nothing on me. He left the room to briefly, came back to question me about what I was hiding and that he felt I had something hidden in my groin area. This is where I got extremely frustrated.

8:22:27

The only reason I was brought aside was because he felt something (nothing) on my back. Now I was supposedly was able to magician the object from behind my back to my groin area, in front of all of the tsa employees at the security checkpoint without anyone noticing. I explained the ridiculousness of this to the employee, but he was adamant in his search. He then had a police officer enter the room and I was forced to remove my pants.

At this point, it should have been clearly obvious I was not hiding anything, but to not be swayed, he proceeded to thoroughly pat down my rear and groin areas AGAIN, as well as thoroughly search my pants. His entire story was ridiculous. I felt extremely violated throughout this entire process.

After I was able to dress, I just wanted to get out of the room, so I didn't get his name or badge number. The TSA worker is an older Caucasian male, light hair, balding, and overweight. His logic for searching me was flawed, and I was extremely violated.

The caller was traveling last night on a red eye flight. The caller went through screening at LAX and was randomly selected for a patdown and the TSA agent stuck her thumbs in her vagina. The caller was wearing stretch pants that were tight and the caller states that going in her vagina is inappropriate and the caller is not ok with that. The caller states the incident was traumatic. The caller wants to know if there are cameras at the airport. The caller wants to be contacted by the CSM at LAX. The caller wants to know if it is normal for TSA to stick their fingers in someone's vagina.

The officer in question was African American, around mid age, hair was in a pony tail, medium build, and around 5ft 5in or less. The caller was wearing black stretch pants and an olive colored shirt. On a recent trip from Ontario airport in California to Seattle, Washington I was shocked at the lack of security. You can walk right up to any ticket counter, after checking in there is no agent at the bottom of the stairway leading to security checkin and gates. Just one girl checking ID's and boarding passes. I did not have to take off shoes or jacket. They did pat me down, but my sister, right behind me just breezed through no pat down no nothing.

Upon returning through SeaTac – again a total lack of security. I went through security in a wheelchair – my sister again no pat down no shoes off and no jacket off.

What is going on? Have we gotten so lax that we have forgotten 911? Even going through to the plane there used to be agents there looking to pull you out of line and pat you down again. All in all, very disappointing and actually scary at the total lack of security. So what is going on? Please don't say lack of funds -

Agent's hands were approximately one half of an inch from zipper during groin area pat-down and directly on the space between the buttocks during buttock pat-down. When asked if the agent's hands should be at least two inches from the zipper, the agent admitted that he did not know the pat-down protocol. Comment : My laptop was mistakenly picked up by another passenger with the same make/model. I had requested a pat-down and, apparently, you have a new screening for laptops - they are removed from the main belt for further testing? The other passenger grabbed the first macbook air that came back to the main belt. It was fellow passenger error.

What I find ridiculous is that - after the very helpful Airport Police went off to find a culprit wrongly identified by TSA on the security footage - I suggested the TSA employees open the computer and look for his/her email address information. We found the guy's name and they made an over-head announcement in the terminal to no avail. The ridiculous/worrying part of this, the part I think needs to be noted, is that even with a name the TSA cannot tell which flight a person is leaving on?! You have to be kidding me. Given the stringent security precautions we, as flying passengers, happily agree to for our public safety, this seems to be a very serious lapse in information sharing and accountability. I can hardly even believe it, to be perfectly honest. Makes me wonder how you're on top of anything outside of the menially performed x-ray screening of hand luggage that I witness when I travel.

To whom it may concern,

I am a 62-year-old American citizen who has never had any trouble with the law. I truly feel that I am being punished by the TSA for having a breast cancer scare and not wanting any more radiation on my body.

The last time I went through the TSA line I was made to stand in front of the machine throwing out radiation for about four minutes until a TSA agent was available to do an embarrassing patdown on my body.

8:29:58

The TSA agent who did the pat down on my body suggested I seemed nervous, as if any decent person would like a stranger touching their body without their true consent. I found this comment insulting and degrading.

This is truly unacceptable behavior to any person especially a decent American citizen and the TSA needs a better solution for this problem.

This punishment needs to stop.

To the Department of Homeland Security and Transportation Security Administration,

As of Monday, June 8th, I will no longer be flying in the United States after the mistreatment I had to deal with by TSA on two different occasions this past weekend.

In one instance, I was forced to stand and wait, without shoes or a belt, for several minutes while waiting for a pat-down at Chicago Midway due to a "shift change," when in fact, three males were standing around talking on the other side of the checkpoint, doing absolutely nothing. During this time, my personal belongings were out of my sight (a violation of your own protocols) for an extended period. Included in these belongings were my ID, credit and debit cards, cash, and electronic devices, including a personal laptop and cell phone, all of which could have easily been taken at any point by an agent or another passenger.

9:09:10
PM

In the second instance, my checked bag was broken into at Orlando International by TSA personnel. Contrary to what TSA and the federal government believe, the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States prohibits, without probable cause, agents going through my personal belonging without a warrant or without notifying me in advance of the invasion of my privacy. Nothing illegal was found and I was given no reason for my LOCKED bag to be broken into and searched. Just circling the word "law" is not probable cause. As we all learned in Social Studies class, no law supersedes the Constitution.

After this weekend's events, it is little wonder why the agency has a 96% failure rate when it comes to finding security issues. Not only are my belongings not safe from TSA agents (and a waste of time when they know there is nothing in my bags), but clearly my safety is of little concern when it comes to the rest of the process. For that reason, I will no longer fly in the United States, which I know means nothing to the people pretending to read this letter. If the purpose of the agency is to eventually destroy the airline industry, you all are doing a fantastic job.

I'm glad to know this country now prides itself on following the same principles as those in 1930s-40s Germany, a period that ended in failure for those people. Using that benchmark, I guess a 96% failure rate is actually a success.

Dear TSA officer,

I would like TSA help in the resolution of this case.

I served as the vice president of (b)(6) up till a few months ago. I have experienced significant troubles even with local flights inside the states since they returned from medical mission and medical conference in Turkey last year.

6/9/2015 6:43:43 PM I have not been able to check in online and print my ticket unless I go to the airline desk in the airport and wait for 1 hour on average with one airline agent to be able to print the ticket since I came back from Turkey where I attended SAMS international conference in June 2014. After that, my ticket has been always flagged with SSSS sign and a comprehensive search including pat down has been always performed.

This has made travel as a nightmare that I started to avoid as much as possible even though I served as the vice president of the organization that receive USAID grant money to do such humanitarian work and medical mission overseas. I already missed a meeting with CBP deputy Commissioner (b)(6) in DC due to being unable to print my ticket in time before the flight left a few months ago. I was about to miss my flight to DC this past Fri to meet with USCIS (b)(6) for the same reason and they had to delay the flight 10 minutes to solve the problem even though I was in the airport 3 hours before the time of the flight.

I sent redress request and I received a response - 2 months ago that I attached to this email. It basically said that if I use the redress number I was provided with (b)(6) it should help. Unfortunately, I tried it during this recent trip to DC to meet with USCIS leadership and it still didn't work and I had to go through the same hassle which is also causing delays to the airline as they have to designate an agent to work for me for almost an hour every time.

I hope you can help in resolving this issue. Thank you very much for your assistance.

RE: CHICAGO O'HARE AIRPORT, JUNE 8, 2015 - DISABLED PASSENGER

Dear (b)(6) and Ms. Walton:

I am writing to relate to you my experience at Chicago's O'Hare Airport last night. I was returning home from a last minute, one-week trip to visit my elderly mother and get medical treatment. I am physically disabled; I have a severe and rare chronic Caller requested to speak with a supervisor immediately.

6/10/2015 12:50:47 PM (b)(6) notes:
She is upset because she has to be patted down every time she goes through the scanner. She feels as though the agents are trained well when it comes to a breast prosthesis. She doesn't inform them before she goes through because it's usually a man and they call a woman over to the checkpoint to do her patdown. She asked if PreCheck would help her screening and not have to go through that. She has heard that at PHX, which is her home airport, that women have been made to remove their prosthesis before screening and she doesn't want to do that.

I am in a wheelchair flying from SFO, Wednesday June 10, 2015 to gate 52. I require a pat down to clear security due to mobility constraints.

The TSA agent patting me down asked me to move so she could feel the back of my thighs. I felt she had already done so and repeating was physically difficult. She said a supervisor was necessary. (b)(6) had to restart the pat down. I explained I was going to miss my flight and would have been happy to have my original pat down continue.

She explained

- I had to arrive 3 hours early if I want to be on time for my flight and make it through security.
- I have to be treated like everyone else
- her grandfather is in a chair and does not act this way

I explained that I am always delayed initially because I have to be patted down. I also felt her actions toward me were inappropriate. That my civil rights are protected under the ACAA.

She said

- I don't care what civil rights group you're part of. You have to be treated like everyone else.

6/11/2015
8:55:24
AM

She then asked for my name so she could file a complaint against me.

During this interaction, her coworker asked her to calm down several times.

I, in fact, don't have to be treated like everyone else and do not have to arrive at the airport 3 hours early to clear through security. I am part of a protected group. The standard of care for most passengers does not work for me so I have to be patted down using a different standard of care. I arrived in plenty of time to make my flight if the pat down had gone normally.

(b)(6) was discriminating against me and does not know the law. Yelling at someone and telling them false information based related to their disability, telling me I am essentially a bad and angry disabled person because I wanted to make my flight is harassment based on my disability.

Sincerely

The caller was injured at the airport going through the checkpoint. She has a fractured shoulder, and sprang her left foot. She said she filed a claim but, they told her they forwarded it to TCC for review and response. She tripped over the mat at TSA. She said a screener was rude to her after she fell. The screener told her that she was fine. The caller was subjected to additional screening including a patdown.

My wife and I have traveled all over the world. (b)(6) was the most intelligent, rude and unpleasant member of TSA that we have ever met. My wife left her boarding passes in her purse. She went through the detector as she has two metal knees and it went off. (b)(6) asked for her boarding pass and she said it was in her purse and turns to get it off the belt. It had not gone through.

(b)(6) grabbed her by her sweater and roughly pulled her back. We could see her purse on the belt. Her voice was loud, "You have alarmed, stay put!" She pulled her off to the side and made her wait for almost 10 minutes while she did other passengers. The purse came through and I tried to get the boarding pass for my wife. (b)(6) said "if that is not your purse don't touch it!" I told her it was my wife's and it had my boarding pass in it. She yelled, "move on" and just glared at me. Finally my wife was taken to a pat down area and searched. After a few minutes of watching the purse on the belt (after it went through) I got both our boarding passes out and took them to the other agent and showed them to him. He was most pleasant. I also complained on the spot to the supervisor.

It was heart stopping that this is the reception US citizens receive after coming home and even worse, was foreign tourists

Request for Information: My daughter is in college in North Carolina and on her flight back to school from Orlando, the TSA officers performed a pat down after she went through the body scan. The pat down included lifting and searching through her hair. I have heard that this is a routine practice of TSA but have never witnessed it or had it happen to me or anyone I personally know. I don't understand this practice, when there are people with more hair and longer hair that are not inspected. There are women with large chignons (buns), women with wigs, women with long hair, etc that don't have this problem. A bun can hold the same thing braids hold. My daughter's braids are loose, like a free-flowing hairstyle. She couldn't have anything in her hair, just like someone that wears their hair down and free cannot hold or hide anything under their hair. I'm concerned that this practice unjustly targets a group based on an ignorance about hair and braids.

Compliment: Unnecessary and Excessive force was used during the pat down by (b)(6), a TSA agent on lane #9. I cautioned him regarding my body's response to his excessive force during the pat down. As a paraplegic my lower body, including my limbs, has significant involuntary contractions (Spasticity) when too much force is applied and was applied by (b)(6). He continued his repeated aggressive pat down causing my body great pain. After checking my legs several times he attempted to recheck my legs again and I refused. I requested a manager and explained the problem. I filed a Dallas Police complaint following the episode. (b)(6)

Hello.

I returned home to Seattle on a flight from SFO on June 11, 2015. I flew on Alaska Airlines flight 303.

My wife and I joined CLEAR a couple of months ago. Their CLEAR system failed to verify my fingerprints a month ago when I flew from SJC to SEA.

Yesterday when I went through the CLEAR line their system again failed to verify my fingerprints. That was merely an inconvenience. What was extremely disturbing was the following.

9:17:47
AM

1. After the CLEAR system failed to verify my fingerprints, the CLEAR employee said "Never mind" and took me to the head of the TSA Security Screening line.
2. I was never asked for a photo ID. All I had ever shown was my boarding pass.
3. When I spoke to the TSA agent (Covenant Aviation Security?) and tried to show my photo ID I was told that the CLEAR agent had already cleared me. So without ever seeing a photo ID, having the system REJECT my fingerprint as a match to my CLEAR profile and showing nothing more than a boarding pass, the CLEAR agent told the TSA agent that I was "cleared to fly".
4. This is an absolute insult to the citizens that have been duped into thinking that the security procedures are keeping us safe when flying.
5. CLEAR is a worthless scam and the CLEAR employees are risking the lives of every person flying. The CLEAR program should be immediately suspended and not allowed to operate unless and until there is independent and competent verification that the system works and the CLEAR employees are properly trained and follow all proper procedures.
6. When I got through the security screening I reported this problem to the TSA Supervisor. He gave me a form that had the email address of Covenant Aviation Security. I have decided to send this complaint to TSA instead, as I suspect that Covenant Aviation Security would just bury the complaint.
7. This is the second time that I have had a problem with the security screening at SFO. Last year when I flew from SFO to SEA I was selected for "additional screening" even though I did not set off any scanner alarms. I thought that this was a bit unusual but occasional random pat-downs definitely make sense. But the overtly gay security screener pushed his hands up into my genitals and started moving them back and forth. I told him that I would punch him if he ever did that again. He just got a wispy little smile on his face and let me go. So please explain to me how having a gay man patting down a male passenger is any different from a heterosexual man patting down a female passenger. Why should gay security agents be allowed to Complaint: I went through the metal detector checkpoint for screening on 6/1 for my flight (4343) and was randomly selected for additional screening a quick pat down fine. But I was concerned as I always am about my personal items sitting on the roller shelf after the x-ray with strangers all around and I am not able to visually see my property. This is usually not a big issue since the screening is normally very quick and I am at the other end of the x-ray machine to get my property when it comes out. This time; however, because I was asked to stand in a glass box and wait for someone to do the additional screening, my property was left un attended. When I tried to ask the Black female TSA officer who asked me to step into the box, what was the process and express concerns about my property she did not respond. She was trying to communicate with someone who didn't speak English well but she should not have attempted to deal with that passenger until she had addressed me. Not knowing if she heard me or not I tapped her on the shoulder to get her attention and speak with her about my property. She then said I heard you and said don't do that. I don't know what she meant by that. About a minute later a male TSA officer came over to pat me down and I went to retrieve my property. The event of flight travel is Traveling with mother who has a metal clip in her head due to brain surgery. She requested a pat down and after 15 minutes of her standing and waiting the TSA agents with their vast medical background determined and I quote, " she is crazy that isn't an issue, there is no medical condition that the scanner is would impact." The point is her doctor advised her to request the pat down. She was doing as advised. Why should she be berated and treated like she is a nuisance when she is simply requesting the TSA agent to do a function of their job??? Understand they must adjust but to be totally rude and speak unintelligently about something they have no medical background knowledge for is crazy. Unfortunately this is typical of the Austin TSA.

What can be done so that they can stop humiliating my mother?

Comments: I would like to make a formal complaint regarding a TSA employee that I encountered at Tampa International Airport. On Friday, May 29, 2015, I approached the security check in at approximately 11:30 A.M. The agent who conducted my pat down was a fellow named (b)(6). I asked (b)(6) how his day was going. His response was, "Why do people ask that?" Unshaken, I responded that it was to show people I care. He further responded by saying, "No! That's the most annoying question to ask. It's "Hi." Get your shit and leave." He conducted his security pat down and told me to wait. He then walked off and stood joking with a coworker for about five minutes. When he came back, he said, "Oh, you're done." And then in an incredibly condescending tone, he asked, "How is your day going?"

I was appalled at this incredibly unprofessional and rude behavior. (b)(6) is obviously a person who does not like or deserve his job. There must be other qualified candidates who would love the opportunity to have gainful employment with a government agency. This sort of treatment to travelers at a busy airport is unacceptable.

Multiple agents just standing around, some blond-haired guy (who I assume was the one in charge) just standing there barking at people in a fairly sarcastic manner. Then, after passing through the scanner a couple of agents arbitrarily frisked people...even though I had passed through the scanner without any issue, one agent had me extend my arms so he could pat down my rolled-up right sleeve (though apparently my similarly rolled-up left sleeve didn't pose a threat).

I have a short story to share about the way I was treated today at Tampa International Airport by a TSA Agent. I am a frequent traveler and rarely do I have issues with security or getting through there in a timely manner. I have traveled overseas to countries in Europe, Canada, and Mexico as well as been to the West Coast several times. Each year I go to Florida for a week and spend time with family friends. This year was no different until I tried to come home this morning. There was only one security line open, but it seemed to be moving rather well. I had arrived in plenty of time to get some breakfast and coffee since I had a 7:00 am flight. When I was second in line to have my boarding pass and ID checked, they decided to open a second line. On my way there, a TSA agent named (b)(6) asked me to hold out my hands so she could swipe them. Since I go to FL every year, this did not surprise me. What did surprise me, was when I proceeded to put my stuff on the belt, she yelled out that she had a HANDS ALARM and to PULL THAT LADY FROM THE LINE. First, that is embarrassing and second, her swab was obviously done incorrectly. At no time in my life have I dealt with explosives, much less at 6:00 am on my way to the airport. She pulls me aside and proceeds to tell me that she needs to do further scans and will need to do a full body pat down. WHAT? This is ridiculous. I went in to the x-ray machine and there was nothing there. All of my bags went through without any concerns and she rummaged through all of my stuff out in the open for everyone to see. The whole time she is on this POWER TRIP and taking her time knowing I wanted to go get something to eat. (b)(6) the supervisor, was not available to accompany her and so I had to wait even longer. Finally, another female came over to escort us to the "pat down" room. It was most uncomfortable and (b)(6) was staring at me the whole time, obviously enjoying putting me through this. I was physically upset and by the time they finished with me, I had just enough time to get to my gate and board the plane..... without breakfast or coffee.

How is it that a single, 45 year old, frequent traveler has to endure such an ordeal when a guy on the plane behind me was telling about how he had a magazine (ammunition) in his pocket that they took from him, but he didn't have to go through all I did??? How does that happen? It was humiliating to have her continue to tell everyone she could not help them because she had a hands alarm she was dealing with..... as if, at any moment she expected me to blow the place up. I did NOT like her attitude, tone, or power trip she was on.

6/15/2015 8:49:21 AM

I looked for her badge number, of course, it was upside down.... But I believe it was: (b)(6) or (b)(6) Not really sure about the last 2 digits order. Something needs to be done about this. I did NOT touch anything that was NEAR explosive related so there is obviously a FLAW in the hand swiping system. She swiped or swabbed everything I owned pretty much and NOTHING was found. I would like to know what the statistics are on the number of people who actually are found to have explosives on them after having their hands swabbed? Is this a relevant thing to do? I am your everyday average run of the mill school teacher wearing a polo shirt and long jean shorts carrying my school bag with my souvenirs in it to bring home when in ONE instant EVERYTHING changed. My whole day was upsetting due to what I had endured. I hate the thought of other innocent people having to go through that.

I would really like to bring charges against this woman because no one else verified that my swab or swipe was positive for explosives. Why didn't someone else swipe me to see if they got the same results? Why not ask me what some things were that I had been in contact with in the last 24 hours? She picked me out of the crowd, and took off on a power trip. It was obvious she was targeting me since she had not swabbed anyone else until I got up there. She even made the comment, "OH, got a positive hands alarm on my first one of the day". I am still very upset about the pat down when I had done everything else they had asked of me and there was NOTHING to indicate I had explosives.

Please, help me understand why I had to go through with this and how I can file a complaint to the correct people about this woman. Thank you very much.

Hello.

I picked up a TSA customer comment card at Dulles airport on Sunday 14th June following our experience there. I am emailing my comments as I did not have time to drop the card off as we had to make a connecting flight.

I was travelling back to the USA with my wife (US citizen) and 16-month old son after a 7-8 hour flight from London, England. The flight # was UA 919 and we arrived at around 3pm on Sunday afternoon.

I myself am a permanent U.S. resident (green card) and have been for a number of years.

On arrival, we were directed to join the U.S. citizen and green card holder lane. This was the first time we have used the electronic entry system. After waiting for 30 minutes or so in line, I found it very frustrating to complete the electronic immigration process. The machine was having problems reading my fingerprints for some reason. I did eventually get a receipt for myself and one for my wife and son, but this took some time. Try taking a pictures of a 16 month old who has been on a long flight and you will see what I mean.

We were then directed in any case to a manned immigration point in any case, like we would have experienced before the electronic system. We then had to go through the whole process (fingerprinting) again.

So my 1st feedback is - why not just direct green card holders (or family groups) directly to manned checkpoints on entry to the USA? This would have made the entire process much faster and easier for a family group such as mine.

We then spent about 30-45 minutes waiting in line again after collecting and dropping off our checked bags in order to go through another security checkpoint. By this time, other inbound flights were building up a long line of people. The temperature in the waiting area was oppressive (it was 90F outside, but the HVAC system did not appear to be able to cope with the number of people waiting).

There were only 2 body scanners operational, even though other walk-through scanners were available, and it was taking a long time to get people through. I understand that this security screening is a necessary part of aviation safety.

10:25:33

AM

However, when I eventually got to the front of the line (carrying my 16-month old), we were directed to one of the walk through metal detectors. I then had to have a hand screening, and for some reason the machine registered a positive test. So it was then on with a bag search and a body pat down which took about another 15 minutes to complete. During this time my son was becoming increasingly anxious and distressed.

Although the TSA staff were only doing their job and acted very professionally, this sort of invasive screening seems excessive. If it is deemed necessary to check the hands of someone carrying a young child through security for residues of explosives or other chemicals, then why not at least do a second test with the analyzer before implementing further checks?

And please do something about the HVAC system at Dulles airport in the TSA areas.

We have flown through Dulles airport on international flights aswell as other U.S. international airports before and I have not experienced these sorts of problems.

While the TSA staff do a good and necessary job, the use of electronic systems for immigration checks does not seem like positive progress to me.

Yours sincerely,

(b)(6)

Recently I have received a question about TSA's policy on medication. I had a patient recently ask about radioactive medication that was used during a stress test and TSA. The patient had the stress test done earlier in the morning and during that test received a radioactive medication. Later that day the patient went to the airport to board their flight. The patient was stopped by TSA and was not allowed to proceed because they did not have their physician's orders that the stress test was performed and had to have the flight moved until they could bring the documentation in. I have tried searching your website about this policy to passengers. This is the link I could find; <http://www.tsa.gov/traveler-information/passengers-who-have-undergone-medical-treatment-radioactive-materials-and-those-which-does-not-mention-anything-about-having-the-documentation-only-that-the-patient-can-be-either-pat-down-or-go-through-the-electronic-screening>. Can you shed light on this? Are there any other medication/procedures that a patient must show orders for?

Thanks,

I flew out of the International Terminal at the Newark (New York) airport on May 31 on an SAS flight to Oslo at 7:00 p.m. I went through security with my husband about 4:30 or so. I had one carry-on, an LLBean-type canvas tote that zips. In it, I had my binfold, binoculars, iPad and Kindle along with my medicines and other things we are told to carry with us. I had a fabric jewelry case with about half a dozen items in it. When I got to our hotel in Oslo, the jewelry case was not in the bag. I assumed I had left it at home, forgotten to pack it. However, when I got home this weekend, it was not at home either.

On thinking back, I realized that the only time the bag was out of my possession before reaching the hotel was going through security.

I have an artificial knee and so ask to go through the line with the hands-over-the-head type detector. I did that, and then I had a very long patdown, having to turn around several times. I had to take my shoes off even though I am over 75, and they were sent through x-ray twice. When we couldn't find my bag after that, we asked about it. Pretty soon, someone appeared from where I don't know, saying they had to "test" it. All this took much, much longer than usual. I didn't think anything about it at the time, but on retrospect, it seemed fishy.

12:27:04
PM

The missing jewelry did not have a great deal of intrinsic value; it was all costume. I would guess the value was no more than $250, although there were some irreplaceable items such as earrings I had gotten when traveling, and the case was a gift from a recently deceased friend. I never travel with valuable jewelry except what I wear at all times, rings and a watch. One ring I wear when traveling has a large cubic zircon, and my watch is one of the more expensive ones, so someone could have thought the jewelry in my carry-on was expensive. I do not think any cash was taken, and everything else was still there.

I very much doubt there is any way I will ever get it back, but I think this is something you all should be aware of. I would not make this accusation if I were not 99.9% sure that it disappeared during the security procedure. Mainly, this makes me sad. These are people we put our trust in, and they have total control over us and could keep us off a flight if they so choose.

Please respond to my letter.

Thank you.

Complaint: I cannot walk barefoot, even with socks. I have no arches and it is extremely painful. I have no issue with full scans, pat downs, or just about anything else. I travel infrequently, and when I tell most TSA agents that I cannot take my shoes off and walk thru the process, they generally allow me to walk thru, sit down and remove my shoes, while the agent sends them back thru the xray machines. For this connecting flight, having NEVER left any secure area in the ATL airport, at least 5 TSA agents refused to accommodate my request to walk thru, sit down, and have my shoes separately x-rayed. I do not fit the "75 year" rule, but that doesn't mean that I do not have a valid reason for not walking barefoot. None of the agents would listen, and humiliated me by interrupting my explanation multiple times. According to your QWN rules, I am allowed to walk thru and sit down to remove my shoes. All the agents ignored your own rules and as a result, weeks later, I'm still in pain for walking barefoot on a hard concrete floor. Perhaps, just for the scan, you can give a small sticker to those of us who cannot walk without our shoes (I don't even walk barefoot in my own house)

Special Notes - Callers mother was flying from SAN to IND. She has a pacemaker. She got a patdown. She asked the TSO if the procedure has changed. The TSO called a supervisor who told her that if she did not like it she could go home. She asked for his name. He would not give his name and took off his badge so she could not see the name. He told the TSO to start the patdown over since she started talking. The caller said that this is borderline abusive. Her mother started having heart palpitations and she was crying. She wanted to make a complaint.

The caller has TSA Pre Check. He was approved in May. He flew out of LaGuardia and has Pre Check on his boarding pass from JetBlue. When he got to screening he told the officer he had metal in his knees. He was directed to go through the metal detector even after he told the officer her had metal implants. He received a patdown because he set off the WTMD alarm. He is complaining about the screener not doing his job right and put him through the wrong machine and didn t permit him to go through AIT. He wants to know why there is only a Pre Check lane at certain times. (b)(6)

He felt discriminated against because he is Caucasian and all of the screeners there were African American. He said no African American s were treated this way or received any additional screening like he did.

He asked if the Pre Check lane in FLL is open 24 7.

Hello,

I flew on a Horizon flight from SeaTac Airport to Spokane (GEG) on Friday, June 12, 2015, at 5pm. It was the first time I have flown with my 90-pound German Shepherd service dog so I was unaware of what to expect going through security. Before I go any further, I want you to know that everyone from the ticket counter, TSA, and flight crew were respectful, professional and supportive.

What I see as a problem was when I went through screening. When it was our turn to go through the machines the TSA agents told me to take off his harness and collars and leash, make him stay, and I had to leave him and go through the machine. Then I was to call him to me so he could go through the machine. Not once, but twice. I made the mistake of walking back into the machine to grab him, which made it beep. Fortunately, we've had enough training that he did what I asked, even with a tiny dog 2 lines over that he was showing interest in visiting. I'm really, really, worried if that's TSA's policy and that a 90-pound German Shepherd was left without any controls, except verbal. Does it make sense that I'm concerned that some dogs may not be as obedient as (b)(6)? That he could have taken off to check out the small dog a few lines over? And what kind of panic would that have caused? A lot of people are nervous around, and afraid of, large dogs. I shudder to think of the possible catastrophe that could have been avoided had he been left with his gear on.

I just finished looking at your web site and I see some ways this could have been handled differently. Am I within my rights, and without causing problems to myself, to ask for a pat-down for me and my dog? I have no problem taking off the collars and leaving the harness on, then taking off the harness and putting the collars back on. I just need to have physical control of him.

Thank you for your time and I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Complaint Feedback: Professionalism/Customer Service

Complaint: Rude and disrespectful. I was already late for a flight due to traffic and insanely long TSA lines, I put my knee brace in my bag so I would not have to go through a pat down as usual, she scanned it, called others over to look at it and I explained it was my knee brace. I continued to explain what it was and she said she needed to scan it again. I asked why they couldn't just open the bag and see it and she started to just ignore me. Then I continued to question and she started bantering back disrespectfully despite my plea for being late for my flight. Finally another gentleman came over and apologized and handed me my bag, I had to run to D10 on a bad knee because of these excessive delays, as often as I fly out of this airport I have never received such poor service from you.

6/15/2015 2:28:03 PM Caller wishes to file a complaint in regards to her screening experience yesterday at PIT at approximately 12:30PM. She was flying PIT-TPA yesterday aboard Southwest Airlines #608 which departed at 1:50PM. Caller was in a wheelchair and had a wheelchair attendant. Upon entering the checkpoint she informed the officers she could stand and walk and the officers directed her to the WTMD. After the metal detector, her hands were subjected to ETD sampling. The female officer asked her if she had on lotion or sanitizer and she informed them she was wearing sanitizer. The test come back positive and she was led to what she stated appeared to be a storage closet and received a full body pat-down along with a hand inspection of her carry-on luggage. Caller states she was humiliated by her experience.

Caller had a very emotionally negative day yesterday at ATL. She had asked not to do the AIT and was asked to step aside and wait for a female TSO so she can go through a pat down. After waiting for 45 minutes for a female screener she was told by a female TSO that she can either go through the AIT machine or remain where she was at. The caller was worried she was going to miss her flight if she did not go through the AIT machine. She asked to speak with the TSOs supervisor and the female supervisor told the caller that you do not know the reasons why you were not put through. That was the only thing the supervisor said to the caller. The TSO who was rude to her was African American and around 5'8" in height. She said that the supervisor was either Asian or African American. She did not get a name from either the TSO or supervisor. The caller also mentioned that her husband flies for American and he will also be reporting this incident.

6/15/2015 3:16:46 PM Caller has a couple issues with TSA. He is trying to file a complaint. He spoke with a (b)(6) regarding a complaint he had filed in March regarding a pat down complaint. While on the phone with (b)(6) he was also telling him about another issue where he had flown from Fairbanks, AK to Seattle on Alaska airlines and his backpack and got damaged. While talking to (b)(6) about that issue (b)(6) started laughing at him and deflected the complaint to the airline. That is when (b)(6) asked for a supervisor and was told by (b)(6) that he did not have a supervisor. (b)(6) told the caller that he was the TSA program analyst in Anchorage, Alaska. (b)(6) is the CSM for the Fairbanks and Anchorage airports in Alaska. (b)(6) stated that he would like someone to contact him back regarding this incident with (b)(6) so he can make a formal complaint against him.

Comments: I asked to opt out of the scanner and the agent stared at me a little bit crazy. He then took one of the Rubbermaid type containers and threw it on the floor. Then started staring at me again. I apologized and asked him if I had offended him and he screamed "what?!" I asked him if I could opt out again and he screamed that my other option was a pat down. I was aware of this and didn't feel the screaming or intimidation was necessary. While we waited for a female agent he was constantly trying to meet my stare and the look in his eyes was really scary. Not quite what I expected. Another pregnant passenger asked to opt out as well and we waited together for the female agent. She was startled by his behavior as well.

Today at 1:40 pm, I arrived at Premier Access TSA pre-check prior to my 3 pm flight to Austin, Texas. An elderly frail woman walked through and was stopped when a screening alarm was set off. I followed and I too was told to wait in a scanning and pat down lane, behind the elderly woman. A even more elderly Chinese monolingual woman was similarly stopped. Two male passengers also alarmed and were told to check their pockets and clothes and return through the same area. The 3 of us over 65 year old female passengers were not allowed that option and forced to stand well over 15 minutes for a female TSA agent. Two men set off alarms and were told to wait in the line behind the women but were signalled to go ahead of the women who had already waited 15 minutes and be scanned by a male TSA agent. I questioned the young male TSA person who had directed the now 5 passengers to be scanned that I wished to be scanned by any TSA agent no matter their Gender. This agent retorted that it was not permitted by TSA for male TSA agents to pat down females and I would have to wait. The 3 of us women continued to stand in the line. Then an airport employee came through the same line, the alarm sounded and she was waved through without further scrutiny. I asked the young TSA agent to call for a supervisor as this kind of behavior is suspect for profiling and discriminating against senior female citizens. No supervisor arrived but finally a female TSA agent came over to scan the woman in front of me and myself, leaving the frail Chinese woman passenger to continue to wait.

9:25:11 AM I am quite certain that this behavior by the TSA agent is not only unorthodox but illegal discrimination and official abuse.

I request an investigation of this Terminal 3 TSA employee and his supervisor and trainers. Homeland Security and the reputation of TSA must not be allowed to be so severely tarnished by such individuals who abuse the power they are granted.

Where did this happen? MASSACHUSETTS - BOS - Logan International

What happened? On June 14, 2015, I enter Logan International airport with intentions to board a flight to Raleigh Durham International airport on Delta airlines, terminal A (I believe).

It was approximately 0745 hrs. when I arrived. My first attempt to go through security was unsuccessful due to my boarding pass having just my maiden name and my license having my full hyphenated name of (b)(6). This was understandable. I went back to the ticket counter and had that issue correct. I

The caller is calling to report an incident that happened with a TSO officer at the Oakland International Airport. He states that he has already filed a complaint with the White House and will also be notifying his brother, who is a Sacramento police officer with a gold shield. When he went through the screening checkpoint he had 3 jars of jam in his carry on bag that was not in a plastic zip top 3-1-1 bag. The bag went through the x-ray machine and the TSO pointed at the machine and yelled, What is that? By doing this he alerted other TSO s in the area who came running over. The TSO pulled the bag off to the side and yelled at the caller, Stay there don t move! . They took his carry on bag and ripped open and tossed his belongings out and found the 3 jars of jam. The TSO came over to the caller and told him that he cannot have these items in his carry on bag, he would either need to throw them out or check the bag. The TSO threw his belongings back in his carry- on and told him to go back to the Southwest ticket counter and check the bag. A different TSO escorted him to the ticket counter and told him when he was finished he would need to come back through the checkpoint at a different entrance. When the caller came back and attempted to go through the entrance the other TSO had directed him to, the original TSO started yelling at him and told him that no one could enter here and he would have to go back through the line and be rescreened. When he got back through the line the walk through metal detector that he had went through was closed and they directed him to the AIT machine. The caller told the TSO that he did not want to go through the AIT because of the radiation. The TSO pulled him over to the side again and started yelling, telling him to not move. The TSO came back a few minutes later and told the caller that he would have to have a patdown. The caller told the TSO that he was not going to touch him, he wanted someone else to do it. The second TSO came over and asked why he was being screened again and agreed to perform the patdown. When the caller was cleared the original TSO yelled at him, telling him to get his coat and leave. The caller went over to the TSO counter to ask for the TSO s name and badge number. The TSO manager told him that they do not have badge numbers and gave him a hard time about giving him the TSO s name. The TSO manager asked the caller to explain to him what happened, the caller said a few cuss words to the TSO manager and the manager told him that if he had treated his employees that way that he understood why they treated him the way the caller was saying that they did. He finally got the manager to write down a name on a piece of paper.

Hi

I was going through security for my flight this morning to Orange County. Flight UA529, and I asked for a pat down instead of the X-ray machine. The X-ray machine makes me nervous in terms of the yet to be known long term effects.

The young man on the staff helping me named (b)(6) said it might be a minute which I did not mind. I understand safety comes first. Then he said very nonchalantly "male assist." He did not communicate the command for "male assist" to any one in particular, nor did he say it loudly. It was clear to me that nobody heard him. But I waited and looked around to notice 4-5 employees including one who had just finished patting some one down who were just looking around/ standing around. After at least 5 minutes (b)(6) said again "male assist" and again it was done non chalantly and "nobody" heard him. After this I finally changed my mind and went through the X-ray. I complained to (b)(6) and he said very non chalantly "I told you it would take a while."

Good afternoon:

On June 10 I flew back to Puerto Rico from Asheville Regional Airport (AVL). The TSA personnel didn't want to accept my PR Drivers License. My air tickets were issued using (b)(6) and my license shows fathers last name and mother's maiden name as (b)(6). They insisted that my ID was not valid because my last name was (b)(6) and not (b)(6).

I explained the lady that I flew to USA on April, May, and June with the same ID without any problem. On top of that, my hometown is PR, and I flew from PR to AVL with ID provided and no one at TSA had an issue. They told me that I need to change my ID's to have only Torres as last name. I showed additional government issued ID's but were not accepted, ID's in compliance with TSA requirements as per your website. On top of that, based on the argument that I didn't showed a valid ID, they registered my luggage and screened me using patdown in front of everybody. I explained the guy who screened me that I was complying with the law with a valid ID but they didn't want to accept it. Previously to let me get thru the checkpoint, they called State Department to verify my identity which was clarified but I was screened and patdown anyway.

I think that based on the fact that most airlines doesn't allow you to use fathers last name with mother's maiden name and PR drivers licenses are issued that way, TSA must instruct security personnel to deal with passengers from PR.

First I am listing your rules on pat downs for disabilities

If a patdown is required in order to complete screening:

The patdown should be conducted by an officer of the same gender. Sometimes, passengers must wait for an officer of the same gender to become available.

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the officer must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another officer will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

A passenger may ask for a chair if he or she needs to sit down.

A passenger should inform an officer before the patdown begins of any difficulty raising his or her arms, remaining in the position required for a pat-down, or any areas of the body that are painful when touched.

A passenger should not be asked to remove or lift any article of clothing to reveal a sensitive body area.

My fiancée (b)(6) was inappropriately screened and patted down by a TSA agent, Thursday, June 4 in the Albuquerque airport. She was on Southwest Flight 816 to Dallas which departed at 7:36 pm.

(b)(6) suffered a stroke, on October 29, 2014. She is still basically confined to a wheel chair, because she is paralyzed on her left side. She can not walk without the aid of a brace, cane and with someone else's support and for only about 150 feet with all 3, cane, brace, and support of another person.

4:42:10
PM
She had very limited motion of her left arm and can not raise it without assistance. She had neither her cane nor her brace with her. (b)(6) was in her wheelchair.

-1st, the officer did not offer private screening nor did they wait for her daughter (b)(6) who was accompanying her on the flight.

Secondly, the officer insisted the (b)(6) raise her arm even though she informed the officer that she had a stroke and was not capable of raising her arm. When her daughter arrived, she informed the officer again that (b)(6) had a stroke and was incapable of raising her arm. The officer kept insisting that she raise her arm and (b)(6) used her other hand to help lift her arm. The officer grabbed her quite hard causing her pain. (b)(6) also informed her that it was painful to be touched on her left side. Yet the officer insisted on patting and grabbing under her left arm.

Next the officer insisted that (b)(6) take her left shoe off. By this time (b)(6) was quite distraught which makes sit more difficult to perform movement on her paralyzed side due to stress. It takes every bit of her brain power to move her left at all. (b)(6) refused to lift her left leg, because she was so stressed that she couldn't and it is difficult for her to begin with. She also had edema which is swelling in her left extremities and she was afraid that she would not be able to get her shoe back on. The officer finally relented but was quite rude and groped (b)(6) crotch area, roughly. (b)(6) felt the officer was mean and rude. All this after (b)(6) complained over and over about her stroke.

I had dropped off (b)(6) at the airport and she was excited because she was going to see her two sisters, with her daughter and some nieces for 3 days in Dallas. I called her just before the plane left and I could tell she was distraught. I had to really pry to get her to tell me what was going on and she was practically crying.. This experience was depressing for her and also violates the 2nd, 4th and 5th item copied directly from the TSA online site, which I will rewrite again here

The passenger can request a private screening at any time and a private screening should be offered when the officer must patdown sensitive areas. During a private screening, another officer will also be present and the passenger may be accompanied by a companion of his or her choosing.

The caller flew to Dallas from Phoenix Sky Harbor Intl. airport on Spirit Airlines. Spirit Airlines made her check the bag she was planning on bringing as a carry on and she thought that was strange. She arrived at her destination but the bag she had to check did not arrive. When she asked about it the woman at the airport looked it up in the computer and told her it was delayed because TSA had to do a hand inspection. When she finally got her bag she was missing her mini iPad and her jewelry but there wasn't an NOI in her bag.

Also when she went through the screening checkpoint in Ohio on a separate trip, the TSO s were very rude to her. She had just taken a blood pressure pill before going through and when they swabbed her hands for explosives it had traces of drugs which she said were her blood pressure pills. She was then subject to a private patdown which she said was very rough. She asked if she could bring her husband with her and the TSO s told her no.

I told the caller for both of these issues I was going to forward this to the Customer Service Manager at the both airports.

Caller was going through the airport at MDW traveling to AUS and had a layover at MSP. He said he was flying with Delta airlines. He told me that his flight number changed but the plane and the gate did not so he does not believe his baggage changed planes at MSP. He said one of the screeners was a training a new screener and the other TSO asked what one of his items were that he had in his carry on. He said he had been traveling with these items in his carry on for two years and he had never been questioned about them. He said the TSO wanted to know what the mil gage was how to turn it. He said the TSO told him that his mil meter was not allowed in carry on and they made him check it. His meter was missing when he reached his destination. He said it the mil gage was a $2500 tester and he had only had it for about 8 months. He did not have a NOI in his bag. He said the TSO told him that he would give him the bag and the instruments at the starting end of the TSA checkpoint since he had deemed it a prohibited item and that he would have to check the item or he would not be allowed to board his flight. He said he did not check to make sure that all of the items were in the bag because it had taken so long for screening and he knew he was going to have to go back through after he checked his bag. He said he went to Delta and checked the item along with the rest of the contents of his carry on bag.

He said they were having a problem with the AIT and the TSO were having to ask everyone to go through the AIT about 5 times and they were giving all of the men a patdown. He said he was at the screening checkpoint for about 45 minutes and that the screening was process was very chaotic for him and other passengers.

The TSO was black, short, heavyset, short hair. Age 30-40. Her mother was very upset. Caller is very upset.

Hello,

AM

I hope this message finds you well. At approximately 3:30 PM yesterday (6/16) I proceeded through the TSA pre-check checkpoint at the American Airlines terminal at O'Hare. I noticed that my bag did not come out of the scanner. I had to alert an employee (who was wandering around the checkpoint) and asked for assistance. She proceeded to search and thoroughly swab my bag, all while not communicating what was going on. This employee was very curt and did not appear to enjoy her employment with the TSA. She then told me I would be subjected to a thorough pat down, and began shouting "MALE ASSIST MALE ASSIST MALE ASSIST." It took about 7 tries for a male officer to come and give me a thoroughly invasive pat down. I then waited for another 10 minutes or so for another officer to wander over and inform me that my bags would have to be examined by an explosives expert. At one point, they decide that I have to take my shoes off for those to be swabbed. Another 10 minutes pass, and the

This email is to document an incident which occurred at trities airport this am June 17th. 15 people were in the airport and had checked their bags.. They were held up from boarding by the TSA personel. The time was a busy morning and only one of the two check through lines was in utilization. Only one personal was helping people going through the metal detector. The personel was very slow in his job and kept us from going through while he did a pat down on two elderly men that had hip and knee replacements. The TSA personel showed no concern for getting us through to our plane which was boarding. We were informed by the delta staff that this was a common occurrence. Given the recent report about the ineffectiveness of the TSA overall and reports that travelers are being held up by this same ineffective process I plan to contact my elected representatives to consider doing away with the program of Government waste. If you would like to discuss this situation which occurred today I can be reached at (b)(6)

Caller has had a terrible screening incident at Denver airport on the 11th.

Caller stated she is older. She had precheck. The TSO was nice and she went on to the other side. Her baggage had gone through. She was with her companion or boyfriend. He has white hair an they are almost 80 years old. She had precheck and he did not.

A female black TSO came over and started swiping her hand. She checked all of her luggage. She was ok. She took her into the other room.

A TSO white big woman middle aged gray hair TSO came into the room. She has a complaint with this TSO. She started conducting a pat down. The TSO stated if she did not stop asking questions, she would send her to the manager and she would miss her plane.

She went into her pants and around the breast . She searched her all over.

She made her bend over and take her shoes off. She cannot bend over easily. The caller stated this does not make any sense. The TSO stated they were all terrorists. The caller stated she was not a terrorist. She does not know why she was going through this.

She requested for her to go get her companion and the TSO refused to do so. The companion had left and gone on to the plane because he could find her. It was hard for both of them.

This was inappropriate, uncalled for and unnecessary. She was infatuated with her own power.

Your agents are power tripping and out of control. Security checkpoints should not be a place that increases the stress levels of passengers. It's a necessary evil that is unnecessary, in my opinion. TSA makes the news more often because they've committed theft. I've never heard of tsa stopping a threat to national or local security.

Your employee (b)(6) recently accosted me approximately an hour ago while I was trying to catch my flight at LaGuardia airport. Since when does a normal bra trigger an extra pat down? There is nothing special about it. but I was detained anyway. She separated my from my children during this time, further increasing my stress. And as my agitation and stress levels increases, her speed in doing this unnecessary pat down decreased exponentially.

6/17/2015 This practice ands behavior has got to stop. Stop pulling my pants down doing your extra pat downs. Stop detaining me. I am not a threat to this nation. But I will be very verbal about the harassment I receive from your employees virtually every time I fly. I'm tired of it. I'm tired of witnessing the power trps. Tired of being subject to needless searches. Tired of the fabricated reasons (you tested positive for gunpowder residue....really? Like the nearest male could have tested positive for pregnancy. That's how probable it is for me to test positive for gunpowder flying home from vacation).

6/17/2015 2:13:05 PM Your millimeter wave machines are not necessary. Yet, you allow them in select airports so those opting out can be further harassed by your employees. I will continue to talk to others, use social media and contact you every time I feel harassed by a tsa employee until the harassment stops.

Complaint: Had a cancelled flight and was left in Detroit overnight. Walked outside to smoke a cigarette, when going back through screening had a VERY overzealous individual who made me go through a humiliating patdown, emptied all of my belongings out, carelessly and made me throw away a multitool that was a gift from a dead relative. The supervisor was very rude, the "underling" was inept and kept talking about videogames to me (when I had no desire to communicate with the person that was treating me like a terrorist). The supervisor almost smashed my laptop and submitted me through three xrays. (Even though my carry on/laptop bag is also TSA compliant) This multitool was ok'd by Greenville/Spartanburg TSA and Houston GW Bush TSA. THEN...wasnt going to allow me back in because there was a one letter discrepancy on the boarding pass due to a misspelling of my middle name (b)(6) ((b)(6) on ticket). Completely

Hello.

For medical reasons, I request pat downs when going through security. As a female who travels 2x a month I've been impressed by the professionalism of the TSA agents.

After having going through the process >20 times, I was disappointed today by an incident at terminal 2 JFK at 1612 where I was intentionally marginalized and ignored.

After telling the first TSA agent I saw that I was requesting a pat down, he answered "Ok, but the machine is no longer X-ray." Then walked away with no instructions.

I walked to another agent and repeated my request. She casually said "pat down" and told me to wait and read the information regarding the machine. After waiting some time and feeling very punished, I noticed 4 female TSA agents not doing anything, so I repeated to the woman my request and she said "you just wait. I cannot tell you how long."

Here's where I have kudos. I turned to the agent at the station behind me, (b)(6) and said "I feel like they are purposely not helping me." (b)(6) immediately walked back to the group of women to notify them I was waiting.

6:16:45
PM

One of the women immediately came out and helped and stated "sorry, we had no idea you were waiting."

I'm appalled, that my requests were blatantly ignored, and when given the opportunity to rectify the situation, I was again ignored.

I reported the incident to the supervising officer (b)(6) who blew the situation off and said "you didn't have to wait more than ten minutes, so nothing is wrong."

I pointed out that no one in the back knew I was there, and no one up front was helping me until (b)(6) took initiative.

As a veteran, I know what it is to serve my country and the people in it. TSA has been trying to fix their reputation for many years, but putting your customers into "shaming" situations is unacceptable.

I want to know that (b)(6) gets the recognition he deserves, and that TSA "shaming" will not continue.

Thank you

When the caller was in the Minneapolis checkpoint. She misplaced her DL and gave them the old license and additional information. She went thru a patdown and additional screening. She wanted us to know that was a bit overboard. She is glad that people are checked, but for her she thought that this was a bit much. She is an elderly woman with nothing on her record, not even a traffic violation.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I am a 72 year old female. I flew on Southwest Airline, Confirmation (b)(6) on Tuesday, June 9, 2015 from LAX with a layover in Las Vegas. I was unable to retrieve the flight numbers.

I returned to LAX via Flight # 4299 from Columbus, OH to Phoenix, AZ and Flight # 571 to LAX on Sunday, June 14, 2015.

At the TSA security checks at LAX and CMH I was pulled aside for a pat-down because the screen was showing something in my groin area. My hands were also brushed with a substance. My first flight back to LAX had to be changed due to a storm so my flight was changed. I knew I had a problem at security in LAX so I used no lotion or deodorant or hand sanitizer when coming back to LA. I still ended up with the humiliation of the pat-down. My question is there anyway for me to know what I should avoid wearing or using so I don't have to be patted-down. I don't travel often but would like to know what to do. I have never had to be patted down 3 times.

THANK YOU.

Black female TSA person was very rude & unresponsive to my request. While waiting for a pat down agent in the roped off area before picking up my screened 8 inch x 5 inch belt bag & shoes, I was standing as requested at the outside roped area 5 feet way from from the TSA agent. I requested that since my small bag was already screened and waiting for pickup that she please bring it near us because anyone could easily pick it up and walk away with it. She was unreceptive to my simple request and moved closer, NOT IN HER FACE and HADN'T LOST MY COOL and stepped a foot away from the roped area to speak to her more closely and she just shouted at me several times to step away as though I was hostile. She ignored my request and just said that it (my bag) is in the airport (meaning it was safe when no TSA agent checks ID to for pick ups. How coldly indifferent) She ignored me and started to handle the person behind me in line. I very upset that that she was unresponsive to a simple request of walking back 2 yards to reach for my small 8 inch x 5 inch belt bag. I asked another TSA employee next to the moving 'already screened bags'

6/18/2015 2:02:01 PM The caller is flying out of San Diego. The last three times she has gone through she has TSA Pre Check. The last time she went through the Pre Check lane was closed. The screener machine alarms every time she goes through because of her shoes. The caller is upset because she has to have a patdown every time she triggers an alarm.

6/18/2015 2:07:21 PM My wife and I were traveling on first class tickets from Austin and I am pre check.. She lost her license so had a temporary paper with picture and ss card. They subjected her to pat down chemical tests on luggage etc. this delayed us for 30 minutes for no reason as there is no profile that we would fit to warrant this. I find this to be unacceptable as there were plenty of sketchy people you put through the accelerated line with no concern

Hello,

I am writing on behalf of my mother who just left Bush Intercontinental this morning June 18, 2015, at 10 am, her boarding was at 9:20 am on United. We arrived at Bush around 7:40 am, I had made sure that my mother had enough time to check herself in with enough time to pass through security and get her something to eat. Well as she was checking into security, TSA denied her to pass with two jars of cookie peanut butter. Then they had her wait on the side for 10 minutes until someone shows up to check her bags because they claim that her bag set off the bag alarm. They had wiped her bags down in search of drugs or other substance or whatever they claimed she had in her bag, wiping it down numerous times and sending it through the machine numerous times that all could have been avoided if the machine had done its job the first time!

Already agitated and embarrassed they had a pat down search or cavity search her in front of everyone at the airport. Two African American women was involved in this, they were a-holes telling her that she can't touch anything in her bag, touch her phone to check the time to make sure she still has time for her flight, basically talking down to her. They treated her like a second class citizen or someone who was guilty of something. They were unlawfully searching her which lead to the embarrassment of the pat down search due to the fault of their equipment! Once they had used another machine, all results came back negative thus showing the results of the first machine were incorrect and that the fault was with your equipment and not what was in my mothers bag!

While all of this was taking place, she very easily could have missed her plane. Incurring substantial costs and penalties if she missed her flight.

I understand that these officers jobs are to maintain the safety and security of the airport, but it should not be at the cost of the rights and freedom of the people they claim to defend and protect. After all the nonsense that the TSA security s caused she had no time to get her food.

Comment : Around 10:45 AM I went through the security screening with a pregnant colleague who was in line ahead of me. In front of my colleague was a woman with five bins. As I waited for my bins, and for the woman with five to collect her belongings, I began gathering my colleague's items as she received a pat-down. I informed the x-ray reviewer that there was a back up and she yelled at me to take my bins and move. I explained I was waiting for my bins. Again she yelled at me to take my bins and move. I explained that they were not my bins. She continued to yell at me, which meant that she was not diligently watching the x-ray machine.

Dear Sir or M'am,

I am writing about a VERY concerning situation that occurred to me at LaGuardia Airport, N.Y., Terminal D, on Tues., 6/16/15, from 7:50 - 8:40. If I had indeed been a terrorist carrying a bomb, then the airport would have been blown up during the time it took for the TSA supervisor to come frisk me for their 'alert' on me at the body scan machine. There are two reasons for this:

1) Only a female TSA officer "with at least 3 stripes on her sleeve" was allowed to give me a pat-down because I'm female. However, it was this woman's "day off", and no one was available in her absence. Another woman had to be called from another terminal or section of the airport. This took approximately 45 - 50 minutes and required multiple requests from various people for her to come. This delayed my departing, but thank God I arrived early so I was ok with my departure. However, if I had missed my flight because of the LaGuardia TSA's incompetence would I have been compensated for it?? I did everything I was supposed to do; their inability to do their job, which affects the safety of THOUSANDS, is inexcusable. As I said, if indeed I had explosives on my person, the terminal would have been long gone by the time the TSA lady arrived.

2) Once the female TSA officer arrived to pat me down, it took a minute or less, and was all done by hand. The area of concern highlighted from the body scan machine was my abdomen/crotch area, which was never even searched or re-scanned at all with a wand or other device. What if I had something inserted in my crotch?? I assumed I would have to take my panties off to be scanned/checked, and/or have the wand waved around the area in question. But no. Again, this is a very inexcusable procedure, and could have resulted in a catastrophe.

6/19/2015 6:06:32 PM Just so you know what I'm guessing the concern in the body scanning machine was, I think it was perhaps heat and moisture built up due to the high June temperatures/sweat, and the fact that I had to hand-wash my panties the night before since my flight was cancelled and they weren't completely dry.

All in all, compared to the various airport screenings I have been through, LaGuardia's TSA department was the most inefficient, slack, unsafe excuse for 'security' that I have ever witnessed. In addition to this, isn't the TSA a federally-run department? Shouldn't there be a uniform procedure for security checks that are standard at all airports? Each airport I went to required different things, the least security at LaGuardia as I said. At all other airports, I was told to remove the liquid items my from carry-ons; in LaG, I was rushed through with little/no concern. I also went through all security checks with a lighter; I thought that wasn't allowed? (I didn't realize it was even in my purse until unpacking yesterday). At LaG we were told to remove our tablet from our bags, but this wasn't the case at any other airport, which was fine, but yet another discrepancy when it should all be a uniform procedure. The security that had the best performance was in Charleston, SC. They were serious, not chatty, and very thorough in their job.

Thank you for your serious attention to these concerns. I want to know when I fly, that I am safe and the security in place is thorough and efficient, not causing delays and having slack security procedures and personnel in place. I look forward to hearing back from you.

Thank you,

(b)(6)

Complaint:

I'm writing today to complain about a particularly bewildering experience at a TSA checkpoint in Las Vegas McCarran airport on 6/16/2015. I opted out of the body scanner to receive a patdown as I usually do when travelling - a personal protest against what I perceive as needless invasion of people's privacy posed by the body scanners. When I was escorted to the patdown area, I was also notified that my carry-on bag would need to be inspected. I knew immediately what in my bag triggered the inspection, two small cans of apple and orange juice that I'd intended to drink before getting to the airport. These were indeed the problem items and I asked if I could drink them on the spot rather than throw them out since I was quite thirsty. I was told that no, I couldn't, unless I wanted to go back outside, drink them there, and then come back in and repeat the security process. I was also told that if I did opt to drink them I would have to go through the patdown procedure twice, right there and then also upon reentering security.

Complaint:

I was forced to go through an x-ray machine as an amputee that requested a body scanner. There was a body scanner at this security checkpoint less than 50 feet away from me that could have easily been used but I was told that I had to go through the x-ray machine because I didn't have TSA precheck.

I have flown out of airports all over the US and I have always been allowed to request a body scanner with or without precheck on my boarding pass as long as the machine was present.

The agent had already inspected my ID and saw that I was still an ACTIVE DUTY Army officer. I am a Special Forces Officer (Green Beret), and United States Military Academy (West Point Graduate). I lost my leg in service of our nation in Afghanistan. I am still an Active Duty officer because the Army has found me Fit for Complaint: I was opting out of the metal detector and body scanner because i'm pregnant and flying a lot. While i waited 10 minutes for my pat down, the TSA agent at the machine ridiculed my constantly about how ridiculous my decision was and how stupid my concerns were. I do not believe TSA agents have medical degrees. I have a right to request a pat down and he should mind his own business. I have never been treated with so much disrespect. I wasnt hurting anyone or doing anything wrong. Unfortunately, i couldn't see his badge. Please train your people better.

Complaint:

(b)(6) was working at the metal-detector. I declared that I would like to opt out of the body scanner. As I opt out every time that I travel, I know the routine quite well. At every airport, I am told that there may be a small wait and that I should hold on to my items until they are ready for me. (b)(6) declared, rudely I add, that she would not call out for a pat-down until after I have sent all my items through the x-ray. After that, she refused to address me or respond to my questions. I asked if this was a recent change of policy, but received no response. She refused to acknowledge me at all. Shortly thereafter, other TSA agents came to my rescue and called out for the pat-down. I think her behavior was rude, and it is not representative of the professionalism that I believe the TSA almost always maintains.

I understand that it was a day where there were many delays and cancelations of flights in the airport and perhaps this added to the stress-level for TSA agents on that day, but all the other agents maintained their professionalism, as I think we should expect.

Complaint: I chose to opt out of the millimeter wave scanner and to have a manual pat down screening instead. I was the only male in line for a manual pat down and it took in excess of 15 minutes to get a agent to conduct the pat down. The airport was NOT unusually busy. I fly 30k miles a year and this was the longest wait time I've experienced. It was only after I made a stink about it and requested that a supervisor be called that the screening occurred. It seems to me TSA agents want to avoid conducting pat downs or are annoyed by it. This was an unacceptable wait time and could have caused me to miss my flight. I could see the TSA milling around in the back of the scanners, so it's not very difficult to see who is busy and who is not based on my extensive experience flying and dealing with the TSA agents in the past. Again, I was the first and only person waiting for a pat down and it took an unacceptable time.

Complaint: TSA Employee Profiling Incident Report.

On June 13, 2015, I had a flight from Charlotte (CLT) to St. Louis (STL) for which I had a TSA Pre-Check status designated on my boarding pass for US Airways flight 4606. At approximately 2:00 PM EST, I went through the Pre-Check line and put my hand carry luggage on the conveyer belt. I had my driver's license and boarding pass in my hand as I approached body scanner. The female TSA officer standing before the scanner stopped me before I entered the scanner and asked me to stand on the side and wait. She used the PA system and announced that she needed a female security officer for checking at the Pre-Check gate.

10:28:23
AM

A male TSA officer approached her and asked: "Why are you asking for security? Did the scanner beep?" The female officer replied "No, I did not allow her to enter because I wanted someone to come and pat her down." The male TSA officer said "Why? She hasn't gone through the scanner."

The lady TSA officer (her name badge was not visible) replied "I want this to be done because of her outfit – look what she is wearing – long clothes"

The male TSA officer again said "You cannot do this, let her go through the scanner first."

The female officer insisted "I will not allow her [to go through] because I am not comfortable. Can I just go ahead and pat her [down] myself?"

He replied "No you cannot."

She said "Then I want you to go and check into this matter."

To whom it may concern,

My name is (b)(6) and I am a Ph.D student in the Department of History at the University of California, Los Angeles. On April 1st, 2015, I returned to Los Angeles from a seven (7) month stay in Ankara, Turkey, where I was studying Turkish and conducting research as a Boren National Security Fellow, funded by the National Security Education Program (NSEP). Since my return, I have taken three flights, one international and two domestic. On all three flights, I was a selectee for additional screening by the Transportation Security Administration. On all three flights, I was not allowed to check-in online up to 24-hours prior to my scheduled departure time. The travel documents I've received in addition to the luggage tags were marked "SSSS", labeling me as the selectee for additional screening (see attached images). In one case, I was not issued a boarding pass at the check-in counter, but a security document that instructed me to proceed for further screening.

I have been the recipient of three (3) Foreign Language and Area Studies Fellowships, funded by the U.S. Department of Education; (2) Critical Language Scholarships, funded by the U.S. Department of State; and most recently, a (1) Boren Fellowship, funded by the National Security Education Program, most of which have required extensive travel and extended stays abroad. Prior to returning to Los Angeles from being in Turkey on the Boren Fellowship, my previous extended travel and stay abroad resulted in no palpable outcome on behalf of the TSA.

I am deeply appalled that I have been placed on a list that subjects people to additional screening by the TSA every time they fly, especially since my line of research and work necessitates extensive travel. The TSA agent that conducted my pat-down on the last flight confirmed that this was not a random occurrence and that I was indeed on a list. It is extremely degrading to have all my possessions, including the clothes I wear and the gloves the TSA agent puts on each time he conducts a pat-down swiped and then placed into a machine for analysis.

I am writing to ask for an explanation for why I've been placed on a list that subjects me to additional screening by the TSA every time I fly and urge you to remove me from said list.

Thank you.
Sincerely,

As an airline employee of over 22 years, I am appalled at your most recent tactic of randomly patting down airline employees at the employee portal entrances. On SO many levels this is WRONG and a complete violation of human rights!!!! Your approved pat downs are intrusive and, in my opinion, a mild form of rape, and just as a customer does, I should have the CHOICE of getting screened by x-ray or the ridiculous pat-down!!!!!! I AM NOT A CRIMINAL!!!!!! You can blame the airlines for bringing in shady employees who may do corrupt things, such as the man in Atlanta that smuggled in the guns, but companies are going to get what they pay for!! If they are not willing to pay a decent wage, then the quality of worker will be compromised. I don't understand how ANYONE can think that touching someone's private parts is ok!!!!!! This is something that should not be acceptable and I should not be subjected to being uncomfortable in my job. This is offensive behavior on your part and for you to NOT give us a choice in how we want to be screened is beyond infuriating!!!!!! I love my job and do it very well but now your most recent stunt forces me to not even want to come to work!!!!!! This boils down once again to

6/22/2015 money!!!!!! The airports don't want to put in metal detectors to screen employees so you have decided to FORCE us to subject ourselves to random searches. AGAIN.....WE SHOULD HAVE A CHOICE OF GOING THROUGH AN X-RAY MACHINE IF

I am writing to complete the complaint I registered with the TSA on April 9, 2015 my experience and my wife's experience at LaGuardia Airport on March 29, 2015. My wife is currently undergoing chemotherapy and has lost her hair. The treatment has left her extremely weak and unsteady on her feet. She was therefore in a wheel chair. We had arrived from Cincinnati for a medical consultation in New York. Our experience with the TSA agents in Cincinnati on the trip to New York had been pleasant. They were thorough including patting her head to make sure nothing was hidden under her head scarf. The same can not be said for our experience with the agents at LaGuardia. I was told to go through the normal line, while she was sent alone around the X-ray machine. The agent was rude and abrupt with me, for example demanding to know what was in my (empty) pocket. I considered his behavior unprofessional, but was not overly concerned about it. However, after I came through the security line I saw my wife in tears and with her head scarf off. I complained to the supervising agent who declined to intervene, simply telling me that this is the procedure. As the discussion proceeded he objected to my tone of voice and threatened to call the police. I invited him to do so.

When my wife finally made it through security she informed me that she had been treated rudely and abruptly. She had asked to leave the head scarf on, but was told that she would be treated like everyone else. She was not offered a private setting, nor was her head scarf returned to her for seven minutes (per the local TSA investigation).

6/23/2015 4:36:19 PM My time is very limited as I attempt to continue my work and care for my wife. However, I am horrified at the insensitivity shown my wife, and at the failure of the agents to follow regulations, by not using a pat down, by not offering a private setting, by not permitting me to stay with my wife, and by keeping the head scarf off for considerably longer than it would have taken to run it through the X-ray. I am concerned that other people at LaGuardia are being treated in a similar manner. The matter was investigated locally. They viewed a videotape of the incident, but lacking audio they simply took the word of the agents being investigated. They reported (inaccurately) that she had been offered a private room. Furthermore, I would have been with her had I been permitted to do so.

I have great respect for TSA agents and the work they do. It is demanding and potentially dangerous. I feel safer flying because of them. However, a failure to follow regulations and the lack of courtesy and respect shown me and my wife are inexcusable, as is the mockery of an investigation carried out at LaGuardia.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

My wife is 8 months pregnant so she decided to have "pat down" screening instead walking through the magnetometer. The female TSA employee had bad attitude right from the start like she did not want to be there. It was like everything is a hassle to her.

She offered a private screening but would not explain exactly what she meant by that. She was rude and acting like we were dumb not knowing what private screening is. My wife have asked her to please be nice and patient, but after that her attitude has changed for even worse. She was shouting around commands and very rude like she was on some kind of power trip. I have tried to walk over to see what was going on but she commanded me to walk away and to get my stuff. After the screening my wife asked her for her name. The TSA officer told her a different name than on her badge, and with an attitude asked what my wife's name was.

My wife told her her name, and asked why the TSA officer is saying a different name than on her badge. She did not reply and walked away. She started stacking plastic totes and moving around so my wife cannot read her name on her badge. When she walked around me I said: "Excuse me Madam, what is your name?" She did

(b)(6) is a 73 year old passenger who wanted to report that one of the TSOs at ONT airport was very rude to her. She said this is the second time she had experienced a rough patdown and rude screening by the Female TSO at the screening station. She said it started out because the last couple of times she did not have to take her shoes off and this time they made her remove her shoes. She said her shoes went through and then other passengers put their items on the belt and then they made her take her sweater off and send it through the xray and then other people put their items on the belt. She said her items were getting separated as they went through screening and she was afraid she would not be able to find them all after her patdown was done.

She also said she had some VCR tapes and the tape had gotten damaged on a previous flight, she said they had sound but no picture. The airline told her that she could ask for the VCR tapes to be hand screened but The TSO told her that she could not do a hand screening on the VCR tapes. She said she put the tapes on the belt so now she has items in three different bins.

She said when she opted for a patdown rather than going through the AIT she was told by the male TSO at the screening checkpoint to go wait in a certain spot for a patdown. She said the female TSO blamed her for not letting anybody know that she needed a patdown but she said she did let the male TSOs know and kept waving at the female TSO to let her know that she was waiting for her to come over. She said the TSO opened the gate and retrieved her items but she was concerned that all of her items were not in just the one bin. She asked her to get the other bins with her other items in it and the TSO told her that she could only get one bin at a time.

She said her patdown was very rough and when she was finished she looked over at another lady that was getting a patdown by the same TSO and she was being very gently with her. She said the TSO was unnecessarily rough with her when she had her patdown. She said she went through about 9:30 am and the TSO had short brown hair, not too tall.

Hello, I wanted to just make some comments to the response I received.

First of all, thank you for getting back to me in a timely manner. I honestly didn't expect any type of response from an organization the size of the TSA. Secondly, I appreciate the response you gave but just wanted to inform you that it didn't solve my problem, or really address it for that matter. My problem was A) the fact that TSA feels that its prosthetic protocol applies to a two year old, B) and this my main point, the level of training the TSA members had that handled the situation, and C) the fact that they wiped my two year old down for gun powder residue. I didn't even know about the gun powder wipe at the time because I was trying to handle our luggage that the TSA agent was rudely pushing me to take care of. My wife had to tell me about it last night. The agents who handled my daughter first didn't know what to do with the prosthetic and made her walk through the metal detector multiple times. One of them was about to remove my daughter prosthetic until another one came over and said that just a visual inspection needed to be done. After "inspecting" my daughters leg, (though she was wearing shorts already, so I don't know what more they needed to see) they then proceeded to wipe her down for gun powder! I truly do not understand this. Why was my daughter wiped for gun powder? Why not my wife and I? Do you really think my daughter is shooting guns? Do you think my two year old is that close to a gun being shot by anyone? I would please appreciate a valid reason to why the TSA agent did this because there is no rhyme or reason for it. And it is do to this poor training and judgement call from the TSA that has put us in this terrible situation. I really doubt anyone there really cares to do anything about it. But I hope this letter is in conjunction with many others that I'm sure are being received but other dissatisfied subjects, and I hope that is enough to have the TSA reconsider it's goals and training. You are meant to keep us safe. This experience made us in fact LOSE trust with the TSA. Please do something about this because you are costing people dearly.

Thank you

Caller flew on Saturday from DAL. She was flying to her brothers funeral. She was wearing a bra with metal in it. She triggered an alarm going through the metal detector. One of the officers came over and insisted that she strip in front of people, and that she was going to do a patdown. She offered her a private screening. In the private room she was made to remove her bra and the officer patted down the bra. Caller would like to file a complaint.

Caller wants to know how a patdown is suppose to be done, She advised that she was poke and prodded at the checkpoint by a TSO. She advised she was wearing a diaper and patted her down around the diaper and between her breast because the bra hooked in the front. She advised she asked the TSO what she was doing and told the TSO that she had not have hands on her like that is 20 years and the TSO told her that she was being very inappropriate. She wants to file a complaint and wants to let TSA know if we are going to touch people like this then we need to be courteous about it. She advised that she was in a wheelchair and opted for a patdown. She wants to know how she can tell if the wands are used at future airports so she don t have to have a patdown.

PM Airport: Syracuse
Airline: JetBlue

Last night at about 7:30-7:45 at PHL traveling to SFO via UsAirways flight 490 departing at 8:50pm at Gate A-East I was treated with absolute disdain. I was discriminated because I am disabled and because I can not walk through the machines without assistive device (my cane and Walker are aluminum). I was pat down- which I have always had to subject my self too. Even though I have total nerve damage in my left leg with a condition called CRPS, which causes unbearable, chronic pain 24/7. When I have to be touched I suffer with more unrelenting spasms. That being said, I comply because TSA makes NO ACCOMODATION with other devices at security check-points for the disabled that can't walk through on their own accord. A male security guard pulled my $1,500 dollar purse containing all my medication to the side after it was X-ray scanned. I couldn't see what he was doing(no idea if he was able to swipe thousands of dollars worth of medication, my wallet, etc. Yet, I complied. It cleared the swab test. Then another black woman came over and wanted to swab it again. I said it was cleared and she began to argue with me. For some reason, she wanted additional access to this expensive bag with medications in it. The white male security came by and told them it was clear. I said I am going to miss my flight (I always leave extra time but due to the severe storms my family had to wait until it subsided to get on the road). The other black woman doing the original pat down was told about my leg and was incredibly rough. I told her twice to be more gentle. I don't think she meant harm but she certainly didn't make an attempt to go lighter on my left leg. When she came back she claimed my shoes (Adidas slip on open toe) went off with swab, then 5 minutes later she claimed it was my skin. So then the two black female TSA workers claimed they needed to inspect my Louis Vuitton bag again. I said he just told you it was swabbed, scanned and cleared. I am going to be late (I had the escort service getting me to my gate, waiting). I said I would like to speak to a supervisor. The white female supervisor with a horrible attitude came over and said I failed the screening and they needed to screen me further in a private room. I said just do it out here. I am going to miss my flight. I have to check my Walker in and they need to board me first. She took this as argumentative and said, "if you keep it up I will make sure you miss your flight." She threatened me to make me late. I explained I was just out of the hospital and need to get back home for medical care. I can't miss my flight. They pulled me into a private room, the original TSA pat downer. I took off my sweatshirt for her. She then asked me to remove my watch. I said, "how about I take all of this off so we can make it quick". I began taking off my bracelet, wedding band, t-shirt (still had a tank top on) and I in buttoned my pants. She SCREAMED for the supervisor. Who began screaming at me in my face hunched over while I was sitting on my Walker. She said, "if you don't comply I will call the PPD on you and you will really miss your flight". I said I am complying I am taking everything off that she is going to ask me too. I'm not naked I still have a

PM She then said, "I was being loud". I said, "you are the one screaming in my face". I said, "why don't you go find the real terrorists". She said, "how do we know what a terrorist looks like, you could be the terrorist." I said, "actually, you are the terrorist with this treatment". I also informed them I was being discriminated against because I was disabled. I had to be pat down TWICE and ALL of my bags were triple checked. It that's not discrimination, harassment and abuse of power, I don't know what is. The TSA made NO accomadtion for me and I was reduced to crying while they were "finishing up". I am humiliated and suffer enough with my disability. To further, I was treated like a criminal. They had ZERO respect for my situation and knew full well that I aw no harm considering I can't even walk without my Walker. The first time the supervisor said she was going to make sure I miss my flight, she said it in front of EVERYONE going through security. The two men taking me to my gate were HORRIFIED by how I was treated.

Please accept this as a formal complaint. I am also going to speak to my attorney about the discrimination I faced for being disabled and the threats and harassment I was subjected to yesterday.

I expect someone from TSA will have the courtesy to contact me and provide me with measurements being taken to avoid this from EVER occurring again to someone with a disability. And, I also want to know what repercussions the supervisor will face. I also ask that you question why the two other TSA woman wanted access to my expensive bag with a litany of expensive medications so badly.

The caller is currently at the SEA airport. He had a bad experience with two of the TSOs working there. The caller asked TSO (b)(6) to have a patdown instead of going through the AIT machine, the TSO said that he was not allowed to receive any other method of screening. While they were waiting for their bags, (b)(6) -TSO yelled at the callers son to move out of the area very rudely. He would like to file complaint.

I had a piece of paper in my back pocket when I went through the micros canner this seemed to be reason to give me a full pat down this is totally absurd if this shows one piece of paper in the pocket why not just check the pocket please do something about privacy and treating people like human being, would you allow your mother to be treated in that manner, or your son or daughter? Do you really like doing this as a job for people maybe you could do something better for yourself and the world. All of you. I was being pat down because I was wearing a medical boot, which is fine. I've been pat down for it before and for having a cast. This time was different because my hair was pat down. I checked the scanner and there was no anomaly on my head. I have short afro curly hair and the TSA officer said "and now the head" and proceeded to pat down and scrunched my hair. She was using the same gloves that she had used to check people's luggage. It was at the C checkpoint around 4:45 - 5:00pm. I was in the TSA precheck line, traveling alone. My outfit was a blue-pink-purple plaid shirt with a turquoise A-shirt and a fuchsia camisole. I wore black leggings and medium blue jean shorts. I had on one coach tennis shoe and a black medical boot.

Who treated you unfairly? I don't know her name, but she had brown/black hair about 5'5" - 5'6". Her hair was pulled back in a ponytail, brown eyes.

Very bad, horrible experience. Felt disrespected as well as violated. I feel TSA does what they want just because of how they are feeling at that moment! I was traveling though Miami airport at noon today with my family of 8 plus my 15 month old daughter, I went through the metal detector without the items that are protocol. I get to the other side of course I know that I will get extra screening because my 15 month old was traveling with me and required some drinking pediasure, it was requested by her doctor and as well as giving to her through her WIC to drink for when she doesn't want to eat which happens when I travel because it's not easy to have access to all the food she eats. I brought in my bag 4 bottles of pediasure (yes it sound a lot for a trip from Miami to Indianapolis.IN) BUT! The only reason I brought that much with me was because of the horrible delay(it was raining which no one has control of Mother Nature) we had on our way down to Miami from Indianapolis. we were scheduled to arrive at 5pm at Miami but didn't get there until 9:45pm AND I only took 2 bottles of pediasure and it was not enough! So by the end of the trip my daughter was crying her head off because she didn't want to snack on nothing. but wanted pediasure which I was out of. So for that reason this time around I brought 4 bottles instead. She was comparing my daughter's pediasure with guns & knives. Verbatim: "do you bring knives & guns though here then you don't bring this much milk & juice through here." I don't know what her issue was she need a break, was she having a bad day?! I don't care not my business but that doesn't give her any right to talk, and treat people like that! My theory is "respect is not given its earned!" I could careless, how old you are you are going to get what you are giving me. I could of easily cussed her out but, I'm better than that and I had my daughter as well as my family with me. She then proceed to ask me how many milks she drinks per hour (once again none of her business) but I politely answered. I even explained to her my past experience on my way down to Miami. She proceeded to call someone I guess some type of manager, to tell them that my daughter's juice in her bottle kept setting the alarm off and that it needed to be checked better. I told her that it was the same juice that's in the bottle that you have in your hand (Gerber strawberry/kiwi splasher). She then proceeded to tell me that I need to step to the side a get patted down IF I wanted to take my daughter's milk with me. So I did; I don't know what the protocol is but I believe she did it out of spite! She needs to work somewhere else where she is not dealing with people because obviously she doesn't know how to treat other people. Well she patted me down hit me like 4 times in my private area for whatever reason, she was forcefully hitting me in my privates. It was in Concourse D, older white lady with salt/pepper hair; I'm 5'-5" I would say she was maybe 5'-4" or 6" I can't even remember straight because I'm still livid. I had no time to waste because she made me waste the little bit of time I had to even complain on her. My parents, brothers and family believed that that patting (extra screening) was unnecessary. Then she started to talk nice to me after everything was said and done. I consented to the extra pat down because I had nothing to hide and needed my daughter's milk. Which to tell you how the truth, we did end up having a 2 and half hour delay. I don't know what you guys do in a situation like this but I believe she needs to be talked about her attitude towards people, we don't want to stop to deal with her just as much as she don't want to stop and deal with us. I think she was mad because I was telling her that if I packed it's because needed it. She kept telling me that I didn't need that much. She felt like I needed to keep my mouth shut and agree with her. But, that's not correct I needed I packed that much because I know what experience I had encountered before hand.

Regards,

Complaint:

On 6/17/15, I was traveling with my wife (b)(6) from San Francisco to Miami by American Airlines Flight # 208 departing at 7:00 AM (Our Record Locator: (b)(6)). Both of us are old, infirm, past 75 years in age and disabled. We both had requested wheelchairs. Both our Boarding Passes had Pre?™ printed along with our names. I had a very bitter experience at the Security Check at San Francisco Airport, before boarding the aircraft.

I suffered distress due to the prolonged and unjustified Security Check. I had informed the Security Officer before the screening about metal implants in my mouth and both the knees. Still, the Security Check lasted more than 30 minutes: it included walk-through metal detector, an AIT check, and thereafter a thorough patdown of whole body — including removal of belt and patdown around my midriff and waist. In this process, I had to wait for my turn with each of the four officers who performed the checks one after the other. During the security check, I was moved away from my first screening area for subsequent checks, leaving my carryon bags and cellphone on the belt of the luggage

I am a white male, age 63, 5'10" tall and 185 pounds. I have a TSA Precheck (b)(6). I am a mostly gray short haired, clean shaven, average looking and average sized man. I was wearing what I often wear when I travel: decent looking jeans, long sleeved cotton button down shirt, cotton v neck undershirt, socks, casual loafers with no metal, and underwear. There is NOTHING about me that would cause a concern to anyone.

I am writing with a complaint for inappropriate touching by a TSA agent at the Nashville, TN airport.

Date: 6/25/2015. Time: approx 11:15 AM. Flight: Southwest 360, non stop to Boston. TSA agents I interacted with: Officer (b)(6) checked my credentials in the Precheck line. Very nice lady. Officer (b)(6) screened me, I am complaining about him, Supervisor (b)(6) took my complaint and gave me the contact info. Very professional.

I put my laptop case and belt (another agent suggested my LL Bean leather belt that has never set off an alarm might alarm) I gladly complied. I went through the first machine with no problem, but I was randomly selected for additional screening. I gladly complied and went through the second machine where you hold up your arms. Officer (b)(6) said my back alarmed and he needed to pat me down. Again, I gladly complied and Officer (b)(6) patted me down and felt around my shirt, no problem. What happened next was a problem. Officer (b)(6) began to press into my back with his hands. He pressed into my muscles (I'm averaged size, no bulging muscles) almost like he was massaging me. It was inappropriate and invasive. After Officer (b)(6) cleared me, I immediately told him he was inappropriate and shouldn't be touching me like that. I told him I wanted a supervisor. I said it kind of loud because I wanted the other agents to know. so I wouldn't be ignored or forced to wait a long time. Supervisor (b)(6) came within a minute and heard my complaint and gave me the feedback form. He was very professional. He agreed with me that an officer shouldn't "massage" people. My problem was not with any of the regular security procedures. I've been through a hundred times. My problem was with Officer (b)(6) giving me additional touching that was not on the surface of my body. I would have gladly had additional inspection in a private area. I would have taken off my shirt if the officer couldn't clear me with a wand and a pat down.

What I would like is for Officer (b)(6) receive additional training about what touching is allowed and how to escalate if there are concerns. I have read about TSA agents stealing, falsely claiming a traveler needing a pat down so the agent could grope them, and other invasive behavior. Travelers are at their mercy if the agent wants to act inappropriately. They know we have a plane to catch and are hesitant to make a report.

I would also like an apology.

I am writing to you regarding my unusual experience on US Air flights #743 from Barcelona to Philadelphia, and then Philadelphia to Chicago on June 17, 2015. Although I am a Global Entry approved traveler, and had gone through security at the Barcelona airport, I was pulled from the boarding line and taken to another area for a full body pat down. I was told I was simply a random selection. Eight hours later, at the Philadelphia airport (to the best of my recollection I had not left the secured area), I was again subjected to a full body pat down, and again told it was another random selection. Obviously, these two pat downs were not "random." While I am in favor of any procedures that improve flight safety, I have absolutely no idea what caused a Global Entry approved 73-year-old Jewish man traveling with his wife of 51 years and his teenage granddaughter to be identified for such scrutiny.

The female TSA agent was rude, abrupt and basically very abrasive. She didn't explain to me what would be happening; she just grabbed my things, told me not to touch anything and rushed me over to the xray machines. She was very disorganized and, again, treated me like I was a criminal. It was embarrassing and humiliating. When she detected my "attitude" (i.e., that I was getting mad about her treatment of me) she chastised me by saying that "this would go easier if you didn't have an attitude" to which I replied that I was not a criminal and didn't appreciate her rudeness and abruptness. At that point another woman took over and explained the pat down process which, as it turned out was very humiliating. And, while that woman was not abrasive or rude (she came across as "neutral"), after she did the physically offensive "pat down" and ran the results through their machine, called over to me from about 20 feet away that it was okay, I could go and then she turned away before I had the chance to say anything or Comment : Tea precheck line closed because "they didn't have enough staff", and we were told to keep shoes on, no mention of liquids, laptops, anything, until we were already in the body scanner. Forced to have pat down because of non-metal items in pockets (because I am pre-check and this isn't an issue any other time), and baggage scanned again. Complete waste of traveler time, complete waste of tea employee time, and easily avoidable by two things: 1. Proper manpower scheduling. 2. Making it clear that even pre-check travelers need to remove liquids, any non-metallic items in pockets, laptops, etc. most annoying if all, WHY am I paying for pre check if it isn't being provided at this airport, while random non-pre-check travelers are being allowed thru pre-check lines at other airports? Comments: Earlier today I asked to opt out of the scanner and to go through the metal detector and have a pat down. I am in the first trimester of pregnancy and my doctor has advised me to avoid these scanners as I typically fly twice a week for work.

8:55:16
PM

When I asked to opt out, the woman on the other side of the scanner told me, "no, you have to come through."

I told her I was pregnant and preferred the metal detector. She told me no once more and said it was broken, even though I had just witnessed her allow a mother and her toddler to walk through right before me. She then told me it didn't matter to my baby and I needed to walk through.

I responded to her that my doctor told me no scanners. She rolled her eyes at me as a line started to form behind me. People were congratulating me and asking why they weren't letting me get the pat down. Finally a nice man came and had me sit to wait for the pat down.

When it was time for my pat down, the agent was extremely rough. As you know pregnancy leaves alot of the body quite sensitive and she was not careful. She actually slammed her hands into my crotch so hard that another female passenger actually stopped to watch to make sure I was ok, and flinched when the agent checked me. I've never felt so humiliated in general and would have expected far more understanding and sensitivity from a female agent in the case of pregnancy.

I just thought TSA should know about my experience. Traveling while pregnant is hard enough. We're already starving and thirsty all the time and can't bring food or drinks through, and when we are instructed to opt out of a scanner by our doctor, we are met with indignance and rough behavior. I'd really love to see a little more sensitivity from TSA on the matter. I understand they deal with tons of issues every day, but I really felt like I was being punished for asking to exercise my right to opt out.

I just went through security at Orlando International Airport and I want to report what I believe was inappropriate action by your screener.

I did the body scan and was then moved off to the side where a woman did a pat down of my backside. She touched my butt and my crotch and it was completely inappropriate. Seriously, my "lady parts" were touched. This is NOT okay.

I am a frequent traveler, vetted by Fly Clear to bypass parts of security and in no way a threat to safe travel. I have been traveling since I was a toddler.

Complaint: My husband has a broken foot and is in a walking boot. He is able to take the boot off but cannot walk on it without the boot on. He asked prior to going through if he was ok to just go through the regular machine and they confirmed but once he was through no one had any idea what they were supposed to do to screen the boot. He offered to take it off so they could send it through in the beginning but no one could determine what the procedure they should be following was. A manager was called over but didn't seem to know any better than the agents. They wiped his hands and finally had him take the boot off and ran it through the machine. They then said they had to pat down his foot at which point they proceeded to SQUEEZE his broken foot until I said, "it's broken!" Unfortunately by that point they had already caused pain that required him to take pain medication. It's bad enough to have agents who have no idea what to do but to squeeze a broken foot when it by no means requires to determine there is nothing there is ridiculous. Unfortunately I was not able to get

Complaint: I was traveling back to the US (Home) from a vacation in the BVIs - was injured and on crutches. TSA agent sent my crutches through the xray machine then asked if I could hop through metal detector (I was pre-check). I said yes, but needed my crutches. She would not allow me to touch the crutches because they had already been screened and I had not. Made me submit to a pat down - pulled up my shirt and skirt in full view of all passengers. Made me stand without with crutches. Attempted to touch my partial cast (with 4 broken unset bones). Supervisor (b)(6) was not helpful and lectured me. This was humiliating and downright unprofessional.

Complaint: I would like someone to explain to me why your agent (last name (b)(6) young hispanic female) did not offer me a private screening. After I went thru the scanner, I noticed that in between my genital area was highlighted, a woman came over and said I just need to pat down your buttox, open you stance for me.

She then began rubbing down on my buttox which was very uncomfortable, especially in public. I asked the gentlemen standing in front of me (I couldn't remember his name, I believe it was (b)(6) young black male), aren't you all supposed to do this in private, he then offered me a private screening. I told him well its too late now she's already almost finished and did not offer a private screening to me. He then said apologized.

I would like someone to share with me as well as your agent (b)(6) the protocol when doing secondary screening on someone's genitals and private parts please. Thank you.

It makes no sense. I'm a trusted traveler with TSA pre check and Global Entry. I also have an artificial knee. I obviously will trigger the metal detector. That causes a choice of either a pat down or trip through the back scatter machine. I travel a lot and don't want to use the back scatter machine. Since I qualified for only a metal detector and don't have to take off my shoes and everything out of my pocket, why can't they just use a hand wand to confirm I have no other metal on me other than my knee?

Today the pat down was much more comprehensive. I asked the officer about it and he said a new policy was just released. Since he could not feel my artificial knee with a wand he asked me to go in the private room and take my pants down to confirm the metal was inside me.

What a waste of his time and mine.

If I travel to Europe on the return flight is accepted by U.S.

Security. Time for this policy to be re-examined.

Caller traveled to Cancun in May. She had a problem with Southwest Airlines at the gate on her return trip from Cancun. She wrote a letter to Southwest Airlines. They told her that the people at the gate are contracted and that the people at the gate are employed by TILC. She wanted to know if I know what that is. Southwest Airlines has not satisfied her complaint. They said that they are not responsible for what happened at the gate. She does not agree. They stated in their letter that TSA required them to do that to her at the gate. She asked if TSA requires screening in foreign countries. Caller and her husband were almost the last people to board. She was told to step to a table and they went through her bags. They told her to turn around. They came around the other side of the table and begin to touch her. They used the palm of their hand to touch her waist, shoulder, and breast and went back up again. She said that it was not a normal patdown. She stated that they are not allowed to use the palm of their hand and they should have gone all the way down and not returned to her breast. She had already been through the main airport security check and they had no reason to do that to her.

Complaint: Despite the fact that I usually get the TSA pre-check status on outgoing boarding pass, I was selected for the full screening at the Logan check point and thus had to go through the newer 'hands in the air' scanner. Then because I was wearing cargo style pants I was subjected to a pat down as well, which would seem to make the scanner part unnecessary in my mind. However, my issue concerns the fact that I was ordered, military style, to turn around to get patted down on the back side - which meant my belongings, which were sitting on the conveyor, were no longer within my view. When I turned my head to keep an eye on my things, I was ordered to turn my head around by two of your cops, as if I had just pulled out a weapon or done something entirely threatening. All things considered, I know you need to do your job, but it seems only natural that I would want to keep an eye on my things - and it seems that with all the personnel you have up there, you could have someone that watches the belongings of those whose pockets you want to examine more closely - or have some place where they are put aside safely and in view. Your failure to do so makes an already tense situation far more so and for no good reason. It would also help if the rules and procedures were similar from airport to airport - one

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am very upset about the treatment I received Wednesday, June 24 at Denver International Airport.

I usually go through security very fast and am not even asked to take off my shoes. Wednesday, I had my two teenage grandchildren and with me. We have gone through security and number of times and know the routine. We were quick to get our possessions in the trays and on the conveyor. I asked the agent standing there if I needed to take off my shoes. He said, "Yes, unless I was 75 or over." I replied, "I was 70," and took off my shoes and put them in a tub. I joked saying, "I could have told him I was 75." He joked back, "that I was honest and wouldn't do that."

There was a scanner and a metal detector. I turned to see if I had to go through the scanner. The nod was "yes". I hate the scanner and feel it is an invasion of privacy. It also violates the constitution as people are searched without probable cause. I know the routine. I proceeded forward, feet on the marks, hands overhead. As I came out of the scanner, I was told to put my hands straight out and was checked with a wand. Next the female agent did a pat down. When she wanted to see what was in my pocket, I lost my patience. I said, "you want to see what is in my pocket, here" and pulled a Light Day and 2 Kleenex. She reprimanded me for having attitude and basically told me to comply so I could get through security. I began to wonder if I was going to have to take my clothes off. She then finished patting me down.

Meanwhile I am concerned about the watch my mother gave me before she died. It has a handmade Indian band that is quite unique. The band is probably worth close to $1000. I always take it off as it sets off the metal detectors.

PM I am livid. There was no excuse for putting me through a scan, doing the wand, and a pat down. If after all that you need to see 2 Kleenex and a Light Day, you have no business being in the security. I have no artificial parts, nothing that should have indicated a need for anything after the scan.

Meanwhile, numerous people had passed through the metal detector. All kinds of contraband could have passed through. There seemed to be so many holes in security it looked like a sieve.

I am going to write my congressman and senators and asked that the TSA be confined to only checking luggage unless there is probable cause. Personally, I would prefer no TSA and no check. The U.S. is the land of the Free, the home of the Brave. It is foolish of us to allow terrorists to take away our freedom.

If you have a reasonable explanation as to why I should have been put through such an ordeal, I would appreciate being told. I am open to seeing your side.

I have a concern that I experienced unprofessional conduct at security checkpoint C2 at the Newark airport on June 22, 2015 about 9pm. A female caucasian TSA agent, approx. 5ft tall, with frizzy/curly blond hair, parted down the middle and about chin length, ignored my notification of a medical condition and request to use the metal detector several people directly in front of me had just used. While being directed instead to the body scanner, I said I did not want to use it due to a medical condition, but would be able to go through the metal detector. She insisted I be given a pat down and made me wait while several people directly behind me were ushered through the metal detector. The woman right behind me even set off the metal detector repeatedly and yet was not detained for a pat down, with the same agent letting her back through the metal detector again and again and again.

My flight was boarding, but the agent said I had to "wait for someone to come." After several minutes waiting, watching others go through the metal detector, I objected that I would miss my flight, but the agent said I had to wait because "someone had been called."

When no one came, the agent finally pulled me past the line to the area where passengers retrieve their belongings. She asked if I had implanted devices or areas that are sensitive or painful to touch, which I told her I had, but she painfully poked me in the breast anyway where my mastectomy was and said "what's this?" She also said "can't you lift your arms higher?", which I had told her was one of the reasons I couldn't use the body scanner in the first place.

At no time did I raise my voice or fail to cooperate, but I did complain that I was being treated insensitively. She said I was "making it worse" for myself and proceeded to purposely take longer.

Several times she kept cautioning me not to touch my things, even though she was done with the pat down and done checking her gloves for chemicals.

I found her attitude and approach demeaning, bullying, insensitive and pointless. She was on a power trip and enjoyed pushing me (and others I saw her interact with) around. She has no business working for the TSA. She makes no one safer and breeds resentment by her inhumane and unprofessional actions.

I did miss the last flight out of Newark to MSP with no accommodations provided, but that TSA agent was the worst part of it, by far. Her misplaced enjoyment at the misery of people in her power was particularly disturbing and made me wonder what this nation is coming to. I think that agent should be dismissed. At very least please direct her towards some human relations education. If she could follow the example of other more empathetic agents, passengers would be less traumatized by the already stressful situation at Security points today.

Complaint: Requested pat-down screening instead of AIT scanning as I am voluntarily permitted. TSA personnel were unable to locate a male TSA employee for about 15 minutes. Most staff were rude. One stout female Asian TSA employee even mocked my requests for assistance with a degrading response. She couldn't look me in the eye later. Finally, after a prolonged wait with my shoes and belt removed, holding my property the entire time, someone with the literal testicles necessary for the male pat-down showed up. This staff member was courteous and polite, in stark contrast to most of the other staff members of "lane 5".

Get your staff into shape. They are a disgrace. All this for 95% failure rate.

To: TSA, Washington D.C., Reagan Airport, Flight DL1631, June 26th, 2015

Attn: STSO (b)(6)

From: (b)(6) Passenger, Delta Check Point

Re: TSA Formal Complaint for Improper Search/Patdown

This morning at approximately 10:30 a.m., today, June 26th, 2015, I entered, with my minor child, (b)(6) the TSA Security screening at Ronald Reagan Airport. We initially entered the main line and were stopped by a TSA agent that said we should move to pre-check. We followed direction and moved into the pre-check line only to be told at the next stop by the TSA agent checking ID and tickets that we were not to be pre-check and needed to use a gate to his left to enter the regular screening line. Again, we complied.

At that point, we entered the line in the middle of agents and I verbally told the security screener processing the luggage scanning that my daughter was wearing an insulin pump. I also pointed to the location of the insulin pump which was clearly shown with a clip onto her front pants pocket. The same TSA agent motioned for us to remove our shoes, place the bags onto the conveyor belt. The bags included a green back backpack, a teal backpack, one pink carry-on and one red-carryon. For the shoes (two pair) and my daughter's cell phone, we used one plastic tub. The TSA agent told us to move to the left to the rectangle shaped body scanner (not the 3-d) and wait for assistance. Again, we complied.

10:16:37

AM

At the location of the rectangle body scanner, we again told a different TSA agent, standing on the other side of the scanner that my daughter had an insulin pump. Again, we pointed to the pump. The TSA agent asked me what I wanted to do and I stated that I wanted a wand screening. The TSA agent said we had two choices, either to go through the 3-d scanner or to have a pat down. I explained that we could not use the 3-d scanner due to the possibility of the insulin pump malfunctioning as stated on the warranty from the pump manufacturing company. The TSA nodded her head in understanding but signaled two other TSA agents and asked what to do. Those TSA agents told her that we had to have a pat down. I agreed and said that I wanted to be present while my daughter received her pat down.

At that point, the TSA agent told me to go first through the rectangle shaped body scanner. I did. My daughter then followed behind. Several TSA agents ushered us to the middle near our conveyor belt and asked us which pieces of luggage were ours. I pointed out the two backpacks, the two suitcases and the clear box. A TSA agent said that our green bag, belonging to my daughter needed to be hand - searched. Two TSA agents removed our luggage and placed it on a table directly in front of the scanner.

A male TSA agent placed two blue gloves on his hands and asked us if we were carrying anything in the backpack that could hurt or poke him. I again explained that my daughter had Type 1 Diabetes and was carrying medical supplies but that they were in a contained pink bag. The male TSA agent begin searching the bag. Later, I discovered that the pink medical bag wasn't even in the bag that had been flagged.

At the same time, another female TSA agent was talking to my daughter.

I positioned myself so that I could look directly at my daughter while keeping an eye on my daughter's backpack search. The female TSA explained the procedure of a pat down and was discreet and professional. She asked my daughter's hands and had to repeat her direction several times to have my daughter touch her insulin pump and then be swabbed by the TSA agent. Then, she started the pat down on my daughter.

Complaint: I believe that this agency needs a major overhaul and need to actually hire competent employees. To have to send 5 police officers to find my wife who is traveling with a 2 month old child for a second pat down is ridiculous. Maybe if they did their jobs correctly the first time they would have had to waste resources like that and cause my wife confusion and terror. This is governmental ineptitude at its finest. Your agency should be ashamed at how they represent the people of the United States.

Complaint: I'm a pilot and travel for a living. I'm very patient with screening, as I fully understand it's necessity. In 14 years I have not experienced the rudeness I had today. On top of that, I was selected for additional screening (pat down). I have read the policies on your website and would like to document a complaint. I am 4.5 months pregnant and went through the SeaTac TSA screening checkpoint this morning at approximately 6:20am. I requested to use the metal detector in lieu of the wave machine and was told that my only option would be a highly uncomfortable pat down screen due to "protocol". While I respect the mission to protect passengers, there is nothing on your website or passenger rights site that indicates that pat down is my only option. In fact your pat down site indicates that a pat down is only required if I refuse either wave machine OR the metal detector. I specifically requested to use the metal detector and was denied that right.

While I was forced to wait for a pat down I watched several other passengers - including a middle aged woman with her teenage daughter - be welcome through the metal detector. I am incredibly disappointed that I was not afforded the same rights and opportunity as this other woman and her child.

If you're going to force a "protocol" it should be clearly articulated on your pat down website and in your passenger bill of rights.

Complaint Feedback: Professionalism/Customer Service

Complaint: I opted out and requested a pat down. The female officer who conducted the pat down was pleasant and professional. She insisted that her male supervisor needed to watch her conduct the pat down. Not only was having this male oversee her patting me down uncomfortable, but he also made inappropriate comments, such as "nice work, nice technique" to the female officer. It should be required that female officers are overseen by female supervisors during pat downs.

Complaint: Why, in a huge airport like DIA, is there no scan machine for PreCheck? I have a knee replacement, which forces me to either submit to a major pat-down or go thru the regular lines in order to be cleared by the scanner. This isn't a small regional airport. I understand it there, but not DIA.

Hello,

I'm writing to file an official complaint for unprofessional behavior against TSA screening officer (b)(6) at Dallas Fort Worth airport.

I travel for work and have been on at least 2 flights per week for most of this year, passing through many major airports in the US and I understand and appreciate airport transportation safety rules and the good job that most TSA agents do in keeping this country safe. Generally, agents have been very respectful and professional in doing their job, but one instance a few weeks ago was so bad that I felt the need to go out of my way to report it.

On June 4th, at just before 12:00 noon, I went through TSA screening for my flight AA0976 to Houston at 12:55. I have TSA Pre-Check clearance, so I planned my time according to how long Pre-Check screening would usually take. When I arrived at the screening location, I was informed that Pre-Check was not available that day, so I would have to go through standard screening.

After removing my belt and shoes and putting my carry-on through the X-ray machine, I asked to opt-out of the full-body scanning machine. At this point, Officer (b)(6) who was manning the station, became visibly irritated and asked me to step to the side to wait for a pat-down. I spent almost half an hour waiting. During this time, I asked the officer if he could please find someone to assist me, because I was concerned about my flight boarding time coming up. At one point, he called over to one of his colleagues saying "this guy's starting to be a pain in the ass," which I felt was very disrespectful and unprofessional for someone in his role.

7:02:12
PM

Finally at around 12:40, Officer (b)(6) himself took me aside to do the pat-down himself. He was definitely annoyed at this point and this was reflected in the rough way he patted me down. I felt especially violated by how he roughly and firmly pressed his hands up my inner thighs and into my genitals.

By the time I finished with the screening, I had to run to my gate to board my plane on time and almost missed my flight.

I understand that I have a right to refuse to pass through a full-body scanning machine, and getting a pat-down as an alternative had never been an issue at any other screening at any other airport until that point. I don't understand why Officer (b)(6) would have been irritated by this, and I don't appreciate how he took out that irritation in his pat-down of me or how he almost made me miss my flight.

I am very disappointed by the whole experience and don't think that Officer (b)(6) acted in a way befitting a TSA agent, or anyone in a position of trust and authority, for that matter.

I hope that you will address this issue and please feel free to contact me if you would like any further information.

Best regards,

(b)(6)
Houston, Texas

Complaint:

My Girlfriend asked not to go through the body scanner. She waited. There was a metal detector that several people went through while she was waiting. men, women, and children. every time after she asked to go through it. She asked the gate TSA attendant when she could go through and every time, she was told that she had to wait for a TSA agent to be present before she could go through. Surely, this would be within reason, except that she (on the outside of the gates), and me (on the inside of the gates) stood there for at least 10 minutes, twiddling our thumbs, on what would happen. Also, still within guidelines for TSA or airline standards, we were at the airport within reasoning right at about the 90 mark for domestic travel to get to the airport. Th long line at PDX, combined with the indignant TSA employee, the name we sadly didn't get), helped us to be there barely within time.

I would like to ask:

1. Have female TSA agents available within a minute or so, so they can pat down if at all necessary.

Complaint: TSA employee outside of the AIT was notified that I needed to keep my shoes on. Rather than handle discretely, he call the TSA employee from the other side of the AIT, who came through and demanded to know about my condition and to see my documents. I was embarrassed and offended in front of other passengers. He did not relent until I asked for a supervisor. Her solution, rather than send me through the AIT then enhanced screen my shoes, was to order an enhanced pat-down. This type of harassment and intimidation, whether the result of poor training or malice, is unacceptable.

I'm a holder of a TWIC card, global entry, and Nexus. So, I'm pretty sure that I'm in more government data bases than I would care care to know about. This morning I was "allowed" to enter the pre check line. AFTER going through the metal decter. I was selected to undergo additional screening. Not because I set off the machine, but because it was a random choice made by the machine. Thus, I was sent to the worthless full body scanner. I was not told to remove my belt and I may be able to go through with my wallet in hand. After going through the machine, my waist was boxed in yellow. hmmm..... Belt? The screener made me remove my belt and placed me back in the machine. They could not have checked that area. Then the belt was passed through the baggage scanner. Every item was removed from my wallet and then she bent it back and forth.

Remember, I passed through the metal decter without incident and if the selection process skipped me, I would have gotten on the plane with the wallet and belt just like I am now.

She is a cancer survivor with a prosthesis.

She asked for her belongings to where she could see them. One of the officers said no, very sternly and was training another officer. One of the other officers said she was going to pat her down and take her some place private. The other officer who was training the other said she was being rude and could get a supervisor.

She began to cry, and felt very humiliated.
A supervisor was called over, and explained to her about getting PreCheck. He was very professional.

She thinks maybe the trainee was a little anxious.

She also wanted to offer some suggestions; sensitivity training, explanation procedures for pat down, also if someone is traveling alone they should be able to see their items.
Her main complaint was with the trainer, who treated her as a criminal.

Director TSA,
This is to alert you to recent elder bias and abuse at the Indianapolis Airport by a subordinate of yours!
On June 27 at approximately 1:30 pm. I was the subject of the rudest, crudest and most abusive pat down by a TSA agent, because I forgot and left a business card in my trouser pocket. Not only was the agent rude and crude, he also tried to hurt me by jamming the knife edge of his hand into my crotch!
As a TSA pre-approved flyer, a career US Army officer of over twenty years and a Vietnam veteran, I find it difficult to imagine myself as a threat to air travel. Rather, I believe that the agent in question has a clear and demonstrated bias toward the elderly and a perverse need to display perceived power and authority to this 70-year old.
The action of your subordinate reinforces those who espouse that the greatest threat to America is government and the petty bureaucrats employed by the government.

REASON for the call; Someone at Reagan gave her card with our number on it. She has a three fold complaint.

She has traveled for the last month to ATL, DFW and Reagan. She had to renew her id. She had asked if there would be an issue traveling with her renewal documentation and her expired id and was told it is not an issue. She had no issues at ATL or DFW. She only had issues at Reagan. She has Redress certification. (Have no idea what she means). She said they contacted the supervisor. The supervisor looked at the documents and told her it was unacceptable. He asked for other ids. She had credit cards and other ids and showed it to him. He said okay and told her to come through the line. She went through the scanner with no issue. She then was told that she had to have a patdown. The lady who patted her down gave her a full body patdown. She was intimidated by her attitude. She told her she was going to have to thoroughly search her bags and items. Her attitude was very bad.

She said she had seen this lady laying on the counter and had a bad look on her face even before she patted her down.

She is upset that she got the full body patdown when on other flights they only pat down part of the body after she uses the AIT. She is upset because the supervisor did not inform her of what was going to happen. She is upset at the female TSO's attitude.

Comment : My husband travels a to Tulsa every two to four weeks.As is conditioned as worded he has been unable to go through the machine. So he has had to be patted down.This is the second time my husband has been treated with such of lack of disrespect .Today he was left standing while two TSA employees debated who was to conduct the male pat down.My husband can not stand long and I informed them of that and I was told an employee named (b)(6) was to take of him.Instead of doing that he cont to converse with the othe employee as to why he eas not going to do it. since they were having that debate my husband was left standing not allowed to sit in the wheel chair.So I handed my husband his cane he would have something to lean on.I was then told that since I touched hom I too had to be patted down.I told them I did not touch him but handed him the cane. I was approached by a female TSA employee who stated she was a supervisor and that she would be patting me down.Please not that my husband still had not been attended .I voiced my concerns and the female told me that was enough talking about it and to shut my mouth.I was so surprised as I was not raising my voice or acting out of order.This

6/30/2015 11:33:26 AM was witnessed by the wheel chair attendant that was waiting to assist my husband .I asked for another supervisor and three others came over and they had to talk about it,finally after eight minutes of waiting my husband was being screen.He has a back pack that contains his meds and his formula(he is on Tube Feeding which is a continuous feed) The TSA eye that was checking the bag told. Him that it was over the limit.Now we have been traveling and mo money has made such a comment before.In the past the formulas are simply checked. My husband is going to the Cancer a Treatment Centers of America in Tulsa.he has Stage4 Lung Cancer with Mets. He is usually in a lot of pain. The stress and the poor customer service he received is unacceptable .And to be told by that first female Supervisor -that is enough talking now shut your mouth is a beyond the pale.I did not get her name or the others as I was too concern with my husband and if we were going to make our flight.I am not sure what was going on with these employees .I not sure if they lack respect for people with a. Disability or if (b)(6) had and issue touching a person of color .I do know that (b)(6) never did the pat down.We were finally cleared to go to tha gate at 6:48. I have signed us up for the TSA Pre Boarding however even that status would not have prevented this poor customer service .I would like all involved to be retrained or trained on how to screen disabled passengers .

What happened? I was at the American terminal 4 Security at around 8:20am. I am pregnant and requested to opt out of the scanner. The TSA agents proceeded to lazily call for a female

My name is (b)(6) I have a rare disability that affects the bone growth and circulation in my right leg. I have been discriminated against because of my disability repeatedly by TSA. I have always complied with all of your rules and regulations and yet I am still discriminated against. Most recently I went through security today at O'hare airport. Two of your TSA agents had me walk through the imaging screen. I informed them that I had a disability and that I was wearing a compression stocking on my right leg. I also informed them that my right leg is bigger than the left because of poor circulation and I have undergrowth and overgrowth of the bone.

They then wiped and tested my hands. And I stood there for quite a long time while several more people went through because they didn't want me to leave but in their words, they weren't sure what to do. I then had to go through a pat down on my leg and the metal detector wand on my leg. All while not being able to put on my shoes that have lifts inside of them so I can walk. It was very painful for me to stand there without the medical device I use in my shoes to help me stand and walk. I was still not allowed to put them on and they had me stand there for 10-15 mins while they figured out what to do. Has there been literally no training for your TSA agents on dealing with disabilities?

I was also asked personal questions about my disability over and over again, and in front of other strangers that were being screened. It was not done respectfully, it was not professional, and it clearly never would have happened had I not had a disability. The two TSA agents who were working were named (b)(6) (Male) and (b)(6) (female) and this was at 12:33pm at O'hare in Chicago on 06/30/15.

I have the right not to be humiliated or discriminated against because of my disability every time that I go through TSA. I have also paid for and been accepted as TSA Precheck, but the airport said that you blocked it from going on my boarding pass. This is not the first time this has happened. Why when United is one of the airlines that you say uses TSA Precheck and I am accepted into TSA Precheck, am I no able to use it? My KTN is (b)(6) Please explain to me why I have repeatedly not had the Precheck on my boarding pass and yet I have entered it in online when I purchase my tickets and everything says I am able to do Precheck until I arrive at the airport and they tell me otherwise but have no explanation.

I would like to submit a disability discrimination claim over this incident. I do not want to live my life in fear of going through TSA because I am humiliated over the way they treat me during the screening process and denied wearing my shoes which have a medical device in them that makes it possible for me to walk. I am not treated with respect and the TSA agents could not be described as professional or even trained on how to screen someone that has one leg that looks different than the other. I should have the same screening process as everyone else. No one else in line around me had an experience like I did, but none of them had a physical disability either.

I also want to inform you that I am contacting the ADA over this. I have the same disability as (b)(6) He is a professional golfer who took his case against the PGA to the Supreme Court over being discriminated against and he won. It is a very rare disability called Klipple-Treanunay. Just to give you someone to reference so you have an idea of what it is like. I am also contacting United over this incident. Please let me know how to proceed with TSA about my claim of disability discrimination.

I would like to express my gratitude to the young man in Boise Idaho...I am 61 yrs old and don't hear very well (ask my wife).. when I went thru the xray machine (guess that is what it is called)....come out and this blonde headed kid starts rambling on very fastI told him he needed to slow down I am old and slow....then he copped an attitude like he was put out....then he asked me if I wanted to get pat down in private....at this point I wanted what ever took place to be in front of God and everyone....so he proceeded to do his thing with quite the attitude....then after it he was done . I thanked him for the gentleness....for I think he banged my balls with the attitude.....my first experience on plane in 20 years.....I realize they deal with alot of people. but leave the attitude at homedon't take it out on a person's privates.....
Hello:

On the morning of June 20, I flew out of the Ft. Walton Beach, FL (VPS) airport to my home in Charlotte, NC. I presented the TSA agent with my TSA pre-check boarding pass and NC Driver's license. Because my boarding pass contained only my maiden name (b)(6) and my driver's license contained my full married name, (b)(6) the agent insisted I go through a special screening process which included a full body pat down, heightened check of my carry on, and a review of other identification I had in my purse. Fortunately, I did not miss my flight, however, I did find all of this additional attention unnecessary as it is very evident that (b)(6) and (b)(6) are one in the same person. I'm a U.S. citizen with no criminal record whatsoever, I had TSA pre-check (and typically do have it when I travel), and explained that for the past 3 years (since my marriage) I've gone through nearly every major U.S. airport with no questions asked and no eyebrows raised (including through Customs with the same situation). In fact, I had just come off of Eglin AFB where I underwent an FBI background check utilizing the exact same identification with absolutely no issues.

While I am sure the TSA agent was trying to follow the rules to the letter, I think there should be some level of personal empowerment to make judgment calls based upon the situation. It seemed that the other TSA screeners also found her actions excessive in that they were barking corrections at her and sighing in frustration at the hold up that was being created for me and other passengers as a result of her actions. In the future, I plan to carry two forms of ID with me so that I can definitively prove that (b)(6) and (b)(6) are the same person as I do not wish to change my travel profile with the various airlines since I generally get TSA pre-check and greatly appreciate the convenience it affords and would not wish to jeopardize that.

I would be most interested to hear whether TSA agents do have some level of personal empowerment in situations like this and also whether I have the right to escalate my concerns at the security screening area if I'm ever faced with a similar situation.

In advance, thank you for your response.

I was waiting in line at Security Checkpoint before the body scanner machine. I was flying from San Diego to DFW- AA1159. It was about 1:30 pm. I was wearing a long flowy dress with a light denim jacket over it. I was about to go into the machine when a TSA officer yelled at me and said, The buttons are going to be seen. You need to take the jacket off. I said, It's okay, I wore this last time at a checkpoint and yes the buttons showed up but I don't really feel comfortable taking the jacket off. The officer yelled, Just take it off! and proceeded to rub himself around the chest area to say that the buttons would be seen. Then another officer kept on yelling Just take it off! I didn't want to cause a commotion and I was already slightly annoyed. When I took the jacket off, one of the officers yelled, Whooo, thats right! Yea! The first TSA officer was the one guiding people to go through the scanner machine. He had dirty blonde hair. The second officer was off to the right side. He wasn't checking the bags that were going through but He walked over when the other man started yelling Take it off. He had dark brown hair and a mustache. The two men proceeded to laugh as I walked through the machine. I think they were trying to say that the pat down would be embarrassing but in all my life, I have never been humiliated and treated like a piece of meat like that. it is never okay to holler at a woman. Nonetheless when a woman is wearing a long modest dress and yell Whoo, that's right after she takes off a denim jacket at the security checkpoint. It is rude, sexist, completely inappropriate, and uncalled for. Do not treat me like a piece of meat and proceed to laugh at your completely insensitive remark. Sexual harassment and demeaning women is never hilarious. I will never travel through San Diego again.

I would like a response back from TSA because I am angry, humiliated and upset about what happened. TSA officers should be a little bit more sensitive to the remarks that are being made especially to the opposite of sex and especially in the way that they say things. I would also suggest having at least 1 woman TSA officer present as well.

Yes, I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the civil rights and/or civil liberties complaint that I have filed with TSA is true and correct and I have read and agree with and to the terms outlined in this Form.

I will cooperate with Transportation Security Administration's (TSA) complaint resolution activities undertaken on my behalf. I understand that my failure to cooperate with TSA may result in the closure of my complaint. I understand that the TSA may share the information I have provided as needed to resolve this complaint.

I have tried repeatedly to submit a complaint on your website: <http://www.tsa.gov/content/talk-tsa>

I have attached the error message that says "The TSA web content platform is unavailable"

I have attached the complaint for you to route to the proper party.

1) I was repeatedly told by several TSA officers to move to an area where I would be completely out of view of my personal belongings (purse, wallet, laptop, and carry on bag). I have had items stolen previously and was extremely embarrassed and afraid of repercussion and retaliation from the officers who told me repeatedly to leave them on the conveyer belt and walk to an area at considerable distance where I would not be able to see them. I stayed next to my belongings until one of them finally moved them near to the area where the "pat down" would take place so I could keep an eye on them.

2) I then was waited and was given a "pat down" however there was no "patting". It was rubbing and stroking and pulling on my thin dress. I was wearing a thin cotton sleeveless short dress with no stockings. The female officer continually and repeatedly rubbed and stroked the small areas of my body that were covered. This felt aggressive and as though I had been assaulted. There was no plausible explanation for why she would repeatedly stroke the same area of my breasts and buttocks and thighs. This repeated motion of rubber gloves on the light cotton dress caused the dress to pull and stretch.

I am a 62 year old woman, traveling first class to visit my daughter. I have worked for a Washington State government agency in high level trust positions for 24 years. I have travelled all over the world independently for 45 years. Throughout those travels, I am accustomed to being treated with respect and dignity just as I treat others.

Caller is needing to know how many white haired old ladies in wheelchairs does TSA find as terrorists? Her 85 year old mother uses a wheelchair to get through the airport and a couple times in the last several years she has had to go through a patdown screening and is needing to know why?

To whom this may concern,

Greetings my name is (b)(6) the reason for me to contact you is because I feel that TSA attempted to violate my personal space by requesting to pat me down in order to allow me to have my baby's food granted access on to the plane I am traveling on from Worcester, MA going to Fort Lauderdale, FL. The agent's claim

Was that it was over the 3 oz. limit. He also stated that instead of opening to inspect the items what they do is pat down the parents. That really got me upset because they are patting down people that have been cleared by the detector machines to allow food containers into the planes. To me they are taking an easy way out of doing their jobs correctly. I contested their request and they insisted that it is part of the TSA protocol. I checked such protocol and in your site it clearly states that if baby food is larger TSA agent can allow it as long as it has been properly inspected by TSA. To me a pat down is not a proper inspection of the food. I am concern and upset at the handling of this matter by the crew at ORH. I did not ask for the name in fear of possible retaliation and instead filed this complaint. I hope to hear from you via email. I will counsel a legal advisor for recommendations on this matter and hope this does not happen to another parent nor person. I know that there has been such request by TSA agents from other states that were patting down people for pleasure. I feel my rights were violated and there was no probable cause for the pat down request. Thank you and have a wonderful and glorious day!

On June 29th, I was traveling from New York City to San Francisco. My flight plan was to leave from New York's Laguardia Airport to Chicago and then eventually take a connecting flight to San Francisco. The plane's departure time was at 2:15pm from Gate D7 flying American Airlines Flight Number 337.

I arrived at the security checkpoint at about 1:40pm. When I arrived at the security area, the foot traffic was fairly light. With 35 minutes remaining to my flight's departure, while seemingly brief in scope, TSA was well positioned to address my security screening in the time allotted. The terminal checkpoint wasn't large and TSA was well staffed, so I'm confident in making this conceit.

When I arrived, an agent immediately swiped my palm, to which I made no objection. Unfortunately, since I used a hair-pomade product only hours earlier, which I quickly realized that some of the residue still resided on my palm, the test failed triggering TSA's security protocols. At this point, the countdown to my departure started from about 1:40pm – again, TSA's staff had 35 minutes to determine if I was a security threat. I was told that a male supervisor who is specially trained is the only person who can actually perform a pat down.

All of the TSA staff whom I met were both professional and polite. Seven agents always lingered nearby understanding and empathizing aloud with my dilemma, asking the same question 'why should it take so long for a supervisor to arrive?' The staff would walkie-talkie the request for a male supervisor but no one arrived. We sent out a message repeatedly every 5 to 7 minutes. In the end, the supervisor arrived only two minutes before my departure time. A female agent started my process, but the male supervisor was the one who actually completed the process. The male supervisor elected to have another male present in a private room, stating that this decision was proper TSA protocol. Needless to say, the actual pat down took 2 minutes but once I was finally cleared, I indeed missed my flight.

Checkpoint TSA Employee: (If Known) (b)(6) Comment : Dear Sir,

My name is (b)(6). My son and I were passengers on Southwest Airline flight #889, which departed from Nashville International Airport on June 30, 2015. My son is seventeen years old. I was cleared through the body scanner at the security checkpoint at Nashville International Airport. However, TSA officer (b)(6) badge (b)(6) asked my son to step aside after he walked through the body scanner. I stood nearby and no one communicated to me the reason for my son being detained. My son asked officer (b)(6) why he was being detained. The officer responded that "the body scanner had detected a groin anomaly" when my son passed through. Officer (b)(6) called on his radio for male assistance. My son asked officer (b)(6) if he could perform the body pat down, since we were trying to get to the flight gate. The officer responded, "no, because of the groin anomaly, a different procedure had to be performed".

We waited for more than twenty minutes and no male assistance arrived. We observed several other male officers in close vicinity, but officer (b)(6) did not ask them for male assistance. Another male officer happened to walk by and officer (b)(6) asked him to perform the pat down. The second officer and my son stepped over to the side. The second officer performed the body pat down and asked my son to remove the contents from his pockets. The items in his pockets were paper currency and cough drops. The second officer swabbed my son's palms and placed the swab in a machine for analysis. The machine returned a negative result, and my son was released.

Caller has paid the $85.00 for the TSA pre. She says she now want to do GE. She says she traveled this week and she wasn't selected for PreCheck and the last two times they checked her body.

Was this the first time she wasn't selected? Yes

When she says check her body did she mean a patdown? Yes

I am writing to file a general complaint about the TSA screening process in terminal 4. I have been reluctant to do so in the past as I can appreciate the need for passenger safety, but after today's experience I felt I had to say something. This operation at Fort Lauderdale Terminal 4 is the only TSA checkpoint at this airport, and in the U.S., where I have problems with the agents improperly touching me and with misidentification of items in my luggage. I have been an airline employee for over 20 years, so my background has been thoroughly checked to be employed in this industry and in addition to that I have TSA Pre check and Global Entry. However, at times when those options are not available, only at Terminal 4 do I receive a rather invasive pat down EVERY time I go through security there. Today they put their hand down the back of my pants without asking me anything and without warning. I'm outraged. I fly over 150 times a year, and often clear TSA at another airport or terminal wearing the exact same clothes the same day with no issue. It makes me wonder if they use the equipment properly at Fort Lauderdale T4? The purpose of this technology is supposed to be so they can see things and not have to touch you - so why is it the reverse here?

If that wasn't bad enough, then the agents only at this checkpoint argued with me that my Surface tablet is a laptop computer. It's not. It's a tablet so it stays in the bag. Always does everywhere else I fly. Only at Fort Lauderdale Terminal 4 does it become an issue. When I fly through other airports or other terminals here - no problem.

The incident above occurred on Thursday, July 2, 2015 at approximately 650pm local time. Three security lanes were open. I was in the one lane where I did not get randomly selected to participate in pre check.

What's wrong with TSA in Fort Lauderdale Terminal 4? Thank you in advance for your assistance in helping me understand why the passengers who use Terminal 4 at Fort Lauderdale should be subjected to substandard treatment.

Re: Abuse by a Transportation Security Officer and obstruction of collection of data to report abuse

The following events occurred 28 June 2015, about 04:50, at Nashville International Airport (BNA).

I had checked in at the American Airlines ticket counter to fly standby on AAL 1264, BNA-DFW, departing at 06:00. My 13-year-old daughter was accompanying me. She had been issued a TSA Precheck standby pass, and I was issued a normal standby pass.

Caller said she called earlier and the person she spoke the lost and found is open today but it is not.

2:46:53
PM

She flew in from Vancouver Canada to PHX and entered screening Terminal 4 Gate B to connect to MCO.

She does not use the machine so she always asks for the Patdown and this time she had to wait for a TSO and they had their items checked first so when she came back and collected her things she did not get her laptop.

She called Lost and Found 10 times already.

She asked me to go over and check on it for her or give her a PH# direct for the TSA checkpoint.

TSA. WAS IT NECESSARY TO DO A FULL SEARCH ON A 75 YEAR OLD WOMAN OR ARE SOME AGENTS JUST PREYING ON THE ELDERLY?

I question if the extensive body search and pat down I received on Tuesday morning, June. 30th was necessary from the Cleveland Hopkins Airport female TSA agent.

I am a 75 year old petite woman weighting 94 pounds traveling with my 80 year old husband.

As a career military family, we both showed our military I D cards as identification to the first TSA agent.

First I was instructed to go through the walk-thru x-ray and then the commands started with the female TSA person telling me to go back out and "stand there" pointing to a very specific spot on the floor. I was then instructed to come into the full body scan. Then I was told that I had numerous spots on the scan and that I needed a full hand search of my body, my arms, wrists, legs and ankles. At one point, I started to lift my T-shirt out from my mid-drift to show her there was nothing there. She yelled "put your shirt down". After the full body search, I thought for certain I was finished.

6:03:40
PM

Then in a very demanding and intimidating voice, she told me to follow her over to another location to where I had to have the palms of my hands scanned.

With that done, I thought I must surely be finished. No, as I took a step to go back over to collect my bag, she said, "You stay right here until I tell you, you can leave".

With my husband and I both being over 75 and the airlines having our profiles, we are routinely placed in TSA Pre-Checked line. Flying to Cleveland, we were TSA Pre-Checked. but not leaving.

I hope that other elderly women such as my self are not picked out to go through such an ordeal. Or are we just easy prey?

With Regards,

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

Madam or Sir,

Today, July 3, 2015, at approximately 3:30 pm, my 11-year old son and I went through TSA security screening near United Airlines checking in terminal C at EWR in New Jersey.

My son, who has a casted broken arm, stepped ahead of me through through the metal scanner, without issue. He moved ahead to wait for me. I was then called through the scanner, which beeped, and I was told to step back through because I had been "randomly chosen by the machine" for a pat down and was pulled aside for further screening. My son stayed on the far side of the scanner. In an effort to stay with my son, I asked if my watch might have triggered the machine and asked if I could just remove it and send it through the scanner so we could stay together. I was told no, that was not an option and I would need to stay where I was on the other side from my child, and wait for a female agent to come and pat me down. I waited, and after a bit of time was then told by a different male agent to walk into a plastic tube/body scanner. I did as he asked and continued looking at him for instruction about proceeding for a pat down. He then told me to put my feet on the yellow foot outlines, which I promptly did. He asked if I had metal in my pockets, I assured him I did not and he stood, just looking at me, and I remained in place, looking at him, waiting for his next instruction. I then asked what I was to do. At that point he loudly yelled at me, asking why I couldn't "just read the instructions right in front of my face" instructing me to raise my arms. I stated that I had had not seen the instructions on the wall of the scanner because I been looking not at the wall, but at him--trying to listen to his instructions. He was clearly furious that I had not somehow realized that my required "pat down by a female agent" was actually a full body scan and then a pat-down. And certainly, no TSA agent shared my concern that I was being delayed and separated from my child. I was then also patted down by a (very polite) female agent, but during this process, I did not know what had happened to my son.

7/4/2015 9:38:28 AM My son (again, age 11), while separated from me, was then approached by a TSA agent and told to come (alone) for additional screening. I was not present and was unaware that this was occurring, and he was not asked where his parent was. He was then questioned, given a separate scan by wand and a pat down of the plaster cast on his broken arm. He stated that the agent was polite but that he was afraid because he did not know what had happened to me, and did not understand what was happening. He was confused because he had cleared the screening but then, while alone and trying to wait for me to reappear, was approached and required to submit to solo, separate questioning and pat-down. He understands the typical security screening process and knew that this had never occurred before and was justifiably alarmed.

My understanding is that both separating a parent and child, and also approaching, questioning and screening a child who has been separated from a parent is against policy and is clearly unacceptable on many levels.

I respectfully request an investigation into this alarming incident and thank you in advance for your reply.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

My daughter is hearing impaired and has flown a number of times and never have we been treated as badly as we were today by a TSA agent named (b)(6) in Portland Oregon!

We have been told since my daughter was five, she is now almost 17, by doctors and the manufacturers of her cochlear equipment to NOT allow her or her cochlear equipment to go through security! (b)(6) very rudely and condescending told me that it was perfectly safe for her to go through security and even put her equipment through the X-ray machine before I approved it!! Telling me that the doctors and manufacturers of her equipment did not know what they were talking about!!! He spoke down to me and my daughter and was trying to make her go through the image machine even though we requested a pat down!! I have never in all my years of traveling been treated so rudely, my daughter was almost in tears and horribly embarrassed!

I will speak with my daughters doctors but I am amazed at how you allow your TSA agents treat people and especially someone with a disability! She was having a hard time understanding what was going on and (b)(6) was totally rude and spoke to her as if she were stupid!! When I asked for his info he told me that his name was (b)(6) and that's all I needed to know....really? Is this how you train your agents? Your website states that you will be accommodating of people with special needs?! Whenever we have traveled before they have searched her equipment bag and patted her down....this was a nightmare! I will hold TSA responsible if there are any problems with her equipment, especially since (b)(6) took it upon himself to put her equipment through the machine! Totally disappointed in this experience! Appalled in how you allow your agents treat a young disabled girl!

Would love to speak to someone in person but the number listed on website is not working! (b)(6)

Dear TSA,

Attached is a recent issue that my elderly father encountered at the Sky Harbor Airport in Phoenix, AZ. It isn't really a complaint as much as it is a request that your staff understand the special needs of the elderly when dealing with them. Thank you so much for your consideration.

I was traveling with my daughter last week. She's 15 and had to have a pat down and have her hands touched by a device. On the return flight she presented a passport in hopes of avoiding another pat-down. She was told she didn't need to take her shoes off to go through security because she was pre-screened. Her boarding pass was marked with a blue marker. She was patted down again.

This process is cryptic and confusing to us and makes me worry that my daughter is being inspected for some unstated purpose or that the lesbian officers want to touch her.

We're doing what we can to comply--not bringing forbidden items to the airport, presenting identification, bagging our contact cleaner and shampoo, taking off our shoes, emptying pockets, letting you xray our bags, and standing in the full body scanner.

It didn't seem normal to me that my daughter would require further screening as she presents no threat. She has autism and doesn't deal with surprises well.

Why did you pat her down and how do we prevent this screening in the future?

(b)(6)

As a passenger and veteran who has defended this county I would like to be able to without the harassment of your employees. I have no problem with security screens but I feel as though I am being harassed when I am asking for human compassion.

7/6/2015 2:25:37 PM On June 15, 2014 I was booked on a flight to fly out of Intercontinental Airport Houston Terminal D. I approached the TSA at approximately 7:25am. I was ordered to stand in the x-ray machine with my hands above my head by black/female employee (b)(6). I have back pain and not able to hold my arms above my head very easy as required with their body x-ray machines. I requested not to be scanned and was fine with a pat down. Officer (b)(6) then made derogatory remarks towards me and announced how I was being non cooperative. As a result TSA went in to full "teach a lesson" mode. I was barefoot and observed TSA was walking around the floor with dirty shoes on. I was told if I wanted a private screening I would have to walk long distance barefoot on the dirty floor exposing me to germs and bacteria. I had no choice but to not have private screening. I was then taken to one area and then another area there. I was ordered to hold my hands above my head again. I cited the back pain and I could not do that for long periods of time. That was when an "alarm" detected some substance on my luggage. The supervisor white/female named (b)(6) threatened to call Houston Police Department on me for not holding my hands above my head. Employee/supervisor (b)(6) then took my identification into a backroom out of my sight and without my consent. I questioned what the charge is. Officer (b)(6) said she is in charge and can do what ever she wants to. I was searched for an hour in perhaps in incentive for me to aggravate my pain in the future and allow x-rays of my body. I requested to speak with (b)(6) supervisor and she said no one will speak with me. I was told by another employee white/male unknown name that they walk with dirty shoes on and it is tough if you have to walk on dirty floor barefoot. I was finally release from detainment at 9:25am.

I have tried to submit this complaint through several web forms at the TSA website, but apparently none of them are working. Please respond to this complaint. I can be reached at (b)(6) or HYPERLINK (b)(6) (b)(6)

I was assaulted by TSA Officer (b)(6)

7/6/2015 2:26:34 PM As I usually do, I opted out of the Rapiscan machines (they re just not safe, but that s a different complaint). I also pointed out that I could not see my bags, which had already gone through the x-ray machine. When I was finally allowed to see my bags, I was presented to Officer (b)(6) who started the usual pat-down. I noticed that he was using a bit more force than usual, but when he reached the inside of my legs, he jammed this hand up my crotch. He repeated this on the other leg. I complained to him, saying he was using much too much force, but he just chuckled. He then proceeded to do the same thing from the other side of each leg, jamming his hand in my crotch.

I've been patted down plenty of times before, and while it is never pleasant, this was way out of line. I do not believe that opting out of the regular screening means that I should get punched in the nuts. Four times.

When I return to New York I will be making inquiring with the local police about filing assault charges against your employee. What he did was far beyond what his duties call for or what he is allowed to do as a TSA employee. Please contact me immediately about this case.

On July 5, 2015 I took my daughter, (b)(6) to PDX in Portland, Oregon to fly to Houston, Texas. My daughter is deaf and wears cochlear implants. She has had these cochlears since she was 5 years old, she is now 16. We have ALWAYS been instructed by (b)(6) doctor and the manufacturer of her cochlear implants to NOT allow (b)(6) for her equipment to go through scanners or x-ray machines. (b)(6) has flown MANY times and this has NEVER been an issue....The TSA agents take her bag of equipment check it, even swab it and they pat my daughter down...very easy!

On July 5, 2015 at approximately 5:15am she headed through security like normal and then we came across (b)(6) he was rude, condescending and very unprofessional and practically had my daughter in tears! (b)(6) was trying to explain to him that her equipment nor herself could go through the machines and he very rudely told her that yes it could. I then intervened and attempted to explain to him that no, the equipment nor (b)(6) could go through the machines and requested that he search the bag and send for a female TSA agent to pat (b)(6) down. I explained to him that we have been told by doctors and the manufacturers of (b)(6) equipment told us not to allow this. (b)(6) proceeded to tell me that (b)(6) doctors, manufacturers of her cochlears or myself knew what we were talking about and put (b)(6) equipment bag through the x-ray machine, WITHOUT my permission! He told me that the doctors nor the manufactures run test on security equipment so they know nothing about his equipment!! I told him he was wrong that we have been specifically ordered not to allow this to happen...again while rolling his eyes he told me that I didn't know what I was talking about and that my daughter was not the only person with cochlears (b)(6) cannot even go down a kids slide because it can mess with the programming of her equipment!! I told him that I wanted his name and badge number and he told me his name was (b)(6) and that's all I needed to know...seriously? How is it that a TSA agent is more knowledgeable about my daughters medical devices than her doctors or the company that makes these cochlears!?????

Is this how you train your TSA agents to handle a person with a disability. There was thousands of dollars worth of equipment in that bag!! I DID NOT give him permission to put that bag through.. (b)(6) continued to try to get my daughter to go through the scanner even though we had requested a pat down, even though I was telling him no. Every time I tried to explain stuff to him he just shook his head and rolled his eyes and spoke down to me like I was a child explaining that I didn't know what I was talking about. I asked more than once for his full name and badge number and all he would say is that (b)(6) was all I needed to know! (b)(6) was having a hard time hearing him and he spoke to her like she was an idiot and continued to shake his Caller was returning from Frankfurt Germany to Newark NJ and while in Newark, Passenger was in a wheelchair due to a previous accident and had a pat down where they took her cain from her not allowing her to go through the AIT machine. She said they removed her coat and it was never returned to her and she also said that they left her purse and other items unattended on the conveyor and anyone could have taken off with her items. She believes it was unnecessary for her to have to remove her outer coat given she was in a wheel chair. Caller is 85 years old Caller has a complaint. They were passing through Atlanta on July 4th at 1215. They got in line at the checkpoint. As they were reaching down to put an item into one of the bins, an employee came by and pushed a table that hit the caller in groin where they had hernia surgery 18 days ago. Caller stated they hadn't even seen that person before being hit with the table. The caller was screaming at the officer that they have to be careful as the office ran back towards the AIT machine.

As he was yelling at the officer she turned and yelled at him to not point his finger at her. He told her that she had to be careful. When he went through the screening technology the same woman told another officer to pat him down. After the pat down the officer told him that he could not talk to her like a dog. Caller went to other officers and found out that the officer was the supervisor at the checkpoint. He was advised to call us by the other officers. Caller is surprised they are not in a hospital.

Complaint: I used a Texas Dpt. Supervisor (b)(6) asked for another form of ID so I showed her my bank debit card. I was allowed to enter security but (b)(6) flagged me for a pat-down even though neither me, nor my belongings, set off any any alarms when checked through scanners. I refused the pat-down for this reason but she told me if I did not agree to it, she was not going to let me through. She told me a pat-down was procedure because I did not have a second form of ID. I told her that I was looking at the TSA website at acceptable forms of ID and my form of ID was acceptable and a second form was not asked for. She told me I was looking at the wrong website. I told her it was TSA and she told me she had done this job for 28 years. She was loud, rude, disrespectful, condescending, and not concerned about reading the TSA website information about ID's. She was not setting a good example for her staff and abused the authority of her position.

What Happened

REASON for the call:

Caller went through TSA today at 7 AM at LAX and was selected for a hand check and her sunscreen set off the ETD and she was required to have a Patdown and all her belongings searched.

It was very embarrassing to her and she almost missed her flight.

She is angry that TSA has signs everywhere about LGAs and nothing about the Explosive trace.

She said take this as an FYI for our suggestion box and warn travel.

Good Morning,

My family and I have travelled through the San Diego airport several time with our infant twin sons and each time it is difficult when it comes to the baby formula being looked at. Per the online instructions the items are required to be scanned and x-rayed. At no point is there specifications that the baby formula s have to be transparent, see through or have a viewing port. This is out of the parents control as this is a decision made by the vendor who makes the product. Every time we have gone through the San Diego airport the TSA agents make a large scene about the factory sealed bottles the formula comes in and the fact it does not allow the liquid to be seen or that we are lucky that the bottle does allow the liquid to be seen. At Christmas time we travelled and I was told I was lucky the liquid was viewable because if it wasn't she would have opened the bottles to check the liquid. Per TSA posted requirements online only when the items cannot be scanned will one of the bottles be opened for examination. Certainly not all them which would cause the entire supply to spoil after the 2 hour expiration after opening. My wife went through the airport yesterday and happened once again and this time the TSA agent gave her grief about the bottles. Her action was to give each member of the party a pat down. Pat downs happen but how is a pat down of the person related to or addressing the issue at hand which is their question with the formula?

I am a medically retired Marine and during that time I served 3 1/2 years on Embassy duty as a Marine Security Guard. We were tasked with maintaining internal security and monitoring the external security as well. I am very familiar with the process and need to scan people and their belongings while going through a security checkpoint. I am very familiar with the equipment used as well. This is why I am confused and interested in the reasoning behind this knee jerk reactions to written standards and personal interpretations of rules. Thank you for your time.

Greetings –

On Friday, July 3, I entered BWI security around 9:15am for a Jet Blue flight to Logan Airport in Boston. The full body scanner registered a false positive around my groin area. This is not the first time this has happened at one of these scanners. The TSA rep saw it and spoke to me sharply. "Go back in there, blue" (I was wearing a blue shirt). Not exactly polite, but I know this is a difficult and monotonous job filled with unappreciative passengers, so I didn't think much of it. I rescanned and the same thing happened.

The last time this happened I was scanned and flagged 3x before the TSA rep elected to do a physical pat down, which was fine. In order to avoid going in yet again this time, I said to the rep "This has happened to me before. It's probably just faster to do a physical pat down."

PM

The rep did a double take, as if he couldn't believe what I just said. "Are you telling me how to do my job?" he questioned aggressively, squaring up to me. I was startled by his response, as I was just trying to be helpful. "No sir," I said. I suspect he said something at this point, although I don't remember what. He didn't make me go into to be scanned a third time, but he did do a physical pat down which can only be described as extremely thorough. I've read online accounts that agents are supposed to scan up until they "meet resistance". I can assure you, resistance was no obstacle for this agent. I've had physicals that were less thorough than this.

He then said "Have you been working outside?"

"No"

"You into pottery?"

"No... I do sometimes cut up beets."

"It doesn't look like beets to me. Your palms are darker than your wrists."

The caller arrived home and his golf club bag is broken, there was an NOI.

Also he has darker skin and he gets pulled out of line every time and he gets a patdown and then put back into line afterwards. This has happened numerous times. He did not get pulled out of line for this particular flight but he did get pulled aside and waved with the metal detector wand.

o Airport: RSW

o Date and approximate time of the experience 06 30 2015

o Description of the experience: He went through the AIT machine, he was pulled aside and waved with the metal detector wand. Normally he has to go through a patdown. He wanted to add that there was a police officer at RSW, the caller greeted him good morning and after that the officers eyes did not leave him. He said he directly stared at him the entire time, even when he was sitting at his gate.

o Names or description of the TSA personnel involved or witnesses, if available: The TSO was a younger black guy who initially pulled him out. The officer was tall, Caucasian, probably 35 or 40 years old.

o Explanation as to how you believe this experience was discriminatory: The caller is French but he looks middle eastern and he is subject to pat downs almost every time. Both his bags were searched and he believes this was not random. He believes the planes delayed departure was due to his bags being searched.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I originally submitted this letter on 5/28/15, but have yet to receive a response.

I am writing to let you know that I believe I was unreasonably detained, searched, unable to maintain physical contact with my child, and disallowed to communicate to my husband during a TSA screen at SFO airport on 5/27/15. My flight was Southwest #4186, SFO to SNA, departing from Gate 28. Scheduled departure was 12:55 PM.

I was wearing my child in a Tula carrier through the security screen. Since I was wearing my 3-year old in a carrier, as per normal and expected procedure, I walked through the metal detector and my hands were swabbed. As I expected, I passed both with no incident, and I proceeded to claim my purse and get my boots and put them back on.

8:02:43

PM

I was still waiting for my laptop backpack to come through the x-ray machine, and since we were running late for our flight (it was 12:30 PM, and the flight was scheduled to depart at 12:55 PM), my husband went ahead to the gate to let them know I would be following shortly. I continued to wait for my bag and I was still wearing our 45 pound 3-year old in a carrier.

As it turns out, for the first time in all my years of traveling, I had forgotten to remove my netbook from my backpack. When I requested to know what was happening, I was abruptly informed that my laptop back pack was "concerning." As a result of that, I was informed that I needed to take my child off of me, remove the Tula carrier, and undergo a full body pat down. The moment my son's feet hit the ground, and before I could claim his hand, he wandered off across the aisle. I moved to retrieve him and was told that I couldn't. Fortunately, I was able to verbally coax him back to me. However, as you are undoubtedly aware, during a full pat down, holding someone's hand is not allowed. So I was physically unable to keep my son close, and so I was understandably very anxious about him wandering off again.

While I was being patted down in an area around the corner from my stuff (unable to clearly see what was happening) TSA agents proceeded to remove everything from both my laptop backpack and my purse, even though it was only my laptop backpack that had caused the concern. After inspecting every item from both bags, they then sent the items through the x-ray machine again.

My husband had no idea what was going on, as he had gone ahead to the gate before any of this happened, so I respectfully asked the TSA agent if I could text or call my husband using my cell phone (which was in my purse that they had dumped out), I was rudely and abruptly told, "No." (I learned later that he had been trying to call me non-stop, but I was not allowed to answer my phone.) When I asked if the same TSA agent could have someone call the gate to let them (and my husband know) what was going on, I was rudely told, "No." When I asked if I could put my boots back on (since they were done inspecting me), I was rudely and abruptly told, "No." When I asked if I could put my child back on me in the carrier to help keep him close and from wandering, I was rudely and abruptly told, "No." When I asked if they could assist me by getting a cart to take me to the gate, I was told they have no carts. When I asked a second agent about the cart, the first agent I had previously asked rudely interrupted, and said in an insulted tone, "I already TOLD you, we have no carts."

Fortunately, Southwest's flight crew were far kinder than your TSA agents that day and they held the plane for me and my son. They also reprinted the boarding passes for me and my son, because the way the TSA agent crammed all the items back

Caller feels as though her husband's (b)(6) screening was unnecessary.

7/8/2015 This occurred yesterday around 310pm, at LGA.
10:32:36 Her husband has knee replacements in both knees and is 85 years old.
AM They kept trying to tell the officer that they were in a hurry and about to miss their flight, but he did not care.

Her husband had to undergo a complete patdown even after letting the officer know about the knee replacements.
The caller wanted to file a complaint regarding screening at the Jackson, MS airport. She had PreCheck, went through the metal detector, then they patted her down. She stated they did not tell her why she got a patdown and only that it was random. She stated that there were 3 women in a row chosen for a patdown and the men did not. She was upset because she was told it was random, but she thinks they only selected her because she is a female.

Caller was just at BOI and His 11 year old daughter use the AIT for her screening. Once she used the AIT they then gave her a patdown. He ask for them to allow her to use the WTMD after the AIT since there was an alarm and they wouldnt allow her to do it instead of getting a patdown. He says the rule states she doesn t have to use the AIT and should be allowed to use the WTMD.

Caller is not sure which precheck he wants to do. His wife is a citizen of the US but is from Columbia. She sometimes gets caught in the system. She had applied for redress. She gets offended when she gets selected for patdowns. He is trying find out which program is best for expedited screening. They miss flights sometimes because they are pulled aside for an hour and then talk to them for 30 seconds and let them go. Her Redress number does not seem to be helping. He was going to have me look up her RCN to see if it is correct but he could not access it at the time.

Caller was flying from DTW yesterday on flight # 5209 on US Airways. Caller was in a wheelchair, and she went through the PreCheck line for screening. Caller was using the AIT, and it alarmed. Caller did inform the TSO that she has metal implants, but the TSO was belligerent. The TSO told another man that they would need to get the hand cuffs twice during the caller s screening. The TSO did a patdown, and when patting down the chest area, the TSO placed her fingers under the caller s undergarments while still on the outside of the shirt. Caller s shirt was also lifted, and the TSO placed her fingers between the caller s body and the waist band. Caller feels humiliated. The TSO that conducted the screening was a Caucasian female with dark hair. The TSO also wore dark rimmed glasses.

Special Notes: Caller asked that if she is contacted and does not answer, to please leave a message.

REASON for the call: There was an alarm of the screening technology. The TSO (male, 5 10, 215-220 pounds, mid 20s, short black hair that was combed back, appeared Italian) asked where he was traveling to in an authoritative tone (insinuating that he had no rights) and if he was flying home. The caller stated that the officer only asked him this because of his race and that the officer s questioning had racial overtones. He received ETD sampling of his and a patdown. The TSO squeezed his left testicle as hard as possible and it still hurts. He indicated that his insurance would cover his doctor s visit.

He asked where to make a proper complaint as state police advised that he contact TSA because they could not address this. He asked what law enforcement entity to contact and indicated that the TSO would hear from his attorney.

In a separate complaint, a TSO (white, male, 6 feet, 250 pound, balding) asked his the px before him his age. The px replied 14 and was directed to the WTMD. He asked the same of his son who is 14 as well. The TSO directed him to the AIT and asked if he had anything in his pockets. He feels that this was done because of how his son looks (his mother is Spanish and he, the father is Greek).

Nick set off alarms when he didn't check his bag that contained his favorite Crest Cool Mint Gel toothpaste and a bottle of shampoo. So after a TSA Team screened, scanned and patted him down, they escorted him to the Southwest counter to check in his bag. Then they escorted him back to the TSA check point where he had temporarily misplaced his drivers license and they began the entire process all over again; scanned, screened and patted down in public. Nick told me that, "They ran their hands up and down my legs and squeezed my balls." His brother, a business man carrying a back pack through TSA Pre-Approved, had tried to tell the TSA Officers that his brother had a disability and he was told to back away and they called two policemen. Southwest called their names and (b)(1) went to the gate to tell the airline that his brother was being detained by TSA Security. Today I traveled from Ft. Myers to Newark. I am a 68 year old white woman who is profoundly hearing impaired. I wear two behind the ear aids which are quite large and I also read lips. My audiologist as well as the hearing aid manual warns that airport security x rays can be harmful to the workings of the aid. When I travel I always tell the TSA security that I can go through the metal detector and not the x-ray. It is always a problem and I have been extremely patient in waiting for a pat down as I have never been accommodated on my request.

Last year on my trip from Newark I had to wait over 20 minutes for a pat down when the metal detector was there and being used for wheel chair people, children and parents. I was not permitted to use it. When the pat down finally happened my things were far ahead of me including my purse. Fortunately I was with my husband that time and he could get them before they were stolen. The pat down completed and the glove test had a mal function and rang off. I didn't hear the ringing and began to walk away only to be arm escorted to a room for interrogation. After 20 minutes, the test was done again and it was fine. Everyone on my flight was looking with great interest wondering if they had to fear my boarding. It was just one of many of the horrors I have had because I am profoundly deaf.

9:04:34
PM

Today, however, I requested the metal detector which was available and allowing the same groups to enter through at my check station. I was addressed rudely by an officer telling me I don't ask-they tell me what to do. A woman in front of me with a small dog and two grown daughters asked if she could use the metal detector and he promptly allowed her to pass. I had to wait again for a pat down when I can pass easily through a metal detector. I am not asking you for special privileges but I do expect as a tax paying American citizen with a severe handicap that I get at least the courtesy that a dog has been given. It is simply a matter of both machines being used and available at the same check point and allowing a person with a hearing aid to use the metal detector.

Your information stipulates that a pat down is necessary only if a person refuses both. I am only given one choice and then a pat down. It is more efficient and certainly less stressful for the passenger that they be permitted the metal detector when it is available and being used as well. In the many times I have traveled I can think of only a few times that both were not available.

Unfortunately your interpretation of the facts are distorted.

I was asked to remove my belt before entering the scanning booth, at no time did I struggle with holding my shorts up. After exiting the booth, I still had no trouble with my shorts. Then your agent informed me he needed to do a PAT down. He was aggressive with the pat down, and pulled my shorts down. It was from that point forward that I was unable to keep my shorts up.

Also you failed to mention that the agent laughed at me, and immediately walked away to socialize with the other agents while I was struggling to keep my pants up, and maintain my composure.

(Again) I feel I was illegally searched, and victimized by your agent. I am not an expert, but I feel that if a search was needed which involved the removal of my shorts, then I should have been informed, so I may be prepared, and given the opportunity to have the search completed in private instead of in front of all the other passengers.

Also, you did not make mention of ANY corrective action. Therefore I feel the agent will continue this behavior, and continue these illegal searches.

Please remember we are not cattle which are being herded through the check point. We are human, with real human emotions. Your agent disrespected me, embarrassed me, and showed no compassion or remorse.

I will await your response.

Which U.S. airport were you traveling through?

Newark Liberty International Airport

Dear Sir/Madam,

I recently traveled through the Denver, CO airport and my experience with a TSA screening agent was alarming to me. I am a type 1 Diabetic on pump therapy and was warned by the manufacturer of my insulin pump to NEVER allow the pump through any x-Ray or Body scanner as they could damage the pump. I explained this to the TSA agent at the Denver airport, yet he insisted that I walk through the body scanner with my pump on. To date, I am thankfully not experiencing issues with the workings of my insulin pump. However, it states on your official website that I am allowed to request a pat-down in lieu of the scanner due to the use of an insulin pump. This screener refused to accept my request for the pat-down and risked my life by forcing me through the body scanner. If my pump had failed, I could have ended up with life threatening conditions.

The whole point of the TSA is to save lives, not endanger them, is it not? I was given the impression that this agent did not want to take the time to process me differently than the rest of the travelers in line as a pat-down is extra work for the agents. My traveling companion was visually disabled and in a wheelchair – she became a bit upset as the agent argued with me and we were briefly separated. We had emphatically stated that we were not to be separated because she couldn't see well enough to find me either.

In comparison, I'd like to point out that the TSA staff at Charlotte/Douglas airport in North Carolina were extremely accommodating to us both – gave me my requested pat-down without any fuss and allowed my blind companion to remain with me the entire time I was being processed separately. The staff in Denver would learn a LOT from the professionals in Charlotte.

We were processed through the Denver airport on Sunday, June 28th around 10:30AM in the morning. We came through Charlotte on the 24th of June with no such complications.

I belong to a support group for Diabetics on pump therapy, and not surprisingly several other Diabetics have had similar experiences with the Denver airport – two had pump failures after being forced through the body scanner. This is a major concern for us Diabetics. The pumps cost around $6,000.00 and basically keep us alive. It should be our choice to have a pat-down in lieu of the body scanner in order to preserve our medical device and our well being. Period. Please reinforce this fact with your TSA screeners at the Denver airport.

My device is by Medtronic and here are their instructions for screening: <http://www.medtronicdiabetes.com/customer-support/traveling-with-an-insulin-pump-or-device>

I notified the screener that I was wearing a pump, did not wish to remove it and wanted a pat-down. He insisted that I could go through the body scanner with my pump because 'he did this all of the time with no problems'. Well he's not a Diabetic on pump therapy, so how does he truly know?? He refused to allow me to have a pat-down. Being stressed already, my only fault in the encounter was not insisting on speaking to a supervisor – but I suspect that this fellow wouldn't have complied with that request either.

My mailing address is:

Troutman, NC 28166

I hope that the Denver screeners can be better trained in dealing with Diabetics in future. I will not fly through this airport again myself as I am not willing to risk my life over the security screening process.

Caller has precheck. She had knee replacement surgery and has metal in her knee. She thinks she needs something in writing. She still has to receive patdowns. She would like to know if this is avoidable.

To-Whom-It-May-Concern,

I am emailing to inform you about an incident that occurred as I was traveling last week which caused me both physical and mental harm.

To preface this incident: I have been diagnosed with Complex Regional Pain Syndrome originating in my left foot/ankle and have an implanted spinal cord stimulator to manage my chronic pain. While traveling, I always carry a medical card that informs people about my medical implant and that it may set off security sensors.

On Thursday July 2, my companion and I traveled from the Philadelphia International Airport (PHL) to Las Vegas (LAS) on Southwest flight 118 with an eventual destination of Portland (PDX) on Southwest flight 1874. We passed through the Philadelphia Security checkpoint at approximately 5:30 AM.

As I passed through security, I took off my shoes and kept my ankle-length socks on. I placed my shoes, bags, and computer on the x-ray machine conveyor belt. I entered the AIT unit as instructed by a male TSA Agent located on the other side of the unit. After the scan completed, I stepped out of the unit and waited on the footprint icons in front of a female TSA Agent. As I waited, the female TSA agent said my foot triggered the AIT. I could see the screen to my left which highlighted my left foot/ankle. Then, without consent, asking permission, or informing me of his actions, the male TSA agent bent down diagonally behind me and grabbed my left ankle region. This caused immediate pain as any pressure, especially without warning, can trigger crippling nerve pain. I also immediately experienced great anxiety and panic due to that pain. There was no opportunity to tell him to be careful because he grabbed my ankle from behind, surprising me and did not ask if I consented to a pat-down.

I exited the screening area and walked to the conveyor belt to collect my belongings. I started to collect my things, still in pain and panic but wanting to remove myself from the area to collect myself and try to calm down. I told my companion what had just occurred and then went to both the female and then the male TSA agents to inform them that I have a serious medical condition and that they need to ask consent before touching anyone as they may have a medical condition like mine. Both agents acknowledged my complaint but with nothing more than a nod and a few words. Neither asked me if I needed medical attention.

Airport: Tampa

Date and time: July 10th 7:45 or 7:50pm

Experience: Caller is at the airport and said that two TSA supervisors. Caller is at the Tampa both STSO (b)(6) and STSO (b)(6) Caller went through the AIT, caller is african american and she has dreadlocks but it has no pins in it at all. She stated they all say there are anomalies. Caller stated she did not want them going through her hair, she stated white women had caps on and were never stopped at all. Caller believes they are racial profiling. She told them they were not allowed to go through her things without her permission and they werent allowed to go through it until they were private.

The police officer that was called was (b)(6). She finally decided that she would go through it changed the entire thing and said they did not remember where the anomalies were so she had to go through the full body patdown. Caller stated she was not disruptive and she did not cuss or scream at anyone.

Names or description of people involved: STSO (b)(6) and STSO (b)(6) and (b)(6) at the Tampa Airport police Department

Explanation as to why it was discriminatory: Because she was seeing Caucasian males and females with ball hats on and they were never even stopped and they never were asked to go through the AIT they all just zoomed through the WTMD.

REASON for the call: Caller went through the check point and she experienced additional screening and she got a pat down. An older man came over and talked to her as well. They took everything out of her suit case and they asked her to turn on her phone and her ipad. She said that there were 5 armed TSA agents and she was very upset and someone and then after she got through the check point someone followed her. she said that it bothered her that they continued to watch her.

The purpose of this email is to seek reimbursement for damage to my wallet. This damage occurred during screening for entry into BWI for my Southwest flight 2898 to Portland ME at 1115.

The damage was caused by an employee who excessively stretched the seams of my wallet. I originally did not notice the damage to my wallet but reported the poor and confrontational attitude of the TSA employee. I did not get the name of the employee but would describe him as a 25-30 year old African American male, 5'8", working on the TSA pre-check lane.

7/11/2015 10:57:43 AM After screening and my complaint I proceeded to purchase an item from the Jamba Juice immediately in front of the exit to the screening area. While paying for my item, I noticed the damage to my wallet and immediately notified a TSA supervisor. This supervisor provided me this email to process my claim.

The wallet was in my pocket as I processed screening. As I was going through the Pre check line, I was re routed through the body scanner system vice the metal detecting system. I forgot about the wallet and thereby triggered a pat down search. During the search, the above described individual found my wallet. He confronted me about why I had the wallet. When I tried to explain he cut me off and said that is should be clear that a wallet is not allowed.

He then proceeded to search through my wallet by inserting his thumb and forefinger into every compartment. My wallet is a billfold credit card holding wallet and is not designed to have much space. It is a slim design. When the individual started stretching the wallet, I asked him to take care to not damage it, as it was clear that his fingers wouldn't fit. He stated that he had to search the wallet and proceeded to make a point of reinserting his fingers into the tight compartments of the wallet.

The damage and design of the wallet are shown in the attached pictures.

The wallet retails for approximately $600.

Caller said she recently went through DEN with tanning cream on accident in her carry on and they wouldn't allow her to check it once she realized it although she had plenty of time and she said it is called fake bake and can only be bought by someone with a cosmetology license and it is very expensive and she did not want it thrown away. She said it was a brand new bottle and had not been opened and she wants it back. She said she arrived in a wheelchair and had to have a pat down and they used the front of her hand at DEN and at TPA. She said she asked for their names and they turned their badges over and she said the only info she got was the guy who assisted her through the checkpoint as a wheelchair attendant and he was worried because he also spoke up at the checkpoint as she had but he knew the employees. His name is (b)(6) with Airport Services. She said they had their hands on her breast and her vagina and she asked if they were supposed to use the back of their hands if they have to do that in front of everyone because it was humiliating. She was upset because her dad is in the hospital and he is 92 with an aneurism and she thought he was going to die and she said some of her medications were missing from multiple bottles but the bottles were there. She said the TSO's at DEN were power crazy and mistreated her and even the wheelchair attendant knew that. She said she also had a bottle of water and they took the tanning cream and didn't take the full bottled water even after she brought it up to them.

Hello,

I recently walked through TSA at my local San Antonio airport and was treated like a common thief. I am five months pregnant and obviously showing. While standing in line, I was "randomly chosen" to receive a hand swab out of all of the people in my line. As I proceeded through the line, I requested to go through the metal detector because I don't feel comfortable walking through the X-ray machine. I know everyone thinks there is no radiation, but I don't believe that and thought it was my right to request another form of screening. While TSA chose who could go through the metal detector, he told me my only option was a "pat-down." He then told me rudely that the ground I was standing on had more radiation than the X-ray machine, which is not true. He gave me such a hard time about kindly requesting to opt-out, making me feel as though I didn't even have a choice. As people walked by me went through the metal detector. I simply asked why I could not just walk through that. I was told by this rude TSA worker that the line next to me was only for "preferred flyers." Finally he shouted loudly for someone to do a manual pat-down on me. Again, making me feel like a thief for wanting to protect my unborn baby from any unnecessary radiation that X-rays contain. The X-rays used for screening have not been around enough to be properly tested in this area and I should have the right to opt-out without being treated as though I am a criminal.

When I traveled to South Korea, Singapore, and Indonesia recently, I was given incredible treatment as a pregnant woman. They believe that it is a special and difficult time in life for a woman. Because of this belief, they treat such women as they do persons over the age of seventy, those who have physical handicaps, etc. I am extremely disappointed in your system and how there is no preference shown to women who are pregnant in the same way.

I am requesting that pregnant women be added to the "preferred flyers" group. I cannot understand why we are not already on the list. I would also appreciate if you could pass this along to your workers as I was incredibly kind, but firm and was treated rudely and disrespectfully. If I have a choice, I should not be questioned thoroughly and told that I don't know what radiation is.

Thank you,

Caller just returned from FLL. His checked suitcase was inspected and there was an NOI present. His bag was locked. He wants to know why his bag was opened and how it was opened, since it was locked. He wanted to know if the inspection had anything to do with his screening at the checkpoint. He said the notice has JCS #1 FLL on it. He said they took 2 different airlines.

He said his wife was wearing a blouse with unusual eyelets and she had to have a patdown inspection and he wanted to know why. He said they wanted to do the patdown in public and she objected to it, she eventually had a private screening but it was not initially offered. He thinks it is not right for a woman to have her breast and groin area patted down in public and not be offered a private screening. This took place at FLL on 7.10.15. They were flying on Southwest.

He was placed to the side and was asked to do a private patdown, he received a semi pat down. He was okay with the pat down. The officer went out of the view to the other side of the regular xray machine and screened the bag. The was handed back and packed for him by the officer. There the TSO told the passenger that the tools were over the 7 inches and were not allowed on the carry on. He was asked to view the tools and the officer did not show the measurements of the tools. When he got on the plane to pull out tablet out from his carry on. It was not there. The item (the tablet) was gone. The only items left from the tablet were the headphones and charger for the tablet. The TSO officer was very unprofessional to the passenger, he made the passenger feel violated and verbally abused.

Lastly, the caller wanted to compliment that I was a very professional and I serviced him well.

I didn't have a problem with a pat down. I didn't have a issue with being pulled aside. I have never complained about TSA because it is your job to do that. Sweet. But this time it has gone WAY too far this time. I am thoroughly unamused with this. This is completely unacceptable. I brought back cookies from my grandpa and they are crushed and there are crumbs EVERYWHERE in my bag. All of my nicely packed items are EVERYWHERE. I have traveled at least once every month or two and this is insane. There is e-cig juice all over my clothes. Probably ruining some shirts and pants. Is this normal? What happened: My husband and I checked our bags at the Southwest counter (flight 4020), then went to the security checkpoint to the left of the counter. We went through the far left lane of the security checkpoint. I have autism, and have a fear of the new imaging technology, and therefore cannot go through those machines. I informed the man who was at the machine that I could not go through that machine. He called for a female agent to do a pat-down, which I have done twice before (once in Denver last May, and once in Detroit on this trip). I waited until they found somebody to do it, and she came and led me to the area with tables just past the main screening area. It was very loud, with large fans running. Apparently she asked me how I was doing, but I did not hear her. The first thing I heard her say to me was I SAID, how are you doing? in a very annoyed and rude tone. I told her that I have autism, and it was very loud and I was not doing well. She asked where my bags were, and I pointed to my husband, who had my bags, and told her that my husband had them. She did not offer to have him accompany me to be screened, but took me away from him to the area with the tables. She then started talking very fast, and between her thick accent and all of the noise, and her saying a lot of words at once, I could not process what she was saying. I told her that I could not understand her, that I had autism, and that it was very loud. She responded with a harsh tone, and said something about yelling at me. I was wearing jeans, socks, a belt, and a t-shirt. She had me take off my belt, and gave it to a younger white male who took it away. I told her several times that I could not understand her, and I finally told her to just go ahead and screen me, even though I could not understand what she was saying, because I was familiar with the process. But she did not do it like I have experienced before. She made me lift up my shirt, exposing part of my back and stomach, and then she felt around my waistband. She was very rough through the whole pat-down, and it hurt when she jerked my pant legs around my ankles. The younger man came back with my belt and handed it to me, and then she took it from me and yelled something (I don't know if she was yelling at me or the man). When she finally let me go, I was near tears, and just wanted to get away from her and all of the noise. I did not think to get her name or find a supervisor at that time, because I was overwhelmed. I am not sure if everything that I am describing is all in chronological order, because it was very upsetting and I was having trouble processing what was going on. My husband guided me to our gate, where I tried to recover, which took over an hour before I calmed down and stopped wanting to cry. We got to our gate a little after 6:00 pm. so we were probably in the security checkpoint sometime between 5:30 and 6:00, but I am not sure exactly when.

Who: The lady who did the pat-down. She was a larger black woman with a thick accent (maybe Caribbean?). She used the word blouse instead of t-shirt.

Witnesses: The younger male who took my belt. My husband was there, but was not close enough to hear what was said.

I would like a response.

Caller has a complaint about the way she was treated on July 4th at Bradley International. The TSO made her miss her flight due to the fact that they questioned her identification. They gave her the same gender pat down and she felt like it was too much. (b)(6) indicated that they touched her private area and breasts inappropriately. After they searched her, she was embarrassed.

Detailed description of the experience: I was flying from Detroit to Spokane, WA, via Seattle. Traveling alone, I was wearing a zip up t-shirt with a camisole, jeans, and flat canvas slip on shoes.

I completed the metal detector scan successfully, but was randomly selected for additional screening. After about a 5 minute wait, a TSA agent checked her paperwork and found that the random screening assigned for the day would be a manual examination from the waist down. The agent asked if I was OK have her pat me down with the back of her hands in public, and I said is there a choice? She did not answer, and asked me to step to the side, in clear view of others who were exiting the scanner. She pulled up my shirt and rubbed the backs of her hands down my front side from my belly button to my pubic bone. She then moved the palms of her hands down my backside and up under my buttocks. Finally, she asked me take a wider stance and wrapped both of her hands around the top of my left leg, with her fingers touching my vagina, and ran her hands down my leg. She repeated this on my right leg, again starting with her fingers touching my vagina.

This is the second similar incident at DTW. With the first incident, I was also selected for random screening, which on this date meant going through the scanner instead of the metal detector. I had metal sparkles on the pockets of my jeans and on the right front of my blouse, which triggered the machine to flag me for additional screening. I had a similar pat down (by a female TSA agent) of my rear end and legs, and the agent also put her hands on and around my right breast. While the male agent said that the machine had obviously flagged me for the decorations on my apparel, the female agent told me that it was necessary for her to touch these body parts.

REASON for the call: Caller s daughter (b)(6) was at LAX boarding the plane and went through security and two TSOs were looking her up and down and leering at her and said they should have patted her down. She said that was an inappropriate thing to say to her and the TSO said they pat them down all the time. That is sexual harrasrment and she went to the manager and he smirked at her and said they have to do patdowns sometimes. They could have apologized to her but they continued to behave in a child like fashion. I am writing due to an event which occurred yesterday at the lax airport as I arrived from Australia and was headed for a domestic flight on AA1076.

I am in a wheelchair at times due to mitochondrial myopathy. Unfortunately it often renders me unable to walk through your scanners. As I was being patted down in the wheelchair I was harrassed into moving every part of my body and lifting myself with my arms off the bottom of the wheelchair. My feet were moved, my muscles were groped in a way that from the knees down rendered me completely unable to move them even after taking the maximum amount of medication allowed for my condition. American then had to go through the extra steps of trying to transport me onto and off of the plane in this deteriorated condition. As soon as the main flight attendant, (b)(6) saw me she knew there was an issue and something had happened. The flight crew did what they could for me during the flight with the limited resources they have to work with. It is your agent that has done this. I sit here the next day at 8:44am Boston time unable to move my legs from the knees down still. Your agent along with her boss were extremely aggressive and have left me in a position where I need to be seen by my doctor today for assistance with my condition.

I went through 10 airports on this trip from Boston to Cairns, to Sydney to Brisbane and never came close to this level of aggression. I have traveled within the United states extensively since 9/11 and never had this level of aggression. I would like to know when you started treating wheelchair passengers like criminals? We are in wheelchairs for a reason and generally that has something to do with our mobility and in some cases neurological problems. When did this behavior become okay? I would just like to prepare myself for next time, I'd like your suggestion as to how to do this or what doctor you know of that treats mito patients who may have better suggestions for the spasms which will ensue and the pain and agony that go along with it and then the complete lack to carry myself anywhere. I'd really like an answer to this. Because, perhaps you know more about my condition than I do.

Comment : As a weekly business traveller with BLI as my home airport, I go through a lot of security screenings. I'm sorry to say that the BLI airport consistently performs well below my experience with nearly every other airport I frequent in the US on a number of measures.

7/14/2015 1. Bag searches. This airport regularly searches my bags after X-ray- about 50% of the time. These searches are triggered by common items like speakers, power supplies, pens, small projectors, etc. which consistently make it through security at other airports. I think the enhanced bag search area at much larger airports like SFO, SAN, SEA are not as busy as at BLI.

2. Procedure/professionalism: is it procedure to empty out 50% of someone's personal belongings in their carry-in on a table in plain view of other travellers? Why are elderly disabled passengers with canes and can barely stand going through the body scanner, then standing unassisted for a pat-down without being offered a seat? Both these events occurred just this morning. I have also been singled out for a "random screening" after complaining of the slow line (over 20 minutes to get 15 passengers through Security).

3. No pre-check lane: many of not most airports this size and volume offer a pre-check lane.

I feel many these issues are related to inexperience and that more training may be helpful. Thank you!

REASON for the call: He presented a temporary driver s license at the checkpoint and was pulled aside for additional screening by TSO (b)(6) who advised that he was subject to additional screening as his ID was not acceptable. The caller advised that the additional screening would not happen and requested a supervisor and the supervisor s superior. STSO (b)(6) responded and did not advise of her superior.

He asked if he can film the interaction between himself and a TSA employee. The supervisor and TSO advised that he couldn t take photos of them or their badges and that he could not take their badge number.

The caller presented other ID with his name (his VA Non Resident Conceal Carry Permit with his photo and a credit card with his name. He was advised that he had to undergo additional screening. He requested a private screening and that other TSOs conduct the screening. His female companion accompanied him during the private screening. He requested a police officer and was advised that he was not permitted to do so and that only TSA conducts screening.

He indicated that he was groped during the patdown.

He was cleared through screening.

He was advised by the STSO that the ID policy is confidential when he asked what the policy is in regard to acceptable ID. He indicated that a temporary license is a State issued ID as indicated on the list of acceptable ID on tsa.gov.

He asked if he would be contacted by the CSM and a contact number for follow up if he doesn t hear from them.

The caller was most upset that his temporary license wasn t acceptable and feels that it should be because it can be scanned and has security features. He has flown from NH and BOS with the temporary license. He is upset that he had to go through additional screening.

TSO (b)(6) conducted the patdown, TSO (b)(6) was training and ran the ETD swab to the machine during the patdown screening. He was advised that TSO (b)(6) was training.

Caller tested false positive for explosives, because he was carrying his dog which had urea on it, which caused a patdown and carry on items. He told the TSO he did not want to be touched. The TSO told him he has to conduct a patdown. He said no one touches him at home and he felt that they should not have been allowed to touch him there. He also touched his genitals. He said he rubbed the genitals and he feels that this violates his human rights.

He wants to write the new administrator and asked how to spell his name and he wanted to confirm the address.

officer proceed to rub my hand with what appeared to me to be a small piece of paper towel. He then rubbed my hands and fingers. Then is put this small item in a machine. He did this procedure again. Then he asked for a Supervisor. I then asked him what the problem was which he did not answer. After a short time a Female officer appeared and then another. One stated that there was only one Supervisor on duty, she then walk away, but she returned and asked what the problem was. The attending officer told her I had GUN POWER on my hand, but non on my purse or book bag. DURING THIS PROCESS MY PERSONAL ITEMS WERE STILL ON THE CONVEYER BELT, which was still moving with other customers items on it. I asked the officer to please remove my personal items, but he told me that no one would take them, but his back was to the belt. It would have been easy for someone to take my purse with all my money and ID off of that belt and not one of those officer would have been aware. This also happen at the Chicago Midway Airport upon my departure. Back to the security pat down in Orlando. The officer explained what she was about to do. I know this is a procedure to ensure our safety, I STILL DID NOT LIKE THIS. I have to give it to this officer she explained everything she was going to do and SHE WAS VERY GENTILE. I did not feel uneasy. I noticed that the officers do not change their gloves between customer when they are doing this task. THAT SHOULD BE A MUST. This officer could have transferred this gun power from a previous customer. So in the future when and if I have go thru this procedure again, I WILL ASK THE TSA OFFICER TO PUT ON A CLEAN PAIR OF GLOVES.

I have never in my 78 years, own a gun, held a gun, seen one in person or fired a gun. So, How could GUN POWER GET ON MY HANDS, unless the TSA officer had some on his glove and it was transferred from the gloves, DONT YOU THINK? It did not come from my hands because I HAVE NEVER HELD OR FIRED A GUN, EVER.

I arrived at DFW Tuesday 7/7/15 at approximately 4:03 AM per the ticket at the entrance of the airport. Parked at Gate 7 Level B, when I went in the airport I was advised I had to take the Terminal Link to the correct terminal. When I arrived at the correct terminal I checked my luggage and proceeded towards the line for security. I showed the TSA agent my boarding pass and my driver's license, I was advised because my boarding pass had b but my driver's license just had b a supervisor would need to be called to verify my ID. I stated the flight was booked through the travel agent my employer uses and they use my full name but I use my middle name. After waiting what seemed to be close to 10 minutes a TSA agent (maybe a TSA supervisor) approached me. I showed her my credit card had b but my Medicare A card had b I advised her I have always been called by my middle name b but my employer uses my full name which is b I was asked to step in the machine for them to view. "NOTHING was found"! The TSA agent told me that I would need to have a pat-down. at that time I told her "I really don't want to board the plane with all of this"! However, since it was my employer that paid for the flight I did agree to the pat-down only if it was done in a private area. I also stated as soon as I get my cell phone back I would call my employer to advise them of what I am going through because they use my full name. I was on the verge of crying! I was humiliated, horrified, violated and totally embarrassed by everything I had to go through. She even put her hands in the waist band of my jeans, in addition to feeling everything that I consider extremely private. All of the passengers were gawking at me before we went in a tiny room. I had to walk barefoot across the floor nothing was provided to me to protect my bare feet from the nasty floor that everyone walks on. I told everyone I came in contact with what TSA put me through total strangers, family, friends and co-workers. I got very little sleep Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday night due to the horrific ordeal I was put through and the fear I would have to go through the same process again, as per the TSA agent at DSW! And I got very little work done due to what took place Tuesday morning and very little sleep.

Flight DL5724 Seat 12 C:

When I returned from CA and after I retrieved my luggage I was almost out of DFW airport "the same TSA agent followed me to strike up a conversation. She asked "how was your trip", I stated fine and all I had to do was show them my company picture ID with my full name. Of course I showed the TSA agent at LAX my divers license too. My boss suggested I see if the company picture ID with my full name would work and it did. I had the same ID in my purse on Tuesday but I did not think to show the TSA agent. However, when the TSA agent was checking the contents of my purse surely she saw it. Why was the TSA agent so upset because I did not have a pat-down for the return flight? She asked what airport I flew out of for the return trip "and" who my employer is. Why does the TSA agent need my employer information? After my 2nd encounter with the same TSA agent (maybe a supervisor) I feel threatened by her! Why did she chase me down to put salt in the open wounds from Tuesday? REASON for the call: Caller has recently went through security screening and wants to know when you have global entry and are passing Tsa PreCheck and you go through the screening and everything is clear, what is the next procedure?

Caller states that the Seattle airport they completely cleared her through the WTMD and the AIT and then she had her carry-on go through, when she came out of AIT and she went to wait for her bag to come out of the machine and they told her they need to open it and they started looking and they did not find anything. She offered to help them look if they would tell her what she was looking for. Officer told her to let them do their job and they would not let her know why they were looking and what they were looking for. It was cleared, then they asked for her purse and they did not find anything and they called two other people to check her bags again. The supervisor put everything through the machine a third time.

Caller also states that she was subjected to additional screening such as a thorough pat down, where they started at her hips and they touched her hips forcefully and caused her to lose her balance. At that point the caller states that the TSO asked her could she not stand up straight and she told the TSO performing the pat down that she was 69 years old. The TSO said that she did not tell anyone that she had any issues.

She saw that a baseball hat was not there and neither was her sunglasses weren't there once she got her bags back. Caller mentioned her nationality but did not indicate that this was why she was subjected to the additional screening. Caller wants to know if she asks what they are looking for, do they have to tell her?

7/14/2015 4:48:26 PM The caller is calling with a complaint. He is traveling out of Las Vegas International airport on terminal 1 at the Egate yesterday at 1 p.m, and asked for a pat down instead of going through the AIT machine. The caller states that no one was watching their bags or the trays going through the screening machine. He stated that no one was paying attention to the luggage and he witnessed someone s Luggage be stolen.

7/14/2015 4:50:42 PM
Caller is an airport employee at MIA and she called to complain that they are randomly doing pat downs and during that they will touch a passengers butt. Sometimes they go through and ask for ID, sometimes they will send her through X-Ray, and she said that sometimes it is ETD or a Pat-Down. She said that it has gotten bad since TSA had 67 out of 70 tests they did not pass and it was aired on the news. She said the TSO (b)(6) patted her down out of random on 04-13-15 and she touched her butt. She said it is uncomfortable and that she was the only one to complain about the new procedures in place.

She was having to go through a pat down and she could not take her child off of the chest holder she had her baby connected to. The TSO then told her that she could not have her food back unless she released the baby. The TSO then took away every bit of the food she had for her 6 hour flight. He did not want a claims form. He wanted something that would quickly resolve this problem before her flight today.

My wife and I traveled from Milwaukee to Denver yesterday, on Frontier Flight 357, which departed from Gate D41 at approximately 12:35 pm. We travel quite frequently by air, averaging about 50 flights per year. Accordingly, we are very familiar with TSA's protocols, and have been through a variety of experiences with security at America's airports. My wife and I are both retired government attorneys.

Please be certain that we are very committed to flight safety, and appreciate the vast majority of the functions at our airports to make all of us safe. We have also traveled internationally, and have been able to compare the different levels of security in foreign airports.

I have never had the occasion to express concerns to TSA about security, but am compelled to do so now, with the expectation that these concerns will be considered in working to improve travelers' experiences.

When we arrived at the security checkpoint, we cleared the first phase promptly, where we provided our boarding pass and identification. As we moved towards the bag and personal check, the first thing we noticed that the table for placing our shoes, personal items and bags was very small, possibly only about 8 feet long. This promptly caused a backup, since only two or three passengers could place their items for scanning at one time. I have never seen tables so small, even at regional airports.

As I progressed towards the scanner, there was a pregnant passenger sitting on a chair by the scanner. I asked if she wanted to go before me, but told me she was "waiting to be patted down". I then noticed an elderly passenger ahead of the scanner being patted down. It took a few minutes before I noticed the pregnant passenger being patted down. She had been sitting there unattended, and I wondered why, if she was selected for enhanced screening, she was left alone and basically ignored. This inconvenienced her unnecessarily.

I then went into the scanner and informed the TSA staffer that my cargo pants would probably cause the scanner screen to display some "hot spots". I always use cargo pants to travel and realize that the extra pockets and Velcro fasteners trigger these hot spots. I never have any items in my pockets, and did not yesterday. The TSA person, whose name I did not see, is a middle aged male, approximately 5 feet 10 inches, about 60 years old, wearing glasses. He told me he needed to pat me down, and I acknowledged that my cargo pants pockets usually show the yellow highlights with red borders on the screen. He then told me that he would need to pat down my groin area, and would use the back of his hands. I told him I did not need a private screening, and assumed it would be a brief light pat down. Instead, he reached into my crotch area and firmly patted me down. During this process, his hands grazed my testicles. Of course, nothing was found.

I then was asked to have my hands swabbed, and had no choice but to do so. I have had my hands swabbed in the past, but these have been in situations where I was either "randomly" selected, or there was some other justification. I have never experienced a situation where a pat down has led to hand swabbing without any further justification.

Of course, I cleared the swabbing and as I was leaving the area, I noticed numerous other passengers being patted down. I also saw the pregnant passenger still being checked and inspected. Quite a wait for someone who I would consider a low risk. My wife all of a sudden saw a TSA person (I assume female) going over the breasts of another passenger right outside the scanner.

From this experience, I make the following observations:

1. TSA personnel at this security checkpoint were unnecessarily aggressive, and the settings on the scanner were too sensitive. This resulted in too many passengers being selected and subjected to unneeded security checks.
2. I question the necessity of TSA having to be so invasive in pat downs
3. I fail to see the correlation between having a pat down and requiring a hand swab
4. I am disappointed that the pregnant passenger was so inconvenienced

Caller said she went through DCA at the TSA checkpoint with 2 laptops. She said the TSO told her to put one laptop per bin through the x-ray machine. She then said when she was returning from STL she done the same thing and the TSO yelled at her that she was supposed to leave the laptops in her bag. She is unhappy the way the TSO yelled at her. She then proceeded to go through the screening process at which she told the TSO that she had a hip replacement and they subjected her to a pat-down, she said she doesn't feel like she was discriminated against because of a medical condition it was just rudeness. She said the TSO that conducted the pat-down touch her inner thigh very inappropriately and then touched her breast the same way. This made her feel uncomfortable and she wants to know what she can do in the future to avoid a pat-down.

He says that he believes he is being sexually discriminated against. He said he is transgender and said he was wearing some panties. He said the TSO showed him the anomalies on the machine causing the pat-down in the first place. He said he spoke to a STSO and she told him to ask for a PSS next time he comes through the checkpoint.

He said he already filed a civil claim and wasn't satisfied with their response. He also stated that this has happened after that claim. He got my name and employee ID number and said he is going to tell them that I didn't do anything if he ends up getting arrested because he gets groped again. He said the TSO's laugh at him when he comes through every time. He said he also applied to TSA Precheck and didn't get a card in the mail. TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

On July 13, 2015 at approximate 2:15-2:20pm I entered the TSA Pre-check line AT DENVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT. If you have a TSA pre-check, and have disabilities of implants all PASSENGERS have rights to be cleared through security quickly and fairly.

Before putting my items on the belt I told a female and male agent that I had implants. They offered to walk me over to the regular passenger area. I declined as I only had a shirt on and sweat pants, that I would endure a pat down.

I have flown globally for over 38 years, and just returned from Europe travels with my family. This is my first time writing a letter with regard to a TSA Agent.

I was in Denver for the day attending an event.

After going through the metal detector (TSA PRE CHECK) it had gone off, and (b)(6) approached me. Are these your items? I responded yes. He then took me and the items to the end of the screen belt. I told (b)(6) that I was late for a flight and any help to get me through the pat down would be helpful. I also told him that I had implants in hip and knees, and that was why I had set off the metal detector.

His response was that he had to state everything legally, and the process would take four minutes or less. I agreed to proceed.

(b)(6) was very rude and demeaning to me from the start. He started by talking very slow. He also very deliberately kept repeating his actions. This went on for several minutes. When I asked why he was doing this, he would start over.

Video will show that I was screened at least three times. He was very rough and groped my genitals. He groped my genitals twice. This has NEVER happened to me in ALL 38 years of my travel. He also stated to me that for him to complete my screening I would have to hold my arms up for at least 4 minutes. Which I know is an out and out LIE. If you watch the video, he's making me put my hands in the air multiple times. In which, if I didn't comply, he would start over.

I stopped him and asked to direct me to his supervisor. If you watch the video he told me that a supervisor was busy.

TSA,

I recently traveled from ORF to MHT and have a question about the passenger magnetometer.

I have two bolts and a rod in my right ankle and when I transited through both ORF and MHT airport security screening the magnetometer machine highlighted a yellow square over my left ankle. A women TSA agent was instructed to pat down my left ankle. I looked back at the picture and the left ankle had the yellow block.

7/15/2015 I am writing this because I am concerned that maybe the picture was reversed. If so this could be an issue. My right ankle has the hard ware in it.

The caller asked to get her flip flops after everything was done and the TSO just started yelling at her. The caller tried to get her name but she just kept covering her badge with her hand. She talked to the TSO s supervisor and all he said was Sorry about that . The supervisor would not give the caller the TSO s name.

On July 11, 2015, I was sexually accosted by a TSA agent during what should have been a routine pat down. The agent's name as it was told to me is [redacted] an African American woman with her hair in a natural style. I was in lane 7 at approximately 11:08 a.m., at JFK airport. I asked for a badge number and a last name and was told I could not have any of that information.

During the pat down she violently put her open hand between my legs and roughly hit my vagina. I asked her did she have to touch my vagina to do a pat down (I used a more explicit word) and her response to me was "don't think this is the best part of my job". She then sent me to get my hands swabbed and I told both of the female agents that she touched my vagina. Neither really had a response. I asked the one swabbing my hand if she too would need to touch my vagina and she replied, "I will not touch you ma'am", I said thank you.

I went to the TSA desk that I saw and reported my issue. I was treated horribly. The male agent just told me not to curse and he could not have cared less about what I was saying. He took my (minor) daughter and my boarding pass and wrote our names down. I asked him why he needed to take my information down and he said because before I filed a complaint there would be an investigation. Which made no sense to me because he didn't write down anything I said only our names and asked me for a contact number. He gave me a "TSA Customer Comment Card" to fill out and I told him I would not leave it with him because I didn't believe it would be delivered to the proper authorities. I did not get his name because I was so upset.

I have been patted down at many airports but no one has ever touched my vagina. I felt humiliated and doubly victimized by the male TSA agent I spoke with at the desk because he entirely dismissed me. All he cared about was my choice of words.

Nothing else. I asked him if I could see the supervisor and again I was dismissed.

When I walked away from the desk to retrieve my items and put on my shoes I began to cry. I looked at my daughter whose eyes filled with water. I had to pull it together because I didn't want to ruin her trip. You see, I was not flying that day. My daughter was. I was just going to sit with her until her flight time.

Being sexually assaulted at the airport by a TSA agent should not be the norm.

It took me days to write this email because I have been absolutely upset. I am still extremely upset and outraged.

What will be done?

I am writing this on behalf of my wife (b)(6)

This morning Wednesday, July 15, 2015 at approximately 10AM, I checked in my wife (b)(6) Curb Side at Southwest Airlines, Philadelphia International Airport for a Dallas Bound Flight (Flight Number 178) to visit her Grandchildren. My wife suffers from a Traumatic Brain Injury and is on Federal Disability, so when she travels, a pre Arraigned Wheel Chair is always ordered during the booking of the flight.

The wheel chair arrived curbside within minutes of her baggage check in and my wife was seated and taken by the female attendant. When I arrived home I had received a text from my wife that the TSA asked her to stand up out of the wheel, place her arms out and over her head for the wand. This immediately caused sever shaking as my wife has imbalance issues. My wife explained she had a medical issue that caused the shaking, she was told she had failed and had to be examined further. My wife was embarrassed about the shaking in front of everyone and requested the pat down be done in private. Her request was accommodated. During the private room pat down my wife continued to shake and asked them to stop and allow the shaking to subside, they continued anyway and allowed her to hold on to the wall and eventually released her.

I value airline safety and the tough Job the TSA is doing... however, I am confused why the TSA would make a person in a wheel chair stand in the first place as this is the first time she was made to do so, and what can we do with medical documentation to avoid any future events like this.

In addition: my Wife also has TSA Pre Check credentials.

Sincerely

(b)(6)

The caller flew from Baltimore MD to Miami on American airlines and got the SSSS on his boarding pass and wanted to know why. He said he was pulled aside for a Patdown in the public and was not happy about it. Said TSA did not explain why he needed an additional screening and did not offer him a private patdown.

Caller departed from Boise this morning and he informed the screeners he had two ostomy bags on him and thy conducted a very through lengthy pat down and he was held up for quite some time. He said he never has to spend that long for screening and he will not have time for that Monday and when he flies back through and he would like to pick his headphones up then that were left at the checkpoint. He said the TSO s should remember him because he asked the TSO (b)(6) if he would like to just see the ostomy bags instead of feeling the seams of his pants for so long. He did not wish to file a disability related complaint.

The caller also stated that she had a very bad experience with the patdown. She stated that the patdown was very inappropriate. She opted out of the AIT and the person who stacked her computer on top of the bins performed the patdown.

She was also angry because the supervisor would not allow her to write down the name of the officer that screened her.

Disability Description: (b)(6) has cancer and a painful area around her abdominal area that can't be touched.

Incident Details: Caller said she was just subjected to the most horrific, embarrassing pat-down of her life at PHL. She said she noticeably has cancer and has a very sensitive area in her abdominal area that is very painful when touched. She said they screened her with the AIT machine and after 3 minutes she had to put her arms down and they subjected her to a pat-down. She said that they pulled her to a private room and screened her using a more extensive pat-down. She said the TSO used excessive force in a sensitive area on her abdomen after she told them to be gentle in her abdomen area causing her to scream out in pain.

7/16/2015 She said then the STSO (b)(6) STSO came over and told her she was an angry and bitter person and told her off. She said she tried to explain and the STSO kept cutting her off and told her how bitter and angry she was. She feels like this level of

She ended up having to have a pat down and when she turned around her oxygen tank was no longer behind her and when she asked for it the TSO said they had to finish screening her and then they would look for it. Upon finishing her pat down, the TSO looked for it and said he couldn't find it and didn't know where it went. She has already called the lost and found. 7/16/2015 However, the boarding pass had "ssss" on it, because of this, the TSOs gave him additional screening. The caller stated that he received a very aggressive patdown. (b)(6) is concerned that this will continue to happen each time he flies.

At Minneapolis St Paul on June 13-2015 6:30pm caller had gone through security and was told her son did not have to go through the AIT. He proceeded through the metal detector and retrieved his belongings. She proceeded through the AIT and received a pat down. Caller tried to ask a TSO named (b)(6) why she received a pat down. TSO (b)(6) refused to answer. A supervisor was called to the checkpoint to conduct the pat down. All other passengers were treated with respect by TSO (b)(6)

Caller was traveling through the George Bush International Airport June 27-2015 1200pm. As caller was proceeding through the checkpoint her son was directed to go through the AIT and the caller was directed through the metal detector. Her son was pulled out of line and a pat down was performed. A TSO named (b)(6) was present and when caller asked why her son was being patted down (b)(6) got in her face and stated "You will not yell at me today. Your son must receive a pat down or you will not fly today." (b)(6) then directed caller to gather her stuff and proceed through the checkpoint. Caller was upset and admits to yelling at the TSO (b)(6). Caller has a complaint. Every time she flies out of Tampa airport she gets a patdown. She stated that TPA is the only airport that this happens at. She would like to know why this happens.

She inquired about Redress.

Dear TSA,

First of all I tried to submit this concern via your response page only to receive a message that your site was unable to load or something like that.

My 16 year old son (b)(6) was traveling by himself for the first time to study aboard through the program titled Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE) to Toulouse, France. When he returned through Chicago International and went through the domestic security procedure they told him he was on a "Security Watch List". They then proceeded to give him a thorough pat down.

He traveled back from France on July 11th. His flight from Chicago to San Francisco was United 633 leaving at 5:00 PM from Terminal 1. My son said his passport "beeped" or something when he started to go through domestic security to board his United flight in Chicago.

I fail to understand how he could be on any "Security Watch List". I served as a Marine in Vietnam in 1967, my father served in the Navy in the Pacific Theater in WWII. I have nephew currently serving in the Air Force. I would like a response to this email to justify my son being on a "Security Watch List". He is named after Chief (b)(6) my grandmother is from the Wind River Reservation, His middle name is Japanese after his great grand father, his Japanese American grandfather served in the Army during WWII. I am enrolled in the White Earth Ojibwe Tribe of Minnesota. As you know American Indians serve this country at a rate far exceeding their population. Again, I expect a clear explanation of why my son was told he was on a

Respectfully,

I chose to have a pat-down rather than go through the xray machine. It took 18 minutes to get a woman security person to pat me down. I had to ask 4 times to request the pat-down so I could get to my plane. After 15 minutes I was very stressed and frustrated and said I would go through the xray machine because I needed to get to my gate. The screener said I could not since I had opted out. Finally I stopped a woman security person myself and asked her to pat me down so i could get to my gate. She agreed, completed it and I then told the supervisor on duty the issue and delay. It was totally unreasonable to have to wait that long.

Incident Details: Caller is at Orlando International airport and they had an issue going through security. There are 2 people with them that have insulin pumps and they were not able to go through either of the machines because of it. There was a male officer his name is (b)(6) that forced her family member to go through the AIT. They had repeatedly asked him for a patdown because the doctor told her that she couldn't go through any screening machine. (b)(6) was the Supervisor at the checkpoint and did not assist at all, she actually told them that there was no complaint process for them to file. 7/18/2015 1:09:19 PM I passed through security at MCO Jet Blue Airlines, flight 1294 to Westchester County, NY HPO at about 6:30 PM on July 17, 2015 in the expedited check-in line.. I had a pet carrier with a 3 month old kitten in it. I flew to Florida to pick him up, and then flew right back to NY. My hands were swiped as I expected, but the absurdity is what followed. They claimed that I tested positive for residue of explosives, and repeatedly asked me who I was traveling with. I feel I was singled out because I had been flying alone on a round trip on the same day, and that in fact NO residue was found on my hands at all. I was not shown any evidence of a positive test, but I was then taken to a private room for a pat down. Oddly enough, this came a day after a terrorist was able to murder five American soldiers and he was not picked up as being a threat by any of our security agencies, but a law abiding citizen such as myself was. I want to file a complaint about this incident, and let you know how much I resented the way I was treated. With no proof of a positive test shown to me, I feel this search was capricious and deliberate.

Disability Description: The caller has a colostomy and urostomy.

Incident Details: The caller was flying from MCI, and she went through the AIT machine which alarmed. She then received ETD sampling of her hands, and underwent a patdown. However, she was pulled out of line by the TSO, and informed that she had to expose the ostomy. (b)(6) informed the TSO that she did not have to do this according to TSA regulations. However, the TSO demanded that she go to a private screening area where she was to expose the ostomy. (b)(6) indicated that she was extremely embarrassed, as this has never happened before. She always complies with the orders of the screeners, and always undergoes the AIT, ETD testing, and a patdown; she has no issue with these practices. However, she does not want to expose her ostomy, and believes that she was discriminated against.

Caller is 62 years of age and he flew out of Knoxville TN on Wednesday and while at the TSA checkpoint the screener swiped his hands for trace explosives. The machine set of an alarm and the officer yelled it loud enough for everyone to hear. Caller was then sent to the supervisor where he received a pat down and additional screening. This did not upset him he was just scared. The officer then returned and told him that it was the soap that set it off. He was told that both Lubriderm and Neutrogena soap would set it off, and to not wash his hands before going to the airport.

Dear TSA,

I would like to express my disregard with the TSA officers in San Juan, Puerto Rico airport. On Saturday, July 18, 2015 I was traveling with my family from San Juan to Houston (Hobby airport). Contrary to what is in the TSA website, the TSA officers in San Juan separated myself from my wife and 3 year old son for approximately 10 minutes. What follows is a brief synopsis of the situation: As ordered by TSA officers I stood behind the checkpoint line as my wife, son, and all our belongings crossed to the other end. This was a rather stressful situation because any of our belongings or even our son could have been lost on such a busy day at San Juan airport. Thanks to God nothing of the sort happened.

The TSA website clearly states that your AIT is completely voluntary. However, the TSA officer at San Juan repeatedly forced me to use the AIT, and I was only allowed to forgo it after I demanded the pat down three times. Eventually, after my insistence, they gave me the pat down, but this in turn caused me to wait for an over extended period of time; despite them knowing I was traveling with my family and my wife needed help with our belongings and Son.

Lastly, I want to say that of all the airports I have been to, and of those that use AIT, TSA officers have never mentioned that AIT is optional and there is a lack of signs stating AIT is optional. Were these signs available I believe misunderstandings like the kind I recently experienced could have been easily avoided or quickly expedited. As a frequent flyer I try my best to stay up to date with regulations and be as compliant as possible with your officers which is why, it is of great concern to me when I'm presented with situations contrary to information found on your official website. Traveling as it is can be hectic, stressful, and filled with unexpected circumstances therefore I would kindly appreciate it that ill-prepared employees not be added to the mix.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

REASON for the call: Caller flew from DTW to Amsterdam on Delta airlines. He said that he was selected for TSA PreCheck and he has had a hip replacement. He said that he did not inform the officer until he was already being funneled to the WTMD about the hip. When he told the officer he said I wish you would have told me sooner. So he sends him back to be rescreened and he had to have a patdown as well. During the patdown the officer asked him if he had anything in his right back pocket and he told the officer no. He said that the officer did not patdown his back pocket area and he feels there was a lapse in security. He said that he could have lied and taken something like explosives through in his back pocket and since the officer did not check it. He said that he did not have anything but he was concerned because if that happens every time someone could get through with something prohibited. He said that he just wanted to report this because it was alarming to him and he hopes this does not put him on any list that would cause him issues when flying.

I'm sending this to your email address because neither the on-line nor downloadable "talk to TSA" forms will let you submit information and keep saying they'll be on-line "soon." Well, it's been a week of trying, so I really hope you can take the time to read and respond to this.

On Saturday, July 11, 2015, my husband and I were traveling through O'Hare between a flight from Germany and a flight to Denver. We were late for a connection due to United baggage delays and when we arrived at Security #3 (where TSA told us to go for faster service) we were told that I had been selected for a special screening. This seemed odd to me given that I'm a paying member of the CLEAR program but TSA wasn't talking to us or concerned with our flight issues so they took my boarding pass and let my husband go to the gate to try to see if the plane might be delayed. I was groped in my pants (front and back), breasts, groin, etc. and all my belongings dumped out. The TSA personnel then "discovered" that the person they were supposed to screen was not me but was my husband. So, they accompanied me to the gate and proceeded to do the same in-depth groping and dumping out of belongings at the gate for United flight 459 in front of anyone and everyone walking by. Then they decided that somehow wasn't enough and marched him back to the original security line (2 terminals away) where they did the same search without the presence of any new personnel. Of course, we were not able to depart O'Hare and were left to work with United to try to get another flight out. We were treated very rudely and there was not even an apology for the repeated and public really thorough and needless searching of me and my husband. This was horribly offensive and showed that TSA couldn't even be bothered to figure out WHO they were supposed to be searching or to then figure out HOW to fix their mistake or to explain WHY it happened or help us or apologize to us for repeated public humiliation (TSA kept saying this was somehow our fault) and missing our flight. Really really shameful.

And YES I would like a response to know how this can happen and how there is no procedure to make sure that you know which person to screen (apparently holding a boarding pass and passport with photo is not enough) and what to do if you make a mistake.

I would very much appreciate knowing that the people on duty who did this have been disciplined or at least told that an apology when you humiliate people and unreasonably make them miss their plane could really go a long way. I am also concerned that they are so cavalier in setting people up for public groping and dumping out of their belongings that they don't even bother to check the name and ID for the person that has supposedly been randomly selected. Your system broke down horribly. I wouldn't want anyone else to experience what we did.

This is my email - HYPERLINK (b)(6) My name is (b)(6) you can find me in the CLEAR program, too, of course.

REASON for the call: Caller had a negative experience at DEN and she arrived an hour early for screening. Her son is a type one diabetic, and she removed her son's medically necessary items from the bag. Her son got a pat down and other items were all screened as well. He normally gets screened by wand, he had insulin and needles and water and juice. She said that they were unable to screen him and she had to wait for someone else to screen him. She was told to wait for 10 to 15 minutes. His bag was left on the other side of the check point. They checked his for 30 to 35 minutes. She ended up missing his flight. She had to book another flight. She said that the line was long. She was told by a female TSO that she should have fed her child before she got in the line. She was working at the front of the line. She was an older lady with white hair. There was a male TSO that she kept telling that she was going to be late and he said she had arrived earlier. When she flies out of DFW this not an issue.

I was at LAX today around 12pm PST at United terminal 7 pre-check. I was randomly selected by the metal detector for additional screening - which I did the opt-out for the pat down as I've done many times before. Here were my observations:

- 7/20/2015 6:13:33 PM
1. There was a significant delay in waiting for the pat down of approx 10 mins.
 2. During that time I lost sight of my belongings on the conveyer belt. A random TSA agent moved my belongings to another area outside of view without asking - while I was waiting for someone to get me for the patdown. This was the most worrying aspect. How am I suppose to attest to the contents of my belongings if I cannot account for it for a period of time?
 3. The TSA person conducting the patdown was professional and actually did it exactly by the book - which is rare. He must have been new.

The caller recently traveled and every time she travels she gets a patdown and she always gets an NOI in her bag along with issues with her checked baggage. This particular trip, one of her small travel bags was covered with a thick white liquid that reminded her of bodily fluids, however, she does not want a claims form. Her other issue is that when she was subject to a patdown during this same flight they had to patdown her breasts. She had a hip replacement and she thinks that is part of the reason she is always subject to patdowns. However, during this trip it was her breasts they patted down. The female TSO did it in front of everyone and she used the front of her hands which made her feel violated. She is upset because she is given a hard time every time she flies.

7/21/2015 11:49:35 AM

Also although it does not pertain to this incident, she flew a few years ago and they had to do a patdown of her hip. During this patdown the woman stuck her hands down her pants and went all the way around. Again this was in front of everyone. Again this incident did not happen during the trip I have recorded information for in this record, it was a few years ago.

Caller said she had a paper copy of drivers license. She also said that she had other appropriate forms of ID but was never asked. She said that she has cancer and that maybe the medicine in her body caused for alarm. She was abruptly pulled to the side, her baggage completely searched and was given additional screenings. During her screenings her husband wasn't allowed to accompany her during this process. Husband was told to stand back from a distance during the patdown. She said that additional screenings lasted about 30 minutes and that she felt very uncomfortable during the whole process. She stated that she told that her ID's didn't match and that was cause of this process.

Situation:

On 07/03/15 early in the morning at 5:30am at JFK to board a Delta 439 flight leaving to Seattle. It was at Terminal 4 Gate B26. Caller's mother was in a wheelchair, her mobility is short term she gets tired but can stand. When caller's mother got to the TSA checkpoint she said they asked her to stand in the AIT machine and then subjected her to a patdown. She said it was a very rough pat-down and the TSO slapped her on the back. When the caller's mother told her the patdown was painful the TSO began to laugh. Caller said this was extremely outrageous. She said her mother is 85 years old and very frail. She said she believes she was discriminated against due to her disabilities.

Dear Mr. Hudson:

As per your request and based upon our telephone conversation today regarding my negative experience with TSA at the Sacramento International Airport (SMF) on Saturday, April 11, 2015, please find attached my letter of complaint to Kimberly Siro, who, as I stated, never responded to my correspondence.

Also, as stated, neither did the Customer Support Manager for TSA at SMF, James Smith, with whom I also had a negative telephone encounter on April 15, 2015 and who, upon request, promised to apprise me of the disposition of the matter. In a subsequent correspondence, I will also forward my email to Tonya Sibley of TSA's Ombudsman's office regarding my more recent encounter with TSA on Sunday, July 12, 2015.

Dear Ms. Siro:

Just this afternoon, I had a very disquieting telephone conversation with your Customer Support Manager, James Smith that has unfortunately provided me with all the more reasons why I should write to you about a recent encounter with the TSA agents at the Sacramento International Airport.

I am a Black Latina woman. This information is of relevance because at first glance the situation that I am about to describe has all the makings of racial profiling owing to the disproportionate number of problems that especially Black women have experienced with the TSA. And, while I travel frequently in my civilian capacity, this is only my second time going through the Sacramento International Airport. Both times, I have done so for the purpose of military duty as a reserve officer – first, while a TSA agent was seen withholding an American rights to film the pat down process. He denied a standard video capture clearly authorized by TSA listed on the TSA website. This is a violation of American civil rights. See here:

I didn't have a problem with a pat down. I didn't have an issue with being pulled aside. I have never complained about TSA because it is your job to do that. Sweet. But this time it has gone WAY too far this time. I am thoroughly unamused with this. This is completely unacceptable. I brought back cookies from my grandpa and they are crushed and there are crumbs EVERYWHERE in my bag. All of my nicely packed items are EVERYWHERE. Good morning,

I tried to file this complaint via the web site, however, I've been receiving this error for days now each time I click submit:

The DHS web content platform is currently unavailable. Our systems should be back up shortly. Please come back and check again soon.

This occurred around 5:45 am on 20 July at FLL, at the security checkpoint nearest gate B6 as we attempted to get to Southwest flight 4107.

My daughter, age 12, was forced to go through the MMWR scanner and then given a pat-down when her necklace triggered the radar. I was under the impression that children weren't to be exposed to MMWR scans because they're not fully developed and more susceptible to damage from the radar. Furthermore, I was not consulted prior to the pat-down or notified that she failed screening. Specifically, on the TSA Web site, it says that children should be allowed multiple passes through the X-ray scanner to clear alarms, but she was given a pat-down instead.

Shortly thereafter when I approached the screeners to tell them that I thought someone stole my laptop, he told me I shouldn't have walked away with it, as though it was my fault. As it turned out, they had removed my laptop from the bin and taken it away without notifying me at all to run additional tests. It's my work laptop, so I'd panicked.

I travel several times yearly; I've never had issues before now. I understand this is the exception and not the rule. Thank you for taking the time to read this. If possible, I'd like some feedback on this.

Thanks!

Caller stated that he received a pat down in Honolulu and the screeners were rude with him and they gave him an optional private pat down screening, in which they gave him a lot of difficulties. Caller was indicating this happened because of his decline of going through the AIT.

Hello,

On Wednesday, July 15th around 3:20 PM at Orlando International Airport, Southwest Airlines, I had a horrible experience with your security measures and staff. Your AIT scanner alarmed/flagged my genital area. I received an uncomfortable, embarrassing genital pat down. My hand wipe also alarmed, no idea why, as I spent the day at Animal Kingdom, Disney. I was patted down AGAIN, full body, more thoroughly and aggressively and it was violating. I missed my flight.

Over the past year, your AIT scanners have been alarming/flagging my genital area - this has NEVER happened before. Nothing about me has changed. My only guess related to this flag/alarm are my medical scrotal implants (made of silicone). UNACCEPTABLE. It is absolutely horrendous, embarrassing and discriminatory that I would have to receive a genital pat down EVERY time I go through your security scanner. Your staff should be trained to identify simple/normal medical implants. I am tired of being harassed and violated every time I fly because of this. I will take this as far as I can, because it is downright DISCRIMINATION. The Orlando airport is not the only airport, it has started happening over the last year at every AIT scanner.

This is unAmerican, you are not helping anyone, this is NOT freedom. Take a look at Europe's screening measures, they've had more security scares and they still don't let that trickle down to their innocent law-abiding citizens. This is politics, this is AIT scanner businesses in with the politicians - it's about money - NOT about our (law-abiding people) SAFETY.

She said they did not tell her that the body scanner was not working and they did not tell her that she could go upstairs to use the body scanner that was working or that she could just leave. She said the Officer yelled at her and they told her she had to get a patdown. She said the Officer was touching her butt, unbuttoning her jeans and putting her hands down her pants. Dear TSA,

Please route my complaint to the appropriate TSA department or provide me with the contact information of the department where I can file a formal complaint reference an inappropriate screening (Pat-down) of my wife (b)(6) by two TSA employees at the Huntsville, AL, Airport on 22 July 15.

Details of Incident: On July 22, 2015, at approximately 05:25 AM, my Wife (b)(6) was inappropriately screened (Patted-down) by two Huntsville, AL, Airport TSA personnel during her attempt to board American Airlines Flight 5705 to Dallas, TX. My wife was too emotional to get the correct names of both agents involved; however, she was able to provide the following descriptions: Agent (b)(6) (name may be incorrectly spelled), white female with brownish hair that was pinned up. The other agent, whom appeared to be in training, was a light skinned African American female that was dressed in a white shirt with dark slacks.

As required, my wife entered the TSA checkpoint at the airport and moved to the screening area where she placed her purse and sandals in a bin, removed her laptop from its case and placed it in separate bin and placed both bins on the conveyor belt so that they could be processed by the scanner. While in the body scan booth, the African American female agent, mentioned above, told my wife that she required a pat-down upon exiting the X-ray, despite the fact that the alarm did not sound. When my wife exited the X-ray, the African American agent told my wife where to stand, and she began patting my wife down, under the supervision of Agent (b)(6). As the African American agent patted my wife down, Agent (b)(6) provided her directions on how to do the pat-down. Agent (b)(6) was very displeased at the way that the female agent was conducting the pat-down, and she proceeded to tell her that she needed to be more aggressive (rougher). Agent (b)(6) told the African American female agent that she needed to "get up under her breasts, she needs to spread her legs apart more..." After the pat-down was completed, and the agent released me wife to go retrieve her belongings, a male TSA agent told my wife that he need to check her laptop again. My wife consented and gave the laptop to the agent. In the meantime, while standing at the conveyor belt, my wife put her sandals back on and adjusted her clothing as necessary. As my wife waited for her laptop to be rescreened, Agent (b)(6) and the African American female agent told my wife that she needed to be patted down again. They asked my wife to remove her sandals, which she did, and the female agent began patting her down while they ran her sandals back through the scanner. As the African American female agent patted my wife down for the second time, Agent (b)(6) kept telling her she was doing it wrong. As a result, the agent had to repeat the pat-down over and over again which involved putting her hands under my wife's breast, running her hands inside her pants, running her hands around her waist and around her buttocks over and over again. At one point during the pat-down, Agent (b)(6) told the African American agent that "you need to get between her upper legs and around her thighs." This caused the agent to continuously poke around in my wife's private areas. During the process, portions of my wife's bare skin was exposed, to include her undergarments (bra and panties). All of this was being done in front of other passengers and for others to see.

10:16:33
AM

Given the authoritative demeanor of Agent (b)(6), my wife was somewhat afraid to resist or say anything that may cause her to be arrested. However, she mustered up enough courage to tell them that they were embarrassing her and that she felt violated. In addition, she queried why the agents did not take her to a private screening area. Agent (b)(6) replied "you were asked at the beginning if you wanted to have privacy." My wife responded to her that she was not offered the option of doing the screening in private. Agent (b)(6) then turned to the African American agent that was doing the pat down, and the agent responded "no I did not ask her if she wanted to be screened privately." At that point, both agents began steering at each other. They did not tell my wife the reason she was being treated the way she was, nor did they offer an apology. As they continued staring at each other, my wife asked them if they were finished with her, and the African American female agent respond that they were finished. At that time, my wife proceed to catch her flight which was being held up for her. The screening process took an excess of 30 minutes.

My wife and I are very displeased with the aforementioned incident in which she was humiliated, violated, demeaned, publically exposed, and treated like a criminal. We would like for this matter to be reviewed thoroughly and the appropriate corrective actions taken.

Thank you very much in advance for your prompt attention to this matter.

Your canned response is unacceptable (pasted at the very bottom below my original email). Either my email below was not read or it was not understood. Your TSA staff and scanner (AIT) readers are DISCRIMINATING against those with legitimate medical devices (silicone implants - no metal). This is unacceptable. You are violating people and their rights.

Caller flew from LAX yesterday. He does not go through the AIT and usually waits for the patdown. He was waiting for a TSO to come and while he was waiting, they kept piling stuff up on the bin with his computer at the end of the belt. He stated that he felt, because of this, he left his laptop at the checkpoint and it was TSA's fault. He has called the LandF at LAX at 310-242-9073, which referred him to an email. He has emailed them three times, but no one has gotten back in touch with him. He asked if there is someone we can call for him at LAX.

The caller has already put in a complaint with Jaine Hodel at the airport. She flew out of PWM and she went through the AIT machine. The TSO asked to do a patdown, she rotated her breasts, went down her torso. They swabbed her hands but that part was fine. The woman who patted her down was curt and rude and there were men on the other side who were laughing as she was being patted down. The caller was very embarrassed and felt molested.

The TSO then took her to the side and fingerprinted her and she wanted to know if this is the procedure that everyone goes through. She said she wished they had explained the process better she would not have been so upset. She said she appreciated that extra screening was sometimes necessary for safety reasons. She said that she was pleased that the TSO allowed her to pat down her own head covering. She also told me that she thought she was getting the extra screening because her last name was (b)(6). She said she thought it was a fingerprint test but that they did not put anything on her hands other than the wand and then they took the wand and stuck it in some machine.

Her main complaint is that the TSO did not explain the ETD procedure and that everyone else in line was watching the screening process.

Caller just had a flight and wanted to file a formal complaint. He flew from SAT to LAX on Monday and had no problems. He flew back from LAX this morning, with the exact same contents in his carry-on bag. He placed his carry-on bag in the bin and went through the AIT. He went to get his bag and they said they were having a problem with his bag and wanted to check the contents and also to give him a patdown. He felt the patdown was unnecessary since he had already gone through the AIT. He wanted to know why the bag cleared security in SAT but not in LAX. He went through screening at the Southwest Airlines terminal at approximately 6:30 AM. He said the female who did the screening of his bag was of Asian descent and the man was 6 2 or 6 3. He had dark hair and spoke with an accent. His departure gate was A-16. He was flying on Southwest flight 1959 departing at 7:30 AM.

I had booked a trip in March from SPI to ATW, via ORD. Flight # 5329 and 4278 on United. The trip was to Oshkosh Airventure. I was only able to afford it because I won $1000 in a local radio group drawing. I was excited about the trip, because I not only ENJOY flying commercial, I boast that I seldom have any problems with Security. I particularly favor flying out of SPI because the Security lines are short and the parking is free.

At check-in, I was informed that the flight was delayed at least 45 minutes due to mechanical difficulties. I am as a big of fan of safe planes as anyone you may never meet.

When my ID was requested with my Boarding Pass, I presented my passport. I carry one from the days when I was a Flight Attendant. I have presented it to Security as ID at DEN, ORD, HLN, SLC, and MSP. I have NEVER had a problem because of using this form of ID.

I was wearing a dress, as I often do when travelling commercial flight. Many of my friends bemoan the bygone days when passengers dressed up as if for a special trip when flying, so I still do.

Net result of the foregoing?

The dress meant I needed a waistdown pat down. I don't know what I might have been holding under that dress between my legs, but if it was dangerous, she didn't get close enough to touch it.

I got tired of waiting. I wandered around the gate area, snapped a few photos of the various gate areas, tried to access wifi, which was very limited. I decided to go smoke one last cigarette before boarding.

When I re-entered the Security area, (b)(6) informed me that she couldn't accept my passport as ID because it was unsigned. I asked who was 'in charge here' and was told by other TSA employees that (b)(6) was.

While she assured me that "I want to let you through, but I need to see some other form of ID. Don't you have a Driver's License?" Of course I do. And also a FOID card. And a CAP photo ID. Not agreeing that your officer needed to see the entire contents of my wallet, I refused to show her my DL. I had already been passed through on my passport, less than one hour previously. I know Federal government doesn't move THAT fast. I also understand the difference between randomness and inconsistency.

I want an apology. I ended up driving to WI and arriving at 9:30 instead of the 5:00 I had reserved a rental car for. My checked baggage was already 'on the cart'. I also had to drive to ATW to pick that up at 10:30, so that I would have personal hygiene items for the next day. What started out as an exciting adventure and my ONLY personal vacation went quickly downhill from her actions.

I believe the requirement is for "a government-issued photo ID". Please send me the reference that requires it to be appropriately signed.

I don't fly often (another reason I am less than pleased about this), but I expect better from TSA. I have been in and out of airports since the timeframe when I could walk back to the gate past Security provided by the Airport Authority itself. I didn't have these problems until your agency was appropriated.

Have a GREAT day!

Call Reason: - Caller is calling to file a complaint about a TSO named (b)(6). She was completely rude. She ran the scanning machine. He opted out of the AIT screening. HE had to wait 10 minutes for someone to come to conduct pat down. 5-6 people or TSO's were standing around.

He complained to the female TSO and she said almost in a threatening manner, "Do you want me to get your stuff and run it again?" In addition when he opted out of the AIT she was rude. She stated we will deal with that when the time comes. He spoke with the supervisor who told him he had a couple complaints today on the same TSO.

Hello,

I'm writing to voice a complaint at the Las Vegas McCarran airport, security between gates e and d. I proceeded through the security line and the "random selection" alarm popped on. First of all, I went through the process of obtaining my precheck, therefore, I should be cleared given the metal detector does not go off. What kind of check are you doing with my fingerprints and life long history that you need to send me through the scanner? Anyway, the TSA agents were extremely rude when I opted out. Actually yelling at me and telling me it's all computerized and only sound waves. I told (b)(6) the one female who patted me down in a very hostile way- I've had these before and never felt violated like today. She continued to speak loudly of my choice to take the pat down and was extremely rude. People who were patrons around me apologized!! My friend that I was with was embarrassed along with me! I work in a customer service field, travel quite frequently in my role, and cannot believe this horrible behavior is allowed. Smug, unhappy and rude. I understand you are a government agency. But we the people pay your salary. You owe me a response and an explanation of what will take place to prevent this from happening again and again.

Hi there! My name is (b)(6) and I wanted to tell you about my experience at Albany's airport this morning. I got married on May 23rd and have been changing all of my information - new address and of course new last name (used to be (b)(6) and is now (b)(6)) I travel at least every other week on business and sometimes more - in fact I was in three cities in one day two weeks ago and didn't have any problems at all with my new name change and temporary drivers license. I have been GOES and TSA pre check for years now so of course that means I've been extensively researched.

I have gone to the SNN office, got my new AZ drivers license and last week sent my marriage license and passport to the passport agency. I departed Denver International Airport on Wednesday, July 22, 2015 to Albany through Newark. I showed TSA at DIA my old drivers license from Denver and my new one from AZ that is temporary until August 13th when it expires. I haven't received my new AZ drivers license in the mail at this point. They thoroughly checked it out and let me through security with no problems. This morning in Albany which as you know is extremely small and not even close to the size of Phoenix Sky Harbor or DIA I had the WORST experience that I've had with TSA I think EVER! The lady that checked my license at the first checkpoint informed me that I would have to go back down to ticketing to have my name changed from (b)(6) on my boarding pass to (b)(6). I explained my situation and told her I had no problem GETTING to Albany on Wednesday and how in the world did she think I got there with (b)(6) on all of my documents. I also explained to her that my name is no longer (b)(6) and my Colorado drivers license which had (b)(6) was no longer valid and had a hole punched thru it. How in the world can your TSA agents in Albany let someone with an invalid license go change their boarding pass and come through? After a few minutes of going back and forth - I asked for her supervisor. She had also told me that Denver and Albany have different regulations. Funny - the last I knew TSA was a government agency and all have the same rules that apply within the organization. I think you have a huge problem on your hands with Albany. I am contemplating calling the media to explain my frustration and have them check out this airport. The supervisor came over and honestly - he was WEAK at best. I can honestly see why Homeland Security has been doing checks on the TSA. It's ridiculous that someone like me who is GOES and travels so much was treated this way when Homeland Security agents can sneak weapons and bombs through security to test the system and it's probably because they're harassing people like me! The supervisor said I could come through which completely contradicted what the other officer had already told me. However, here's the clincher - I had to be tripled check on a security check. Every inch of my belongings in my carry on luggage, purse and computer bag was ridiculously searched just because I had a temporary drivers license that was indeed valid. If you'd like I'm happy to send you my license so you can appreciate the ridiculousness of this whole situation. Then the pat down - the lady that did it was very nice and very apologetic and she did nothing odd or offensive it was the whole process and procedure that was offensive. I suggest you look quickly into this matter with Albany. I'm talking with some of my friends in the media to get their input and in the meantime - before I ask them to look into the Albany airport will you please clarify the rules/procedures for ALL airports in this situation since the Albany officer clearly thinks each airport has different rules.

To Whom it May Concern;

Please forgive the delay in this correspondence, I needed time to calm my temper and be sure to be respectful and professional, which is something not afforded to my disabled sister by your agents.

On July 14, 2015 we arrived at the SEA TAC airport in Seattle WA with reservations to fly Southwest to BWI. Upon arriving we proceeded to the security lines to check in.

Traveling with me were three sisters, my niece and a friend. My sister (b)(6) is disabled. (b)(6) of the North Cornwall Police Department in Lebanon County, PA. She is also a city council person in Lebanon City, Lebanon County, PA. (b)(6) of Parks and Recreation of the City of Lebanon. She understands and respects the need for law enforcement of any type and security.

She is disabled due to having an auto immune disease in April 2014. This disease is Poly Arteritis Nardosa. It is a disease that attacks the arteries and inflames them to the point that they swell and restrict blood flow. This disease caused her to lose use of her arms and legs from the elbows and knees down.

She spent one month in the University Hospital of Hershey Medical Center in Hershey, Pa. She was then placed in a rehab facility for two and one half months being released on July 22, 2014. At that time she was in a wheel chair but still had no use of her hands and legs.

In September 2014 she was able to return to her job on limited duty. In November she was allowed to return full-time.

Detailed below and attached is a complaint related to my experience with a TSA staff person on Wednesday, July 15th. If you need additional information, you may contact either me or my husband (b)(6) who witnessed most of this incident.

My name is (b)(6). On Wednesday, July 15th, I was traveling with my husband from Denver to a funeral in Fairfax, Virginia. I had knee replacement surgery 19 days before, so I was in a wheelchair provided by USAirways. We had TSA pre on our tickets and went through that security line with the wheelchair on the bridge to Concourse A at DIA at about 10:30AM.

After I walked through the screening device, I was told that there would need to be additional inspections. My hands were then swiped with the small test strips and apparently something on my hands made additional searches necessary without an explanation as to why. I was patted down and all my carry-on luggage was searched and tested using the small cloth wipes and the testing machine. This all took 5-10 minutes, during which time none of the TSA staff would explain why these additional tests were needed.

After all that, a different TSA staff person, a large woman named (b)(6) who had short black hair and black glasses, told me another pat down was needed and that it would need to be done in a room nearby. She pushed my wheelchair to the door. Once inside, I was told I needed to stand up. I explained that I would need my shoes to do so and then stood up after they were given to me.

7/27/2015 12:20:42 PM At that point (b)(6) showed me in very curt and insensitive way that she had to do a number of pat downs of me all over my body. As she began to pat down my private parts, I said, "Jesus". (b)(6) stopped, looked me in the eye, and told me "You will not take the name of my Lord in vain!" I told her I would say whatever I wanted to and she returned to roughly patting me down. It was an insulting and humiliating experience.

I understand the need for searches and the other precautions that are used by the TSA. But I don't understand why the final, invasive pat down was necessary when the searches and tests of my belongings found nothing. My bigger complaint is with the insulting way I was treated during this experience. And then to have the TSA woman's religious beliefs shoved in my face was inexcusable.

After I got back to my husband and the wheel chair, I was shaking so badly I almost vomited. The trip to the gate was horrible, even though the man pushing the wheelchair could not have been nicer to me. The woman (b)(6) was an unbelievably poor representative for TSA and needs to be told to use more sensitive and appropriate behavior with travelers.

I have not reported this incident previously. Please contact me to update me on the actions that you will be taking to address this reprehensible situation.

Special Notes - She told the TSO that she was 26 weeks pregnant and that she wanted to opt out of the AIT. He told her that the AIT was as safe as her cell phone and that she was stupid for not wanting to go through the AIT. He also told her that she had more radiation in her cell phone. He made her feel horrible. She went through the AIT. She was told that something was showing up in her stomach area. She had to have a patdown. She was told to lift her stomach and her shirt. She was also told to lower her pants. The TSO used a hand held metal detector. This was her first time flying and it was not a good experience. She said that she felt discriminated against because she was pregnant. She did not get the name of the TSO. She flew from PHX to ORD. She wanted to make a complaint.

REASON for the call: She wants to follow up on a complaint in regard to an incident that occurred at the checkpoint. Her son, (b)(6) 16, completed a complaint form at ORD in regard to the incident and they haven't heard anything. She spoke with the a supervisor, (b)(6) at the checkpoint, The supervisor provided a comment card that indicated her name and CP3, and 16:05

Her son went through the Premier Access Line at the checkpoint, He went through screening alone and was called for additional screening even though there was not an anomaly of the AIT. She indicated that the patdown of his groin area was conducted and the TSO used the front of his hand rather than the back, The TSO squeezed his private area. The caller pointed the TSO out to the supervisor that she spoke with.

She would like to receive a follow up.

A family member was detained and questioned a year ago in regard to their time in US in the 1960s when she was attending school in the US. She asked how to determine why and if the family member is on a watch list. She asked if her family member can apply for Redress as she is not a US citizen.

I fell subject to additional screening yesterday while trying to pick up my unaccompanied minor from a flight. The officer at the original scanning point was incredibly rude, unprofessional, disrespectful, and demeaning. By the time I got to the pat down part of the security process, I was already so enraged by the disrespectful and demeaning way I was being treated, I found it difficult to be cordial to the additional officers involved. While I understand the need for security, I would have been much less upset by the whole experience if your officer hadn't treated me like a criminal and a complete idiot. Your officers need some training on how to treat human being property. I am a mother and an officer of a company. I have no criminal record -- I haven't even had a speeding ticket in over 20 years! I don't own fire arms. I am an very active volunteer in the community. The way I was treated yesterday was nothing short of disgraceful and your department should be completely ashamed of their deplorable performance!

I hope you will consider getting the officer at the original scanning point some sensitivity training, or excusing her from a post where she has to deal with the public! Employees like her are bringing the entire department down!

I'd like to report an unnecessary (and abrupt) secondary screening and strongly suggest the Agent is reprimanded. I travelled from Des Moines International on 7/25/15. We went through the security checkpoint around 4:20 pm. The agent was a Caucasian woman, dark hair and very abrupt in nature. She was upset to have me request a hand check of my medical bag containing insulin in a small, vial in original labeled packaging and an insulin pump which is not be sent through X-ray per my physician. I have travelled several places and NEVER have I been subjected to such scrutiny and embarrassment for being diabetic. I was told to go thru the body scanner and put my other carry on thru the X-ray which all passed successfully.

This Agent loudly proclaimed if I wanted a hand checked bag, she would have to do a full pat down, inspect ALL my bags and purse personally and demanded "is that what you want?" I asked for an explanation since it's clearly labeled and in a very small vial- way smaller than the 2.5 oz limited as a matter of fact and my body, bag and purse were already scanned. Since I rely on this insulin to live, I was subjected to a full pat down and this Agent scouring through my bags for some unknown threat- assuring me she was following TSA policy and all other airports were not. Those other airports(IAD, DCA) swabbed the small box and pump and my hands after I went thru the body scanner and I was cleared to proceed.

7/27/2015 2:17:10 PM This Agent had no basis to subject me to a full pat down and secondary screen of all my possessions simply because I carry life sustaining insulin! I followed every detail on how to get my medicine thru security according to the TSA app and regs. I feel the Agent was clearly not following procedure, I was unfairly treated and she needs to be held accountable.

I look forward to your response.

(b)(6)

Caller advised she was hand checked at the airport and the TSOs told her it was at random, She advised that she went through the AIT and when she came out she was subject to a patdown. She advised that someone told her before if she had to have a hand check more than 2 times a year that she needs to call TSA. She advised that she does not have the SSSS notation on either one of her boarding passes where she received additional screening.

7/27/2015 4:09:51 PM In Cincinnati/ Northern Kentucky, approximately HYPERLINK (b)(6) at 11:30 pm when going through Transportation Security Administration at US Airways. I presented my Deferred Action for Childhood Arrival(DACA) card as a form of identification, something I've done numerous times without an issue. I gave officer (b)(6) my boarding pass with my DACA card. Officer (b)(6) humbled something under his breath. I asked him what he said. He replied "I have to worry about many groups". That is racial profiling. What did he mean? The undocumented community? Immediately after I passed through the pat-down security check. I asked where I can file a complaint. The woman referred me to the Supervisory Officer, I summarized the encounter to him. I added that I felt racially profiled because I look brown. He replied "you look Hispanic". For all he knows, I can be Native American. The Supervisory Officer asked for my DACA card(Which he took a copy of for his report), when the Supervisory Officer saw my DACA card, he immediately stated that I "shouldn't have had any issues since it clearly IS a government issued document". Exactly. The supervisory Officer added "maybe he wasn't familiar with the document that's why he asked for the passport since we don't really come across them". Haven't all TSA employees been trained on the various government issue identification documents? The Supervisory Officer DENIED to give the other officer's name or badge number(perinent information for a complaint) because of "security purposes". He added "We don't give our officers' information out because officers have been shot and killed". I believe that information should be accessible to civilians since they do wear them for a reason. The Supervisory Officer merely provided the other officer's last name (b)(6) He gave me a card I can complete to file a complaint. The Supervisory Officer asked for my boarding pass(which he took a copy of), address and phone number which I provided for his report.

I do not want to see anyone go through this again. People of color are constantly targeted. I would greatly appreciate if all employees at the TSA undergo a training of the various government issued identification documents as well as work ethics. To conclude, it would be amazing if all the Transportation Security Administration(TSA) complete their work task as the pledge states "to ensure that [the] experience at the security checkpoint is expedient and customer-friendly."

Dear Ombudsman,

I am writing you from inside the security check point at IAH airport in Houston, TX. I traveled to Texas for a brief trip in which I needed to take a piece of electronics with me. This is called a Human Machine Interface (HMI). It is approximately the size of a tablet, with a 10" display screen.

Due to the density of the HMI (per supervisor (b)(6)), the X-ray machine could not properly identify it. Additional testing on it came back positive for explosive residue. The agent ran the HMI through the machine a second time and said it was clean.

I was informed as I was replacing my shoes that I needed to take them back off because I needed to be pat down. I was confused because I had not personally set off any type of alarm. I had already been through the X-ray scan which did not indicate there was any issue with my body. I was also told that I couldn't touch my items (even though I had brought them over to the extra check table and had already put my laptop into my bag).

When the female agent informed me of the type of pat down I was to receive, I requested to have it done privately. My concern was and is with the LEVEL of infringement that the Standard Operating Procedure requires in a situation such as this. I was happy to let any test be run on the HMI, in fact encouraged it. I have nothing to hide. I am, however, uncomfortable having a complete stranger touch my vagina and breasts. You can say, "between the thighs", but that is exactly where a woman is touched in this pat down. I was upset to the point of physically shaking.

This incident occurred on July 27, 2015 at approximately 12:30 PM. My flight is scheduled for 2:53 PM from IAH to DTW.

After the "all clear" from the pat down, I requested to speak with a supervisor. Supervisor (b)(6) was outside the door waiting as he had anticipated I would want to complain. He informed me that the officer had followed their SOP by giving me a pat down because the item I was carrying had set off an alarm. Again, I offered that they could test the HMI in any way they wanted. My person did not give any indication for concern. I felt like I was being treated like a criminal.

In retrospect, I feel sorry for the female officers who had to perform such a pat down. I am certain that they are not comfortable with such a situation either.

I want to point out again, that my body did not set off ANY alarm. I willingly told the TSA agents what the piece of equipment was. I offered that they could do any testing they wished on it.

I did not walk away from the check point feeling safer. I felt angry and violated.

By the way, I am not a stranger to travel. I fly often for both work and personal.

I would like an explanation as to why my situation should have required this level of personal invasion. I have also filled out a complaint card and will turn it in at IAH.

Thank you,

Comment: My boarding pass stated TSA precheck. As I approached the screening device, I said to Officer (b)(6) that I would "beep" because I had hip replacements. Officer (b)(6) replied rather rudely "why didn't you tell me that before". I was puzzled as there were no TSA officers to speak to on my side of the screening machine. She told me to go back and put my shoes through the Xray. I suggested that possibly it could be added to signage that if passengers have medical devices they could tell a TSA agent prior to stepping through the screening device. This really irritated Officer (b)(6) who told me "everyone already knows that, haven't you ever flown before". I never would've gone through the TSA pre check line if I'd known that I could use the optional device that does not require a pat-down. Travel is difficult these days, everyone is stressed. It just takes a little common courtesy with each other. TSA agent (b)(6) lacks common courtesy. I sympathize with travelers who have to encounter her at DIA. Due to my medical history, I have pat-downs frequently when traveling. I know these are the rules and overall TSA screeners are kind and professional. My experience at DIA caught me so off guard that I felt the need to report my experience.

Request for Information: I would like to know what airports don't have private screening areas for pat downs or other post screening requirements. In Kansas City Missouri, I was required to show my colostomy bag in an open area beside the screening area. Initially the screener said that she had to touch the bag but she did not touch it she just viewed. It was quite embarrassing and distressing to have to show my bag in an open area. I had showed the screeners my card stating I had a colostomy prior to the x-ray screening. I don't mind showing it to a TSA official but don't like to do it in an open area. Therefore I want to know if there are other airports that don't have privacy areas. Would it be possible to get a list or can they just add portable screens to those locations? I thank you for any response and in the future I will ask for a special TSA assistant.

What happened? I am a sexual assault survivor and need pat downs to be done without the verbal advisement. I need the pat downs to be done with no talking. I am facing discrimination and triggering of PTSD from my assault every time I fly because no one will do the pat down unless I describe in graphic detail why I need no talking. I have to explain this to the screener, who then gets the supervisor. I then have to explain everything in graphic detail to the supervisor. Then the supervisor says

Caller stated that she went through the checkpoint in DTW and they treated her differently because of the way she was dressed. She chose to opt out of the screening devices and go through a patdown. This took 30 minutes and her luggage already went through screening away from her. She noticed that her water was taken out of her luggage and she needed this to take her medication on the plane. She doesn't feel that she was discriminated against, but didn't like that she was set aside for 30 minutes without her luggage and things were taken out without her knowing.

Dear sir or madam,

I had a bad experience with the TSA team at LAX from 5:00am - 5:30 am. I waited 25 minutes for a public pat down opt out screening and almost missed my flight. Other passengers offered to help by notifying the airline I was waiting to be screened because agents would not.

7/28/2015 The team was led by my (b)(6) - a supervisor. I believe his first name is (b)(6). The rudest person on his staff was (b)(6) - who informed me it was my fault I waited 25 minutes since I had opted for the pat down option.

2:27:39 PM If a 25 minute wait and 3 separate calls to the supervisor by 2 separate members of his team is appropriate please let me know.

The 2 team members who called for me were surprised by the wait. Several (3) female agents ignored me. One came and stood by me 3 times and shouted instructions to the passengers to take off their belts. I'm very disappointed in that team

Sincerely

(b)(6)

The caller had a flight Thursday night at 10:15pm with Frontier. She arrived ahead of time and she was told by Frontier that she did not need a boarding pass since she checked in online. At the TSA checkpoint the TSO sent her back to the ticket counter to get a hard copy boarding pass and would not except the pass on her phone. She had to run back and forth twice even though she has a medical condition. The airline ticket counter and the TSO were arguing back and forth about the boarding pass issue. After they got the boarding pass situation figured out she handed the same TSO a card for her defibulator but she told her she did not have time to pat her down, the TSO sent her away and said there is not anything else she could do for her. So she missed her flight because of all of this. She rescheduled and came back and this time they sent her through the machine instead of doing a patdown even though she has a defibulator.

He said he has TSA PreCheck and yesterday at Tampa and today at Raleigh he got patted down at the checkpoint and he was in the PreCheck line. He said he had to go through additional screening and that his bag was tested for bomb materials both days. He said he travels with the bag weekly and he said the Officer at Tampa said he may have inadvertently caused the alarm to go off because he was new to the process and that he still had to do the patdown. He said he does not have the Officer's name. He asked does he need to contact someone at TSA about this. He said yesterday it happened after the bag was screened and today it happened before he was screened when he handed his driver license to the Officer. He asked if someone will call him back. He asked if this happens a third time what can he do and that he did not speak to a Supervisor at either airport.

REASON for the call: She is a hospital chaplain and former prosecutor. She was dressed in her hospital chaplain uniform. She passed through AIT screening and a female TSO, middle aged, brown hair in a bun asked her to step to the side. She asked the caller if she was wearing pants. As it was obvious that she was wearing slacks, the caller was unsure of what the TSO was asking and replied that she was wearing underpants. The TSO, who was behind her, reached between her legs and hit her vagina twice with the side of her hand (index and thumb) in a crude manner while running her palms along the inside of her manner. The caller described this as not being sexual.

The TSO advised that she had to look at her waist band. The TSO began to pull at her waistband.

7/29/2015 8:57:43 AM A male TSO (she believes that he was a supervisor, over 6 feet tall) was present during the patdown and the caller believes that the female security officer was in training. He pointed to the screen to indicate an anomaly that they were looking for. She felt that the TSO and STSO were abrupt, unapologetic, crude, and did not explain what was happening to her.

Dear Sirs and Madams,

When my sons (b)(6) and (b)(6) and I flew home to Asheville NC starting our flight in Minneapolis on July 24 at 12:05 p.m., we had just discovered last minute the day before- having traveled by train to Michigan and car from Michigan to Minnesota- that my son (b)(6) had managed to forget to change his ID from the bag he usually uses as a carryon to the bag he had decided to bring on the trip. Not having needed to use ID for the train trip, the problem was noted late in the afternoon the day before our flight. My husband Clark called the TSA and spoke to one of your representatives who assured him that there was no cause for alarm, that (b)(6) would only need to fill out a form, answer some questions, and have a pat down. He just graduated from Wasatch Academy in Utah and so did not have a current student ID or even his old one with him. He has not been in a position to receive paper mail at our home or receive calls there. He has not needed a credit card or drivers licence. So when ask for these items and then our zip code and phone number he did not have the first or know the second. In addition he had no paper mail or credit card to show TSA staff. If he had had these items, as I understand it, he would not have been detained for questioning long enough to almost cause him and me to miss our flight but would have been sent through security for a final body check. That not being the case, he was asked questions he had no answer for: his father's age and birth date -we have not made a big deal of stressing ages of parents in our family or birth dates; the make of his father's car- he is not a car enthusiast and has no need of a drivers licence yet- he recognizes the car when he sees it, he just knows we own a station wagon, a van and a Volkswagen beetle.

7/29/2015 12:06:14 PM He is a vegetarian who hesitates to kill an insect. He is shy and under stress might not remember everything he knows. Including his father, who was not flying with us, we had 4 people in the airport with ID's who could identify him and could have suggested things (b)(6) would definitely know. He has flown often from NC to Utah in the last 5 years and to other places with family. He had electronic devices that he could have pulled up accounts with his name on them on and used his passwords. Yet, I understand that because he could not answer all questions the TSA staff thought he should know, they hesitated to approve his going through security and then when the red haired very polite and kind security officer/guard (unlike the rude, insensitive stout black man who seemed to be the manager in charge and who never even introduced himself), assured me he was finally on his way through. he was then delayed further by not only a pat down but extensive emptying and swabbing of his two bags.

It seems to me that any one who was pretending to be (b)(6) and intending serious harm would have had his families information down pat. Someone like (b)(6) who does not know all the tiny details about his family is more likely to be legitimately who he claims to be. It also seems ridiculous that 4 people with ID's who verify who he is, need not be adequate evidence of his identity. If they were lying the TSA would have had 5 people to bring up on charges. It also seems that a person with questionable intent would not be traveling so visibly with 5 people with ID's. The whole experience was farcical. I should have been looking around for Lucille Ball. Lot's of questionable people could have made it through security while tax payers money and TSA time was wasted on making my son and I uncomfortable. I have met a lot of kind helpful TSA staff in the difficult years since we have needed to have TSA security checks and I know the Minneapolis staff were only doing their jobs. I can say that most of them were kind and patient. I cannot say that the experience increased my confidence in the TSA's ability to protect us and make our lives safer and easier.

Thanks for allowing me time to air my thoughts and attempt to highlight flaws in TSA operations.

Incident Details: She said on Sunday she flew from Jamaica to FLL to Philly and she was in a wheelchair and she had a yellow carry on bag. She said a young African American female Officer came to her and said there were canned tea beverages, bottled water and lotion in her yellow bag and she was going to have to have a patdown. She said she was not given the option for a private screening. She said the other Officer told her she had to have the patdown done and that she can go to another room. She said the Officer took her shoes and she said this is the second time she has had a patdown done. She asked for a Supervisor and they told her she would have to wait until after the patdown. She said her complaint is on both being disabled and the patdown. She said this happened on Sunday at FLL and that she does not have the Officers names. She said the other patdown was done in Jamaica in May. She said she did not like the patdown done between her legs at FLL and that she had already gone through the ait machine. She requested an email. She requested the postal mail address for her complaint.

I want to let you know about your employee (b)(6) in the Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport terminal 4 TSA Security Check area.

On Monday, July 20th I encountered (b)(6) on my way through the security checkpoint. It was early (4:00 a.m.) and the TSA pre ?? line was not open. There was very little passenger traffic so I entered the ticketed passenger line. As I approached the body scanner I see it is also not manned and a gentlemen motioned me over and hurried me through the other walk-thru scanner.....before I could tell him I had a full knee replacement and needed the full body scanner tunnel that was not open. The alarm went off and he said to step to a designated area for a pat down. He then requested a female to complete the process. A woman named (b)(6) came over and asked me which belongings on the belt were mine. She was very stern in her voice, almost angry in tone, and I tried to tell her that I had a knee replacement (to which she never acknowledged my comment) she only said in a loud voice, " do not touch your bags!". I was only pointing out which ones were mine, which is what she had asked me! I then said, "I'm not touching them, I'm just showing you which ones are mine". She then said, "That's it, I'm not taking care of you". She got on her walkie and requested a supervisor. A nice gentleman came over and she said, " she refused a pat down". I NEVER REFUSED A PAT DOWN! She blatantly lied, I said to the gentleman, "I never refused a pat down, I am more than willing to be patted down. I was only trying to explain to her that I had had a total knee replacement that caused the alarm to sound. She never bothered to even listen." He then had a sweet young lady pat me down and gather my belongings. I was traveling with my husband who is a LEO and enters thru a different area. Why would the wife of a law enforcement officer be against a pat down? Seriously? Our life is all about safety and security. This woman (b)(6) either had a bad life, or a bad attitude, or both. She was rude from the first moment she approached me.

To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing to inform you of a very negative experience my family and I had as we went through the security checkpoint in Terminal 1 at SAN on 7/15/15 at 7AM , particularly regarding your supervisor, (b)(6) I've included the names that I was given, however I'm not sure about the spellings.

My husband and I were traveling with our 3 year old and 14 month old boys, and our youngest currently is developmentally behind, unable to walk, and has a feeding tube in his stomach. I was nervous about going through security with all of his medical equipment, supplies, and formula so as soon as I booked the flights months ago, I called TSA Cares to have them walk me through the process and offer advice on how to go through security. My son would be receiving a feeding at the time that we would be going through security, so the person I spoke with told me that if we could possibly disconnect the feeding at the time we walked through security, it would be easier for the agents to inspect the feeding equipment and we could walk through the metal detectors without any issue.

A couple of days before our flight, I called the TSA Cares line again to schedule a TSA representative to accompany us through security so that we would have assistance with everything. I received an email from Everett Lucio with further instructions. I called the phone number provided and (b)(6) met us at the Southwest ticket counter to walk our family through security. He was very friendly and instructed us on how and what to place through the X-ray machine in regards to our formula and medical supplies. He as well as the agent working at the metal detector instructed me to leave my son's feeding machine and bag attached to him as we walked through. I let them both know that the TSA Cares line had advised me to detach it to walk through and I was fine with doing so. I also let them know that the feeding machine would for sure set off the metal detectors. They both told me that we were fine to go through and to not disconnect the feeding, they would just inspect his feeding bag after we walked through.

7/29/2015

PM

Of course when I went through the metal detector carrying my son, we set off the detector. On the other side I was immediately confronted by the supervisor (b)(6) and told that I would need to come over to the side to be pat down. At this point I was frazzled because all of our things were still going through the machine and they were trying to inspect my son's feeding bag as I'm holding him. I also feel very uncomfortable with having to be pat down and was really trying to avoid being in that situation. I told her that I called the TSA Cares line ahead of time to avoid all of this, had a TSA agent walk through with us, and that followed the instructions I was given to walk through knowing the machine would set off the detector. We asked if there was anything else that we could do since we were told to go through knowing that they would go off. At that point she was trying to get ahold of her supervisor and she asked me if my son could walk through the detector. I let her know that he is unable to walk and even if he did go back through, the feeding machine would set off the detector again since it was still attached. I filled her in on his medical needs and she then told me that I would have had to have been pat down anyways. I started to get pretty upset because I started to feel that my son and I were being singled out because of his disabilities and medical needs. I didn't feel that we should be treated differently from anyone else because of his needs.

Another TSA agent that was there inspecting the feeding bag suggested that I hand my son to my husband and that I walk through the detector again rather than having a pat down. We also asked if we could do the body scan rather than having a pat down and were told no. Before (b)(6) received an answer from her supervisor, she instructed me to hand my son to my husband and walk back through the metal detector, so I did. She then spoke with her supervisor and told us that he was not happy that she made that decision, that I would still need to be pat down, and now that I had passed my son onto my husband, my husband would now have to be pat down. At this point, my husband and I are now livid! We felt that our experience was made worse and we were having to suffer because of her wrong call. We asked to speak with her supervisor, (b)(6) and were told that we couldn't speak with him and that he doesn't come out for anyone.

Once they were done inspecting all our bags and my son's feeding bag, we all were ushered over to the area where we would be pat down. There were two other agents that joined us, one male to pat down my husband and another female. At this point, we were receiving a lot of attention from the crowd so on top of already beginning extremely upset about the way things have been handled by (b)(6) and feeling unfairly treated because of my son's needs, I'm completely humiliated to be having my entire family pulled aside to be pat down when I followed the instructions I was given. I began to cry out of embarrassment and frustration while I received my pat down and my husband was expressing how angry he was that this was incorrectly handled by (b)(6). The TSA gentleman that was patting him down even agreed that we were being unfairly treated.

Greetings --

These events occurred on 20 July and then on 24 July 2015 at Patrick Henry Field, Newport News, VA.

On 20 July, I had to pick up/send off three unaccompanied minors on an American Airlines flight to/from Charlotte, NC/PHF. I had to obtain a gate pass to go beyond the security check point. I had to go to beyond the security check point since I could not process my grandchildren at the ticket area and there were no beverages, no snacks, nothing to keep the children occupied available in that area. I was not going to board an aircraft, only the 3 minors were flying.

As I approached the checkpoint, I informed the TSA employees that I had a knee replacement and had my medical card with me. They waived me through the metal detector which subsequently alarmed. My husband went through the full body screener -- he had no metal implants or devices. The TSA employees would not let me proceed through the full body screener -- I had already alarmed the metal detector. I showed them the medical card and showed them the scar on my knee. They didn't care. I had to endure a hands on body pat-down. I asked for a private screening but there was no other female available at the security checkpoint to take me to the private screening area. I had to endure the public humiliation of an individual rubbing their hands over my body, including intimate areas, lifting my blouse to reveal my stomach, being swabbed with an explosive detection cloth, having my bra searched, and feeling my right breast. I also had breast cancer and have had breast cancer surgery on my right breast. I told the TSA employees this all before the hands-on pat-down. They continued while others walked passed in full view.

On the second visit on Friday, 24 July, I insisted on a private screening. The same procedure happened as before. My husband who has no metal implants

I complained previously and contacted TSA civil office, who labeled the incident as a discourteous behavior rather than discrimination in retaliation. I want this behavior to stop and my complaints have been ignored by TSA management.

Hello,

I recently flew from Denver to New York City. I passed through the security line in the East terminal in the second or third line (I believe it was the third) at about 11:00p.m. on July 27, 2015. After going through the scanner, I was asked to step aside because there was "an anomaly in the groin area." I looked at the screen and indeed there was a large yellow rectangle over just the groin area. This has never happened to me before. The agent (female) came by and hastily changed the screen, then I was told that because I was wearing a skirt, a second scan would not help them solve this anomaly, so she would have to pat me down just on the upper thighs and crotch. This all seemed very strange and made me uncomfortable. Then the agent tested the palms of my hands and tried to strike up a conversation while waiting for the results. I found this entire interaction very troubling. As I googled the address for Denver TSA to make a complaint, a number of stories came up about the "scandal" where agents enter the wrong gender to trigger anomalies in the groin area for travelers who they find attractive, and then insist they have to do a manual pat-down. It appears the problem continues, and that it was not a matter of two bad apples. How Complaint: I am overweight and I am offended that every time I go through TSA check that because I carry a lot of my weight below the waist I am patted down and my palms checked. It seems strange to me that fat shows up the same as potentially harmful items. In Spokane the last time I flew the female TSA worker requested to pat my backside and upper thighs. She then asked me to spread my legs wider and patted up to my crotch. I felt that this was extreme and excessive. If the equipment is simply identifying bulk, I would think that it is not effective. Better screening practices need to be taken and hand pat downs need to be replaced with wandings. It is really degrading. I would like a response please.

Hello,

My name is (b)(6) and I recently travelled by plane to New York City. I am a gender non conforming individual, more specifically I am a very masculine woman. On my return flight from JFK to Pearson International Airport, I went through the security checkpoint, which included going through the body scanner. The TSA agent controlling the body scanner took one quick glance and assumed me to be male which later on caused an issue when the scan revealed female traits rather than male. At this point another male officer began a pat down without looking twice to check and make sure I was of his gender - this made me very uncomfortable (the reason why I know this, is because i was wearing a long hanging sleeveless shirt that clearly underlined my bra, which anyone that took a longer look would notice instantly and clearly identified me as female). What I am asking with this email is for a better solution for TSA officers when dealing with people who don't fit in the distinct categories of 'male' and 'female', rather than just assuming and causing tremendous stress on the individual. Perhaps the TSA agent asking for the passengers passport before conducting a scan or search, that clearly identifies their gender, would create a better and more professional experience for both the passenger and TSA agent. Something as simple as the previously mentioned scenario would cause a much easier and stress free security check for ALL passengers, without anyone having to feel uncomfortable or discriminated against.

Complaint: My mother and I picked up my grandmother from the airport. My grandmother is in a wheelchair so we got gate passes in order to meet her at the gate. When going thru the security checkpoint, I saw the machine that xrays and asked an agent if my mom could go thru the basic xray. I was told she could but would then go thru a complete Pat down. My mom is stage 4 Alzheimer's. We decided to try the big machine. It lit up because of the shirt she was wearing and she ended up getting a pat down and hand check. I kept telling the agents she didn't understand and was getting more anxious but they kept pushing her away from me. IAW your policy of risk assessment she was a very low risk. It was unreasonable to put her through that.

Caller says that he was going through security. His 94 year old wife was in a wheelchair. He is 82 years old. Their skycap helped them. His wife was able to bypass the normal security line, but he had to go through the normal line. He went through the first set of machines and there was an alarm. He had his belt on and has multiple metal implants in his body. The agent there supposedly asked him why he didn't tell her before in a rude manner. He then went to the AIT where another agent supposedly rudely told him to remove his hat and then rudely told him he knew better than to leave money in his pocket. They made him take off his shoes even though he is over 75. His screening resulted in a patdown, but he has no complaints of the gentleman who done the patdown; only the two women who were supposedly rude to him. He didn't catch their names. The one at the WTMD was in 30s to 40s with short brown hair and maybe glasses. The other at the AIT was in her 40s to 50s with short hair.

Got to TSA checkpoint, showed them my crew ID, boarding pass, went through as if a normal passenger as I was business casual (no uniform, shoes off, laptop out etc..) and no issue. I forgot to take out my larger toothpaste and they said I will have to go through additional screening, which was fine. I walked over to the table and they opened every pocket, zipper, took everything out, swabbed both my bags inside and out for combustible residue – everything. Took the toothpaste and I thanked them and moved on.

I was sitting down in the gate area pulling the numbers for PHL

One TSA agent was very rude and shouting. She was not at the gate checking people in, but standing in a wrong place and looking in the wrong direction. Then, she got mad at me for putting my things down to be scanned. After she checked me in, she got upset that I was pushing my belonging along the belt. Is she just a control freak? She should be trained to be more polite as a federal employee!!!

Then I got selected for a random body pat-down. And, a second TSA agent groped me in the private parts! This is crazy! Why should some old TSA guy be allowed to touch my testicles? It's sexual harassment.

Would you like a response? No, a response isn't required.

Complaint:

My brother and I were recently traveling on a flight from IAD to CMH. We are both Pre-Check, frequent fliers. For the first time, my brother was flagged as SSSS far in advance of arriving at the airport as he wasn't able to check in online. I understand that is a procedure, though I find it highly suspicious that designation was "random" or logical. We had booked our flight weeks ago and it was a round-trip ticket. I was allowed to go through Pre-Check and waited for my brother to go through the regular lane. He cleared the "hands-up" machine and his carry-on was also cleared. However, he was held for additional screening as is the result of the designation. What followed should be an embarrassment to you. He was subjected to an extreme and invasive patdown - short of groping him, the TSA employee ran his hands over every inch of my brother's body, sometimes twice. He put his hands inside the waist of his shorts and up the legs of the shorts. My brother withstood this humiliation with patience and calmness; I, on the other hand, was crying, watching the scene unfold. He was treated with the Complaint: I underwent a pat-down screening, and the screener (a young, obese black woman with chin-length straight hair) jammed her hands into my crotch during the pat-down. She hit me with the side of her hand so hard that it was painful. This was extremely inappropriate and unprofessional.

I am TSA Pre. I have metal in my leg and need to go through the scanner. The muscles in my right shoulder always (and sometimes in my left) give an indication for pat down in that area. I am very happy to have a female employee do this, but your policy won't allow that. That patdown of that non-sensitive region has to wait for a male.

More broadly, I think the rules on all patdowns should be revisited. If the worry is that you need to avoid a touch of someone who might have sexual thoughts while patting someone down, then you need to screen for sexual preference. Even so, while I am statistically confident that I have been patted down by gay men, I don't care.

I just want to get through security fast.

If the worry is that some subjects want to be screened by someone

I was recently stopped by security after passing through a scanner in a Phoenix airport gate. According to the officer, I had an "anomaly" in my "crotch."

A thorough pat-down ensued, as did an officer overreacting to me expressing shock at the implication – as any normal human would do.

There is no possible way there was anything suspicious between my legs, which means your scanners don't work properly. Or, your officers lied in order to cop a feel and humiliate me. Either way, the screw up was on your end.

This was an unnerving experience, to say the least. And, I can't imagine how many other women have been put through it unnecessarily.

Get it fixed and get your female officers out of aggressive mode when dealing with professional women who have been targeted for no reason.

Callers wife is (b)(6) and she travels every week and she is pre approved for Precheck. She was at LAX today with her walker, when she went through TSA there was a rude officer named TSO (b)(6) in line one and two. Caller stated this officer stopped his wife and made her remove her belt, shoes and other items and did not care that she had precheck. He stated his wife cant even stand well and they still made her remove her shoes and everything. He later stated she got wheelchair assistance from the airline because they wouldnt even let her go through the checkpoint with her walker. She ended up getting a patdown procedure while in the wheelchair and they swabbed her hands as well. She stated the lady was grabbing her breast and put her hands under her crotch, the passenger felt that she was being groped. Caller stated what shes really mad about is that the lady was groping her and she had precheck on her boarding pass. Caller states that TSA either needs to retrain this employee or maybe she just wasnt meant for the job.

I was just subjected to an overly aggressive pat down. I am contacting you to issue a complaint. Never have I been subjected to such an aggressive pat down. I always trigger the alarm due to two knees and hip replacements. You can see my scars. I am wearing a dress. There is no need to karate chop my crotch four times, I have only one.

The woman who conducted this procedure I'm certain was just doing her job, but clearly she needs to be retrained. She said it's all on camera so I'm sure it's available at the Humphrey Terminal in Minneapolis; approximately 5:15pm. She hid behind just doing her job and I witnessed her telling another tsa officer. I'm sure this is not how a pat down is supposed to be conducted and I'd appreciate a response.

PM Thank you.

Complaint Feedback: TSA Pre?™

Complaint: There is no scanner in pre-check just a magnetometer. As I have implants I set of the magnetometer. I was told I should get in the regular line as that has scanners. That is NOT what I paid for. I choose to stay in pre-check and waited well in excess of 30 minutes for a pat down. Again not acceptable. Agents had no radios, claimed they were understaffed, hard to believe when you see so many TSA shirts just wandering around. In any case a very lackadaisical, unprofessional, poorly led operation.

Caller wanted to report an incident. She was violated at the screening checkpoint. The officer started laughing with her co-workers. After screening, she was asked to step her right foot forward, her feet were apart and the right leg was patted down. The passenger had shorts. The officer's hand touched her private area.

The passenger told her to stop and a new officer had to finish the pat down. The second officer did a better job.

On July 29 2015 I returned from a trip to Munich Germany. In Munich I went through the X-ray machine without problems. 8 hours later had to go through x-ray in order to return to Phoenix AZ. I was told I had to be groped, no reason why. The woman proceeded to press my breast until they hurt and went down my body and stuck her finger into my vagina. I complained saying this was an assault. The arrogant supervisor, called (b)(6) appeared and said because I hadn't let the first woman finish I had to go through it again with another woman. I made quite a scene. I am 90 years old and have both hips replaced, so I have gone through many gropings during the last 40 years and only once before did a woman have the nerve to stick her finger into my vagina. But according to (b)(6) it is procedure and if I don't like it, he would walk me out of the airport. Airport security is not there to sexually assault old (or any) women.

Caller did not wish to give her information for this call. Caller stated she flew from Ft. Lauderdale Airport to BWI. Caller wants to complain about the service she was provided at Ft. Lauderdale. She stated she is an American citizen, and has TSA Pre Check. Caller was directed through the AIT machine at which point it alarmed on her. She stated she seen that it alarmed on her stomach area. She said that the TSO pulled her aside and informed her she would need to undergo a patdown. She stated that the officer checked her stomach area, but then proceeded to check her groin area. She stated the TSO informed her that the patdown would be conducted using the back of the hand. The caller wants to know how foreigners and other American citizens make it through the security screening with guns, knives, and other dangerous items. She hears about this happening all the time and would like to know why they can get through with all these items but a little grandma like herself has to be violated. Caller stated that she never has issues like this when she flies through BWI, but it always seems like something when she goes through Ft. Lauderdale.
