Narrative:

Complainants advised that the Subjects have contracts with Treasury to collect non-tax delinquent debt in cases where the government has exhausted its collection procedures. According to the Complainants, the Subjects were to receive 28% of all debt amounts recovered, if they were obtained 10-days after the referral from the government. Debt amounts obtained within the 10-day period following the referral, resulted in no percentage of the recovery being awarded to the Subjects, on the theory that payment was made due to the government's efforts. The Subjects were required by their contract to direct the debtors to remit payments to a government lockbox for accounting control purposes. The Complainants allege that the Subjects directed the debtors to remit payments directly to them and engaged in making false claims and doing other acts to avoid losing their percentage on the debt amounts collected within the 10-day referral period. The Complainants allegations were made in a Qui Tam, under seal, and they further allege that the government has been defrauded of approximately $3 million. The DOJ referred this matter to the Treasury and advised that they will want a written recommendation about whether the

The article claims that the OCC has known of this employment for at least several weeks. The Comptroller of the Currency was quoted as saying that the Subject's conduct to determine whether "inappropriate influence" by the bank delayed regulatory action against Riggs while the Subject worked for the government. The article notes that neither the Comptroller or his aides mentioned the Subject, or their internal investigation, during two Congressional hearings last week on the Riggs matter.
