Dear Chairman Issa:

Thank you for your letter of January 25, 2011, to Brenda Dolan, the Departmental Freedom of Information & Privacy Act Officer, and Jean Carter-Johnson, the NOAA Freedom of Information & Privacy Act Officer, requesting information regarding the Department of Commerce's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) policies and procedures. I am responding on behalf of the Department of Commerce.

On his first full day in office, President Obama set forth a broad policy indicating that open government would be a central tenet of his administration, committing executive agencies to an "unprecedented level of openness in government." Transparency and Open Government Memorandum for the Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, 74 Red. Reg. 4685 (Jan. 21, 2009). This commitment was furthered through Attorney General Holder's March 2009 guidance memorandum, which articulated specific Open Government policies to increase the flow of information from executive departments and agencies to the public. The Department of Commerce (Department) has embraced these policies and has made them central to its focus on Open Government.

The Department remains dedicated to continuing to proactively provide comprehensive and high-quality information to the public. Departmental management takes this Administration's commitment to transparency seriously – ensuring that employees are trained in FOIA and Open Government best practices. In recent years, the Department has made important strides in improving our FOIA and Open Government programs—strides we will continue in FY 2011 and 2012.

The Department has also taken advantage of resources such as Data.gov, Recovery.gov, and the Federal IT Dashboard in support of its Open Government goals. Each of the twelve bureaus has assigned an Open Government Senior Leader to assist in this collaborative effort. Like other agencies, the Department has published a robust plan that explains our Open

Department needs additional time to process a request, FOIA officials attempt to contact the requester to obtain a voluntary extension. When records are voluminous, we routinely provide records to requesters on a rolling basis. The Department's customer-oriented approach has helped to reduce litigation and frustration within the requester community.

For the period between FY 2006 through FY 2010, the Department received an average of 1,988 FOIA requests per year. In FY 2010, the number of FOIA requests slightly increased from the previous four years. The Department and its bureaus continue to reduce the backlog for both initial FOIA requests and FOIA appeals. In FY 2009 we had our largest reduction in the backlog of FOIA appeals, reducing it from 87 to 60. The Department has experienced a slight increase in the backlog of FOIA appeals during FY 2010 (14 more appeals in FY 2010 than received in FY 2009). During FY 2011, we have continued to ensure that the proper resources and attention are dedicated to the FOIA program in order to resolve delays and take steps to minimize the backlog.

Additionally, in accordance with FOIA statutory requirements, the Department makes information available both to the Department of Justice and to the public in the form of annual reports. These reports describe the Department's FOIA management structure as well and provide instructions on the process of filing a FOIA request. The reports also detail the volume of FOIA requests, appeals, the frequency with which each exemption is used, and other statistics related to the Department's FOIA program. Past reports are available on the Department's website at <http://open.commerce.gov/freedom-information-act>.

In addition to our FOIA process, the Department of Commerce continues our commitment to Open Government by making information freely available to the public. For example, the U.S. Census Bureau, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and the National Institute of Standards and Technology each present an array of information to the public in easily accessible electronic formats. These efforts, which take place outside the realm of FOIA requests, demonstrate the Department's dedication to making information created on behalf of the public available to the public.

The Department has taken a similarly proactive approach to using both existing and new tools such as social media and web collaboration to enhance our ability to provide information about our business operations and programs to the public. The following table provides a snapshot of the data that the Department makes available on Data.gov. We have published a significant number of these datasets in raw format, which is often more valuable to researchers, academics, and developers – formats previously unavailable to these constituencies. We will continue to produce new datasets and convert existing ones that developers and other members of the public find most useful. Since this dynamic information continuously evolves, the most current values for the table below can be found at <http://data.gov/metric>.

Thank you for your interest in our FOIA and Open Government programs. Should you have any further questions, please contact me at (202) 482-3663.

Sincerely,

Tegan –

Thanks for speaking with me today. I was mistaken when I told you that our Departmental logs were by maintained by calendar year. They are actually kept by fiscal year (Oct. 1 – Sept. 30). As we discussed, we are working to produce un-redacted copies of the logs from FY 2006 to the date of the letter, and will provide them to the Committee as soon as possible.

Thank you,

Jon Wright
